In the foreground, a person is sitting on a bench reading a book, and another person is sitting on a chair reading a book. A dog is sitting on the ground near the person on the chair. A tree with a circular canopy is in the center. The background shows a building with windows and a door. The entire scene is rendered in a light green color scheme.

Introduction

The Collaborative Classroom

Center for the Collaborative Classroom (CCC) is a mission-driven, nonprofit organization committed to ensuring that all students have the opportunity to become highly literate critical thinkers who learn from, care for, and respect one another. The organization has more than four decades of experience providing professional development for teachers and innovative curriculum for classrooms.

How we teach matters as much as what we teach. CCC nurtures continuous professional learning that empowers teachers to transform classrooms, build school communities, and inspire the academic and social growth of children.

All of our curriculum materials and professional development services reflect the following core principles:

- Fostering caring relationships and building inclusive, safe environments are foundational practices for both student and adult learning communities.
- Classroom learning experiences should be built around students constructing knowledge and engaging in action.
- Honoring and building on students' intrinsic motivation leads to engagement and achievement.
- Social and academic curricula are interdependent and integrated.

Our innovative, research-based curricula not only support deep student learning and engagement but also guide teachers in creating CCC's vision of a Collaborative Classroom—an intentional environment in which students become caring members of a learning community.

Collaborative Classroom teachers become mindful of their practice by using materials that engage and motivate students, develop critical thinkers, and promote reflection about learning and community.

Collaborative Classroom students learn to work independently and collaboratively, to respectfully share their thinking with others, and to take responsibility for their learning.

Overview of the CCC Collaborative Literacy Suite

The CCC Collaborative Literacy™ suite is an innovative set of modular programs that fosters students' ongoing development as readers, writers, and caring members of the classroom community. The Making Meaning™ program focuses on reading comprehension strategies and vocabulary development. Being a Reader™ is an early reading program that focuses on teaching students the foundational skills they need to read well and comprehend what they read while developing a love of reading. The Being a Writer™ program develops students' capacity to write well in a variety of genres using a writing process model.

Together, the programs that make up the CCC Collaborative Literacy suite address the core concepts, strategies, and skills traditionally taught in the language arts block while transforming the learning environment into one that is student centered. As the students learn to think, talk, and share ideas, they come to value the thinking of others. They become thoughtful readers and writers and discuss big ideas with respect, clarity, and understanding.

IMPLEMENTATION GUIDE

The CCC Collaborative Literacy Implementation Guide, available on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org), shows teachers how the components of Collaborative Literacy fit into a single language arts block and also includes suggestions for scheduling, planning, and pacing lessons.

While Being a Reader, Making Meaning, and Being a Writer have been designed to work together as modules in the CCC Collaborative Literacy suite, each can also serve as a stand-alone program that can be used in combination with other literacy programs.

Program Overview

The Making Meaning® program is a reading comprehension curriculum for kindergarten through grade 6. It is the first program of its kind to combine research-based best practices in reading comprehension with support for fostering your students' growth as caring, collaborative, and principled people.

We are well aware of the demands that elementary school teachers face in teaching reading today. Among those demands are the many activities that must be squeezed into the school day, the pressure of increased standardized testing, and a student population with increasingly diverse needs. The Making Meaning program offers maximum support for teaching reading comprehension in this environment. It is not another loosely defined program that adds hours of preparation to an already crammed to-do list. Rather, it is a fully fleshed-out curriculum that integrates easily into what you already do, incorporates an understanding of how real classrooms function, and teaches the specific strategies that students need to become effective readers, at a level and pace that is accessible to everyone.

Unique Pedagogy

The unique pedagogy of the Making Meaning program has grown out of years of research on reading comprehension and child development. The lessons integrate instruction and practice in reading comprehension strategies with activities that foster the students' social, emotional, and ethical development.

RESEARCH BASED/CLASSROOM TESTED

Research documents what many teachers have always known: the fact that a child can read a page aloud does not mean that he or she can understand it. Teaching children to make sense of what they read has been an enduring challenge. To address this challenge, the creators of the Making Meaning program have drawn on decades of research by people like P. David Pearson and Michael Pressley, who describe the strategies that proficient readers use naturally and the conditions that foster those strategies in children. The Making Meaning program also draws on portraits from many classrooms in which reading comprehension is successfully taught, such as those described by Lucy Calkins in her work with the Reader's Workshop and by Ellin Keene and Susan Zimmerman in their book Mosaic of Thought. The Making Meaning program brings this research together in a unique, yearlong curriculum of easy-to-implement daily lessons. Reading comprehension strategies are taught directly through read-aloud experiences, and the students learn to use these strategies to make sense of their own reading, through guided and independent strategy practice.

In addition to a solid research base, Making Meaning has been shaped by pilot testing and discussions with a wide range of classroom teachers to assure that it is effective and that it fits into a typical classroom day. The Making Meaning program can replace an existing reading comprehension program or supplement basal instruction. It is designed to be accessible to all students, whatever their reading levels, and includes support for English Language Learners.

DUAL FOCUS: ACADEMIC AND SOCIAL/ETHICAL LEARNING

The Making Meaning program is also unique in its focus on teaching the whole child. Child development research tells us that children learn and grow best in environments where their basic psychological needs are met. Children need to feel physically and emotionally safe. They need to feel that they belong. They need to have a sense of themselves as autonomous and capable. Studies indicate that when these basic needs are met at school by helping students experience a sense of community, the students do better academically (as measured over time by grades and test scores), exhibit more pro-social tendencies, and show greater resistance to problem behaviors, such as drug use and violence (Durlack et al. 2011).

To this end, the Making Meaning program helps you create a classroom community in which your students feel a strong sense of belonging, psychological safety, autonomy, and responsibility to themselves and to the group. Teachers know that such an environment does not just happen; it must be deliberately created through setting up purposeful interactions among students, teaching them social and problem-solving skills, and helping them to integrate pro-social values into their lives. As you teach the Making Meaning lessons, you will see that the children’s ability to learn reading comprehension strategies is inextricably linked to their ability to work together and bring democratic values like responsibility, respect, fairness, caring, and helpfulness to bear on their behavior and interactions.*

TEACHER SUPPORT

The program is designed to help you develop and practice valuable teaching skills as you support your students’ growth as readers. Detailed, easy-to-follow lesson plans include suggestions for introducing and practicing cooperative structures, conducting read-alouds, facilitating discussions, assessing the class, and conferring with individual students. Teacher Notes and references to professional development media throughout the lessons explain the underlying pedagogy of various activities and provide examples of what might happen in the classroom. A regular “You might say” feature provides you with language you might draw on as you model your thinking about a strategy.

Program at a Glance

The pages that follow provide a detailed scope and sequence for teaching reading comprehension at your grade level. The daily lessons revolve around clearly defined teaching objectives and build in complexity as students move through the program.

* To read more about the theoretical and research basis for the Making Meaning program, please refer to the Bibliography on page 652.

A week of lessons typically begins with a read-aloud of an engaging text, followed by a class discussion of what the text is about. This same read-aloud text is used on subsequent days to teach the students a comprehension strategy and to give them guided practice with the strategy. The week usually ends with the students practicing the strategy independently by using classroom library books and discussing their thinking. Each lesson typically requires 20–40 minutes of classroom time, depending on the grade level. In addition to the lessons, the students participate in Individualized Daily Reading (IDR), during which they read texts at their appropriate reading levels independently for up to 30 minutes each day, depending on the grade level. For more information about IDR, see “Individualized Daily Reading (IDR)” on page xxxviii.

STRATEGY DEVELOPMENT

The following comprehension strategies are taught in the Making Meaning program:

- Using schema/Making connections
- Retelling
- Visualizing
- Wondering/Questioning
- Using text features
- Making inferences
- Determining important ideas
- Analyzing text structure
- Summarizing
- Synthesizing

Not all strategies appear at each grade level. The program begins with the most developmentally appropriate strategies in the primary grades, and additional strategies are introduced in later grades. The table on the next page shows the development of the strategies across grades K–6.

ALIGNMENT WITH STANDARDS

The Making Meaning program develops students’ ability to think critically, read closely and thoughtfully, work collaboratively, and express themselves clearly and confidently. It aligns with reading, writing, and listening and speaking standards. For more about how the program aligns to specific state standards, see the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

Understanding the Program

The Making Meaning program helps students develop as readers and as caring, collaborative people. This dual focus is based on two beliefs: that students' academic learning flourishes when social learning is integrated into the curriculum and that we are called on as educators to help students develop as whole people—academically, socially, and ethically.

Focus on Comprehension

In the Making Meaning program, students are taught the reading comprehension strategies that research shows good readers use to make sense of texts. They learn and practice the strategies with guidance and support from you before using them in their independent reading.

THE GRADE 3 COMPREHENSION STRATEGIES

The strategies that follow are formally taught or informally experienced in grade 3 of the program.

- Using schema/Making connections. Schema is the prior knowledge a reader brings to a text. Readers construct meaning by making connections between their prior knowledge and new information in a text. In Making Meaning grade 3, the students learn to connect what they know from their own experiences to texts before, during, and after a read-aloud. They also make connections between texts.
- Visualizing. Visualizing is the process of creating mental images while reading. Mental images can include sights, sounds, smells, tastes, sensations, and emotions. Good readers form mental images to help them understand, remember, and enjoy texts. In Making Meaning grade 3, the students visualize to make sense of figurative language and deepen their understanding and enjoyment of poems and stories.
- Wondering/Questioning. Proficient readers wonder and ask questions to focus their reading, clarify meaning, and delve deeper into a text. They wonder what a text is about before they read, speculate about what is happening while they read, and ask questions after they read to gauge their understanding. In Making Meaning grade 3, the students wonder and ask questions before, during, and after a read-aloud to make sense of a text.

- Using text features. Readers who understand that expository texts have common features, such as tables of contents and indexes, headings and subheadings, and diagrams and charts, use those features to help them unlock a text’s meaning. In Making Meaning grade 3, the students identify features of expository texts and use those features to help them understand the texts.
- Making inferences. Not everything communicated by a text is directly stated. Good readers use their prior knowledge and the information in a text to understand implied meanings. Making inferences helps readers move beyond the literal to a deeper understanding of texts. In Making Meaning grade 3, the students make inferences to think more deeply about both fiction and nonfiction texts.
- Determining important ideas. Determining the important ideas in a text helps readers identify information that is essential to know and remember. What is identified as important in a text will vary from reader to reader, depending on the purpose for reading and prior knowledge. In Making Meaning grade 3, the students identify which ideas in texts are important to understand and remember and support their thinking with evidence from the texts.
- Analyzing text structure. Proficient readers use their knowledge of narrative and expository text structure to approach and comprehend texts. For example, readers who understand that stories have common elements, such as setting, characters, and plot, have a framework for thinking about stories. Readers who understand that authors of expository texts organize information through text structures, such as chronological order, cause and effect, and compare and contrast, use those structures to understand and remember the information. In Making Meaning grade 3, the students use story elements to help them think about stories.
- Summarizing. Summarizing is the process of identifying and bringing together the essential ideas in a text. Readers summarize as a way of understanding what they have read and communicating it to others. In Making Meaning grade 3, the students identify important ideas and use those ideas to summarize informally.

THINKING TOOLS

The students learn various “Thinking Tools” that help them implement the strategies they are learning and delve more deeply into texts. In grade 3, the students learn and use:

- Stop and Ask Questions. The teacher stops at various places during a read-aloud, and the students write questions about what they are hearing. The students then have a record of their questions to use during partner or class discussions.

- Double-entry Journal. In one column, a student might write a question he or she has about a text, and in the other column what he or she learns about that question. Alternatively, he or she might write thoughts about a character at the start of a story in one column and his or her thoughts about the character at the end of the story in the other column. This kind of writing in a double-entry journal helps the students to become more reflective about their reading and builds writing skills.
- Character Web. The name of a character is written in a circle. Information about the character is recorded in circles surrounding and linked to the first circle. The collected information helps the students analyze the character.

Focus on Social/Ethical Development

Helping students to develop socially and ethically, as well as academically, is part of the educator’s role, and we believe it should be integrated into every aspect of the curriculum. Social and academic learning flourish when they are integrated naturally, rather than pursued separately. Research shows that building a safe and caring classroom community helps students develop a sense of responsibility for their own learning and behavior, as well as empathy and motivation to help others (Schaps 2004). Students who receive support in building their social and emotional skills demonstrate significant gains in academic achievement (Durlack et al. 2011).

BUILDING RELATIONSHIPS

During Making Meaning lessons, the students listen to and discuss texts in pairs, small groups, and as a class, and through their interactions, they come to recognize that talking about texts is a way to understand them. As the students work together, they develop caring and respectful relationships, creating a safe and supportive classroom community that is conducive to sharing their thinking. They are encouraged to take responsibility for their learning and to be aware of the effect of their behavior on others.

VALUES AND SOCIAL SKILLS

As you help the students build relationships, you also help them understand the values that underlie these relationships. Across every year of the program, broad social goals help the students think about and act on five core values: responsibility, respect, caring, fairness, and helpfulness. The students reflect on what it means to act on these values and how their actions affect the community. Lapses in applying the values are seen as normal learning experiences, rather than as failures. In addition to these five core values, the students explore other values that arise in the read-alouds, such as courage, perseverance, gratitude, and compassion.

The social skills that students learn in Making Meaning help them to act on these values in a deliberate way. They learn basic social skills (such as listening to others and taking turns) early in the year, laying the foundation for the more sophisticated skills they learn and practice later in the year, when both their academic work and resulting social interactions become more demanding. (For example, learning how to listen to others early in the year prepares the students to build on one another’s thinking later in the year.)

Social development objectives for each week’s lessons are listed in the Overview of the week. The week’s lessons provide activities, questions, and cooperative structures that target these objectives. (For more information, see “Cooperative Structures” on page xxviii.) Social skills emphasized in grade 3 include talking and listening to one another, explaining one’s thinking, using prompts to add to one another’s thinking, and appreciating and repeating one another’s ideas. The lessons also provide opportunities for the students to decide such things as how they will divide the work fairly and how they will report their ideas to the class. Learning how to make these decisions helps the students become responsible group members. A Social Skills Assessment (grades 1–6) is included for use early in the year, mid-year, and at the end of the year to help you assess your students’ progress in meeting the social development objectives of the program.

The table below lists the social skills taught in the program and the grade levels at which they are formally taught, reviewed, or integrated.

RANDOM PAIRING

Most lessons in Making Meaning are designed for pair work. We recommend that you randomly pair students at the beginning of each unit and have partners stay together for the whole unit. (See “Considerations for Pairing ELLs” on page liii.) Working with the same partner over time helps each student work through and learn from problems, build successful methods of interaction, and develop his or her comprehension skills.

Random pairing sends several positive messages to the students: there is no hidden agenda behind how you pair the students (such as choosing pairs based on achievement); every student is considered a valuable partner; and everyone is expected to learn to work with everyone else. Random pairing also results in heterogeneous groupings over time, even though some pairs may be homogeneous in some way during any given unit (for example, both partners may be female).

The box below suggests some methods for randomly pairing the students.

Some Random Pairing Methods

- Distribute playing cards and have each student pair up with someone who has the same number or suit.
- Place identical pairs of number or letter cards in a bag. Have each student pull a card out of the bag and find someone who has the same number or letter.
- Cut magazine pictures in half. Give each student a picture half. Have each student pair up with the person who has the other half of the picture.

COOPERATIVE STRUCTURES

Cooperative structures are taught and used at every grade level to increase the students' engagement and accountability for participation. These structures help the students learn to work together, develop social skills, and take responsibility for their learning. Students talk about their thinking and hear about the thinking of others. Suggested uses of cooperative structures in the lessons are highlighted with an icon. In addition, you can use the cooperative structures whenever you feel that not enough students are participating in a discussion or, conversely, when many students want to talk at the same time.

Cooperative Structures in the Program

- Turn to Your Partner. Partners turn to one another to discuss a question.
- Think, Pair, Share. Each student thinks individually about a question before discussing his or her thoughts with a partner. Pairs then report their thinking to another pair or to the class. This strategy is especially appropriate when the students are asked to respond to complex questions.
- Think, Pair, Write. As in "Think, Pair, Share," each student thinks individually before discussing his or her thoughts with a partner. The students then write what they are thinking. Pairs might then share their writing with another pair or with the class.
- Heads Together. Groups of four students discuss a question among themselves. Groups might then share their thoughts with the class.
- Group Brainstorming. Groups of four generate as many ideas as they can about a question as a group member records. These lists are then shared with the class.

In grade 3, the students learn "Turn to Your Partner" and "Think, Pair, Share." Other structures are added as developmentally appropriate.

Planning and Teaching the Lessons

We offer the following considerations to help you plan and teach the Making Meaning lessons.

TEACHING THE UNITS IN ORDER

We recommend that you teach the units in the order in which they appear in the Teacher’s Manual for several reasons:

- Comprehension strategies are introduced, practiced, and reviewed on a developmental continuum, beginning with visualizing and progressing to more cognitively challenging strategies, including making inferences, wondering/questioning, using text features, and determining important ideas. In addition, early in the year most read-aloud texts used for comprehension instruction are fiction, a more familiar and accessible genre for primary readers. Only later in the year are the more challenging genres of narrative and expository nonfiction used for strategy instruction.
- Support for Individualized Daily Reading also builds across the year. Procedures necessary for the success of IDR, as well as critical practices such as keeping a Reading Log and Reading Journal, self-monitoring, and using “fix-up” strategies, are introduced early in the year, preparing the students for the important work in later units of using comprehension strategies as they read and reflecting on and conferring about their reading. Expectations for stamina also increase throughout the year.

- Routines and cooperative structures critical to both academic and social development, including “Turn to Your Partner” and “Think, Pair, Share,” are introduced in early units and used throughout the year.
- Social skills deepen in complexity across the year. In Units 1–2, for example, the students focus on listening respectfully to the thinking of others and explaining their own thinking. This is preparation for using discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking, a critical skill introduced in Unit 3. In later units, the students learn and practice the more sophisticated skills of offering ideas that are different than their partner’s ideas and agreeing and disagreeing respectfully.
- The lessons in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide must be taught in order. Words introduced in early weeks of the program are reviewed in later weeks, providing the students with multiple exposures to the words, and instruction in independent word-learning strategies, such as using prefixes, suffixes, and roots, builds across the year. The assessments also rely on the words being taught in the order prescribed. For more information, see “Vocabulary Teaching Guide”.

UNIT AND WEEK OVERVIEWS

To prepare to teach a unit, begin by reading the unit’s introductory pages. The opening page provides a summary of the academic and social goals of the unit. The Resources list specifies the physical materials and the supplemental activities for the unit, while the Online Resources list indicates all of the materials that are available digitally on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

Unit 2 Visualizing
POETRY AND FICTION

During this unit, the students visualize to make sense of poetry and fiction. As they visualize, they informally use schema and make inferences. They also begin an informal exploration of point of view as they consider the thoughts and feelings of characters in relation to their own. During IDR, the students continue to self-monitor their reading comprehension and begin to confer with the teacher individually about their reading lives and about the books they are reading. They practice visualizing in their independent reading and write in their reading journals. Socially, they practice acting in fair and caring ways and analyze the effect of their behavior on others.

- Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (A43), see page 8 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Vocabulary Note

From the reading the vocabulary items teach the Week 1 lesson this week.

PREPARING THE DAILY LESSONS

Read-aloud Lessons

Students’ listening comprehension typically exceeds their reading comprehension. Listening to and discussing texts together enables the students to build background knowledge and vocabulary, enjoy a common experience, build community, share ideas, and collaborate to construct meaning. Each week begins with a read-aloud lesson. After the reading, discussion questions check the students’ surface-level understanding of the text in preparation for deeper thinking about it on subsequent days of the week.

To Prepare for a Read-aloud:

- Read the entire lesson and anticipate how your students will respond.
- Collect materials and anticipate room arrangement needs.
- Practice reading the text aloud. Focus on reading slowly.
- Review the Suggested Vocabulary and the ELL (English Language Learner) Vocabulary lists and locate these words in the text. To better define these words smoothly while reading aloud, write each definition on a self-stick note and place the note next to the word in the read-aloud text. Notice if there are any additional words you may need to define for your students.
- Locate any suggested stopping points in the text. Again, you might use a self-stick note to mark each stopping point.
- Decide what level of support your English Language Learners will need. You might need to read the text aloud to your ELLs prior to reading it to the whole class or summarize the text for them. Also, review any ELL Notes in the lesson and provide extra support for your students as appropriate. (For more information, see “Support for English Language Learners [ELLs]” on page li.)
- Optional extension activities appear at the end of some lessons. Review any extension activities and decide if and when you want to do the activities with your class. Some may require additional materials or preparation.

Read-aloud Lessons with Alternative Texts

You may want to substitute another text for the provided read-aloud text to teach the comprehension focus of the week or to repeat a week of instruction. For this purpose, a list of “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” is provided in the General Resources section of the CCC Learning Hub. The trade books suggested in the list of alternative texts are offered in Center for the Collaborative Classroom’s Comprehension Strategies Libraries. These grade-level libraries are designed to support instruction of the specific strategies used in the lessons. Visit Center for the Collaborative Classroom’s website (collaborativeclassroom.org) for more information.

Strategy Lessons

Strategy lessons introduce the strategy that is the comprehension focus for the week. Typically, you will reread the read-aloud text from Day 1 and ask questions that help your students move beyond the text’s surface meaning to a deeper exploration of it. You will then guide the students to develop their understanding through carefully structured activities. This approach encourages the students to explore and develop a strategy before you explicitly label it.

To Prepare for a Strategy Lesson:

- Read the entire lesson (including the Student Response Book pages) and anticipate how your students will respond.
- Collect materials and anticipate room arrangement needs.
- Practice using the strategy at least once in your own reading to help you anticipate difficulties the students might have.
- Plan how you will pace the lesson to keep it moving.
- Review suggested discussion questions and decide which ones you will ask.
- Remember that making meaning of a text—not using a particular strategy—is the primary goal of the program. Keep discussions focused on the text, and remind the students that strategies serve readers by helping them understand what they read.
- Review and plan any optional extension activities you want to do with your class.

Guided Strategy Practice Lessons and Independent Strategy Practice Lessons

Strategy lessons are often followed by lessons in which the students practice using the strategy, with teacher support gradually being reduced as the students become more comfortable with the strategy. In a guided strategy practice lesson, the students practice using the strategy with a very familiar text (such as an excerpt from the week’s read-aloud text), with you facilitating and supporting the students’ work by asking focused questions and guiding the discussion.

In independent strategy practice lessons, the students practice using the strategy in appropriately leveled texts that they read independently. You have the opportunity to monitor the students and provide individual help as needed.

To Prepare for a Guided or Independent Strategy Practice Lesson:

- Read the entire lesson (including the Student Response Book pages) and collect materials.
- Practice any teacher modeling required in the lesson.
- Plan how you will pace the lesson to keep it moving.
- Review suggested discussion questions and decide which ones you will ask.
- Review and plan any extension activities you want to do with your class.

LESSON LENGTH AND PACING

Grade 3 lessons take, on average, 20–40 minutes. Lessons in the first few weeks of the program may take longer as you introduce and practice cooperative structures (“Turn to Your Partner” and “Think, Pair, Share”). A few of the read-alouds will require additional time. A Teacher Note at the beginning of these lessons alerts you to the need for more time and suggests how you might break the reading into two parts, if necessary.

It is important to monitor the pace of the lessons, not only to complete them in a reasonable amount of time, but also to help the students stay focused and engaged. To maintain the pace of the lessons, we suggest the following:

- As much as possible, we advise that you teach the lessons as written, understanding that adjustments may be needed based on your knowledge of your students and their needs.
- Keep partner conversations brief (20–30 seconds).
- After partners have shared, have only one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class, even if other students have their hands up.
- During class discussions, have only two or three volunteers share their thinking. If many students want to contribute to the discussion, use “Turn to Your Partner” to give partners an opportunity to share with each other. Then have only one or two volunteers share with the class.

EXTENDING THE INSTRUCTION

In addition to the core lessons, the program features the following opportunities to extend instruction:

- Writing About Reading. These optional activities provide a reading/writing connection within the Making Meaning program by asking the students to write opinions about and make connections to the texts they hear and discuss during read-aloud lessons. The activities build in complexity across the grades, with students at all levels encouraged to refer to the texts to support their thinking. Support for modeling writing is included in these activities. The activities can be done at the end of a lesson or at another time.
- Extensions. These optional activities provide additional learning opportunities that extend or enhance the instruction in the core lessons. Examples of extension activities include reading other books by the author of the read-aloud, imagining an alternative ending to the story, and learning more about a topic introduced in the read-aloud text.

STUDENT RESPONSE BOOKS

The Making Meaning program provides a Student Response Book for each student in grades 1–6. The Student Response Books include:

- Excerpts and reprints of selected read-aloud texts.
- Activity sheets correlated to lessons that the students use to record their thinking. Activities might include thinking tools and cooperative structures that require writing, such as “Stop and Wonder.”
- Reading Logs (grades 2–6), in which the students list and comment on the texts they read independently, and Reading Journals (grades 1–6), in which the students write in more depth about their independent reading.

The Student Response Books are a useful resource for both you and your students. The students can use their Reading Logs and Reading Journals to track and write about their reading. The activity sheets make it unnecessary for you or your students to provide additional paper, and they are engaging and easy to use. The completed sheets also comprise a record of each student’s work in the program. The Student Response Books are an integral part of the Individual Comprehension Assessment. For more information, see “Individual Comprehension Assessment” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT MEDIA

Brief videos created for the third edition of the Making Meaning program help you with effective implementation. The videos, intended for viewing when planning lessons, provide a range of support, including tips for introducing IDR and conferring with the students, demonstrations of teachers using various techniques for facilitating discussions, and examples of students using cooperative structures. For a complete list of professional development media, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

HELPFUL LESSON FEATURES

The lessons include a number of features that help you navigate the instruction and that provide background information and tips. These lesson features are listed in the table below.

Helpful Lesson Features

- Vocabulary Notes. These notes appear at the beginning and end of the week’s lessons to alert you to the vocabulary lessons you will be teaching in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide.
- Topic Notes. These notes appear at the beginning of some lessons and provide background information about important aspects of the instruction, including lesson structure, purpose, pedagogy, and approach.
- Teacher Notes. These notes appear in the lesson margins and alert you to such information as the purposes of different activities, materials to be collected or saved, hints for managing the lesson, and ways to support the students.
- ELL Notes. These notes suggest various strategies to support English Language Learners (ELLs) during a lesson.
- Facilitation Tips. These notes suggest techniques you can use to facilitate class discussions (for example, asking open-ended questions, using wait-time, and not paraphrasing or repeating students’ responses) in order to increase participation and encourage deeper conversations among your students. For a concise summary of the Facilitation Tips, see the “Teacher’s Facilitation Bookmark” in the General Resources section of the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).
- Cooperative Structure Icons. These icons indicate where in the lesson students work in pairs or small groups and where cooperative structures, such as “Turn to Your Partner” and “Think, Pair, Share,” are used.

Helpful Lesson Features (continued)

- Suggested Vocabulary. This feature identifies words in a read-aloud that you might want to define for your students as you read. We have selected vocabulary words based on how crucial they are to understanding the text and on the unlikelihood that students will be able to glean their meanings from the context. Definitions are provided.
- ELL Vocabulary. This feature identifies and defines additional words in a read-aloud that you may want to address with your ELLs.
- “Students might say.” This feature gives you examples of the kinds of responses you might expect from your students. If the students have difficulty answering a question, you can suggest some of the ideas in the “Students might say” note and then ask them to generate additional ideas.
- “You might say.” This feature provides sample language that you can draw on when you introduce a cooperative structure or model using reading comprehension or self-monitoring strategies. Providing the students with opportunities to hear you think out loud as you use a strategy helps them apply the strategy to their reading.
- Chart Diagrams. These diagrams illustrate charting techniques and provide examples of ideas generated by the class or by teacher modeling.
- Technology Tips. These notes suggest ways you might integrate technology in the lessons. In grades 3–6, they also refer to the technology mini-lessons in Appendix B, which instruct students on topics such as how to navigate safely online and how to conduct online research.
- 2D Barcodes. You can scan these 2D barcodes with an app installed on your smartphone or tablet device to gain instant access to professional development and instructional media.
- IDR Conference Notes. These notes support you as you confer with individual students during IDR. (See “IDR Conferences” on the next page.)
- Class Assessment Notes. These notes help you observe and assess the whole class as they demonstrate their use of a strategy during a lesson. (See “Assessments” on page xlv.)
- End-of-unit Considerations. This feature provides information on wrapping up a unit and conducting end-of-unit assessments.

Individualized Daily Reading (IDR)

Research has consistently shown what common sense suggests: the more students read, the better readers they become (Anderson, Wilson, and Fielding 1988; Taylor, Frye, and Maruyama 1990). The practice that independent reading provides is critical if students are to consolidate and strengthen the reading comprehension skills and strategies they are learning. The independent strategy practice lessons in the Making Meaning program give your students valuable practice in using these skills and strategies independently, but more independent practice is needed if the students are to become truly proficient at comprehending text. To meet this need, Making Meaning includes an Individualized Daily Reading (IDR) strand.

INDEPENDENT READING IN GRADE 3

During Individualized Daily Reading in grade 3, the students spend up to 25 minutes a day reading books independently at their appropriate reading levels. An IDR section appears at the end of each lesson, except for independent strategy practice lessons. IDR can follow the day's lesson, or you can schedule it during another time of the school day.

IDR begins in Unit 1 (Week 1) of the grade 3 program. In Unit 1, the students learn the procedures for IDR and how to identify books that are at the appropriate level for them. They also learn procedures for using the classroom library and begin tracking the books they are reading in their Reading Logs within their Student Response Books. In Unit 2, the students learn questions they can ask themselves to monitor their comprehension and discuss strategies they can use to “fix” comprehension problems. They also begin conferring with the teacher about their reading lives and writing in their Reading Journals. In Unit 3 and in subsequent units, the students apply the reading comprehension strategies they are learning to various types of texts and reflect on their use of the strategies.

THE TEACHER'S ROLE

Individualized Daily Reading in the Making Meaning program is different from other types of independent reading, such as free reading, SSR (Sustained Silent Reading), and DEAR (Drop Everything and Read). In those programs, students select their own books, which may or may not be at their appropriate reading levels, and the teacher plays a largely neutral role. In IDR, the students read texts at their appropriate reading levels for a specified period of time. You, the teacher, are actively involved, conferring with individual students, helping them select appropriate books, and assessing and supporting their reading.

IDR CONFERENCES

Initially, your individual student conferences focus on getting to know the students as readers and on ensuring that they are reading appropriately leveled texts. As the year progresses, the conferences will focus more on assessing the students' comprehension, supporting struggling readers, and encouraging self-monitoring.

Beginning in Unit 2 of grade 3, you will use a unit-specific “Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences” to guide you as you confer. This resource sheet outlines a process you can use when conferring with individual students about their independent reading. It includes questions you can ask to probe each student's thinking about what he or she is reading and to assess the student's comprehension of the text. It also includes suggestions for supporting the student's reading growth. You will document your IDR conferences using the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet. We recommend that you document at least one IDR conference per student per unit. These notes are an important source of information for each student's Individual Comprehension Assessment (see “Assessments” on page xlv).

You will find copies of the “Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences” and the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets in the Assessment Resource Book. The record sheets are also available on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). Alternatively, you can use the CCC ClassView app to electronically record conference data on a record sheet. For more information, see “CCC ClassView App” on page xlvi.

READING APPROPRIATELY LEVELED TEXTS

For IDR to succeed, the students must be reading books that they can comprehend and read fluently with few miscues (accuracy errors). Early in the year, you can match students to books by informally assessing their reading abilities. One procedure you might use is to have each student select a text that interests him or her, and then listen to the student read aloud. Note whether the student is reading with accuracy (reading most of the words without miscues) and understanding. To gauge a student’s surface understanding, you can use prompts and questions such as “Tell me what you just read” or “What does that mean?” If a student is reading a book that is too difficult or easy, help him or her select a more suitable book.

Another technique for evaluating the appropriateness of a book is to use the “five-finger rule.” As a student reads a page aloud, count any words he or she does not know. More than five unknown words on a page usually indicates that the book is too difficult. When your students become familiar with the five-finger rule, you can encourage them to use the technique on their own, making the students responsible for checking the appropriateness of the books they choose for IDR.

It is very important for students to build reading fluency as a foundation for comprehension. If you have students who are reading far below grade level, make sure they have time every day to practice reading decodable texts, and check in with them regularly to monitor their rate and accuracy.

DETERMINING INDEPENDENT READING LEVELS

Other informal and formal tools are available for determining a student’s independent reading level. Running records are classroom-based, informal assessments of fluency and comprehension that can be used periodically to evaluate a student’s reading performance; identify his or her independent, instructional, and frustration reading levels; and monitor his or her progress. A variety of formal benchmark assessments, such as the Developmental Reading Assessment (DRA) and Fountas and Pinnell Benchmark Assessment System (BAS), can also be used to measure the student’s progress and identify his or her reading level.

Regardless of the assessment tool you use, it is important to monitor and record the students' progress across the year. The "Student Reading Level Summary" record sheet (SR) can be used to record individual students' reading assessment data. You will find copies of this record sheet in the Assessment Resource Book, on the CCC Learning Hub, and in the ClassView App.

SETTING UP A CLASSROOM LIBRARY

For IDR, the students will require access to a wide range of fiction and nonfiction texts at various levels. For easy browsing, you might display books in boxes or baskets labeled with the name of the book category. Categories can include:

- Genres (e.g., mystery, science fiction, folktale, biography)
- Subjects or topics (e.g., presidents, animals, weather, school)
- Themes (e.g., faraway places, friendship, growing up)
- Favorite authors or illustrators
- Popular series
- Student favorites

A classroom library ideally consists of 300–400 titles, although many teachers start with a smaller collection and add to it over time. The library should include a balance of fiction and nonfiction books. To accommodate various reading levels, at least 25 percent of the library should be books that are one to two grades below grade level, and at least 25 percent should be books that are one to two grades above grade level.

Sources of texts include book clubs, bookstores, your school or community library, donated books, basal readers, textbooks, and children's magazines and newspapers. You can purchase a leveled classroom library, or you can level the books in your current classroom library.

Center for the Collaborative Classroom's Individualized Daily Reading Libraries can be used to start a classroom library or to round out an existing library. The libraries are organized by grade level and readability to enable teachers to provide fiction and nonfiction books that are at the right levels for their students. Visit Center for the Collaborative Classroom's website (collaborativeclassroom.org) for more information.

To help you build and maintain your library, you might consider using free book-management software called Classroom Organizer® from Booksource. With Classroom Organizer, you can inventory the print and digital books in your library by scanning the barcodes, import your class roster, enable students to check out and return books electronically, compile reports on students' reading activities, and add new titles. For more information, visit the Booksource website (classroom.booksource.com).

LEVELING TEXTS

Below you will find information on two leveling systems that can help you with the sometimes difficult and time-consuming process of leveling texts. (More information about leveling can be found in Brenda M. Weaver’s Leveling Books K–6: Matching Readers to Text.)

The Fountas & Pinnell Leveling System

- Educators Irene C. Fountas and Gay Su Pinnell developed a leveling system for use with guided reading groups that is frequently used for leveling independent reading libraries. They provide lists of thousands of leveled books for grades K–8 in their book Leveled Books, K–8: Matching Texts to Readers for Effective Teaching (Heinemann 2008) and also on their website (fountasandpinnellleveledbooks.com).

The Lexile® Framework for Reading

- This leveling system uses a sophisticated formula to determine text difficulty, which it represents as a Lexile score that is used to rank the text on a graded scale. Developers of this framework (MetaMetrics, Inc.) have created a database of thousands of Lexiled texts, plus software that allows teachers to search, sort, and view information about each text. For more information, visit The Lexile Framework for Reading website (lexile.com).

BUILDING STAMINA

Building stamina for reading independently is critical if the students are to develop and grow as readers. In the grade 3 program, the students begin IDR by reading independently for up to 15 minutes a day. By Unit 3, the expectation is that the students will be reading independently for up to 25 minutes each day. The time allotments suggested in the IDR lesson steps, however, are goals, not requirements, and IDR times should be adjusted as necessary to meet your students’ particular needs and their capacities to remain engaged and attentive. You might consider increasing the time allotted to IDR gradually, for example, one to two minutes every two weeks.

The table on the next page provides an overview of the reading times (shown by number of minutes) recommended for IDR for each grade and unit in Making Meaning. The table shows how stamina for independent reading builds both within and across grades.

Building Stamina for Independent Reading

Grade Level	Unit 1	Unit 2	Unit 3	Unit 4	Unit 5	Unit 6	Units 7+
K	up to 5	up to 7	up to 9	up to 10	10-15	10-15	up to 15
1	up to 5	5-10	10-15	up to 15	up to 15	up to 15	up to 15
3	up to 15	15-20	20-25	up to 25	up to 25	up to 25	up to 25
4	up to 15	15-20	20-25	25-30	up to 30	up to 30	up to 30
6	up to 20	20-25	25-30	up to 30	up to 30	up to 30	up to 30

If your students are struggling to use IDR time responsibly, meet with students individually or as a group to discuss the problem and possible solutions. Encourage the students to set personal goals, and check in with them regularly about how they are spending their IDR time.

IDR MINI-LESSONS

These optional lessons, found in Appendix A, support and supplement the instruction you provide during IDR, focusing on topics such as selecting appropriate texts, conferring, self-monitoring, using word-analysis strategies, and fluency. The lessons include:

- “Choosing and Handling Books” (K–1)
- “Selecting ‘Just-right’ Books” (K–2)
- “Introducing IDR Conferences” (K–6)
- “Self-monitoring” (1–2)
- “Reading Punctuation” (1–2)
- “Reading Typography” (1–2)
- “Reading with Expression” (1–6)
- “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (1–6)
- “Selecting Appropriately Leveled Texts” (3–6)
- “Self-monitoring and Using ‘Fix-up’ Strategies” (3–6)
- “Reading in Meaningful Phrases” (3–6)

TIPS FOR MANAGING IDR

Building a successful Individualized Daily Reading program is vital for reading achievement, but establishing and maintaining IDR—as well as making time for it—can be challenging. Here are some tips for implementing and managing IDR in your classroom:

- Establish and maintain a well-designed and well-stocked classroom library (see “Setting Up a Classroom Library” on page xli).
- Take the time to introduce and model IDR routines and procedures, such as choosing appropriate books, checking books in and out of the classroom library, and conferring. There are both core lessons and mini-lessons in Making Meaning developed specifically to help you with these essential aspects of IDR (see “IDR Mini-lessons” on the previous page).
- Create a classroom environment that is conducive to independent reading. If possible, arrange the room so the students have comfortable places to read away from their desks or tables.
- Set clear expectations for student behavior during IDR. Check in regularly to see how the students are doing, both with meeting your expectations and taking responsibility for how they spend independent reading time.
- Each day’s IDR instruction establishes a clear purpose for independent reading (for example, practicing self-monitoring or visualizing to make sense of a text). Make sure the purpose is clear to the students, and take time at the end of IDR to discuss the reading focus with the students.
- Finally, make IDR a regular part of your schedule and protect that time. Scheduling IDR immediately after a Making Meaning lesson is ideal, but IDR may also be scheduled for another regular time each day, such as first thing in the morning or immediately after lunch or recess.

Vocabulary Teaching Guide

The Vocabulary Teaching Guide is a revision of Vocabulary for Making Meaning, Second Edition. It supplements and supports the Making Meaning program by providing 30 weeks of vocabulary instruction at grades K–6. The lessons teach high-utility words found in or suggested by the Making Meaning read-aloud texts, as well as strategies the students can use to determine the meanings of words they encounter in their independent reading. The table on the next page lists the independent word-learning strategies taught at each grade level and provides a snapshot of how the strategies are developed across the grades.

At grades K–2, there are three days of vocabulary instruction each week. At grades 3–6, there are five days of instruction. Each week includes Ongoing Review activities that review previously learned words. Vocabulary words are taught and reviewed using engaging activities that require the students to use the words in partner and class conversations. For more information about the vocabulary lessons, including how the lessons are structured, suggestions for teaching the vocabulary lessons with the Making Meaning lessons, and the vocabulary assessments, see the Introduction in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide.

Assessments

The assessment component of the Making Meaning program is designed to help you (1) make informed instructional decisions as you teach the lessons and (2) track your students' reading comprehension and social development over time. The expectation is that all of your students are developing—at their own pace—into readers with high levels of comprehension and that they can each develop positive, effective interpersonal skills and values.

The program includes both formative and summative assessment tools. Each assessment has a corresponding record sheet in the Assessment Resource Book, which you may use to record your students’ progress. You can photocopy the forms in the Assessment Resource Book, or you can download and print the forms on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). Alternatively, you can use the CCC ClassView app to electronically record, sort, synthesize, and report assessment data for each student and the whole class. For more information, see “CCC ClassView App” on page xlvi.

FORMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Formative assessments help you reflect on your students’ academic and social growth over time through class observation and individual conferences. Formative assessments in Making Meaning comprise the following:

- Class Assessment (K-6). Class Assessment Notes within the lessons appear once per week and are designed to help you assess the performance and needs of the whole class. The assessment occurs during a lesson at a time when the students are demonstrating their use of the strategies they learned to make sense of text. During the assessment, you have the opportunity to randomly observe students working in pairs or individually (select strong, average, and struggling readers) as you ask yourself questions that focus your observations. You can record your observations on the corresponding “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA).
- IDR Conferences and Student Reading Goals and Interests Survey (K-6). IDR conferences provide you with the opportunity to talk with individual students about their reading, identify areas of strength, and note areas in which students need more support. As you teach the lessons, an IDR Conference Note will alert you when a conference is suggested. You can record your observations from each conference on the corresponding “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN). We encourage you to confer with each student at least once per unit. The “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets comprise an important source of information for the Individual Comprehension Assessment.

The questions provided in the first “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet can be used as a beginning-of-year survey of the students’ reading goals and interests. The questions in the final “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet of the year can serve as an end-of-year survey of the students’ perceptions of their growth as readers, attitudes toward reading, and goals for summer reading.

For more information about the formative assessments in the program, see “Formative Assessments” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

SUMMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Summative assessments allow you to evaluate and score each student’s comprehension development, as well as the students’ social development.

- Social Skills Assessment (1-6). The Social Skills Assessment allows you to note how well each student is learning and applying the social skills taught in the program and how well each student integrates the values of responsibility, respect, fairness, caring, and helpfulness into his or her behavior. As you teach the lessons, a Social Skills Assessment Note will alert you when a social skills assessment is suggested. We recommend that you do this assessment three times: at the beginning, middle, and end of the year. The “Social Skills Assessment Record” sheet (SS) allows you to track how individual students are doing with specific skills during the course of the year.
- Individual Comprehension Assessment (K-6). The Individual Comprehension Assessment, which is administered once per unit beginning in Unit 2 (grades 3–6) or Unit 3 (grades K–2), is designed to help you assess the strategy use and comprehension development of individual students. In grades 1–6, the assessment has two sections—Part A: Strategy Assessment and Part B: IDR Assessment—and reflection questions to help guide your assessment of each student’s growth. In kindergarten, only the IDR Assessment and reflection questions are provided. The “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA) can be used to record each student’s score on the assessment and help you assign grades.

For more information about the summative assessments in the program, see “Summative Assessments” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

Using the Technology Features

The Making Meaning program incorporates digital technology to enhance your students' learning experience and streamline your preparation, instruction, and assessment processes.

Special Considerations

Teaching the Program in Multi-age Classrooms

If you are teaching a multi-age class, we recommend that you choose the level of the program that is appropriate for the majority of your students to use throughout the school year. Since the program provides instruction through read-aloud texts selected to be accessible to a wide range of students and includes time for Individualized Daily Reading practice and individual conferences, all of your students will be able to develop comfortably as readers even if the lessons are designed for students at a lower or higher grade level.

Support for English Language Learners (ELLs)

The Making Meaning program helps you implement effective teaching strategies to meet the needs of all students, including English Language Learners (ELLs). English Language Development (ELD) strategies are an inherent part of the program’s design. In addition, through ELL Notes, we provide you with suggestions for modifying the instruction to enhance support for ELLs.

While the Making Meaning program is an effective tool in teaching comprehension to ELLs, it is not intended to stand alone as a comprehensive linguistic development program. It is assumed that additional support in second language acquisition is occurring for ELLs outside of this program.

ABOUT TEACHING READING COMPREHENSION TO ELLs

One myth about teaching ELLs is that good teaching alone will meet these students’ linguistic and academic needs, and that they will simply “pick up” the language in the typical classroom context. While “good teaching” (using developmental, research-based instructional strategies) certainly benefits students learning English, it is important to build on each student’s specific academic and linguistic strengths and plan instruction based on his or her needs. The first step is to develop an accurate picture of each child’s level of English language proficiency and his or her previous academic experience.

STAGES OF SECOND LANGUAGE ACQUISITION

Learning a new language is a developmental process. The table on the next page outlines the generally accepted stages of acquiring a language and the characteristics of students in an immersion classroom at each stage. In an immersion classroom, the students are instructed in their second language (English) for all subjects. Progress from one stage to the next depends on a wide variety of factors, including cognitive and social development, maturity, previous academic experience, family education, home literacy practices, personality, cultural background, and individual learning styles.

Stages of Second Language Acquisition

Developmental Stages of Language Proficiency (under immersion)	Student Characteristics
Stage 1: Receptive or Preproduction (can last up to 6 months)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Often nonverbal during this period</li> <li>Acquires receptive vocabulary (words and ideas that children “take in” or learn before they begin to produce words verbally)</li> <li>Conveys understanding through drawing, writing, and gesturing</li> <li>Gradually becomes more comfortable in the classroom</li> </ul>
Stage 2: Early Production (can last 6 months to 1 year)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Comprehends simple language</li> <li>Communicates with one key word and short phrases</li> <li>Verbally labels and categorizes</li> <li>Listens more attentively</li> <li>Begins to use present tense</li> <li>Writes words and some simple sentences</li> </ul>
Stage 3: Speech Emergence (can last 1 to 3 years)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Has good comprehension of conversational language</li> <li>Sequences stories using words and pictures</li> <li>Is challenged by figurative language</li> <li>Speaks and writes simple sentences</li> </ul>
Stage 4: Intermediate Fluency (can last 3 to 5 years)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Has excellent comprehension</li> <li>Uses newly acquired vocabulary</li> <li>Speaks, reads, and writes more complex sentences</li> <li>Participates in academic discussions</li> <li>Makes few grammatical errors</li> <li>May continue to be challenged by idioms and figurative language</li> <li>Demonstrates higher-order skills, such as analyzing, predicting, debating, etc.</li> </ul>
Stage 5: Advanced Fluency (can last 5 to 7 years)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Has near-native fluency</li> <li>Demonstrates excellent comprehension</li> <li>Continues to develop academic vocabulary</li> <li>Continues to speak, read, and write increasingly complex sentences</li> </ul>

CONSIDERATIONS FOR PAIRING ELLs

A key practice in the Making Meaning program is to have students work in unit-long partnerships. Random pairing is suggested as a way to ensure equity by reinforcing the value of each child in the classroom (see “Random Pairing” on page xxvii). However, when considering the needs of English Language Learners, it may be advantageous to partner these students in a more strategic way. You might pair a beginning English speaker with a fluent English or multilingual speaker. It can be effective if the multilingual partner shares the ELL’s primary language, but we recommend prudence in asking the more fluent English speaker to serve as translator. Another option is to place ELLs in trios with fluent English speakers to allow them more opportunities to hear English spoken in conversation. In this case, it is important to make sure that all three students are participating and including one another in the work.

HOW THE MAKING MEANING PROGRAM SUPPORTS ELLs

There are several effective English Language Development instructional strategies integrated throughout the Making Meaning program. These strategies help make the content engaging and comprehensible, support the students at their individual levels of language proficiency, and help the students see themselves as valuable members of the classroom community. The strategies included are shown in the chart below.

English Language Development (ELD) Strategies in the Making Meaning Program

Creating a respectful, safe learning community	Active, responsible learning High expectations for classroom interactions Explicit classroom procedures and routines Explicit social skills instruction Regular discussions to reflect on classroom values and community
Cooperative learning	Cooperative structures (“Turn to Your Partner” and “Think, Pair, Share”) Ongoing peer partnerships Opportunities to express thinking orally and listen to others’ thinking Discussing reading with partners Sharing work and reflecting
Authentic communication	Whole-class, small-group, and partner discussions about interesting and important texts and topics Opportunities to respond to or engage with a text in a variety of modalities (discussion, writing, drawing)
Vocabulary development	Opportunities to preview and discuss read-aloud texts before lessons Building academic vocabulary

(continues)

English Language Development (ELD) Strategies in the Making Meaning Program (continued)

Language-rich environment	Rich, meaningful literature Engaging texts and book art Daily opportunities for listening, speaking, reading, and writing
Scaffolded instruction	Explicit teacher modeling Rereading text Prompts to begin responses Drawing on prior knowledge and experience Building background knowledge
Critical thinking	Questions that prompt higher-order thinking Exploring and responding to different viewpoints Generating independent thinking

ADDITIONAL STRATEGIES FOR SUPPORTING ELLs

In addition to the practices embedded in the Making Meaning lessons, ELL Notes provide specific suggestions for adapting instruction to meet the needs of English Language Learners. In addition, you can implement a number of general strategies to help ELLs participate more fully in the program. These include:

- Speaking slowly. Beginning English speakers can miss a great deal when the language goes by too quickly. Modifying your rate of speech can make a big difference in helping them to understand you.
- Using visual aids and technology. Photographs, realia (real objects), diagrams, and even quick sketches can help to increase a student's comprehension. When giving directions, physically modeling the steps and writing them where the students can see them while saying them aloud are effective ways to boost comprehension. Audiovisual resources, such as recordings of texts read aloud, author interviews, and interactive versions of read-alouds can also be helpful.
- Inviting expression through movement and art. Having students express their thinking through movement and art can be enormously powerful. Drawing, painting, dancing, mimicking, role-playing, acting, singing, and chanting rhymes are effective ways for students to increase comprehension, build vocabulary, and convey understanding. The Total Physical Response (TPR) method developed by James Asher helps children build concepts and vocabulary by giving them increasingly complex verbal prompts (stand, sit, jump, etc.) that they act out physically and nonverbally (see the Bibliography on page 652).
- Building vocabulary. ELL vocabulary is highlighted for most read-alouds in the program, and we recommend that you introduce this vocabulary (discuss it, act it out, draw it, etc.) and define it before and during the reading. In addition, you might brainstorm words related to particular read-alouds or themes. The students can then illustrate each word and post the illustrations next to the printed words, creating a visual chart to refer to as they read or listen to the read-aloud.

- Preteaching. It is a good idea to preteach concepts with ELLs whenever possible. This can mean previewing vocabulary, doing a picture walk of a story, or looking at realia or photographs before a lesson. Preteaching in a student’s primary language can be particularly effective—teachers, instructional aides, parents, or other community members can be enlisted to help. Some of the Making Meaning read-aloud books are available in Spanish. For a list of these titles, visit Center for the Collaborative Classroom’s website (collaborativeclassroom.org).
- Simplifying questions. Open-ended questions are used throughout the Making Meaning program to elicit language and higher-order thinking from students. These questions are often more complex in structure than closed or one-word-answer questions. While all learners, including ELLs, benefit from the opportunity to consider such questions, you might modify complicated questions into simpler ones to increase comprehension and participation by your ELLs. The table below lists some suggestions for simplifying questions.

Suggestions for Simplifying Questions

Suggestion	Original Question	Simplified Question
Use the simple present tense.	What was happening at the beginning of the story?	What happens at the beginning of the story?
Use active rather than passive voice.	How was the window broken in the story?	Who broke the window in the story?
Ask who/what/where/when questions rather than how/why questions.	How are you and your partner working together?	What do you and your partner do to work well together?
Avoid the subjunctive.	After hearing this part of the book, what do you think raptors might have looked like?	The part of the book we read today describes raptors. What do you think raptors looked like?
Provide definitions in the question.	Why is the old woman so reluctant to name the dog?	The old woman is reluctant; she does not want to name the dog. Why?
Provide context clues as part of the question.	Why is Sally Jane’s visit to the reservoir important?	At the end of the story, Sally Jane visits the reservoir and thinks about what her mother said. What is important about that?
Elicit nonverbal responses. (Stages 1–3)	What do you see in this picture that tells about the words?	This picture shows the sentence “I like to paint.” Point to the paints. Point to the paintbrushes.
Elicit responses of 1–2 words or short phrases. (Stages 1–3)	What do you think will happen when Peter puts the snowball in his pocket?	Peter puts the snowball in his pocket. Is that a good idea?

- Assessing comprehension. When students are in the preproduction and early production stages of language acquisition, it can be hard to assess exactly what they understand. It is important not to confuse lack of verbal response with lack of understanding. Rather than force ELLs to produce language before they are ready (which can raise anxiety and inhibit their progress), you can assess nonverbal responses while the students are actively engaged by asking yourself questions such as:
  - Do the student’s drawings and written symbols communicate thinking or show evidence of my teaching (such as completing a sentence frame and illustrating it appropriately, or including a beginning, middle, and end of a story)?
  - Does the student nod, laugh, or demonstrate engagement through other facial expressions?
  - Does the student pick up academic and social cues from peers?
  - Does the student follow classroom signals and routines?
  - Does the student follow simple directions (such as “Please get out your pencils”)?
  - Does the student utter, chant, or sing some familiar words or phrases?

ADDITIONAL MODIFICATIONS FOR ELLs

The additional English Language Development strategies outlined below can help you better meet the specific linguistic needs of your ELLs. These strategies can be implemented in small groups with your English Language Learners.

Read-aloud Lessons

- Preview vocabulary. Ask ELLs to draw or act out vocabulary and encourage them to give examples.
- Take a picture walk. Give ELLs an opportunity to become familiar with the illustrations in a text and make predictions to increase comprehension.
- Modify cooperative structures. Provide question prompts for verbal ELLs to use in partner conversations (for example, “Ask your partner, ‘What will happen next?’”) and allow nonverbal ELL students to gesture, draw, act out, or write their ideas for their partners.

Strategy Lessons

- Use multiple modalities. Encourage ELLs to use drama, drawing, realia, and writing to practice comprehension strategies.

- Create visual aids. Use chart paper or otherwise visually record the important parts of class discussions.
- Review vocabulary. Emphasize vocabulary and story language to help ELLs make sense of a text and use vocabulary meaningfully.

Guided Strategy Practice Lessons

- Role-play or reenact parts of the text. Encourage ELLs to demonstrate comprehension through active means.
- Use journals. Ask ELLs to draw or to draw and label in their reading journals to express their ideas. Have them share their drawings or writing with a partner as a “rehearsal” before sharing with the class.
- Use visualizing. Provide opportunities for the students to create and describe mental images from a text as a way to enhance their comprehension.

Independent Strategy Practice Lessons

- Review the strategy. While the students are working independently, have ELLs work in small groups to reinforce the strategy. Check in with the groups to assess the students’ comprehension.
- Have pairs or small groups share. Have ELLs work in pairs or small groups to present their ideas to the whole class.
- Prepare for class discussions. Support participation in class discussions by giving ELLs time to “rehearse” what they want to share. Encourage them to share examples from a text or their own pictures or writing.

Individualized Daily Reading (IDR)

IDR is an excellent opportunity to provide ELLs with targeted comprehension support. Here are several ways to differentiate instruction during IDR:

- Provide audiobooks. Provide a variety of audiobooks so ELLs can listen to a story, hear standard pronunciation, develop story language, and increase their understanding.
- Use partner reading. Have ELLs read a book with a partner.
- Respond to literature. Ask ELLs to draw or write a response to the text they are reading independently (for example, draw the main character or write a sentence describing the problem in the story).
- Offer one-on-one support. Enlist instructional assistants, student tutors, student teachers, primary-language speakers, and parents to read with ELL students during IDR.

By carefully observing your ELLs and employing some of the strategies suggested here (as well as those in the ELL Notes in the lessons), you will be able to support your students' development as readers and as caring, collaborative participants in your reading community.

Building the Home-School Connection

Keeping families informed about their children's participation in the Making Meaning program helps family members understand and appreciate how their children are developing as readers and how they can support that development.

FAMILY LETTERS

Each unit in the Making Meaning program includes a letter informing parents and caregivers about the most recent comprehension strategy and social skill their child has learned. The letters also offer suggestions for supporting students' independent reading at home. Family letters help strengthen the home-school connection and give parents and caregivers a way to be actively involved in their children's reading lives. The family letters are included in the Online Resources list for each unit and can be accessed via the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

Integrating Making Meaning with Other Reading/Language Arts Programs

The Making Meaning program is designed to replace or enhance any reading comprehension program you may be using. How you integrate it with other components of your language arts program depends on the type of program you have. The following are suggestions for integrating Making Meaning with basal programs and programs that use literature circles and guided reading.

BASAL PROGRAMS

In many basal programs, reading comprehension instruction and language arts skills instruction are closely interconnected through each week's literature selection. A single book or reading might be used to teach the week's comprehension, grammar, spelling, word study, and writing. The Making Meaning program can enhance the intellectual and social impact of these programs significantly. Here are some suggestions for integrating Making Meaning lessons with basal programs:

- The Making Meaning grade 3 program is designed in four-day weeks. This allows you to read the week's basal anthology selection on Monday, so the week's spelling, writing, grammar, and other language arts skills instruction can be linked to that reading. Making Meaning lessons can then be used to replace the basal's comprehension lessons during the rest of the week.

- In addition to other reading materials, basal anthologies can be used as independent reading material during Individualized Daily Reading (IDR).
- The basal anthology selection can be used as an alternative read-aloud text if you decide to repeat a week of instruction in the Making Meaning program.

LITERATURE CIRCLES

The Making Meaning program can support and enhance the work the students do in literature circles. The students can practice and strengthen the social development skills they have learned in Making Meaning, such as listening to others and explaining their thinking, as they interact in their circles. They can also apply the comprehension strategies they have learned to their literature circle selections, thereby building their understanding of the strategies and gaining experience in applying them to their individual, day-to-day reading. When the students are reading expository texts or narrative texts in the Making Meaning program, they can select the same type of text for their literature circle, and they can use their IDR time to read their circle selections.

GUIDED READING

The Making Meaning program integrates well with reading programs that include guided reading, which is also strategy-based. Making Meaning lessons can serve as the primary source of comprehension instruction, with guided reading providing extra support to those students who need additional instruction and practice in using the strategies in texts at their independent reading levels.

The Reading Community

FICTION AND NARRATIVE NONFICTION

During this unit, the students begin the important work of building their reading community. They hear and discuss stories, explore using illustrations to make inferences about stories, and make text-to-text connections as they compare and contrast two books by the same author. They also begin Individualized Daily Reading (IDR) and learn how to select books at their independent reading levels, self-monitor their reading, and use a reading log. Socially, they learn the procedures for gathering for a read-aloud, “Turn to Your Partner,” and “Think, Pair, Share.” They also practice listening to one another and working in a responsible way.

- Students compare and contrast two stories by the same author.
- Students begin Individualized Daily Reading (IDR) and read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Teacher and students build the reading community.
- Students learn and practice the procedure for gathering for a read-aloud.
- Students learn and practice the procedure for “Turn to Your Partner.”
- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Familiarize yourself with the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org), where the online lesson resources for each lesson are located. For more information, view the “Using the CCC Learning Hub” tutorial (AV39).
- ✓ Plan a space in the classroom, such as a rug area, for the class to gather. The students should sit facing you, close enough to see the books you will share. If a rug area is not available, plan how the students will sit in their chairs facing you. Keep in mind that the students will begin partner work on Day 2, and your setup should allow for partners to easily turn to each other to talk.
- ✓ Consider reading this unit’s read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding.

1 DO AHEAD (continued)

- ✓ Prior to Day 2, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during this unit. For suggestions about assigning partners, see “Random Pairing,” “Considerations for Pairing ELLs,” and “Cooperative Structures” in the Introduction. For more information, view “Cooperative Structures Overview” (AV4).
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 4 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, introduce your students to the classroom library and give them time to become familiar with its organization. Provide time for each student to select two or three books to read independently during Individualized Daily Reading (see Step 6). For more information, see “Setting Up a Classroom Library” in the Introduction.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, determine the procedure you would like the students to use when selecting books at their independent reading levels during IDR (see Step 5).

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the lessons in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide, you will begin those lessons next week. (See “Vocabulary Teaching Guide” in the Introduction for more information about the vocabulary lessons.)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn the procedure for gathering for a read-aloud
- Discuss their reading lives
- Hear and discuss a story
- Make inferences using an illustration
- Listen carefully

1 Introduce the Reading Community

Introduce the Making Meaning program by explaining that this year the students will be creating a classroom reading community in which they read, think about, and talk about books together. They will also learn powerful reading comprehension strategies to help them make sense of what they read.

Point out that often students learn how to read words fluently, or smoothly and with expression, but still have a difficult time understanding what they are reading, especially as the books get more challenging. This year they will all work together, with your help, to become strong readers of all kinds of texts.

Explain that to learn the comprehension strategies well, the students will need to share their thinking, listen carefully to one another, and work in a responsible way. For this reason, it will be important to create a reading community in which everyone feels welcome, safe, and respected.

2 Learn the Procedure for Gathering

Explain that in the Making Meaning program, the students will gather regularly to hear books read aloud and discuss them. Explain where you will sit and where you would like the students to sit and face you. Before asking the students to move, state your expectations for how to gather in a responsible way.

You might say:

"I expect you to walk quickly, quietly, and without bumping into one another. I expect you to sit so that others have room on the rug and to wait quietly until everyone is seated."

Materials

- Miss Nelson Is Missing!

Teacher Note

For more information, view "Building a Community of Readers" (AV1).

Technology Tip

"Building a Community of Readers" (AV1) is one in a series of professional development videos in the Making Meaning program. For information about the content of the videos and how to view them, see "Professional Development Media" in the Introduction.

Teacher Note

If the students have already learned a procedure for gathering for a read-aloud, use that procedure here. Simply remind the students of the procedure and your expectations.

Teacher Note

During all read-alouds, make sure the students sit facing you and close enough to hear easily and see the illustrations.

Have the students move to their places. As they move, comment on responsible behaviors you observe without mentioning any of the students' names.

You might say:

"I notice that people are sitting toward the front of the rug so that others can sit behind them."

If necessary, have the students return to their desks and practice the procedure until they are able to gather in an orderly way. Explain that you would like them to do the same thing every time they get ready for a read-aloud.

3 Discuss the Students' Reading Lives

Explain that one of the ways the students will build their reading community this year is by sharing their reading lives with one another. Begin this discussion by sharing with the class a little about your reading life.

You might say:

"I love to read, and I try to read every day. Usually I read in the evening after dinner. I sit with my cat in a puffy, yellow chair in the corner of my living room. I've always enjoyed reading mysteries, although recently my favorite books have been about adventures in the great outdoors. I'm starting to get interested in flying, so I plan to read some books about that soon."

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What kinds of books do you like to read? Why?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Use the same procedure to discuss the following questions:

Q Where is your favorite place to read?

Q What kinds of books do you want to read this year?

Tell the students that this year they will have lots of chances to read and listen to many different types of books.

4 Introduce Miss Nelson Is Missing!

Show the cover of Miss Nelson Is Missing! and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Point to the picture on the cover and explain that sometimes the picture on the cover of a book gives readers a clue about the story. Ask the students to look closely at the picture. After a moment, ask:

Q What do you think you can tell about the story from this picture? What in the picture makes you think that?

Q Do you think this will be a serious story or a funny story? Why do you think so?

ELL Note

Encourage your English Language Learners to share about books written in their primary languages as well as about books written in English.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering the questions, offer some examples like those listed in the "Students might say" note on the next page.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"I think Miss Nelson is a teacher and this is her class."

"I think Miss Nelson's students are upset that she's missing. All the kids in the picture look unhappy."

"I think it will be a funny story because the picture doesn't look real. It looks like a cartoon."

5 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations as you read. Clarify vocabulary when you encounter it in the story by reading the word, briefly defining it, rereading it in context, and continuing (for example, "The kids in Room 207 were misbehaving again"—misbehaving means 'behaving, or acting, badly'—"The kids in Room 207 were misbehaving again").

Suggested Vocabulary

misbehaving: behaving, or acting, badly (p. 3)

rapped: hit sharply or quickly (p. 10)

drawn: closed (p. 18)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

spitballs: little balls of chewed paper (p. 3)

act up: (idiom) act, or behave, badly (p. 8)

loaded them down with homework: gave them a lot of homework (p. 13; refer to the illustration)

case: crime or mystery that the police investigate (p. 17)

shades: window coverings (p. 18)

know-it-all: person who thinks he or she knows everything (p. 24)

6 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion of the story using questions such as:

Q What happens in this story?

Q Why do you think the kids in Room 207 improve their behavior?

Tell the students that in the next lesson they will talk more about Miss Nelson Is Missing!

Teacher Note

The Suggested Vocabulary and ELL Vocabulary lists include words that are important for the students to understand in order to comprehend the story. To maintain the flow of the story, these words should be defined during the reading but not discussed. For more information, view "Introducing Vocabulary During a Read-aloud" (AV3).

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, help the students learn that they are talking to one another (not just to you) during class discussions by directing them to turn and look at the person who is about to speak. Ask speakers to wait until they have the class's attention before starting to speak. If students are unable to hear the speaker, encourage them to politely ask the speaker to speak up. Repeating these techniques over the next few weeks will help the students learn to participate responsibly in class discussions. To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view "Turning and Looking at the Speaker" (AV16).

Teacher Note

We recommend that you describe behavior generally, rather than singling out students by name. When you focus on describing appropriate behavior, all of the students learn what it means to be responsible and develop the intrinsic motivation to act accordingly.

Teacher Note

You might tell the students that when they take responsibility, they act in ways that help them learn, work well with others, and build the classroom community.

7 Reflect on Working Together

Explain that in order to build a reading community, the students need to think about how they are treating one another, how they are listening and speaking to one another, and how they are taking responsibility for their learning and behavior.

Without mentioning any of the students' names, describe some responsible behaviors you noticed during the lesson.

You might say:

"I saw many students taking responsibility for their learning and behavior during today's lesson. Students took responsibility for their behavior by gathering in an orderly way and being quiet and attentive during the read-aloud. I saw students taking responsibility for their learning by listening carefully to the story and taking time to think about my questions before they raised their hands."

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you do to take responsibility during the reading and discussion today?

Encourage the students to continue to think about ways they can take responsibility for their learning and behavior. Have the students return to their seats.

Day 2

Listening Practice

Materials

- Miss Nelson Is Missing!
- "Illustration from Miss Nelson Is Missing!" chart (WA1)

Teacher Note

If your students are unfamiliar with "Turn to Your Partner," this lesson may require an extended class period. If they are already familiar with the procedure, you do not need to model it in Step 2. Instead, remind the students of your expectations. To see an example, view "Using 'Turn to Your Partner'" (AV6).

In this lesson, the students:

- Practice the procedure for gathering for a read-aloud
- Learn "Turn to Your Partner"
- Hear a story read aloud again
- Make inferences using an illustration
- Listen to one another

TEKS 1.D.iii
TEKS 1.E.i
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 1 and Step 2 (all, beginning on page 10 and continuing on to page 11)

1 Pair Students and Introduce "Turn to Your Partner"

Explain that beginning today the students will work with partners during the reading lessons. Working with partners gives them a chance to talk about what they are thinking and learning before sharing ideas with the class. Randomly assign partners (see “Do Ahead” in the Week Overview) and make sure they know each other’s names. Explain that partners will work together for the next two weeks.

Explain that when the class gathers, you would like partners to sit together, facing you. Gather the class. If necessary, have partners return to their desks and practice the procedure until they are able to gather in a responsible way.

Explain the “Turn to Your Partner” procedure.

You might say:

“Sometimes I will ask a question and say ‘Turn to your partner.’ When you hear this, you will turn to face your partner and talk about the question. When I raise my hand, you will finish what you’re saying and turn back to face me.”

2 Model “Turn to Your Partner”

Have a volunteer act as your partner. Model turning to face each other and introducing yourselves. Then ask partners to turn and introduce themselves. After a moment, signal for the students to turn back to face you. Have the class practice “Turn to Your Partner” by asking:

Q What is something you did in school last year that was especially fun or interesting? Turn to your partner.

Give partners a few moments to share. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention. Have one or two volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Tell the students that they will continue to practice “Turn to Your Partner” during the lesson today.

3 Review the Story and Explain the Purpose of Rereading

Show the cover of Miss Nelson Is Missing! Ask:

Q What do you remember about this story? Turn to your partner.

Have partners discuss the question; then signal for the students’ attention and have one or two volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Tell the students that today you will read Miss Nelson Is Missing! aloud again. Ask them to listen carefully for any details they missed during the first reading. Explain that rereading is a technique that helps readers understand what they are reading at a deeper level. This year you will often reread books or parts of books and ask the students to practice a reading comprehension strategy or think more deeply about the reading.

Teacher Note

The partners you assign today will stay together for the unit. Take some time at the beginning of today’s lesson to let them get to know each other by talking informally in a relaxed atmosphere. You might have them report to the class some interesting things they learned about each other.

Teacher Note

If you are teaching other programs from Center for the Collaborative Classroom, the students can work within partnerships already established, or you may assign new partners for the reading lessons.

Teacher Note

Use a signal that the students will notice but that does not interrupt their discussion, such as a raised hand. This allows the students to finish what they are saying before turning to face you. You might build accountability by having the students raise their own hands when they turn to face you.

Teacher Note

You can use self-stick notes to mark stopping places in the book. Self-stick notes can also be used to remind you of questions, instructions, or other information you want to convey to the students during the read-aloud.

ELL Note

Support your students with limited English proficiency by providing them with a prompt for responding to the questions, such as “I think the children feel . . .” For more information, see “Additional Modifications for ELLs” in the Introduction and view “Adapting Lessons for English Language Learners” (AV13).

Facilitation Tip

During class discussions, continue to prompt the students to turn and look at the person who is about to speak (for example, “Ana is going to speak now. Let’s all turn and look at her”). During the discussion, scan the class to ensure that the students are looking at the person who is speaking. If necessary, interrupt the discussion to remind the students of your expectations.

Technology Tip

Whiteboard activities (WA) are interactive charts that can be displayed using an interactive whiteboard. Alternatively, you may print the whiteboard activities and project them using a projection device. For more information, view the “Using CCC’s Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV40).

4 Reread Miss Nelson Is Missing!

Read the story aloud again, slowly and clearly. Stop after:

p. 10 “Miss Nelson’s kids did as they were told.”

Ask:

 Q How do you think the children feel at this point in the story? Why? Turn to your partner.

When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Reread the last sentence on page 10 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 22 “But that didn’t seem likely either.”

Ask:

 Q How do you think the children feel now? Why? Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention. Have a few volunteers share what they discussed with the class. Reread the last sentence on page 22 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 28 “‘That’s our little secret,’ said the kids.”

Ask:

 Q How do you think the children feel now? Why? Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and have one or two volunteers share their ideas with the class.

Reread the sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the story.

5 Discuss the Ending of Miss Nelson Is Missing!

As a class, discuss:

Q What do you think happens to Miss Viola Swamp? What in the story makes you think so?

Students might say:

“I think Miss Nelson and Miss Viola Swamp are the same person. I think so because she and Miss Nelson are never in the same place at the same time.”

“Also, the kids saw Miss Viola Swamp near Miss Nelson’s house.”

“Also, Miss Nelson has an ugly black dress in her closet.”

Display the “Illustration from the Miss Nelson Is Missing!” chart (WA1) and review that this is an illustration from the end of the story. Explain that sometimes a book’s illustrations contain details that can help readers understand the story. Ask the students to look closely at the picture. After a few moments, ask:

Q What clues do you see in this illustration that help you understand what happens in the story?

If necessary, point out the black dress, black shoes, and wig in the closet and the fake nose and false eyelashes on the dressing table. Then show the picture of Miss Viola Swamp on page 11. Remind the students that looking carefully at a book's illustrations can help them understand what is happening in the story. Encourage the students to pay close attention to the pictures in books they hear and read.

6 Reflect on "Turn to Your Partner"

Help the students reflect on "Turn to Your Partner" by asking:

Q How did you do with "Turn to Your Partner"? In what ways did it go well?

Q What would you like to do differently next time?

Tell the students they will have more chances to practice "Turn to Your Partner" as they hear and discuss books. Have the students return to their seats.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Writing About Reading activities provide the students with opportunities to write about texts they discuss in the Making Meaning program. The activities are optional and can be done at the end of the lesson or at another time. For more information, see "Extending the Instruction" in the Introduction.

Write Personal Opinions About Miss Nelson Is Missing!

Show the cover of Miss Nelson Is Missing! and remind the students that they heard this book earlier. Ask:

Q What do you remember about this story?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. If necessary, remind the students that Miss Nelson disappears when the students in her class will not stop misbehaving and that Miss Viola Swamp comes to take her place. Ask:

Q What happens to the students in Room 207 when Miss Swamp is their teacher? Why do you think this happens?

Students might say:

"The students start behaving because they're scared of her."

"The students get a lot of homework."

"The students start to appreciate Miss Nelson because she's so much nicer than Miss Swamp."

"The students get sad because they think Miss Nelson is never coming back."

Materials

- Miss Nelson Is Missing!

Teacher Note

If necessary, explain to the students that an opinion is a “strongly held point of view.” When we give an opinion, we are telling what we think about something.

Then ask:

Q Do you think Viola Swamp is a good teacher? Why?

Students might say:

“Yes, because the students listen to her.”

“I don’t think so because she’s mean to the students.”

“I think she’s a better teacher than Miss Nelson because she gets the students to do their schoolwork.”

Explain that the students will write their opinions of whether they think Miss Viola Swamp is a good teacher. Tell the students that readers can have different opinions about the characters and events in a story, and that is fine. What is important is that they give reasons to support their opinions. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing an opinion about Miss Viola Swamp.

You might say:

“I’ll start with a sentence that tells what I am writing about—the book Miss Nelson Is Missing! and the character Miss Viola Swamp. I’ll write: In Harry Allard’s book Miss Nelson Is Missing! Miss Viola Swamp comes to Miss Nelson’s classroom because the students are misbehaving. Now I’ll write a sentence that tells my opinion of whether Miss Viola Swamp is a good teacher. I’ll write: Even though Miss Viola Swamp gets the students to behave, I don’t think she is a good teacher. Now I need to explain my opinion. I’ll write: Miss Swamp treats the students badly, and I think teachers should treat students with kindness and respect.”

Explain that the students will now write their own opinion about Miss Viola Swamp. Remind each student to include the title and author of the book, his opinion of whether or not Miss Viola Swamp is a good teacher, and a reason for that opinion. Give the students a few minutes to write. If time permits, invite the students to share what they wrote with the class.

In this lesson, the students:

- Practice “Turn to Your Partner”
- Hear and discuss a story
- Compare and contrast two stories by the same author
- Learn the procedure for Individualized Daily Reading (IDR)
- Read independently for up to 15 minutes
- Listen carefully

ABOUT INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING IN THIRD GRADE

Today the students are introduced to Individualized Daily Reading (IDR). In IDR the students read independently and reflect on and discuss what they have read. We recommend that you base the length of time the students read independently on their attention and engagement. You might begin with 10–15 minutes and gradually add time over the coming weeks. The goal is for the students to read independently for up to 25 minutes by Unit 4 (approximately eleven weeks into the school year).

If you have not already done so, we encourage you to establish a classroom library with a wide range of texts at various levels. There are a number of ways to set up and organize a classroom library. For more information, see “Setting Up a Classroom Library” in the Introduction.

1 Review “Turn to Your Partner” and Get Ready to Listen

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that again today the students will use “Turn to Your Partner” to share their ideas. Review that the purpose of talking with a partner is to give all the students a chance to think more about what they’re learning. Remind the students that it is important for partners to look at each other when they talk and to take turns talking and listening so that both partners get a chance to share.

2 Introduce *Miss Nelson Has a Field Day

Show the cover of Miss Nelson Is Missing! and remind the students that they heard and discussed the book earlier. Explain that sometimes authors write more than one book about the same characters and that today the students will hear another story about Miss Nelson written by Harry Allard. Show the cover of Miss Nelson Has a Field Day and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Point out

Materials

- Miss Nelson Has a Field Day
- Miss Nelson Is Missing!
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

For additional support with setting up procedures and expectations for IDR, view “Getting Started with IDR” (AV27).

that the illustrator, James Marshall, is also the illustrator of Miss Nelson Is Missing!

Tell the students that as you read Miss Nelson Has a Field Day aloud, you want them to listen carefully and think about what is happening in the story. Explain that you will stop during the reading so that partners can talk about the story. Show the covers of Miss Nelson Has a Field Day and Miss Nelson Is Missing! again and tell the students that as they listen today, you also want them to notice how the two stories are similar, or alike, and how they are different.

3 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary when you encounter it in the story by reading the word, briefly defining it, rereading it in context, and continuing (for example, “. . . gloom had blanketed the Horace B. Smedley School”—gloom means ‘sadness’—‘gloom had blanketed the Horace B. Smedley School’”).

Teacher Note

You might use self-stick notes to mark the places where the suggested vocabulary words appear. Write the meaning of each word on a note to help you define it smoothly without interrupting the reading. For more information, see “Preparing the Daily Lessons” in the Introduction. To learn more, view “Planning a Lesson” (AV12).

Suggested Vocabulary

gloom: sadness (p. 3)

pitiful: terrible (p. 6)

horsing around: (idiom) goofing off (p. 7)

giving Coach the business: (slang) being rude to their coach (p. 7)

make mincemeat out of: (idiom) destroy (p. 8)

rummaging: looking (p. 14)

pussyfoot: sneak (p. 19)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

blanketed: covered (p. 3)

down in the dumps: (idiom) unhappy (p. 4)

depressed: sad (p. 5)

pipe down: (idiom) stop talking (p. 21)

puzzled: confused (p. 23)

clobbered: beat (p. 29)

Stop after:

p. 17 “Just then the guys heard the sound of squeaky tennis shoes.”

Ask:

Q What has happened in the story so far? What do you think will happen next? Turn to your partner.

Circulate among partners, and listen as they discuss the story.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students taking turns sharing ideas?
- Are the students able to recall details from the story?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 4 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal for the students’ attention and have one or two students share what they discussed with the class. Reread the last sentence on page 17 and continue reading to the end of the story.

4 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion of the story by asking questions such as:

- Q What happens in this story?
- Q What is surprising about the ending of the story? Why is that surprising?

5 Compare and Contrast Miss Nelson Stories

Show the covers of Miss Nelson Is Missing! and Miss Nelson Has a Field Day. Ask:

- Q In what ways are these two stories similar, or alike? Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Students might say:

- “Both stories have Miss Nelson and Miss Viola Swamp.”
- “In both stories Miss Nelson tricks the kids.”
- “They both have a surprise at the end.”

In the same way, discuss:

- Q In what ways are the stories different? Turn to your partner.

Students might say:

- “Miss Nelson Is Missing! is about Miss Nelson’s class. Miss Nelson Has a Field Day is about the football team.”
- “There are a lot of characters in Miss Nelson Has a Field Day that aren’t in the other story, like Coach Armstrong, Mr. Blandsworth, and Miss Nelson’s sister Barbara.”
- “Detective McSmogg isn’t in Miss Nelson Has a Field Day.”

Teacher Note

Class Assessment Notes appear throughout the program to prompt you to monitor the students as they discuss the reading. For more information, see “Class Assessment” in the Assessment Resource Book.

Technology Tip

You may choose to record assessment data using printed forms found in the Assessment Resource Book or on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). Alternatively, you might record data using the CCC ClassView app. For more information, view the “Using the CCC ClassView App” tutorial (AV41).

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering this question or the one below, offer some examples like those listed in the “Students might say” notes.

Teacher Note

If time permits, you might facilitate a brief conversation about other series the students enjoy.

Teacher Note

You might choose to do IDR at the end of the reading lesson or at another time of the day. If you have already established a procedure for independent reading, simply remind the students of your expectations.

Teacher Note

If the students are familiar with the term “just-right” book (or another related term such as independent reading level), you might use this term when talking about choosing appropriate texts.

Teacher Note

Base the length of time the students are reading independently on their attention and engagement. Gradually add time as the students are ready.

As a class, discuss:

Q What did you enjoy about hearing two stories about the same characters?

Review that some authors write multiple books about the same characters, and explain that these groups of books are called series. Encourage the students to explore series of books when they read on their own.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

TEKS 5.A.ii
TEKS 6.A.ii
Student/Teacher
Narrative Step
6 (all)

6 Introduce Individualized Daily Reading

Explain that today you will teach the procedure for Individualized Daily Reading (IDR). Explain that IDR is a time when each student independently reads a book she enjoys. Tell the students that during IDR, they will read books at their own reading levels and practice the reading comprehension strategies they will learn in the Making Meaning program. Point out that the more reading practice the students do in books at their independent levels, the stronger they will become as readers.

State your expectations for how the students will act responsibly during IDR.

You might say:

“During IDR you will select books and find a comfortable place to sit and read silently. Reading silently and staying seated will help the people around you concentrate so they can enjoy what they are reading.”

Have the students get the books they have selected from the classroom library (see “Do Ahead” in the Week Overview) and find comfortable places to sit in the classroom and read silently to themselves. Have the students read silently for up to 15 minutes. Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading.

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you enjoy about the book or books you read today?

Tell the students that they will have many more opportunities to read books they enjoy independently. Explain that reading books they enjoy will help them become stronger readers. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear a story read aloud again
- Make inferences using an illustration
- Learn a procedure for selecting texts at their independent reading levels
- Read independently for up to 15 minutes
- Listen carefully
- Work in a responsible way

ABOUT READING LEVELED TEXTS DURING IDR

In order for the students to grow as readers, they need to spend time reading texts they can comprehend and read fluently with few miscues (accuracy errors). For that reason, during IDR they read books at their independent reading levels. In this unit, they learn a procedure for choosing books at appropriate levels and self-monitoring strategies to help them think about how well they understand what they are reading. For more information, see “Reading Appropriately Leveled Texts” in the Introduction.

If you have administered a formal reading assessment to identify each student’s independent reading level, you might record each student’s data on the “Student Reading Level Summary” record sheet (SR1).

1 Review Miss Nelson Has a Field Day and Prepare for Rereading

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Miss Nelson Has a Field Day and remind the students that they heard the story earlier. Review the story by turning to each of the following book pages and reading the lines aloud. Ask the students to remember what was happening at that point in the story. For each line, have one or two volunteers share with the class.

p. 6 “And it was true—the Smedley Tornadoes were just pitiful.”

p. 17 “‘It’s Blandsworth!’ cried the guys.”

p. 30 “Mr. Blandsworth treated the whole team to hot dogs at Lulu’s.”

Remind the students that rereading is an important technique for helping readers understand and enjoy a book. Explain that you will reread Miss Nelson Has a Field Day, and ask the students to listen carefully for any details they missed yesterday.

Materials

Student/Teacher Narrative

and Step 5 (all, beginning on page 21 and continuing on to page 22)

ELL Note

Consider showing your English Language Learners the illustrations prior to reviewing the story with the class.

2 Reread the Story

Read the story aloud again, slowly and clearly.

3 Discuss the Story

Ask:

 Q What did you hear during the second reading of this story that you missed during the first reading? Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students' attention and have a few volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Show page 32 and read the text at the bottom of the page aloud. Ask:

Q What did we find out from the part of the story I just read?

Students might say:

"We found out that Miss Nelson has a sister."

"We learned that Miss Nelson is a twin."

"We learned that her sister helped her trick the football team."

Display the "Illustration from Miss Nelson Has a Field Day" chart (WA2) and review that this illustration appears on the last page of the book. Ask the students to look closely at the illustration. After a moment, ask:

Q What clues do you see in this illustration that help you understand what happens in the story?

If necessary, point out the black sweatshirt at the end of the bed and the tennis shoes on the floor between the beds. Also point out that it is only from looking at the picture that readers know that Miss Nelson and her sister Barbara are twins.

Remind the students that authors and illustrators sometimes include important information in the illustrations of their books and that they should pay careful attention to the pictures in books they hear and read.

4 Reflect on Working Together

Help the students reflect on the reading community by asking questions such as:

Q What did you do to help build the reading community this week?

Q What did you do to take responsibility for yourself this week?

Students might say:

"I came straight to the rug instead of doing something else first."

"I listened to my partner, and I made sure I talked about my ideas, too."

"I paid attention during the read-aloud."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Introduce Selecting Texts at the Right Levels

TEKS 5.A.i
Student/
Teacher
Narrative Step
5 (through fourth paragraph)

Review the procedures and expectations you have established for IDR and for using the classroom library.

Remind the students that during IDR it is very important that they read books at the right levels. Explain that books that are at the right levels are not too difficult and not too easy. The books have words the students can read and understand and stories or topics that are interesting to them. Remind the students that reading books at the right levels will help them to become stronger readers.

Describe the procedure you would like the students to follow for selecting books at appropriate reading levels.

You might say:

"First, choose a book that looks interesting to you. Open the book to any page and begin reading that page quietly to yourself. As you read, count the words on the page that you do not know. If you count more than five words that you do not know, the book may be too difficult. If you are able to read all the words on the page very quickly and the book doesn't seem interesting, it may be too easy. If you have chosen a book that seems either too difficult or too easy, return it to the classroom library and choose another book. Once you have found a book that interests you and is at the right level, check it out from the library and begin reading."

Explain that the students will now have a few minutes to look through the books they checked out from the classroom library earlier this week. Tell them that if they decide any of their books are not at the right levels, they should put these books to the side. Later they will have a chance to return these books to the classroom library and select new ones.

Give the students a few minutes to look through their books. Circulate as they work and provide assistance as needed. When most of the students have finished looking through their books, signal for their attention. Explain that you will call on a few students at a time to return the books they have set aside to the classroom library and choose new books to replace them.

Explain that while students are waiting to be called to the classroom library, they may read silently. Have the students read silently for up to 15 minutes. Call on two or three students to come to the library, return their books, and select new books. Repeat the procedure until every student has had a turn in the library.

TEKS 5.A.i
Student/Teacher
Activity Step 5
(fifth and sixth paragraphs)

Teacher Note

For additional support with helping the students select books at their independent reading levels, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 1, "Selecting Appropriately Leveled Texts" (found in Appendix A).

Teacher Note

If you have established a different system for identifying texts at appropriate levels for the students, such as Lexile levels, colored dots on books, or leveled bins, explain how to use that system instead and model it if necessary.

Teacher Note

You might support students in selecting books at the right levels. To help a student check whether a book is at the right level, ask the student to read a passage from the book aloud and tell you what the book is about. If the student is having difficulty reading or understanding the passage, the book may be too difficult. If the student reads quickly and doesn't seem engaged, the book may be too easy. If a student is reading a book that is too difficult or too easy, help him select a more appropriate book.

ELL Note

You might want to help your English Language Learners choose books at appropriate levels. Providing a limited number of teacher-selected texts will help them make good choices.

Teacher Note

You might repeat this instruction during the next few IDR sessions or at another time in order for every student to get a turn in the library.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Miss Nelson Is Missing! to teach the Week 1 vocabulary lessons.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Describe some responsible behaviors you noticed as the students were reading and selecting their books.

You might say:

"I noticed students reading silently during IDR, which helped others concentrate on their reading. In addition, I noticed that many students waited patiently for their turn in the classroom library."

Tell the students that they will have many opportunities to practice choosing and reading books that are at the right levels. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 1 lessons this week.

Materials

- Two Bobbies

ELPS 3.E.iii

Steps 1–3 (all, beginning on page 26 and continuing on to page 28)

Teacher Note

If your students are already familiar with “Think, Pair, Share,” simply remind them of your expectations. To see an example, view “Using ‘Think, Pair, Share’” (AV8).

Teacher Note

You might explain that a hurricane is a “very large storm that starts over the water.” You might then find New Orleans on a map and point out its proximity to water.

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn the procedure for “Think, Pair, Share”
- Hear and discuss a story
- Discuss the lesson in the story
- Read independently for up to 15 minutes
- Listen to one another

1 Gather and Introduce “Think, Pair, Share”

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that today the students will learn another way to help them talk in pairs called “Think, Pair, Share.” Explain that “Think, Pair, Share” is like “Turn to Your Partner.” The difference is that the students think by themselves before they talk in pairs. Explain that you will ask the students a question and they will think quietly about it for a moment. Then, when you say “Turn to your partner,” they will turn to their partners and begin talking. When you signal for their attention, they will end their conversations and turn their attention back to you. Some pairs will then share their thinking with the class.

To have the students practice “Think, Pair, Share,” ask:

Q What is one thing you want to keep in mind today to help your conversation with your partner go well? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share with the class what they discussed. Explain that at the end of the lesson, you will ask the students how they did working with their partners today.

2 Introduce Two Bobbies

Show the cover of Two Bobbies and read the title and the names of the authors and the illustrator aloud. Explain that this is a nonfiction, or true, story about Hurricane Katrina, which hit New Orleans, Louisiana, in 2005.

Explain that during Hurricane Katrina, the city of New Orleans was flooded with water and many of the people who lived there had to leave their homes and their pets behind in order to get to safety. This is the story of two pets, a dog and a cat, that got left behind.

3 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read, using the procedure you used in Week 1, Day 3 (see Step 3).

Suggested Vocabulary

the mighty Mississippi: the Mississippi River (p. 4)

Mardi Gras: a holiday that people wear costumes for (p. 4)

levees: walls built to hold back water (p. 6)

tethered: tied (p. 6)

littered with debris: full of pieces of things that have been destroyed (p. 11)

receded: went backward (p. 11)

devastated: ruined (p. 12)

strayed: wandered (p. 15)

paced: walked nervously (p. 18)

whimpered: cried softly (p. 18)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

had a soft spot for: (idiom) liked (p. 3)

volunteers: people who work for no pay (p. 8)

rescued: saved (p. 8)

lounges: relaxes (p. 30)

Stop after:

p. 12 “Bob Cat’s brown-sugar markings started to fade to a dull white.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q What has happened in the story so far? What do you think will happen next? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and have one or two volunteers share what they discussed with the class. Reread page 12 and continue reading.

Stop after:

p. 23 “There was only one thing left to try.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q What has happened to Bobbi and Bob Cat? What do you think will happen next? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Facilitation Tip

Continue to remind the students to turn and look at the person who will speak. Ask speakers to wait until they have the class's attention before starting to speak. Scan the class to ensure that all students are actively listening and participating in the discussion. Notice the effect of using this facilitation technique on the students' engagement in class discussions over time.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering the question, offer some examples like those in the "Students might say" note.

ELL Note

Cooperative structures like "Turn to Your Partner" and "Think, Pair, Share" support the language development of English Language Learners by providing frequent opportunities for them to talk about their thinking and listen to others.

Signal for the students' attention and have one or two volunteers share their thinking. Reread the last sentence on page 23 and continue reading to the end of "After the Storm" on page 32.

4 Discuss the Story

As a class, discuss:

Q How did Bobbi and Bob Cat help each other after Hurricane Katrina?

Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class.

Students might say:

"Bobbi protected Bob Cat."

"They kept each other company."

"Bobbi helped Bob Cat find his way around."

Explain that sometimes stories contain ideas or lessons for us to think about in our own lives. Explain that one important idea in Two Bobbies is that it is good to have friends. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q What else do you think the story might be trying to tell us about friends and friendship? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, signal for their attention and have a few volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Students might say:

"It's important for friends to stick together, especially if something bad happens."

"Animals can have friends just like people do."

"Friends take care of each other."

Encourage the students to think about the important ideas or lessons in stories they read and hear.

5 Reflect on "Think, Pair, Share"

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q How does having time to think before you talk with your partner help you? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After pairs have had a chance to talk, signal for the students' attention and have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"It gives me a chance to think about the question."

"It helps me get ideas."

"It helps me because it's easier to talk when you've thought about what you're going to say."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Review the procedures and your expectations for using the classroom library during IDR.

Have the students get their books and find quiet places to sit and read. Tell the students that at the end of IDR today, you will ask them to talk with partners about what they read. Then have them read silently for up to 15 minutes. Circulate and assist the students as needed.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Explain that before you have the students share what they read with partners, you will show them what that sharing might look like. Then briefly model sharing the title of a book you are reading, the author's name, and what the book is about.

You might say:

"I read a book called Miss Nelson Is Missing! by Harry Allard. It's about a class of students who won't behave for their teacher, Miss Nelson. One day the students come to school and discover that Miss Nelson has been replaced by Miss Viola Swamp, who is really strict and mean. With Viola Swamp as their teacher, the students begin to behave, and they begin to appreciate Miss Nelson."

Have partners take turns discussing what they read. After partners have had a chance to share, have a few volunteers share what they read with the class.

Help the students reflect on their partner work by asking:

Q What was one thing you liked about sharing what you read with a partner today?

Have a few students share their thinking with the class. Remind the students that they will have many opportunities to share and discuss what they read. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Teacher Note

During IDR you will often ask the students to talk with partners about their reading. When sending the students to find places to read, you will need to determine if you would like the students to sit near their reading partners or if they may share with any classmates nearby.

TEKS 7.D.ii
TEKS 7.D.iv
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 6 (third paragraph and "You might say" note on page 29)

Teacher Note

In the initial weeks of IDR, students are invited to share more generally about the texts they are reading. Once they have had practice talking about their independent reading in broader terms, more of the suggestions for sharing their reading will focus on the use of the strategy they are learning, as well as providing opportunities to review previously learned strategies.

Materials

- Two Bobbies
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

In this lesson, the students:

- Practice “Think, Pair, Share”
- Hear parts of a story read aloud again
- Make text-to-self connections
- Make inferences using an illustration
- Read independently for up to 15 minutes
- Work in a responsible way

1 Review Procedures and Get Ready to Listen

Review the procedure for gathering and then gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that today the students will think more about Two Bobbies and use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss the story with their partners.

2 Review Two Bobbies

Show the cover of Two Bobbies and remind the students that they heard the story earlier. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q What do you remember about this story? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share what they remember about the story with the class.

Remind the students that one technique good readers use to better understand what they have read is rereading. Explain that today you will reread parts of Two Bobbies and ask the students to think more deeply about the story.

3 Reread Parts of the Story Aloud

Tell the students that the first part you will reread is from the beginning of the story. Show pages 6–7 and read the text on page 6 aloud. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q How do you imagine Bobbi and Bob Cat’s owners felt when they had to leave their pets? How would you have felt in their place? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Students might say:

- "I think they were scared."
"I think they must have been really sad to have to leave their pets.
I would be so sad if I had to leave my dog behind in a dangerous situation."
"I think they were probably worried about Bobbi and Bob Cat."

Remind the students that authors and illustrators often include important information about stories in the illustrations of books. Ask the students to look closely at the picture on pages 6–7. After a moment, ask:

Q What do you notice about this illustration? What do you think it means?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

- "There are bowls with food and water on the porch. I think Bobbi and Bob Cat's owner put them there."
"I notice the chain around Bobbi's neck. Maybe it means her owner didn't want her to run away."
"There are no people in the picture because they have all gone away."
"The water is almost as high as the porch."

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students taking time to think before talking to their partners?
- Are they contributing ideas to class discussions?

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA2); see page 5 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Tell the students that the next part you will reread is from the middle of the story, after Bobbi and Bob Cat have been on their own for several months. Show pages 14–15 and read the text on page 15 aloud. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q Why do you think Rich decides to feed Bobbi and Bob Cat? What would you have done if you were him? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Reread the second paragraph on page 15 again ("He trimmed Bobbi's chain, leaving enough to jingle on the ground because Bob Cat liked to follow it. But every time Rich tried to touch Bob Cat, Bobbi growled"). As a class, discuss the following questions:

- Q Why do you think Bobbi growls every time Rich tries to touch Bob Cat?
- Q Why do you think Bob Cat likes to follow the sound of Bobbi's chain?

Teacher Note

If students struggle to answer the questions, ask more specific questions about the picture, such as:

- Q How high is the water?
- Q Where are the people?
- Q Why do you think the bowls of food and water are on the porch?
- Q Why do you think Bobbi has a chain around her neck?

Students might say:

"I think Bobbi growls because she's trying to protect Bob Cat."

"Maybe she's trying to warn Bob Cat that Rich is about to touch him, since Bob Cat can't see."

"I think Bob Cat likes the sound of the chain because it lets him know that Bobbi is close by."

Point out that by rereading, readers often notice details in a story that they may have missed during the first reading. Encourage the students to practice rereading as they read independently.

4 Reflect on Working Together

Help the students reflect on how they did with "Think, Pair, Share" by asking:

Q What did you do to take responsibility for your thinking and talking during "Think, Pair, Share" today? How did that help your partner work go smoothly?

Students might say:

"I thought quietly about the questions, and I didn't start talking until the teacher said to."

"I didn't talk while my partner was talking."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Have the students get their books and find quiet places to sit and read. Tell the students that at the end of IDR today, you will ask them to talk with partners about what they read. Then have them read silently for up to 15 minutes. Circulate and assist the students as needed.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have partners take turns telling each other the titles of their books, the authors' names, and what the books are about. After partners have had a chance to share, have a few volunteers share what they read with the class. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Learn More About Bobbi and Bob Cat

Show the cover of Two Bobbies and remind the students that this is a true story of two pets, Bobbi the dog and Bob Cat the cat, who survived Hurricane Katrina. Ask:

Q What do you remember about this story?

Tell the students that today you will share some online sources about Bobbi and Bob Cat. Display the online sources you selected and read them aloud. As a class, discuss:

Q What is something new you learned about Bobbi and Bob Cat?

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, locate one or two age-appropriate sources that provide more information about Bobbi and Bob Cat. Search for information online using the keywords “Bobbi and Bob Cat Hurricane Katrina.”

Individualized Daily Reading

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn a procedure for self-monitoring
- Read independently for up to 15 minutes
- Work in a responsible way

1 Introduce Self-monitoring

Have the students bring their books and gather, facing you. Remind the students that reading books that are at the right levels helps them become stronger readers. Explain that one way good readers know if they are reading books that are at the right levels is by pausing while they are reading to think about what they are reading and, more importantly, how well they understand what they have just read.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and explain that these are questions the students can ask themselves as they are reading to help them know if their books are at the right levels for them.

Materials

- “Thinking About My Reading” chart, prepared ahead

Teacher Note

To provide the students with additional support with self-monitoring, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 2, “Self-monitoring and Using ‘Fix-up’ Strategies” (found in Appendix A).

TEKS 6.I.i

Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 1 and Step 2
(all, beginning on page 33
and continuing on to page 34)

Thinking About My Reading

What is happening in my book?

Do I understand what I am reading?

Do I know what most of the words mean?

Is this book interesting and fun to read?

Point to and read each question on the chart aloud. Explain that when you ask the students to stop reading, you would like them to think about each of these questions quietly before continuing to read. Explain that the purpose of this is to help them notice when they understand what they are reading and when they do not. Tell the students that when they do not understand their books, they should go back and reread. If they still do not understand, they may need to get new books.

Explain that today they will read independently and practice stopping to ask themselves the questions on the chart.

2 Model Self-monitoring

Have the students watch as you model reading a book and asking yourself the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart.

You might say:

“I picked the book Miss Nelson Has a Field Day by Harry Allard to read during IDR. I’m going to read the first few pages quietly to myself. Now I’m going to check to see if this book is right for me. I’ll ask myself the first question on the chart: ‘What is happening in my book?’ In this part of the book, I learned that everyone at Miss Nelson’s school is down in the dumps. The whole school is depressed because the football team, the Smedley Tornados, hasn’t won a game all year. I can retell what’s happening in the part of the book I just read. Next, I’ll ask myself the second question: ‘Do I understand what I am reading?’ Yes, I do understand what I am reading. I know how the characters are feeling and why they feel that way. Next, I’ll ask myself the third question: ‘Do I know what most of the words mean?’ Yes, so far I know what all of the words mean. Finally, I’ll ask myself the last question: ‘Is this book interesting and fun to read?’ Yes, I am enjoying the story. Based on my answers to these questions, I think that I can continue reading this book.”

Tell the students that today they will read independently and that you will stop them every few minutes to have them think about how well they understand what they have just read. Explain that when you stop them, you would like them to think about each of these questions quietly before continuing to read.

3 Read Independently and Self-monitor

Have the students find quiet places to sit and begin reading silently. After 5 minutes, signal for their attention and read the questions on the chart aloud. Pause after each question to give the students time to think. Remind them that if they do not understand what they have read, they should go back and reread.

Have the students resume reading and read silently. After 5 minutes, stop them again and repeat the procedure. Invite students who do not think their books are at the right levels to select different books.

Have the students continue reading silently. As they read, circulate among them and ask individual students to read parts of their books aloud and tell you about them. If any students are struggling to understand their books, use the questions on the chart to help them be aware of their own comprehension. After 5 minutes, signal to let the students know it is time to stop reading.

4 Reflect on Independent Reading

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q Do you think the book you are reading is at the right level? How did you decide?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"I had a hard time reading a lot of words in the first few pages of my book, so I decided to trade it in."

"I decided my book was at the right level because I could read the words. I knew what was happening, and I liked reading it."

"I decided my book wasn't at the right level because I had a hard time understanding what was happening in the story."

Tell the students that they will continue to practice thinking about their own reading in the coming days. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

TEKS 6.1.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3 (all)

Teacher Note

Post the "Thinking About My Reading" chart in the classroom so the students can continue to refer to it during IDR.

Day 4

Individualized Daily Reading

Materials

- “Thinking About My Reading” chart from Day 3
- “Reading Log” chart (WA3)
- Student Response Book, Reading Log section
- Copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

TEKS 6.A.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 2 (all)

TEKS 6.Li
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 2 and Step 3 (all)

In this lesson, the students:

- Practice the procedure for self-monitoring
- Learn how to use a reading log
- Read independently for up to 15 minutes
- Listen to one another
- Take responsibility for themselves

1 Review Self-monitoring

Have the students bring their books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Direct the students’ attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart, and review that yesterday they practiced asking themselves questions as they were reading to help them decide if their books were at the right levels. Explain that again today, you will stop them as they are reading and ask them to think about the questions on the chart. Tell the students that if they decide that the books they are reading are not at the right levels, they may select other books to read.

2 Read Independently and Practice Self-monitoring

Have the students read silently for up to 15 minutes. Stop the students periodically and have them monitor their comprehension by thinking about the questions on the chart.

As the students read, circulate among them and check individual students’ comprehension. To check a student’s comprehension, ask the student to read a selection aloud to you and tell you what it is about. If the student is struggling to understand the text, help her use the questions on the chart to make herself aware of her own comprehension. Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading.

3 Discuss the Independent Reading and Reflect on Self-monitoring

Have the students take turns discussing what they read with their partners. After partners have had a chance to share, have a few volunteers share what they read with the class.

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students are doing with thinking about their own reading. Ask:

- Q If you do not understand something you just read, what might you do?
- Q If you do not know a lot of the words in the book you are reading, what should you do?

Tell the students that they will continue to practice thinking about their own reading during IDR.

4 Model Completing an Entry in the Reading Log

Have the students return to their desks with partners sitting together. Distribute a Student Response Book to each student. Explain that the students will use their Student Response Books throughout the year to record their thinking about books they hear and read. Ask each student to write his name on the inside front cover of his Student Response Book. Have each student turn to the first page of the Reading Log section at the back of the Student Response Book. Explain that this is where they will write comments about each book they finish during IDR. Display the “Reading Log” chart (🌐 WA3) and ask the students to watch as you model writing a book entry in the log. Use a book that the students are all familiar with, such as Two Bobbies.

You might say:

“I’m going to write an entry for the book Two Bobbies. In the first column, I’ll write today’s date. In the next column, I’ll write the title of the book and then underline it to show that this is the title of a book. In the next column, I’ll write the authors’ names, Kirby Larson and Mary Nethery. In the last column, I’m going to write a comment, or a sentence that tells what I think about the book. I’ll write: I like this book because it’s an amazing true story about two animals that help each other. It shows that animals care about their friends, just like people do.”

Date	Title	Author	Comment
9/25/15	Two Bobbies	Kirby Larson and Mary Nethery	I like this book because it’s an amazing true story about two animals that help each other. It shows that animals care about their friends, just like people do.

WA3

5 Write in Reading Logs

Tell the students that now they will practice writing an entry in their reading logs. Remind the students of another book they are familiar with. Write today’s date and the book’s title and author in the “Reading Log” chart (🌐 WA3), and have the students write the same information

ELL Note

Consider having students with limited English proficiency draw pictures in the Comment column of their reading logs.

in their reading logs. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q What kind of comment might you write about [Miss Nelson Has a Field Day]? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a moment, signal for the students’ attention and have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“I might write a sentence about what the story is about.”

“I could write why I liked it or didn’t like it.”

“I can write about [Coach Swamp].”

Have each student write her own comment about the book in the appropriate column. Then have a few volunteers share with the class what they wrote. Have any student who finished a book today record it in her reading log.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 1. You will need to reassign partners before you start Unit 2.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Periodically, have a few students share with the class what they are reading at home.

Teacher Note

Plan a brief class discussion after the students have made several entries in the Reading Log section of the Student Response Book so they have a chance to hear about the books their classmates are reading and the kinds of comments they are writing about the books.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Two Bobbies to teach the Week 2 vocabulary lessons.

Unit 2

Visualizing

POETRY AND FICTION

During this unit, the students visualize to make sense of poetry and fiction. As they visualize, they informally use schema and make inferences. They also begin an informal exploration of point of view as they consider the thoughts and feelings of characters in relation to their own. During IDR, the students continue to self-monitor their reading comprehension and begin to confer with the teacher individually about their reading lives and about the books they are reading. They practice visualizing in their independent reading and write in their reading journals. Socially, they practice acting in fair and caring ways and analyze the effect of their behavior on others.

OVERVIEW

Poem

“Seal”

by William Jay Smith (see page 63)
The poet describes a seal in motion.

Cherries and Cherry Pits

by Vera B. Williams
Bidemmi loves to draw. She creates interesting characters and stories through her artwork.

Comprehension Focus

- Students visualize to make sense of text.
- Students informally use schema and make inferences as they visualize.
- Students informally consider a character’s point of view and distinguish it from their own.
- Students read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Students analyze the effect of their behavior on others and on the group work.
- Students act in fair and caring ways.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this unit’s read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding.
- ✓ Make available texts at a variety of levels that the students can use to practice visualizing during IDR throughout the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during the unit. For suggestions about assigning partners, see “Random Pairing,” “Considerations for Pairing ELLs,” and “Cooperative Structures” in the Introduction. For more information, view “Cooperative Structures Overview” (AV4).
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title “Reading Comprehension Strategies.”

① DO AHEAD (continued)

- ✓ Prior to Day 2, make a class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1); see page 14 of the Assessment Resource Book. This week you will begin conferring with individual students during IDR and documenting your observations and suggestions for each student. You might record the date(s) you confer with each student on the “IDR Conference Class Record” sheet (CR1); see page 145 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 8 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 2 lessons this week.

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin working with new partners
- Hear and discuss a poem
- Visualize to understand and enjoy the poem
- Read independently for 15–20 minutes and practice self-monitoring
- Take turns talking and listening

ABOUT VISUALIZING

Readers create unique mental images from texts based on their own schema, or background knowledge and experiences, and inferences they make from descriptive language. Visualizing enhances readers' understanding and enjoyment of all types of texts. While some young readers do it naturally, others benefit from instruction about visualizing. All students benefit from reflecting on the fact that they are visualizing. In this unit, the students visualize as they listen to read-alouds and read independently. For more information, see "The Grade 3 Comprehension Strategies" in the Introduction.

1 Pair Students and Get Ready to Work Together

Randomly assign partners (see "Do Ahead") and make sure they know each other's names. Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Tell the students that they will work with the same partners for the next three weeks, which will give them the opportunity to get to know each other and learn how to solve problems together. Remind the students that in a good partnership, both partners have a chance to talk and share their thinking. Ask:

Q What will you do today to make sure that both you and your partner have a turn to talk?

Have a few students share their ideas with the class. Tell the students that as they work in pairs in the coming days, they will focus on making sure that both partners have a turn to talk and on finding ways to help each other.

2 Introduce "Seal"

Tell the students that today you will read aloud a poem called "Seal" by William Jay Smith. Explain that the students will use the words in the poem to visualize, or picture in their minds, what is happening in the poem. Ask the students to practice visualizing by closing their eyes and

5 (all, on page 49)

Teacher Note

The students will be assigned new partners at the beginning of each unit; partners will stay together throughout the unit. This structure helps the students reflect on their interactions and solve problems over time.

If you are teaching other programs from Center for the Collaborative Classroom, the students can work within partnerships already established, or you may assign new partners for the Making Meaning lessons.

imagining a seal, or picturing it in their minds. Support their thinking with prompts such as:

- Think about the size and the shape of the seal.
- Think about how the seal moves.
- Think about where the seal is.

After a few moments, ask the students to open their eyes. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have the students first think about and then discuss:

 Q What did you visualize, or picture in your mind, when you thought about the seal? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and have one or two volunteers describe what they visualized for the class.

3 Read Aloud and Visualize

Explain that you will read the poem twice. Ask the students to close their eyes and picture the seal in their minds as they listen. Read “Seal” aloud slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary as you read. Then pause and read the poem a second time.

Suggested Vocabulary

darts: moves quickly

minnow feed: small fish that other animals eat

swerve: change directions quickly, usually to avoid something

utter: say

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

zoom: fast movement

After the second reading, have the students open their eyes. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What did you visualize, or see in your mind, as you listened to the poem? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and invite a few volunteers to share what they visualized with the class.

Students might say:

“I saw a seal swimming down through the water really fast.”

“I saw a wet seal sitting on a rock with a mouthful of fish.”

“I imagined that the seal was sitting on a rock next to me. His skin felt cold and wet.”

Teacher Note

If you notice partners struggling to describe what they visualized, signal for the students’ attention and support their thinking by asking questions such as:

Q What did the seal you visualized look like?

Q How did it move?

Q What sounds did it make?

4 Reread and Discuss the Poem

Display the “Seal” chart (C WA1) and tell the students that this is the poem they just heard. Ask:

Q What do you notice about the shape of this poem? Why do you think the poet decided to write it this way?

Students might say:

“It bends. Maybe it’s supposed to make you think about how the seal moves.”

Explain that you will read “Seal” once more and that this time you will stop during the reading so that partners can discuss what the seal in the poem is doing. Reread the first half of the poem, stopping after “And sweeps away.” Ask:

 Q What does the seal do in the first part of the poem? Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, signal for the students’ attention and invite one or two volunteers to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that in the first part of the poem, the seal dives from the rocks and swims down through the water at great speed. Reread the last line before the stop and continue reading to the end of the poem. Ask:

 Q What does the seal do in the second part of the poem? Turn to your partner.

If necessary, explain that in the second part of the poem, the seal turns around and swims up, jumping out of the water with a mouthful of fish.

5 Reflect on Taking Turns

Remind the students that earlier they talked about ways to make sure each partner has a chance to talk. Ask:

Q What did you and your partner do today to make sure you both had a chance to share? What might you do differently when you work together again?

Students might say:

“When my partner talked, I just listened. Then we switched.”

“One time, I could talk first, and the next time, she could talk first.”

Tell the students that they will continue to practice taking turns and talking about their mental images in the coming days.

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, we encourage you to focus on two questioning techniques: asking open-ended questions and using wait-time. Notice that most of the questions we suggest are open-ended, inviting many responses. These questions cannot be answered with a single word and often begin with words like what, how, and why. We encourage you to try asking the questions as they are written and noticing how the students respond. Because the questions require thought, we suggest that you use at least 5-10 seconds of wait-time after asking a question before calling on anyone to respond. This gives everyone a chance to think before talking. To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view “Asking Open-ended Questions and Using Wait-time” (AV18).

ELL Note

Consider providing books in your English Language Learners' primary languages. You might enlist students' family members to contribute books written in these languages.

Teacher Note

Base the length of time the students are reading independently on their attention and engagement. Gradually add time as your students are ready. The goal is for them to read independently for up to 25 minutes by Unit 4.

Teacher Note

You might point out and discuss elements of poetry, such as stanzas, shape, rhyme, and rhythm, as you encounter them in the poems.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Practice Self-monitoring

Direct the students' attention to the "Thinking About My Reading" chart and review that earlier they practiced asking themselves questions as they were reading to help them decide if their books were at the right levels for them. Explain that today you will not stop the students as they read and that the students will be responsible for thinking about the questions on the chart on their own. Remind them that if they decide their books are not at the right levels, they may select different books to read.

Have the students get their books and find places to sit and read. Have them read silently for 15–20 minutes. As the students read, circulate among them and ask individual students to read parts of their books aloud and tell you about them. If any students are struggling to understand their books, use the questions on the chart to help them be aware of their own comprehension.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students did monitoring their own reading by asking questions such as:

Q Is the book you are reading at the right level for you? What questions helped you decide?

Q What did you do to take responsibility for yourself during IDR today?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books. Give them time to record any books they finished in their reading logs.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Explore a Genre: Poetry

Collect a variety of poems written by different poets and read them aloud to the students (for example, you might read poems by William Jay Smith, Mary Ann Hoberman, Kenn Nesbitt, and Shel Silverstein). After reading each poem, ask questions such as:

Q What is this poem about?

Q What did you visualize, or picture in your mind, as you listened to the poem?

There are many websites that include fun poems for kids as well as interactive poetry activities. You might use the activities on one of these websites to create a class poem. Search for a few of these sites using the keywords "poetry for kids." You might bookmark any student-friendly sites you discover on classroom computers for students to visit later.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a story
- Visualize a character in the story
- Connect their mental images to the text
- Distinguish their own points of view from that of a character
- Read independently for 15–20 minutes
- Act in fair and caring ways

ABOUT IDR CONFERENCES

This week you begin conferring with the students during IDR. The first IDR conference in this unit focuses on helping you get to know the students as readers. Beginning in Week 2 of this unit, your conferences will focus on assessing the students' comprehension, supporting struggling readers, and encouraging self-monitoring strategies. To learn more, see "IDR Conferences" in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that yesterday they heard the poem "Seal" and used the words in the poem to create their own mental images of the seal. Explain that today you will read from a story and the students will talk in pairs about what they visualized as they listened. Remind them to treat each other in a fair and caring way by taking turns talking and listening.

2 Introduce Cherries and Cherry Pits

Show the cover of the book and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that this is a story about a girl named Bidemmi who loves to draw. As Bidemmi draws, she tells little stories about the interesting characters she creates. Ask the students to listen as you read the first few pages of the book aloud.

3 Read Aloud and Visualize

Read pages 4–8, showing the illustrations on pages 5 and 6 but not the one on page 9. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Materials

- Cherries and Cherry Pits (pages 4–11)
- "Excerpt 1 from Cherries and Cherry Pits" (WA2)
- "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart, prepared ahead, and a marker
- Class set of "IDR Conference Notes" record sheets (CN1)

Teacher Note

For more information, view "Setting Up IDR Conferences" (AV29).

TEKS 10.D.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3 and Step 4
(all, beginning on page
51 and continuing on page 52)

Suggested Vocabulary

subway: electric train or system of trains that runs underground in a city (p. 8)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

striped: having long lines of color (p. 8)

piano: large keyboard instrument (p. 8)

Tell the students that you will reread a passage from the book. Ask them to close their eyes and visualize the character that is being described in the passage. Reread page 8 aloud. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What does this character look like? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class. Point out that each student created her own mental image of the man based on what she heard and her own imagination.

4 Connect Mental Images to Words in the Text

Display the “Excerpt 1 from Cherries and Cherry Pits” chart ( WA2) and tell the students that this is the description you read aloud. Explain that you will read it aloud again and that as you read you want the students to listen for words that helped them create mental images of the man. Read the excerpt aloud. Ask:

Q What words helped you picture the man in your mind?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. As they share, underline the words they mention on the chart.

5 Begin the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” Chart

Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart (see “Do Ahead”). Read the title aloud and explain that you are going to use the chart to keep a list of strategies good readers use to help them make sense of what they read. Review that the students have been working on visualizing, or using an author’s words to create pictures in their minds. Explain that visualizing is a powerful comprehension strategy that good readers use to help them understand and enjoy what they read. Write visualizing on the chart and tell the students that they will continue to practice this strategy in the coming days.

Reading Comprehension Strategies

– visualizing

6 Visualize and Compare Mental Images with Bidemmi's Drawing

Tell the students that you will read another passage aloud and that you would like them to close their eyes and visualize what is being described. Read the last sentence on page 8 and continue reading to the end of page 10. Ask:

Q What do you imagine this family looks like as they sit together and eat cherries in their living room?

Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class. Show the illustration on page 11 and explain that this is the way Bidemmi drew the man and his family. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q How is Bidemmi's drawing the same as your mental image of the family? How is it different? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a moment, signal for the students' attention and have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

Point out that that Bidemmi's picture of the family is unique—just like the students' mental images—because it is based on her imagination.

Explain that you will read more from Cherries and Cherry Pits tomorrow and that the students will visualize as they listen to another of Bidemmi's stories.

Teacher Note

Post the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart where the students can easily refer to it throughout the year. You will add strategies to the chart as they are introduced. Refer to the chart often to remind the students to use the strategies as they read throughout the day.

TEKS 6.D.i

Step 6 (all)

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Begin Conferring About the Students' Reading Lives

Tell the students that during IDR this year, you will be conferring, or talking, with individual students about the books they are reading, what they like to read, and how they feel about reading. Explain that while you are conferring with individual students, the rest of the class will silently read their books. State your expectations for how the students will act responsibly while you confer with individual students.

You might say:

"When I am talking with a student about his reading, it is important for you to read silently for the entire time. If you finish reading a book before IDR is over, you can either reread the book or begin reading a new book."

Explain that when they have finished reading their books, the students may return them to the classroom library and select new ones.

Explain that as they read their books today, you would like the students to think about interesting things they read to share with partners at the end of IDR. Have the students get their books and find quiet places to read. Have them read silently for 15–20 minutes.

After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students. Pause between conferences to scan the class. Make note of any behaviors you wish to discuss at the end of IDR.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Beginning today, and continuing for the next several days, confer individually for a few minutes with each student to learn more about his reading habits, how he feels about himself as a reader, and what he is interested in reading.

Document your observations for each student on an "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 14 of the Assessment Resource Book. You will continue to use the "IDR Conference Notes" record sheets during conferences throughout the program.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Give the students a few moments to talk with partners about interesting things they read.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Teacher Note

Rather than having the students determine when they are ready to return their books, you might establish a schedule for your students to follow when returning and checking out books from the classroom library. For example, you might allow four or five students to go to the library each day. You might also have the students use the classroom library at different times of day (for example, during morning routine or right after lunch).

We recommend that the students keep enough books in their desks to last them for a week's worth of independent reading. This will help ensure that the students spend IDR time engaged in reading rather than browsing for books in the classroom library.

Teacher Note

You might use the "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1) as a survey of the students' reading goals and interests. For more information, see "IDR Conferences" in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a story
- Visualize a character in the story
- Draw mental images of the character
- Read independently for 15–20 minutes
- Act in fair and caring ways
- Take turns talking and listening

1 Review Cherries and Cherry Pits

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been using words in books to help them visualize, or create pictures in their minds. Visualizing helps readers both understand and enjoy what they read.

Show the cover of Cherries and Cherry Pits and review that it is about a girl named Bidemmi. Ask:

- Q What do you remember about Bidemmi?
- Q What did she draw in the part we read together yesterday?

To help the students recall the story, show them the illustration on page 11. Then tell them that you will read the next part of the story today and that you will not show the illustration; this will allow them to practice making their own mental images using the words.

2 Read Aloud and Visualize

Read page 13 aloud slowly and clearly, without showing the illustration. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

- florist shop: store that sells flowers
- pocketbook: woman's purse or handbag

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

- how come: why is it

Materials

- Cherries and Cherry Pits
- Student Response Book page 2
- Crayons or markers
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

ELL Note

Support students with limited English proficiency by providing prompts such as “I remember . . .” and “She drew . . .”

Tell the students that you will reread the passage from the book. Ask them to close their eyes and visualize the character that is being described in the passage. Reread page 13 aloud.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What does this character look like? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have one or two students share their mental images with the class.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment. For more information, see “Individual Comprehension Assessment” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

TEKS 6.D.i

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3 (all)

3 Draw Mental Images of the Woman on the Train

Distribute crayons or markers and tell the students that they will now draw how they pictured the woman on the train. Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 2, “How I Visualized Cherries and Cherry Pits.” Ask each student to first think quietly about her mental image and then draw it.

Circulate among the students as they draw. Reread the passage to individual students as needed. If the students have difficulty drawing, you might model by doing a brief sketch where everyone can see it, using the ideas of a few volunteers. The students can use your model to help them get started and then continue adding their own details. Point out that the students’ mental images are more important than their drawings. They should try to capture on paper what they see in their minds. Give the students a few minutes to complete their drawings, letting them know when they have about 2 minutes left.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to describe and draw their mental images?
- Are their mental images connected to the description in the story?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 8 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to describe and draw mental images that connect to the story, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to describe and draw mental images that connect to the story, reread the passage again and ask questions such as:

Q How big is the woman?

Q Where is she?

Q What is she wearing?

- If only a few students are able to describe and draw mental images that connect to the story, proceed with the lesson but consider giving the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative text before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

Teacher Note

Alternative texts can be used to reteach a Making Meaning lesson or as a substitute for a provided read-aloud text. A list of these texts is available in the General Resources section of the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). For more information, see “Preparing the Daily Lessons” in the Introduction.

Tell the students that they will have a chance to share their drawings with one another tomorrow.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Confer

Review that yesterday you began conferring, or talking, with individual students during IDR. Tell the students that you will confer with individual students again today, so it is important that they read silently. Explain that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of the students to share the books they are reading with the class.

Have the students get their books and read silently for 15–20 minutes. Encourage the students to try visualizing as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with students about their reading habits, how they feel about themselves as readers, and what they are interested in reading.

Document your observations for each student on an “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 14 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share with the class the books they are reading and what they like about the books so far.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Teacher Note

Continue to periodically remind the students to ask themselves the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart as they read independently and to select different books if they decide the ones they are reading are not at the right levels for them.

Materials

- Cherries and Cherry Pits
- Student Response Book pages 2–3
- “Excerpt 2 from Cherries and Cherry Pits” (WA3)

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in the Student Response Book in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment. For more information, see “Individual Comprehension Assessment” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

Teacher Note

As the students share their drawings, circulate and look for examples of partners who are being respectful and caring. Be ready to share your observations at the end of the lesson.

In this lesson, the students:

- Share and discuss their drawings from the previous day
- Connect their mental images to the text
- Distinguish their own points of view from that of a character
- Read independently for 15–20 minutes
- Act in respectful and caring ways
- Take turns talking and listening

1 Discuss Being Respectful and Caring

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that today partners will share and discuss the drawings they made of the woman in Cherries and Cherry Pits. Facilitate a discussion about respectful and caring ways to talk about other people’s drawings. Ask:

Q What are some ways you can be respectful and caring when sharing artwork? Why is that important?

Tell the students that you will check with them at the end of the lesson to see how they did being respectful and caring.

2 Connect Mental Images to the Text

Ask the students to review their drawings on Student Response Book page 2. Then have them look at Student Response Book page 3, “Excerpt from Cherries and Cherry Pits,” where the passage about the woman on the train is reproduced. Explain that you will reread the passage and that you want the students to follow along and think about which words helped them draw their pictures. Reread page 13 aloud slowly and clearly, without showing the illustration. After the reading, ask the students to go back and underline words or phrases in the passage that helped them picture the woman on the train.

3 Share and Discuss Drawings and Words

After the students have underlined words or phrases that helped them visualize, use “Turn to Your Partner” to have them share their drawings and discuss the words they underlined.

After partners have shared, facilitate a class discussion of their visualizations. Display the “Excerpt 2 from Cherries and Cherry Pits” chart (WA3) and ask:

Q What words or phrases from the story helped you draw your picture?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Underline words or phrases on the chart as the students refer to them.

Students might say:

“The part that said ‘she is almost as short as I am’ helped me see how tiny she is.”

“The words ‘old, old shoes’ helped me see that she might look a little poor.”

Ask:

Q What did you include in your picture that is not mentioned in the story? What made you decide to add that to your picture?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

4 Compare the Students’ Drawings with Bidemmi’s Drawing

Show the illustration on page 15 of the book and explain that this is how Bidemmi drew the woman on the train. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How is your picture the same as Bidemmi’s? How is it different? [pause] Turn to your partner.

5 Reflect on Being Respectful and Caring

Help the students reflect on their partner work by asking questions such as:

Q What did your partner do to let you know that he or she cared about and respected your ideas and work?

Q How did it feel to be treated with respect?

Briefly share examples of respectful and caring interactions you observed, and remind the students that in the reading community, it is important for everyone to feel respected and cared for. Encourage the students to continue to work on showing one another respect and caring in the coming days.

Teacher Note

This is an opportunity to help the students understand how their background knowledge contributes to the images they create when they read. For example, what they already know about grandmothers might contribute to the way they pictured the woman on the train. Cite some examples from the students’ responses. (For example, you might say, “Joey says his grandmother always wore gloves, so he added gloves to his drawing.”)

Teacher Note

The reflection that appears at the end of many lessons is important to the students’ growth as readers and to their social development. We encourage you to spend a few minutes at the end of these lessons helping the students reflect on their work and interactions. For more information, see “Focus on Social/Ethical Development” in the Introduction. To learn more, view “Social Reflection” (AV14).

Teacher Note

Next week you will begin conferring with the students about the books they are reading during IDR. If you have not met with all of your students to discuss their reading lives, you may want to do so before changing the focus of your conferences.

Teacher Note

You might review the students' responses to the questions on the "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CNI) to identify patterns across the members of the class as well as individual responses that stand out to you. After analyzing the students' responses, you might facilitate a class discussion about what you learned about them as readers and how you plan to build their love of reading over the course of the year. For ideas on how to facilitate this discussion, see the extension "Discuss the Students' Reading Goals and Interests" on page 61.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit "Seal" to teach the Week 3 vocabulary lessons.

Materials

- "Seal" (see page 63)
- Copy of "Seal" (BLM2) for each student

TEKS 10.D.ii

Student/Teacher Narrative Writing About Reading (all, beginning on page 60 and continuing on to page 61)

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Have the students get their books and read silently for 15–20 minutes. Encourage them to try visualizing as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with students about their reading habits, how they feel about themselves as readers, and what they are interested in reading.

Document your observations for each student on an "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CNI); see page 14 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share with partners the books they are reading and describe anything they visualized as they were reading. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Write About Mental Images of "Seal"

Remind the students that earlier they heard and discussed the poem "Seal" by William Jay Smith. Explain that today the students will revisit the poem and think about what words in the poem helped them visualize how the seal moves. Have the students close their eyes and visualize as you read the poem aloud. At the end of the reading, ask the students to open their eyes and discuss:

Q How did you picture the seal moving? Turn to your partner.

Distribute copies of the poem and pencils to the students. Explain that you will read the poem once more and that you want them to follow along and underline the words or phrases in the poem that helped them visualize how the seal moves.

Reread the poem. Ask:

Q What words or phrases helped you visualize how the seal moves?

Have a few volunteers share the words they underlined with the class. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about words in the poem that helped you visualize.

You might say:

"This poem includes a lot of movement words that helped me imagine how the seal is swimming through the water. At the beginning of the poem, the words zoom and dart let me know that the seal is moving very fast. In the middle of the poem, the lines 'See how he swims/ With a swerve and a twist' made me think that his movements are also graceful—he is able to swerve and twist easily. I'll write: The poem 'Seal,' by William Jay Smith, includes many words that helped me visualize how the seal moves. When I read the words 'zoom' and 'dart,' I pictured the seal swimming through the water really fast. When I read the lines 'See how he swims/With a swerve and a twist,' I pictured him moving gracefully in the water, like a dancer."

Have the students write about the words in the poem that helped them visualize the seal's movements. If time permits, invite a few volunteers to share their writing with the class.

EXTENSIONS

Discuss the Students' Reading Goals and Interests

Remind the students that during IDR conferences over the past few days, you asked them questions about their ideas and feelings about reading. Tell the students that you learned a lot about the kinds of books the class is interested in reading as well as how each student wants to grow as a reader.

You might say:

"Many of you said that you were interested in reading nonfiction, or books about real people, places, and things. This year we'll read many nonfiction books about people and animals as well as some nonfiction articles. Some of you said that you'd like to read stories from different countries. We'll read fiction from several different cultures this year. I also learned that some students are eager to read poetry this year."

Explain that you will use this information to make sure that everyone has fun reading this year. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What might you do to grow as a reader this year?
- Q What are you excited to read about this year?

Stroll with Cherries and Cherry Pits

Have the students display their drawings on their desks of the woman on the train. Then have them stroll around to view one another's work. As a class, discuss what the students noticed about the pictures.

Read All of Cherries and Cherry Pits Aloud

Read Cherries and Cherry Pits aloud in its entirety. You might pause and ask the students to visualize what is being described before showing each illustration.

Poem

Seal

by William Jay Smith

See how he dives
From the rocks with a zoom!
See how he darts
Through his watery room
Past crabs and eels
And green seaweed,
Past fluffs of sandy
Minnow feed!
See how he swims
With a swerve and a twist,
A flip of the flipper,
A flick of the wrist!
Quicksilver-quick,
Softer than spray,
Down he plunges
And sweeps away;
Before you can think,
Before you can utter
Words like “Dill pickle”
Or “Apple butter,”
Back up he swims
Past Sting Ray and Shark,
Out with a zoom,
A whoop, a bark;
Before you can say
Whatever you wish,
He plops at your side
With a mouthful of fish!

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 3 lessons this week.

Materials

- The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock
- Class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN2)
- Assessment Resource Book page 11
- Student Response Book, Reading Log section

ELL Note

You may wish to explain that spooky means “scary.”

Teacher Note

You might want to show the students other illustrations or photographs of peacocks.

ELL Note

Consider providing a prompt, for example, “My partner saw . . .”

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Visualize to understand and enjoy the story
- Read independently for 15–20 minutes
- Take turns talking and listening
- Share their partners’ thinking

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that today you will read a story aloud and that you will stop during the reading so partners can discuss what has happened so far. Remind the students to treat each other in a fair and caring way by taking turns when they talk in pairs.

2 Introduce The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock

Show the cover of the book and read the title and the author’s name aloud. Tell the students that Bill Peet is also the illustrator of the book. Explain that this is a story about a peacock named Prewitt and ask:

Q Have you ever seen a peacock? What does a peacock look like?

Show the illustration on pages 2–3 and point out that peacocks have large, feathery tails with designs called *eyespot*s on them.

Explain that this story takes place in the jungle. Ask the students to close their eyes and imagine a group of peacocks living in the jungle. Support the students’ thinking with prompts such as:

- Think about what sounds the peacocks might hear in the jungle.
- Think about what animals the peacocks might see in the jungle.
- Think about what animals the peacocks might be afraid of.

After a few moments, ask the students to open their eyes, turn to their partners, and talk about what they visualized. Tell the students to listen carefully to their partners because you will ask some of them to share what their partners said with the class. After partners have had a chance to share, signal for the students’ attention and ask:

Q What did your partner see in the jungle?

3 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

strutted: walked (p. 2)

game: animals that are hunted for food (p. 4)

spry: fast (p. 5)

sprouted: grown (p. 8)

Mandalay: faraway place; city in Southeast Asia (p. 11)

cackling: scary-sounding laughter (p. 17)

doomed: sure to die (p. 25)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

scraggly: not very beautiful (p. 1)

scrawny: skinny (p. 4)

sly: clever (p. 5)

fierce: mean-looking (p. 8)

spooky: scary (p. 12)

scares the wits out of us: (idiom) really scares us (p. 15)

flock: group of birds (p. 15)

plowing: running slowly (p. 23)

Read pages 1–3 aloud twice and then continue reading to page 9.

Stop after:

p. 9 “I only hope the other peacocks can too.”

Ask:

Q What has happened in the story so far? What do you think will happen next? Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and invite one or two pairs to share what they discussed with the class. Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the next stop. Follow this procedure at each of the following stops:

p. 19 “The chase was on!”

p. 30 “Now at last Prewitt was truly as proud as a peacock.”

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from more frequent stops and discussions during the reading. For example, you might stop after pages 5, 13, and 25.

Teacher Note

Reading the first few pages of the text twice gives the students a chance to engage with the story.

Facilitation Tip

Notice the open-ended questions that you are asking during this discussion. To study the effect of open-ended questions on students' thinking, experiment by asking a closed question first (such as "Did Phineas and the other peacocks like Prewitt in the beginning of the story?" or "Do the peacocks' feelings about Prewitt change?") and noting the response. Then restate the question as an open-ended question and note the response. Remember to use 10 seconds of wait-time after the question before you invite the students to respond.

Teacher Note

For additional support, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 3, "Introducing IDR Conferences" (found in Appendix A).

4 Discuss the Story

After the reading, facilitate a class discussion of the story using the questions that follow. As the students share, reread the parts of the story that support their thinking. Ask:

- Q What happens to Prewitt in this story?
- Q How do Phineas and the other peacocks feel about Prewitt at the beginning of the story? What in the story makes you think so?
- Q How do Phineas and the other peacocks feel about Prewitt at the end of the story? Why do their feelings change?

5 Reflect on Working Together

Review that the students shared their partners' thinking about how they visualized a group of peacocks in the jungle. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What did you have to do to be ready to share your partner's thinking with the class?

Students might say:

"I had to listen really carefully to what my partner said."

"I couldn't hear my partner, so I had to ask her to talk louder."

"I was confused by what my partner said, so I asked him a question about it."

Explain that sharing their partners' thinking helps the students take responsibility for hearing and understanding their partners' ideas. Tell the students that tomorrow they will have more opportunities to share their partners' thinking as they continue to discuss The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently/Introduce Conferring About Books

Remind the students that you have been conferring, or talking with them individually, about their reading lives during IDR. Explain that beginning today, IDR conferences will focus on the books the students are reading. Explain that by conferring with them about their reading, you can learn about their strengths as readers and talk with them about how they can become even stronger readers. Remind the students that when you are conferring with individual students, it is important that they read silently.

Have the students get their books and read silently for 15–20 minutes. Encourage them to try visualizing as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, select a student and have her bring the book she is reading to the conference.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Beginning today, and continuing through next week, confer individually with the students about the books they are reading during IDR.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the books they read with the class by showing the covers, telling the titles and the authors’ names, and saying what the books are about. Then invite them to describe something they visualized as they were reading. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books. Give them time to record any books they finished in their reading logs.

Guided Strategy Practice

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear parts of a story read aloud again
- Visualize to understand and enjoy the story
- Discuss the feelings of a character in the story
- Read independently for 15–20 minutes
- Take turns talking and listening
- Share their partners’ thinking

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that today the students will revisit The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock and practice visualizing parts of the story. Remind the students to take turns and to listen carefully to their partners when talking in pairs.

Materials

- The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty recalling the story, you might reread all or parts of it. Alternatively, you might show the students some of the illustrations and ask them to retell what is happening in those parts.

TEKS 6.D.i
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 3 (all)

TEKS 6.D.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 4 (all)

2 Review The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock

Show the front cover of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock and ask:

Q What do you remember about the story The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock? Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students' attention and have one or two volunteers share what they remember about the story with the class.

3 Model Visualizing

Tell the students that today you will reread parts of the story and they will visualize what is happening in those parts. Ask the students to listen as you read a page aloud. Then model talking about what you visualized as you read.

Read page 8 aloud twice. Then model visualizing by thinking aloud about what you saw in your mind, how it made you feel, and how you imagine Prewitt feels.

You might say:

"When I read this part of the story, I pictured Prewitt's tail growing spots that look like big eyes. I also pictured the tail growing mean-looking eyebrows and a mouth that looks like a frown. I would be scared if I saw this tail. I think Prewitt is probably feeling shocked and confused that his tail would grow like this."

4 Read Aloud and Visualize

Explain that the next part you will read comes from the middle of the story, when Prewitt is trying to decide if he should stay with his flock or leave it. Ask the students to close their eyes; then read page 17 aloud slowly and clearly. Have the students open their eyes and use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss the question that follows. Alert them to listen carefully to their partners as you will ask some of them to share what their partners said with the class. Ask:

Q What did you see in your mind as you listened to this part? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share what their partners described with the class. In the same way, discuss:

Q How do you imagine Prewitt feels in this part of the story? How would you feel if you were him? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Follow the same procedure to read and discuss the text on pages 24–27.

5 Reflect on Visualizing

Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and review that visualizing is a strategy that helps readers understand and enjoy what they read. As a class, discuss:

Q How did visualizing parts of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock help you understand and enjoy the story?

Students might say:

"When I pictured what was happening in my mind, I felt like I was in the story."

"It helped me imagine how Prewitt was feeling."

"When I visualized what was happening, the animals seemed to move, like in a movie."

"Listening to parts of the story with my eyes closed helped me pay attention to the words."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Tell the students that today you will continue to confer with individual students about the books they are reading during IDR. Have the students get their books and read silently for 15–20 minutes. Encourage them to try visualizing as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share with partners the books they are reading and describe what they visualized as they were reading. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Tell the students that tomorrow they will have another chance to practice visualizing as they read on their own.

Materials

- The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

ELL Note

You might support students with limited English proficiency by providing prompts for responding to the questions such as “I want other students to . . .” and “While I am reading, I will . . .”

In this lesson, the students:

- Visualize to understand and enjoy texts read independently
- Connect their mental images to the texts
- Read independently
- Take responsibility for themselves

1 Prepare to Practice Visualizing Independently

Have the students bring their independent reading books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been working on visualizing, or using an author’s words to create their own mental images of what is happening in a story. Explain that today the students will practice visualizing with books they read independently. Ask:

- Q How do you want other students to act while you are reading so you can concentrate?
- Q How will you act while you are reading?

2 Model Visualizing During Independent Reading

Explain that as they read today, the students will use self-stick notes to mark places in their books where they visualized what is happening. The purpose of using the self-stick notes is to help them find those places later when they discuss their mental images with their partners.

Model the procedure by rereading page 20 of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock aloud, thinking aloud about what you visualized, and placing a self-stick note in the margin of the page.

You might say:

“I pictured the peacocks hopping, flying, and running, with their tails sticking out behind them, trying to catch poor Prewitt. I pictured Prewitt cutting back and forth through the jungle with a very scared look on his face and his heart beating very fast. I am going to stick my note here next to this description.”

3 Read Independently and Visualize

Distribute the self-stick notes and make sure the students have books at their reading levels. Explain that whether or not their books have illustrations, you want the students to focus on creating their own mental images using the authors’ words.

Have the students read silently for 15–20 minutes, marking places in their books where they visualized. Stop them at 5-minute intervals and have partners share the passages they marked and the images they created in their minds.

Circulate and observe the students as they read, mark passages, and talk with their partners. Offer assistance as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to visualize what they are reading?
- Are they using their background knowledge and/or making inferences to help them visualize?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2); see page 9 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to visualize, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to visualize, check in with students who are struggling. You might ask them to reread descriptive words or phrases and then close the book and describe what they see in their minds, or you might ask them to act out part of the story briefly.
- If only a few students are able to visualize, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading.

4 Discuss Visualizations as a Class

Call on a volunteer to read one of the passages he marked aloud. Ask the students to listen carefully and try to create their own mental images of what is being described in the passage. After the reading, facilitate a brief discussion among the students by asking:

- Q What did you see in your mind when [Amal] read his passage?
- Q Which words helped you create your mental image?

Have the volunteer who read the sentences share his own mental images of what was being described in the passage. Repeat this procedure with one or two other volunteers.

ELL Note

Note challenging vocabulary in the students’ independent reading books, and be ready to define words as needed for them as they read.

Teacher Note

To keep this part of the lesson moving, select relatively fluent readers to read parts of their books aloud to the class.

5 Reflect on Taking Responsibility

Facilitate a brief class discussion about how the students did taking responsibility during the lesson. Ask:

- Q What did you do to act in a responsible way as you were reading and talking with your partner?
- Q How did that help your work?

Students might say:

"I read my book and pictured the story in my mind until it was time to talk to my partner."

"It helped us work because we weren't bothering each other during the reading time."

Tell the students that tomorrow they will have another opportunity to practice visualizing as they read independently.

Day 4

Independent Strategy Practice

Materials

- The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- "Reading Journal" chart (WA4)
- "Journal Entry" chart (WA5)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section

In this lesson, the students:

- Visualize to understand and enjoy texts read independently
- Connect their mental images to the texts
- Read independently
- Learn how to use a reading journal
- Take responsibility for themselves

1 Review Visualizing

Have the students bring their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that the students have been practicing visualizing to help them understand and enjoy what they read. Explain that today they will have more chances to visualize as they read independently. Tell them that they will again use self-stick notes to mark places in their books where they visualized. After reading, each student will share her mental images with her partner and then choose one mental image to write about. If necessary, model visualizing a passage and marking it with a self-stick note, as you did on Day 3 (see Step 2).

2 Read Independently and Visualize

Distribute the self-stick notes and make sure the students have books at their reading levels. Remind them that whether or not their books have illustrations, you want them to focus on creating their own mental images using the authors' words. Have the students read independently for 10–15 minutes.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading.

3 Share Visualizations with Partners

Have the students share in pairs the mental images they created as they were reading. Encourage them to begin by reading aloud the passages they marked to their partners. Then have them describe what they visualized as they read those passages.

4 Model Writing in the Reading Journal

After partners have had a chance to share, signal for the students' attention and ask them to open their Student Response Books to the Reading Journal section. Explain that this is a place where they can write about the books they read independently. Explain that today each student will write about one thing he visualized as he was reading.

Display the “Reading Journal” chart (WA4) and model writing a journal entry about the passage you visualized on Day 3 (See Step 2).

You might say:

“First I’ll write the title of the book I read and describe what happens in the part of the story I visualized. I’ll write: I read The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock by Bill Peet. In this part of the story, the peacocks are chasing Prewitt through the jungle because he refuses to leave the flock. Now I’ll write about what I pictured in my mind when I read this part. I’ll write: I pictured the peacocks hopping, flying, and running, with their tails sticking out behind them, trying to catch poor Prewitt. Prewitt is running as fast as he can, but the other peacocks are catching up.”

TEKS 6.A.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 2 (all)

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

ELL Note

Consider having your students with limited English proficiency draw pictures of their visualizations rather than writing about them. Alternatively, you might transcribe sentences the students dictate to you.

Teacher Note

Consider providing additional opportunities for the students to write in their reading journals. You might provide specific prompts for them to respond to or have them write about their reading in any way they choose.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock to teach the Week 4 vocabulary lessons.

5 Write in Reading Journals

Explain that each student will now write a journal entry about something she visualized. Display the “Journal Entry” chart ( WA5) and explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading. Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What is happening in the part you visualized
- What you visualized, or pictured in your mind, when you read that part

WA5

Ask the students to think quietly about the visualizations they want to write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Give the students a few minutes to write about their mental images in their reading journals. Circulate among the students as they write, providing assistance as needed. If time permits, invite a few students to share their journal entries with the class.

Tell the students that they will have more opportunities to practice visualizing and writing in their journals in the coming weeks.

EXTENSION

Make a Class Book

Read a non-illustrated story aloud to the students twice. Have partners work together to illustrate various parts of the story. View the illustrations as a class and discuss words in the text that helped them illustrate the story. Compile the students' drawings to create a class book.

OVERVIEW

Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later)

by Elizabeth Fitzgerald Howard, illustrated by James Ransome

Sarah and Susan visit their Aunt Flossie on Sunday afternoons. Aunt Flossie lets the girls look through her collection of hats and try them on as she tells the girls the story behind each hat.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 4 lessons this week.

Day 1

Read-aloud

Materials

- Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later)
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- Student Response Book, Reading Log section

Teacher Note

You might point out Baltimore, Maryland, on a map of the United States.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Visualize to understand and enjoy the story
- Distinguish their own points of view from those of the characters
- Read independently for 15–20 minutes
- Take turns talking and listening

1 Review Visualizing

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Refer to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and remind the students that they have been practicing visualizing, or using the words in stories to create images in their minds. Review that visualizing helps them understand and enjoy what they read. Explain that today they will hear another story, visualize, and talk with their partners about what they visualized.

2 Introduce Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later)

Show the cover of Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that this story takes place in Baltimore, a city in the state of Maryland. It is about sisters named Sarah and Susan who visit their aunt Flossie on Sunday afternoons and try on hats. Each hat has a story behind it.

3 Read Aloud

Explain that you will read the story aloud without showing the illustrations and that you want the students to listen to the words and visualize what is being described. Explain that you will stop three times during the story so that students can talk in pairs about what they see in their minds.

Read the book aloud slowly and clearly, stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

crab cakes: small, fried rounds of crab meat (p. 6)

wooly: made of thick, curly sheep's hair (p. 11)

hooves: hard coverings on horses' feet (p. 13)

terrapins: turtles (p. 13)

buglers: people who play a musical instrument called a bugle, which is like a trumpet (p. 16)

rippled: moved in very small waves (p. 24)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

crab: shelled sea animal (p. 6)

trillion: million times a million; very large number (p. 10)

pompom: fluffy ball used for decoration on clothing, especially hats or costumes (p. 18)

Read pages 4–5 twice, and then continue reading to page 10. Stop after:

p. 10 “Aunt Flossie has so many hats!”

Ask:

Q What did you see in your mind as you listened to this part? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing as a class, reread the last sentence on page 10 and continue reading.

Follow this procedure at each of the following steps:

p. 18 “We marched around Aunt Flossie’s house.”

p. 24 “The water rippled, and your favorite best Sunday hat just floated by like a boat!”

Then reread the last sentence on page 24 and continue reading to the end of the story.

4 Discuss the Story

As a class, discuss:

Q What are some stories Aunt Flossie tells about her hats?

Q Which hat story do Sarah and Susan like best? Why is it their favorite?

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which hat story do you like best? Why? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share their favorite hat stories with the class.

Teacher Note

Not sharing as a class during the read-aloud helps partners learn to depend on one another, rather than depending solely on you, to confirm or support their thinking.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, reread the text on page 20 and then ask the questions again.

5 Reflect on Working Together

Point out that talking with a partner can help the students add details to their mental images and help them understand the story. Ask:

Q How did talking with your partner help you think more about the story?

Remind the students that talking with partners gives them all a chance to share their thinking. It also helps to build the reading community. If the students bring up any problems they had, facilitate a discussion about how they might avoid these problems the next time they work with partners.

6 Read Independently and Visualize

Tell the students that you want them to practice visualizing as they read independently today. Explain that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of them to share what they visualized with the class. Remind the students that you have been conferring with them individually about the books they are reading and that you will continue to do so today. Have the students get their books and read silently for 15–20 minutes. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers who visualized as they were reading to share with the class. Have each volunteer begin by showing the cover of his book and briefly saying what it is about. Then ask him to describe what he visualized and what words helped him create that mental image. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books. Give them time to record any books they finished in their reading logs.

SOCIAL SKILLS ASSESSMENT NOTE

During this final week of this unit, assess the students' social skill development using the "Social Skills Assessment Record" sheet (SS1). Access and print a record sheet from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or make a copy from page 144 of the Assessment Resource Book. Note that you will use the same record sheet to document each student's progress when you reassess social skill development in Units 5 and 9. For more information, see "Social Skills Assessment" in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use a Class Blog to Communicate About Making Meaning Texts

Create a class blog where the students can share with their families what the class has been reading and discussing during Making Meaning lessons. Start by showing the students the read-aloud texts they have heard and discussed so far. As a class, choose a read-aloud text to write about. With the students' help, write the title and the names of the author and the illustrator of the text followed by a short summary of the contents and a description of the illustrations (if relevant). Have the students help you add a few sentences about what the class enjoyed about the text and the comprehension strategies the class has practiced using this text. Post the write-up on the class blog and invite the students' families to read it and post follow-up comments and questions. Share the families' comments and questions with the students and, as a class, respond to them. Over time, add other write-ups about Making Meaning read-alouds to the blog.

Technology Tip

For information about setting up and maintaining a class blog, view the "Using Blogs in the Classroom" tutorial (AV45).

Day 2

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later)
- Student Response Book page 4
- Crayons or markers

Facilitation Tip

Reflect on your experience over the past three weeks with asking open-ended questions and using wait-time. Do these techniques feel comfortable and natural to you? Do you find yourself using them throughout the school day? What effect has their repeated use had on your students' thinking and participation in discussions? Continue to use and reflect on these techniques throughout the year.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear part of a story read aloud again
- Visualize part of the story
- Draw and write about their mental images
- Read independently for 15–20 minutes
- Take turns talking and listening

1 Review Aunt Flossie's Hats

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Ask:

Q What do you remember about Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later)? Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, signal for the students' attention and invite a few volunteers to share what they remember with the class.

Explain that today you will reread one of the hat stories from Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) and the students will visualize what is happening in the story. After talking in pairs about what they visualized, they will draw and write about their mental images.

2 Reread and Visualize

Explain that the story you will reread is the one about Aunt Flossie's best Sunday hat, which Sarah and Susan help to tell. Ask the students to close their eyes and create pictures in their minds as you reread the story. Read pages 20–27 aloud.

Have the students open their eyes. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What did you see in your mind as you listened to the story? [pause] Turn to your partner.

3 Draw and Write About Mental Images

Distribute crayons or markers and have the students turn to Student Response Book page 4, “How I Visualized Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later).” Explain that each student will draw a picture of something she visualized clearly as she listened to the story and then write one or two sentences that describe what her picture shows. Have the students first think quietly about their mental images and then continue to work quietly as they draw and write.

Circulate among the students as they work, and reread parts of pages 20–27 to individual students as needed. Give the students ample time to complete their drawings and descriptions, alerting them when they have 2 minutes left.

4 Review Drawings

Ask the students to put down their crayons and markers and place their drawings in front of them. Have each student close his eyes and think about his mental image and then open his eyes and look at his drawing. Ask the students to quietly consider this question:

Q Does your drawing reflect what you saw in your mind?

Explain that you will reread the story one more time. Have the students listen for any details they might want to add to their drawings.

Read pages 20–27 again. Then give the students a moment to add any final details to their drawings.

Tell the students that they will have a chance to share their drawings and writing with one another tomorrow.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Visualize

Have the students get their books and read silently for 15–20 minutes. Remind the students to practice visualizing as they read and to think about the words and phrases that helped them create their mental images. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

ELL Note

This activity is especially helpful for English Language Learners.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Give the students a few minutes to share what they read with their partners. Have partners tell each other the titles of their book and the authors’ names, what the books are about, and what they visualized as they were reading. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

ELL Note

This extension is especially helpful for English Language Learners.

EXTENSION

Read Aunt Flossie’s Hats Aloud with Illustrations

Reread Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) aloud, this time showing the illustrations as you read. Facilitate a discussion about how the illustrations are the same as what the students visualized and how they are different.

Day 3

Independent Strategy Practice

Materials

- Student Response Book page 4
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3)

TEKS 1.D.ii

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 1 (all, on page 86 and continuing on to page 87) and
Step 5 (all, on page 88)

In this lesson, the students:

- Share their drawings and writing from the previous day
- Visualize to understand and enjoy texts read independently
- Read independently
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another’s work

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that today partners will share and discuss the drawings and writing they did yesterday, after which they will practice visualizing as they read independently. Facilitate a discussion about respectful and caring ways to talk about other people's work. Ask:

Q What are some ways you can be respectful and caring when sharing writing and artwork? Why is this important?

Tell the students that you will check with them at the end of the lesson to see how they did being respectful and caring.

2 Share Drawings and Writing

Ask the students to open to Student Response Book page 4. Have partners tell each other what parts of the hat story they drew and how they visualized those parts. As the students share their drawings and writing, circulate among them. Observe the students' interactions and responsiveness to each other's ideas. Note whether they are expressing their interest in and appreciation of their partners' work.

Signal for the students' attention and ask a few volunteers to share what they drew and wrote with the class. Ask each volunteer to begin by telling the class what part of the story she drew and how she visualized that part. Then have her show her drawing and read her sentences aloud. Ask:

Q Who else drew the part where [the dog fetches the hat]? How is your drawing the same as [Danielle's]? How is it different?

Point out that each student's drawing, like his mental images of the story, is unique because it is based on his own imagination.

3 Review Visualizing with Independent Reading

Tell the students they will now have a chance to practice visualizing with the books they are reading independently. Explain that you will stop them periodically during their reading and ask them to share with their partners what they have visualized so far.

4 Read Independently and Visualize

Make sure that each student has a book at an appropriate reading level. Remind the students that even if their books have illustrations, you want them to use the words in the books to create their own mental images of what is being described.

Have the students read independently for 15–20 minutes. Stop them at 5-minute intervals to have partners discuss what they visualized.

Circulate as partners talk, and notice whether the mental images they are describing connect to their reading.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to visualize what they are reading?
- Are they using their background knowledge and/or making inferences to help them visualize?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3); see page 10 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to visualize, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to visualize, check in with students who are struggling. You might ask them to reread descriptive words or phrases and then close the book and describe what they see in their minds, or you might ask them to act out part of the story briefly.
- If only a few students are able to visualize, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

5 Reflect on Working Together

Help the students reflect on their work together by asking questions such as:

- Q How did you show your partner that you cared about his or her ideas?
- Q Why is it important to treat each other with respect in the reading community?

Students might say:

“If people don’t feel respected, they won’t want to share.”

“We should show respect because everyone’s ideas are important.”

Briefly share any examples of respectful and caring interactions you observed. Also mention any problems you noticed and facilitate a discussion of possible solutions. Encourage the students to continue to work on showing each other respect and caring in the coming days.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write About Favorite Hat Stories

Show the cover of Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Page through the book slowly and show the illustrations. Ask:

Q What are some of the stories Aunt Flossie tells about her hats?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Point out that when people talk about stories with other people, they often like to talk about their favorite parts of the stories. Ask:

Q What is your favorite hat story?

Q What happens in that story?

Q Why is that your favorite?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Show the parts of the book that the students refer to as they share. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about your favorite hat story.

You might say:

"My favorite story in Aunt Flossie's Hats is the one about the parade Aunt Flossie attended to celebrate the end of the Great War. Aunt Flossie describes the sounds of bugles, drums, and people shouting and cheering in excitement. She also describes the flags flying everywhere and the soldiers marching up the street. It's my favorite story because I love parades, and Aunt Flossie's description made it easy for me to imagine I was at the parade with her. I'll write: My favorite story in Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) is the story about the parade at the end of the Great War. In this story, Aunt Flossie describes the bugles, drums, and cheering she heard at the parade. She also describes the flags she saw flying everywhere and what the soldiers looked like marching up the street. This is my favorite story because the description of the parade lets me imagine I'm there with Aunt Flossie."

Have the students write about their favorite hat stories. If time permits, invite a few volunteers to share what they wrote with the class.

EXTENSION

Stroll with Aunt Flossie's Hats

Have the students display their drawings of Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) on their desks. Then have the students stroll around to view one another's work. As a class, discuss what the students noticed about the pictures.

Materials

- Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later)

Teacher Note

This extension provides an opportunity for the students to realize that mental images are unique to each reader (including the illustrator).

Materials

- Small self-stick notes for each student
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA6)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section
- Copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

In this lesson, the students:

- Visualize to understand and enjoy texts read independently
- Read independently
- Write in their reading journals
- Take responsibility for themselves

1 Review Visualizing

Have the students bring their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that the students have been practicing the comprehension strategy of visualizing and explain that today they will continue to practice visualizing as they read independently. Explain that they will mark places in their books where they visualized with self-stick notes. After reading, each student will choose something he visualized to share with his partner and then write about it in his reading journal. If necessary, model visualizing a passage and then marking that passage with a self-stick note, as you did in Week 2, Day 3 (see Step 2).

2 Read Independently

Distribute the self-stick notes and make sure the students have books at their reading levels. Remind them that whether or not their books have illustrations, they should focus on creating their own mental images using the authors’ words. Have the students read independently for 10–15 minutes.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading.

3 Share Visualizations and Write in Reading Journals

Explain that each student will now look through the passages she marked as she was reading and choose one to share with her partner and then write about. Give the students a few moments to look through their passages.

Have the students share the passages they chose with their partners. Have them first read the passages aloud and then describe what they visualized.

After partners have had a chance to share, signal for the students' attention and explain that they will now write about what they visualized in their reading journals. Display the "Journal Entry" chart (WA6) and explain your expectations for what each journal entry should include.

WA6

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading. Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What is happening in the part you visualized
- What you visualized, or pictured in your mind, when you read that part

Give the students a few minutes to complete their journal entries. Circulate among the students as they write, and provide assistance as needed.

If time permits, invite a few students to share their writing with the class.

4 Reflect on Partner Work

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students have worked with their partners over the past three weeks. Ask:

Q What have you enjoyed about working with your partner?

Explain that next week the students will begin working with new partners. Ask:

Q What is one thing you can do to work well with your next partner?

Give the students a moment to thank their partners.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 2. You will need to reassign partners before you start the next unit.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1). Periodically, have a few students share with the class what they are reading at home.

Teacher Note

If the students are struggling to write, signal for their attention and model thinking aloud and then writing about something you visualized as you did in Week 2, Day 4 (see Step 4).

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) to teach the Week 5 vocabulary lessons.

Teacher Note

For more information, view “Using the Individual Comprehension Assessment” (AV31).

Assessment

- Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students’ reading comprehension using the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) ; see page 16 of the Assessment Resource Book. For more information, see “Individual Comprehension Assessment” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.
- You might record your students’ progress over the course of the year using the “Individual Comprehension Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR2); see page 147 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- You might record each student’s progress over the course of the year using the “Individual Comprehension Assessment Student Record” sheet (SR2); see page 146 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Unit 3

Making Inferences

FICTION

During this unit, the students make inferences about characters and begin to explore narrative text structure through their discussions of setting, characters and the problems they face, and character change. They also make text-to-text connections as they compare two books by the same author about the same character. During IDR, the students make inferences about the characters in books they are reading independently, write in their reading journals, and continue to confer with the teacher about their reading. They also review self-monitoring and learn “fix-up” strategies (rereading and reading ahead) that they can use when they do not understand what they have read. Socially, they work on taking responsibility and explaining their thinking. They also learn discussion prompts to help them listen and connect their ideas with the ideas of others during class discussions.

OVERVIEW

The Paper Bag Princess

by Robert Munsch, illustrated by Michael Martchenko

When her prince is carried off by a dragon, Princess Elizabeth must come to the rescue.

Whiteboard Activity

- WA1

Assessment Forms

- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)
- “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1)

Professional Development Media

- “Asking Facilitative Questions” (AV21)

Comprehension Focus

- Students make inferences to understand characters.
- Students explore narrative text structure through discussions of characters and the problems they face.
- Students read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students explain their thinking.
- Students build on one another's thinking.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this unit's read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding. Take time to show and discuss the illustrations.
- ✓ Make available narrative texts at a variety of levels so that the students can practice making inferences about characters during IDR and Independent Strategy Practice throughout the unit. Narrative texts include chapter books, picture books, and short stories in a wide range of genres (mystery, adventure, science fiction, historical fiction, realistic fiction, fable, folktale, myth, legend, biography, and memoir).
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a class set of "IDR Conference Notes" record sheets (CN1); see page 35 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, write the title "Discussion Prompts" on a sheet of chart paper. Write three discussion prompts (I agree with _____ because . . ., I disagree with _____ because . . ., and In addition to what _____ said, I think . . .) on the chart paper (see the diagram in Step 1).

(continues)

① DO AHEAD (continued)

- ✓ Prior to Day 4, select a narrative text and prepare to model making an inference about a character (see Step 3).
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 27 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 5 lessons this week.

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin working with new partners
- Hear and discuss a story
- Discuss the main character’s problem in the story
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Take responsibility for themselves

ABOUT MAKING INFERENCES ABOUT CHARACTERS

In this unit, the students explore character, a key element of narrative text structure. They make inferences to understand characters’ traits and feelings and their development and change. They come to understand that stories are about characters, the problems they face, how they deal with those problems, and how they change as a result. Sometimes character change is dramatic; at other times character change can be as subtle as a realization or a new perspective. (For more information, see “The Grade 3 Comprehension Strategies” in the Introduction.)

1 Pair Students and Get Ready to Work Together

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other’s names. Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that for the next five weeks the students will work with the same partners.

First in pairs, and then as a class, have the students discuss:

Q What can you do to be a responsible partner? Why is that important?

Students might say:

“I have to say something. I can’t expect my partner to do all the talking.”

“If I don’t understand my partner, I can ask her to repeat what she said. That’s important because otherwise I won’t get a chance to hear her ideas.”

“I can help my partner remember the story. It’s important to help each other out because nobody remembers everything perfectly.”

Materials

- The Paper Bag Princess
- Class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1)
- Assessment Resource Book page 32
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- Self-stick notes for each student
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart

Teacher Note

If you are teaching other programs from Center for the Collaborative Classroom, the students can work within partnerships already established, or you may assign new partners for the Making Meaning lessons.

2 Introduce The Paper Bag Princess

Show the cover of The Paper Bag Princess and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Remind the students that in the previous unit they practiced visualizing to help them understand and enjoy stories. Encourage the students to visualize as they listen to The Paper Bag Princess.

3 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, pausing to let the students visualize before showing the illustrations. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

fiercest: meanest; most dangerous (p. 12)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

fiery: like fire; having flames (p. 6)

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, practice asking facilitative questions during class discussions to help the students build on one another's thinking and respond directly to one another, not just to you. After a student comments, ask the class questions such as:

- Q Do you agree or disagree with [Daniel]? Why?
- Q What questions can you ask [Daniel] about what he said?
- Q What can you add to what [Daniel] said?

To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view "Asking Facilitative Questions" (AV21).

4 Discuss the Story

First in pairs, and then as a class, discuss:

- Q What happens in this story?
- Q What problem does Elizabeth face? How does she solve the problem?

Students might say:

"Elizabeth is supposed to marry Prince Ronald, but then the dragon takes him away."

"Elizabeth goes after the dragon to rescue Ronald."

"The dragon is very powerful, but Elizabeth outsmarts him."

Explain that all stories have characters in them and that the characters usually face and solve problems. Knowing this can help the students think about and understand the stories they read. Tell the students that they will talk more about The Paper Bag Princess and the character of Elizabeth in the coming days.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Introduce “Fix-up” Strategies

Tell the students that for the next few weeks they will be reading narrative books, or books with stories and characters, during IDR. Explain that narrative books include fiction stories and certain types of nonfiction stories, such as biographies and memoirs. If necessary, give the students a few moments to select narrative books at their appropriate reading levels.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and remind the students that it is important for them to check their comprehension as they are reading. Tell the students that there may be times when they ask themselves the questions on the chart and realize that they do not understand what they have read. Explain that today they will learn a couple of strategies, or tools, they can use in these situations. Explain that these strategies are called “fix-up” strategies because using the strategies may help to “fix” the problem.

Tell the students that one thing a student can do when he does not understand something he has read is to reread that part slowly and carefully. Explain that slowing down and carefully rereading a sentence or paragraph that is unclear may “fix” the problem. If it does not, another strategy the student can try is reading ahead and looking for more information. Explain that by reading ahead, the student may come upon facts, descriptions, details, or other information that clears up what was confusing him.

Distribute self-stick notes to each student. Tell the students that as they read today, you want them to pause occasionally and ask themselves if they understand what they are reading. If a student does not understand what she is reading, she should mark the place in the text that she does not understand with a self-stick note and then try one or both of the strategies learned today—rereading and reading ahead—to see if the strategies help her understand what she is reading. Explain that at the end of IDR you will check in with the students to see how they did with using “fix-up” strategies. Then have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

TEKS 6.L.ii

Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 5 (all, beginning on page 103

Teacher Note

During IDR today and tomorrow, the students learn and practice two “fix-up” strategies they can use when they do not understand what they have read: rereading and reading ahead. To provide the students with additional support with using these and other “fix-up” strategies, you might teach all or part of IDR Mini-lesson 2, “Self-monitoring and Using ‘Fix-up’ Strategies” (found in Appendix A).

ELL Note

Help your English Language Learners choose books at appropriate levels. Providing a limited number of teacher-selected texts will help them make good choices.

Teacher Note

Base the length of time the students are reading independently on their attention and engagement. Gradually add time as your students are ready. The goal is for them to read independently for up to 25 minutes by Unit 4.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Beginning today, and continuing throughout the unit, confer individually with the students about the books they are reading during IDR.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Ask and discuss:

- Q Was there any part of your reading that you did not understand today? Tell us about it.
- Q What “fix-up” strategy did you try? What happened when you [reread/read ahead]?

If a student has tried both of the “fix-up” strategies and still does not understand the text he is reading, refer him to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and encourage him to try the strategy listed on it. Alternatively, you might encourage the student to ask you or a classmate for help.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Teacher Note

Provide time on a regular basis for the students to record the books they have completed in their reading logs.

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, locate a few age-appropriate sources that provide information about Robert Munsch (you might look for interviews or biographies). Search for information online using the keywords “Robert Munsch.” You might wish to bookmark the web pages that you will share with your students in your browser.

Meet the Author: Robert Munsch

Have the students learn more about Robert Munsch, the author of The Paper Bag Princess. Show the cover of The Paper Bag Princess and tell the students that Robert Munsch, the author of the book, has written over 50 books for kids, including Love You Forever, Moirá’s Birthday, and Wait and See. Tell the students that Robert Munsch liked to write poetry as a child and studied to be a priest before deciding to be an author. Ask:

- Q What else would you like to know about Robert Munsch?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. As they respond, record their ideas where everyone can see them. Display the online sources you have located that contain information about Robert Munsch, and read aloud the sections you have identified. Ask:

- Q What is something you learned about Robert Munsch?

Encourage interested students to check out other books by Robert Munsch from the classroom library, school library, or public library.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear a story read aloud again
- Make inferences about the main character in the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for 20-25 minutes
- Explain their thinking

1 Discuss Explaining Thinking Clearly

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of The Paper Bag Princess and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. If necessary, review The Paper Bag Princess by having a student summarize the story or by showing the illustrations again or reading various sentences from the story and having volunteers say what they remember about that part of the story. Explain that today partners will have another chance to talk about the story and the main character, Elizabeth. Ask:

Q Why is it important that you explain your thinking clearly when you share ideas?

Students might say:

"If you don't explain your thinking, people might misunderstand you."

"It lets people know where you got your idea."

"It helps people understand your idea."

Ask:

Q What can you do if you do not understand an idea someone shares?

Students might say:

"You can ask them to explain it."

"You can ask them questions about what they said."

"You can ask them why they think that."

Encourage the students to focus on explaining their thinking clearly as they talk with each other today.

Materials

- The Paper Bag Princess
- Chart paper and a marker
- "Sentences About Elizabeth" chart (WA1)
- "Thinking About My Reading" chart
- Self-stick notes for each student
- "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart

TEKS 8.C.i

Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 1 (first paragraph)

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering this question, you might ask questions such as, “What kind of person do you think Elizabeth is?” and “Would you want Elizabeth as a friend? Why or why not?”

2 Brainstorm About Elizabeth

Remind the students that the main character in The Paper Bag Princess is a princess named Elizabeth. Ask:

Q How would you describe the character Princess Elizabeth?

Quickly record the students’ ideas on a sheet of chart paper, without discussion.

Students might say:

“Elizabeth is brave.”

Point out that nowhere in the story does the author say “Elizabeth is [brave]” or “Elizabeth is [smart],” yet the students figured out that Elizabeth has these qualities. Tell the students that when a reader uses clues in a story to figure out something that is not stated directly, the reader is making an inference. Explain that authors often reveal information about characters through what the characters say, do, and think. Readers have to make inferences to understand what the characters are like. Tell the students that in today’s lesson the students will think more about the inferences they made about Elizabeth.

3 Introduce the “Sentences About Elizabeth” Chart

Display the “Sentences About Elizabeth” chart (📄 WA1).

Sentences About Elizabeth

- Elizabeth decided to chase the dragon and get Ronald back.
- Elizabeth grabbed the knocker and banged on the door again.
- “Dragon, is it true that you can fly around the world in just ten seconds?”
- “Ronald,” said Elizabeth, “your clothes are really pretty and your hair is very neat. You look like a real prince, but you are a bum.”

WA1

Explain that these are sentences from the story that give clues about Elizabeth’s personality. Read the sentences aloud. Explain that you will read the story aloud again and that you will stop after each of these sentences so partners can talk about what they infer about Elizabeth from clues in the story.

4 Reread The Paper Bag Princess

Reread the story slowly and clearly. Stop after each of the sentences on the chart (pages 8, 12, 18, and 26) and have partners discuss what they infer about Elizabeth. Have one or two pairs report their inference for each sentence. Then reread the sentence and continue reading to the next stop. Do not spend too long at any one stop.

If the students disagree significantly about which inferences make sense for any of the four sentences, discuss this before continuing with the lesson. Ask the students to refer to the text to support their opinions, and facilitate a discussion using questions such as:

- Q Do you agree or disagree with what [Eric and Mei] inferred about Elizabeth from this sentence? Why?
- Q Why do you think their inference [makes sense/does not make sense] in this story?

5 Review Making Inferences About Characters

Review that authors reveal their characters' personalities through what the characters say, do, and think and that readers must use these clues to infer what the characters are like. Explain that understanding the characters in a story helps readers make sense of what is happening in the story and predict what might happen next.

Tell the students that they will have more opportunities to make inferences about characters in the coming days.

6 Reflect on the Partner Work

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students did explaining their thinking. Ask:

- Q How did you do explaining your thinking today?
- Q What helped you explain your thinking?
- Q What might you do differently the next time you share your thinking?

Without mentioning names, share your own observations of how the students did explaining their thinking and what, if anything, they might do differently next time.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Review and Practice Using “Fix-up” Strategies

Direct the students' attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and remind the students that it is important for them to check their comprehension as they are reading. Remind the students that earlier they learned a couple of “fix-up” strategies, or tools a student can use when she does not understand what she has read. Review that

ELL Note

English Language Learners may only be able to understand the surface-level meaning of the story, but working with partners and listening to the group discussion will support their knowledge and increase understanding at a deeper level.

one strategy is to reread the part of the book she does not understand slowly and carefully. Another strategy is to read ahead and look for more information.

Distribute self-stick notes to each student. Tell the students that as they read today, you want them to pause occasionally and ask themselves if they understand what they are reading. If a student does not understand what he is reading, he should mark the place in the text that he does not understand with a self-stick note and then try one or both of the “fix-up” strategies—rereading and reading ahead—to see if the strategies help him understand what he is reading. Explain that at the end of IDR you will check in with the students to see how they did with using “fix-up” strategies. Then have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Ask and discuss:

- Q Was there any part of your reading that you did not understand today? Tell us about it.
- Q What “fix-up” strategy did you try? What happened when you [reread/read ahead]?

If a student has tried both of the “fix-up” strategies and still does not understand the text she is reading, refer her to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and encourage her to try the strategy listed on it. Alternatively, you might encourage the student to ask you or a classmate for help.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn to use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking
- Make inferences using the illustrations in a story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for 20-25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Introduce Discussion Prompts

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that in the reading community it is important for everyone to listen carefully and contribute ideas during class discussions. Explain that today the students will learn discussion prompts that they can use to share ideas with their classmates. Direct the students' attention to the "Discussion Prompts" chart (see "Do Ahead") and read the prompts aloud.

Discussion Prompts

- I agree with _____ because . . .
- I disagree with _____ because . . .
- In addition to what _____ said,
I think . . .

Explain that you would like the students to use the prompts when they add to the discussion today and that doing so will help them listen and build on one another's thinking. To give the students practice using the prompts, ask:

Q How does visualizing help you enjoy and understand what you read?

Students might say:

"Visualizing helps you pay attention to the words in the story."

"I agree with [Ekaterina]. You have to think about the words in order to make a picture in your mind."

"In addition to what [Roman] said, I think visualizing is helpful because lots of books don't have pictures."

Materials

- The Paper Bag Princess
- "Discussion Prompts" chart, prepared ahead

Teacher Note

The long-term goal of teaching the discussion prompts is for the students to learn to use them spontaneously, in both class and partner discussions. The prompts help the students participate responsibly, both in listening carefully and in connecting their comments to others' comments. If your students are already familiar with the discussion prompts, simply direct their attention to the prompts and remind the students to use them.

2 Introduce Making Inferences Using Illustrations

Show the cover of The Paper Bag Princess and remind the students that they practiced making inferences about the character of Elizabeth. Review that when you make an inference, you use clues in the story to figure out something the author did not state directly. Remind the students that they used clues, such as what Elizabeth says and does, to figure out what kind of person she is. Ask:

Q What did you figure out about Elizabeth from clues in the story?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Explain that readers can also make inferences about characters using clues in illustrations. Tell the students that in today's lesson they will take a closer look at the illustrations in the story and think about what they can infer about the characters using clues in the illustrations.

3 Make Inferences Using Illustrations

Show pages 4–5 of The Paper Bag Princess and read the text on page 4 aloud. Ask the students to look closely at the illustration on page 5. Then ask the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts as they share their ideas.

Q What can you infer about Elizabeth from this illustration? What can you infer about Ronald? What clues in the illustration help you?

Students might say:

"I can tell that Elizabeth really likes Ronald from the way she's looking at him."

"I agree with [Maya] that Elizabeth likes Ronald because I see hearts around her head."

"Ronald doesn't like Elizabeth. I can tell because he has his back to her and his eyes are closed."

"I agree with [Rafael]. It looks like Ronald is more interested in playing tennis than he is in marrying Elizabeth."

Show pages 8–9 and read the text on page 8 aloud. Ask the students to look closely at the illustration on page 9. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

 Q What can you infer about how Elizabeth is feeling from this illustration? What clues in the illustration help you? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Point out that nowhere on page 8 does it say how Elizabeth is feeling, but the students were able to infer it from looking at the illustration.

In the same way, discuss pages 24–25 and 26–27.

4 Reflect on Using the Discussion Prompts

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

Q How did we do with using the discussion prompts during our class discussion today?

Q How do the discussion prompts help us talk as a class?

Encourage the students to continue using the discussion prompts in class discussions to help them build on one another's thinking.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Discuss Characters

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Encourage them to continue to notice what the characters in their stories say, do, and think as they read and think about what they know about the characters. (You might also ask the students to look carefully at any illustrations in their books and think about what they figure out about the characters from the illustrations.) After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students talk with partners about the main characters in their books. Have each student tell her partner the title of her text, the author's name, the names of the characters, and what she knows about the characters so far.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Teacher Note

Post the “Discussion Prompts” chart for the students to refer to throughout the unit, and keep the chart posted until the students use these prompts naturally.

- The Paper Bag Princess

Teacher Note

If necessary, explain to the students that an opinion is a "strongly held point of view." When we give an opinion, we are telling what we think about something.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write Personal Opinions About The Paper Bag Princess

Show the cover of The Paper Bag Princess and remind the students that they heard this book earlier. Slowly page through the book and show the illustrations. Ask:

Q What do you remember about this story?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. If necessary, remind the students that Prince Ronald gets carried off by a dragon and Princess Elizabeth goes to rescue him. Ask:

Q Is Elizabeth's decision to try to rescue Prince Ronald a good decision or a bad decision? Why?

Students might say:

"I think it is a bad decision because dragons are dangerous and she could get hurt."

"I disagree with [Kyle]. I think it is a good decision because Prince Ronald is in trouble and needs help."

"In addition to what [Poonam] said, it's a good decision because Elizabeth is really smart and brave and she knows she can beat the dragon."

Explain that the students will write their opinions about Elizabeth's decision to try to rescue the prince. Tell the students that readers can have different opinions about a character's actions, and that is fine. What is important is that they give reasons to support their opinions. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing an opinion about Elizabeth's decision.

You might say:

"I'll start with a sentence that explains what I am writing about. I'll write: In the story The Paper Bag Princess by Robert Munsch, the prince that Elizabeth is supposed to marry gets carried off by a dragon. Elizabeth decides to try to rescue Prince Ronald by going after the dragon and getting the prince back. Now I'll write a sentence that tells my opinion of Elizabeth's decision to try to rescue the prince. I'll write: I think that Elizabeth's decision to try to rescue Prince Ronald is heroic. Now I need to explain my opinion. I'll write: She risks her life to save someone else's life."

Explain that the students will now write their own opinion pieces about Elizabeth's decision. Remind each student to include the title of the book and the author's name, her opinion of Elizabeth's decision, and a reason for that opinion. Give the students a few minutes to write. If time permits, invite the students to share their writing with the class.

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently for 20 minutes
- Make inferences about characters in their independent reading
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Explain their thinking
- Work in a responsible way

1 Add to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” Chart

Have the students bring their independent reading books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that this week the students heard The Paper Bag Princess and used clues in the story and illustrations to make inferences about the main character, Elizabeth. Remind the students that authors often reveal information about their characters through the characters’ words, actions, and thoughts instead of telling the reader directly what the characters are like. Explain that for this reason, making inferences about characters is an important strategy for understanding and enjoying stories.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart, and remind them that the chart lists comprehension strategies they have learned and can use when reading on their own. Add making inferences about characters to the chart.

Reading Comprehension Strategies

- visualizing
- making inferences about characters

Tell the students that today they will practice making inferences about characters in their own independent reading. Explain that they will read their books for 10 minutes and then go back and read what they just read again, thinking about what they can infer about the main characters in their stories.

Materials

- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and a marker
- Narrative text for teacher modeling, prepared ahead
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

Make sure that each student is reading a narrative text that has a main character.

2 Read Independently Without Stopping

Distribute the self-stick notes and explain that each student should mark the place where he begins reading with a self-stick note. Have the students read silently for 10 minutes.

3 Model Making Inferences About a Character

Stop the students after 10 minutes. Explain that each student will reread, starting again at the self-stick note, and look for clues in the story or illustrations that reveal the main character's personality. Review that a clue can be something a character does, says, or thinks, or something in an illustration. Explain that the students will mark the clues they find with self-stick notes.

Model the process with your own text (see "Do Ahead"). Read a brief selection aloud, and think aloud about an inference you can make about the main character in the story and the clues in the passage that helped you make that inference. Mark the passage with a self-stick note.

You might say:

"From the first page of Ramona the Pest, I can infer that Ramona is an upbeat character with a lot of energy. One way that I know she is upbeat is that she's so happy about going to school for the first time. A lot of children get nervous and worried before their first day of school, but Ramona is excited! I can tell that Ramona has a lot of energy because she's singing and skipping early in the morning."

Explain that after they reread, the students will have a chance to share what they inferred about characters with their partners and with the class.

4 Reread Independently and Discuss Inferences in Pairs

Give the students 10 minutes to reread and look for clues about their characters. After 10 minutes, stop them and have partners take turns telling each other what they inferred about the characters in their stories and what clues helped them make their inferences. Remind each student to begin by telling her partner the title of the book and the author's name and briefly explaining what the story is about. Circulate and listen as partners talk.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to make inferences about characters?
- Can they identify clues that support their inferences?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 27 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to make inferences about characters, continue on to Week 2.
- If about half of the students are able to make inferences about characters, continue on to Week 2 and plan to check in with students who are struggling during IDR. You might ask those students to tell you about what they just read and follow up with questions such as:

Q How do you think the main character is feeling in this part of the story?

Q What clues in the story make you think [he] feels [sad]?

Q What clues in the pictures make you think [he] feels [sad]?

- If only a few students are able to make inferences about characters, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating the Week 1 lessons using an alternative book before continuing on to Week 2. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

5 Discuss Inferences as a Class

After partners have had a chance to talk about their inferences, invite a few volunteers to share the inferences they made with the class. Have each student begin by telling the class the title of the book he read, the author’s name, and a bit about what the book is about. Then ask:

Q What did you infer about the main character in your book? What clues helped you make that inference?

Invite the rest of the class to participate in the discussion by asking questions such as:

Q What did you hear [Cheng] say about the character in his book?

Q What do you want to ask [Cheng] about what he shared?

Tell the students that they will have more opportunities to make inferences about characters in the coming days and weeks.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit The Paper Bag Princess to teach the Week 6 vocabulary lessons.

Ⓜ DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2); see page 28 of the Assessment Resource Book.

---

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 6 lessons this week.

Materials

- Julius, the Baby of the World
- “Discussion Prompts” chart

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Make inferences about the main character in the story
- Discuss the main character’s problem in the story
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking

1 Gather and Review the Discussion Prompts

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they learned three discussion prompts to help them connect their ideas with the ideas of others during class discussions. Direct the students’ attention to the “Discussion Prompts” chart. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How does using the prompts help us during class discussions?

Students might say:

“The prompts help us listen to what people say.”

“I agree with [Zoe] because you have to listen if you are going to agree or disagree with someone.”

“In addition to what [Russell] said, listening to different people’s ideas helps us learn.”

Encourage the students to use the prompts when they participate in the discussion today.

2 Introduce Julius, the Baby of the World

Show the cover of Julius, the Baby of the World and read the title and the author’s name aloud. Explain that Kevin Henkes is also the illustrator. Tell the students that in this story they will meet a young mouse named Lilly who has a new baby brother named Julius. Ask the students to listen carefully to the story, and tell them that you will stop during the reading so partners can discuss what they have learned about Lilly.

3 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described on the next page. In addition to the text of the story, read the text in the illustrations. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Teacher Note

The pages of Julius, the Baby of the World are unnumbered. For easy reference, pencil in page numbers beginning with the number 1 on the right-hand title page that includes the author’s name. (Page 5 begins “Before Julius was born, Lilly was the best big sister in the world.”) This system is used throughout the program for all read-alouds with unnumbered pages.

Suggested Vocabulary

beady: small, round, and shiny, like a bead (p. 7)

nifty: very good (p. 12)

dazzled: amazed (p. 16)

restrain: control (p. 17)

verbal exuberance: loud, cheerful talking and singing (p. 18)

niceties: nice things, such as toys or new clothes (p. 24)

quivered: trembled; twitched (p. 28)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

it was a different story: (idiom) things changed (p. 6)

insulting: meant to hurt a person's feelings (p. 6)

disgusting: very unpleasant (p. 7)

extraordinary: wonderful; remarkable (p. 10)

uncooperative chair: place where Lilly sits when she has not been nice to Julius (p. 13)

showered her with hugs and kisses: hugged and kissed her a lot (p. 14)

babbled and gurgled: made baby sounds (p. 16)

quite a spread: a lot of tasty foods and drinks (p. 26)

What's the big deal?: What is so important or special? (p. 26)

Stop after:

p. 11 "When no one was looking, Lilly had her own idea."

Ask:

Q What have you found out about Lilly so far? Turn to your partner.

Without sharing as a class, reread the last sentence on page 11 and continue reading.

Stop after:

p. 25 "'Disgusting,' said Lilly."

Ask:

Q What more have you found out about Lilly? Turn to your partner.

Without sharing as a class, reread the last sentence on page 25 and continue to the end of the story.

ELL Note

To increase comprehension, have volunteers act out vocabulary words such as dazzled and quivered.

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from additional stops to discuss the reading, for example, after pages 7 and 17.

Teacher Note

Not taking time to share as a class maintains the flow of the story and helps the students depend on their partners, rather than always relying only on the teacher or the whole class, to confirm and support their thinking.

Facilitation Tip

Continue to ask facilitative questions to build accountability and participation during class discussions. When students direct their responses to you, redirect them toward the class by asking questions such as:

- Q Do you agree or disagree with what [Teresa] just said, and why?
- Q What questions can you ask [Teresa] about what she said?
- Q Why does what [Teresa] said make sense?

Much learning in this program relies on creating a dynamic discourse among the students. Facilitative questions teach them that their comments contribute to a class discussion, and that they are responsible for listening to one another and responding.

4 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion about the story. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking. Ask:

Q What is this story about?

Review that main characters in stories usually have problems they have to solve. Ask:

Q What is Lilly's problem in this story? How is her problem solved?

Students might say:

"Lilly's problem is that she has a new baby brother, but she doesn't want one."

"I agree with [Sammy]. Lilly doesn't like the baby until Cousin Garland says insulting things about him. Then Lilly stands up for the baby."

"In addition to what [Aleela] said, I think Lilly is jealous of the baby at first. Later, she gets over it and figures out that the baby can be fun to have around."

Step 4 (second

Tell the students that in the next lesson they will think and talk more about Lilly.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Make Inferences About Characters

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Ask them to think about inferences they can make about the main characters in their stories as they read. Remind the students that when they make an inference about a character, they use clues in a story, such as what a character says, does, or thinks, to figure out something about the character. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share their books with the class. Have each student begin by showing the cover of his book and reading the title and the author's name aloud. Then ask:

- Q Who is the main character in the story?
- Q What do you know about the main character so far? What clues helped you figure that out?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Strategy Lesson

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear parts of a story again to build comprehension
- Make inferences about the main character in the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Explain their thinking
- Build on one another's thinking

1 Review Making Inferences About Characters

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and review that last week they practiced making inferences about Elizabeth, the main character in The Paper Bag Princess. Remind the students that when they make inferences about a character, they use clues in the story—such as what the character says and does—to figure out what the character is like.

Explain that today the students will hear parts of Julius, the Baby of the World again and make inferences about the main character, Lilly.

2 Introduce the Character Web and Reread Part of the Story

Explain that you will reread three parts of the story aloud. Tell the students that as they listen to each part, you want them to think about what Lilly says and does and what they can infer, or figure out, about her from these clues.

Materials

- Julius, the Baby of the World
- "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart
- "Character Web for Lilly" chart (WA2)

Direct the students' attention to the "Character Web for Lilly" chart (C WA2). Explain that after you read each part aloud, you will record the students' inferences on the chart to create a web that shows Lilly's personality.

WA2

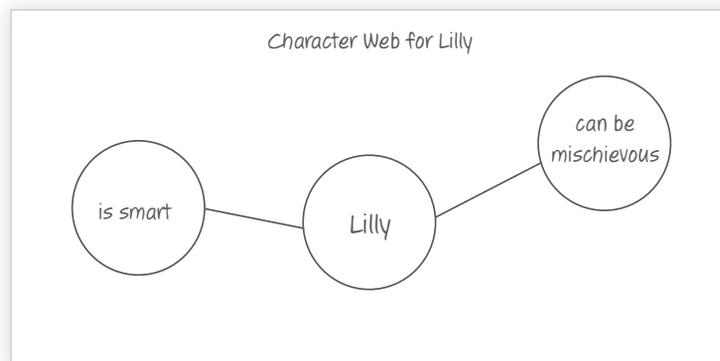

Reread pages 10–13 aloud slowly and clearly. Read the text in each illustration, and show the illustrations.

3 Model Making Inferences and Begin the Character Web

Model making inferences about Lilly and using the character web to record your thinking.

You might say:

"On page 12, we learn that Lilly makes nifty disguises to scare the baby. Even though the author doesn't say so directly, I can infer, or figure out, from this that Lilly is a smart little mouse because only a smart mouse would know how to make nifty costumes. But she uses the costumes to scare the baby. I can infer from this that Lilly can be mischievous. I'm going to add two circles to my character web for Lilly. In one circle, I'll write: is smart. In the other, I'll write: can be mischievous."

WA2

Ask:

Q What else can you infer about Lilly from this part of the story? What clues helped you figure that out? Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, invite a few volunteers to share the inferences they made with the class. Remind them to use the discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking.

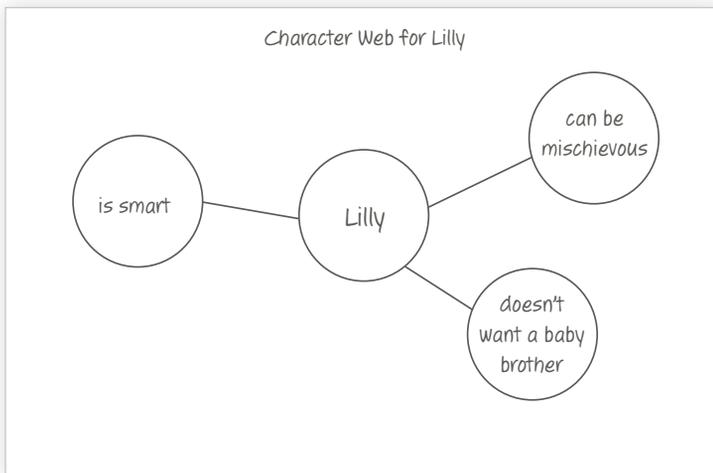

As the students share, record their ideas on the web (see the example below). Reread the parts of the story the students refer to as they share.

Students might say:

"Lilly doesn't want a baby brother. I figured that out from the insulting things she says to the baby."

"I agree with [Dara and Keith]. I also think that saying 'I hate you' and 'You're ugly' to the baby shows that she can be mean sometimes."

"In addition to what [Shana and Ankit] said, I think Lilly feels jealous. Her parents fuss over the baby and say they love him. She probably wishes they were fussing over her."

WA2

4 Reread Parts of the Book and Complete the Character Web

Reread pages 18–20 aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations.

Have the students discuss what they know about Lilly in pairs and as a class. As volunteers offer additional ideas, add circles to the character web and read the clues in the text they refer to. Then follow the same procedure for pages 26–30.

Teacher Note

Be aware of how long the students have been sitting by the time you reach this discussion. If the students are restless, consider taking a break and resuming the discussion after the break or on the next day.

Students might say:

"Lilly is silly sometimes."

"She gets into trouble a lot."

"She has a good imagination."

"Lilly is stubborn."

"She doesn't want other people to insult Julius."

"She's proud of Julius."

"She can be bossy."

When the students finish offering ideas, briefly review the web. Point out that the students' ideas, taken together, are a picture in words of Lilly's personality. Remind the students that making inferences about a character helps them understand the character and the story better. Explain that in the next lesson the students will continue to explore Lilly's personality.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Describe Main Characters

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Ask them to think about inferences they are making about the main characters in their stories as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the books they are reading with the class. Have each student begin by showing the cover of her book and reading the title and the author's name aloud. Then ask:

Q Who is the main character in the story?

Q What words would you use to describe this character? Why?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

EXTENSION

Read Another Book About Lilly by Kevin Henkes

Show the cover of Julius, the Baby of the World and remind the students that they heard the story earlier and practiced making inferences about the main character, a mouse named Lilly. Ask:

Q What do you remember about Lilly?

Remind the students that authors sometimes write more than one book about the same characters. Explain that Kevin Henkes has written other books about Lilly and that you will read one of these books aloud today. Ask the students to listen for clues about Lilly’s personality that they can use to make inferences. Read the book you selected aloud to the students. After the reading, discuss questions such as:

Q What were you able to infer about Lilly’s personality from this story? What clues helped you figure that out?

Q Did you infer anything about Lilly’s personality that surprised you? Why was that surprising?

Q How are the stories [Chester’s Way] and Julius, the Baby of the World the same? How are they different?

Teacher Note

The character Lilly appears in several books by Kevin Henkes, including Lilly’s Big Day, Lilly’s Purple Plastic Purse, Lilly’s Chocolate Heart, and Chester’s Way. Prior to doing this activity, locate one of these titles to read aloud to the students.

Strategy Lesson

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Make inferences about the main character in a story
- Discuss how the main character changes
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Make text-to-self connections
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Explain their thinking and build on one another’s thinking

1 Review the Character Web

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the “Character Web for Lilly” chart (WA2) and review that yesterday the students discussed the character Lilly, from Julius, the Baby of the World, and made a character web to show her personality. Explain that today they will continue to think about and discuss Lilly. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts during today’s discussion.

Materials

- Julius, the Baby of the World
- “Character Web for Lilly” chart (WA2) from Day 2
- Student Response Book pages 5–6
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

2 Introduce Character Change

Explain that in stories, characters often change because of things that happen to them or things they come to learn or realize over the course of the story. Main characters in particular tend to be different at the end of a story from the way they were at the beginning. Explain that today the students will explore how Lilly changes in Julius, the Baby of the World.

3 Explore an Excerpt from the Beginning of the Story

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 5, and explain that this excerpt is from the beginning of Julius, the Baby of the World. Ask the students to follow along as you read the excerpt and to think about how Lilly feels about Julius at the beginning of the story.

Read the excerpt aloud, slowly and clearly.

Point out to the students that the author does not tell them directly how Lilly feels about Julius, but they can infer how Lilly feels from what she does and says. Ask them to discuss in pairs how Lilly feels and to underline the parts of the excerpt that helped them to figure that out. Circulate and observe partners as they work.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to make inferences about how Lilly feels?
- Can they identify clues that support their inferences?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2); see page 28 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to make inferences about how Lilly feels, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to make inferences about how Lilly feels, reread the excerpt aloud and ask:

Q How does Lilly treat Julius after he’s born? What does this tell you about how she feels about him?

- If only a few students are able to make inferences about how Lilly feels, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

When most students have finished, have one or two pairs share what they discussed with the class.

4 Explore an Excerpt from the End of the Story

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 6, and explain that this is an excerpt from the end of Julius, the Baby of the World, after Cousin Garland has insulted Julius at the celebration. Ask the students to follow along as you read the excerpt and to think about how Lilly feels about Julius at the end of the story.

Read the excerpt aloud, slowly and clearly.

Again, have pairs discuss how Lilly feels and underline the clues that helped them figure that out. When most students are finished, have one or two pairs share their thinking with the class.

5 Discuss How Lilly Changes

Facilitate a class discussion about how Lilly's feelings about Julius change over the course of the story. Ask:

Q How do Lilly's feelings about Julius change during the story?

Q What happens that causes her feelings to change?

Students might say:

"Lilly's cousin says mean things about Julius. Lilly doesn't like hearing someone else say bad things about her brother."

"I agree with [Sonya]. I think Lilly is standing up for her little brother—sort of protecting him from Cousin Garland."

"In addition to what [Han] said, I think Lilly figures out that it's fun having a little brother. She repeats all the good things her parents have been saying about Julius."

Q Have you ever changed your mind about someone the way Lilly does? What happened?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Point out that since the author does not explain directly how or why Lilly changes, the students had to make inferences to figure it out. Remind the students that making inferences about characters is a strategy they can use to help them understand the characters in the books they read independently.

6 Reflect on Explaining Thinking Clearly and Using the Discussion Prompts

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

Q When did you hear someone explain his or her thinking clearly today? What did the person say?

Q How did the discussion prompts help us talk as a class today?

Encourage the students to continue explaining their thinking clearly to one another and using the discussion prompts to help them build on one another's thinking.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Discuss Main Characters

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Ask them to think about the main characters in their stories and what they can infer about the characters’ personalities as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Give the students a few minutes to share with partners. Have each student tell his partner the title of his book, the author’s name, and what he has found out about the main characters in his book. Ask them to discuss questions such as:

- Q Who is the main character in the story?
- Q What words would you use to describe this character? Why?
- Q What happens to this character in the story?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

ELL Note

This extension will support the vocabulary and comprehension development of your English Language Learners.

EXTENSION

Discuss Sensory Details in Julius, the Baby of the World

Point out that Julius, the Baby of the World, contains many sensory details, or words that help readers imagine how things look, smell, sound, taste, and feel. Read some story passages containing sensory details aloud, and have the students describe what they imagine as they listen to each passage. For example, you might read from page 15, “They kissed his wet pink nose. They admired his small black eyes. And they stroked his sweet white fur.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Make inferences about characters in their independent reading
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Write in their reading journals
- Explain their thinking

1 Review Making Inferences About Characters

Have the students bring their independent reading books, Student Response Books, and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that this week they heard the story Julius, the Baby of the World. They explored the personality of the main character, Lilly, and how she changes over time. Remind the students that the author does not always describe Lilly’s personality or feelings directly. Instead, the students had to use clues from the story and illustrations to make inferences about her character.

Tell the students that today they will practice making inferences about characters in their independent reading. Explain that they will read silently for 10 minutes. Then you will ask them to reread, thinking about what they know about the main characters in their stories and identifying the clues that helped them figure that out. Explain that after reading, the students will discuss the inferences they made with partners and then write about the inferences in their reading journals.

2 Read Independently Without Stopping

Distribute the self-stick notes and explain that you would like each student to use a self-stick note to mark the place where she begins reading. Have the students read silently for 10 minutes.

3 Get Ready to Reread

After 10 minutes, stop the students. Explain that you would like each of them to reread, starting at the self-stick note, and to think about what they can figure out about the main characters in their stories using clues in the text or illustrations. Review that the things a character says, does, and thinks are often clues to the character’s personality. Explain that the students will mark the clues they identify with self-stick notes so they can share them with their partners later.

Materials

- Small self-stick notes for each student
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA3)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section

Teacher Note

Make sure that each student is reading a narrative text that has a main character.

Teacher Note

You might model this process again for the students using the same procedure you used in Week 1, Day 4, Step 3.

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty writing about the inferences they made, signal for their attention and model writing an inference about the main character in a book the students are familiar with. For example, you might write: I read the book Julius, the Baby of the World by Kevin Henkes. The main character in the story is a mouse named Lilly who has a new baby brother, Julius. Lilly doesn't like Julius at first, but when her cousin insults him, she gets angry and defends Julius. I was able to infer that Lilly was angry by using these clues: "Lilly's nose twitched. Her eyes narrowed. Her fur stood on end. And her tail quivered."

ELL Note

Consider having students with limited English proficiency draw pictures of characters and then dictate to you what they inferred about the characters.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Julius, the Baby of the World to teach the Week 7 vocabulary lessons.

4 Reread Independently and Discuss Inferences in Pairs

Give the students 10 minutes to reread and look for clues about their characters. After 10 minutes, stop the students and have partners take turns telling each other what they inferred about their characters and what clues helped them make their inferences. Remind each student to begin by telling his partner the title of the book he read and the author's name and briefly explaining what the story is about.

5 Write in Reading Journals About Inferences

Explain that each student will write in her reading journal about the main character in her book and one thing she has been able to infer about the character from clues in the story. Display the "Journal Entry" chart ( WA3) and explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

WA3

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading. Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What the story is about
- The name of the main character in the story
- An inference you made about the main character
- The clue or clues you used to make your inference

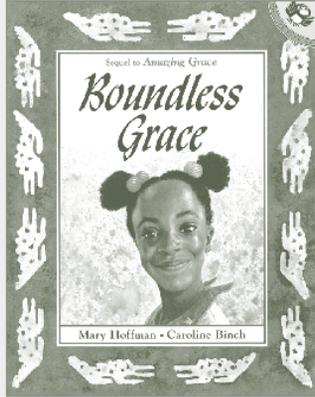

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write. Have the students return to their seats and write in their journals. If time permits, invite one or two volunteers to share what they wrote with the class.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 7 lessons this week.

Day 1

Read-aloud

Materials

- Boundless Grace

Teacher Note

The pages of Boundless Grace are unnumbered. For easy reference, pencil in page numbers beginning with the number 1 on the right-hand title page that includes the author's name. (Page 2 begins "Grace lived with her ma and her nana and a cat called Paw Paw.") This system is used throughout the program for all read-alouds with unnumbered pages.

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from additional stops to discuss the reading, for example, after pages 7 and 15.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Discuss the problem in the story
- Discuss the setting in the story
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Explain their thinking
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

1 Introduce Boundless Grace

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Boundless Grace and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that the main character in the story is a girl named Grace whose parents are divorced. In the story, Grace goes to visit her father, who lives in Africa with his new family.

2 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

particularly: especially (p. 2)

speechless: unable to speak because you are so surprised (p. 5)

The Gambia: a country in Africa (p. 6)

compound: enclosed area containing a group of buildings (p. 8)

cross: angry; not pleased (p. 10)

benachin: type of food made from rice, vegetables, and fish or meat (p. 11)

jackfruit: large fruit of a tree that grows in very hot and wet climates (p. 12; refer to the illustration) tame: gentle; not wild (p. 22)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

nana: grandmother (p. 2)

split up: separated; divorced (p. 2)

crocodile: large, scaly reptile with short legs and strong jaws; related to the alligator (p. 5)

wicked: very bad; cruel (p. 10)

stepmother: woman who has married your father after the death or divorce of your mother (p. 10)

shopping: things that were bought (p. 14)

homesick: missing your home (p. 19)

holy place: place set aside for prayer (p. 22)

Stop after:

p. 5 "She had made up so many fathers for herself, she had forgotten what the real one was like."

Ask:

Q What have you found out about Grace and her family? Turn to your partner.

Ask one or two volunteers to share their thinking. Reread the last sentence on page 5 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 11 "'She's probably still getting over the long flight,' said Jatou."

Ask:

Q How do you think Grace feels? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. Reread the last sentence on page 11 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 19 "'And remember, families are what you make them.'"

Ask:

Q What is Grace thinking about her family at this point in the story? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. Reread the last sentence on page 19 and continue reading to the end of the story.

3 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion about the story. Remind the students to explain their thinking and to use the discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking.

Q What is this story about?

Teacher Note

The word shopping appears twice on page 14, first as a verb and then as a noun. The definition provided here is for the noun shopping.

ELL Note

Have your English Language Learners use the illustration on page 11 to help them answer this question. Have them focus on facial expressions and postures that give clues about how the character feels.

Facilitation Tip

Continue to practice asking facilitative questions to help the students respond to one another during class discussions. When students direct their responses to you, redirect them toward the class by asking questions such as:

Q Do you agree or disagree with what [Sufja] just said? Why?

Q What questions can we ask [Sufja] about what she said?

Q Why does what [Sufja] said make sense?

Remind the students that the main character in a story usually has a problem that gets solved by the end of the story. Ask:

Q What problem does Grace have in this story? How is her problem solved?

Students might say:

“Grace’s problem is that she feels like she doesn’t have a father because her father left when she was little. Then she goes to visit him in Africa and understands that she does have a father and he loves her very much.”

“Grace doesn’t understand how her father can have two families. But when she meets his family in Africa, she realizes that it’s possible to have two families and love them both.”

“At the beginning of the book, Grace thinks her family is broken, but she learns that families can look different.”

Tell the students that we call the place where a story takes place the setting of the story. Explain that the setting of a story often plays an important part in the story. Ask:

Q What is the setting of this story, or where does this story take place? Why is that important?

Students might say:

“I agree with [Carlos]. It’s also important because Grace learns many new things on her trip there.”

“In addition to what [Thuy and Carlos] said, Grace couldn’t have solved her problem without going to Africa to visit her dad.”

Tell the students that they will talk more about Grace in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Discuss Settings of Stories

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Encourage the students to think about the settings of their stories (where the stories take place) as they read today. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the books they are reading with the class. Have each student begin by showing the cover of her book and reading the title and the author's name aloud. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is the setting of this story?
- Q How would you describe the setting? Is it a place you would like to visit? Why or why not?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

---

EXTENSION

Visualize Part of Boundless Grace

Show the cover of Boundless Grace and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Briefly review the story by asking the students what they remember about it or by showing the illustrations and having the students retell the story in their own words.

Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and review that one strategy they have learned for enjoying and understanding what they read is visualizing. Explain that today you will reread part of Boundless Grace and the students will use the author's words to visualize, or picture in their minds, what is being described.

Explain that the passage you will read comes from the part of the story when Grace visits the African market with her father and Nana. Ask the students to close their eyes and listen as you read pages 16–17 aloud.

First in pairs, and then as a class, have the students describe how they visualized the fabric stall and what words helped them create their mental images. Encourage the students to visualize as they read on their own.

ELL Note

This extension is especially helpful for English Language Learners.

TEKS 7.D.ii
TEKS 7.D.iv
Student/Teacher Activity
Extension (last paragraph)

Materials

- Boundless Grace
- Student Response Book page 7
- “Character Web for Grace” chart (WA4)

Teacher Note

Rereading the story gives the students an opportunity to focus on the character and to listen for details, such as traits or feelings, that they might have missed during the first reading.

ELL Note

Consider reviewing the illustrations with your English Language Learners prior to the rereading.

Teacher Note

Circulate as partners talk. If the students are having difficulty making inferences about Grace, signal for their attention and model making an inference about her. For example, you might say, “One thing I know about Grace is that she misses her father. I figured that out from some clues at the beginning of the story. In the book, it says that Grace likes to read stories about fathers [page 2], and she says her ‘family’s not right’ because it doesn’t have both a mother and a father [page 4].”

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear parts of a story again to build comprehension
- Make inferences about the main character in the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Explain their thinking
- Build on one another’s thinking

1 Review Character Webs

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that last week the students heard the story Julius, the Baby of the World and made inferences about the main character, Lilly, and you used their inferences to create a character web for Lilly. Remind the students that in the previous lesson they heard and discussed the story Boundless Grace. Explain that today they will hear the story again; think and talk more about the main character, Grace; and create their own character webs for her.

2 Reread Boundless Grace

Explain that you will reread the story without showing the illustrations. Ask the students to pay attention to Grace’s words, actions, and thoughts and to think about what these clues reveal about her personality.

Read the story slowly and clearly, without stopping.

3 Discuss Inferences About Grace and Begin a Character Web

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What do you know about Grace? What does she say, do, or think that helped you figure that out? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a minute or two, signal for the students’ attention and display the “Character Web for Grace” chart (WA4). Ask:

Q What is one thing you and your partner know about Grace? What clues in the story helped you figure that out?

Have a pair share one thing they know about Grace (for example, “Grace misses her father”), and record their inference by adding a circle on the chart and writing the inference in it. Ask the pair to identify the clues in the text that helped them make their inference.

WA4

4 Complete Character Webs for Grace

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 7, “Character Web for Grace.” Explain that the students will complete character webs for Grace by each writing two inferences that are different from the ones they discussed as a class. Tell the students that they should be prepared to share with the class the clues in the story that helped them make their inferences. Give the students a few minutes to complete their character webs.

5 Discuss Grace’s Character

When most of the students have finished writing, facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. As the students share their inferences about Grace, record them on the “Character Web for Grace” chart. Add more circles to the chart as necessary. Ask:

- Q What did you write about Grace on your web? What clues in the story helped you figure that out?
- Q Do others agree with [Katia]? Why or why not?

Students might say:

“I wrote that Grace feels left out. In the story, she said she didn’t feel like she was a part of her father’s new family in Africa.”

“I agree with [Leon]. I wrote that she was a little jealous of her new brother and sister because they had a mom and a dad.”

“In addition to what [Jana] said, I wrote that Grace doesn’t like her stepmother. I figured that out because she wouldn’t eat her stepmother’s cooking.”

Remind the students that making inferences about Grace helps them better understand her personality and the story. Point out that a character web is a useful tool for recording ideas. Explain that in the next lesson they will explore how Grace changes between the beginning and the end of the story.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

You might have the students record more than two ideas. Have them add a circle to the web for each additional idea.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Inferences About Characters

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Ask the students to think about what they can infer about the characters in their stories as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers who made inferences about characters to share those inferences with the class. Have each student begin by showing the cover of his book and reading the title and the author’s name aloud. Then ask:

Q What is something you inferred about a character in your story?

Q What clues in the story helped you figure that out?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

In this lesson, the students:

- Make inferences about the main character in a story
- Discuss how the main character changes
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for 20-25 minutes
- Explain their thinking
- Build on one another's thinking

1 Get Ready for Partner Work

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that in this unit they have been working on explaining their thinking clearly when they share in pairs and with the class. Ask:

Q How can you help your partner explain his or her thinking? What questions can you ask your partner? How will that help you when you are working together?

Encourage partners to help each other explain their thinking as they talk today.

2 Review the Previous Lesson and Character Change

Show the cover of Boundless Grace and remind the students that in the previous lesson they made inferences about the main character, Grace, and recorded their inferences on character webs.

Review that the main character in a story often changes between the beginning of the story and the end because of something that happens to her or something she comes to learn or realize. Explain that today the students will think about how Grace changes in Boundless Grace.

3 Reread Parts of Boundless Grace and Explore Change in Grace

Explain that you will reread parts of Boundless Grace from the beginning and the end of the story. Tell the students that as they listen, you want them to think about how Grace feels in each part of the story.

Read the beginning of the story aloud, starting on page 2. Stop after:

p. 4 “‘Our family’s not right,’ she told Nana. ‘We need a father and a brother and a dog.’”

Materials

- Boundless Grace
- “Double-entry Journal About Grace” chart (WA5)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3)

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q How does Grace feel in this part of the story? How do you know? [pause]
Turn to your partner.

Display the “Double-entry Journal About Grace” chart ( WA5).

Explain that this two-column chart is called a double-entry journal, and that you will use it to record the students’ inferences about how Grace feels at the beginning and at the end of the story.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. As they share, record their ideas in the first column, “Grace at the beginning.”

Next, read page 8 aloud. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q How is Grace feeling? How do you know? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Again, have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Add their ideas to the “Grace at the beginning” column of the chart.

Explain that the next section you will read comes at the very end of the story. Read pages 24–25 aloud. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q How does Grace feel at the end of the story? How do you know? [pause]
Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Record their ideas in the second column of the chart, “Grace at the end.”

Students might say:

“She is happy because she has two families who love her.”

“I agree with [Nadine and Barry]. She knows her dad loves her. She wasn’t sure about that at the beginning of the story.”

4 Discuss the Change in Grace

Facilitate a class discussion about how Grace changes over the course of the story. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking. Ask:

- Q How do Grace’s feelings about her family change between the beginning of the story and the end?
- Q What causes Grace’s feelings to change?

Students might say:

“Grace’s father and stepmother make her feel like she’s part of the family in Africa.”

“I agree with [Tyrone]. She figures out that a family like hers can be happy.”

“In addition to what [Claire] said, I think Grace’s nana helps her understand that not all families are the same.”

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to infer how Grace feels at different points in the story?
- Can they describe how her feelings change over the course of the story?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3); see page 29 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to make inferences about how Grace feels, continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to make inferences about how Grace feels, continue on to Day 4 and plan to check in with students who are having trouble making inferences during IDR. You might ask those students to tell you about the characters in the books they are reading and follow up with questions such as:

Q What kind of person is [Ramona]?

Q What clues in the story helped you figure that out?

Q How is [Ramona] different at the end of the story than she was at the beginning? What happened that caused her to change?

- If only a few students are able to make inferences about how Grace feels, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

Tell the students that in the next lesson they will hear and discuss another story about Grace.

5 Reflect on the Partner Work

Facilitate a brief discussion of how partners did explaining their thinking. Ask:

Q How did you and your partner explain your thinking to each other today? Were there times when you didn’t understand each other? What did you do when that happened? How did that help?

Students might say:

“At one point my partner didn’t understand what I was saying, and she asked me to say it again. I said it a little differently, and she understood.”

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Inferences About Characters

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Ask the students to think about what they can infer about the characters in their stories from clues in the text as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers who made inferences about characters to share those inferences with the class. Have each student begin by showing the cover of the book she read and reading the title and the author’s name aloud. Then ask:

- Q What is something you inferred about a character in your story?
- Q What clues in the story helped you figure that out?

Invite the class to ask the volunteers questions about their books. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

---

EXTENSION

Discuss Grace’s Wish

Remind the students that at the end of Boundless Grace, Grace’s father takes her to see the crocodiles at a “special holy place.” Read pages 22–23 of the story aloud, and discuss:

- Q What do you think Grace wishes for? What do you know about Grace that makes you think that?

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Make inferences about the main character in the story
- Discuss the lesson in the story
- Compare and contrast two stories by the same author about the same character
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking
- Read independently for 20-25 minutes

1 Introduce Amazing Grace

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have spent the past few lessons discussing the character of Grace from the book Boundless Grace. Review that authors sometimes write more than one book about the same character, and explain that Mary Hoffman has written other books about Grace. Tell the students that you will read one of these books aloud today.

Show the cover of Amazing Grace and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Point out that the illustrator, Caroline Binch, is also the illustrator of Boundless Grace. Explain that Grace is younger in Amazing Grace than she is in Boundless Grace. Ask the students to listen carefully to the story and to pay attention to clues they can use to make inferences about Grace.

2 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

Joan of Arc: famous French heroine who led an army to defeat the English (p. 4)

Anansi the Spider: character in traditional African stories who plays tricks on people (p. 5)

Troy: city in Greece (p. 6)

peg leg: wooden leg (p. 7)

Hiawatha: legendary Native American leader (p. 8)

Mowgli: boy raised by wolves who is the main character in the famous story The Jungle Book (p. 9)

stunning: amazing (p. 19)

Materials

- Amazing Grace
- Boundless Grace

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

their lives were in her hands: (idiom) she was responsible for keeping them alive (p. 13)

put your mind to it: (idiom) put all your attention and efforts into something (p. 17)

grand: large and very special (p. 18)

Stop after:

p. 11 “Or she was Aladdin, rubbing his magic lamp to make the genie appear.”

Ask:

Q What have you found out about Grace so far? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Reread the last sentence on page 11 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 21 “I can be anything I want, she thought.”

Ask:

Q How do you think Grace is feeling? What makes you think so? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Reread the last sentence on page 21 and continue reading to the end of the story.

3 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion about the story. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking. Ask:

Q What happens in the story?

Q What did you find out about Grace from this story? Did you find out anything that surprised you? Why was that surprising?

Explain that sometimes characters in stories learn a lesson that can help readers in their own lives. Ask:

Q What lesson do you think Grace learns in this story?

Students might say:

“I think Grace learns that she can do anything she wants if she puts her mind to it.”

“She learns not to get discouraged because of what other people say.”

“She learns not to give up.”

Teacher Note

You might explain that the lesson, or message, in a story is referred to as the story’s theme. Theme is formally taught in Unit 8 of the program (see “About Teaching Theme” in Unit 8, Week 3).

4 Compare and Contrast Two Stories About Grace

Show the covers of Boundless Grace and Amazing Grace, and review that the students have now heard two stories about the same character, Grace. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q In what ways are these two stories similar, or alike? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“Grace is the main character in both stories.”

“Grace’s mom and nana are in both stories, too.”

“In addition to what [Nazar] said, Grace’s nana helps her solve her problem in both the stories.”

In the same way, discuss:

Q In what ways are the stories different? Turn to your partner.

Students might say:

“Boundless Grace is set in Africa, but Amazing Grace is set where Grace lives.”

“In addition to what [Cosette] said, Grace’s father isn’t in Amazing Grace.”

As a class, discuss:

Q What did you enjoy about hearing two stories about some of the same characters?

Remind the students that multiple books by the same author about the same characters are called a series. Encourage the students to explore series when they read on their own.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Share Inferences in Pairs

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Ask the students to notice what they infer about the characters in their stories as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

At the end of independent reading, have partners talk about their reading. Have each student tell her partner the title of her book, the author’s name, what she knows about the characters in her book, and any inferences she has made about the characters. Have a few students share their inferences with the class and read aloud the clues they used to make their inferences.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Boundless Grace to teach the Week 8 vocabulary lessons.

- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4); see page 30 of the Assessment Resource Book.

---

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 8 lessons this week.

Materials

- The Raft (pages 6–17)

Teacher Note

The pages of The Raft are unnumbered. For easy reference, pencil in page numbers beginning with the number 1 on the right-hand title page that includes the author's name. (Page 6 begins "'There's nobody to play with, I complained.") This system is used throughout the program for all read-alouds with unnumbered pages.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a story
- Make inferences about the main character in the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Take responsibility for themselves

1 Discuss Taking Responsibility

Have the students gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Tell the students that today they will be responsible for both thinking on their own and sharing with partners. Briefly discuss:

- Q What will you do to take responsibility for yourself during "Turn to Your Partner" today?
- Q What will you do to take responsibility for yourself during class discussions?

2 Introduce The Raft

Show the cover of The Raft and read the title and the author's name aloud. Explain that Jim LaMarche is also the illustrator. Tell the students that the narrator, or the person who tells the story, in The Raft is a boy named Nicky who goes to spend the summer with his grandmother in the woods. Explain that Nicky's grandmother lives close to a river and that much of the story takes place on the river itself. Ask the students to close their eyes and imagine sitting by a river in the middle of summer. Support their thinking with prompts such as:

- Think about what plants and animals you see around you.
- Think about how the river is moving.
- Think about what sounds you hear.

After a few moments, ask the students to open their eyes, turn to their partners, and talk about what they visualized. Tell the students to listen carefully to their partners because you will ask some of them to share what their partners said with the class. After partners have had a chance to share, signal for the students' attention and ask:

- Q How did you partner visualize the river?

Students might say:

"My partner saw a rushing river with lots of rapids."

"[Kayla] visualized some deer drinking from the river."

"[Raul] imagined the river where he goes fishing with his dad."

3 Read the First Part of The Raft Aloud

Tell the students that you will read the first part of the story aloud today and finish reading it tomorrow. Explain that you will stop during the reading so partners can discuss what is happening. Encourage the students to visualize as they listen to the story and to pay attention to clues they can use to make inferences about the main character, Nicky.

Read pages 6–17 aloud slowly and clearly, pausing to let the students visualize before showing the illustrations. Clarify vocabulary as you read, and stop as described below.

Suggested Vocabulary

river rat: person who spends a great deal of time along a river (p. 6)

Stop after:

p. 12 "We had hamburgers for supper."

Ask:

Q What has happened in the story so far? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing as a class, reread the last sentence on page 12 and continue reading to the end of page 17.

4 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion about the first part of the story. Ask:

Q How does Nicky feel about going to spend the summer with his grandmother? How do you know?

Students might say:

"He doesn't want to go. He complains to his dad that there won't be any other kids to play with."

"I agree with [Eli]. I know Nicky doesn't want to go because he cries in the car on the way there."

"In addition to what [Anaya] said, Nicky looks unhappy in the illustrations."

Facilitation Tip

Continue to practice asking facilitative questions to help the students respond to one another during class discussions. When students direct their responses to you, redirect them toward the class by asking questions such as:

Q Do you agree or disagree with what [Daria] just said? Why?

Q What questions can we ask [Daria] about what she said?

Q Why does what [Daria] said make sense?

Q How would you describe the place where Nicky’s grandmother lives? Is it a place you would like to spend the summer? Why or why not?

5 Reflect on Taking Responsibility

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students took responsibility for themselves today. Ask:

Q What did you do to take responsibility during “Turn to Your Partner” today? What did you do to take responsibility during class discussions?

Students might say:

“When I couldn’t hear my partner, I asked him to speak louder.”

“I didn’t understand my partner’s idea, so I asked her a question about it.”

“I used a prompt to connect my idea to someone else’s idea.”

“I turned and looked at the person who was talking.”

Without mentioning any students’ names, describe any problems you noticed and follow up with questions such as:

Q Why is it important [for partners to let each other finish before talking]? How can we remember to do that the next time we work together?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Books as a Class

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the books they are reading with the class. Have each volunteer tell the class the title of the book he is reading and the author’s name. Ask questions such as:

Q What is the story about?

Q What is the setting of the story?

Q Who is the main character in the story? How would you describe this character?

Q What problem does the character have? How is the problem solved?

Encourage the class to ask volunteers questions about their books. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Read-aloud

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a story
- Discuss the main character's problem in the story
- Discuss the setting in the story
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Explain their thinking and build on one another's thinking

1 Review the First Part of The Raft

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of The Raft and remind the students that in the previous lesson they heard and discussed the first part of the story and made inferences about the main character, Nicky. Briefly discuss:

Q What happened in the part of the story you heard yesterday?

Q What do you know about Nicky so far?

Tell the students that they will hear the rest of the story today. Encourage them to visualize what is happening in the story. Explain that you will stop during the reading so partners can talk about what has happened.

2 Read the Rest of The Raft Aloud

Read pages 19–36 aloud slowly and clearly, pausing to let the students visualize before showing the illustrations. Clarify vocabulary as you read, and stop as described on the next page.

Suggested Vocabulary

hitchhikers: people who get rides for free (p. 19)

buck: male deer (p. 22; refer to the illustration)

poled: used a pole to push the raft (p. 24)

preened: cleaned (p. 24)

Materials

- The Raft (pages 19–36)

TEKS 8.D.i
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 3
(second and third discussion questions)

Stop after:

p. 22 "Never know when they might come in handy on a raft."

Ask:

Q What has happened to Nicky? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing as a class, reread the last sentence on page 22 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 27 "They even let me feed them right out of my hand."

Ask:

Q What happened in the part of the story you just heard? Turn to your partner.

Reread the last sentence on page 27 and continue reading to the end of the story. Ask:

Q What happens at the end of the story? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

3 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion of the story. Remind the students to explain their thinking and to use the discussion prompts to build on one another's ideas. Ask:

Q What is Nicky's problem in this story? How is his problem solved?

Remind the students that a story's setting, or where it takes place, is an important part of the story. Ask:

Q What is the setting of the story?

Q Why is the setting important?

Students might say:

"Nicky's problem is that he doesn't want to spend the summer at his grandmother's. But once he discovers the raft, he starts to like it there."

"The setting of the story is the woods and the river near Nicky's grandmother's house."

"The setting is important because the river brings the raft to Nicky."

"In addition to what [Devon] said, Nicky wouldn't have gotten to know his grandmother or discovered that he likes to draw if he had stayed in the city like he wanted to."

Tell the students they will continue to discuss The Raft in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Share Inferences in Pairs

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. Ask the students to think about what they can infer about characters in their stories as they read. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

At the end of independent reading, have partners talk about their reading. Have each student tell his partner the title of his book, the author’s name, what he knows about the characters in his book, and any inferences he made about those characters. Have a few students share their inferences with the class, and read the text that supports each inference.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Investigate River Animals

Show the cover of The Raft and remind the students that they heard the story earlier. Ask:

Q What happens in this story?

If necessary, remind the students that in the story the main character, Nicky, goes to spend the summer with his grandmother, who lives in the woods near a river. Nicky discovers a raft on the river and spends most of the summer on the raft, watching the animals that live in and around the river. Tell the students that you will reread part of the book aloud and that you want them to listen for what animals are mentioned. Read pages 19–33 aloud, slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations. Ask:

Q What are some of the animals Nicky sees from the raft?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. As they share, write a list of the animals they mention where everyone can see it.

Tell the students that today you will share websites about some of the animals mentioned in the story. Display the sources you located and read aloud information you think the students will find interesting.

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, locate a few age-appropriate sources that provide images and information about some of the animals mentioned in The Raft. Search for sources online using keywords such as “river turtles for kids,” “raccoons for kids,” “river otters for kids,” “great blue herons for kids,” “North American foxes for kids,” and “deer for kids.”

Teacher Note

Animals seen from the raft include a crane, a great blue heron, and other birds as well as turtles, raccoons, foxes, deer, otters, and fish.

After sharing the sources with the students, discuss questions such as:

- Q What is something new you learned about a river animal?
- Q Which animal is your favorite? Why?

Day 3

Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- The Raft
- Student Response Book page 8
- “Double-entry Journal About Nicky” chart (WA6)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4)

ELPS 4.G.iv
Steps 2 and 3
(all, beginning on page 158 and continuing on to page
159)

In this lesson, the students:

- Make inferences about the main character in a story
- Explore how the main character changes
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Explain their thinking
- Build on one another’s thinking

1 Review The Raft and Character Change

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Show the cover of The Raft and explain that today the students will talk more about the story and the main character, Nicky. Briefly discuss:

Q What happens in this story?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Remind the students that previously they talked about how the characters Lilly, from Julius, the Baby of the World, and Grace, from Boundless Grace, change over the course of their stories. Tell them that today they will look more closely at the character Nicky and think about how he changes between the beginning of the story and the end.

2 Introduce the Double-entry Journal About Nicky

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 8. Point out that this double-entry journal is like the one they used last week to show how Grace changes in the story Boundless Grace.

Explain that today you will reread the beginning and the end of The Raft and ask the students to infer how Nicky feels in each part of the story. The students will record their inferences in their double-entry journals.

3 Make Inferences About Nicky and Complete Double-entry Journals

Read page 6 aloud and show the illustration on page 7. Ask:

Q How does Nicky feel in this part of the story?

Give the students a moment to think about the question. Then have them record their ideas in the “Nicky at the beginning” column of their journals.

Explain that the second part you will read is from the very end of the story, after Nicky has rescued the baby fawn.

Read pages 35–36 aloud and show the illustrations. Have the students think quietly about the question:

Q How does Nicky feel at the end of the story?

After the students have had a moment to think, have them record their ideas in the “Nicky at the end” column of their journals.

4 Discuss the Change in Nicky

When most of the students have finished writing, signal for their attention and display the “Double-entry Journal About Nicky” chart (WA6). Facilitate a class discussion of the change in Nicky using the questions below. Encourage the students to use the discussion prompts to build on one another’s ideas. Ask:

Q How does Nicky feel at the beginning of the story? How do you know?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Record the students’ ideas in the “Nicky at the beginning” column of the chart. Then ask:

Q How does Nicky feel at the end of the story? How do you know?

Record the students’ ideas in the “Nicky at the end” column of the chart. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q How does Nicky change between the beginning of the story and the end? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“At the beginning, Nicky thinks being at Grandma’s will be boring, but by the end of the story, he likes being there.”

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

ELL Note

To support your English Language Learners, consider recording a few of the students’ ideas on the “Double-entry Journal About Nicky” chart (WA6) to model using a double-entry journal.

Remind the students that sometimes characters change because of something they learn. Discuss:

Q What does Nicky learn or realize that causes him to change?

Students might say:

"He realizes that he actually likes living at Grandma's."

"I agree with [Samir]. Nicky learns that he doesn't need a TV or other kids to have fun."

"In addition to what [Samir and Lucy] said, Nicky learns that he likes to draw, and drawing makes him happy."

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to infer how Nicky feels at different points in the story?
- Can they identify the clues in the text that they used to make their inferences?
- Are they able to describe how Nicky changes?

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA4); see page 30 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to infer how Nicky feels at different points in the story, continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to infer how Nicky feels at different points in the story, continue on to Day 4 and plan to check in with students who are having trouble making inferences during IDR. You might ask those students to tell you about the characters in the books they are reading and follow up with questions such as:
  - Q What kind of person is [Greg]?
  - Q What clues in the story helped you figure that out?
  - Q How is [Greg] different at the end of the story than he was at the beginning? Why do you think that is?
- If only a few students are able to infer how Nicky feels at different points in the story, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the "Grade 3 Alternative Texts" list.

Point out that the author does not say directly how Nicky changes or why, but the students were able to figure it out by the things he says, does, and thinks. Remind the students that when readers use clues in stories to understand characters, they are using an important strategy: making inferences.

Tell the students that in the next lesson they will practice making inferences about characters in their independent reading books.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Share Books as a Class

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the books they are reading with the class. Have each volunteer tell the class the title of the book he is reading and the author’s name. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is the story about?
- Q What is the setting of the story?
- Q Who is the main character in the story? How would you describe this character?
- Q Has the main character changed since the beginning of the story? If so, how?

Encourage the class to ask the volunteers questions about their books. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

TEKS 8.D.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5 (second discussion question)

Materials

- Small self-stick notes for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Make inferences about characters in their independent reading
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Take responsibility for themselves

1 Get Ready for Independent Reading

Have the students bring their independent reading books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Tell the students that today they will read independently and discuss their reading with their partners. Ask:

Q What helps you stay focused on your reading during independent reading time? Why is it important to stay focused?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Tell the students that at the end of the lesson you will check in with them to discuss how they used their independent reading time.

2 Review Making Inferences About Characters

Remind the students that for the past few weeks they have been thinking about characters in stories and what they can figure out about them by making inferences. Explain that today the students will continue to think about the characters in the books they are reading independently.

Tell the students that they will read their own books for 10 minutes. Explain that as each student reads, he should choose a character from his story to talk about with his partner. This character does not need to be the main character in the story. After 10 minutes, you will stop the students and ask them to reread, thinking more about the characters they chose.

3 Read Independently Without Stopping

Distribute the self-stick notes and have each student mark the place where she begins reading. Have the students read silently for 10 minutes. Remind them to choose characters to share.

4 Get Ready to Reread

After 10 minutes, stop the students and explain that you would like them to reread, starting again at the self-stick note. Ask each student to think about what she knows about the character she chose and what clues in the story helped her figure that out. Explain that she should mark the clues she finds with self-stick notes to share with her partner later.

5 Reread Independently and Discuss Characters in Pairs

Have the students reread silently for 10 minutes and mark clues that help them understand their characters. After 10 minutes, have partners take turns sharing the inferences they made and the clues that helped them. Have each student begin by telling his partner the title of the book he read, the author's name, what the book is about, and the name of the character he chose to share. Then have him describe the inferences he made about the character and read aloud the clues in the story that helped him make his inferences.

Circulate and listen as partners talk.

6 Discuss Characters as a Class

Have one or two volunteers share with the class the inferences they made about their characters. Ask questions such as:

- Q What did you figure out about this character?
- Q Did the author tell you that directly, or did you infer it from clues in the story? What clues did you use?

Encourage interaction among the students by asking questions such as:

- Q What did you hear [Fern] say about her character?
- Q What questions do you have for [Fern] about her character or book?

7 Reflect on the Independent Reading Time

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q How did you take responsibility during independent reading time today?
- Q What did you do to stay focused on your reading?

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty making inferences or if their inferences are not supported by the text, signal for their attention and model making an inference about a character from a book the students are familiar with, as you did in Week 1, Day 4, Step 3.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit The Raft to teach the Week 9 vocabulary lessons.

- Hear and discuss a story
- Discuss the main character's problem in the story
- Make text-to-self connections
- Read independently for 20-25 minutes
- Explain their thinking
- Build on one another's thinking

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that this is the last week the students will work with these partners. Facilitate a brief discussion about what has worked well for partners so far and what things they want to work on during their last week together. Ask:

Q What helps you and your partner work well together?

Students might say:

"We ask questions when we don't understand something."

"We take turns talking and going first when we share."

"We don't interrupt each other."

Q What things do you still want to work on?

Students might say:

"I can work on asking my partner to speak up so I can hear her."

"We can work on sharing different ideas."

"I want to work on helping my partner explain his thinking."

2 Introduce Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move

Show the cover of Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move, and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that the narrator (the person telling the story) is a boy named Alexander, whose family is preparing to move. Ask the students to listen carefully as you read. Explain that you will stop three times during the reading to give partners a chance to talk about the story.

3 Read Aloud

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

compass: tool with a magnetic needle that always points north, used for finding directions (p. 5)

brain transplant: (fictional) operation to get a new brain (p. 9)

immature: silly; childish (p. 9)

lot: piece of land (p. 16)

taxes: money that people and businesses pay to the government (p. 18)

barricade: block (p. 24)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

baseball mitt: glove used in baseball (p. 5)

sitter: person who is paid to look after children (p. 8)

poison ivy: plant that causes an itchy rash (p. 16)

cleaners: people who wash clothes for others (p. 22)

basement: room below ground level in a building (p. 25)

Stop after:

p. 13 "... or maybe a tent or maybe a cave."

Ask:

Q What are some things that Alexander imagines and worries about? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing as a class, reread the sentence on page 13 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 23 "I'm not going to move."

Ask:

Q Who are some of the people Alexander says good-bye to? How does Alexander know these people? Turn to your partner.

Reread the sentence on page 23 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 25 "I'd rather have poison ivy than have to move."

Ask:

Q What are some of the things Alexander says he is going to do when the movers come? What do you think he will do? Turn to your partner.

Continue reading to the end of the story.

Facilitation Tip

Reflect on your experience over the past few weeks with asking facilitative questions. Does the technique feel comfortable and natural to you? Do you find yourself using it throughout the day? What effect has this technique had on your students' attentiveness and participation in class discussions? We encourage you to continue to use and reflect on this technique throughout the year.

4 Discuss the Story as a Class

Facilitate a class discussion of the story using the questions below. Remind the students to explain their thinking and to use the discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking. Ask:

Q What is Alexander's problem in the story? How is his problem solved?

Students might say:

"Alexander's problem is that his family is moving and he doesn't want to. But then his dad tells him that when they move he can get a dog, and his mom tells him that he can call his best friend long-distance, so Alexander decides he'll move after all."

"In addition to what [Magritte] said, Alexander's brothers are mean to him in the beginning of the story. They make fun of him for not wanting to move. Then they start being nicer, and that makes Alexander feel better about moving."

Ask:

Q Have you ever felt like Alexander in this story? What happened?

Tell the students that they will talk more about the book and Alexander in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Share Books as a Class

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the books they are reading with the class. Have each volunteer tell the class the title of the book she is reading and the author's name. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is the story about?
- Q What is the setting of the story?
- Q Who is the main character in the story?
- Q What have you figured out about the main character? How did you figure that out?
- Q What is the main character's problem? How is it solved?

Encourage the class to ask volunteers questions about their books. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

---

EXTENSION

Read Another Book About Alexander by Judith Viorst

Show the cover of Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move, and remind the students that they heard the story earlier and made inferences about the main character, Alexander. Ask:

- Q What do you remember about Alexander?

Remind the students that authors sometimes write more than one book about the same characters. Explain that Judith Viorst has written other books about Alexander and that you will read one of these books aloud today. Show the cover of Alexander and the Terrible, Horrible, No Good, Very Bad Day, and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Ask the students to listen carefully as you read and to think about inferences they can make about Alexander. Read aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations as you read. After reading, discuss questions such as:

- Q How would you describe Alexander in this story? What clues helped you figure that out?
- Q How is Alexander the same in this story and in Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move? How is he different?
- Q (Show the covers of both books.) What is the same about these two stories? What is different about them?

---

Teacher Note

Prior to doing this activity, locate a copy of Alexander and the Terrible, Horrible, No Good, Very Bad Day to read aloud to the students.

Materials

- Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move
- Student Response Book page 9

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty remembering the story, select a few key pages, read them aloud, and ask the students what they remember.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear parts of a story read aloud again
- Make inferences about the main character in the story
- Discuss if and how the main character changes
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for 20–25 minutes
- Explain their thinking and build on one another's thinking

1 Review Alexander . . . and Character Change

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move, and remind the students that in the previous lesson they discussed the story and the main character, Alexander. Briefly review the story by asking:

Q What is this story about?

Review that in this unit, the students have explored how characters change in stories. Explain that today they will think about whether Alexander changes and, if he does, how.

2 Introduce the Double-entry Journal About Alexander

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 9. Point out that this double-entry journal is like the ones they used earlier to think about how Grace changes in Boundless Grace and how Nicky changes in The Raft.

Explain that today you will reread from the beginning of the story and from the end. After you read each excerpt aloud, partners will discuss what Alexander is like in that part of the story and record their ideas in their double-entry journals. Later, the students will refer to their double-entry journals to discuss whether they think Alexander changes between the beginning of the story and the end.

3 Make Inferences About Alexander and Complete Double-entry Journals

Tell the students that the first excerpt you will read is from the very beginning of the story. Read pages 5–9 aloud, showing the illustrations as you read. Then ask:

 Q What is Alexander like at the beginning of the story? Turn to your partner.

After a minute or two, signal for the students' attention and have them record their ideas in the "Alexander at the beginning" column of their double-entry journals.

Explain that the second excerpt you will read aloud comes near the end of the story. Read pages 26–30 aloud, showing the illustrations as you read. Ask:

 Q What is Alexander like at the end of the story? Turn to your partner.

After a minute or two, have the students record their ideas in the "Alexander at the end" column of their double-entry journals.

4 Discuss Alexander as a Class

Ask:

Q Do you think Alexander changes in this story? Why or why not?

Q Do others agree or disagree with what [Tricia] said? Explain your thinking.

Students might say:

"I don't think he changes. Alexander doesn't want to move at the beginning of the story, and he still doesn't want to move at the end."

"I disagree with [Caitlin]. I think he feels a little better about moving at the end because his dad told him he can have a dog when he moves."

"I agree with [Taro]. I think Alexander's mom makes him feel better, too, when she says he can call his friend long-distance."

Point out that readers may have different opinions about whether a character changes and that this is okay. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Tell the students that in the next lesson they will think about the main characters in their independent reading books and about whether or not those characters change.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Share Books as a Class

Have the students get their books and read silently for 20–25 minutes. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

Teacher Note

As partners talk, circulate and support their thinking by asking questions such as:

Q How does Alexander feel about moving? What in the story tells you that?

Q Why do you think Alexander feels the way he does?

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the books they are reading with the class. Have each volunteer tell the class the title of the book he is reading and the author’s name. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is the story about?
- Q What is the setting of the story?
- Q Who is the main character in the story?
- Q What have you figured out about the main character? How did you figure that out?
- Q What is the main character’s problem? How is it solved?
- Q Has the main character changed since the beginning of the story? If so, how?

Encourage the class to ask volunteers questions about their books. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Materials

- The Raft from Week 4
- Alexander, Who’s Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move

---

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write About Ways That The Raft and Alexander . . . Are Alike and Different

Show the covers of The Raft and Alexander, Who’s Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move, and remind the students that they heard these stories earlier. Slowly page through The Raft and show the illustrations. Ask:

- Q Who is the main character in this story? What problem does he have?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Repeat the same procedure to review the story Alexander, Who’s Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move.

Write the heading “How the Stories Are Alike” where everyone can see it. Ask:

- Q In what ways are these stories alike? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. As they share, list their ideas below the heading.

Students might say:

"Both Nicky and Alexander have to do something they don't want to do. Nicky doesn't want to go to his grandmother's, and Alexander doesn't want to move."

"In addition to what [Connor] said, both Nicky and Alexander are upset about having to leave their friends."

"Both stories are about how people in families sometimes have disagreements, but they can work things out if they try."

"Both Nicky and Alexander realize that the things they didn't want to do aren't as bad as they thought."

Write the heading "How the Stories Are Different" where everyone can see it. Ask:

Q In what ways are the two stories different? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. As they share, list their ideas below the heading.

Students might say:

"In The Raft, Nicky changes between the beginning and the end of the story. I don't think Alexander changes."

"The Raft is set in the woods. Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move is set in the town where Alexander lives."

"There are lots of characters in Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move. There are only three characters in The Raft."

Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about how the stories are alike and different.

You might say:

"First, I want to describe something that is similar about the two stories. I'll write: *The stories The Raft and Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move are alike in some ways. For example, both stories are about boys whose parents make them do things they don't want to do. Now I want to write about something that's different about the two stories. I'll write: The two stories are also different in some ways. For example, the settings of the stories are different. The Raft takes place in the woods where Nicky's grandmother lives. Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move takes place in the town where Alexander lives."*

Have the students write about what is similar and what is different in the two stories. If time permits, ask a few volunteers to share their writing with the class.

Materials

- Small self-stick notes for each student
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA7)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA5)

Teacher Note

If you notice students having difficulty recognizing clues about the characters' problems, you may want to model this for the class, using a text you selected and prepared ahead. For example, you might show the cover of The Raft and say, “The main character in my book is a boy named Nicky. His problem is that his dad is making him go to his grandmother’s house for the summer and he doesn’t want to go. I figured this out because on the first page Nicky says to his dad, ‘There’s nobody to play with,’ and ‘She doesn’t even have a TV.’ I’ll put a self-stick note on this page because there are clues that help me understand Nicky’s problem.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Make inferences about the main characters in their books
- Explore problems the main characters face
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Write in their reading journals
- Explain their thinking

1 Review the Previous Lessons

Have the students bring their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together. Remind the students that in this unit they have been thinking about characters in stories. They used story clues to make inferences about characters, discussed how and why characters change, and explored the problems characters face. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What problem does Alexander face in Alexander, Who’s Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move?

Q How is his problem solved?

Explain that today the students will read independently and think about the problems the main characters in their stories face. Afterward, they will discuss the main characters and their problems in pairs and write about them in their reading journals.

2 Read Independently and Look for Clues About Characters’ Problems

Tell the students that they will read independently for 20 minutes. Explain that as they read, you would like each student to think about the problem the main character in her story is facing and look for clues that help her learn about the problem. Review that these clues may be things the character says, does, or thinks at different points in the story. Explain that the students should mark the clues they find with self-stick notes.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read independently for 20 minutes.

3 Discuss Characters' Problems

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share with their partners the problems their main characters face and the clues in the story that helped them figure out those problems.

After partners have had time to talk, invite a few volunteers to share what they discussed with the class. Probe the students' thinking by asking questions such as:

- Q What problem does the main character in your story face?
- Q What do you know about the problem so far?
- Q What clues in the book gave you that information?

As the students describe inferences they made about their characters' problems, point those inferences out.

You might say:

"The author didn't say directly that his main character, Peter, was afraid to go to school because he didn't like mean Mr. Mulgrew. [Pablo] figured that out from what Peter told his friend Gus."

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to identify the problems their main characters face?
- Do they refer to the text to support their thinking?

- If all or most students are able to identify the problems their main characters face, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to identify the problems their main characters face, you might bring the students together and review main characters and problems the students discussed in this unit, such as Lilly and her angry feelings toward her brother Julius in Julius, the Baby of the World and Grace and her feelings about her family in Boundless Grace.
- If only a few students are able to identify the problems their main characters face, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the "Grade 3 Alternative Texts" list.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty writing about their main characters' problems, signal for their attention and model writing a journal entry about a main character's problem using a book the students are familiar with. For example, you might write: I read the book The Raft by Jim LaMarche. The main character in the story is a boy named Nicky who goes to spend the summer at his grandmother's house in the woods. Nicky's problem at the beginning of the story is that he doesn't want to go to his grandmother's house. Some clues that helped me figure out his problem are that in the car on the way there, he says to his dad, "There's nobody to play with" and "She doesn't even have a TV." Explain that in the next lesson, the students will continue to read independently and to think about the main characters in their books.

4 Write in Reading Journals About Characters' Problems

Display the "Journal Entry" chart (WA7) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

WA7

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading.

Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What the story is about
- The name of the main character in the story
- The problem the main character is facing
- A clue in the story that helped you figure out the problem

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class and share the texts they are reading with the class.

Day 4

Independent Strategy Practice

Materials

- Small self-stick notes for each student
- Copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Make inferences about the main characters in their books
- Explore character change
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Explain their thinking

1 Get Ready to Read Independently

Have the students bring their independent reading books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that again today the students will read independently and think about the main characters in their stories, but today they will focus on character change. Review that characters in stories often change, but that there are also characters who do not. Remind the students that they explored how the characters Lilly, Grace, and Nicky change, and they discussed whether or not Alexander changes.

2 Read Independently and Look for Evidence of Character Change

Tell the students that they will read independently for 20 minutes. Explain that as they read they should look for clues about whether or not their main characters are changing. Review that these clues may be things the character says, does, or thinks at different points in the story. Explain that the students should mark the clues they find with self-stick notes.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read independently for 20 minutes.

3 Discuss Character Change

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students talk with their partners about whether or not they think the main characters in their stories change and, if so, how. Remind them to share the clues they used to figure out if their characters change.

After partners have had time to talk, have a few volunteers share with the class. Probe their thinking by asking questions such as:

- Q Do you think the main character in your story changes? What clues in the story make you think so?
- Q (If yes) How has the character changed since the beginning of the story?
- Q (If no) Do you think the character is going to change before the end of the story? Why or why not?

4 Reflect on the Unit

Remind the students that this is their last day with their current partners. Help them reflect on their work together by asking:

- Q What have you enjoyed about working with your partner?

Review that during the unit the students worked on explaining their thinking and using prompts to build on one another's thinking during class discussions. Point out that these skills help them share ideas and also build the classroom community.

Also remind them that throughout the unit they practiced an important reading comprehension strategy: making inferences. They used clues in stories to make inferences about characters' personalities, the problems characters face, and the ways characters change. Explain that the students will continue to make inferences about characters in stories they read and hear.

ELL Note

Consider providing additional support to your English Language Learners. Ask them questions such as:

- Q What is [Sylvia] like at the beginning of the story?
- Q What happens to [Sylvia] during the story?
- Q What is [Sylvia] like at the end of the story?

For more information, see "Additional Modifications for ELLs" in the Introduction and view "Adapting Lessons for English Language Learners" (AV13).

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move to teach the Week 10 vocabulary lessons.

Teacher Note

For information on wrapping up this unit and conducting unit assessments, see "End-of-unit Considerations" on the next page.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 3. You will need to reassign partners before you start the next unit.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Periodically, have a few students share with the class what they are reading at home.

Assessment

- Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students’ reading comprehension using the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1); see page 36 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Unit 4

Wondering/ Questioning

FICTION

During this unit, the students use wondering/questioning to help them understand fiction. They learn the procedure for “Stop and Ask Questions” and think about whether their questions about stories are answered directly, indirectly, or not at all by the text. In addition, they continue to practice the comprehension strategies of visualizing and making inferences. During IDR, the students stop and ask questions as they read narrative texts independently, write in their reading journals, and continue to confer with the teacher individually about their reading. Socially, they develop the skills of using prompts to add to one another’s thinking and of agreeing and disagreeing respectfully.

Comprehension Focus

- Students use wondering/questioning to understand a story.
- Students think about whether their questions are answered in the story.
- Students refer to the text to support their thinking.
- Students read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking.
- Students agree and disagree respectfully.

1 DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this unit's read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding. Take time to show and discuss the illustrations.
- ✓ Make available narrative texts at a variety of levels so that the students can practice wondering/questioning during IDR and Independent Strategy Practice throughout the unit. Narrative texts include chapter books, picture books, and short stories in a wide range of genres (mystery, adventure, science fiction, historical fiction, realistic fiction, fable, folktale, myth, legend, biography, and memoir).
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a class set of "IDR Conference Notes" record sheets (CN1); see page 53 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, select three or four of the students' questions from the "What We Wonder About The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses" chart (WA1) from Day 1 to discuss in Step 2. If possible, select questions from the beginning, middle, and end of the story. Also try to select questions that are answered directly, indirectly, and not at all. Put stars next to the questions you select.

- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 46 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, select three or four of the students’ questions from the “What We Wonder About The Emperor and the Kite” chart (WA2) from Day 3 to discuss in Step 1. If possible, select questions from the beginning, middle, and end of the story. Also try to select questions that are answered directly, indirectly, and not at all. Put stars next to the questions you select.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 10 lessons this week.

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin working with new partners
- Hear and discuss a story
- Wonder and ask questions about the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes

ABOUT WONDERING/QUESTIONING

Wondering, or questioning, is an effective comprehension strategy because it helps readers actively engage with text and think about an author's intent. In this lesson, the students externalize their thinking by stating and discussing their questions or what they are wondering, and you record their ideas as questions and statements on a chart. The goal is for the students eventually to internalize the strategy of forming questions and reading for answers and to use the strategy regularly in their independent reading. For more information, see "The Grade 3 Comprehension Strategies" in the Introduction.

1 Pair Students and Get Ready to Work Together

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other's names. Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that the students will work in the same pairs for the next four weeks. Tell them that you will read a story aloud and that you will ask them to talk about the story with their partners. Explain that they will be responsible for thinking on their own and sharing their thinking in pairs. Ask:

Q What will you do to be a good partner to your new partner?

Students might say:

"I'll let my partner finish talking before I start talking."

"I'll look at my partner when he's talking. Then he'll know I'm listening."

"I can give my partner time to think before she speaks."

Encourage the students to keep these ideas in mind as they work together today.

2 Introduce The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses

Show the cover of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses and read the title and the author's name aloud. Tell the students that this is a story about a

TEKS 6.B.ii

Student/Teacher Activity

Step 4 (all, beginning on page 187 and continuing on to page 188)

Native American girl who loves wild horses, or horses that live freely in their natural habitat. Ask:

Q What do you wonder about this story?

Display the “What We Wonder About The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses” chart (🌐 WA1). Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class, and record their questions or “I wonder” statements, exactly as they are stated, on the chart.

What We Wonder About The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses

Why does the girl love wild horses?

I wonder if that's her horse on the cover.

WA1

Explain that you would like the students to think about these questions and any other questions that come to mind as they listen to the story today. Explain that you will stop several times during the reading so partners can discuss what is happening in the story and what they are wondering.

3 Read Aloud and Stop to Wonder

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

tipis: Native American tents made of animal skins (p. 5)

belongings: things people own, such as clothing and blankets (p. 5)

blizzards: storms with a lot of wind and snow (p. 7)

meadows: grassy, moist lands (p. 8)

pursued: followed or chased (p. 15)

horizon: place where the sky and the earth seem to meet (p. 15)

neighing: noise a horse makes (p. 16)

stallion: male horse (p. 16)

colt: young male horse (p. 18)

mare: female horse (p. 28)

🌐 ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

her voice was lost in the thunder: her voice could not be heard because of the loud thunder (p. 12)

Stop after:

p. 11 “She grabbed a horse’s mane and jumped on his back.”

Ask:

Q What questions do you have, or what do you wonder, at this point in the story? Turn to your partner.

Have two or three volunteers share their ideas with the class. Record their questions or statements, exactly as stated, on the chart.

Without discussing the students’ questions, reread the last sentence before the stop and continue to the next stopping point. Repeat this process at each of the stops:

p. 18 “They were nowhere to be found.”

p. 23 “But they soon saw she was sad and missed the colt and the wild horses.”

p. 28 “And then one year she did not return and was never seen again.”

Continue reading to the end of the book.

4 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion of the story by asking:

Q What is this story about?

Q What happens in the story that is strange or magical?

Q Was it hard or easy to think of questions as you listened to the story? What made it hard or easy?

Explain that the students will use the questions on the chart to help them remember, think about, and talk about the story again tomorrow.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Review and Practice “Fix-up” Strategies

Remind the students that they have been reading narrative texts, or texts that tell stories, during IDR. Explain that the students will continue to read narrative texts during IDR for the next several weeks.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and remind the students that it is important for them to check their comprehension as they are reading. Remind the students that earlier they learned a couple of “fix-up” strategies, or tools a student can use when he does not understand what he has read. Review that one strategy is to reread the part of the book he does not understand slowly and carefully. Another strategy is to read ahead and look for more information.

Teacher Note

To maintain the flow of the lesson, have only two or three students share at each stop. Accept the students’ questions without discussion. Hearing others’ questions gives the students examples of things they might wonder about as they listen to a story.

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, we invite you to practice asking questions once and then waiting. This means not repeating the question or asking it again a different way; it means just asking the question once and then using wait-time to give the students time to think before calling on anyone to respond. If students are confused by a question or need to hear it again, have them ask you to repeat or rephrase the question. This builds student responsibility for focusing on the discussion and helps the students develop the habit of listening the first time. To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view “Asking Questions Once and Using Wait-time” (AV25).

Teacher Note

Save the “What We Wonder About The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses” chart (WA1) to use in the lesson on Day 2. Prior to that lesson, review the questions on the chart and identify three or four questions for the students to focus on when they hear the story again. If possible, select questions from the beginning, middle, and end of the story. Also try to select questions that are answered directly, indirectly, and not at all. Put stars next to the questions you select.

TEKS 5.A.i

TEKS 6.I.ii

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5 (all, beginning on page 189 and continuing on to page 190)

ELL Note

Help your English Language Learners choose narrative texts at appropriate levels. Providing a limited number of teacher-selected texts will help them make good choices.

Teacher Note

During IDR today, the students practice two “fix-up” strategies they can use when they do not understand what they have read: rereading and reading ahead. To provide the students with additional support for using these and other “fix-up” strategies, and to see examples of how to model using the strategies, you might teach all or part of IDR Mini-lesson 2, “Self-monitoring and Using ‘Fix-up’ Strategies” (found in Appendix A).

Teacher Note

Provide time on a regular basis for the students to record the books they have completed in their reading logs.

Distribute self-stick notes to each student. Tell the students that as they read today, you want them to pause occasionally and ask themselves if they understand what they are reading. If a student does not understand what she is reading, she should mark the place in the text that she does not understand with a self-stick note and then try one or both of the “fix-up” strategies—rereading and reading ahead—to see if the strategies help her understand what she is reading. Explain that at the end of IDR, you will check in with the students to see how they did with using the “fix-up” strategies. Then have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Beginning today, and continuing throughout the unit, confer individually with the students about the books they are reading during IDR.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Ask and discuss:

- Q Was there any part of your reading that you did not understand today? Tell us about it.
- Q What “fix-up” strategy did you try? What happened when you [reread/read ahead]?

If a student has tried both of the “fix-up” strategies and still does not understand the text he is reading, refer him to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and encourage him to try the strategies listed on it. Alternatively, you might encourage the student to ask you or a classmate for help.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear a story read aloud again
- Use their questions to discuss the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Discuss Respecting Partners' Thinking

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses and remind the students that in the previous lesson they wondered and asked questions about the story. Explain that today the students will listen to the story again and use some of their questions from yesterday to help them talk and think about the story. Point out that they may have different opinions about whether or how a question is answered in the story. Explain that disagreeing in a caring way and respecting each other's thinking are important parts of being a good partner. Ask:

Q What can you do to show respect for your partner's thinking?

Students might say:

"I can show respect by not laughing at my partner's ideas or saying that her ideas are silly."

"I can show respect by asking my partner to repeat what he said if I don't understand him."

"I can show respect by letting my partner finish talking before I talk."

Encourage the students to use these ideas as they talk about the story today.

2 Review Selected Questions

Display the "What We Wonder About The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses" chart (WA1) and remind the students that these are the questions they asked about the story in the previous lesson. Explain that while all the questions on the chart are important, you have identified a few questions that might be especially interesting to discuss today. Read the questions you selected aloud and tell the students that you want them to think about these questions as you reread the story today. At the end of the reading, they will discuss the questions with their partners and with the class.

Materials

- The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses
- "What We Wonder About The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses" chart (WA1) from Day 1
- "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and a marker

Teacher Note

In the Making Meaning program, showing respect for a range of opinions and ideas is an important part of developing reading comprehension. It allows the students to discuss their reading and use of comprehension strategies safely and openly, both in pairs and with the class.

Teacher Note

If the students are interested in discussing the remaining questions on the chart, you might discuss them after the lesson or later in the day.

What We Wonder About The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses

- * Why does the girl love wild horses?
I wonder if that's her horse on the cover.
- * Will the girl and the horses be OK in the storm?
I wonder if the girl is surprised that the stallion can talk.
- * Will the girl get homesick?
Why does the girl say the horses are her relatives?
- * Will her parents let her go back to live with the horses?

TEKS 6.B.iii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 4 (all)

ELPS 2.D.i
ELPS 2.D.ii
Step 4 (all)

3 Reread The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses

Read The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses aloud without stopping.

4 Use Questions to Discuss the Story

Review the questions you identified on the chart and have partners discuss what they heard in the story about those questions. Circulate as partners talk. Notice whether the students are discussing the questions and whether they are referring to the text to support their thinking.

After sufficient time, signal for the students' attention and facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages and show illustrations to help the students recall what they heard.

- Q What question got you and your partner talking about the story? What did you say about that question?
- Q Do others agree with what [Brittany and Kaly] said about that question? What did you hear in the story that makes you agree or disagree?
- Q Are there questions that you and your partner thought were not answered in the story? Explain your thinking.

Students might say:

"My partner [Carlos] and I talked about whether the girl would get homesick living with the horses. We said no because the girl tells her parents she's happier living with the horses than living in the village."

"I agree with [Carlos and Jamal]. The girl only goes home because the hunters catch her."

"My partner and I don't think we find out why the girl loves wild horses. The book tells us she loves them, but it never explains why."

"I disagree with [Lucia and Kenji]. The story tells us that horses are the girl's relatives, and that explains why she loves them."

5 Add to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” Chart

Point out that wondering and asking questions is a strategy good readers use to help them actively think about what they are reading and read for answers to their questions. Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and remind them that the chart lists comprehension strategies they have learned and can use when reading on their own. Add wondering/questioning to the chart.

Reading Comprehension Strategies

- visualizing
- making inferences about characters
- wondering/questioning

Explain that in the coming weeks, the students will have opportunities to practice wondering and questioning as a class and in their independent reading.

6 Reflect on Working Together

Help the students reflect briefly on their work together by asking:

Q What did you do to show respect for your partner’s thinking today? How did that help you work together?

Students might say:

“I told my partner she helped me think of ideas.”

“I asked my partner a question about what he said to show that I was paying attention.”

“I didn’t get upset when my partner disagreed with me. I listened to her ideas.”

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Share Books with Partners

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Give students a few minutes to discuss their reading in pairs. Remind each student to tell her partner the title of her book, the author’s name, and what the book is about so far. Encourage partners to ask each other questions such as:

- Q What do you like about the book so far?
- Q Who is the main character in the story? What have you found out about [him/her]?
- Q When and where does the story take place?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

---

EXTENSION

Visualize Part of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses

Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and review that in previous lessons the students practiced visualizing, the strategy of creating mental pictures as they read. Explain that today you will reread part of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses aloud. As you read, you would like the students to visualize what is happening in the story. Remind the students that they can visualize sounds, smells, and feelings as well as what they see.

Have the students close their eyes as you read pages 11–15 of the story aloud. Use “Turn to Your Partner” to have the students discuss what they visualized. Facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow, and be ready to read from the text to help the students recall details from the excerpt.

- Q What did you picture in your mind as you listened to this passage? What sounds did you hear? What else did you imagine?
- Q What words helped you visualize?

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Wonder and ask questions about the story
- Discuss the lesson in the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Review and Get Ready to Wonder About Another Story

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that in the previous lessons, they wondered and asked questions about The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses, and they used their questions to help them think and talk about the story.

Tell the students that today they will practice asking questions about another story you read aloud. Explain that you will stop during the reading for partners to discuss what they are wondering.

2 Introduce The Emperor and the Kite

Show the cover of The Emperor and the Kite and read aloud the title and the names of the author and the illustrator. Explain that the main character in the story is a girl named Djeow Seow, who is the youngest daughter of a Chinese emperor. (You might explain that an emperor is like a king.) Ask:

Q What do you wonder about this story?

Display the “What We Wonder About The Emperor and the Kite” chart (WA2). Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class, and record their questions or statements verbatim on the chart.

What We Wonder About The Emperor and the Kite

Is that the emperor's kite on the cover?

Will Djeow Seow be like the princesses in other stories?

I wonder if the kite is alive.

WA2

Materials

- The Emperor and the Kite
- “What We Wonder About The Emperor and the Kite” chart (WA2)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Explain that as you read the story aloud today, you will stop three times. At each stop, the students will share in pairs what they are wondering about the story, and you will record some of their questions on the chart.

3 Read Aloud and Stop to Wonder

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

insignificant: small and not important (p. 7)

monk: man who lives in a religious community (p. 9)

plotting: secretly planning something bad (p. 10)

plain: large, empty field (p. 10)

twined: twisted together (p. 16)

steely: strong like metal (p. 19)

billowed: filled with air and floated out (p. 20)

unyielding: strong (p. 29)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

fled: ran away (p. 11)

cruel: mean (p. 13)

neglected: ignored (p. 29)

Stop after:

p. 9 “Then she went back to flying her toy.”

Ask:

Q What questions do you have, or what do you wonder, at this point in the story? Turn to your partner.

Students might say:

“What does the monk’s poem mean?”

“I wonder if Djeow Seow made her kite herself.”

Have two or three volunteers share the questions they discussed with the class. Record the questions they share on the chart exactly as stated. Without discussing the students’ questions, reread the last sentence and continue reading to the next stopping point. Repeat this process at each of the following stops:

p. 15 “And she understood.”

p. 20 “His robes billowed out around him like the wings of a bright kite.”

Continue reading to the end of the book.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to generate questions about the story?
- Are their questions relevant to the characters or the plot of the story?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 46 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to generate questions that are relevant to the story, proceed with the lesson and then continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to generate questions that are relevant to the story, reread parts of the story and ask questions such as:

Q What are you wondering about Djeow Seow?

Q What questions do you have about the part you just heard?

Q What questions do you have about what is going to happen next?

- If only a few students are able to generate questions that are relevant to the story, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

4 Discuss the Story as a Class

Facilitate a class discussion about the book using the questions below. Be ready to reread passages and show illustrations again to help the students recall what they heard. Ask:

Q Why do you think Djeow Seow decides to help her father after he ignored her for so long? What would you have done in her place?

Remind the students that characters in stories often change because of lessons they learn or things they come to realize. Ask:

Q How does the emperor change in this story? What lesson does he learn?

Tell the students that they will revisit their questions about the story tomorrow.

Teacher Note

Save the “What We Wonder About The Emperor and the Kite” chart (WA2) to use in the lesson on Day 4. Prior to that lesson, review the questions on the chart and identify three or four questions for the students to focus on when they hear the story again. If possible, select questions from the beginning, middle, and end of the story. Also try to select questions that are answered directly, indirectly, and not at all. Put stars next to the questions you select.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Wonder

Encourage the students to notice what they are wondering about their stories as they read independently today. Tell them that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of them to share what they wondered with the class. Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share their books and the things they wondered as they were reading with the class. Remind each volunteer to begin by telling the class the title of his book, the author’s name, and what the book is about so far. Encourage the class to ask volunteers questions about what they share.

Have the students put away their books and return to their seats.

Day 4

Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- The Emperor and the Kite
- “What We Wonder About The Emperor and the Kite” chart (WA2) from Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear a story read aloud again
- Use their questions to discuss the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking

1 Review Selected Questions

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the “What We Wonder About The Emperor and the Kite” chart (WA2) and explain that you have selected a few questions from the previous lesson for the students to think more about today. Read the questions you selected aloud and ask the students to keep these questions in mind as you reread the story. Explain that at the end of the reading, they will discuss the questions with their partners and with the class.

What We Wonder About The Emperor and the Kite

Is that the emperor's kite on the cover?

Will Djeow Seow be like the princesses in other stories?

I wonder if the kite is alive.

- * What does the monk's poem mean?
- * Why is Djeow Seow the only one who helps her father?
- * Will the emperor be nicer to Djeow Seow now that she rescued him?
- * What will the emperor do to the evil men?

2 Reread the Story

Read The Emperor and the Kite aloud without stopping.

3 Use Questions to Discuss the Story

Have partners discuss the story using the questions you selected. Circulate as partners talk. Notice whether the students are discussing the questions and whether they are referring to the story to support their thinking.

After a few minutes, signal for the students' attention and facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts they have learned to connect their ideas to the ideas of others. Ask:

- Q What question got you and your partner talking about the story? What did you say about that question?
- Q Do others agree with what [Abbie and Trevor] said about that question? What did you hear in the story that makes you agree or disagree?
- Q Which of the questions are answered in the story? How are they answered?
- Q Which questions are not answered?

Students might say:

"We talked about what the monk's poem means. We think when the monk says 'my emperor goes on wings,' he is telling Djeow Seow to use a kite to rescue her father."

"We found out that the emperor is nicer to Djeow Seow after she rescues him. We also found out that he throws the evil men in prison."

"I don't think we find out why Djeow Seow is the only one to help her father."

"I disagree with [Micah]. In the story it says that Djeow Seow's brothers and sisters think the emperor is dead. That's why they didn't try to help him."

Teacher Note

You may wish to write the prompts where everyone can see them. The discussion prompts are:

- "I agree with _____ because . . ."
- "I disagree with _____ because . . ."
- "In addition to what _____ said, I think . . ."

ELL Note

If students struggle with these questions, rephrase them to be more specific.

Remind the students that sometimes the questions they ask about a story are answered in the story and sometimes they are not. Explain that they may also have different opinions about whether questions are answered and that this is fine as long as they explain their thinking. Tell the students that they will have more opportunities to use the strategy of wondering and questioning to think and talk about stories in the coming days.

4 Reflect on Working Together

Briefly discuss how the students talked and listened to each other during the partner discussions. Ask:

Q How could you tell that your partner was listening carefully to you? What did your partner do that you would like him or her to do again in the next lesson? Why was that helpful?

Without mentioning names, share some of your observations about pairs who were talking and listening attentively as well as pairs who were having difficulty. Ask:

Q If you had difficulty talking and listening to each other today, what is one thing you could try to help it go more smoothly next time? How might that help?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Wonder

Encourage the students to notice what they are wondering about their stories as they read independently today. Tell the students that at the end of IDR, they will have a chance to share what they wondered with partners. Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have each student share with a partner the title of the book she is reading, the author’s name, and one thing she wondered as she was reading. Encourage partners to ask each other questions about what they share.

Have the students put away their books and return to their seats.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Make Text-to-text Connections to The Emperor and the Kite

Show the cover of The Emperor and the Kite and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Slowly page through the book and show the illustrations. Ask:

Q Who is the main character in this story? What problem does she have?

Students might say:

"The main character is a princess named Djeow Seow. Her problem is that her father is locked in a tower by evil men and she has to save him."

"Another problem Djeow Seow has is that her father ignores her because she's so small."

"Her brothers and sisters ignore her, too."

"I think Djeow Seow's biggest problem is that she thinks her father doesn't love her."

If necessary, review that the main character in the story is a princess named Djeow Seow who is ignored by her family until her father gets captured and locked in a tower. Djeow Seow uses a kite to give her father food and water and eventually to rescue him. Ask:

Q What are some words that might describe Djeow Seow?

As the students share, record their ideas where everyone can see them.

Students might say:

"princess"

"small"

"ignored"

"lonely"

"sad"

"clever"

"brave"

"loyal"

"loving"

Explain that one way to understand characters is to think about other characters they are like. Ask:

Q What other character does Djeow Seow remind you of? How is she like that character?

Materials

- The Emperor and the Kite

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering this question, offer some examples like those listed in the "Students might say" note on the next page.

Students might say:

"She reminds me of Elizabeth from The Paper Bag Princess. They're both princesses, and they both rescue someone."

"She reminds me of Grace in Boundless Grace because she probably thinks that her father doesn't love her, and that's what Grace thinks at the beginning of that story."

"That's like Lilly, too. She feels ignored by her parents when Julius comes."

Explain that when readers think about how characters in stories are alike, they are making connections between the stories. Explain that making connections helps readers enjoy and understand what they read. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about how Djeow Seow is like a character in another story.

You might say:

"I think Djeow Seow is like Princess Elizabeth in the story The Paper Bag Princess. I'll start by writing this: *The character Djeow Seow in The Emperor and the Kite is like the character Princess Elizabeth in The Paper Bag Princess. Now I need to explain why I think these characters are alike. I'll write: Djeow Seow and Elizabeth are alike because they are both princesses and they both rescue a person they love. In addition, they are both loyal, clever, and brave."*

Have each student write about another character Djeow Seow reminds him of. Remind each student to include the title of his book, the author's name, and the name of the character he is writing about. If time permits, invite a few volunteers to share what they wrote with the class.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses to teach the Week 11 vocabulary lessons.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 11 lessons this week.

Materials

- A Day's Work (pages 5–28)
- Student Response Book page 10

TEKS 6.B.i

Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 1 (all)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn the procedure for “Stop and Ask Questions”
- Hear and discuss part of a story
- Make inferences about a character in the story
- Make predictions about how the story will end
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Introduce “Stop and Ask Questions”

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind them that in previous lessons they wondered and asked questions about The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses and The Emperor and the Kite. Review that wondering and questioning helps readers think about what they are reading and read for answers to their questions.

Explain that today you will read a story called A Day's Work aloud. The students will wonder and ask questions about the story using a thinking tool called “Stop and Ask Questions.” They will stop several times during the reading to write questions that come to mind. Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 10, “Stop and Ask Questions About A Day's Work.” Explain that as you read aloud today, you will stop four times to have them think about questions they have about the story.

Tell the students that you will model writing questions with them at the first stop, and then they will write questions on their own at the next three stops. Explain that the purpose of writing the questions is to help them listen to the story and to help them discuss the story later.

2 Introduce A Day's Work

Show the cover of A Day's Work and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that this is a story about a boy named Francisco and his grandfather, whom he calls Abuelo (Spanish for “grandfather”). Abuelo has come to the United States from Mexico to live with Francisco and his mother.

Tell the students that you will read part of the story today and that you will finish the story later in the week.

3 Read Aloud with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Read pages 5–28 of A Day’s Work aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

bricklaying: placing bricks together to make a path or a wall (p. 5)

Hace frío: (Spanish) It is cold (p. 6)

omen: sign that something will happen (p. 8)

chorizos: Mexican sausages (p. 10)

señora: (Spanish) polite word for a married woman (p. 12)

gracias: (Spanish) thank you (p. 14)

bueno: (Spanish) good (p. 16)

muy bonito: (Spanish) very pretty or beautiful (p. 20)

chickweed: weed (unwanted plant) with small white flowers (p. 22)

ice plants: low-growing plants with unusual spiky leaves (p. 22)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

tar: thick, black, sticky liquid used to seal roofs to keep the rain out (p. 12)

bank: land along the side of a hill or a river (p. 12)

weed: take out the weeds (unwanted plants) (p. 14)

Stop after:

p. 8 “I don’t charge for my work.”

Ask:

Q What question can you ask right now?

Have a few students share their questions with the class. Write their questions exactly as stated where everyone can see them. If the students have difficulty generating questions, model asking a few yourself (for example, “Why is Francisco going to work with his grandfather?” “Why doesn’t Francisco charge for his work?” and “Will they get all the work done?”).

Without stopping to discuss the students’ questions, reread the last sentence on page 8 and continue reading to the next stop:

p. 14 “See you guys then. Work hard. Have a nice day.”

Have the students individually write questions that come to mind in the Stop 2 box on Student Response Book page 10.

ELL Note

If necessary, ask Spanish-speaking students to help you pronounce the Spanish words in the story. You might also want to take some time to have Spanish-speaking students help non-Spanish-speaking students learn how to pronounce the Spanish words in the story. You may wish to record the Spanish words on a chart and have the students review them periodically.

TEKS 6.B.i

Student/Teacher Activity

Step 3 (all, beginning on page 207 and continuing on to page 208)

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble writing their own questions at the second or subsequent stops, continue to model asking questions. Remind the students to write any questions they can think of at this point in the reading. This helps the students avoid getting bogged down by the need to think of only “good” questions. The purpose is to help the students get in the habit of generating questions about their reading.

Teacher Note

If you notice partners having difficulty using their questions to discuss the reading, either because they did not write questions or because they cannot get started talking, you might stimulate their conversation by asking them the questions that follow.

Q (If the students did not write questions) Look at the questions we wrote together at the first stop. What did you find out during the reading that might help answer some of the questions? Talk to each other and explain your thinking.

Q (If the students wrote questions but are not discussing them) How are your questions similar to or different from your partner's? Which of the questions you or your partner wrote are answered in the story, and how are they answered? Which are not answered?

Facilitation Tip

Continue to practice asking questions once without repeating or rewording them and then using wait-time. Notice the effect this has on the students' attentiveness during class discussions.

TEKS 6.C.v

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 7 (all, beginning on page 208 and continuing on to page 209)

When most students have finished writing, reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the next stopping point. Follow this procedure at the next two stopping points:

p. 22 "He yanked off his Lakers cap and slammed it against the van."

p. 26 "The three of them got in the van."

Read to the end of page 28. You will finish reading the story on Day 3 of this week.

4 Use Questions to Discuss the Story in Pairs

Give the students a few moments to review the questions they wrote individually, and then have partners use their questions to discuss the story.

As partners talk, circulate among them and notice whether the students have generated questions independently and whether their questions are relevant to the story.

TEKS 6.C.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5 (all)

5 Discuss the Story as a Class

After a few minutes, facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages and show illustrations again to help the students recall what they heard.

Q What is this story about?

Q How do you think Francisco feels at the point in the story where we left off? What makes you think so?

Q How do you think the story will end? Explain your thinking.

Explain that in the next lesson, the students will revisit their questions about A Day's Work and listen to part of the story again.

6 Reflect on Taking Responsibility

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students took responsibility for their participation in the lesson. Ask:

Q How did hearing your partner's questions help you think about the story today? Why is it important that you share your questions with your partner?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Wonder

Ask the students to notice what questions come to mind as they are reading and to think about whether those questions are answered in their stories. Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share the books they are reading with the class. Remind each volunteer to tell the title of his book and the author’s name. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is the story about?
- Q What is a question you had as you were reading?
- Q What did you find out about that question?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Guided Strategy Practice

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear part of a story read aloud again
- Use their questions to discuss the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking
- Agree and disagree respectfully

1 Review the Questions About A Day’s Work

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that in the previous lesson, the students used “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about A Day’s Work. Remind them that the purpose of asking questions is to help them pay close attention to the story and read for answers to their questions.

Materials

- A Day’s Work (pages 5–28)
- Student Response Book page 10

Teacher Note

Continue to remind the students to turn and look at the person who is speaking during class discussions. Also encourage speakers to wait until they have the class's attention before they speak. To see an example, view "Turning and Looking at the Speaker" (AV16).

Teacher Note

Remind the students that disagreements about whether or how a question is addressed in a story are opportunities for them to think about the story more deeply and to use evidence from the text to support their opinions.

Ask the students to turn to Student Response Book page 10, "Stop and Ask Questions About A Day's Work," and review the questions they wrote yesterday.

Explain that today you will reread the part of A Day's Work that you read yesterday and the students will listen for answers to their questions. Ask:

Q What is a question you wrote yesterday that you want to listen for the answer to today?

Have a few volunteers share their questions with the class.

2 Reread Part of A Day's Work Aloud

Read pages 5–28 of A Day's Work aloud slowly and clearly.

3 Use Questions to Discuss the Story

Have partners spend a few minutes talking about the story using their questions. Encourage them to talk about which of their questions are answered in the story and which are not. Circulate as partners talk, and notice whether the students are discussing the questions and whether they are referring to the story to support their thinking.

After a few minutes, signal for the students' attention and facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts they have learned to help them listen to one another and build on one another's thinking.

Q What question got you and your partner talking about the story? Do you think that question is answered in the story? Explain your thinking.

Q Do others agree that the question [is/is not] answered in that way? What in the story makes you agree or disagree?

Students might say:

"My partner [Brad] asked, 'Will Ben pay the boy and the grandfather even though they messed up the job?' We don't think that he will because in the story it says Ben is really angry at them for pulling up all the ice plants."

"I agree with [Kanisha and Brad]. The boy lied about the grandfather being a gardener. I don't think Ben will give them any money because the boy was dishonest."

"I disagree with [Eileen]. The boy did lie, but the grandfather said they would come back the next day and do the work again. I think Ben will like that and give them the money."

Tell the students that they will hear the rest of the story in the next lesson.

4 Reflect on Using Discussion Prompts

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students did using the discussion prompts during the class discussion. Ask:

Q How did using the discussion prompts help you listen to one another?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Wonder

Ask the students to notice what questions come to mind as they are reading and to think about whether those questions are answered in their stories. Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have each student share with a partner the title of the book he is reading and the author’s name, a question he had as he was reading, and what he found out about that question.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

ELL Note

To support your students with limited English proficiency, you might provide them with a prompt for their response, such as “The prompts help . . .”

Day 3

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- A Day's Work (pages 28–32)
- Student Response Book pages 10–11

TEKS 6.C.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 1 (all)

TEKS 6.C.v
TEKS 6.C.vi
TEKS 8.C.ii
TEKS 8.C.iii
Student/Teacher
Activity
Step 1 (all) and Step 3
(all, on page 213)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss the end of a story
- Discuss the problem in the story
- Make predictions about the story
- Discuss the lesson in the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking and agree and disagree respectfully

1 Review and Discuss the Problem in A Day's Work

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Ask the students to turn to Student Response Book page 10, "Stop and Ask Questions About A Day's Work." Remind them that they heard part of A Day's Work and they used questions to help them think and talk about the story.

Review that in the story Abuelo tells Ben that he and Francisco will come back the next day to take out the weeds and replant the ice plants. Ben then drives them back to where he picked them up. Read page 28 of the story aloud and ask:

Q What is the problem in this story?

Students might say:

"Francisco and his grandfather pulled up the good plants instead of the weeds."

"In addition to what [Helena] said, I think that Francisco's lie is a problem. He told Ben that his grandfather knew about gardening."

"I agree with [Chen]. Francisco should have been honest. If he had been honest, they wouldn't be in a big mess now."

Q How do you think the problem will be solved? What do you think will happen?

2 Read the Ending of A Day's Work

Read pages 30–32 aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations. Then have the students turn to Student Response Book page 11. Explain that this excerpt is the part of the story you just read. Have the students follow along as you read the ending aloud again.

3 Discuss the Ending

Facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the prompts as they share. Ask:

- Q What happens at the end of the story? How is the problem solved?
- Q Look at the questions you wrote earlier in the week on page 10 of your Student Response Book. What questions are answered at the end of the story? How are they answered?

4 Discuss the Lesson in the Story

Remind the students that some stories contain important lessons about life that can help readers in their own lives. Ask:

- Q Ben says, “The important things your grandfather knows already. And I can teach him gardening.” What do you think are the important things the grandfather already knows?
- Q What lesson do you think Francisco has learned from his experience? Explain your thinking.

Students might say:

- “Grandfather knows that it’s important to be honest.”
- “In addition to what [Maggie] said, he knows that when you make a mistake you should try to fix it.”
- “I think Francisco learns that lying can get you into trouble.”
- “He also learns that honesty and hard work pay off.”

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Wonder

Ask the students to notice what questions come to mind as they are reading and to think about whether those questions are answered in their stories. Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have each student share with a partner the title of the book he is reading, the author's name, a question he had as he was reading, and what he found out about that question.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Materials

- A Day's Work

WRITING ABOUT READING

Make Inferences About the Character of Abuelo in A Day's Work

Show the cover of A Day's Work and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Ask:

Q What happens in this story?

Explain that today you will reread the story and ask the students to think about what kind of person Abuelo is. Remind the students that they can figure out a lot about a character like Abuelo by paying attention to clues such as what the character says and does. Review that this is called making inferences about the character.

Ask the students to listen carefully as you read for clues they can use to make inferences about Abuelo. Then read the story aloud without stopping.

After reading, ask:

Q What kind of a person is Abuelo? What in the story makes you think so?

Students might say:

"Abuelo is a hard worker. He's still working even though he's old, and his hands are rough, which means he's worked for a long time."

"He's polite. He says 'gracias' when Ben hires him and Francisco."

"In addition to what [Noriko and Junio] said, he's honest. He tells Francisco, 'We do not lie for work.'"

"I agree with [Sasha]. He's angry and sad when he finds out about Francisco's lie."

"He's responsible. He takes responsibility for fixing their mistake with the plants."

Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing a paragraph about Abuelo's personality.

You might say:

"I think that the things Abuelo says and does show that he is an honest and wise person. I'll start by writing: I think that the character of Abuelo in A Day's Work by Eve Bunting is very honest and also very wise. Now I need to explain the clues in the story that made me think that. I'll write: I know Abuelo is honest because he gets very upset when he finds out Francisco lied. He tells Ben that they will not accept any money until they have fixed their mistake. Now I'll write about how I know Abuelo is wise: I know Abuelo is wise because he knows that it is wrong to lie. He also knows that it is important to take responsibility for fixing your mistakes."

Explain that the students will now write their own paragraphs about the kind of person Abuelo is, using the inferences they made from clues in the story. Remind each student to include the title of her book and the author's name in her paragraph as well as the clues in the story that helped her make her inferences. If time permits, invite volunteers to share what they wrote with the class.

Independent Strategy Practice

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Wonder about books prior to reading
- Use "Stop and Ask Questions" as they read independently
- Use their questions to discuss what they have read
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Show respect for one another

1 Review "Stop and Ask Questions"

Have the students get their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together. Review that this week the students heard the story A Day's Work and used "Stop and Ask Questions" to help them think about and discuss the story. Explain that they can also use this thinking tool to help them better understand what they read on their own.

2 Model Using "Stop and Ask Questions" with Independent Reading

Explain that today the students will use "Stop and Ask Questions" to think about the books they are reading independently. Ask them to

Materials

- Student Response Book page 12
- "Stop and Ask Questions About _____" chart (WA3)
- Narrative text for teacher modeling, selected ahead
- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA2)

open to Student Response Book page 12, “Stop and Ask Questions About _____.” Explain that they will use this page to write questions that come to mind during their independent reading. Then they will use their questions to discuss their reading with their partners. Ask each student to write the title of her book on the blank line.

Display the “Stop and Ask Questions About _____” chart (WA3) and model the procedure for the students. Examine the book cover and look at several pages. Then wonder aloud about a question you have and record the question in the box labeled “Before reading.”

You might say:

“I’m going to read the book Brave Harriet by Marissa Moss.” (Show the book cover.) “One thing I wonder is whether Harriet is a real person or a made-up character. I’ll write: Is Harriet a real person, or is she made-up?”

Stop and Ask Questions
About Brave Harriet Name: Ms. MacLennan

At each stop, write your questions in the box.

Before Reading

STOP 1 Is Harriet a real person, or is she made-up?

WA3

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step and the next for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

3 Write Questions Prior to Reading

Have any student who is starting a new book look at his book in the same way you looked at your book: examining the cover, paging through the book, and asking a question about the story based on the book’s title and the illustrations. Have any student who is in the middle of her book reread the last few sentences she read and think about what questions she has about the story. Have the students write their questions in the “Before reading” box on the Student Response Book page.

Explain that during independent reading today, you will stop the students three times to have them write questions in their Student Response Books. Explain that they can write a question any time one occurs to them as they are reading but that you will stop them three times so that students who have not yet written a question can do so. Later they will share their questions with their partners and with the class.

4 Read Independently with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Have the students read independently for 15 minutes. Stop them at 5-minute intervals to write questions in the boxes on the Student

Response Book page. Remind the student that they should write any questions that come to mind, not just questions they think are good. Circulate among the students as they read and write, and provide assistance as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to generate questions about their reading?
- Are their questions relevant to the characters or the plots of their stories?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2); see page 47 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to generate questions about their reading, proceed with the lesson and then continue on to Week 3.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to generate questions about their reading, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Week 3. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

5 Discuss the Students’ Questions

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students talk with their partners about the questions they wrote and what they found out about those questions. Remind them to refer to the text to explain their thinking.

After partners have had time to talk, have a few volunteers share their questions with the class. Probe the students’ thinking by asking questions such as:

- Q What was happening in the book when you thought of that question?
- Q What did you find out about that question in your reading?

6 Reflect on Showing Respect During Independent Reading

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students were respectful as they read independently. Ask:

- Q What did you do to show respect for one another during independent reading today?
- Q What can you do better the next time you read independently?

ELL Note

The following questions may be helpful for your English Language Learners:

- Q What question did you write about your book today?
- Q Where is the question answered in the story?
- Q How did writing the question help you understand the story?

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit A Day’s Work to teach the Week 12 vocabulary lessons.

---

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 12 lessons this week.

Day 1

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Mailing May
- Student Response Book page 13
- Small self-stick notes for each student

Teacher Note

Because there are several characters in Mailing May, you may want to write the characters' names, along with a brief description of each character, where everyone can see them. For example:

- May, Ma, and Pa (John)
- Mr. Alexander: the department store owner
- Leonard: Ma's cousin who takes care of the mail on the train
- Mr. Perkins: the postman
- Grandma Mary: May's grandmother
- Mr. Harry Morris: the train conductor

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Use "Stop and Ask Questions" to think about the story
- Use their questions to discuss the story
- Discuss a problem in the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

1 Review "Stop and Ask Questions"

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that in previous lessons they used "Stop and Ask Questions" to think about stories they heard and read independently. Review that asking questions helps them think about what they are reading and read for answers to their questions. Explain that again today they will use "Stop and Ask Questions" as they listen to a story.

2 Introduce Mailing May

Show the cover of Mailing May and read aloud the title and the names of the author and the illustrator. Tell the students that Mailing May is based on the true story of a girl named Charlotte May Pierstorff. Explain that the story takes place in 1914 when railroads were an important means of transportation.

Show the back cover of the book and explain that back covers often provide information that readers can use to wonder about books before reading. Read the description on the back cover of Mailing May, starting with "Nowadays . . ." Ask:

Q What questions do you have?

Have a few students share their ideas with the class.

Ask the students to turn to Student Response Book page 13, "Stop and Ask Questions About Mailing May." Explain that as you read the story aloud, you will stop four times. At each stop, the students will write their questions in the appropriate box of the Student Response Book page. Tell them that they will use their questions later to discuss the story with their partners and with the class.

3 Read Aloud with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Explain that you will read the story without showing the illustrations so the students can visualize what is happening.

Read aloud slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary as you read and stopping as described below.

Suggested Vocabulary

a spell: a while (p. 5)

made a beeline: walked very quickly in a straight line (p. 6)

slogged: walked very slowly and heavily (p. 6)

commenced to: started (p. 9)

mans: is in charge of (p. 15)

flabbergasted: surprised (p. 15)

postal code: post office rules for shipping (p. 16)

permissible: allowed (p. 16)

valise: suitcase (p. 16)

poultry: farm birds, such as chickens and turkeys, raised for their meat and eggs (p. 18)

Daniel Boone: early explorer of the old West (p. 22)

spidery trestles: supports for a train bridge that resemble a spider’s legs (p. 25; refer to the illustration on the title page)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

carted me: used a cart to carry me (p. 21; refer to the illustration)

cranky: grouchy (p. 26)

end of the line: last station on a railroad line or route (p. 29)

Stop after:

p. 9 “Then they made me go to bed awful early, which I did not like at all.”

Ask:

Q What question can you ask right now?

Have the students record their questions in the Stop 1 box of Student Response Book page 13.

Without stopping to discuss the students’ questions, reread the sentence on page 9 and continue reading to the next stopping point. Follow the same procedure at each of the following stops and have the students

Teacher Note

You might point out the route May traveled (from Grangeville to Lewiston, Idaho) on a map of the United States.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty generating questions, model asking a few yourself. (For example, you might ask, “Where does May’s grandmother live?” and “What might Ma and Pa be whispering about?”)

Teacher Note

If you notice partners having difficulty using their questions to discuss the reading, you might stimulate their conversation by asking them the following questions:

- Q How are your questions similar to or different from your partner's?
- Q Which of the questions you or your partner wrote are answered in the story, and how are they answered? Which are not answered?

Facilitation Tip

Continue to practice asking questions once without repeating or rewording them and then using wait-time. Notice the effect this has on the students' attentiveness during class discussions.

ELL Note

Encourage your English Language Learners to write down all the questions they have about their reading, not only about characters but also about vocabulary and figures of speech.

TEKS 5.A.ii
Student/Teacher
Activity Step 6
(all) record their questions in the appropriate box of the Student Response Book page.

- p. 13 "Mr. Perkins looked at Pa real strange-like as he asked, 'What you got in mind, John?'"
- p. 21 "The sight made me go all tingly, seeing as I'd never ever ridden on a train before."
- p. 25 "'Leonard,' yelled a man in a uniform, 'that girl better have a ticket or money to buy one.'"

Continue reading to the end of the story on page 30.

4 Use Questions to Discuss the Story in Pairs

Give the students a few moments to review their questions individually, and then have partners discuss the story using their questions.

As partners talk, circulate among them and notice whether the students have generated questions independently and whether the questions are relevant to the reading.

5 Discuss the Story as a Class

After a few minutes, have the students turn their attention back to the whole class. Facilitate a discussion of the story using the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts as they share.

- Q What happens in this story?
- Q What is the problem in the story? How is the problem solved?

Tell the students that they will revisit the story and their questions in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Ask Questions

Have the students get their books for independent reading. Remind them that they have been using wondering and questioning to think about stories, and explain that today each student will each use self-stick notes to mark two or three places in her story where questions come to mind. She will write each of her questions on a self-stick note and then place that note on the page that brought that question to mind. If necessary, model the procedure using a book that is familiar to the students.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have one or two volunteers share one of the questions they wrote with the class. Probe their thinking by asking questions such as:

- Q What is a question you had as you were reading?
- Q What was happening in the book when you thought of that question?
- Q What did you find out about that question in your reading?
- Q How would you answer that question right now?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Teacher Note

Have the students keep their self-stick notes in place in their books. They will revisit the notes during IDR tomorrow.

Guided Strategy Practice

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear a story read aloud again
- Use their questions to discuss the story
- Make inferences to understand the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Write in their reading journals
- Agree and disagree respectfully

1 Review Questions About Mailing May

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Mailing May and remind the students that in the previous lesson they used “Stop and Ask Questions” to help them think and talk about the story. Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 13, “Stop and Ask Questions About Mailing May,” and review the questions they wrote yesterday. Point out that some questions may be answered directly

Materials

- Mailing May
- Student Response Book page 13
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA4)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section

Teacher Note

Refrain from showing the illustrations to help the students visualize parts of the story using the words, which is the focus of Day 3.

Teacher Note

Circulate as partners share. Notice the types of questions the students ask and whether they are using evidence from the story to support their thinking.

Teacher Note

Disagreements are opportunities for the students to deepen their thinking about the story and to use evidence from the text to support their thinking.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

in the story, while others may be answered indirectly, meaning that the students can figure out the answers from clues in the story. Remind the students that when a reader figures something out using the clues in the story, he is making an inference.

Tell the students that today they will hear Mailing May read aloud again. Explain that as they listen, you want them to think about whether their questions are answered in the story and, if so, whether they are answered directly or whether they are answered indirectly through clues.

2 Reread the Story

Read Mailing May aloud slowly and clearly, without stopping or showing the illustrations.

3 Discuss the Students' Questions

Have partners use their questions to talk about the story. Encourage them to talk about whether their questions are answered in the story and, if so, how they are answered.

After a few minutes, signal for the students' attention and facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages from the story again to help the students recall details.

- Q What question got you and your partner talking about the story? Do you think that question is answered in the story? If so, how is it answered?
- Q Do others agree that the question [is/is not] answered in that way? What in the story makes you agree or disagree?

Students might say:

"My partner [Tanushri] and I talked a lot about the question 'Why don't Ma and Pa tell May where she is going?' We don't think the question is answered in the story, but we think maybe they are worried that May will be scared to hear she is going alone on the train."

"I disagree with [Tanushri and Brent]. I think the question is answered indirectly. In the story, it says that Pa winks at May and says 'No questions.' I think that the wink means that Ma and Pa want to surprise May. That's why they don't tell her."

"I agree with [Katie]. In the story, May is excited about riding on the train. She doesn't seem scared at all."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Write in Reading Journals

Have the students get their pencils and books for independent reading and review the questions they wrote during IDR yesterday. Ask them to keep these questions in mind today as they read independently and to write down any new questions that come to mind. Explain that later each student will choose one question to write about in his reading journal.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read independently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Display the “Journal Entry” chart (WA4) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading.
Please include:

- The title and the author’s name
- What the story is about
- One question you wrote on a self-stick note
- What you found out about that question
- If you did not find out anything about the question, how you would answer the question right now and why

WA4

Ask each student to quietly review his questions and choose one to write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write. Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty writing about their questions, you might use a text they are familiar with to model writing a journal entry. For example, you might write: I am reading Mailing May by Ted Rand. This book is about a girl named May whose parents mail her to visit her grandmother. One question I had as I was reading was how May would get home. I didn’t find out the answer to that question, but I think that her grandmother will mail her back to her parents because that worked the first time.

Materials

- Mailing May
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- Student Response Book pages 14–15

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear parts of a story read aloud again
- Visualize parts of the story
- Draw and write about what they visualize
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Act in a respectful way

1 Review the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” Chart

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and review the strategies the students have learned so far this year. Remind them that in the previous lessons they used wondering and questioning to think and talk about the story Mailing May. Explain that today they will use visualizing to help them enjoy and understand the story.

2 Review Mailing May

Help the students remember the story Mailing May by reading aloud each of the lines below and asking the students to explain what is happening in that part. For each line, have one or two volunteers share their thinking.

- p. 10 “Ma hugged and kissed me before Pa took my hand and led me out into the dark winter air.”
- p. 22 “At exactly seven o’clock, the train chugged away from my home and headed down the mountain.”
- p. 30 “The second I laid eyes on Grandma Mary, I felt downright warm inside.”

3 Visualize the Scene at the Train Station

Explain that you will read a passage from Mailing May aloud. As you read, you would like the students to close their eyes and visualize the scene, or picture it in their minds. Remind them that they can include what they hear, smell, and feel as well as what they see.

Ask the students to close their eyes. Read the following excerpt aloud twice, pausing between the readings.

- p. 21 “The big black steam engine was already waiting, hissing and snorting like a boar hog. The sight made me go all tingly, seeing as I’d never ever ridden on a train before.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How did you visualize the scene at the train station? What words helped you to visualize? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share what they visualized with the class.

Students might say:

“I pictured a big, black train engine with a lot of steam coming out.”

“The word ‘tingly’ helped me feel how excited May must have felt. She probably felt all jittery and jumpy.”

“‘Snorting’ helped me hear the loud noise of the train.”

4 Visualize What May Saw from the Mail Car

Explain that you will read another passage from the story aloud and that you would like the students to visualize the scene. Explain that in this passage May describes what she sees when she looks out from the mail car of the train.

Have the students close their eyes; then read the first two paragraphs on page 25 aloud.

Have the students open their eyes and turn to Student Response Book page 14, where the passage is reproduced. Ask partners to read the passage together and talk about what they visualized as they heard and read the scene.

5 Draw and Write About Visualizations

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 15, “How I Visualized Mailing May.”

Explain that each student will now draw how she visualized the scene and write a sentence or two below her drawing explaining what it shows. Give the students ample time to draw and write.

6 Share Drawings

When most students have finished, signal for their attention and explain that the students will now share their drawings with their partners. Briefly discuss:

Q How would you like your partner to act while you’re sharing your drawing with him or her? Tell your partner now.

Have partners share and discuss their drawings. After several minutes, signal for the students’ attention and facilitate a class discussion using questions such as:

Q How did you visualize what May saw from the train? What words in the passage helped you?

Q How is your drawing like your partner’s drawing? How is it different?

ELL Note

Support your English Language Learners by asking more specific questions, such as:

Q What did you see, hear, smell, and feel?

Q What words helped you picture the train?

ELL Note

You may need to read the excerpt twice for your students with limited English proficiency.

Teacher Note

If the lesson runs long, you may want to teach Steps 5–7 at another time during the day.

7 Reflect on Sharing Drawings

Briefly discuss how partners did sharing their drawings in a respectful way. Ask:

Q How did you show your partner respect when you shared your drawings with each other?

Students might say:

"I let my partner share first."

"I let him tell me about his drawing. Then I asked him questions about it."

"I told [Farida] what I liked about her drawing."

Q Why is it important to be respectful when sharing work we've done?

Students might say:

"It's important because we want people to be comfortable sharing."

"I agree with [Peter]. If we aren't respectful, people won't want to share."

"If you show your partner respect, then she'll show you respect when it's your turn to share."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

8 Read Independently and Visualize

Encourage the students to practice visualizing as they read independently today. Explain that later you will ask some of them to share what they visualized with the class.

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share with the class things they visualized as they were reading. Have each volunteer begin by showing the cover of his book, telling the title and the author's name, and briefly saying what it is about. Then ask him to read aloud the part of the story he visualized and to describe his mental image.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Learn More About Charlotte May Pierstorff

Show the cover of Mailing May and remind the students that the book is based on the true story of Charlotte May Pierstorff, who was mailed to her grandmother in 1914. Show the author's note on page 32 of the book and explain that the author included the note to give readers more information about the true story on which the book is based. Explain that you will read the note aloud and then the students will discuss what they learned from it. Read the note aloud slowly and clearly. Ask:

Q What is something interesting you learned from the author's note?

Tell the students that you will now share an online source that provides more information about Charlotte May Pierstorff. Display the online source you selected and read it aloud. Afterward, discuss:

Q What information in this source and the author's note is the same? What information is different?

Q What else did you learn about Charlotte May Pierstorff from this source?

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, locate an age-appropriate online source that provides more information about Charlotte May Pierstorff. Search for information online using the keywords "Charlotte May Pierstorff." For more information, view the "Finding, Organizing, and Presenting Online Information" tutorial (AV43).

Independent Strategy Practice

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Use "Stop and Ask Questions" as they read independently
- Use their questions to discuss what they read
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior
- Explain their thinking

1 Review the Week

Have the students get their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together. Review that this week the students practiced the strategy of wondering and questioning and used "Stop and Ask Questions" to think about the story Mailing May. Explain that today they will use this thinking tool as they read independently.

Materials

- Student Response Book page 16
- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA3)

2 Prepare to Read Independently with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 16, “Stop and Ask Questions About _____.” Have each student write the title of her book in the blank at the top of the page.

Explain that during independent reading today, you will stop the students three times to have them write questions about the stories they are reading. Explain that they can write questions at any point during their reading but that you will stop them three times so that students who have not written a question can do so. After reading they will use their questions to discuss their books with their partners and with the class.

3 Read Independently with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Have the students read independently for 15 minutes. Stop the class at 5-minute intervals to have the students who have not yet recorded questions do so. Remind the students that they should write any questions that come to mind, not just questions they think are good. Circulate among the students as they read and write, and provide assistance as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students generating questions as they read?
- Are their questions relevant to the books they are reading?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3); see page 48 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are generating questions as they read, proceed with the lesson and then continue on to Week 4.
- If about half of the students are generating questions as they read, support students who are struggling by asking them questions such as:

Q What is happening in your book right now?

Q What questions do you have about what is happening?

Q What questions do you have about what is going to happen next?

- If only a few students are generating questions as they read, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Week 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

4 Discuss the Students' Questions

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students talk with their partners about the questions they wrote and what they found out about those questions. Remind them to refer to the text to explain their thinking.

Invite a few students to each share one of their questions with the class. Probe their thinking by asking questions such as:

- Q What was happening in the story when this question came to mind?
- Q How would you answer this question right now? What evidence in the book makes you think that?

Explain that in coming lessons the students will continue to use “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about other stories.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Mailing May to teach the Week 13 vocabulary lessons.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 13 lessons this week.

Day 1

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Brave Irene
- Student Response Book page 17
- Small self-stick notes for each student

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear a story read aloud
- Use “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about the story
- Use their questions to discuss the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Introduce Brave Irene and Get Ready to Ask Questions

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Brave Irene and read the title and the author's name aloud. Tell the students that William Steig is also the illustrator. Explain that the story takes place a long time ago in a fairy-tale land where rich people live in beautiful palaces and have fancy balls (dances). Explain that the main character is a young girl named Irene. Then ask:

Q What do you wonder, or what questions do you have, about this story?

Have a few students share their questions with the class.

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 17, “Stop and Ask Questions About Brave Irene.” Explain that you will stop four times during the reading. At each stop, the students will write their questions in the appropriate boxes of the Student Response Book page.

2 Read Aloud with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Read Brave Irene aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

duchess: important woman in a kingdom (p. 3)

coaxed: gently urged (p. 4)

dummy: mannequin (p. 5; refer to the illustrations on p. 3 and on the page preceding the title page)

resented this: felt that it was unfair (p. 7)

go helter-skeltering: move in many directions (p. 8)

yodeled: sang by quickly changing from low to high sounds (p. 10)

heed: pay attention to (p. 10)

ill-tempered: angry or cross (p. 12)

meddling: causing problems (p. 23)

delirious: very excited and happy (p. 24)

fret: worry (p. 25)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

dumpling, cupcake, pudding: names of sweet foods used here as loving names for a family member (pp. 3, 4, 5)

ball: large, fancy party with dancing (p. 3)

errand: short trip to do something (p. 8)

squalled: made a loud, harsh sound (p. 10)

burrows: holes in the ground where animals live (p. 16)

Stop after:

p. 11 "Irene went after it."

Ask:

Q What question can you ask right now?

Have the students write their questions in the Stop 1 box of the Student Response Book page.

Without stopping to discuss the students' questions, reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the next stopping point. Follow the same procedure at each of the following stops and have the students record their questions in the appropriate boxes of the Student Response Book page.

p. 17 "Irene was lost."

p. 21 "With the empty box clasped to her chest, Irene strode nervously toward the palace."

p. 24 "But it was out of the question, they said; the road that ran around the mountain wouldn't be cleared till morning."

Reread the last sentence on page 24 and continue reading to the end of the story.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty generating questions, model asking a few yourself (for example, "Will Irene give up and go home?" and "What will happen to the big box?").

Teacher Note

Circulate and observe as the students write their questions. If you notice that their questions are very similar or focus primarily on predictions of what will happen next, signal for the students' attention and model other kinds of questions that might be asked (for example, "What might Irene's mother be thinking when Irene doesn't come home?").

3 Use Questions to Discuss the Story in Pairs

Ask the students to review their questions and think about what they heard in the story. Then have partners discuss the story using their questions. Have the students turn their attention back to the whole class. Ask pairs to report some of the questions they wrote and discussed. Explain that in the next lesson, the students will think more about their questions and the story.

4 Reflect on Working Together

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students worked together today. Ask:

Q How did you and your partner listen to and discuss each other's questions?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Ask Questions

Have the students get their books for independent reading. Remind them that they have been using wondering and questioning as they read on their own, and explain that again today they will use self-stick notes to mark places where their stories make them stop and wonder. They will write their questions on the self-stick notes and place the notes on the pages that brought those questions to mind.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share their books with the class. Remind each volunteer to tell the title of his book and the author's name. Ask questions such as:

Q What is a question you had as you were reading?

Q What was happening in the book when you thought of that question?

Q What did you find out about that question in your reading?

Q How would you answer that question right now?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Teacher Note

Have the students keep their self-stick notes in place in their books. They will revisit the notes during independent reading tomorrow.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear a story read aloud again
- Use their questions to discuss the story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Write in their reading journals
- Agree and disagree respectfully

1 Review Questions and Discuss How to Disagree Respectfully

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Brave Irene and remind the students that in the previous lesson they used “Stop and Ask Questions” to help them think about the story. Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 17, “Stop and Ask Questions About Brave Irene,” and review the questions they wrote yesterday.

After a few minutes, call for the students’ attention. Explain that they will hear Brave Irene again today, and then partners will talk about whether and how their questions are answered in the story. Ask:

Q If you disagree with someone’s thinking during today’s discussion, how can you do so in a caring and respectful way? Why is this important?

Students might say:

“I can say that I thought of it in a different way.”

“I can tell her that I understand what she’s saying, but I think this is how the question is answered.”

“I can speak in a kind voice, not in a loud voice that sounds like I am mad. I am not mad; I just have a different idea.”

2 Reread Brave Irene Aloud

Ask the students to listen carefully as you read and to think about whether their questions are answered and, if so, how they are answered—directly, or indirectly through clues. Read Brave Irene aloud, showing the illustrations.

Materials

- Brave Irene
- Student Response Book page 17
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA5)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section

3 Use Questions to Discuss the Story

Have partners spend a few minutes talking about the story and the answers to their questions. When most pairs have finished talking, facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages from the story and to show illustrations again to help the students recall what they heard. Remind the students to use the prompts to add to one another's thinking during the discussion.

- Q What question got you and your partner talking about the story? What did you discuss?
- Q If the question was answered in the story, was it answered directly or did you figure out the answer from clues? What clues did you use?

Students might say:

"My partner and I talked a lot about the question 'Why did Irene keep going in the snowstorm?' The story didn't tell us the answer, but we tried to figure it out. We think it's because Irene wanted to help her mother. She really loved her mother, and she didn't want to let her down."

"I agree with [Shawn and Brianna]. It said in the story that when Irene was about to give up, she saw her mother's face, and that made her keep going."

Review that sometimes the students' questions are answered directly in the story and sometimes they have to figure out the answers from clues in the story. When they use story clues to figure out answers, they are making inferences.

Tell the students that in the next lesson, they will make inferences to understand the character Irene.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Write in Reading Journals

Have the students get their books and review the questions they wrote on self-stick notes in the previous lesson. Ask the students to keep these questions in mind today as they read independently and to write down any new questions that come to mind. Explain that later each student will choose a question to write about in his reading journal.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read independently for up to 25 minutes. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Display the “Journal Entry” chart (🟢 WA5) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading.

Please include:

- The title and the author’s name
- What the story is about
- One question you wrote on a self-stick note
- What you found out about that question
- If you did not find out anything about the question, how you would answer the question right now and why

WA5

Give the students a moment to quietly review their questions and choose one to write about. Then have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write. Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

Materials

- Brave Irene
- Student Response Book page 18
- “Excerpts from Brave Irene” chart (WA6)

ELL Note

To increase your English Language Learners' comprehension, consider acting out some of these scenes as you read them.

Facilitation Tip

Reflect on your experience over the past four weeks with asking questions once without repeating or rewording them and then using wait-time. Does this technique feel comfortable and natural for you? Do you find yourself using it throughout the school day? What effect has using this technique had on your students' attentiveness and responsiveness in discussions? We encourage you to continue to use and reflect on this technique throughout the year.

In this lesson, the students:

- Make inferences about the main character in a story
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking
- Agree and disagree respectfully

1 Review *Brave Irene

Review Brave Irene by reading each of the following lines aloud and asking the students to remember what is happening in that part of the story. For each line, have a volunteer share what is happening.

Read aloud:

- p. 5 “Irene put on her fleece-lined boots, her red hat and muffler, her heavy coat, and her mittens.”
- p. 12 “She pounced and took hold, but the ill-tempered wind ripped the box open.”
- p. 24 “She was welcomed by cheering servants and a delirious duchess.”

2 Make Inferences About Irene

Remind the students that sometimes an author tells us directly about a character and at other times readers have to use clues in the story, such as what the character says or does, to make inferences about the character. Explain that today the students will look at two excerpts from Brave Irene and use clues in the excerpts to make inferences about Irene's personality.

Display the “Excerpts from Brave Irene” chart (WA6) and have the students turn to Student Response Book page 18, where the excerpts are reproduced. Ask the students to follow along as you read the first excerpt aloud. Then read the excerpt slowly and clearly. Ask:

- Q What does this excerpt tell you about Irene? What clues in the excerpt gave you this idea?

Students might say:

"I think it shows that Irene doesn't give up. She keeps going even though her feet are cold."

"In addition to what [Lance] said, I think the excerpt shows that Irene takes responsibility. She's doing an important job for her mom, and she wants to finish it."

"I agree with [Sara and Lance]. I also think Irene is brave because she doesn't give up even though she's really cold."

As the students share their ideas, jot notes about Irene in the margin of the excerpt on the chart (for example, doesn't give up, takes responsibility, is brave) and underline the words in the text that gave the students clues about Irene.

3 Make Inferences About Irene in Pairs

Direct the students' attention to the second excerpt on Student Response Book page 18. Read the excerpt aloud as the students follow along. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What does this excerpt tell you about Irene? What in the excerpt gives you this idea? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have partners write what they know about Irene in the margin of the excerpt as you did with the first excerpt. Have them underline the clues in the excerpt that helped them make their inferences.

After several minutes, facilitate a class discussion using the following questions:

Q What do you and your partner think this excerpt tells us about Irene? What clues in the excerpt helped you figure that out?

As the students share their thinking about Irene, record their ideas on the "Excerpts from Brave Irene" chart.

Students might say:

"I think that Irene is creative because she turned the box into a sled."

"In addition to what [Luisa] said, I think that Irene is very smart because she probably knew that the box would slide down the hill."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Discuss Main Characters

Ask the students to think as they read today about the main characters in their stories and what they can infer about those characters from clues in the text. Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

ELL Note

Depending on their level of proficiency, English Language Learners may need extra support with this activity.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share their books with the class. Remind each volunteer to tell the title of her book and the author’s name. Ask questions such as:

- Q Who is the main character in the story?
- Q What do you know about the main character so far? What clues helped you figure that out?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, locate the video of Al Gore reading Brave Irene by searching online with the keywords “Al Gore Brave Irene.” You will need to project the video from your computer so that all the students can see it.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Watch a Video Reading of Brave Irene

Show the cover of Brave Irene and remind the students that they heard the story earlier. Ask:

- Q What do you remember about this story?

Explain that today the students will watch a video of Brave Irene being read aloud by Al Gore, a former vice president of the United States. Ask the students to pay close attention to the video and to think about how watching it compares with hearing the book read aloud in class. Play the video “Brave Irene read by Al Gore” for the students.

As a class, discuss:

- Q How is the video reading different from the readings I did in class?

Students might say:

“The man who reads the story does it differently. He says some things differently.”

“The video has sound effects like wind and clapping that we didn’t have in class.”

“You can also hear quiet music sometimes in the video, and it gets louder when Irene goes to the ball.”

- Q Did watching the video help you better understand or enjoy the story? Why do you say that?

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Use “Stop and Ask Questions” as they read independently
- Use their questions to discuss what they read
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Reflect on working with their current partners

1 Review Wondering/Questioning

Have the students get their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together. Remind the students that they have been practicing the comprehension strategy of wondering and questioning and the technique “Stop and Ask Questions” to help them understand stories. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How does stopping to ask questions as you are reading help you understand and enjoy what you are reading? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“It makes me think about what I just read and notice what I’m wondering about.”

“It helps me pay attention to what I’m reading because I’m looking for answers to my questions.”

Explain that today the students will continue to use “Stop and Ask Questions” as they read independently.

2 Prepare to Read Independently with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 19, “Stop and Ask Questions About _____.” Have each student write the title of her book in the blank at the top of the page.

Explain that during independent reading today, you will stop the students three times to have them write questions in their Student Response Books. Remind the students that they can write questions at any point as they are reading but that you will stop them three times so that students who have not written questions can do so.

Materials

- Student Response Book page 19
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4)
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- Copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

Later they will use their questions to discuss their reading with partners and with the class.

3 Read Independently with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Have the students read independently for 15 minutes. Stop them at 5-minute intervals to have the students who have not yet recorded questions do so. Remind the students that they should write any questions that come to mind, not just questions they think are good. Circulate among the students as they read and write, and provide assistance as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students generating questions as they read?
- Are their questions relevant to the books they are reading?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4); see page 49 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are generating questions as they read, proceed with the lesson and then continue on to Unit 5.
- If about half of the students are generating questions as they read, support students who are struggling by asking them questions such as:

Q What is happening in your book right now?

Q What questions do you have about what is happening?

Q What questions do you have about what is going to happen next?

- If only a few students are generating questions as they read, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Unit 5. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

4 Discuss the Students’ Questions

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students talk with their partners about the questions they wrote and what they found out in their reading about those questions. Remind them to refer to the text to explain their thinking.

Have a few volunteers each share one question with the class. Probe their thinking using questions such as:

Q What was happening in the story when that question came to mind?

Q How would you answer that question right now? What evidence in the book makes you think that?

5 Reflect on the Unit

Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and review that in this unit the students learned and used wondering or questioning, to help them think about stories. They also reviewed and used the strategies of visualizing and making inferences about characters. Tell the students that they will continue to use these strategies to help them enjoy and understand what they read on their own.

Point out that during the past few weeks, the students have also come to know their partners better as they shared and discussed their reading. Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students worked together during the unit. Ask:

- Q What is one thing that you think you and your partner have done well during this unit?
- Q How did talking to your partner help you wonder and ask questions as you heard stories?

You may want to share some of your observations about how the students worked together. Explain that they will work with new partners in the next unit. Have each student thank his partner.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 4. You will need to reassign partners before you start the next unit.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1). Periodically, have a few students share with the class what they are reading at home.

Assessment

- Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students' reading comprehension using the "Individual Comprehension Assessment" record sheet (IA1); see page 54 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Brave Irene to teach the Week 14 vocabulary lessons.

Unit 5

Wondering/ Questioning

NARRATIVE NONFICTION (BIOGRAPHY)

During this unit, the students apply the strategy of wondering/questioning to narrative nonfiction. They practice identifying what they learn from nonfiction texts and explore how learning new things can lead to new questions. During IDR, the students think about what they are learning and wondering as they read on their own, and they use previously learned strategies to make sense of their texts. Socially, they contribute ideas that are different from their partners' ideas and continue to take responsibility for their learning and behavior.

Week 1

OVERVIEW

Brave Harriet

by Marissa Moss, illustrated by C. F. Payne

In aviation's early days, fearless Harriet Quimby made history by becoming the first woman to fly solo across the English Channel.

Online Resources

- “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1)

Professional Development Media

Comprehension Focus

- Students identify what they learn from a narrative nonfiction book.
- Students use wondering/questioning to make sense of nonfiction.
- Students read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students develop the skill of contributing ideas that are different from their partners' ideas.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider previewing this unit's read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. You might read them aloud while showing and discussing the illustrations or have the students flip through them on their own.
- ✓ Make available narrative texts at a variety of levels so that the students can practice wondering/questioning during IDR throughout the unit. Narrative texts include chapter books, picture books, and short stories in a wide range of fiction genres (mystery, adventure, science fiction, historical fiction, realistic fiction, fable, folktale, myth, and legend) and nonfiction genres such as biography and memoir.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a class set of "IDR Conference Notes" record sheets (CN1); see page 71 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, make a copy of the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 65 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, collect narrative nonfiction texts at a variety of levels. The students will use the texts during Independent Strategy Practice to practice identifying what they learn and wonder.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 14 lessons this week.

Materials

- Brave Harriet (pages 4–17)
- Map of Europe
- “Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet” chart (WA1)
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- Self-stick notes for each student
- Class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1)
- Assessment Resource Book page 68
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin working with new partners
- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Wonder about the book
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Work in a responsible way

1 Pair Students and Get Ready to Work Together

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other’s names. Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that they will work in the same pairs for the next few weeks. Remind them that they should work responsibly, acting in ways that help both partners learn and work well together. Ask:

Q What did you do the last time you worked with a partner that will help you work with your new partner in a responsible way?

Students might say:

“I waited for my turn to talk.”

“I listened to what my partner had to say.”

“I looked at my partner when she was talking.”

Have a few students share their ideas with the class. Ask the students to keep these things in mind as they work with their partners today.

2 Introduce Brave Harriet and Build Background Knowledge

Show the cover of Brave Harriet and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that Brave Harriet is a biography and that a biography is a “true story about a real person.” Explain that this biography is about Harriet Quimby, who was the first American woman to receive a pilot’s license. Harriet dreamed of being the first woman to fly across the English Channel. Use a map to locate Harriet’s planned route across the English Channel, from Dover, England, to Calais, France.

Explain that Brave Harriet takes place about 100 years ago, when airplanes were a recent invention. Show the illustration on page 15 and discuss ways that airplanes of Harriet’s day were different from today's airplanes. Point out that the planes had no radios, radar, or other methods of communicating with other planes or people on the ground.

Explain that today you will read the first part of the book aloud and you will stop during the reading so the students can discuss what they are learning about Harriet Quimby. Explain that at the end of the reading, you will record both what the students learned about Harriet and what they wonder about her life.

3 Read Aloud with Brief Section Introductions

Explain that the first part you will read describes how Harriet became a pilot. Ask the students to listen for how that happened. Read aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

gawky: clumsy, awkward (p. 5)

longing: strong wish (p. 5)

cutting figure eights: flying in the shape of the number 8 (p. 6)

pylons: towers (p. 6)

compass: instrument that shows what direction you are traveling (p. 8) fraud: fake; person who claims to have done something but hasn't really done it (p. 10)

goggles: protective glasses (p. 17)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

gum-and-spit contraption: something held together badly, as if by gum and spit (p. 5)

soar: fly high above the ground (p. 5)

flew solo: flew a plane alone (p. 6)

could be the death of you: could kill you (p. 8)

Stop after:

p. 6 "That's when I decided to do it—to become the first woman to fly solo across the English Channel."

Ask:

Q What did you learn about how Harriet became a pilot?

Explain that the next part of the book tells about Gustav Hamel, Harriet's good friend who was also a pilot. Ask the students to listen for what they learn about Harriet and Gustav. Reread the last sentence on page 6 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 13 "Instead, he came with me to Dover to see me off."

Teacher Note

Brave Harriet contains a lot of factual information that the students might have difficulty following. To support them, you will briefly introduce each section before you read it. This will help to focus the students' listening on the main ideas discussed in that section.

Teacher Note

If the students do not offer ideas beyond the background knowledge you gave them during the introduction, ask them what else they learned about what Harriet did to become a pilot.

Ask:

-  Q What did you learn about Gustav and Harriet in this part of the story? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Reread the first paragraph on page 13 and continue reading to the end of the page. Pause and ask the students to think about whether Harriet has made the right decision. Then continue to read to the bottom of page 17.

Stop after:

- p. 17 “At 5:35 a.m. my plane left England’s soil, heading over the cliffs of Dover, across the Channel, and on to France.”

Ask:

-  Q What did you learn in the part of the story you just heard? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, we invite you to focus on pacing class discussions so they are lively and focused without dragging, losing the attention of your participants, or wandering off the topic. Class discussions should be long enough to allow time for thinking and short enough to sustain the students’ attention. Good pacing requires careful observation of the class (not just the students who are responding) and the timely use of various pacing techniques. To speed up a discussion:

- Call on just a few students to respond to each question, even if others have their hands up.
- Use “Turn to Your Partner” if many students want to speak; then call on just two or three students to share with the class.

To deepen or refocus a discussion:

- Restate the question if the discussion strays from the original topic.
- Use wait-time before calling on anyone to respond.

To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view “Pacing Class Discussions” (AV19).

4 Discuss What the Students Learned and What They Wonder

Tell the students that one reason to read biographies, or books about real people’s lives, is to learn facts about people and their accomplishments. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q If someone asked you what you learned about Harriet Quimby today, what would you say? What are some important things you learned about her life? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Display the “Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet” chart ( WA1). Have a few students share what they learned, and record their ideas in the “What We Learned” column of the chart.

Remind the students that wondering, or questioning, is a strategy that can help them think about what they are reading. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q Based on what you know so far about Harriet Quimby, what do you wonder about her? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share with the class, and record their ideas in the “What We Wonder” column of the chart.

Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet

What We Learned	What We Wonder
Back then pilots only had compasses to guide them.	I wonder if Harriet will really fly across the Channel.
Harriet was a newspaper writer before she was a pilot.	I wonder if she will fly in the wrong direction and get lost. Gustav said she might.
She was the first woman to receive a pilot's license.	Why couldn't many women be pilots then?

Explain that tomorrow you will read the rest of the book and the students will learn more about Harriet's flight across the English Channel.

5 Reflect on Working Together

Facilitate a brief discussion about how partners worked together in a responsible way. Ask:

- Q What did you and your new partner do to work together responsibly?
- Q What worked well for you and your partner?
- Q What do you want to keep working on?

Tell the students that they will have more opportunities to work with their partners.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Review and Practice "Fix-up" Strategies

Tell the students that for the next few weeks, they will continue to read narrative texts, or texts that tell stories, during IDR. Have them select their texts and find places to sit.

Direct the students' attention to the "Thinking About My Reading" chart and remind the students that it is important for them to check their comprehension as they are reading. Remind the students that earlier they learned two "fix-up" strategies, or tools a student can use when he does not understand what he has read. Review that one strategy is to reread the part of the book he does not understand slowly and carefully. Another strategy is to read ahead and look for more information.

Teacher Note

Save the "Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet" chart (WA1) to use on Day 2.

Teacher Note

We encourage you to spend a few minutes at the end of the lesson helping the students reflect on their social interactions. For more information, see "Focus on Social/Ethical Development" in the Introduction. To learn more, view "Social Reflection" (AV14).

Teacher Note

During IDR today the students review and practice two "fix-up" strategies they can use when they do not understand what they have read: rereading and reading ahead. To provide the students with additional support with using these and other "fix-up" strategies, you might teach all or part of IDR Mini-lesson 2, "Self-monitoring and Using 'Fix-up' Strategies" (found in Appendix A).

Teacher Note

You might encourage the students to read narrative nonfiction texts during IDR throughout this unit. Examples of narrative nonfiction include biographies, autobiographies, memoirs, personal essays, and magazine or newspaper stories.

ELL Note

Help your English Language Learners choose narrative texts at appropriate levels. Providing a limited number of teacher-selected texts will help them make good choices.

Teacher Note

Provide time on a regular basis for the students to record the books they have completed in their reading logs.

Distribute self-stick notes to each student. Tell the students that as they read today, you want them to pause occasionally and ask themselves if they understand what they are reading. If a student does not understand what she is reading, she should mark the place in the text that she does not understand with a self-stick note and then try one or both of the “fix-up” strategies—rereading and reading ahead—to see if the strategies help her understand what she is reading. Explain that at the end of IDR, you will check in with the students to see how they did with using “fix-up” strategies. Then have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Beginning today, and continuing throughout the unit, confer individually with the students about the books they are reading during IDR.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Ask and discuss:

- Q Was there any part of your reading that you did not understand today? Tell us about it.
- Q What “fix-up” strategy did you try? What happened when you [reread/read ahead]?

If a student has tried both of the “fix-up” strategies and still does not understand the text he is reading, refer him to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and encourage him to try the strategies listed on it. Alternatively, you might encourage the student to ask you or a classmate for help.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Wonder about the book
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners' ideas

1 Introduce and Briefly Model Contributing Different Ideas

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that this year the students have learned several skills to help them work well together, such as explaining their thinking, listening carefully to one another, and using prompts to add to one another's ideas.

Explain that today the students will focus on a new skill: contributing ideas that are different from their partners' ideas. Point out that this skill is especially useful when reading nonfiction books with a lot of information in them, like Brave Harriet. If each partner contributes different ideas, together they can remember more information from the book.

Choose a volunteer to act as your partner. Show the cover of Brave Harriet and ask your partner:

Q What do you remember about Harriet Quimby from the first part of the book?

Listen as your partner talks and then model contributing a different idea.

You might say:

"You said you remember how Harriet's friend tried to talk her out of flying across the English Channel. I remember that when Harriet went to get her pilot's license, a man told her that no woman had ever gotten one before."

Ask partners to briefly practice the skill by taking turns telling each other different things they remember from the first part of the book.

Encourage the students to continue to practice this skill with their partners today.

Materials

- Brave Harriet (pages 18–30)
- “Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet” chart (WA1) from Day 1
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

ELL Note

Consider reviewing the first part of the story with your English Language Learners prior to today's read-aloud.

2 Review the “Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet” Chart

Display the “Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet” chart (🌐 WA1) from Day 1 and briefly review the items in the “What We Wonder” column. Explain that today you will read the rest of the book, stopping several times to have the students discuss what they are learning about Harriet Quimby. Ask them to listen carefully for answers to their questions and to be aware of any new questions that come to mind.

3 Read Brave Harriet Aloud with Brief Section Introductions

Remind the students that at the end of the first day's reading, Harriet was leaving England in her plane, hoping to reach France by flying across the English Channel.

Explain that the next section you will read tells about Harriet's flight across the English Channel. Read page 18 aloud, pausing to have the students visualize before showing the illustration.

Suggested Vocabulary

compass heading: direction (p. 22)

pitch: tilt (p. 22)

pancake onto the water: land flat on the water (p. 22)

hoisted me aloft: lifted me in the air (p. 28)

eclipsed: was more important than (p. 28)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

had clouded up: had become hard to see through because they were covered with mist (p. 20)

fog had crept into my bones: being in the fog made me feel cold and sleepy (p. 22)

in triumph: because of my success (p. 28)

Continue reading and stop after:

p. 24 “And now, below the clouds, I could see the coast of France.”

Ask:

 Q What have you learned about Harriet's flight across the English Channel? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their ideas with the class. Ask:

Q What do you wonder?

Have a few students share what they are wondering; then reread the last sentence on page 24 and continue reading to page 28. Stop after:

p. 28 “As I warmed my hands around the wide, thick steaming bowl, I could see the headlines already: AMERICAN WOMAN FLIES OVER THE CHANNEL!”

Without showing the illustration, ask:

Q How do you think Harriet is feeling right now? What in the story makes you think so? Turn to your partner.

Reread the last sentence before the stop; then read to the end of page 28 and show the illustration. Ask:

Q What has happened? What effect does this have on news of Harriet’s success?

If necessary, briefly explain that the Titanic was a brand-new luxury ship that hit an iceberg and sank on its way from England to the United States, killing about 1,500 people. When the Titanic sank, it was the main news story for many days.

Reread the last sentence on page 28 and continue reading to the end of the book.

4 Discuss What the Students Learned and What They Wonder

Facilitate a class discussion about what the students learned and what they wonder. Encourage the students to contribute different ideas and to use the discussion prompts they have learned to build on one another’s thinking.

Ask:

Q What did you learn about Harriet Quimby from today’s reading?

As the students share, add their ideas to the “What We Learned” column of the “Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet” chart. Refer to the “What We Wonder” column and ask the following questions. Be prepared to reread parts of the text that support the students’ thinking.

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in today’s reading? How were they explained?

Q After what you heard today, what do you still wonder about Harriet?

Add what the students are wondering to the chart.

TEKS 6.B.iii
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 4 (all)

Teacher Note

You may wish to write the prompts where everyone can see them:

- I agree with _____ because . . .
- I disagree with _____ because . . .
- In addition to what _____ said, I think . . .

Teacher Note

If you plan to do the technology extension “Learn More About Harriet Quimby” on page 268, save the “Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet” chart (WA1) to use during that extension.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to use information in the book to wonder about Harriet Quimby?
- Are they referring to the text to determine whether the things they wondered on Day 1 have been explained?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 65 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to wonder about Harriet Quimby, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 3.
- If about half of the students are able to wonder about Harriet Quimby, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 3 but plan to monitor and support students who are having difficulty with the strategy during independent reading. You might have each student read a short passage from her book aloud to you and then ask her questions such as:

Q What questions do you have about this part?

Q What does it make you wonder?

- If only a few students are able to wonder about Harriet Quimby, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1 and 2 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 3. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

5 Reflect on Contributing Different Ideas

Briefly discuss how the students did contributing different ideas. Ask questions such as:

Q How was contributing different ideas helpful to you and your partner?

Students might say:

“Hearing my partner’s ideas helped me remember other things I learned about Harriet.”

“In addition to what [Halley] said, sharing different ideas helped me listen better to my partner.”

“I listened better to my partner because I needed to make sure I didn’t say the same idea.”

Tell the students that they will have more opportunities to practice contributing different ideas in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Wonder

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. Ask them to continue to think about what they are wondering as they read and to notice whether the things they wonder are explained in their texts. Tell the students that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of them to share what they wondered with the class. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share things they wondered about their reading. Have each volunteer begin by telling the class the title of her text and the author’s name. Then ask questions such as:

- Q What is your [magazine story] about?
- Q What is something you wondered as you were reading?
- Q Was what you wondered explained in the [story]? If so, what did you learn?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

TEKS 6.B.iii
TEKS 6.B.iv
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 6 (all)

Teacher Note

Periodically remind the students to ask themselves the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart as they read independently and to select different texts if they decide the ones they are reading are not at the right levels.

Day 3

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Brave Harriet (page 32)
- Student Response Book pages 20–21

TEKS 7.D.iii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 1 (all)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn and wonder
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Use a double-entry journal to record ideas
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners' ideas

1 Discuss Lessons from Harriet Quimby's Life

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Review that in the previous lesson the students heard and discussed Brave Harriet, a biography of pilot Harriet Quimby. Remind them that a biography is the true story of a real person's life.

Explain that sometimes readers learn lessons from a person's biography that they can apply to their own lives. Briefly discuss:

Q What did Harriet do that was brave?

Q What did you learn about the way Harriet lived her life that you would like to remember and use in your own life?

Students might say:

"Harriet did something even though people said she couldn't. I want to be an astronaut, so maybe if people say I can't do it, I'll keep trying anyway."

"Maybe thinking about Harriet will help me do new things that I'm scared to do."

"Harriet didn't panic when she thought her plane was going down. I learned that it's good to not panic in an emergency, because then you can think of a plan."

2 Introduce the Author's Note

Show the students the author's note on page 32 of Brave Harriet and explain that the author included the note to give readers more information about Harriet Quimby. Ask the students to listen carefully as you read the note aloud and to notice what new things they learn.

3 Read Aloud

Read the author's note aloud slowly and clearly. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

decade: ten years

aviator: pilot

promote commercial aviation: try to get ordinary people interested in traveling by plane

foresaw: predicted

coincided: happened at the same time

ambitious: having a strong wish to achieve something

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

setting her sights: (idiom) deciding so convinced was he that the flight was beyond a woman's ability: he was very sure that a woman would not be able to fly across the Channel died doing what she loved, soaring into the blue: died in an airplane crash

4 Reread the Author's Note

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 20, where the author's note is reproduced. Explain that you will reread the note aloud, and ask the students to follow along as you read. Explain that you are rereading to give the students another opportunity to hear and think about the information in the note.

Reread the author's note aloud slowly and clearly.

5 Use a Double-entry Journal to Record Ideas

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 21, "Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet." Explain that they will use the double-entry journal to record what they learned from the author's note and what it made them wonder.

Have partners discuss what they learned and wonder. Remind them to contribute different ideas during their discussions. After a few moments, signal for the students' attention and have each student write one thing he learned in the first column of his double-entry journal and one thing he wonders in the second column.

ELL Note

You might support your English Language Learners by providing these prompts for their responses: "I learned..." and "I wonder..."

Materials

- Brave Harriet

6 Discuss the Author's Note as a Class

When most of the students have finished writing, facilitate a class discussion using the following questions:

- Q What did you learn about Harriet Quimby from the author's note?
- Q What do you wonder about her?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Wonder

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. Ask them to think about what they are wondering as they read and whether the things they are wondering are explained in their texts. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have each student share with a partner the title of the text she is reading and something she wondered about the text during her reading today. Remind each student to share the title of the text and the author's name.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write Newspaper Stories About Harriet's Flight

Show the cover of Brave Harriet and remind the students that they heard this biography of Harriet Quimby earlier. Slowly page through the book and show the illustrations. Ask:

- Q What do you remember learning about Harriet Quimby?
- Q What is she famous for?

If necessary, remind the students that Harriet Quimby is most famous for being the first woman to fly across the English Channel, the part of the Atlantic Ocean that separates England from France. Review that Harriet's flight across the English Channel did not receive much attention in the news at the time because it happened the day after the Titanic sank, killing about 1,500 people. Tell the students that you will reread the part of the book that describes Harriet's flight across the English Channel and then they will write newspaper articles about it like the ones Harriet had hoped for.

Ask the students to listen carefully for information to include in their articles. Then read pages 13–28 slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations as you read. Ask:

Q What information might you include in a newspaper article about Harriet Quimby and her flight across the English Channel?

Have a few students share their thinking, and write their ideas where everyone can see them.

Students might say:

"Harriet Quimby was the first American woman to get her pilot's license."

"She flew across the English Channel on April 16, 1912. She was supposed to fly on April 15, but it was raining that day."

"Flying across the English Channel was dangerous."

"Her friend Gustav Hamel gave her advice and a hot water bottle to keep her warm."

"At one point during the flight, the engine misfired and Harriet thought she would have to land on the water."

Explain that a good newspaper story has a headline, or title, that tells readers what the story is about and makes them want to read it. Ask:

Q What might you title an article about Harriet's flight?

Have a few students share their thinking, and write their ideas where everyone can see them.

Students might say:

"'American Woman Flies Over the Channel!' like it says in the book."

"'Harriet Quimby Crosses English Channel!'"

"'Harriet's Triumphant Channel Crossing!'"

Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing a brief newspaper story about Harriet Quimby.

You might say:

"First I need a headline that sounds exciting and lets readers know what the article is about. I'll write: Harriet Quimby Crosses English Channel! Below that I'll write my story. I want to include information about Harriet's flight as well as some information about Harriet herself. I'll write: On Tuesday, April 16, 1912, at 7:00 a.m., Harriet Quimby became the first woman to successfully fly solo across the English Channel. She took off from Dover, England, and flew to Calais, France, in less than two hours. Harriet is from the United States of America, where she was the first woman to receive a license to fly."

Have the students write their own newspaper stories about Harriet. If time permits, invite the students to share their writing with the class.

---

EXTENSION

Visualize Scenes from Brave Harriet

Reread some descriptive passages from Brave Harriet aloud, for example, the first paragraph on page 5 and the single paragraph on page 18. Have the students close their eyes and visualize what is happening. After the reading, have volunteers describe their visualizations and say which words and phrases helped them picture the scenes in their minds. Be prepared to reread from the text to help the students remember details.

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, find more information about Harriet Quimby. Search online for information using the keywords "Harriet Quimby for kids" and "Harriet Quimby biography." Once you have selected one or two websites, bookmark them or print information from them to read aloud to the students.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Learn More About Harriet Quimby

Show the cover of Brave Harriet and remind the students that they heard this biography of Harriet Quimby earlier. Briefly discuss:

Q What did you learn about Harriet Quimby?

Display the "Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet" chart (WA1) from Day 2. Direct the students' attention to the "What We Wonder" column and identify any questions that were not answered in the book. Tell the students that today you will read more about Harriet Quimby. Ask them to listen carefully and think about whether any of their questions are answered by the reading. Read the information you found aloud. Then ask:

Q What new things did you learn about Harriet Quimby?

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained? If so, what did you find out about them?

In this lesson, the students:

- Read narrative nonfiction texts independently
- Identify what they learn from their reading
- Wonder about their reading
- Use a double-entry journal to record their thinking
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Review the Week and Introduce the Double-entry Journal

Have the students bring their Student Response Books, pencils, and texts for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together.

Review that this week the students heard the biography Brave Harriet and recorded what they learned and wondered about Harriet Quimby in a double-entry journal. Explain that today they will use a double-entry journal to record what they learn and wonder about nonfiction texts they read independently. Have each student turn to Student Response Book page 22, “Double-entry Journal About _____,” and write the title of the text he is reading on the blank line at the top of the page.

2 Read Independently and Use the Double-entry Journal

Explain that the students will read independently for 10 minutes and that you would like them to think about what they are learning as they read. After 10 minutes, you will stop them and ask them to record what they learned in their double-entry journals.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students mark the places where they begin reading. Have them read silently for 10 minutes.

After 10 minutes, stop the students and have them record what they learned in the left-hand column of the double-entry journal.

When most students have finished writing, explain that they will now reread, beginning again at the self-stick notes. Explain that as they reread, you want them to notice what they are wondering, or what questions come to mind. Have the students reread silently for 10 minutes. After 10 minutes, stop the students and have them record what they wonder in the right-hand column of the double-entry journal.

Materials

- Student Response Book pages 21–22
- Narrative nonfiction texts at appropriate levels for independent reading
- Small self-stick note for each student

Teacher Note

To help the students review the week, you might show them the illustrations from Brave Harriet or ask them to review the “Double-entry Journal About Brave Harriet” chart (WA1) or the double-entry journal on Student Response Book page 21.

Teacher Note

Make sure each student has a narrative nonfiction text to read.

ELL Note

Consider modeling this activity for your English Language Learners.

---

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Brave Harriet to teach the Week 15 vocabulary lessons.

3 Discuss the Reading

Have the students discuss in pairs what they learned and what they wondered about their reading today. Encourage them to ask each other questions to help them understand their partners' thinking.

After partners have had a chance to talk, invite a few volunteers to share with the class what they learned and wondered. Probe their thinking by asking questions such as:

- Q What is your text about?
- Q What did you learn from your reading today? Did you learn anything that surprised you?
- Q What did your reading make you wonder? How might you find out more about what you are wondering?

Explain that in the coming weeks, the students will continue to read and think about nonfiction books.

Week 2

Day 1

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Wilma Unlimited (pages 4–14)
- “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” chart (WA2)
- Small self-stick notes for each student

ELPS 4.F.v
ELPS 4.F.vi
ELPS 4.F.x
Step 2 and Step 3
(all, beginning on page
274 and continuing on to page 276)

Teacher Note

You might point out Tennessee on a map of the United States.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Wonder about the book
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

1 Review Contributing Different Ideas

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that in the previous lessons, the students practiced contributing ideas that were different from their partners’ ideas. Explain that this week they will continue to work on this skill. First in pairs, and then as a class, briefly discuss:

Q How was contributing different ideas helpful to you and your partner when you talked about Brave Harriet?

Remind the students to listen carefully to their partners today so they can contribute different ideas to their partner conversations.

2 Introduce Wilma Unlimited and Build Background Knowledge

Show the cover of Wilma Unlimited and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that like Brave Harriet, this book is a biography. The subject, or the person the biography is about, is Wilma Rudolph, a woman who overcame many difficulties to become a champion runner.

Explain that Wilma, an African American, was born in Tennessee in 1940. She was one of many children, and her family did not have much money. Wilma’s parents had to work hard to take care of their large family. At the time, black people in Tennessee and other states did not have the same rights as white people and were often treated unfairly. For example, laws forced black students to attend separate schools from white students. Black passengers had to sit in the rear seats on public buses while white passengers sat up front. Point out that today it is against the law to treat people differently because of their race.

3 Read Wilma Unlimited Aloud with Brief Section Introductions

Explain that today you will read the parts of Wilma Unlimited that talk about her early life and you will stop during the reading so partners can discuss what they have learned. Explain that at the end of the reading, you will record what the students have learned about Wilma Rudolph and what they are wondering about her.

Read the book aloud, briefly introducing each section before you read it as described below. Show the illustrations and clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

home remedies: medicines or treatments passed down through families and prepared at home (p. 4)

double pneumonia: disease of the lungs that makes breathing difficult (p. 6)

polio: disease that often leaves a person unable to walk (p. 8)

outhouse: outdoor toilet (p. 10)

paralyzed: not able to move (p. 10)

twitchy: moving with small, jerky motions (p. 14)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

luxury: something expensive to use or buy (p. 6)

heaped: piled (p. 8)

permanently: forever (p. 8)

Start by telling the students that the first part you will read describes Wilma's family and her birth. Ask them to listen to find out what Wilma was like as a baby and what her family was like. Then read page 4 aloud slowly and clearly two times. Stop after:

p. 4 "Most babies weren't Wilma Rudolph."

Ask:

Q What did you learn about baby Wilma and her family? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their ideas with the class.

Teacher Note

At each stop, circulate among the pairs as they talk. If the students seem to understand the story, you may decide not to have volunteers share their thinking with the class at each stop.

TEKS 6.B.ii

Student/Teacher Activity

Step 4 (all, beginning on page 276 and continuing on to page 277)

Facilitation Tip

Continue to focus on pacing class discussions so they are neither too short nor too long. Scan the whole class (not just the students who are responding) and use techniques such as the following:

- Call on just a few students to respond to each question, even if others have their hands up.
- Use “Turn to Your Partner” if many students want to speak, and then call on just two or three students to share with the whole class.
- Restate the question if the discussion strays from the original topic.
- Use wait-time before calling on anyone to respond.

Explain that the next part you will read tells about hard times Wilma went through as a little girl. Ask the students to listen to find out what Wilma’s early years were like. Reread the last sentence on page 4 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 8 “Wilma, that lively girl, would never walk again.”

Ask:

Q What did you learn about Wilma in this part of the story? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their ideas with the class. Ask:

Q What do you wonder?

Have a few students share what they are wondering about Wilma.

Explain that the next part you will read tells what Wilma’s life was like after she came down with polio. Ask the students to listen to find out what happened to Wilma after she got this serious illness. Reread the last paragraph on page 8 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 14 “Other times it just hurt.”

Ask:

Q What did you learn about Wilma’s life after she got polio? Turn to your partner.

4 Discuss What the Students Learned and What They Wonder

Display the “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” chart (WA2). Tell the students that first partners will talk about what they learned about Wilma from today’s reading. Remind them to contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas. Ask:

Q What are some important things you learned about Wilma’s early life? Turn to your partner.

Ask a few students to share what they learned with the class, and record their ideas in the “What We Learned” column of the chart.

Remind the students that learning about a subject often causes more questions to come to mind. Point to the “What We Wonder” column and ask:

Q Based on what you have learned about Wilma Rudolph, what do you wonder? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share what they wonder with the class. Add their ideas to the “What We Wonder” column of the chart, next to related items in the “What We Learned” column when possible. Point out that this shows how what the students learned and what they wonder are connected.

Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited

What We Learned	What We Wonder
Wilma was sick a lot.	Why did she get sick so much?
Wilma's mom took care of her.
Wilma had nineteen brothers and sisters.	Were her brothers and sisters good at sports?
Wilma's leg was crippled from polio.	How will Wilma become a good runner if she has polio?

Tell the students that tomorrow you will read more of Wilma Unlimited and the students will learn more about Wilma's life. Tomorrow's reading may answer some of their questions.

5 Reflect on Contributing Different Ideas

Facilitate a brief class discussion about how the students did today bringing up ideas that were different from their partners' ideas. Invite a few pairs to share the different ideas they discussed.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Review "Stop and Ask Questions"

Remind the students that earlier they learned the thinking tool "Stop and Ask Questions" to help them make sense of stories. Explain that today they will practice "Stop and Ask Questions" as they read independently. Distribute the self-stick notes and explain that the students will use the notes to mark places in their texts where questions come to mind. They will write each question that comes to mind on a self-stick note and then place the note next to the part of the text that led to the question. Tell the students that later they will use the questions they wrote to discuss their reading.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

Teacher Note

Save the "Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited" (WA2) chart to use on Day 2.

continuing on to page 278)

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share their reading with the class. Have each volunteer begin by telling the class the title of her text and the author’s name. Then ask questions such as:

Q What is the [essay] about?

Q What is a question you wrote while you were reading?

Q Was this question answered in the text? If so, what did you find out? If not, how do you think it might be answered as you keep reading?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Day 2

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Wilma Unlimited (pages 16–38)
- “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” chart (WA2) from Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Wonder about the book
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute different ideas and take responsibility for themselves

1 Review the “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” Chart

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” chart (WA2) and briefly review the ideas listed there. Explain that today you will read more of Wilma Unlimited. Ask the students to listen carefully to find out if their questions from the previous lesson are answered by today's reading. Also remind them to continue to contribute different ideas during partner conversations.

2 Read Aloud with Brief Section Introductions

Remind the students that where you left off, Wilma was finally able to attend school. She was feeling sad because wearing a leg brace forced her to sit on the sidelines while other kids played games. Explain that the first section you will read today tells how Wilma continued her struggle to walk again. Read aloud, slowly and clearly, beginning on page 16. Show the illustrations, clarify vocabulary, and stop as described below.

Suggested Vocabulary

faith: religious beliefs (p. 16)

triumphant: full of joy and pride (p. 20)

memorable: worth remembering; not easy to forget (p. 22)

full athletic scholarship: money given to an athlete to pay all of the athlete's college expenses (p. 26)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

concentrating on: thinking hard about (p. 16)

propel her: move her quickly (p. 24)

Olympic Games: sports competition held every four years for athletes from around the world (p. 28)

The crowd went wild: The crowd shouted and clapped in excitement (p. 32)

Stop after:

p. 22 "As soon as Wilma sent that box away, she knew her life was beginning all over again."

Ask:

Q What has happened to make Wilma think her life is beginning all over again? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share with the class. Ask:

Q What do you wonder?

Have a few students share what they are wondering. Explain that the next part of the story describes how Wilma's life changed after she

Teacher Note

You might point out Rome, Italy, on a world map or globe.

Teacher Note

If necessary, use the illustration on pages 34–35 to explain that in a relay race, each teammate runs a portion of the race and then passes a stick, called a baton, to the next runner on the team.

stopped wearing a leg brace. Reread the last sentence on page 22 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 26 “She was the first member of her family to go to college.”

Ask:

 Q What did you learn about Wilma in this part of the story? Turn to your partner.

Explain that in the next part Wilma competes in the Olympic Games in Rome, Italy. Reread the last sentence on page 26 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 28 “It was still swollen and painful on the day of her first race.”

Ask:

Q What do you wonder?

Have a few students share what they are wondering. Then reread the last two sentences on page 28 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 30 “An Olympic gold medal was hers to take home.”

Explain that instead of reading the next part (pages 32–37), you will show the illustrations and paraphrase, or tell in your own words, what happens in that part.

You might say:

“Wilma is famous after she wins the 100-meter dash. She goes on to win the 200-meter dash, and now she has two gold medals. The last event Wilma competes in is a relay race. As her teammate passes her the baton, she stumbles and two competing runners pass her. But Wilma runs as fast as she can and wins the race for the United States—and her third gold medal.”

After paraphrasing pages 32–37, read the final page (page 38) aloud.

3 Discuss What the Students Learned and What They Wonder

Facilitate a class discussion about what the students learned and what they are still wondering about Wilma Rudolph. Ask:

Q What did you learn about Wilma Rudolph in today’s reading?

Have a few students share what they learned. Add their ideas to the “What We Learned” column of the “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” chart from Day 1. Direct the students’ attention to the items in the “What We Wonder” column and ask:

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in today’s reading? What did you learn about them?

Q Based on what you learned today, what else are you wondering about Wilma?

Have a few volunteers share what they are wondering with the class, and add their ideas to the “What We Wonder” column.

Tell the students that tomorrow you will read from the author’s note of Wilma Unlimited, which may explain some of the things they are wondering about.

4 Reflect on Taking Responsibility

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q How did you take responsibility for your own learning today?
- Q What is one thing you might do differently in the next lesson to take more responsibility for your learning?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently, Learn, and Wonder

Ask the students to pay attention to what they are learning and wondering as they read independently today. Explain that later you will ask some of them to share what they learned and wondered with the class.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share their reading. Have each volunteer begin by showing the text and reading the title and the author’s name. Then ask questions such as:

- Q What is the [article] about?
- Q What is something you wondered as you were reading?
- Q What is something you learned? Did that make you wonder anything else?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Teacher Note

Save the “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” chart (WA2) to use on Day 3.

Materials

- Wilma Unlimited (page 40)
- Student Response Book pages 23–24
- “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” chart (WA2) from Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn and wonder
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Use a double-entry journal to record their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

1 Discuss Lessons from Wilma Rudolph’s Life

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Review that the students have heard two biographies, one of Harriet Quimby (Brave Harriet) and one of Wilma Rudolph (Wilma Unlimited). Remind the students that readers can often learn lessons from a person’s biography that they can apply to their own lives. Ask:

- Q What was Wilma Rudolph like? What did she do that showed what she was like?
- Q What did you learn about the way Wilma lived her life that you would like to remember and use in your own life?

Students might say:

“Wilma didn’t give up even though most children who got polio in those days never walked again. Thinking about her will help me not give up the next time I’m trying to do something hard.”

“When Wilma got her leg brace off, she felt like her life was beginning all over again. I learned that I’m really lucky to be able to walk and run. I’ll remember this the next time I’m feeling unlucky.”

“When Wilma was running in the relay race in the Olympics, she almost dropped the baton. I learned that even star athletes aren’t perfect. I won’t feel so bad the next time I make a mistake.”

2 Introduce the Author’s Note

Show the students the author’s note on page 40 of Wilma Unlimited and remind them that authors of biographies and other nonfiction books often include an author’s note to give readers additional information about a subject. Explain that this note provides more information about Wilma Rudolph, including what she did after she won her gold medals.

Tell the students that you will read parts of the note aloud. Ask them to listen carefully and notice what new things they learn.

3 Read the Author's Note Aloud

Read the first, third, and fourth paragraphs of the author's note aloud slowly and clearly. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

has inspired: has given hope to

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

banquet: dinner for many people

dreaded: feared

celebrity: famous person

4 Reread the Author's Note

Ask the students to turn to Student Response Book page 23, and explain that these are the sections of the author's note you read aloud. Explain that you will reread the sections and that you want the students to follow along. Remind them that rereading gives readers a chance to notice information they may have missed on their first reading. Read the first, third, and fourth paragraphs of the author's note aloud.

5 Use a Double-entry Journal to Record Ideas

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 24, "Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited." Explain that they will use the double-entry journal to record what they learned about Wilma Rudolph from the author's note and what the note made them wonder.

Have each student write one or more things she learned in the first column of the double-entry journal and one or more things she wonders in the second column. If a student wonders about something she learned, ask her to write these two items next to each other.

6 Discuss the Author's Note as a Class

Facilitate a class discussion about what the students learned and what they wonder. Ask:

Q What did you learn about Wilma Rudolph from the author's note?

Q What do you wonder?

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

Circulate as the students work, and notice whether they are identifying and recording what they learned and what they wonder about Wilma Rudolph. Have the students explain their thinking by reading supporting parts of the author's note to you. Help students who are struggling by reading the text along with them. This may be especially helpful for English Language Learners.

Technology Tip

To support the students with searching for information online, you might teach the following Technology Mini-lessons in Appendix B: Mini-lesson 4, “Choosing Effective Search Terms”; Mini-lesson 5, “Understanding Search Results”; and Mini-lesson 6, “Narrowing Search Results and Using Filters.” For more information about teaching Technology Mini-lessons 4-6, see “About Teaching the Online Research Lessons” at the beginning of Technology Mini-lesson 4.

If the students need support in using the Internet safely, you might teach the following lessons before the students begin their online research: Mini-lesson 1, “Navigating Safely Online,” and Mini-lesson 2, “Maintaining Privacy Online.”

Display the “Double-entry Journal About Wilma Unlimited” chart (C WA2) from Day 2 and point to the items in the “What We Wonder” column. Ask:

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in the author’s note? What did you find out about them?

Q What are some things you wondered about that have not been explained?

Remind the students that sometimes readers wonder about things that are not explained in the text. In these cases, readers can look elsewhere to find answers to their questions. If the students are interested in learning more about Wilma Rudolph, help them locate other books about her or help them conduct an Internet search using the keywords “Wilma Rudolph.”

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently, Learn, and Wonder

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. Ask them to pay attention to what they are learning and wondering as they read.

After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share with partners the texts they are reading and what they learned and wondered during their reading today. Remind partners to tell each other the titles of their texts and the authors’ names.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

EXTENSION

Read Biographies of Olympic Athletes

Like Wilma Rudolph, many athletes have overcome obstacles to become Olympic champions. Read aloud biographies of other such athletes (for example, Dream Big: Michael Jordan and the Pursuit of Olympic Gold by Deloris Jordan; Touch the Sky: Alice Coachman, Olympic High Jumper by Ann Malaspina; and Jesse Owens: Fastest Man Alive by Carole Boston Weatherford) and encourage the students to think about what they are learning and what they wonder as they listen to the books. After the reading, facilitate a class discussion about how these athletes' lives are similar to Wilma Rudolph's.

Independent Strategy Practice

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Read narrative nonfiction texts independently
- Identify what they learn from their reading
- Wonder about their reading
- Write in their reading journals
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Review the Week

Have the students bring their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together.

Review that this week the students heard Wilma Unlimited and used a double-entry journal to record what they learned and wondered about Wilma Rudolph. Explain that today the students will read nonfiction texts and think about what they learn and wonder about the subjects of those texts. After reading, they will discuss what they learned and what they wonder with their partners and write about it in their reading journals.

Materials

- Wilma Unlimited
- Narrative nonfiction texts at appropriate levels for independent reading
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA3)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

2 Model Identifying Something Learned and Then Wondering About It

Show page 38 of Wilma Unlimited. Model identifying something you learned and then wondering about it by reading the first paragraph, thinking aloud about information in the paragraph that is new to you, and explaining what it makes you wonder.

You might say:

"I knew that Wilma Rudolph was an Olympic medalist, but I didn't know that she won three gold medals in the 1960 Olympic games. That's something new I learned. It makes me wonder if she competed in any other Olympic games after 1960. I'm going to place a self-stick note here, next to this paragraph, because I learned something new and it made me wonder something else."

Explain that the students will read to themselves for 10 minutes. After 10 minutes you will stop them and ask them to reread, thinking about what they have learned and what it makes them wonder.

3 Read Independently Without Stopping

Distribute self-stick notes and have the students mark the places where they begin reading. Have them read silently for 10 minutes.

4 Reread, Identify Information Learned, and Wonder

Stop the students after 10 minutes. Tell them that they will now reread, thinking about what they have learned and what they wonder. Explain that they should mark information they have learned with self-stick notes to share with their partners later.

Have the students reread for 10 minutes. Circulate as the students work, and notice whether they are able to identify what they have learned.

5 Discuss in Pairs What the Students Learned and What They Wonder

Stop the students after 10 minutes. Have each student share with his partner the title of the book he is reading, something he learned from his reading, and something his reading made him wonder. Circulate and listen as partners talk.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to identify what they learned from their reading?
- Are they able to wonder about their reading?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2) on page 66 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to identify what they learned and what they wonder, proceed with the lesson and then continue on to Week 3.
- If about half of the students are able to identify what they learned and what they wonder, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Week 3 but plan to monitor and support students who are having difficulty during their independent reading. You might have each student read a short passage from his book aloud to you and then ask him questions such as:

Q What is one thing that is interesting or surprising about what you just read?

Q What is one thing you read that you didn't know before?

Q What does it make you wonder?

- If only a few students are able to identify what they learned and what they wonder, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating this week's lessons using an alternative book before continuing on to Week 3. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

6 Write in Reading Journals

Explain that each student will now write a journal entry about what she learned and wonders. Display the “Journal Entry” chart (WA3) and explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the text you are reading.
Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What the text is about
- Something you learned from the text
- Something the text made you wonder

WA3

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty writing about what they learned and what they wonder, you might use a nonfiction text the students are familiar with to model writing a journal entry. For example, you might write: I am reading Wilma Unlimited by Kathleen Krull. This book is a biography of Wilma Rudolph, a woman who overcame polio to become an Olympic medalist. I learned that it is possible for people to become athletes after having polio. I wonder if Wilma continued to feel symptoms of polio as an adult or if she was completely cured.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Wilma Unlimited to teach the Week 16 vocabulary lessons.

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

7 Reflect on Working Together

Review that the students focused this week on contributing ideas that were different from their partners' ideas. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to have the students discuss:

Q What did you do this week that helped you and your partner work well together? What did your partner do? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Week 3

Day 1

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Sonia Sotomayor (pages 3–15)
- “Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor” chart (WA4)
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- (Optional) Map of New York City

Teacher Note

If necessary, explain that a Hispanic person is someone whose family originally came to the United States from Latin America or another place where Spanish is spoken.

Teacher Note

You might point out the Bronx on a map of New York City.

ELL Note

Sonia Sotomayor is written in both English and Spanish. After you read the book aloud, you might make it available to Spanish-speaking students to read in Spanish.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Wonder about the book
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that this is the last week the students will work with these partners. Facilitate a brief discussion about what has worked well for partners so far and what things they want to continue to work on during their last week together. Ask:

Q What helps you and your partner work well together?

Q What things do you still want to work on?

2 Introduce Sonia Sotomayor and Build Background Knowledge

Show the cover of Sonia Sotomayor and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that like Brave Harriet and Wilma Unlimited, this book is a biography. The subject of the biography is Sonia Sotomayor, the first Hispanic Supreme Court justice (judge) in U.S. history. Explain that the Supreme Court is the highest and most powerful court in the United States, with nine justices who are chosen by the president.

Explain that Sonia was born in the Bronx, a part of New York City, in 1954. Sonia’s family did not have much money, and after her father died her mother had to support Sonia and her brother by herself.

3 Read Part of Sonia Sotomayor Aloud

Explain that the part of the book you will read today describes Sonia’s family and her early life. Ask the students to listen carefully and to think about what they are learning and wondering. Read aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

switchboard operator: someone in a company, hospital, or other organization whose job is to connect telephone callers to the right person (p. 6)

wages: money (p. 10)

merengue music: a type of dance music popular throughout Latin America and the United States (p. 12)

Stop after:

p. 7 "... and Sonia's family was no different, with only their mother to support them."

Ask:

Q What have you learned about Sonia and her family? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their ideas with the class. Ask:

Q What do you wonder?

Have a few volunteers share what they are wondering. Then reread the last sentence on page 7 and continue reading to the end of page 15.

4 Discuss What the Students Learned and What They Wonder

Display the "Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor" chart (WA4). Tell the students that partners will talk about what they learned about Sonia from today's reading. Remind the students to try to contribute different ideas. Ask:

Q What are some important things you learned about Sonia's early life? Turn to your partner.

Ask a few students to share what they learned with the class. Record their ideas in the "What We Learned" column of the chart.

Point to the "What We Wonder" column and ask:

Q Based on what you have learned about Sonia Sotomayor, what do you wonder? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share what they wonder with the class. Add their ideas to the "What We Wonder" column of the chart, next to related items in the "What We Learned" column when possible.

Facilitation Tip

Reflect on your experience over the past three weeks with pacing class discussions. Do the pacing techniques feel comfortable and natural for you? Do you find yourself using them throughout the school day? What effect has your focus on pacing had on your students' participation in discussions? We encourage you to continue to think about how to pace class discussions throughout the year.

Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor

What We Learned	What We Wonder
Sonia's mom worked hard to take care of Sonia and her brother.	I wonder if Sonia got along with her brother.
Sonia's favorite food was pork chops.
Sonia's family is Puerto Rican.	I wonder if she ever went to Puerto Rico.
Sonia wanted to be a detective like Nancy Drew.	Why did she decide to become a judge instead?

Teacher Note

Save the “Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor” chart (WA4) to use on Day 2.

Tell the students that they will hear more of Sonia Sotomayor’s biography tomorrow and may have some of their questions answered.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Use Comprehension Strategies

Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and review the strategies the students have learned so far this year. Encourage the students to use the strategies on the chart as they read independently today. Tell them that later you will ask some of them to share the strategies they used with the class.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few students share with the class the texts they are reading and the strategies they used today. Remind each volunteer to begin by showing her text and reading the title and author’s name aloud. Then ask her to give the names of the strategies she used and to tell where in the text she used them.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

SOCIAL SKILLS ASSESSMENT NOTE

During this final week of the unit, assess the students’ social skill development using the “Social Skills Assessment Record” sheet (SS1). Access and print a record sheet from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or make a copy from page 144 of the Assessment Resource Book. Note that you will use the same record sheet to document each student’s progress when you reassess social skill development in Unit 9.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Wonder about the book
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

1 Review the “Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor” Chart

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the “Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor” chart (WA4) from Day 1 and briefly review the ideas listed there. Explain that today you will read more of Sonia Sotomayor. Ask the students to listen carefully to find out if their questions from the previous lesson are answered in today’s reading. Also remind them to continue contributing different ideas during partner conversations.

Materials

- Sonia Sotomayor (pages 16–33)
- “Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor” chart (WA4) from Day 1
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart

2 Read Aloud with Brief Section Introductions

Remind the students that at the end of the previous day's reading, they learned that Sonia wanted to be a detective like Nancy Drew. Explain that the first section you will read today tells how Sonia decided to become a judge instead. Read aloud, slowly and clearly, beginning on page 16. Show the illustrations, clarify vocabulary, and stop as described below.

Suggested Vocabulary

diabetes: disease in which there is too much sugar in the blood (p. 16)

Stop after:

p. 19 "... almost like she was on a different planet."

Ask:

Q What have you learned about why Sonia decided to become a judge?

Have one or two volunteers share with the class. Ask:

Q What do you wonder?

Have a few students share what they are wondering. Explain that the next part of the story describes how Sonia got through her time at Princeton University. Reread the last sentence on page 19 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 24 "... and graduate with the highest honors of any student in her class."

Ask:

Q What have you learned about Sonia's time at Princeton? Turn to your partner.

Explain that the next part describes what Sonia Sotomayor is like as a judge. Reread the last sentence on page 24 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 29 "She was the perfect choice."

Ask:

Q What have you learned about what Sonia is like as a judge? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share with the class. Ask:

Q What do you wonder?

Have a few students share what they are wondering. Then reread the last sentence on page 29 and continue reading to the end of the story on page 33.

3 Discuss What the Students Learned and What They Wonder

Facilitate a class discussion about what the students learned about Sonia Sotomayor and what they wonder. Ask:

Q What did you learn about Sonia Sotomayor from today's reading?

Have a few students share what they learned. Add their ideas to the "What We Learned" column of the "Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor" chart. Direct the students' attention to the items in the "What We Wonder" column and ask:

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in today's reading? What did you learn about them?

Q Based on what you have learned, what else do you wonder about Sonia Sotomayor?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class, and add any new questions to the "What We Wonder" column.

Explain that you will read from the author's note at the end of the book tomorrow.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Use Comprehension Strategies

Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and encourage them to use the strategies on the chart as they read independently today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Teacher Note

Save the "Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor" chart (WA4) to use on Day 3.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share with partners the texts they are reading and the strategies they used today. Remind each student to begin by showing the text and reading the title and author's name aloud. Then ask him to give the name of the strategy and tell where he used it. Students who cannot think of comprehension strategies they used may talk about what they read. If time permits, have a few students share their partner conversations with the class.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Day 3

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Sonia Sotomayor (page 34)
- Student Response Book pages 25–27
- “Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor” chart (WA4) from Day 2
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart

ELPS 4.G.iii
Steps 1–7 (all,
beginning on page
298 and continuing on to page 300)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a narrative nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn and wonder
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Use a double-entry journal to record their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners' ideas

1 Discuss Lessons from Sonia Sotomayor's Life

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Remind the students that this week they heard a biography of Sonia Sotomayor. As a class, discuss the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts to add to one another's thinking.

Q What word or words would you use to describe Sonia Sotomayor? Why?

Remind the students that readers can learn valuable lessons from the stories of people's lives that they can apply to their own lives.

Q What lessons did you learn from Sonia Sotomayor's life that you can use in your own life?

2 Introduce the Author's Note

Show the students the author's note on page 34 of Sonia Sotomayor and explain that the note gives more information about Sonia Sotomayor. Ask the students to listen carefully as you read the note aloud and to notice what new things they learn about her life.

3 Read the Author's Note Aloud

Read the author's note aloud slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

humble: poor

indulgences: treats

nominated to: suggested for

4 Reread the Author's Note

Ask the students to turn to Student Response Book pages 25–26, where the author's note is reproduced. Explain that you will reread the note while the students follow along. Encourage them to listen for details they may have missed during the first reading. Read the author's note aloud.

5 Use a Double-entry Journal to Record Ideas

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 27, "Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor." Explain that they will use the double-entry journal to record what they learned from the author's note and what it made them wonder.

Have each student write one or more things she learned in the first column of the double-entry journal and one or more things she wonders in the second column. If a student wonders about something she learned, ask her to write these two items next to each other.

6 Discuss the Author's Note as a Class

Facilitate a class discussion about what the students learned from the author's note and what they wonder. Ask:

Q What did you learn about Sonia Sotomayor from the author's note?

Q What do you wonder?

Display the "Double-entry Journal About Sonia Sotomayor" chart (WA4) from Day 2 and point to the items in the "What We Wonder" column. Ask:

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in the author's note? What did you find out about them?

Q What are some things you wondered that have not been explained?

Remind the students that they can look in other books and on the Internet for answers to their questions.

TEKS 6.B.iv
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5 and Step 6 (all)

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

Circulate as the students work, and notice whether they are identifying and recording what they learned and what they wonder about Sonia Sotomayor. Have the students explain their thinking by reading supporting parts of the author's note to you. Help students who are struggling by reading the text along with them. This may be especially helpful for English Language Learners.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Use Comprehension Strategies

Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and encourage them to use the strategies on the chart as they read independently today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share with partners the texts they are reading and the strategies they used today. Remind each student to begin by showing the text and reading the title and author's name aloud. Then ask her to give the name of the strategy and tell where she used it. ## WRITING ABOUT READING

Write Opinions About Famous American Women

Show the covers of Brave Harriet, Wilma Unlimited, and Sonia Sotomayor and remind the students that they heard these books earlier. Review that all three books are biographies of famous women in American history. Hold up Brave Harriet and remind the students that the subject of this biography is Harriet Quimby, the first woman to fly alone across the English Channel. Page through the book and show the illustrations. Then ask:

Q What did you learn about Harriet Quimby?

Write the students' ideas where everyone can see them, under the heading "Harriet Quimby."

Follow the same procedure to review what the students learned about Wilma Rudolph and Sonia Sotomayor. Then ask:

Q Which of these three women do you think is the most interesting? Why?

Students might say:

"I think Sonia Sotomayor is the most interesting because she's still alive."

"I think Wilma is the most interesting because she was in the Olympics."

"I think Harriet Quimby is the most interesting because I want to be a pilot when I grow up."

Tell the students that when they talk about which one of several things they think is the most interesting, they are giving an opinion. Explain that people might have different opinions about the same thing and that this is fine. What matters is that they give reasons to explain their thinking. Then ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about which woman you think is the most interesting and why.

You might say:

"I think Wilma Rudolph is the most interesting of the three. I'll write: I think Wilma Rudolph is the most interesting woman we learned about. Now I will give a reason why I think she is so interesting. I'll write: I think so because she had polio and still managed to become an Olympic athlete. I want to explain what exactly I think is so interesting about that. I'll write: When Wilma got polio, people thought she would never walk again. But Wilma not only walked again but ran in the Olympics! I think it's interesting that Wilma knew her own strength better than the doctors did."

Have the students write their own opinions about which woman is the most interesting and why. If time permits, invite the students to share their writing with the class.

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, locate a video of Sonia Sotomayor's Supreme Court nomination speech from May 26, 2009. Search online using the keywords "Sonia Sotomayor Supreme Court nomination speech." You will need to project the video from your computer so that all of the students can see it.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Watch Sonia Sotomayor's Supreme Court Nomination Speech

Have the students learn more about Sonia Sotomayor by watching the speech she gave upon being nominated to the Supreme Court. Ask the students to pay close attention to the video and to notice what new things they learn and wonder about Sonia Sotomayor. Play the video for the students. Then discuss questions such as:

- Q What information in Sonia Sotomayor's speech was new to you?
- Q What information did you already know?
- Q What did her speech make you wonder?

Encourage the students to search the Internet to find more information about the things they are wondering.

Day 4

Independent Strategy Practice

Materials

- Narrative nonfiction texts at appropriate levels for independent reading
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- "Journal Entry" chart (WA5)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section
- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA3)
- Copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Read narrative nonfiction texts independently
- Identify what they learn from their reading
- Wonder about their reading
- Write in their reading journals
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Review the Unit

Have the students get their Student Response Books, pencils, and books for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together.

Review that for the past few weeks, the students have been wondering about narrative nonfiction books and thinking about what they learn from those books. Remind the students that paying attention to what they are learning and wondering helps them understand and enjoy what they read. Wondering can also give readers ideas for what to read next.

Explain that today the students will read nonfiction texts independently and continue to think about what they learn and wonder. After reading they will discuss what they learned and what they wonder in pairs and then write about these things in their reading journals.

2 Read Independently Without Stopping

Explain that the students will read to themselves for 10 minutes. After 10 minutes you will stop them and ask each student to reread, thinking about what she has learned and what it makes her wonder.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students mark the places where they begin reading. Have them read silently for 10 minutes.

3 Reread, Identify Information Learned, and Wonder

Stop the students after 10 minutes. Explain that they will now reread, thinking about what they have learned and what they wonder. Explain that they should mark the things they learned with self-stick notes to share with their partners later.

Have the students reread for 10 minutes. Circulate as the students work, and notice whether they are able to identify what they have learned.

4 Discuss in Pairs What the Students Learned and What They Wonder

Stop the students after 10 minutes. Have each student share with his partner the title of the text he is reading, the author's name, something he learned from his reading, and something his reading made him wonder. Circulate and listen as partners talk.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to identify what they learned from their reading?
- Are they able to wonder about their reading?

(continues)

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE (continued)

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3) on page 67 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to identify what they learned and what they wonder, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Unit 6.
- If about half of the students are able to identify what they learned and what they wonder, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Unit 6 but plan to monitor and support students who are having difficulty during their independent reading. You might have each student read a short passage from her book aloud to you and then ask her questions such as:

Q What is one thing that is interesting or surprising about what you just read?

Q What questions do you have about what you just read?

- If only a few students are able to identify what they learned and what they wonder, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating this week’s lessons using an alternative book before continuing on to Unit 6. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

5 Write in Reading Journals

Explain that each student will now write a journal entry about what she learned and wonders. Display the “Journal Entry” chart (WA5) and explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the text you are reading.
Please include:

- The title and the author’s name
- What the text is about
- Something you learned from the text
- Something the text made you wonder

WA5

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

6 Reflect on Working Together

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students worked together during the unit. Ask:

- Q What is one thing that you think you and your partner have done well during this unit?
- Q How did talking with your partner help you think about what you learned and what you wondered?

You may want to share some of your own observations about how the students worked together. Explain that each student will get a new partner for the next unit. Give partners a moment to thank each other.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Research and Report on Interesting People

Show the covers of Brave Harriet, Wilma Unlimited, and Sonia Sotomayor and remind the students that they heard these biographies earlier and learned about the lives of three famous American women: Harriet Quimby, Wilma Rudolph, and Sonia Sotomayor. Explain that today the students will research and report on other famous people they find interesting. Ask:

- Q Who is a person you have heard of that you would like to know more about?

Write the students' ideas where everyone can see them. Have each student select a person to research.

Help each student locate two reliable sources of information about the person he has selected. Sources might include books, magazine or web articles, encyclopedia entries, or interviews published in magazines or on the Internet.

Once each student has at least two sources, write the following questions where everyone can see them:

- Q Is the information in the sources the same? If not, how is it different?
- Q What is something interesting or surprising you learned about this person?

Have the students read their sources with these questions in mind. Then have them discuss in pairs the answers to the questions.

Help the students decide how to report the information they learned. For example, each student might write a paragraph, make a poster, or give an oral presentation. Make time for the students to write up and share their information.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Sonia Sotomayor to teach the Week 17 vocabulary lessons.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 5. You will need to reassign partners before you start the next unit.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Periodically, have a few students share with the class what they are reading at home.

Assessment

- Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students’ reading comprehension using the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1); see page 72 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Making Meaning®

THIRD EDITION

The Collaborative Classroom

The Collaborative Classroom differs from traditional learning environments in that students and teachers work together on shared academic and social goals.

The Collaborative Classroom is an intentional environment in which collaboration goes beyond conventional cooperation and compliance. Students become caring members of a learning community who take responsibility for their own learning. As students think, talk, and share ideas, they come to value the thinking of others. They become thoughtful readers and engaged speakers and listeners. They discuss and debate big ideas with respect, clarity, and understanding.

Making Meaning in a Collaborative Classroom

The Making Meaning program embodies the practices of the Collaborative Classroom.

Students in Making Meaning classrooms demonstrate:

- Close reading of varied, complex texts
- Strategies for unlocking word meanings
- Deeper understanding of content
- Ownership of their own learning
- Intrinsic motivation to remain on task
- Improved self-esteem
- An increase in academic performance

"I love how authentic the lessons and focus strategies are. It's what good readers, listeners, and community members do in real life."

Using Text Features

EXPOSITORY NONFICTION

During this unit, the students use text features to better understand information in expository nonfiction texts. They hear and read expository nonfiction texts, explore text features, and write in their reading journals. During IDR, the students identify text features in expository texts they read independently and confer with the teacher individually about their reading. Socially, they continue to develop the skills of contributing ideas that are different from their partners' ideas and taking responsibility for their learning and behavior.

Week 1

OVERVIEW

Morning Meals Around the World****

by Maryellen Gregoire, illustrated by Jeff Yesh

This book tells about the foods people eat for breakfast in different parts of the world.

**This book is also used in Week 4.*

Online Resources

Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to find your online resources for this week.

Assessment Forms

- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)
- “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1)

Professional Development Media

- “Avoid Repeating or Paraphrasing” (AV24)
- “Using Presentation Tools” tutorial (AV44)

Comprehension Focus

- Students use text features to better understand an expository nonfiction book.
- Students identify what they learn from the book.
- Students make text-to-self connections.
- Students read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students develop the skill of contributing ideas that are different from their partners' ideas.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this unit's read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding. Take time to show and discuss the text features.
- ✓ Make available expository nonfiction texts at a variety of levels so that the students can practice using text features during IDR and Independent Strategy Practice throughout the unit. Include some functional texts in the collection. For more information, see "About Expository Text" at the beginning of Day 1.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, collect examples of expository texts from the classroom to show to the students (see Step 2).
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title "Text Features."
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a class set of "IDR Conference Notes" record sheets (CN1); see page 89 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 82 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 17 lessons this week.

Materials

- Morning Meals Around the World
- Examples of expository texts, collected ahead
- “Text Features” chart, prepared ahead, and a marker
- Student Response Book pages 28–29
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- Class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1)
- Assessment Resource Book page 86

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin working with new partners
- Hear and discuss parts of an expository nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Use text features to better understand information in the book
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

ABOUT EXPOSITORY TEXT

Nonfiction plays an increasingly important role in learning as students progress through the elementary grades. Students must be able to read and understand both narrative nonfiction—such as biographies, memoirs, and other true stories—and expository texts, which are not written as stories. Expository texts include trade books, textbooks, newspapers, encyclopedias, online and print articles, how-to manuals, and many other informational or functional texts.

In this unit, the students will explore text features found in a variety of expository texts, including expository nonfiction books, articles, and functional texts. Collect trade books, textbooks, articles, and functional texts at various reading levels that contain examples of a range of features, such as back cover summaries, tables of contents, indexes, keywords, glossaries, text boxes, labeled diagrams, photographs, captions, maps, timelines, symbols, and legends. Your school or local library is a source of books, magazines (for example, Ranger Rick, National Geographic Kids, and Time for Kids), and newspapers. Textbooks can also be used, although they are often challenging for students to read. Read textbook passages aloud with the students before having them read them on their own. For more information, see “The Grade 3 Comprehension Strategies” in the Introduction.

1 Pair Students and Get Ready to Work Together

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other’s names. Explain that the students will work with these partners for the next four weeks. Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been working on taking responsibility for their learning and behavior and contributing ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas during their partner conversations. Tell them that they will continue to practice these skills this week. Explain that you will check in during the week to see how their partner work is going.

2 Introduce Expository Nonfiction

Remind the students that in previous lessons they heard biographies of Harriet Quimby, Wilma Rudolph, and Sonia Sotomayor. Tell them that this week they will hear and read another type of nonfiction called expository nonfiction. Explain that, like biographies, expository nonfiction texts give factual (or true) information, but, instead of being organized as stories, they are usually organized around a specific topic, such as a type of animal or a place in the world. Show the students the examples of expository texts you collected.

3 Introduce Morning Meals Around the World and Start the “Text Features” Chart

Explain that expository books often look different from books that tell stories. They often include features, or special parts or sections, that help the reader locate information in the text and understand the topic better. Explain that for the next several weeks the students will read expository texts, learn new information, and explore text features.

Show the front cover of Morning Meals Around the World and read the title and the author’s name aloud. Then show the back cover of the book and read the summary aloud. Explain that summaries like this one appear on the back covers of many expository books and let readers know what the books are about. Encourage the students to get in the habit of reading back cover summaries when they are choosing books to read.

Tell the students that this week they will be discussing the text features in Morning Meals Around the World. Direct the students’ attention to the “Text Features” chart and explain that you will use the chart to keep track of text features they talk about. Write summary on back cover on the chart.

4 Introduce the Table of Contents and Read Aloud

Show pages 4–5 of Morning Meals Around the World and explain that this feature, which is called the table of contents, tells readers the different chapters or sections in the book and the pages where each chapter or section begins. Add table of contents to the “Text Features” chart.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the topic of a text is the “subject of the text or what the text is about.”

TEKS 10.C.i
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 3 (first paragraph)

Teacher Note

If necessary, define morning meals as “breakfast, or food eaten in the morning.”

Teacher Note

Save the “Text Features” chart to use throughout the unit.

Have the students open to Student Response Book pages 28–29, where the table of contents from Morning Meals is reproduced. Ask:

Q What do you notice about this table of contents? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“The sections listed are all countries.”

If necessary, point out that this table of contents is organized on a map of the world. Explain that most tables of contents are organized as lists at the beginning of books. In pairs, have the students look at the table of contents and choose a country they would like to learn about. After a minute, ask:

Q Which country’s morning meal do you want to find out about? On which page or pages in the book will we find that information?

Choose one of the countries the students have suggested, and read that section aloud slowly and clearly. Repeat this process with several countries requested by the students. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

zing: exciting flavor (p. 9)

tortilla: flat bread shaped like a pancake (p. 14; refer to the illustration on p. 17)

veggies: vegetables (p. 17)

tofu: food made from soybeans (p. 18)

refreshing: pleasantly cool (p. 22)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

travel: go (p. 4)

sugarcoated: covered with sugar (p. 6)

waffles: crisp cakes (p. 7; refer to the illustration)

pancake: flat, thin cake (p. 8; refer to the illustration)

hot chocolate: warm drink made with chocolate and milk (p. 10)

popular: liked by a lot of people (p. 12)

rooster: male chicken (p. 17)

5 Discuss the Reading

Facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. As the students respond, reread the passages that support their thinking.

- Q According to the book, what are some of the different meals people eat in the morning?
- Q Which morning meals would you like to try? Why?

Remind the students that good readers use tables of contents to find sections or chapters that contain information they want to learn more about. Encourage the students to look for and use tables of contents when they read independently.

Tell the students that tomorrow they will explore another text feature in Morning Meals Around the World.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Review and Practice Self-monitoring and “Fix-up” Strategies

Refer to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and review the questions. Remind the students that it is important to stop, think about what they are reading, and use the questions on the chart to help them monitor their comprehension. If a student does not understand what he is reading, the student should use one or both of the “fix-up” strategies of rereading and reading ahead. If a student has tried both of the “fix-up” strategies and still does not understand the text, he can try the strategies listed on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart. Alternatively, the student might ask you or a classmate for help.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. Stop them twice during their reading and have them monitor their comprehension by thinking about the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart.

After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Beginning today, and continuing throughout the unit, confer individually with the students about the texts they are reading during IDR.

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, we encourage you to avoid repeating or paraphrasing students’ responses. It is easy to habitually repeat what students say when they speak too softly or to paraphrase them when they do not speak clearly. This teaches students to listen to you but not necessarily to one another. Try to refrain from repeating or paraphrasing, and see what happens. Encourage the students to take responsibility by asking one another to speak up or by asking a question if they do not understand what a classmate has said. (See “Additional Strategies for Supporting ELLs” in the Introduction for special considerations for English Language Learners.)

To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view “Avoid Repeating or Paraphrasing” (AV24).

ELL Note

To support your English Language Learners, you might model reading a text and stopping periodically to ask yourself the self-monitoring questions listed on the chart. Discuss each question with your students to make sure they understand the process.

Teacher Note

Provide time on a regular basis for the students to record the books they have completed in their reading logs.

Day 2

Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Morning Meals Around the World
- Student Response Book page 30
- “Text Features” chart from Day 1 and a marker
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and a marker

Teacher Note

Remind the students to use the discussion prompts they have learned during class discussions. The discussion prompts are:

- “I agree with _____ because . . .”
- “I disagree with _____ because . . .”
- “In addition to what _____ said, I think . . .”

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Facilitate a class discussion about using the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart to track their reading comprehension. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q Why is it important to stop as you are reading to ask yourself if you understand what you have read?
- Q How do rereading and reading ahead help you make sense of text?
- Q Which comprehension strategy do you find the most helpful when you’re not understanding something you’re reading? Why?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss parts of an expository nonfiction book
- Use the index to locate information in the book
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Discuss Taking Responsibility

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been working to build a reading community in which everyone feels welcome and safe. Review that one way they contribute to this community is by taking responsibility for their learning and behavior. Ask:

- Q What have you done to take responsibility for your own behavior and learning?
- Q What can you do in the coming days to make sure you are being responsible?

Students might say:

"I took responsibility by asking my partner and classmates questions when I didn't understand something they said."

"In addition to what [Lupe] said, I asked people to repeat what they said if I couldn't hear them."

"My partner contributed different ideas to our discussions and that helped me learn more about what we were talking about. I think he was taking responsibility when he brought up new ideas."

"I'm going to work on listening more closely to what my partner says and then contributing new ideas to our conversation."

As the students share, facilitate the conversation by asking questions such as:

- Q [Lupe] said she took responsibility for her learning when she [asked her partner questions]. Why is that a responsible thing to do?
- Q Why is it important to contribute your thinking to partner and class conversations? How does that help us build a supportive reading community?
- Q What can we do to be sure we [ask our classmates questions when we don't understand] in the coming weeks?

Encourage the students to keep these ideas in mind and to look for other opportunities to take responsibility during partner and group work.

2 Review Morning Meals Around the World and Introduce the Index

Show the cover of Morning Meals Around the World and review that the students looked at the back cover summary and the table of contents and heard about different morning meals from around the world. Explain that today the students will explore a text feature found at the end of many expository nonfiction books and learn more about morning meals around the world. Open to page 24 of Morning Meals and point to the index in the bottom right-hand corner of the page. Explain that this feature is called an index and that an index is a list of topics related to the subject of a book. The numbers listed beside the topics in an index tell the reader the pages where information about the topics appears.

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 30, where the index from Morning Meals is reproduced. Ask the students to follow along as you read the index aloud. If necessary, clarify any vocabulary as you read by simply stating which items are foods and which are countries. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

- Q What do you notice about the index? [pause] Turn to your partner.

ELL Note

Provide extra support for your English Language Learners by previewing the index prior to today's lesson. Model for your students how to use the index.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. As needed, point out that the topics are in alphabetical order and that some topics have one page number beside them, while other topics have more than one.

3 Explore the Index in Pairs and as a Class

Tell the students that partners will look at the index in their Student Response Books and together circle one or two of the listed topics that they want to learn more about.

Give the students a few moments to look over the index; then have a few pairs share what they circled with the class and explain why they are interested in those topics. Model using the index by turning to a page listed with the topic a student suggests. Locate where the food or country is mentioned on the page and read aloud the sentence that mentions it and, if appropriate, the entire paragraph in which it appears. If the index indicates that a topic can be found on more than one page, turn to the other pages on which it appears and follow the same procedure.

Explain that the index in a nonfiction book helps readers quickly find all the places in the book where a topic or a word is mentioned. Explain that readers often use the index if they have a question about a specific topic or want to find out more about it. Add index to the “Text Features” chart.

4 Add to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” Chart

Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and remind them that the chart lists comprehension strategies they have learned and can use when reading on their own. Review that text features such as back cover summaries, tables of contents, and indexes help readers locate information in expository texts and better understand the topics of those texts. Add using text features to the chart. Encourage the students to notice and use text features as they read independently and to think about how those features help them understand what they are reading.

Reading Comprehension Strategies

- visualizing
- making inferences about characters
- wondering/questioning
- using text features

5 Reflect on Taking Responsibility

Facilitate a brief class discussion about how the students did taking responsibility during the lesson. Ask:

Q How did you take responsibility as you were reading and talking with your partner today?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will continue to explore text features in Morning Meals Around the World.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Ask the students to think about what they are learning as they read independently today. Tell them that at the end of IDR, you will ask them to talk with partners about interesting things they learned from their texts. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share interesting things they learned from their reading with partners. Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Materials

- Morning Meals Around the World
- “Text Features” chart from Day 2 and a marker

Teacher Note

You will read and discuss the text features on page 24 in Step 4.

ELPS 4.G.ii
Step 3
 (all, beginning on page 322 and continuing on to page 323)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Make text-to-self connections
- Use text features to better understand information in the book
- Read independently for up 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Review Morning Meals Around the World and Text Features

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Morning Meals Around the World and review that in previous lessons the students used text features, including the table of contents and the index, to identify topics in the book they wanted to learn more about. Ask:

- Q How did we use the table of contents to find information in the book?
- Q How did we use the index?

Tell the students that today you will read the entire book straight through. Ask the students to listen carefully and to think about what they are learning as you read.

2 Read Aloud

Read pages 3–21 aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations. Clarify vocabulary as needed (see Suggested Vocabulary and ELL Vocabulary in Day 1, Step 4).

3 Discuss the Reading

Facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages to help the students recall what they heard.

- Q What is something interesting or surprising you learned about morning meals?
- Q What do you eat for your morning meals? Do your morning meals remind you of the morning meals in other countries? Which ones?

Students might say:

"On weekends we have pancakes like they do in Germany."

"Sometimes my dad makes breakfast quesadillas like they eat in Mexico."

"We have scrambled eggs like they do in Namibia, but our eggs come from chickens, not ostriches!"

4 Explore Text Features at the Back of the Book

Show the students page 24 of Morning Meals Around the World and explain that this page contains text features sometimes found at the end of expository nonfiction books.

Point out the "Fun Facts" section and explain that this section gives extra information about morning meals from around the world. Read the "Fun Facts" section aloud and ask:

Q What did you learn about morning meals from the "Fun Facts" section?

Q What fact did you think was fun? Why?

Add "fun facts" section to the "Text Features" chart.

Draw the students' attention to the "To Learn More" section. Explain that this is a list of other books about foods people eat around the world. This section is for readers who still have questions or want to find more information on the topic. Add "to learn more" section to the "Text Features" chart.

Point to the glossary and explain that a glossary is a list of words the author thinks readers might need to know to understand the book. Point out that a glossary is organized like a dictionary; it lists the words in alphabetical order and tells what each word means. Read the words and definitions in the glossary aloud. Then add glossary to the chart.

Have pairs discuss the following question:

 Q What new information did you learn from the text features at the back of Morning Meals Around the World? Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share their ideas.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Make Connections

Ask the students to notice as they read today what they are learning and also how the information in their books reminds them of their own lives. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share what they are reading with the class. Have each volunteer begin by telling the class the title of his text, the author’s name, and what the text is about. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is something surprising or interesting you learned from your reading today?
- Q Did anything you read remind you of your own life? Tell us about it.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

ELL Note

This extension is especially helpful for English Language Learners.

Technology Tip

For more information about creating class presentations, view the “Using Presentation Tools” tutorial (AV44).

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Write About Favorite Morning Meals

Give the students an opportunity to think about their favorite morning meals and discuss them in pairs. Have pairs discuss questions such as:

- Q What is your favorite morning meal?
- Q What foods or ingredients are used in the meal?
- Q Who makes your favorite meal?
- Q What do you like most about the meal?

Create a class presentation titled “Favorite Morning Meals” that can be shared. Have each student contribute a page or slide to it by writing paragraphs about her favorite morning meal and illustrating what she wrote using photographs, images from the Internet, or her own drawings.

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Identify what they learn from expository texts
- Use features of expository texts
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners' ideas

1 Review Text Features in Morning Meals Around the World

Have the students bring their texts for independent reading and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show Morning Meals Around the World and review that the book is an example of an expository nonfiction text—it gives factual, or true, information about a topic. Remind the students that people read expository texts to learn information about different subjects.

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you learn from Morning Meals Around the World?

Direct the students' attention to the "Text Features" chart and review that these are some of the text features in Morning Meals Around the World. Briefly review each feature by showing the page on which it appears and asking a volunteer to explain what it does.

2 Read Independently

Tell the students that today they will read expository texts independently. Explain that they will read silently for 10 minutes. After 10 minutes you will stop them and ask them to reread, thinking about what they are learning about the topics of their texts and what text features, if any, they notice.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have each student mark the place where she begins reading. Have the students read silently for 10 minutes.

3 Reread and Identify Information Learned

Stop the students after 10 minutes. Have each student go back to the place where he started reading, reread the text, and use additional self-stick notes to mark places in his text where he learned something.

Have the students reread for 10 minutes. Circulate as the students work, and notice whether they are able to identify what they have learned.

Materials

- Morning Meals Around the World
- "Text Features" chart from Day 3
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA1)

4 Discuss the Reading

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students discuss in pairs what they learned from their reading today. Encourage partners to ask each other questions about what they learned.

After partners have had a chance to talk, invite a few volunteers to share their reading with the class. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is your text about?
- Q What is something surprising or interesting that you learned from your reading today?
- Q What text features did you notice in your text? How did they help you learn about the topic or locate information?

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to identify what they have learned from their reading?
- Are they noticing text features?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1) on page 82 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to identify what they have learned, continue on to Week 2.
- If about half of the students are able to identify what they have learned, continue on to Week 2 and plan to monitor and support students who are having difficulty during their independent reading. Ask questions such as:
  - Q What are you reading about?
  - Q What have you learned about [Abraham Lincoln] from what you have read so far?
- If only a few students are able to identify what they have learned, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating this week’s lessons using an alternative book before continuing on to Week 2. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Morning Meals Around the World to teach the Week 18 vocabulary lessons.

Tell the students that they will continue to read expository texts and explore text features in the coming weeks. Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

EXTENSION

List Expository Texts from Daily Life

Have the students use their reading journals to make an ongoing list of expository texts they read both in school and outside of school. During the next two weeks, give the students regular opportunities to update their lists and share them with one another. Sharing the lists will help the students recognize how many different kinds of expository texts they encounter and discover some of the reasons they read them. It will also make them aware of what their classmates are reading.

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3 and Step 4 (all,
beginning on page 330 and
continuing on to page 331)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss parts of an expository nonfiction book
- Use text features to better understand information in the book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been working on contributing ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How does contributing different ideas to your partner discussions help you and your partner learn more about the topic you are discussing?

Ask the students to continue to contribute different ideas to their partner discussions today.

2 Review Expository Nonfiction and Text Features

Remind the students that earlier they heard the expository nonfiction book Morning Meals Around the World and read expository texts independently. Review that an expository text gives factual, or true, information about a particular topic. Direct the students’ attention to the “Text Features” chart and review that expository texts often include text features, such as summaries, tables of contents, indexes, and glossaries, that provide additional information or help readers find information in the text. Tell the students that this week they will continue to explore expository texts and text features.

3 Introduce Homes and Discuss Text Features

Show the cover of Homes and read the title and the author’s name aloud. Explain that this expository book is about the many ways that science is at work in our homes. Show the back cover and remind the students that the back covers of expository books often have summaries that let readers know what the books are about. Read the first paragraph on the back cover (beginning with “Discover the science behind homes”) aloud. Ask:

Q What do you expect to learn from this book?

Open to the table of contents on page 3 and review that a table of contents lists the chapters in a book and the page number on which each chapter starts. Tell the students that today you will read from the first two chapters, “Science in Your Home” and “Building Homes.”

4 Read Aloud and Use Text Features

Explain that you will stop during the reading so the students can discuss what they are learning and think about text features. Turn to page 4 and read the chapter title and the main text on the page aloud.

Point to the diagram on page 5 and explain that expository texts often include diagrams like this one that help readers make sense of the information in the text. Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 31, where the diagram is reproduced. Explain that a diagram is a special kind of picture that shows the different parts of something. Explain that diagrams often include labels, or words that point to and identify the different parts, and a caption that describes what the diagram is about. Ask the students to follow along as you read the caption and the labels in the diagram aloud. Ask:

 Q What did you learn from this diagram about the parts of a house that use science? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share what they learned with the class. Add labeled diagrams and captions to the “Text Features” chart.

Tell the students that the next part you will read describes the science that goes into building a home. Read the main text on page 6 aloud. Point to the photograph on page 6 and explain that expository texts often have photographs like this one with accompanying captions that tell what they are about. Read the caption aloud. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What kind of material do you think would be good for building a house? Why? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

“Something strong, like brick or concrete.”

“Material that’s waterproof, so no rain can get in.”

“In addition to what [Len and Sonia] said, the material should be something that lasts a long time, like stone.”

Add photographs to the “Text Features” chart.

Skip page 7 and read the main text on pages 8 and 9 aloud. Then point to and read the captions on pages 8 and 9. If time permits, facilitate a brief discussion about the question in the caption on page 8.

Teacher Note

To avoid overwhelming the students with information, skip reading the text in the pink boxes that appear on some pages.

Teacher Note

Keywords (in bold type) are defined on the bottom of the pages on which the words appear and in the glossary on pages 28-29; you may wish to define these words for the students as you read. You will discuss keywords and glossaries with the students on Day 3 (see Step 3).

Facilitation Tip

Continue to try to avoid repeating or paraphrasing students' responses. Help the students learn to participate responsibly in class discussions by encouraging them to ask one another to speak up or to ask a question if they do not understand what a classmate has said. (See "Additional Strategies for Supporting ELLs" in the Introduction for special considerations for English Language Learners.)

5 Discuss the Reading

Facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Reread the parts of the text that support the students' thinking as they share.

Q What did you learn from the reading today?

Q What do you wonder?

Tell the students that they will hear more of the book and continue to explore its text features in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Preview Texts Before Reading and Read Independently

Direct the students' attention to the "Text Features" chart and review that readers can preview texts before reading by looking at features such as the back cover summaries and tables of contents. Ask the students to take the time to do this today before starting to read even if they are already partway through their texts.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Facilitate a class discussion about the students' reading using question such as:

Q What did you learn by previewing your text before reading?

Q What did you learn about the topic of your text?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss parts of an expository nonfiction book
- Use text features to better understand information in the book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners' ideas

1 Get Ready to Read

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Homes and review that earlier the students heard about the science that goes into building homes and discussed some text features in the book, including labeled diagrams, captions, and photographs. Show the table of contents on page 3 and explain that today you will read from the chapter titled “Keeping Warm and Keeping Cool.” Ask:

Q What do you think you know about how your home stays warm and cool?

Students might say:

“We have a furnace that heats the house in the winter.”

“In the summer we put air conditioners in all our windows to make the apartment cool.”

“We have radiators on the walls in our house.”

Ask the students to listen carefully to the reading and to think about what they are learning about how homes stay warm and cool. Explain that you will stop during the reading so the students can discuss what they have learned and talk about the text features. Remind them to contribute different ideas during their partner discussions.

2 Read Aloud and Use Text Features

Tell the students that the first part you will read describes one way some homes get heat. Read the chapter title and the main text on page 10 aloud slowly and clearly. Then point to the diagram at the bottom of the page and read the caption and labels aloud. Point out that the red line and arrows show how hot water flows from the boiler to radiators around the house. The blue line shows how cool water from the radiators flows back to the boiler. As a class, discuss the questions that follow.

Materials

- Homes
- “Text Features” chart from Day 1

Teacher Note

Keywords (in bold type) are defined on the bottom of the pages on which the words appear and in the glossary on pages 28-29; you may wish to define these words for the students as you read. You will discuss keywords and glossaries with the students on Day 3 (see Step 3).

Reread the text and point to the parts of the diagram that support the students' thinking as they share.

Q What did you learn about how some houses get heat?

Q How does the diagram help you understand how a central-heating system works?

Students might say:

"Some houses have boilers that boil water to make heat."

"The diagram shows how hot water travels from the boiler to the radiators."

"It also shows how the cool water goes from the radiators back to the boiler."

"It helped me understand how pipes connect the boiler to the radiators."

Tell the students that the next part you will read describes how some homes keep heat in. Skip page 11 and read the main text on page 12 aloud. Then point to the diagram at the bottom of the page and read the caption and labels. Ask:

Q What did you learn about how some homes keep heat in? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share what they learned; as they share, reread the text and point to the parts of the diagram that support their thinking.

Explain that the next part you will read describes how some homes stay cool when it is hot outside. Read the main text on page 13 aloud. Then point to the photograph and read the accompanying caption. Ask:

Q What did you learn about how some homes stay cool? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share what they learned.

3 Discuss the Reading

Facilitate a class discussion using the following questions:

Q What is something surprising or interesting you learned from the reading today?

Q What are some other ways to make a home warm or cool?

Students might say:

"I learned that insulation in walls and windows keeps heat in."

"If the house has a fireplace, you can build fires to make it warm."

"You can plant trees outside your home for shade to keep it cool."

Tell the students that you will read more of the book in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Use Text Features

Ask the students to notice and use the text features in their texts as they read independently today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Ask:

Q What text features did you notice in your text?

Add any new text features the students mention to the “Text Features” chart and have the students show them to the class. Briefly discuss each new feature and what information it adds to the text.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss parts of an expository nonfiction book
- Use text features to better understand information in the book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Identify text features in other expository nonfiction books
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

1 Get Ready to Read

Materials

- Homes
- “Text Features” chart from Day 2 and a marker
- Student Response Book page 32
- Expository nonfiction books with text features, one for each pair of students, collected ahead
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

Teacher Note

Keywords (in bold type) are defined at the bottom of the pages on which the words appear and in the glossary on pages 28–29; you may wish to define these words for the students as you read. You will discuss keywords and glossaries with the students in Step 3.

Homes and review that the students heard about the science that goes into building homes and keeping them warm and cool. Show the table of contents on page 3 and explain that today you will read the chapter “Machines That Help Us.” Ask the students to listen carefully to the reading and to think about what they are learning about machines that help us in our homes. Explain that you will stop during the reading so that the students can discuss what they are learning and talk about text features. Remind them to contribute different ideas during their partner discussions.

2 Read Aloud

Tell the students that the first part you will read describes some of the simple tools found in many homes. Read pages 20–21 aloud slowly and clearly, including the chapter title, captions, and labels. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What are some useful tools in your home? What do they help you do?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class. Tell the students that the next part you will read describes some common appliances found in homes. Explain that appliances are machines that use electricity. Read aloud the main text on page 22 and the captions on pages 22 and 23. Ask:

Q What did you learn about how a dishwasher works? What about how a washing machine works?

3 Explore Other Features in Homes

Turn back to the table of contents (page 3) and point out that the last three items in the list are text features that appear at the back of the book. Turn to the glossary on page 28 and remind the students that a glossary is a list of words that the author thinks readers might need to know to understand the book. Review that a glossary is organized like a dictionary; it lists the words in alphabetical order and tells what each word means.

Turn to page 22 and point out the word appliances in the first paragraph. Explain that appliances is in bold type to let readers know they can look it up in the glossary to find out what it means. Turn back to the glossary and read the definition of appliance aloud. Explain that words defined in a glossary sometimes appear in the text in colored print or in italics (slanted type) instead of in bold type. Explain that such words are called keywords. Add keywords to the “Text Features” chart.

Turn to pages 30–31 and point out that the “Find Out More” section in Homes is like the “To Learn More” section in Morning Meals Around the World. These sections list resources like books and websites that readers can use to find out more about a topic.

Show the index on page 32 and review that readers can use the index to help them find specific information about topics mentioned in the book. Remind the students that the topics in an index are listed in alphabetical order.

4 Look for Text Features in Other Expository Nonfiction Books

Ask the students to open to Student Response Book page 32, “Text Features.” Tell the students that you will give each pair an expository nonfiction book and that partners will look through the book to see what features they can find. Explain that some of the features may be the same as those in Morning Meals Around the World and Homes, while others may be different. (For example, they may see maps, charts, graphs, and text boxes.)

Distribute the books you collected—one to each pair. Have partners page through the books together, identifying and discussing text features they come across. Have them list the text features they find on Student Response Book page 32. Circulate among the students as they work. Notice whether they are finding expository text features and whether they understand what information the features contribute.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students recognizing text features?
- Are they able to say what the features contribute to the text?

- If all or most students are recognizing text features, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are recognizing text features, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

5 Discuss Text Features as a Class

When the students finish, discuss their findings as a class. Ask:

- Q What features did you find that are already listed on the chart? How are they used?
- Q What features did you find that are not listed on the chart? How are they used?

TEKS 10.C.i

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 4 and Step 5 (all,
beginning on page 337 and
continuing on to page 338)

Teacher Note

The students may need help naming features (for example, headings, bold or italicized type, framed text, or colored text) and explaining how they are used.

As the students mention new features, add them to the “Text Features” chart.

6 Reflect on Sharing Different Ideas

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students shared different ideas. Ask:

Q How was it sharing different ideas today? Why is it helpful to share different ideas?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Use Text Features

Ask the students to notice and use the text features in their texts as they read independently today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share the texts they are reading with partners and point out any text features they noticed. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

EXTENSION

Find and Discuss Features in Textbooks

Have partners look for text features in their science and social studies textbooks. As a class, discuss the text features and how they help the reader understand the information in the books. Encourage the students to use the various text features in their textbooks as they read.

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Identify what they learn from expository nonfiction texts
- Use text features to better understand information in the texts
- Write in their reading journals
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Review Expository Text

Make sure each student has an expository nonfiction book at an appropriate reading level that includes a back cover summary, a table of contents, and an index. Have the students bring their books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been reading and discussing expository nonfiction texts and using text features to locate and understand information within the texts. Refer to the “Text Features” chart and remind the students that this is a list of the text features they have encountered so far. Ask:

Q What have you learned about expository text this week?

2 Read and Discuss the Back Cover Summaries and Tables of Contents

Explain that today the students will read and explore text features in their own expository nonfiction books. Review that readers can find out what an expository nonfiction book is about by reading the information on the back cover and in the table of contents. Explain that each student will read the information on the back cover of her book as well as the table of contents. Then partners will talk about the topics of their books and what information they think they will learn by reading them.

Have each student take a few minutes to silently read the back cover summary and table of contents of her book. Then have partners share the topics of their books and what information they think they will find in the books. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and invite a few volunteers to share their books with the class. Ask:

Q What is the topic of your book?

Q How did the summary on the back of the book and the table of contents help you know what your book is about?

Materials

- Expository nonfiction books with back cover summaries, tables of contents, and indexes, collected ahead
- “Text Features” chart from Day 3
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA1)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section

ELPS 4.C.iii
Step 2 (all)

Teacher Note

This question gives you an opportunity to informally assess the students’ learning this week. To gauge their understanding, you may need to ask follow-up questions such as:

Q What is the purpose of expository text?

Q What features of expository text have we identified?

Q How does noticing features of expository text help us make sense of it?

ELL Note

You may want to model this activity for your English Language Learners.

ELPS 4.C.iii
Step 3 (all)

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

3 Read and Discuss Indexes

Have each student turn to the index at the back of his book. Review that an index helps readers locate information about specific topics without having to look through the entire book. Ask each student to select an entry in his index, identify the pages where he will find information about that entry, and then read those pages silently.

 After the students have read for several minutes, have each student share with his partner the topic he selected and what he found out about it from the pages he read.

As a class, briefly discuss the following questions:

- Q What word or topic did you look up using the index?
- Q What information did you find out about [New York City]?
- Q What did you notice about using the index of your book?

4 Read Independently

Tell the students that they will now read independently for 15 minutes. Ask them to notice and use the text features in their books and to think about what they are learning as they read. Explain that later they will write about what they learned and the text features they noticed in their reading journals.

Have the students read silently for 15 minutes. As they read, circulate among them and ask individual students to tell you what their texts are about and what features, if any, they have noticed. You might probe their thinking with questions such as:

- Q What are you learning about the topic of this book?
- Q What is one feature on this page that adds to your understanding? What information does this feature give you?

5 Write in Reading Journals

Display the “Journal Entry” chart ( WA1) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading. Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What the book is about
- What you learned from the part you read today
- A text feature you used
- What you learned from the text feature

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Have the students return to their desks and write in their reading journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

Explain that the students will continue to read and think about expository nonfiction in the coming weeks.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty writing about how text features helped them understand the text, you might use a nonfiction text the students are familiar with to model writing a journal entry. For example, you might write: I am reading the book Homes by Chris Oxlade. This book is about the different kinds of science at work in your home. One text feature I used was a diagram of a central-heating system in the section about keeping homes warm and cool. This diagram helped me understand how a boiler heats a house.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Homes to teach the Week 19 vocabulary lessons.

Teacher Notes in margins,
beginning on page 344 and
continuing on to page 347)

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been working on listening carefully to what their partners say and contributing different ideas during partner discussions. Encourage the students to continue to practice these skills, and explain that this week you would also like them to think about how they take responsibility for their learning and behavior.

2 Review Using Text Features and Introduce “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork”

Remind the students that they have been exploring a type of nonfiction called expository nonfiction, which gives factual information about particular topics. They heard two expository nonfiction books and used text features to help them locate and better understand information in those books. Refer to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and review that good readers use text features to help them make sense of expository text.

Explain that this week the students will look at text features in expository nonfiction articles. Point out that articles might appear in newspapers, in magazines, or on websites. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What newspapers, magazines, or websites have you seen or read?
- Q Why do people read newspapers, magazines, and websites?

Tell the students that the article you will read aloud today is titled “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork.” Explain that the article describes how the game of hopscotch is played around the world. Tell the students that you will stop during the reading so they can talk about what they have learned.

3 Read Aloud and Discuss Text Features

Have the students turn to “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork” on Student Response Book pages 34–35. Tell the students that the first part of the article describes how the game of hopscotch started and how it became popular around the world. Explain that you will read the first part twice, and ask the students to follow along in their Student Response Books.

Read the first two paragraphs of “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork” and the section “Hopping Around the World” aloud twice slowly and clearly. Clarify vocabulary during the first reading.

Suggested Vocabulary

training exercise: something you do to make your body stronger (p. 358)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

courts: special places for playing a game (p. 358)

imitated: copied (p. 358)

popular: liked by many people (p. 358)

changed the game in their own way: played the game in a different way (p. 358)

Stop after:

p. 358 “For example, in Alaska, the squares are not named or numbered.”

Ask:

Q What have you learned about the game of hopscotch? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class.

Direct the students’ attention to the second page of the article and point out that the information on this page is organized into two boxes called text boxes. Explain that text boxes such as these provide additional information about a topic, such as how to play a traditional game of hopscotch. Ask the students to follow along as you read the information in the “How to Play” text box aloud. As a class, discuss:

Q What did you find out about playing a traditional game of hopscotch?

Q Is this how you play hopscotch? If not, what do you do differently?

Technology Tip

You may wish to display a world map on the whiteboard and point out the countries and continents mentioned in the article as you read.

For more information, view the “Using Web-based Maps and Related Tools” tutorial (AV49).

Explain that the second text box describes how hopscotch is played in France and Alaska. Have the students follow along as you read “Hopping in France” and “An Alaskan Pastime” aloud.

Add text boxes to the “Text Features” chart.

4 Discuss the Article

Discuss the questions that follow as a class. As students share, ask them to read aloud the parts of the article that support their thinking.

Q How has hopscotch changed since Roman times?

Q What did you learn about hopscotch that surprised you?

5 Discuss Text Features

Call the students’ attention to the illustrations of the different hopscotch courts and read the accompanying captions aloud. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How do these illustrations help you understand the information in the article?

Students might say:

“You can see what the hopscotch courts look like.”

“In addition to what [Ana] said, it shows how the courts are different for hopscotch in different places.”

“When I look at the hopscotch court, I can imagine playing the game.”

Explain that expository texts sometimes contain illustrations like these that help readers understand information in text. Add illustrations to the “Text Features” chart.

6 Reflect on Taking Responsibility

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How did you take responsibility for your learning and behavior today? Why is that important to do?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Identify Information Learned

Encourage the students to use text features and to think about what they are learning as they read independently today. Explain that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of them to share what they have learned from their texts or from text features in their texts. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share what they learned from their texts or from text features in their texts. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is your [magazine] about?
- Q What information have you learned from reading the [magazine]?
- Q What did you learn from reading the text features in the [magazine]?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

EXTENSION

Play Hopscotch

Reread “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork” aloud as the students follow along in their Student Response Books. Encourage the students to try the different variations of hopscotch at recess. Ask the students to report on which version they liked the best and why.

Materials

- “Origami: The Art of Japanese Paper Folding” (see pages 360–361)
- Student Response Book pages 36–37
- “Text Features” chart from Day 1 and a marker

Step 1 (all)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction article
- Use text features to better understand information in the article
- Identify what they learn from the article
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Use Text Features to Preview “Origami: The Art of Japanese Paper Folding”

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday the students read the article “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork” and discussed the article’s text features. Explain that today they will read another article and look at more text features that help readers make sense of expository nonfiction.

Explain that today’s article is about a special way of folding paper called origami. Have the students open to “Origami: The Art of Japanese Paper Folding” on Student Response Book pages 36–37. Draw the students’ attention to the article’s title and headings and point out that they are in bold type so that readers can see them easily. Explain that the title and headings are text features that help readers know what information might be in an article.

Have the students follow along in their Student Response Books as you read the title and headings aloud; then ask and briefly discuss:

Q After reading the title and headings, what do you think you might learn from this article?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

“We might learn where origami comes from.”

“I agree with [Chris], and we might find out how old origami is.”

“We might learn about origami around the world.”

Draw the students’ attention to the map on the first page and explain that origami is an art form popular in Japan, a country in Asia. Explain that maps like this one give readers more information about important places mentioned in expository nonfiction.

Add title, headings, and maps to the “Text Features” chart.

2 Read Aloud

Have the students follow along as you read “Origami: The Art of Japanese Paper Folding” aloud. Clarify vocabulary as you read, and stop as described below. At each stop, use “Turn to Your Partner” to have the students discuss what they learned from the part they just heard.

Suggested Vocabulary

creases: lines made by folding something (p. 360)

unusual-looking life-forms: strange creatures (p. 361)

the Massachusetts Institute of Technology: a famous university (p. 361)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

ancient: very old (p. 360)

modern appeal: something that people like now (p. 360) objects: things or pieces (p. 360)

express: show what they are feeling or thinking (p. 361)

Stop after:

p. 360 “Some artists use wet paper to achieve a more rounded look; others experiment with unusual materials, such as cloth, wire, sheet metal, and even toilet paper.”

p. 361 “And many people fold paper just because it’s fun.”

Skip the information in the “One Thousand Paper Cranes” text box, which you will read after discussing the article.

3 Discuss the Article

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you find out about origami from this article?

Q What is something you would like to make with origami?

4 Read the “One Thousand Paper Cranes” Text Box

Direct the students’ attention to the text box on the second page of the article and review that a text box might tell a story related to the article or give readers more information about the topic. Explain that this text box tells about a girl named Sadako Sasaki who wanted to fold one thousand origami cranes. Have the students follow along as you read “One Thousand Paper Cranes” aloud. Ask:

Q What did you learn about Sadako Sasaki?

ELL Note

You might prompt the students to begin their responses by saying, “I found out . . .” and “I would like to make . . .”

Invite a few volunteers to share their ideas. Then tell the students that they will read and discuss another article with text features in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Discuss Text Features

Ask the students to notice and use the text features in their texts as they read independently today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share their texts in pairs. Ask partners to show each other the text features they noticed and describe how they used each feature. Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction article
- Use text features to better understand information in the article
- Describe the connections between paragraphs in the article
- Describe the connections between a series of historical events
- Write in their reading journals
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes

1 Use Text Features to Preview “Jump Rope: Then and Now”

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that earlier they read and discussed an expository nonfiction article about the game of hopscotch. Explain that today they will read an article about another popular schoolyard pastime: jumping rope.

Have the students turn to “Jump Rope: Then and Now” on Student Response Book pages 38–39. Remind the students that an article’s title and headings let readers know what kind of information to expect from the article. Read the title and headings aloud; then ask:

Q What information do you expect to learn from this article?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

“I think we’ll learn how jump rope came to America.”

“We might learn about how jump rope has changed over time.”

“We’ll learn some important dates in the history of jump rope.”

2 Read Aloud

Explain that the first section of the article you will read tells about the origins of jumping rope, or how it began. The next section of the article, “Coming to America,” explains how jumping rope became popular in the United States. Ask the students to follow along as you read the first two sections of “Jump Rope: Then and Now” aloud. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

Dutch: people from the Netherlands (p. 362)

Materials

- “Jump Rope: Then and Now” (see pages 362–363)
- Student Response Book pages 38–39
- “Text Features” chart from Day 2 and a marker
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA2)

TEKS 6.C.iv

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 1 (discussion question)

Ask:

Q What are some reasons that jumping rope became popular in America?

Students might say:

"It's easy to learn."

"All you need to do it is a rope."

"It's good exercise."

Point out that authors of expository nonfiction are careful to organize information in their texts in ways that make sense. Tell the students that you will reread the "Coming to America" section and that you want them to follow along and think about how the information within the section is organized. Reread the section. As a class, discuss:

Q How is the information in this section organized? What is the first paragraph about? The second? The third?

If necessary, point out that the information in the section is organized chronologically, or by what happened first, next, and last. The first paragraph tells about how jumping rope came to America in the 1600s. The second paragraph tells about jumping rope in America in the 1940s and 1950s, and the third paragraph tells about jumping rope in the 1970s.

Tell the students that the last part of the article describes some of the ways people are jumping rope today. Read "Jumping Today" aloud as the students follow along. Ask:

Q What did you learn from this section? Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share their ideas.

3 Read and Discuss Text Features

Ask the students to look at the "Jump Rope Songs" text box, and remind them that text boxes provide additional information about a topic. Have the students follow along as you read the paragraph at the top of the text box aloud. Then invite the students to read the jump rope song aloud with you.

Draw the students' attention to the feature "Important Dates in Modern Jump Rope History." Explain that this is a timeline that shows important events in the history of jumping rope, organized in the order in which they happened. Tell the students that nonfiction texts sometimes include timelines like this one to help readers understand the order in which events took place. Have the students follow along as you read the dates and events on the timeline aloud. First in pairs, and then as a class, discuss the following questions:

Q Which happened first, the "Jump-Rope-A-Thon" at Riverside High School or the FISAC-IRSF World Rope Skipping Championships event in Toronto?

Q When and where did the U.S. National Jump Rope Championship listed on the timeline take place?

Add timeline to the "Text Features" chart.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Write in Reading Journals

Have the students get their pencils and texts for independent reading and find places to sit and read. Ask the students to notice what text features appear in their texts and to think about what the text features help them learn. Explain that later the students will write about the text features and what they learned in their reading journals.

Have the students read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Display the “Journal Entry” chart (WA2) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the text you are reading.

Please include:

- The title and the author’s name
- What the text is about
- What you learned from the part of the text you read today
- Any text features you noticed
- One thing you learned from a text feature

WA2

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class and show the text features they found in their reading. If the students identify text features not yet discussed in the class, add the features to the “Text Features” chart.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

ELL Note

Consider having your students with limited English proficiency dictate journal entries for you to write down.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Compare and Contrast Two Articles About Sidewalk Games

Remind the students that earlier they heard and discussed an expository nonfiction article about hopscotch and another about jumping rope. Explain that today they will revisit the two articles and think about how the two articles are alike and how they are different. Have the students open to pages 34–35 of their Student Response Books and look at the article “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork.” Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you remember learning about hopscotch from this article?

Q What are some text features in this article?

Use the same procedure to review the article “Jump Rope: Then and Now” on pages 38–39 of the Student Response Book. Then ask:

Q In what ways are these two articles alike?

Q In what ways are they different?

Students might say:

“Both articles are about games we play at recess.”

“They both tell about how the games changed over time.”

“In addition to what [Sophie and Carlos] said, there are photographs and text boxes in both articles.”

“‘Hop to It’ gives instructions for hopscotch, but there are no instructions in the other article for jumping rope.”

“‘Jump Rope’ has a timeline and ‘Hop to It’ doesn’t.”

Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about how the articles are alike and how they are different.

You might say:

“First, I want to describe some of the ways the two articles are alike. I’ll write: The articles ‘Hop to It’ and ‘Jump Rope’ are alike in some ways. Both are about simple sidewalk games that have been popular for a long time. They both give information about how the games began and how they have changed over time. Also, both articles have photographs of kids playing the games and text boxes that give additional information. Now I want to write about some of the things that are different about the two articles. I’ll write: The articles are also different in some ways. ‘Hop to It’ gives instructions for playing hopscotch, but ‘Jump Rope’ doesn’t tell you how to jump rope. Also, ‘Jump Rope’ includes a timeline with important dates while ‘Hop to It’ does not.”

Have the students write about how the two articles are alike and different. If time permits, ask a few volunteers to share their writing with the class.

EXTENSION

Create a Timeline of Important Classroom Events

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 39 and look at the timeline in the article “Jump Rope: Then and Now.” Review that this timeline shows important jump rope events, organized in the order in which they happened.

Explain that together the class will make a timeline of important events that have happened in the classroom this year. Have the students brainstorm events (for example, projects, visitors, class trips, or parties) that they consider important. Write their ideas where everyone can see them. Have the students add dates to the events. Then, using the timeline in “Jump Rope: Then and Now” as a model, invite the students to organize the events chronologically in a timeline.

You might post the timeline in the classroom and have the students add to it periodically during the school year.

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you might invite the students to make timelines of important events in their lives. If you do this, you might encourage the students to ask their parents to help them identify key dates in their personal timelines.

Guided Strategy Practice

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Identify and write about information learned from text features in expository nonfiction articles
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Review Text Features

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that this week the students read and discussed three expository nonfiction articles with text features. Direct the students’ attention to the “Text Features” chart and remind them that they thought about how illustrations, text boxes, titles, headings, maps, and timelines help readers understand information in expository nonfiction text. Point to illustrations and ask:

Q How do illustrations help readers understand information in expository text?

Have one or two students share their thinking. Have the students briefly browse through the three articles on Student Response Book pages 34–39, and ask for a volunteer to identify and show an example of an illustration in one of the articles. Review text boxes, titles, headings, maps, and timelines in the same way.

Materials

- “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork” (see pages 358–359)
- “Origami: The Art of Japanese Paper Folding” (see pages 360–361)
- “Jump Rope: Then and Now” (see pages 362–363)
- “Text Features” chart from Day 3
- Student Response Book pages 33–39
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3)

TEKS 10.C.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 2–4 (all, beginning on page 356 and continuing on
to page 357)

Teacher Note

Text features in “Origami” include a title, headings, a text box, a map, captions, and photographs. Text features in “Jump Rope” include a title, headings, a text box, a timeline, a caption, and a photograph.

2 Discuss Information Learned from Text Features

Have the students turn to “Hop to It: Fancy Footwork” on Student Response Book pages 34–35 and quietly review the article on their own. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask:

Q What text features does this article have?

If necessary, point out that the article has a title, headings, illustrations, captions, photographs, and a text box. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What is something you learned from a text feature in the article? [pause]
Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share with the class. Ask them to point out features they reference as they share.

Students might say:

“I learned what French and Alaskan hopscotch courts look like from the illustrations.”

“From the caption on page 35 I learned that a traditional hopscotch court has eight or ten squares.”

Use the same procedure to discuss what the students learned from text features in the articles “Origami” and “Jump Rope.”

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to identify text features in the articles?
- Are they able to say what they learned from the text features?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3); see page 84 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to identify text features and say what they learned from them, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Week 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to identify text features and say what they learned from them, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating this week’s lessons using alternative texts before continuing on to Week 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

3 Write About Information Learned from Text Features

After the students have discussed the text features in all three articles, have each student turn to Student Response Book page 33, “Three Things I Learned from Text Features in the Articles,” and record three things she learned from text features in the articles.

4 Share What Students Learned as a Class

When most students have finished writing, signal for their attention and invite a few volunteers to share what they wrote with the class. Ask follow-up questions such as:

Q [Max] said that he learned from [the timeline in “Jump Rope”] that [the first double Dutch tournament was held in 1974]. What is something else you learned from [the timeline]?

Q Why do you think the author included [the map] in [“Origami”]?

Explain that next week the students will look at another type of expository nonfiction and discuss it with their partners and as a class.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Discuss Text Features

Ask the students to notice and use the text features in their texts as they read independently today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share their texts in pairs. Ask partners to show each other the text features they noticed and describe how they used each feature. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

If students are having difficulty, stimulate their thinking by asking questions such as:

Q What did you learn about Sadako Sasaki from the text box in “Origami”?

Q What is something you learned about jump rope from the timeline in “Jump Rope”?

Q What did you learn about Japan from the map and the caption that goes with it in “Origami”?

Alternatively, you might signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share what they wrote.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit “Origami: The Art of Japanese Paper Folding” to teach the Week 20 vocabulary lessons.

HOP TO IT: Fancy Footwork

Looking for a fun outdoor game? Grab a piece of chalk, a stone, and a friend. What can you play? Hopscotch!

The first hopscotch courts were made around 2,000 years ago. Imagine a hopscotch court 100 feet long—about the length of a professional basketball court. That’s how big the first courts were. They were not made for fun, either. Instead, they were used for a training exercise. Roman soldiers would dress in heavy armor and run from one end of the court to the other and back again. This exercise helped them stay quick on their feet.

Hopping Around the World

Roman children watched the soldiers and imitated them. They drew smaller courts on the ground with chalk and made their own rules. Hopscotch became a game! Their game was simple to learn yet challenging to play. It quickly became popular throughout Europe. Later, it spread to Asia and America.

In every country, children changed the game in their own way. In France, the court is drawn in the shape of a snail. In Bolivia, the squares in the court are named for the days of the week. In the United States, hopscotch is played in many ways. For example, in Alaska, the squares are not named or numbered.

Hopscotch is a simple game with a long history. Over the centuries, it has spread all over the world. Hopscotch proves that the simplest games are often the most popular.

A traditional hopscotch court has eight or ten squares. Once you have learned how to play and how to hop on one leg, it's a lot of fun.

How to Play

To play a game of traditional hopscotch, all you need is one traditional hopscotch court (you can draw one with chalk), one stone, and two or more people. Make sure all the players know these rules:

- A player must toss the stone into every square in sequence.
- Players must land with only one foot in any square.
- Players can't land on a line.
- Players can't hop into any square that is holding the stone.
- A player's turn ends if he or she breaks any of the above rules or if the stone doesn't land in the right square when it is tossed.

When it's your turn, toss the stone into square 1 and then hop on one leg into square 2. Next, jump into squares 3 and 4 so that your left foot is in square 3 and your right foot is in square 4. Continue to hop and jump to the end of the court (making sure only one foot lands in each square!). Now, turn around in the "home" square and hop back to the beginning of the court, pausing to pick up the stone in square 1 before you hop out.

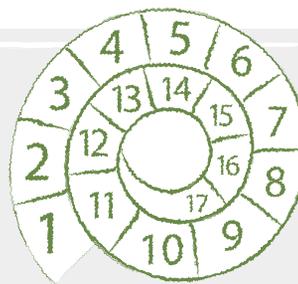

Once you've completed the first pass through the court, toss the stone into square 2 and hop through the court again, hopping over the square that has your stone in it and picking up the stone on your way back. Continue throwing your stone into the next square and hopping through the court again until you step on a line or fall. Then it's the next player's turn! When it's your turn again, continue by tossing the stone into the last square you aimed for. The first player who is able to hop through the course with his or her stone in the last square is the winner!

Hopping in France

In the French hopscotch game, no stone is used. The player hops through the spiral shape, from square 1 to square 17. Then the player hops back to the beginning, chooses a square, and writes his or her initials inside it. The other players must hop over this square. The game is over when it becomes too hard for anyone to hop to the center. The player whose initials are written inside the most squares is the winner.

An Alaskan Pastime

In the Alaskan version of hopscotch, the court has a "side pocket." The player stands inside the side pocket and tosses the stone into the first square. The player then hops diagonally into the second square (skipping the square holding the stone) and hops to the end of the court. The player hops back to the second square, picks up the stone, hops out, and gives the stone to the next player. That player tosses the stone into the second square and repeats the pattern. If a player tosses the stone and it does not land in a square, that player is out. The players repeat the pattern until one person is left—the winner!

In France, hopscotch courts are shaped like snail shells.

An Alaskan hopscotch court has a side pocket.

Origami

The Art of Japanese Paper Folding

Could you fold a square of paper into a graceful fish or a long-stemmed flower? Origami, or Japanese paper folding, is an art form practiced by many people. In origami, a simple sheet of paper can become a spectacular piece of art.

Japan is an island country that lies near the east coasts of Russia, Korea, and China. It is made up of four major islands.

Ancient Art Form, Modern Appeal

Paper was invented in China and brought to Japan around the year 500. Because paper was rare back then, paper decorations were reserved for special ceremonies. As paper became more common, people started to make paper models for fun. By the 1800s, children in Japan and Europe were learning the art of folding paper into interesting shapes.

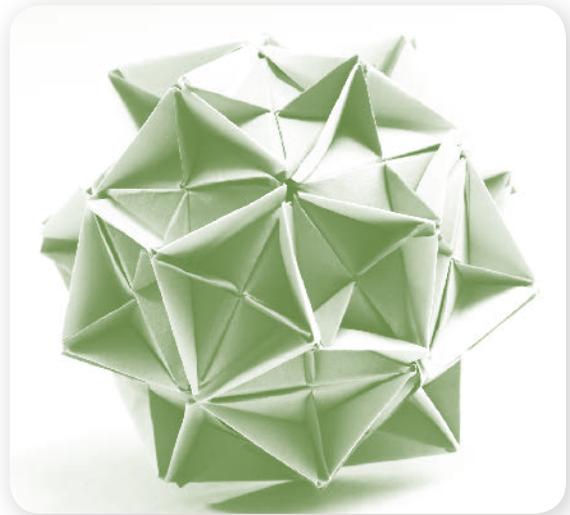

Traditionally, origami objects are created using square pieces of paper that range in size from 1 to 15 inches wide. Six inches is one of the most common sizes. The paper is usually colored or patterned on one or both sides. The paper square is not usually cut or glued but is shaped by making a series of creases and folds. Some artists use wet paper to achieve a more rounded look; others experiment with unusual materials, such as cloth, wire, sheet metal, and even toilet paper.

A Worldwide Craze

Today, there are fans of origami worldwide. The most popular shapes are still traditional Japanese models, such as flowers and birds, but many people are inspired by more unusual-looking life-forms, such as scorpions, armadillos, and horned beetles.

Some people submit their paper creations to origami contests. Some origami contests have a theme such as plants or prehistoric animals. In other contests, there are categories such as best original design, best technical folding, and best miniature model. Winners of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology origami contest have included precise models of a butterfly, a sailboat, and a gold-colored beaver.

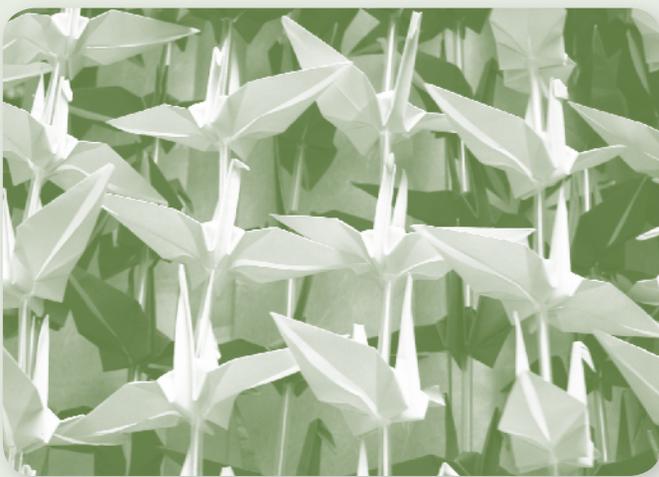

Origami is a tradition that has been passed on through many generations. Artists fold origami to express themselves. Scientists and engineers use it to explore shapes and angles to invent new technology. Teachers sometimes use origami as a tool to help kids learn math. And many people fold paper just because it's fun.

Folding origami can be a fun challenge. Some complicated origami figures are constructed using several sheets of paper.

One Thousand Paper Cranes

In the city of Hiroshima, Japan, people bring thousands of paper cranes to a memorial park every year. They do this to remember a girl named Sadako Sasaki. After World War II (1939–1945), Sadako became ill with leukemia, a form of cancer. She had heard the legend that if a person folds 1,000 paper cranes, he or she will be granted one wish. Her wish was to become healthy again.

A 1,000-crane chain takes a long time for one person to make, but it can be completed quickly if many people join in.

Sadako decided to fold 1,000 paper cranes. For months, she kept folding and folding, but on October 25, 1955, she died, with 350 cranes left to make. Her friends completed the remaining cranes for her. Sadako's determination to finish her project has come to stand for a wish for peace. Today, people across the world fold paper cranes and string them into chains. They send them to the memorial park to remember Sadako's dream.

Jump Rope

Then and Now

Have you ever jumped rope? It's a fun activity that kids do in schoolyards and on sidewalks everywhere! Did you know that people have been jumping rope for a long, long time? In fact, the origins of jumping rope go back thousands of years, but it has come a long way since then.

No one knows for sure when and how jumping rope started. Some say the game originated in Egypt more than 3,000 years ago, when the Egyptians jumped over vines as a form of play. What we do know is that jumping rope began in ancient times and has traveled around the world.

Coming to America

It is believed that Dutch settlers brought jumping rope to the American colonies in the 1600s. Some say it was the Dutch who developed a new way to jump called "double Dutch," which is one of the more popular—and difficult—jumping games today. In this game, two people hold two ropes, one end of each rope in each hand, and turn them in opposite directions as jumpers jump over both ropes.

Double Dutch is one of the most popular ways to jump rope.

Three hundred years later, in the 1940s and 1950s, jumping rope became popular with kids in America's cities. At that time, young jumpers used jump rope as a form of play because it required only a rope and almost anyone could learn how to do it.

Later, in the 1970s, Americans became more and more concerned with being fit and healthy. This led to an increased interest in jumping rope as a form of physical fitness. During this time, two New York City police officers, David A. Walker and Ulysses Williams, turned double Dutch into a world-class sport. On February 14, 1974, nearly 600 fifth-, sixth-, seventh-, and eighth-grade students participated in the first double Dutch tournament ever held.

Jumping Today

Today, jumping rope is seen as a fun way for both kids and grown-ups to play and exercise, which has resulted in the formation of many jump rope organizations and clubs. There are also special jump rope events, including some that raise money for charities. In 1978, Jean Barkow, a high school physical education teacher, held a “Jump-Rope-A-Thon,” which raised $2,032 for the American Heart Association. Since then, Barkow’s annual event, now called Jump Rope for Heart, has raised more than $750 million!

People jump rope competitively, as well. Competitive jumpers work on their speed and fancy jumping moves. In 2012, Jolien Kempeneer set a world record by jumping 204 times in 30 seconds.

Interested in having some fun with your friends, getting some exercise, or enjoying some serious competition? Grab a rope and get jumping!

Jump Rope Songs

Jump rope can include singing songs in rhythm with the jumping and rope turning. Often, the words of these songs include instructions to the jumpers on how to jump and when to jump into and out of the turning rope.

Teddy Bear, teddy bear,
Turn around. [Jumper turns in a circle.]
Teddy Bear, teddy bear,
Touch the ground. [Jumper touches the ground.]
Teddy Bear, teddy bear,
Tie your shoe. [Jumper touches his or her shoe.]
Teddy Bear, teddy bear,
How old are you?
1, 2, 3, 4, 5 . . . [Continue counting out loud.]
The jumper jumps out when their age is called.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 20 lessons this week.

Materials

- Scratch paper and a pencil
- “Functional Texts” chart (WA3)
- (Optional) Student Response Book pages 40–41

Teacher Note

Examples of functional texts often found in classrooms are schedules, calendars, charts (such as homework charts, attendance charts, and reading logs), name tags, labels, receipts, calendars, food wrappers, and the directions on the fire extinguisher.

Teacher Note

You might take the students to the office, library, nurse’s office, or another public space on the campus. If a walk around the school is not possible, you might provide a variety of functional texts that the students can examine in class or use the examples of functional texts on Student Response Book pages 40–41.

In this lesson, the students:

- Identify and discuss functional texts around the school
- Identify what they learn from the functional texts
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Review Articles and Introduce Functional Texts

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that last week the students heard and read expository nonfiction articles and thought about how text features help readers understand articles. Explain that today the students will explore another kind of expository nonfiction, functional texts.

Explain that functional texts help readers do things in everyday life. Some examples of functional texts are street signs, maps, menus, recipes, lists, and game directions.

Point out one or two functional texts in the classroom and explain how they are helpful. For example, you might point at the lunch menu and explain that it is helpful because it lets the students know what will be served for lunch each day. Ask:

Q What other functional texts do you see in our classroom? Turn to your partner.

Have several volunteers point out the functional texts they noticed. As they share, briefly discuss how each functional text is helpful.

Students might say:

“I see the schedule for today. It lets us know the times we will do things like go to recess and eat lunch.”

“The name tags on our desks help us learn everyone’s names.”

“The map on our bulletin board lets us know how to leave the classroom if there is a fire.”

2 Introduce the School Walk

Explain that today the class will take a walk around the school to look for functional texts.

Tell the students that during the walk you will stop a few times so they can look around and talk about the functional texts they see. Explain your expectations for how the students will behave on the walk.

You might say:

"I expect you to walk with your partner. I expect you to watch me for signals about when to stop, listen, and talk. When you talk to your partner, I expect you to whisper."

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q Who do we want to be considerate of when we walk around outside the classroom? Why do we want to be considerate of them?
- Q What can we do so we don't disturb other classes when we walk around?

Students might say:

"We want to be considerate of kids in other classes."
"It's important to be considerate so we don't bother people."
"We can be considerate if we pass the principal in the hall. We can smile at her."
"We can walk quietly and not stomp our feet when we walk."

Ask the students to keep these things in mind during the walk, and tell them that you will check in with them after the walk to see how they did.

3 Take a Walk Around the School

Lead the students on a walk around the school. Bring paper and a pencil with you to record their observations. At the first stop, ask:

- Q What functional texts do you see? Turn and whisper to your partner.

Signal for the students' attention and have a couple of students quietly share their observations. If necessary, share one or two functional texts you notice.

You might say:

"I notice the lunch schedule and the exit sign. I also see a poster with information about the book fair next week."

Jot down functional texts the students mention. After a few students have shared, continue the walk, stopping to notice functional texts in other areas of the school.

4 Discuss Functional Texts as a Class

When you return to the classroom, have partners sit together. Ask:

- Q What functional texts did you see on our walk? Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

Save the “Functional Texts” chart (WA3) to use on Day 2.

Display the “Functional Texts” chart (WA3). Invite a few volunteers to share the functional texts they noticed with the class, and record their findings on the chart. Help the students think about the purposes of functional texts by asking follow-up questions such as:

- Q What information does [the lunch menu] give you?
- Q How does the [“In Case of Emergency” poster] help us?

5 Reflect on How the Students Acted Responsibly During the School Walk

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What did you do to act in a responsible way during the walk? How do you think that helped the people around us?

Tell the students that they will look at more functional texts in the coming days.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Use Text Features

Encourage the students to notice and use text features as they read independently today. Explain that later you will ask some of them to share the text features they used with the class. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers who used text features to share with the class. Have each volunteer begin by telling the title of the text he read, the author’s name, and what the text is about. Then have him show a text feature he used and explain how he used it. Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

In this lesson, the students:

- Read and discuss functional texts
- Identify what they learn from functional texts
- Use text features to better understand information in the texts
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Review Functional Texts

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the “Functional Texts” chart (📄 WA3) from Day 1 and remind the students that yesterday they observed and discussed functional texts in the classroom and around the school. Review that functional texts are a type of expository nonfiction and that functional texts help readers do things in everyday life.

Explain that today the students will look closely at two functional texts and discuss how they help readers do things.

2 Introduce and Read Aloud “How to Make a Paper Airplane”

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 42. Read the title “How to Make a Paper Airplane” aloud and explain that these are directions for making a paper airplane. Explain that a set of directions for making something is one type of functional text. Add directions for making things to the “Functional Texts” chart.

Ask the students to follow along as you read “How to Make a Paper Airplane” aloud, giving the students a moment to look at the diagram for each step before reading the next step. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

vertically: straight up and down

align: line up

Materials

- “How to Make a Paper Airplane” (see page 382)
- “Lincoln School Lunch Calendar” (see page 383)
- Student Response Book pages 42–43
- “Functional Texts” chart (WA3) from Day 1
- “Text Features” chart from Week 3 and a marker

3 Discuss “How to Make a Paper Airplane”

 Give pairs a few moments to look over the directions together, and then have them discuss:

Q What makes these directions easy to use?

Have a few volunteers share with the class.

Students might say:

“The steps are numbered so you know what to do first.”

“There are pictures to show you how to fold the plane.”

“In addition to what [Luz] said, it tells you what the different parts of the plane are, like the wings and the rudder.”

Point out that the numbered steps and labeled diagrams are text features that make this functional text easy for readers to use. Add numbered steps to the “Text Features” chart.

4 Introduce and Read Aloud “Lincoln School Lunch Calendar”

Explain that the students will look at another kind of functional text, and have them turn to Student Response Book page 43. Read the title “Lincoln School Lunch Calendar” aloud and explain that this is a calendar showing school lunch menus for one week. Call the students’ attention to the legend under the bottom-left corner of the calendar and explain that the legend lets readers know what the symbols (asterisks) on the calendar mean. Point out that the symbols and legend provide information without making the calendar too crowded.

Ask the students to follow along as you read “Lincoln School Lunch Calendar” aloud, referring to the legend as necessary.

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from discussing the following vocabulary:

vegetarian sandwich: sandwich without meat on it

nuggets: small pieces

5 Discuss the Calendar

 Give pairs a few moments to look over the calendar together, and then have them discuss:

Q What information does this calendar give you?

Have a few volunteers share with the class.

ELPS 4.C.ii
Step 5
(all, beginning on page 370 and continuing on to page 371)

As a class, discuss:

Q What makes this calendar easy to use?

Students might say:

"The title has the dates in it so you know which week it's for."

"It says the days of the week at the top."

"The menu for each day is in its own box."

"The legend tells you which foods are vegetarian and which contain pork."

Point out that the title, column headings, symbols, and legend are expository text features that help make it easy for readers to use the calendar. Add calendars to the "Functional Texts" chart. Then add column headings, symbols, and legends to the "Text Features" chart.

Explain that because the lunch calendar and the instructions for the paper airplane give different information, they are organized in different ways to help readers make sense of them. Tell the students that reading functional texts carefully and noticing how they are organized helps readers understand and use them more easily. Tell the students that they will continue to explore functional texts in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Use Text Features

Ask the students to use the text features in their texts as they read independently today and to think about what the features help them learn. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Give the students a few minutes to share their texts with partners. Have each partner tell the title of her text, the author's name, what the text is about, a text feature she used, and what that text feature helped her learn.

Teacher Note

Save the "Functional Texts" chart (WA3) to use on Day 3.

---

EXTENSIONS

Make Paper Airplanes

Have the students follow the instructions in “How to Make a Paper Airplane” to make their own paper airplanes. Then facilitate a discussion about the process using questions such as:

- Q Were the directions easy or hard to follow?
- Q Which text features did you find useful? How did they help you?

Share Examples of Functional Texts

Ask the students to bring in examples of functional texts from their daily lives. Have them point out text features in the examples and explain how the features help readers. If appropriate, have pairs glue their examples to a large sheet of construction paper and add labels telling what they are and how they are used. (For example, a weather graph from the newspaper might be labeled newspaper weather graph: gives weather predictions for the next five days.)

Technology Tip

To support the students in choosing effective search terms, you might teach Technology Mini-lesson 4, “Choosing Effective Search Terms” (found in Appendix B).

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Fold Origami

Show the article “Origami: The Art of Japanese Paper Folding” on pages 360–361 and remind the students that they read and discussed the article earlier. Tell the students that today they will use the Internet to help them make origami objects themselves. Guide the students in an online search for origami instructions. First, discuss keywords that might be useful in an Internet search for origami instructions (for example, “origami for kids” or “easy origami instructions”). Then, as a class, browse the websites and identify a few sets of instructions to try. Print the sets you identified and distribute one set of instructions to each pair of students, along with origami paper. Have partners work together to fold origami by following the instructions. When most pairs have finished, invite them to share the objects they made with the class. Discuss questions such as:

- Q Was it easy or hard to fold [the frog]? What made it [easy]?
- Q What text features did your instructions have? How did those text features help you?
- Q What text features could you add to the instructions to make them clearer?

In this lesson, the students:

- Read and discuss functional texts
- Use text features to better understand information in the texts
- Describe the relationship between a series of steps in a technical procedure
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that tomorrow will be the students' last day working with their current partners. Facilitate a brief discussion about what has worked well for partners so far and what things they want to continue to work on during their last two days together. Ask:

Q What helps you and your partner work well together?

Q What things do you still want to work on?

2 Review Functional Texts and Morning Meals Around the World

Display the “Functional Texts” chart (C WA3) from Day 2 and remind the students that they have been exploring functional texts, or texts that help readers do things in their everyday lives. Tell the students that today they will look at two functional texts from a book they heard earlier in the unit.

Show the cover of Morning Meals Around the World and remind the students that the book describes some of the different foods people around the world eat for breakfast. Show pages 22–23 and explain that at the end of the book, the author provides two recipes for foods mentioned in the text: tea with milk and Mexican breakfast quesadillas. Point out that recipes, which are sets of directions for making food, are a type of functional text. Add recipes to the “Functional Texts” chart.

3 Read and Discuss “You Can Make Tea with Milk”

Have the students open to Student Response Book page 44, where the first recipe, “You Can Make Tea with Milk,” is reproduced. Remind the students that tea with milk is something children in Russia drink for breakfast. Ask the students to follow along as you read the recipe for tea with milk aloud. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Materials

- Morning Meals Around the World
- “Functional Texts” chart (WA3) from Day 2
- Student Response Book pages 44–45
- “Text Features” chart from Day 2
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4)

Teacher Note

Save the “Functional Texts” chart (WA3) to use on Day 4.

TEKS 10.C.i

Student/Teacher Activity
Steps 3–5 (all, beginning on page 373 and continuing on to page 375)

Teacher Note

You might reread page 12 of Morning Meals where tea with milk is described.

Suggested Vocabulary

serving: enough for one person

steep: sit in liquid

4 Discuss “You Can Make Tea with Milk”

Give partners a few moments to look over the recipe together, and then have them discuss:

Q Do you think this recipe would be easy to follow? Why or why not?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

“I think it would be easy to follow because the steps are numbered. You know what to do first and then what to do next.”

“There is a ‘What you need’ section that tells you everything you need to make the tea.”

Ask:

Q What would happen if you did the steps in a different order? For example, what would happen if you skipped Step 2? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

“If you did the steps in a different order, the recipe wouldn’t turn out right.”

“If you skipped Step 2, you wouldn’t have tea at all. That’s one of the most important steps because it’s when you put in the tea bag.”

“In addition to what [Mohammed] said, if you skipped Step 2, you would have hot water with milk, which wouldn’t taste very good.”

Point to numbered steps on the “Text Features” chart and remind the students that numbered steps help users of directions follow all the steps and do them in the proper order.

5 Read and Discuss “You Can Make Mexican Breakfast Quesadillas”

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 45, where the second recipe, “You Can Make Mexican Breakfast Quesadillas,” appears. Ask the students to follow along as you read the recipe aloud. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Teacher Note

You might reread page 14 of Morning Meals where breakfast quesadillas are described.

Suggested Vocabulary

jalapeño pepper: type of spicy pepper

optional: not necessary

gram: metric system measurement equal to about one-fifth of a teaspoon

As a class, discuss the following questions:

Q Why do you think the jalapeño pepper in the recipe is optional? What effect might it have on how the quesadillas taste?

Q How is this recipe like the recipe for tea with milk? How is it different?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the recipes they read today, and explain that you will ask each of them to write a recipe. Tell the students that you want them to think about a simple food or drink they know how to make and could write a recipe for. Then, as a class, brainstorm foods and drinks the students know how to make.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to make sense of functional texts?
- Can they identify helpful features in the texts?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4); see page 85 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to make sense of functional texts and identify helpful features in the texts, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to make sense of functional texts and identify helpful features in the texts, you might wish to repeat Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using the examples of functional texts on Student Response Book pages 40–41 before continuing on to Day 4.

Teacher Note

Some simple foods and drinks the student might write recipes for include cereal with milk, toast with butter and jam, peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, guacamole, lemonade, smoothies, and ice pops.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Information Learned

Encourage the students to use text features and to think about what they are learning as they read independently today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share what they learned from their texts or from text features in their texts. Remind each volunteer to begin by showing her text and telling the class the title and the author’s name. Then ask questions such as:

Q What is your [article] about?

Q What is something surprising or interesting you learned from the [article]?

Q What did you learn from reading the text features in the [article]?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

---

EXTENSION

Make Tea with Milk or Mexican Breakfast Quesadillas

Set aside a time to make one of the recipes in Morning Meals and enjoy tea or quesadillas as a class. Afterward, facilitate a discussion using questions such as:

Q What did you think of the [tea with milk]?

Q Would you change this recipe at all if you made it again? If so, how?

In this lesson, the students:

- Discuss text features in recipes
- Write recipes with text features
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Take responsibility for their learning and behavior

1 Review the Week

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Direct the students' attention to the "Functional Texts" chart (📄 WA3) from Day 3 and review that they have read and discussed several functional texts, including a set of directions for making a paper airplane, a school lunch calendar, and two recipes from the book Morning Meals Around the World. Tell the students that today they will revisit the recipes for tea with milk and Mexican breakfast quesadillas. Then they will think about and write their own recipes.

2 Discuss Text Features in Recipes

Direct the students' attention to the "Text Features" chart and review that these are some of the text features that help readers make sense of expository nonfiction. Have the students turn to Student Response Book pages 44–45 and quietly review the recipes from Morning Meals Around the World. After several moments, signal for the students' attention and use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

 Q What text features do you notice in these recipes? How are they helpful?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share with the class. Put stars next to the features they mention on the "Text Features" chart and add any text features they mention that are not already on the chart.

Students might say:

- "The titles tell you what they are recipes for."
- "The headings make the recipes easy to follow."
- "The numbered steps tell you the order to do things in."
- "The 'What you need' section tells you everything you need to make the recipe."
- "The illustration of the quesadilla lets you know what it should look like."
- "The number of servings tells you how many people the recipe is for."

Materials

- Morning Meals Around the World
- "Functional Texts" chart (WA3) from Day 3
- "Text Features" chart from Day 3 and a marker
- Student Response Book pages 44–46
- "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart
- Copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1) for each student

Teacher Note

Text features in the recipes include titles, headings, illustrations, numbered steps, number of servings (new), and "What you need" sections (new).

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

Some text features the students might include are titles, headings, "What you need" lists, number of servings, numbered steps, and illustrations.

Teacher Note

Save the "Text Features" chart to use in Unit 7.

3 Write Recipes with Text Features

Remind the students that yesterday they brainstormed simple foods and drinks they know how to make. Explain that they will now write their own recipes with text features. Ask each student to think quietly about what she will write a recipe for and what text features she could include in the recipe. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 46, "Recipe with Text Features." Explain that you would like each student to write a recipe that includes at least two text features from the "Text Features" chart and then list the text features he used on the lines below. Give the students time to complete their recipes.

4 Discuss Recipes as a Class

Invite a few volunteers to share the recipes they wrote with the class. Facilitate a brief discussion of each recipe using questions such as:

- Q What makes this recipe easy to follow?
- Q What text features did [Jasmine] include? What other text features might she have included?
- Q What questions do you have for [Jasmine] about her recipe?

5 Review Recognizing Text Features

Review that over the past few weeks, the students have explored and discussed text features in expository nonfiction books, articles, and functional texts. Refer to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and review that using text features is a comprehension strategy that helps readers understand a variety of expository texts. Draw the students' attention to the "Text Features" chart and encourage them to continue to look for and use text features as they read independently.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Reflect on Reading Expository Nonfiction

Encourage the students to use text features and to think about what they are learning as they read independently today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Help the students reflect on reading expository nonfiction by asking questions such as:

- Q What do you enjoy about reading expository nonfiction?
- Q What is challenging about it?
- Q What topics have you enjoyed reading about? What other topics do you want to read about?

Tell the students that they will have more opportunities to read expository nonfiction in the coming weeks. Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write Opinions About Nonfiction

Remind the students that they have spent several weeks reading and discussing nonfiction texts about real people, places, and things. Show the covers of Two Bobbies, Brave Harriet, Wilma Unlimited, and Sonia Sotomayor and review that these books are examples of narrative nonfiction because they are written like stories, with a beginning, middle, and end. Then show the covers of Morning Meals and Homes and remind the students that these are examples of another type of nonfiction called expository nonfiction. Ask:

- Q What makes expository nonfiction different from narrative nonfiction?

If necessary, remind the students that expository nonfiction texts provide information about specific topics and are not told like stories. Ask:

- Q What other types of expository nonfiction texts did we talk about besides books? What were some of the topics of those texts?

If necessary, remind the students that they read and discussed expository nonfiction articles about hopscotch, origami, and jump rope as well as a variety of functional texts including recipes, instructions, and a calendar. Point out that, in addition to the read-alouds, the

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit “Lincoln School Lunch Calendar,” “How to Make a Paper Airplane,” and “How to Make Mexican Breakfast Quesadillas” to teach the Week 21 vocabulary lessons.

Materials

- Morning Meals
- Homes
- Brave Harriet from Unit 5
- Wilma Unlimited from Unit 5
- Sonia Sotomayor from Unit 5
- Two Bobbies from Unit 1

students have read many other examples of nonfiction during IDR and Independent Strategy Practice.

First in pairs, and then as a class, discuss:

Q What type of nonfiction do you most enjoy? Why?

Q What nonfiction topics are most interesting to you?

Students might say:

"I like functional texts best because they help you do things."

"I like narrative nonfiction because you learn things from it and it's fun to read."

"I like reading about real people's lives because you can learn lessons for your own life."

"I like reading about space and space exploration."

Point out that when people talk about what they like most or find the most interesting, they are giving opinions, or telling what they think about things. Remind the students that people may have different opinions about the same thing and that this is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing opinions about nonfiction.

You might say:

"The type of nonfiction I most enjoy are expository nonfiction articles because I learn a lot from them and they don't take long to read. The nonfiction topics I most enjoy reading about are politics, gardening, and American history. I'll write: The type of nonfiction I most enjoy is expository nonfiction. I particularly like expository nonfiction articles because I learn a lot from them and they don't take long to read. My favorite topics to read about are politics, gardening, and American history."

Have the students write their own opinion paragraphs about nonfiction they enjoy. Remind them to give reasons for their opinions. If time permits, ask a few volunteers to share their writing with the class.

Technology Tip

For more information about creating class presentations, view the "Using Presentation Tools" tutorial (AV44).

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Create a Digital Class Cookbook

Make copies of the recipes the students wrote on Student Response Book pages 44–45 and post them where everyone can see. Ask the students to help you put the recipes into a logical sequence (for example, you might group them by meal time or meal type) and compile them into a class cookbook. Have the students create a digital version of the cookbook by taking photos of their recipes and uploading them into a class presentation.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 6. You will need to reassign partners before you start the next unit.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Periodically, have a few students share with the class what they are reading at home.

Assessment

- Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students’ reading comprehension using the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1); see page 90 of the Assessment Resource Book.

How to Make A PAPER AIRPLANE

1. Fold the sheet of paper in half vertically. Open the paper.

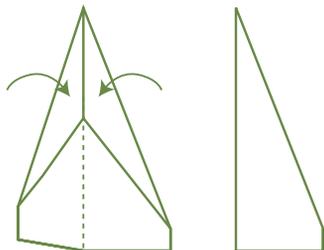

2. Fold the top left and right corners down so that they align with the center fold and form triangles.

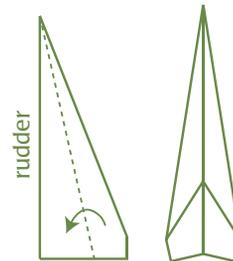

3. Fold the left and right corners in so that they align at the center fold and again form triangles.

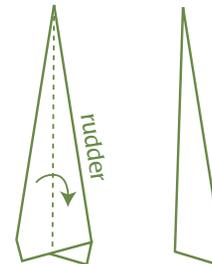

4. Fold the paper in half, keeping the folds from steps 1, 2, and 3 on the inside.

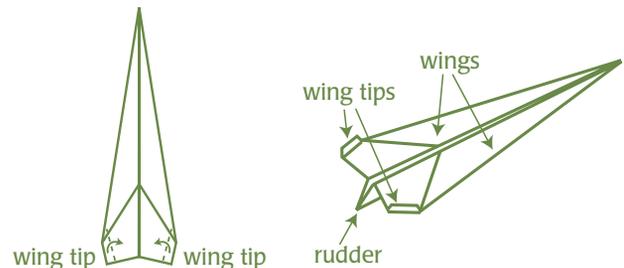

5. Fold the top wing in half so that the edge of the wing aligns with the rudder.

6. Flip the plane over and fold the other wing in half so that the edge of the wing aligns with the rudder.

7. Open the plane and fold up the tips at the back of the wings to help the plane fly better.

Flying Tips:

- If your plane dives and crashes, fold the back edges of the wings up a little.
- If your plane flies too far to the right, bend the rudder a little to the left.
- If your plane flies too far to the left, bend the rudder a little to the right.

Unit 7

Wondering/ Questioning

EXPOSITORY NONFICTION

During this unit, the students use the strategy of wondering/questioning to help them understand expository nonfiction as they continue an across-grades exploration of animal life. In grade 3, the students learn more about animal habitats as they hear and discuss texts about animals that live in rain forests, deserts, and the Arctic. The students use schema to articulate what they think they know about topics before reading, stop and ask questions during reading, and identify what they have learned and what they still wonder about topics after reading. They compare and contrast two texts on the same topic and use text features to help them make sense of the texts. During IDR, the students use wondering/questioning to help them understand expository texts they read independently and continue to confer with the teacher about their reading. Socially, they develop the skill of asking clarifying questions to better understand their partners' thinking, and they reflect on how they are taking responsibility for their behavior.

Comprehension Focus

- Students use wondering/questioning to make sense of an expository text.
- Students use schema to articulate what they think they know about the topic of an expository text prior to reading.
- Students identify what they learn from an expository text.
- Students read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Students develop the skill of asking clarifying questions.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this unit’s read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding. Take time to show and discuss the text features.
- ✓ Make available expository nonfiction texts at a variety of levels so that the students can practice using text features and wondering/questioning during IDR and Independent Strategy Practice throughout the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner.”
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1); see page 107 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 101 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, select an expository text and prepare to model wondering about the topic of the text before reading (see Step 2). Plan what you will wonder about ahead of time so the modeling goes smoothly.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 21 lessons this week.

Materials

- Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs (pages 3–9)
- “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart, prepared ahead, and a marker
- “Text Features” chart from Unit 6
- “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (WA1)
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- Class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1)
- Assessment Resource Book page 104

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin working with new partners
- Hear and discuss part of an expository nonfiction book
- Use wondering/questioning to make sense of the book
- Identify what they learn from the book and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Ask clarifying questions

ABOUT BUILDING A BODY OF KNOWLEDGE ABOUT ANIMAL LIFE

In each grade of the Making Meaning program, the students apply the strategy of wondering/questioning to a set of expository nonfiction texts on the topic of animal life. Exploring a topic within and across grades enables the students to systematically build a body of knowledge about the topic. In kindergarten the focus of each text is on animal young. In grade 1, the students learn about a wide variety of animal life and are introduced to the concept of habitat, which is then further explored in grades 2 and 3. In grade 4, the focus shifts to animal senses, and in grade 5, the students learn about big cats and the challenges they face as endangered species.

1 Pair the Students and Introduce Asking Clarifying Questions

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other’s names. Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that in previous weeks they focused on contributing different ideas during partner conversations. Explain that this week they will focus on a new skill for working with partners—asking questions when they do not understand what their partners say.

Explain that when a student doesn’t understand what her partner means, she can ask questions that will help clarify, or make clear, what her partner is saying. Model a clarifying question or two for the students (for example, “Sometimes when one of you is talking to me and I don't understand you, I'll say, 'I'm not sure I understand you. Can you say that in a different way?"). Write your example on the "Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner" chart. Then ask:

Q If you don't understand your partner, what are some questions you can ask to help you understand what he or she is saying?

Add the students' suggestions to the chart. Tell the students that today you would like them to use these questions when they don't understand their partners. Explain that at the end of the lesson you will check in with them to see how they did with using the questions. Point out that they can also use the questions when they don't understand something you have said.

2 Review Expository Nonfiction and Introduce the Topic of Animal Habitats

Remind the students that they have been reading and discussing expository nonfiction texts, or texts that give true information about particular topics. Direct the students' attention to the "Text Features" chart and review that expository texts often include special text features—such as tables of contents, diagrams, maps, indexes, glossaries, and text boxes—that give readers additional information or help them locate information in the texts.

Tell the students that the expository texts they will hear in this unit focus on animals and their habitats, or the places where the animals live.

3 Introduce Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs

Tell the students that today you will read aloud from a book called Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs. Show the cover of the book and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Show pages 3–5 and point out that the book contains text and illustrations but not photographs, captions, or other features found in expository texts they have read this year. Explain that it is still an expository text because it gives information about a topic: rain forest frogs.

Point to the illustration on page 4 and explain that tropical rain forests are forests with thickly growing plants and trees. These forests are located in warm parts of the earth where a lot of rain falls. Many different kinds of animals—including monkeys, parrots, leopards, crocodiles, and frogs—live in tropical rain forests. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you think you know about frogs?

Q Based on what you think you know, what do you wonder about frogs that live in tropical rain forests? What questions do you have about them?

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble suggesting clarifying questions, provide a few more examples to stimulate their thinking (for example, "Can you tell me more about that?" "What did you mean when you said . . . ?" and "Can you give me an example of what you mean?"). Emphasize that it is important to speak politely and respectfully when seeking clarification.

Teacher Note

In Unit 4, the students were introduced to wondering/questioning and used the strategy to make sense of narrative fiction. In Unit 5, the students used wondering/questioning to explore narrative nonfiction. During the next three weeks, they will use the strategy to explore expository nonfiction texts, including an article.

Display the “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (🌍 WA1) and list a few of the students’ “I wonder” statements and questions on the chart. Explain that after the reading today the students will revisit these ideas and discuss what they learned about rain forest frogs.

4 Read Part of the Book Aloud with Brief Section Introductions

Tell the students that the first page you will read describes the many different kinds of rain forest frogs. Ask them to listen for information they did not know before. Read aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

flashy: brightly colored (p. 3)

tropical: having to do with hot, rainy areas of the world known as the tropics (p. 5)

cling: hold on tightly (p. 6)

blend perfectly with: look just like (p. 9)

🌍 ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

ordinary: usual (p. 3)

moist: wet (p. 3)

freezes: becomes very cold; is icy (p. 5)

Stop after:

p. 3 “The males croak to attract females, which then lay eggs without shells.”

Use “Turn to Your Partner” to discuss the question that follows. Remind the students to ask questions if they do not understand their partners’ thinking.

Q Based on what you just heard, what are you wondering? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their ideas with the class. Record their statements or questions, exactly as stated, on the “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart.

Students might say:

“I wonder where the really small frogs live.”

“Do blue and orange frogs live in other places besides the rain forest?”

“Why are rain forest frogs so colorful?”

Teacher Note

To maintain the flow of the lesson, have only one or two students share at each stop. Accept the students’ ideas without discussion. Hearing others’ questions gives the students examples of things they might wonder about as they continue to listen.

Explain that the next part you will read describes the tropical rain forest habitat. Reread the last sentence on page 3 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 5 “The forest floor is shaded by the plants above, so, often, little grows there.”

Again, ask:

Q Based on what you just heard, what are you wondering? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking and add their ideas to the chart. Tell the students that the last part you will read today tells where frogs live in the rain forest and what they eat. Reread the last sentence on page 5 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 9 “They can eat almost anything that comes their way, even mice and small rats.”

Follow the procedure you used at the previous stops to discuss and record what the students wonder.

5 Discuss the Reading

Facilitate a class discussion about what the students learned from the reading. Be ready to reread passages aloud and show illustrations again to help the students recall what they heard. Ask:

Q What did you learn today about rain forest frogs?

Refer to the “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart and ask:

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in the reading? If so, what did you find out?

Remind the students that wondering and asking questions while reading helps readers think carefully about the text and read for answers to their questions. Explain that tomorrow you will read more from Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs and the students will continue to think about what they are learning and wondering.

6 Reflect on Asking Clarifying Questions

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students did asking clarifying questions. Ask:

Q Did you or your partner have trouble understanding each other at any point?

Refer to the “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart. Ask:

Q Did you try asking your partner a question from the chart? If so, how did it go?

Tell the students that they will continue to work on asking their partners clarifying questions in the coming days.

Teacher Note

Save the “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (WA1) to use on throughout the week.

Teacher Note

Save the “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart for use throughout the unit.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Review and Practice Self-monitoring and “Fix-up” Strategies

Tell the students that for the next four weeks they will continue reading expository nonfiction during IDR.

Refer to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and review the questions on it. Remind the students that it is important to stop, think about what they are reading, and use the questions on the chart to help them monitor their comprehension. If a student does not understand what he is reading, the student should use one or both of the “fix-up” strategies of rereading and reading ahead. If a student has tried both of the “fix-up” strategies and still does not understand the text, he can try the strategies listed on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart. Alternatively, the student might ask you or a classmate for help.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. Stop them twice during their reading to have them monitor their comprehension by thinking about the charted questions.

After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

ELL Note

To support your English Language Learners, consider modeling reading a text and stopping periodically to ask yourself the self-monitoring questions listed on the chart. Discuss each question with your students to make sure they understand the process.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Beginning today, and continuing throughout the unit, confer individually with the students about the texts they are reading during IDR.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Facilitate a brief discussion with the students about using the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart to track their reading comprehension. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q Why is it important to stop as you are reading and ask yourself if you understand what you read?
- Q How do rereading and reading ahead help you make sense of text?
- Q Which comprehension strategy do you find the most helpful when you’re not understanding something you’re reading? Why?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Teacher Note

Provide time on a regular basis for the students to record the books they have completed in their reading logs.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss parts of an expository nonfiction book
- Use wondering/questioning to make sense of the book
- Identify what they learn from the book and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own
- Ask clarifying questions

1 Review Asking Clarifying Questions

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Briefly explain that the students will talk in pairs again today. Refer to the “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart from Day 1 and explain that you would like the students to continue to use the questions when they do not understand their partners’ thinking.

2 Review the First Reading from Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs

Show the cover of Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs and review that it is an expository text, or a text that gives information about a topic. Remind the students that they heard the first part of the book earlier. Ask:

Q What have you learned about rain forest frogs so far?

Display the “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (WA1) from Day 1. Ask:

Q Which of the things you wondered were explained in the part we read yesterday?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Explain that today you will read more from Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs and the students will continue to wonder and listen for answers to their questions.

3 Read Parts of the Book Aloud with Brief Section Introductions

Remind the students that at the end of the previous reading they learned that some large horned frogs have green and brown bodies that blend with the rain forest floor. Tell the students that the first part of the book you will read today describes how the colors of horned frogs and other frogs help to protect them from predators.

Materials

- Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs (pages 10–15, 27)
- “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart from Day 1
- “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (WA1) from Day 1

Read pages 10–15 and page 27 aloud, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

disguise: outward appearance that hides what something really is (p. 10)

predators: animals that hunt other animals for food (p. 12)

glides: moves smoothly and easily (p. 12)

game: animals hunted for food (p. 15)

doses: amounts of a medicine that are given at one time (p. 27)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from discussing additional vocabulary, including:

patterns: shapes or markings that usually repeat (p. 10; refer to the illustration) fearlessly: without being afraid (p. 14)

poisonous: able to harm or kill by poison (p. 14)

Stop after:

p. 12 “When the frog reaches another tree, it can hang on with just one giant toe pad until it can grab with its foot.”

Ask:

Q Based on what you just heard, what are you wondering? Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, have one or two students share their thinking with the class, and record their ideas on the “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart. Explain that the next part you will read describes an unusual rain forest frog called the poison dart frog. Read pages 14–15 and stop after:

p. 15 “The skin of one small frog can contain enough poison to kill more than a hundred people.”

Ask:

Q Based on what you just heard, what are you wondering? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking, and record their ideas on the chart. Explain that the last part of the book you will read today tells how scientists have found ways to use the poison of the poison dart frog. Skip pages 16–25 and read the text on page 27 aloud. Stop after:

p. 27 “Others could be used as heart-attack medicines.”

Follow the procedure you used at the previous stops to discuss and record what the students wonder.

Teacher Note

Circulate and listen as partners talk. Notice whether the students are wondering about the text and whether they are asking clarifying questions when necessary. Be prepared to share your observations with the students at the end of the lesson.

4 Discuss the Reading and the Students' Questions

As a class, discuss:

Q What did you learn about how scientists use poison from poison dart frogs?

Q What did you learn about how rain forest frogs hide from predators?

Direct the students' attention to the "What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs" chart and briefly review the things they wondered about rain forest frogs. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages aloud and to show illustrations again to help the students recall what they heard. Ask:

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in today's reading? What did you find out about them? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Remind the students that wondering and questioning is an important comprehension strategy because it helps readers think more deeply about a text. Explain that in the next lesson you will finish reading the book and the students will continue to wonder and learn about rain forest frogs.

5 Reflect on Partner Work

Briefly share your observations of how partners worked together during the lesson. Then ask:

Q How did you show respect for your partner today? What did you do to show respect for your partner's thinking?

Students might say:

"I was polite when I asked my partner a clarifying question."

"I let my partner finish talking before I talked."

"I listened respectfully to my partner's ideas even when I disagreed with her."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Tell the students that at the end of IDR today, you will ask them to talk with partners about interesting things they learned from their texts. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, we invite you to practice responding neutrally with interest during class discussions. To respond neutrally means to refrain from overtly praising (for example, "Great idea" or "Good job") or criticizing (for example, "That's wrong") the students' responses. While it may feel more natural to avoid criticism rather than praise, research shows that both kinds of responses encourage students to look to you, rather than to themselves, for validation. To build the students' intrinsic motivation, try responding with genuine curiosity and interest (for example, "Interesting—say more about that") while avoiding evaluative statements, whether positive or negative. To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view "Responding Neutrally with Interest" (AV23).

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students share interesting things they learned from their reading with partners. Remind each student to begin by telling his partner the title of his text, the author’s name, and the topic of the text. Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

---

EXTENSION

Practice Using Wondering/Questioning with Content-area Reading

When you read as a class in your social studies, science, or other textbooks, use the read-aloud procedures described in Step 3 of today’s lesson to have the students practice wondering and asking questions to make sense of their reading. After the reading, have the students reflect on which questions got them thinking about the reading, which questions were discussed (and how), and which were not discussed.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of an expository nonfiction book
- Use wondering/questioning to make sense of the book
- Identify what they learn from the book and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own
- Ask clarifying questions

1 Review Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs and review that in the previous lesson the students heard more of the book and listened for answers to their questions about rain forest frogs. Display the “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (WA1) from Day 2 and ask:

Q Which questions on the chart have not been discussed in the book so far?

Explain that today you will read the last few pages of the book aloud. Ask the students to listen for answers to their questions and to notice what else they are wondering about rain forest frogs.

2 Read the Last Part of the Book Aloud

Explain that the last part of the book describes how some types of rain forest frogs are becoming extinct (dying out). Read pages 28–31 of Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs aloud without stopping. Show the illustrations and clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

threatened: in danger (p. 28)

harvesting wood: cutting down trees to use the wood for lumber, paper, and other products (p. 28)

become extinct: no longer exist; die out (p. 28)

ultraviolet light: light from the sun that is invisible to the human eye; some forms of ultraviolet light are harmful to people and may also harm animals (p. 31)

Materials

- Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs (pages 28–31)
- “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (WA1) from Day 2
- Student Response Book pages 47–48
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

3 Reread and Write Questions About Rain Forest Frogs

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 47, and point out that the excerpt is the part of the book you just read aloud. Explain that you will reread the passage so the students have another opportunity to think and wonder about it.

Have the students follow along as you reread the excerpt aloud without stopping.

Direct the students' attention to Student Response Book page 48, "What I Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs." Explain that you would like partners to talk about what they learned from the passage and what it made them wonder. Then each student will write what she is wondering as questions or "I wonder" statements on page 48. Circulate among the students as they talk and write.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to articulate what they learned from the excerpt?
- Are they able to generate questions about rain forest frogs based on the excerpt?

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 101 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to articulate what they learned and generate questions, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to articulate what they learned and generate questions, proceed with the lesson and plan to monitor and support students who are having difficulty with the strategy during independent reading. You might have each student read a short passage from his book aloud to you and ask him questions such as:

Q What information in the part you just read was new to you?

Q What questions do you have about this part?

Q What does it make you wonder?

- If only a few students are able to articulate what they learned and to generate questions, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the "Grade 3 Alternative Texts" list.

4 Discuss the Reading and the Students' Questions

Facilitate a class discussion about what the students learned from the reading today. Ask:

- Q What did you learn about why some rain forest frog species are disappearing?
- Q Do you think it is important to protect frogs that are disappearing? Why or why not?

Have the students look at the questions or statements they wrote on Student Response Book page 48. Ask:

- Q What do you wonder, or what questions do you have, about what you heard and read today?

Students might say:

"Will frogs go extinct?"

"What can we do to help rain forest frogs?"

"I wonder if the scientists will be able to figure out how to save the frogs."

As volunteers share, add their ideas to the "What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs" chart. Point out that some of the students' questions about rain forest frogs were not answered in the book. Explain that it is normal for an expository text to answer some of readers' questions and not others. Ask:

- Q How might you find answers to the questions you still have about rain forest frogs?

If necessary, explain that the students could read other books or magazines, search the Internet, or talk to a person who knows about rain forest frogs, such as a herpetologist (a scientist who studies frogs) or a zookeeper.

Explain that in the next lesson the students will practice wondering and asking questions as they read independently. Make Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs available for the students to read on their own.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Wonder

Encourage the students to pay attention to what they are wondering as they read today. Explain that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of the students to share what they wondered with the class. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share what they read and wondered. Have each volunteer begin by showing her text and telling the class the title and the author’s name. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is the topic of your text?
- Q What is something you wondered as you were reading?
- Q Was what you wondered explained in the [book]? If so, what did you learn?
- Q What are you wondering now?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

EXTENSIONS

Analyze Paired Texts About Rain Forests

If the students enjoyed learning about tropical rain forests, you might extend the exploration by reading aloud and discussing a fictional treatment of the subject. Fiction titles about rain forests include The Great Kapok Tree by Lynne Cherry, The Shaman’s Apprentice by Lynne Cherry, The Umbrella by Jan Brett, and Welcome to the Green House by Jane Yolen.

Prior to reading the fiction book, have the students discuss facts they learned about tropical rain forests from Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs and what they are wondering about tropical rain forests. Then point out that fiction authors are free to mix facts with invention (things they have made up) in any way they wish, so works of fiction cannot always be relied on as sources of factually accurate information. But fiction can help readers understand what individuals feel, experience, and perceive in a place such as a tropical rain forest. Fictional accounts can give an “inside look” at an experience in a way that expository nonfiction books cannot. Ask:

- Q Keeping in mind that fiction does not always stick to the facts, what might you learn about tropical rain forests from a fiction story?

Then read aloud the fiction book. After the reading, have the students discuss what they learned from hearing a fictional story about tropical rain forests.

Encourage the students to compare the two texts and make text-to-text connections by asking questions such as:

- Q What more did you learn from [The Great Kapok Tree] about tropical rain forests?
- Q What was especially surprising or interesting about [The Great Kapok Tree]?
- Q *How are the books Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs and [The Great Kapok Tree] the same? How are they different?*
- Q Which book did you like better? Why?

Start a “What We Learned About Animal Habitats” Chart

Show the cover of Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs and remind the students that this book tells about frogs that live in tropical rain forests. Ask:

- Q What did you learn about the tropical rain forest habitat?

Students might say:

- “I learned that it never freezes in the tropical rain forest.”
- “I learned that people are cutting down the rain forest to harvest wood, so some frogs are losing their habitat.”
- “I learned that tropical rain forests have three layers: the canopy, the understory, and the forest floor.”
- “In addition to what [Marcos] said, I learned that most frogs live in the canopy and the understory.”

Write the title “What We Learned About Animal Habitats” on a sheet of chart paper. As the students share, record their ideas on the chart. If the students struggle to answer the question, you might reread pages 4–9 and 28–31 of Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs, showing the illustrations, and then ask the question again.

Teacher Note

You might have the students record what they learn about tropical rain forests in a double-entry journal. You might title one column “What I Learned About Tropical Rain Forests from a Nonfiction Book” and the other column “What I Learned About Tropical Rain Forests from a Fiction Book.”

TEKS 6.E.ii

Student/Teacher Activity Extension “Start a ‘What We Learned About Animal Habitats’ Chart” and the last Teacher Note on page 405

Teacher Note

You might post the “What We Learned About Animal Habitats” chart where everyone can see it; throughout the unit, add to the chart any new facts the students have learned about animal habitats.

Materials

- “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (WA1) from Day 3
- “What I Wonder About My Text” chart (WA2)
- Expository text for teacher modeling, selected ahead
- Student Response Book page 49

TEKS 6.B.i

Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 2 (all)

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Wonder about expository texts prior to reading
- Use wondering/questioning to make sense of the texts
- Identify what they learn and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Ask clarifying questions

1 Review the Week

Have the students get their Student Response Books, pencils, and texts for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together. Display the “What We Wonder About Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs” chart (WA1) from Day 3 and review that this week the students listened to Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs, discussed what they learned and wondered about rain forest frogs, and thought about whether the things they wondered were explained in the book. Remind the students that they have also been working on asking clarifying questions to better understand one another. Tell the students that they will continue to work on wondering and asking clarifying questions today.

2 Model Wondering Before Reading

Remind the students that the purpose of learning strategies together is for the students to use them independently to make sense of their own reading. Explain that before they begin to read independently today, partners will talk about what they are wondering about the topics of their texts and then write what they are wondering in their Student Response Books. They will then use the questions they wrote to help them think about their reading.

Display the “What I Wonder About My Text” chart (WA2) and model wondering about the topic of the expository text you selected. Introduce the text by briefly examining the cover, looking at several pages, and commenting on any text features. Then read the first two or three sentences and wonder aloud about the book’s topic. Model writing what you wonder as questions or as “I wonder” statements on the chart.

You might say:

“After looking at a few pages of The Arctic Habitat by Molly Aloian and Bobbie Kalman, I wonder what kinds of animals live in the Arctic. I’ll write: I wonder what kinds of animals live in the Arctic. I also wonder how often it snows there. I’ll write: How often does it snow in the Arctic? Finally, I wonder if people live in the Arctic. I’ll write: Do many people live there?”

3 Wonder and Write About Topics Before Reading

Ask each student to look at her book in the same way, examining the cover and taking note of text features. Have each student read the first two or three sentences of her book, or if she is in the middle of a book, have her reread the last two or three sentences she read. Then have each student open to Student Response Book page 49 and write two or more things she is wondering about the topic of her text. Remind the students that they may write what they are wondering as questions or as “I wonder” statements.

When most students are finished writing, have partners share what they wrote. Explain that the students will read independently and then partners will talk again about whether the things they wondered were explained in their texts.

4 Read Independently

Have the students read independently for 15–20 minutes. As the students read, circulate among them and ask individual students to tell you what their texts are about and whether any of the things they wondered have been discussed in their texts so far.

5 Discuss Independent Reading

At the end of the independent reading time, have partners talk about what they learned from their reading and whether the things they wondered about were explained.

After partners have had a chance to talk, invite a few volunteers to share what they wondered and what they learned with the class. Ask questions such as the ones that follow and have volunteers read the pertinent parts of their texts aloud.

- Q Were your questions answered in your reading? If so, what did you learn?
- Q What was one interesting thing you learned as you read today?
- Q Now that you've read some of the text, what else are you wondering?

Tell the students that they will have more opportunities to wonder about expository texts in the coming weeks.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

TEKS 6.B.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3 (all)

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs to teach the Week 22 vocabulary lessons.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 22 lessons this week.

Day 1

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Explore the Desert (pages 1–7)
- “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart from Week 1
- “Questions About Deserts” chart (WA3)
- Student Response Book page 50

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of an expository nonfiction book
- Use schema to tell what they think they know about the topic of the book
- Use “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about the book
- Identify what they learn from the book and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Ask clarifying questions

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Direct the students’ attention to the “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart and explain that this week the students will continue to focus on asking clarifying questions when they do not understand their partners. Remind the students that asking clarifying questions helps them work with their partners and better understand the texts they are discussing.

2 Introduce Explore the Desert and Review “Stop and Ask Questions”

Remind the students that in the previous lessons they heard and discussed an expository nonfiction book about frogs that live in the rain forest. Explain that today the students will leave the rain forest to explore a very different animal habitat: the desert. Ask:

Q What do you think you know about deserts?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Show the cover and the title page of Explore the Desert and read the title and the author’s name aloud. Turn to the table of contents on page 3 and remind the students that a table of contents lists the different chapters and sections in a book and tells the page on which each chapter or section begins. Read the titles of chapters 1–6 aloud. Ask:

Q What questions do you have, or what do you wonder, about deserts?

Display the “Questions About Deserts” chart (WA3) and list a few of the students’ responses on the chart. Have the students open to Student Response Book page 50, “Stop and Ask Questions About Deserts (1).” Explain that during the reading today you will stop twice. At each stop, the students will record their questions in the appropriate box on the Student Response Book page. Then they will use their questions to discuss the reading with their partners and with the class.

ELL Note

Consider modeling this for your English Language Learners.

3 Read Aloud with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Explain that you will read the first chapter, “A Dry Land,” aloud today. Ask the students to listen carefully and to notice what they are wondering, or what questions come to mind.

Read pages 4–7 aloud slowly and clearly, pointing out text features and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

dunes: large piles of sand (p. 4)

suited: well prepared (p. 4)

adapted: changed to survive (p. 6)

Antarctica: large continent near the south pole (p. 7; refer to the map)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

harsh: difficult (p. 4)

Stop after:

p. 5 “Camels use fat stored in humps on their backs when they need to go without food and water.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What question can you ask right now? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have the students individually record their questions in the “Stop 1” box on Student Response Book page 50. After a moment, have one or two students share their questions with the class. Record their questions, exactly as stated, on the “Questions About Deserts” chart.

Reread the caption on page 5 and continue reading to the end of page 7. Ask:

Q What question can you ask right now? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have the students write their questions in the “Stop 2” box. Then invite one or two volunteers to share with the class, and record their questions on the chart.

4 Use Questions to Discuss the Reading

Ask the students to quietly review the questions they wrote during the reading. Then have them turn to their partners and discuss the reading using their questions.

Teacher Note

Words in boldface type are defined in the glossary on page 30 of Explore the Desert. These words do not appear in the Suggested Vocabulary list. If necessary, refer to the glossary for definitions.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty generating questions at the first stop, model asking one or two questions and record the questions on the “Questions About Deserts” chart (for example, “How long can a camel go without drinking?” and “What other animals live in the desert?”).

Facilitation Tip

Continue to focus on responding neutrally with interest during class discussions by refraining from overtly praising or criticizing the students’ responses. Instead, build the students’ intrinsic motivation by responding with genuine curiosity and interest, for example:

- “Interesting—say more about that.”
- “What you said makes me curious. I wonder. . . .”
- “Do you agree or disagree with what [Jackson] just said?”

Teacher Note

If you notice partners having difficulty using their questions to discuss the reading, you might stimulate their interaction by asking questions such as:

- Q How are your questions similar to or different from your partner's?
- Q Which of the questions that you or your partner wrote are discussed in the text, and how are they discussed?
- Q Which are not discussed?

Teacher Note

Save the “Questions About Deserts” chart (WA3) to use on Day 2.

As partners talk, circulate among them and notice whether the students have generated questions independently and whether the questions are relevant to the reading.

When most pairs have finished talking, facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages aloud and show pages again to help the students recall what they heard. Ask:

- Q What is a question that got you and your partner talking? Was that question answered in the reading? If so, what did you find out?

Students might say:

“My partner asked, ‘What animals live in the desert?’ We found out that camels and burrowing owls live in the desert.”

“My partner asked, ‘Where are most deserts?’ We remembered that the book has a map that shows where the deserts are located. We were surprised to learn that there is a big desert in Antarctica where it’s cold.”

Remind the students that wondering and asking questions is a comprehension strategy that helps them think more deeply about what they are reading. Explain that tomorrow the students will have more opportunities to wonder and ask questions about deserts and to work in pairs.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Wonder

Ask the students to think before they read about what they wonder about the topics of their texts and to notice if the things they wonder are explained in their reading. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share their reading with the class. Have each volunteer begin by showing her text and telling the class the title and the author's name. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is the topic of your text?
- Q What is something you wondered about the topic?
- Q Was what you wondered explained in the [book]? If so, what did you learn?
- Q What are you wondering now?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of an expository nonfiction book
- Use “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about the book
- Identify what they learn from the book
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Ask clarifying questions and agree and disagree respectfully

1 Review the Previous Lesson

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the “Questions About Deserts” chart (WA3) and review that in the previous lesson the students heard part of Explore the Desert and used “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about what they heard. Remind them that good readers ask themselves questions as they are reading to better understand the text. Ask:

- Q What have you learned so far about deserts?

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 51, “Stop and Ask Questions About Deserts (2).” Explain that today you will read more from Explore the Desert, and ask the students to pay attention to what they are wondering, or what questions come to mind as they listen. You will stop three times. At each stop, the students will talk in pairs about their questions and then write the questions in the appropriate box of the Student Response Book page.

Materials

- Explore the Desert (pages 14–19)
- “Questions About Deserts” chart (WA3) from Day 1
- Student Response Book page 53

Teacher Note

You may need to show and reread pages 4-7 to help the students recall what they learned.

Teacher Note

Words in boldface type are defined in the glossary on page 30 of Explore the Desert. These words do not appear in the Suggested Vocabulary list. If necessary, refer to the glossary for definitions.

2 Read Aloud with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Show the table of contents on page 3 and tell the students that today you will read chapter 3, “Desert Animals.” Read pages 14–19 aloud slowly and clearly, pointing out the text features and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

tortoises: animals that look like large turtles and live on land (p. 14)

jab: poke (p. 14)

tarantula: hairy, poisonous spider (p. 14; refer to the photograph on p. 15)

venom: poison (caption on p. 17)

burrows: holes or tunnels in the ground (p. 18)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

fierce: mean (p. 14)

scrambles: runs (p. 16)

gobbles: eats in large, greedy bites (p. 17)

scent: smell (p. 18)

scan: watch (p. 19)

swift: quick (p. 19)

Stop after:

p. 15 “A tarantula hunts small insects in the hot desert.”

Ask:

 Q What question can you ask right now? Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, have the students individually record their questions in the “Stop 1” box on Student Response Book page 51. When most students have finished writing, invite one or two students to share with the class, and add their questions to the “Questions About Deserts” chart.

Reread the caption on page 15 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 17 “With quick gulps, the Gila monster gobbles up its prey.”

Ask:

 Q What questions come to mind at this point in the reading? Turn to your partner.

Follow the same procedure you used at the last stop to have the students discuss and write their questions. Then record one or two of their questions on the chart.

Explain that the next part you will read tells about desert animals that hunt at night. Read pages 18–19. Stop after:

p. 19 “An elf owl peeks out from its nest in a saguaro cactus.”

Follow the procedure you used at the previous stops to have the students discuss and write their questions. Then add one or two questions to the chart.

3 Use Questions to Discuss the Reading

Tell the students that now they will use their questions to help them talk about the reading with their partners. Give the students a moment to review their questions individually. Then have partners discuss the reading using their questions.

When most pairs have finished talking, facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages aloud and show pages again to help the students recall what they heard. Ask:

Q What is a question that got you and your partner talking? Was the question discussed in the reading? If so, what did you find out?

Students might say:

“My partner [Keith] and I asked how plants and animals survive the desert heat. We think the question was discussed because we learned that most desert animals sleep during the day and come out at night.”

“I wondered what desert animals eat. We found out most desert animals hunt for their food.”

Q Do others agree that the question [was/was not] discussed in this way? Refer to the text to support your thinking.

Students might say:

“We disagree with [Tobie and Keith] because the book doesn’t say that most desert animals sleep during the day. It says many desert animals hide during the day, but it doesn’t say that they sleep.”

“I agree with [Kya and Sasha]. The book describes how scorpions, snakes, coyotes, and owls catch prey.”

“I disagree with [Kya and Sasha]. It’s true that the book describes a lot of desert animals that hunt, but it never says that most do.”

If the students do not talk about adaptations that allow animals to live in the desert, ask:

Q What more did you learn today about how animals survive in the desert?

Tell the students that they will continue to use “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about Explore the Desert in the next lesson.

Teacher Note

Circulate and listen as partners talk. Notice whether the questions the students generated are relevant to the reading and if the students are referring to the text to decide whether their questions are answered.

Teacher Note

Stop early in the discussion and remind the students to use the discussion prompts they have learned. The prompts are:

- “I agree with _____ because . . .”
- “I disagree with _____ because . . .”
- “In addition to what _____ said, I think . . .”

Teacher Note

Save the “Questions About Deserts” chart (WA3) to use on Day 3.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Ask the students to think before they read about what they wonder about the topics of their texts and to notice if the things they wonder about are explained in their reading. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Give the students a few minutes to share what they read with partners. Have each partner tell the title of the text he read, the author’s name, and what the text is about. Then have him tell something he wondered about the topic of the text and something he learned about the topic. After partners have had a chance to share, discuss as a class:

Q What did your partner share with you today about his or her reading?

Remind the students that the purpose of sharing their partners’ thinking is to help them develop their listening skills. Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

EXTENSION

Distinguish Between Facts and Opinions

Explain to the students that when they read expository or other nonfiction texts, it is important to recognize when authors are stating facts and when authors are stating opinions. Recognizing the difference between facts and opinions helps readers judge the accuracy or truthfulness of what they are reading.

Explain that a fact is a statement that can be proved true by observation or by checking a reliable source, such as an encyclopedia. (For example,

Student/Teacher Narrative
Extension
(first two paragraphs,
beginning on page 416
continuing on to page 417)

the statement “Scorpions jab their prey with poisonous stingers” is a fact. It can be proved true by observing how scorpions kill their prey.) An opinion is a statement of what someone thinks, feels, or believes about something. (For example, the statement “Scorpions are scary” is an opinion. It is a statement of what someone feels or believes to be true, but it cannot be proved true.)

Write the heading and the sentences shown in the diagram below where everyone can see them. Then have the students use “Think, Pair, Share” to think about and discuss whether each statement is a fact or an opinion.

Fact or Opinion?

Deserts get less than 10 inches of rain each year.

Deserts are bad places to live.

Hot deserts are better than cold deserts because they have more plants and animals.

Kangaroo rats are cute.

Gila monsters eat kangaroo rats.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of an expository nonfiction book
- Use “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about the book
- Identify what they learn from the book and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Ask clarifying questions

1 Review What the Students Learned About Deserts

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the students the

Materials

- Explore the Desert (pages 20–25)
- “Questions About Deserts” chart (WA3) from Day 2
- Student Response Book page 52
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

Teacher Note

You may need to reread parts of chapters 1 and 3 to help the students recall what they have learned.

Teacher Note

Words in boldface type are defined in the glossary on page 30 of Explore the Desert. These words do not appear in the Suggested Vocabulary list. If necessary, refer to the glossary for definitions.

cover of Explore the Desert and remind them that they have heard two chapters from the book. Ask:

Q What have you learned about deserts so far?

Show the table of contents (page 3) and explain that today you will read chapter 4, “People and the Desert.” Display the “Questions About Deserts” chart (WA3) and ask:

Q Which of these questions are you still wondering about?

Encourage the students to listen for answers to their questions and to notice what new questions come to mind during the reading.

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 52, “Stop and Ask Questions About Deserts (3).” Explain that you will stop three times during the reading. At each stop, the students will talk in pairs about their questions and then individually write the questions in the appropriate box of the Student Response Book page.

2 Read Aloud with “Stop and Ask Questions”

Explain that the first part you will read tells about a group of people called the Tuaregs, who have lived in the desert for a very long time. Beginning on page 20, read aloud slowly and clearly, pointing out the text features and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

turban: long piece of cloth wrapped around a person’s head (p. 20; refer to the photograph on p. 21)

droughts: long periods of time without much rain (p. 20)

aliens: plants or animals from someplace else (p. 23)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

trample over: step heavily on (p. 23)

Stop after:

p. 21 “Tuaregs use camels to carry goods long distances across the desert.”

Ask:

Q What question can you ask right now? Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, have the students individually record their questions in the “Stop 1” box of the Student Response Book page. When most students have finished writing, invite one or two students to share their questions with the class; record their questions on the “Questions About Deserts” chart. Explain that the next part you will read describes some of the effects people are having on the desert. Read pages 22–23. Stop after:

p. 23 “Both plants were accidentally brought from Asia and Europe in the 1800s and early 1900s.”

Ask:

Q What question can you ask right now? Turn to your partner.

Follow the same procedure you used at the last stop to have the students discuss and write their questions. Then record one or two of the questions students share on the chart.

Explain that the last part you will read describes what people are doing to protect the desert. Read pages 24–25. Stop after:

p. 25 “It’s against the law to harm any of the plants or animals that live there.”

Ask:

Q What question can you ask right now? Turn to your partner.

Follow the procedure you used at the previous stops to have the students discuss and write their questions. Then add one or two of the questions students share to the chart.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to generate questions about the reading?
- Are their questions relevant to the book?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2); see page 102 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to generate relevant questions, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to generate relevant questions, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

3 Use Questions to Discuss the Reading

Have the students use their questions to discuss the reading with their partners. When most pairs have finished talking, facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread parts of the text that support the students' thinking.

Q What is a question that got you and your partner talking? Was the question discussed in the reading? If so, what did you find out?

Q Do others agree that the question [was/was not] discussed in this way? Refer to the text to support your thinking.

If the students do not talk about how people are making an impact on the deserts, ask:

Q What did you learn about the effects people are having on deserts?

Direct the students' attention to the "Questions About Deserts" chart and point out that some of the students' questions about deserts were not answered in the parts of the book you read aloud. Explain that you will make the book available for independent reading so that interested students can see if their questions are answered in other parts of the book.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Wonder

Encourage the students to pay attention to what they are wondering as they read. Explain that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of the students to share what they wondered with the class. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share their reading with the class. Have each volunteer begin by showing her text and telling the class the title and the author's name. Ask questions such as:

Q What is the topic of your [book]?

Q What is something you wondered about the topic?

Q Was what you wondered explained in the [book]? If so, what did you learn?

Q What are you wondering now?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Read More from Explore the Desert

Read chapters 2, 5, and 6 of Explore the Desert aloud. Facilitate class discussions about what the students learned from each chapter as well as what the information in the chapters made them wonder. You might also take time to read and discuss the text features on pages 30–32.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Research and Report on Deserts

Show the cover of Explore the Desert and remind the students that they heard parts of this book earlier and learned information about deserts and the people and animals that live there. They used the thinking tool “Stop and Ask Questions” to make sense of what they heard and then thought about whether their questions were answered in the text. Remind the students that it is normal for readers to have some of their questions answered in a text and not others. Ask:

Q What questions do you still have about deserts?

Write the students’ questions where everyone can see them. Briefly discuss what keywords might be useful in an Internet search to answer these questions, for example, “largest desert in the world,” “desert temperatures,” or “desert cities around the world.”

Guide the students in an online search for reputable websites with relevant information. As a class, browse the websites to find information and images that answer the students’ questions. After the search is finished, briefly discuss:

Q What new things have you learned about deserts?

Have the students write paragraphs about what they learned. Ask the students to title their paragraphs and to use at least one other text feature. If time permits, have the students share their writing with the class.

Technology Tip

To support the students in doing online research, you might teach the following Technology Mini-lessons in Appendix B: Mini-lesson 1, “Navigating Safely Online”; Mini-lesson 4, “Choosing Effective Search Terms”; Mini-lesson 5, “Understanding Search Results”; Mini-lesson 6, “Narrowing Search Results and Using Filters”; and Mini-lesson 7, “Evaluating Research Sources.” For more information about teaching Technology Mini-lessons 4–7, see “About Teaching the Online Research Lessons” at the beginning of Technology Mini-lesson 4.

Materials

- Expository text for teacher modeling, selected ahead
- Medium-size self-stick notes for each student
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA4)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section

In this lesson, the students:

- Read independently
- Use “Stop and Ask Questions” to think about expository texts
- Refer to the text to support their thinking
- Write in their reading journals
- Ask clarifying questions

1 Review “Stop and Ask Questions”

Have the students get their Student Response Books, pencils, and texts for independent reading and sit at desks with partners together. Review that this week the students heard parts of Explore the Desert, learned about the animals and people who live in a desert habitat, and used the thinking tool “Stop and Ask Questions” to make sense of the reading.

Explain that today the students will use “Stop and Ask Questions” as they read expository texts independently. They will use self-stick notes to mark places in their texts where questions come to mind and will write the questions on the notes. Remind the students that they used self-stick notes in this way earlier in the year to ask questions about stories they were reading independently. Explain that after reading they will discuss their questions in pairs and then write about them in their reading journals.

2 Model Using “Stop and Ask Questions” with Independent Reading

Model the procedure using a text the students are familiar with. Read several sentences aloud and think aloud about a question you have. Jot the question on a self-stick note and place the note in the margin where you stopped reading.

You might say:

“I’m wondering if any Tuaregs still live in the desert. The book mentions that droughts and wars have made their traditional way of life difficult. I’m going to write the question: Do any Tuaregs live in the desert today? I’ll stick it here next to this photograph of the Tuareg man walking a camel.”

3 Read Independently

Distribute self-stick notes and have the students read silently for 15–20 minutes. Stop the class at 5-minute intervals and prompt any students who have not written questions to do so.

4 Discuss the Students' Questions

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students talk with their partners about the questions they wrote and what they found out about those questions. Remind the students to refer to the text to support their thinking.

After partners have had a chance to talk, have a few volunteers each share a question with the class. Ask follow-up questions such as:

- Q What was happening in the text when you thought of that question?
- Q What did you find out about that question?

5 Write About Questions in Reading Journals

Display the “Journal Entry” chart (WA4) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What the text is about
- One question you wrote on a self-stick note
- What, if anything, you found out about that question
- If the text does not discuss the question, something else you learned

WA4

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Teacher Note

Remind partners to ask each other clarifying questions during their discussions.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

ELL Note

Consider having students with limited English proficiency dictate journal entries for you to write down.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty writing about their questions, you might use an expository text the students are familiar with to model writing a journal entry. For example, you might write: I am reading Explore the Desert by Kay Jackson. This book is about the plants, animals, and people that live in the desert. I wondered how animals could live in the desert with so little water. I learned that some desert animals have special ways to survive without much water. For example, camels live off fat in their humps when they cannot get food or water. Reptiles have watertight skin, so they don't lose water by sweating like people do.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Explore the Desert to teach the Week 23 vocabulary lessons.

Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries and the texts they are reading with the class.

6 Reflect on Working Together

Review that this week the students focused on asking clarifying questions during partner conversations. Facilitate a brief class discussion about how the students are doing with this skill by asking questions such as:

- Q How has your ability to share your thinking with your partner improved? How has that helped your work together?
- Q How do you think you and your partner are doing with asking each other clarifying questions? How has this helped your learning?
- Q What are some ways you have been taking responsibility for your own learning and behavior?

EXTENSION

Practice Using “Stop and Ask Questions” with Content-area Reading

Have the students use “Stop and Ask Questions” to help them be active readers of social studies, science, math, or other content-area texts. Encourage them to use self-stick notes to mark places where questions come to mind and to continue reading to see what they can learn about their questions.

Week 3

OVERVIEW

Polar Bears

by Mark Newman

Readers learn about the physical characteristics of polar bears, their habitat, and threats to their survival.

“Polar Bears in Peril”

by Elizabeth Winchester

(see pages 446–447)

Polar bears face problems as a result of climate change, but zoos and individuals can help.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 23 lessons this week.

Day 1

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Polar Bears (pages 5–15)
- “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart from Week 2
- “Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears” chart (WA5)
- Medium-size self-stick notes for each student

Teacher Note

You might wish to point out the North Pole on a globe or show the students the map on page 12.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of an expository nonfiction book
- Use schema to tell what they think they know about the topic of the book
- Use wondering/questioning to make sense of the book
- Identify what they learn from the book and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Ask clarifying questions and agree and disagree respectfully

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Refer to the “Questions to Help Me Understand My Partner” chart and remind the students that they have been asking their partners clarifying questions when they do not understand their partners’ ideas. Tell them that they will continue to practice asking clarifying questions this week. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What clarifying questions have you asked your partner to help you understand his or her thinking?
- Q How did you ask those questions in a caring and respectful way?
- Q Why is it important for you to understand your partner’s thinking?

2 Introduce Polar Bears

Remind the students that they have been hearing and discussing expository nonfiction books about animals and their habitats (the places where they live). Tell the students that this week they will hear two expository texts about polar bears, which live near the North Pole. Show the cover of Polar Bears and read the title and the author’s name aloud. Explain that Mark Newman also took the photographs in the book. Ask:

-  Q What do you think you know about polar bears? Turn to your partner.
Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class. In the same way, discuss:
-  Q What questions do you have, or what do you wonder, about polar bears? Turn to your partner.

Display the “Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears” chart (WA5) and remind the students that the double-entry journal is a tool for organizing their thinking. Invite a few volunteers to share what they wonder with the class, and record their ideas in the “What We Wonder” column. Explain that you will continue to use the double-entry journal throughout the week to keep track of what the students wonder and what they learn about polar bears.

3 Read Part of Polar Bears Aloud

Tell the students that you will read part of the book today and continue reading it tomorrow. Ask the students to listen carefully and to think about what they are learning and wondering about polar bears. Explain that you will stop once during the reading so partners can discuss what they have learned so far and what else they are wondering based on what they have learned.

Read aloud slowly and clearly, showing the photographs and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

den: an animal's home (p. 7)

hibernate: sleep for the winter (p. 8)

Stop after:

p. 8 "The den is cozy, staying 40 degrees warmer than the frigid Arctic air outside."

Ask:

Q What have you learned about polar bears so far? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their ideas with the class. Record their ideas in the "What We Learned" column of the "Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears" chart, next to related items in the "What We Wonder" column when possible. Remind the students that this shows how what they learn and what they wonder are connected. Ask:

Q What did this part make you wonder? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking and record their ideas in the "What We Wonder" column.

What We Wonder	What We Learned
How big are polar bears?	Male polar bears can weigh more than 2,000 pounds.
What do polar bears eat?
How many babies do polar bears have?	Most polar bears give birth to twins.
How long do baby bears stay with their mothers?

WA5

Reread the last sentence on page 8 and continue reading to the end of page 15. First in pairs, and then as a class, discuss the questions that follow and add the students' ideas to the appropriate columns of the chart.

- Q What did you learn about polar bears from the part I just read?
- Q Based on what you have learned so far, what questions do you have about polar bears?

Facilitation Tip

Reflect on your experience over the past three weeks with responding neutrally with interest during class discussions. Does this practice feel natural to you? Are you integrating it into class discussions throughout the school day? What effect is it having on the students? We encourage you to continue to try this practice and to reflect on students' responses as you facilitate class discussions in the future.

Teacher Note

Save the "Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears" chart (WA5) to use on Day 2.

4 Discuss the Reading and the Students' Questions

Facilitate a class discussion about the reading. Ask:

- Q What was the most surprising or interesting thing you learned about polar bears from the reading today?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Add any new ideas to the "What We Learned" column of the "Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears" chart. Then direct the students' attention to the items in the "What We Wonder" column and ask:

- Q Which of your questions were answered in today's reading? What did you find out about them?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking, and add their ideas to the chart as appropriate. Follow up by asking:

- Q Do others agree that the question ["What do polar bears eat?"] was answered in this way? Refer to the text to support your thinking.

Tell the students that they will hear more of the book in the next lesson and they will continue to think about what they are learning and what they wonder about polar bears.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Ask Questions

Have the students get their texts and pencils. Remind them that in the previous lesson they used the thinking tool "Stop and Ask Questions" during independent reading. Explain that again today the students will use self-stick notes to keep track of questions that come to mind as they are reading. They will write their questions on self-stick notes and place the notes next to parts of their texts that made them think of the questions.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read silently for up to 25 minutes. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share the texts they read with the class. Have each volunteer begin by showing her text and telling the class the title and the author’s name. Then ask questions such as:

- Q What is a question you had as you were reading?
- Q What did you read that made you think of that question?
- Q Did the text answer your question? If so, what did you find out?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Teacher Note

Have the students keep their self-stick notes in place in their texts. They will revisit the notes during independent reading tomorrow.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of an expository nonfiction book
- Use wondering/questioning to make sense of the book
- Identify what they learn from the book and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Write in their reading journals
- Ask clarifying questions and agree and disagree respectfully

1 Review the “Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears” Chart

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the “Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears” chart (WA5) from Day 1 and briefly review the ideas listed there. Explain that today you will read more from Polar Bears. Ask the students to listen carefully to find out if the things they are wondering about are explained the book.

Materials

- Polar Bears (pages 17–27)
- “Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears” chart (WA5) from Day 1
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3)
- Medium-size self-stick notes for each student
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA6)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section

2 Read the Rest of Polar Bears Aloud

Tell the students that you will stop during the reading so they can discuss what they learned and what they wonder. Read pages 17–27 aloud slowly and clearly, showing the photographs and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

enduring: surviving (p. 20)

compact: small (p. 20)

jeopardy: danger (p. 27)

global warming: increase in world temperatures (p. 27)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

blubber: fat (p. 18)

scavenged: eaten (p. 18)

rarely: not often (p. 18)

existence: life (p. 27)

well nourished: well fed and healthy (p. 27)

pollution: harmful materials in the water, air, and soil (p. 27)

Stop after:

p. 20 “Their compact ears and very short tail further prevent heat loss.”

Ask:

Q What did you learn about polar bears from the part I just read? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share what they learned, and record their ideas in the “What We Learned” column of the “Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears” chart. Then ask:

Q Based on what you learned, what questions do you have? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking, and record their questions in the “What We Wonder” column.

Reread the last sentence on page 20 and continue reading to the end of page 27. First in pairs, and then as a class, discuss the questions that follow and add the students’ ideas to the appropriate columns of the chart.

Q What did you learn about polar bears from the part I just read?

Q Based on what you have learned, what questions do you have?

3 Discuss What the Students Learned and Wonder

Facilitate a class discussion about the reading. Ask:

Q What is something interesting or surprising that you learned about polar bears from today's reading?

Have a few students share their thinking, and add any new ideas to the "What We Learned" column. Then direct the students' attention to the items in the "What We Wonder" column and ask:

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in today's reading? If so, what did you find out about them?

Q Based on what you have learned, what else do you wonder about polar bears?

Have a few students share their thinking, and record their ideas on the chart.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to use the information in the book to wonder about polar bears?
- Are they referring to the text to determine whether the things they wondered about earlier have been explained?

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA3); see page 103 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to use the information in the book to wonder about polar bears, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 3.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to use the information in the book to wonder about polar bears, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1 and 2 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 3. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the "Grade 3 Alternative Texts" list.

Tell the students that tomorrow they will hear another expository text about polar bears and may have more of their questions answered.

4 Reflect on Partner Work

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

Q If you didn't understand your partner's thinking, what did you do?

Q How did you take responsibility for your own learning when you worked with your partner today?

Q What can you do to be more responsible the next time you work with your partner?

Teacher Note

Save the "Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears" chart (WA5) to use on Day 3.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

5 Read Independently and Write in Reading Journals

Have the students get their pencils and texts and review the questions they wrote on self-stick notes in the previous lesson. Ask the students to keep these questions in mind as they read today and to write down any new questions that come to mind. Explain that later each student will choose a question to write about in his reading journal.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read independently for up to 25 minutes. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Display the "Journal Entry" chart (WA6) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

WA6

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the text you are reading.

Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What the text is about
- One question you wrote on a self-stick note
- What, if anything, you found out about that question
- If the text does not discuss the question, something else you learned

Give the students a moment to quietly review their questions and choose one to write about. Then have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write. Have the students return to their desks and write in their reading journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write Opinions of Books from the Unit

Show the covers of Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs, Explore the Desert, and Polar Bears and remind the students that all three books are expository nonfiction books about animals and their habitats. Ask:

Q What do you remember about these books?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Then ask:

Q Which of these books do you think is the most interesting? Why?

Students might say:

"I think Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs is the most interesting because the frogs are really cool."

"I think Explore the Desert is the most interesting because it tells about people who live in the desert, not just animals."

"Polar Bears is the most interesting because polar bears are my favorite animal and I liked looking at the close-up photographs of them."

Explain that each student will write about which book she thought was the most interesting and why. Explain that the students will not all choose the same book and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about which book you find the most interesting.

You might say:

"I think Explore the Desert is the most interesting of the three books because it describes the many animals that live in the desert, instead of focusing on one type of animal. I also enjoyed the different text features in the book, such as the photographs, captions, and "field note" and "fact" boxes. They make each page interesting and fun to look at. I'll write: I think Explore the Desert is the most interesting because it talks about many different animals that live in the desert, including camels, tarantulas, Gila monsters, and coyotes. I also like the different text features in the book because they're fun to look at and they contain interesting facts and information."

Have each student write about which book she finds the most interesting and why. If time permits, invite the students to share their writing with the class.

Materials

- Polar Bears
- Explore the Desert from Week 2
- Flashy Fantastic Rain Forest Frogs from Week 1

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty remembering the books, leaf through them and show some of the illustrations or photographs.

Day 3

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- “Polar Bears in Peril” (see pages 446–447)
- Polar Bears
- Student Response Book pages 53–55
- “Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears” chart (WA5) from Day 2

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step and the next for this unit’s Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

If necessary, explain that peril means “serious danger.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction article
- Use wondering/questioning to make sense of the article
- Identify what they learn from the article and refer to the text to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Show the cover of Polar Bears and remind the students that in previous lessons they heard the book read aloud and discussed what they learned and wondered about polar bears.

Display the “Double-entry Journal About Polar Bears” chart (WA5) from Day 2 and read aloud any items in the “What We Wonder” column that are not addressed in the book. Remind the students that when they come to the end of an expository text and still have questions about the topic, they can read other expository texts or search the Internet for more information. Tell the students that today they will read and discuss an expository nonfiction article about polar bears from timeforkids.com, an online magazine for children.

2 Introduce “Polar Bears in Peril” and the Double-entry Journal

Have the students open to “Polar Bears in Peril” on Student Response Book pages 54–55, and explain that this is the article they will read today. Direct their attention to the title and headings and review that an article’s title and headings are meant to give readers an idea of what kind of information will be in the article while making them curious to read the whole thing. Read the title and the headings aloud; then ask the students to quietly think about the following question:

Q Based on the title and headings, what do you wonder?

After a moment, have the students turn to “Double-entry Journal About ‘Polar Bears in Peril’” on Student Response Book page 55. Point out that this double-entry journal is like the one you used to record their thinking about the book Polar Bears. Have each student write at least one thing he wonders in the “What I Wonder” column. Remind the students that they can write what they wonder as questions or as “I wonder” statements. When most students are finished writing, invite a few volunteers to share what they wrote with the class.

Students might say:

“I wonder what’s so important about ice.”

“How do zoos help polar bears?”

“Why are polar bears in peril?”

“What can we do to help the polar bears?”

3 Read Aloud and Use the Double-entry Journal to Record Ideas

Ask the students to turn back to “Polar Bears in Peril” on Student Response Book pages 54–55 and tell them that you would like them to follow along as you read the article aloud. Encourage them to notice whether the things they wonder are explained in the article and what new things they are learning and wondering. Explain that you will stop during the reading and ask the students to record their ideas on the double-entry journal.

Read the first three paragraphs of “Polar Bears in Peril,” including the caption on page 446, aloud slowly and clearly. Stop after:

p. 446 “Bonner is working with zoo and aquarium officials across the country to prevent the bears from dying out.”

Ask:

Q What did you learn from the part I just read? What do you wonder?

Have each student turn to the double-entry journal on page 55 and record one thing she learned and one thing she wonders.

When most of the students are finished writing, have them turn back to the article on pages 54–55 and continue to follow along as you read the rest of the article aloud. When you come to the end of the article, use the same procedure you used at the first stop to have the students record what they learned and wonder.

4 Discuss the Article and What Students Learned and Wonder

Facilitate a class discussion about the article. Ask:

Q How is climate change affecting polar bears?

Q What have you learned about ways people can help polar bears?

Have the students quietly review what they wrote in their double-entry journals on Student Response Book page 53. After a moment, ask:

Q Were any of the things you wondered about explained in the article? If so, what did you find out?

Q What is something you wondered that was not explained?

Remind the students that they can read other nonfiction texts about polar bears or search the Internet to find answers to their questions. Explain that tomorrow they will think more about the two texts they heard this week.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Ask the students to pay attention to what they are learning and wondering about the topics of their texts as they read today. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Give the students a few minutes to share what they read with partners. Have each partner tell the title of the text he read, the author’s name, and what the text is about. Then have him share one thing he wondered and one thing he learned during his reading today.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

In this lesson, the students:

- Compare and contrast two expository texts on the same topic
- Discuss important ideas and key details in the texts
- Refer to the texts to support their thinking
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students get their Student Response Books and sit at desks with partners together. Remind the students that they have been learning about animals and their habitats and that this week they heard two expository texts—a book and an article—about polar bears. Explain that today the students will revisit the book and the article and think about how the information in the texts is the same and how it is different.

2 Reread “Polar Bears in Peril” and Discuss Important Points

Have the students turn to “Polar Bears in Peril” on Student Response Book pages 54–55 and quietly review the article on their own. After a few moments, call for the students’ attention and ask:

Q If someone asked you what this article is about, what would you say?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Explain that you will reread the article and the students will discuss the important points in each part.

Ask the students to follow along as you read the first three paragraphs of “Polar Bears in Peril.” Stop after:

p. 446 “Bonner is working with zoo and aquarium officials across the country to prevent the bears from dying out.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What do you think is the most important thing to remember from the part you just heard? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Materials

- “Polar Bears in Peril” (see pages 446–447)
- Polar Bears
- Student Response Book pages 54–55
- Copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

Invite a few volunteers to share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"Polar bears are in danger because the Arctic ice is melting."

"Climate change is affecting polar bears."

"Climate change could cause polar bears to die out."

Read the section "The Importance of the Ice" as the students follow along. Stop after:

p. 447 "These conditions can cause polar bear cubs to become separated from their mothers, who provide them with food."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What do you think the author wants us to learn from this section? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

"Polar bears need ice to hunt seals."

"Polar bears can't survive for long on land."

"Less ice means it's harder for polar bears to find food."

Have the students follow along as you read the last section, "What Zoos—And You—Can Do," aloud. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What do you think is the most important thing to remember from the part you just heard? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share their thinking.

Students might say:

"Zoos can help polar bears."

"If people can see polar bears in zoos, they'll want to help them."

"Zoos help people learn about polar bears and what's happening to them."

3 Discuss Text-to-text Connections

Show pages 26–27 of Polar Bears and remind the students that this section of the book also describes the problems polar bears are facing. Tell the students that you will reread the section aloud and that you want them to think about how the information in the section is the same as the information in the article and how it is different.

Read page 27 of Polar Bears aloud. First in pairs, and then as a class, discuss:

Q How is the information in the book and the article the same?

Q How is the information in the book and the article different?

Students might say:

"The book and the article both say that polar bears are in trouble because of global warming."

"In addition to what [Daria] said, both the article and the book explain why polar bears need ice to survive."

"The book says that pollution from oil rigs and oil exploration is also hurting the polar bears. The article doesn't mention that."

"The article talks about ways zoos and people can help the polar bears. The book doesn't do that."

If necessary, explain that the texts have an important idea in common: polar bears are in danger because of climate change. Both texts provide details about what melting ice means for the bears, but only the article suggests ways people can help.

Tell the students that readers of nonfiction often read multiple texts about topics they are interested in. Ask:

Q Why is it helpful to read more than one text on a topic?

Students might say:

"You learn more if you read a lot of different things."

"Books and articles can tell you different facts."

"One text might explain something another text didn't talk about."

If necessary, point out that you can read many texts about the same topic and learn new information from each text.

4 Reflect on Working Together

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students worked together during the unit. Ask:

Q What is one thing that you think you and your partner have done well during this unit?

Q How did talking with your partner help you think about what you learned and what you wondered?

You may want to share some of your own observations about how the students worked together. Explain that each student will get a new partner for the next unit. Give partners a moment to thank each other.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Discuss Nonfiction Topics

Ask the students to pay attention to what they are learning and wondering about the topics of their texts as they read. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Polar Bears to teach the Week 24 vocabulary lessons.

Teacher Note

For information on wrapping up this unit and conducting unit assessments, see “End-of-unit Considerations” on page 445.

Materials

- Polar Bears
- “Polar Bears in Peril” (see pages 446–447)
- Student Response Book pages 54–55

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Tell the students that beginning next week they will be able to choose between fiction and nonfiction texts during IDR. Ask the students to think quietly about the expository nonfiction texts they have read over the past several weeks. After a moment, facilitate a class discussion using questions such as:

- Q What do you enjoy about reading expository nonfiction?
- Q What topics have you enjoyed reading about?
- Q Have you read more than one text on the same topic? Tell us about it.
- Q What topics do you want to read more about?

Encourage the students to continue to read expository nonfiction when they read on their own. Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Compare and Contrast Two Texts About Polar Bears

Show the cover of Polar Bears and the article “Polar Bears in Peril” and remind the students that they heard these texts earlier. Explain that today they will revisit the book and the article and think about how the two texts are alike and how they are different.

Slowly page through Polar Bears and show the photographs. Ask:

- Q What do you remember about this book?

Students might say:

“The author took the pictures of the polar bears himself.”

“It gives a lot of information about polar bears, including what they look like, what they eat, and how they take care of their cubs.”

“In addition to what [Tyler] said, it talks about why polar bears are endangered.”

Next have the students turn to “Polar Bears in Peril” on Student Response Book pages 54–55 and quietly review the article on their own. After a few minutes, call for the students’ attention and ask:

Q What do you remember about this article?

Students might say:

“It tells about how global warming is affecting polar bears.”

“It describes some ways zoos are helping polar bears.”

“It says that we can help the polar bears by conserving energy.”

Ask:

Q In what ways are the two texts alike?

Q In what ways are they different?

Q Which text do you prefer and why?

Invite a few volunteers to share their thinking.

Students might say:

“They’re both about polar bears.”

“They both describe why polar bears are endangered.”

“The book has sections about what polar bears look like, what they eat, and how they swim. The article doesn’t talk about those things.”

“The article describes how zoos are helping polar bears, and the book doesn’t.”

“I prefer the book because it has more photographs of polar bears.”

“I like the book better too because I liked learning about polar bear babies.”

Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about what is the same about the two texts, what is different about them, and which text you prefer and why.

You might say:

“First I want to describe some of the ways the two texts are alike. I’ll write: The book Polar Bears and the article “Polar Bears in Peril” are alike in some ways. Both are expository nonfiction texts about polar bears. They both have photographs of polar bears and contain information about how global warming is affecting the bears. Now I want to write about some of the things that are different about the two texts and which text I prefer and why. I’ll write: The texts are also different in some ways. Polar Bears is a book with sections about how polar bears look, how they take care of their young, and how they swim. The article only talks about the effects of climate change on polar bears. Also, the article suggests ways people can help polar bears, which the book doesn’t do. I prefer the book because I think it gives more information about polar bears than the article does.”

Have the students write about what is the same and what is different in the two texts and which text they prefer and why. If time permits, invite a few volunteers to share their writing with the class.

Student/Teacher Narrative
Writing About Reading
("You might say" note on page 443)

Teacher Note

You might have the students record what they learn about polar bears in a double-entry journal. You might title one column “What I Learned About Polar Bears from Nonfiction Texts” and the other column “What I Learned About Polar Bears from a Fiction Book.”

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, locate an animal expert or organization to which you can e-mail the students’ questions about polar bears. You might search online using the keywords “ask a zookeeper” or “ask the zoo.” Alternatively, you might contact a local zoo to see if a zookeeper on staff is willing to correspond with your class via e-mail or a class blog. For more information about setting up and maintaining a class blog, view the “Using Blogs in the Classroom” tutorial (AV45).

EXTENSION

Analyze Paired Texts About Polar Bears

If the students enjoyed learning about polar bears, you might extend the exploration by reading aloud and discussing a fictional treatment of the subject. Fiction titles about polar bears include Ice Bear by Nicola Davies, Ice Bears by Brenda Z. Guiberson, and The Polar Bears Are Hungry by Carol Carrick.

Prior to reading the fiction book, have the students discuss facts they learned about polar bears from the book Polar Bears and the article “Polar Bears in Peril” and what they still wonder about polar bears. Point out that fiction authors are free to mix facts with invention (things they have made up) in any way they wish, so works of fiction cannot always be relied on as sources of factually accurate information. However, fiction stories can help readers imagine what life is like for polar bears in ways that expository nonfiction cannot.

Read aloud the fiction book. After the reading, have the students discuss what they learned from hearing a fictional story about polar bears.

Encourage the students to compare the two texts and make text-to-text connections by asking questions such as:

- Q What more did you learn from [Ice Bear] about polar bears?
- Q What was especially surprising or interesting about [Ice Bear]?
- Q How are the books Polar Bears and [Ice Bear] the same? How are they different?
- Q Which book did you like better? Why?

Ask an Expert About Polar Bears

Show the cover of Polar Bears and remind the students that they heard the book earlier. Page through the book slowly, showing the photographs and reading the heading in each section aloud. Ask:

- Q What did you learn about polar bears from this book?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Then have the students turn to “Polar Bears in Peril” on Student Response Book pages 54–55 and quietly review the article on their own. After a few moments, call for the students’ attention and ask:

- Q What did you learn about polar bears from the article?

Remind the students that it is normal for readers to have questions about a topic even after reading one or more expository texts on that topic. Ask:

- Q What questions do you still have about polar bears?

As the students respond, jot down their questions where everyone can see them.

Tell the students that they will try to find answers to some of their questions by sending an e-mail to an animal expert. Have the students help you write an e-mail or fill out an information request form (using your school's contact information) to be sent to the organization or person you identified. Share any responses you receive with the students. (Be sure to check your "junk e-mail" folder to ensure that response e-mails do not get lost.)

Research Global Warming

Interested students may wish to do further research on the causes and effects of global warming as well as on efforts on the part of individuals, organizations, businesses, and government agencies to address the problem of global warming. The students can search the Internet for information using the keywords "global warming causes," "global warming effects," and "global warming solutions." You might suggest that the students work in groups of two or four to create presentations about what they learned and then deliver the presentations to the rest of the class.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 7. You will need to reassign partners before you start the next unit.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1). Periodically, have a few students share with the class what they are reading at home.

Assessments

- Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students' reading comprehension using the "Individual Comprehension Assessment" record sheet (IA1); see page 108 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- (Optional) Prior to beginning the next unit, you might wish to prepare the students for an end-of-year reading assessment by teaching the Answering Questions in Response to Text unit in the Reading Assessment Preparation Guide. For more information, see "Teaching the Unit" in the Introduction of the Reading Assessment Preparation Guide.

Prior to doing this activity, you might wish to view the "Using Presentation Tools" tutorial (AV44).

POLAR BEARS IN PERIL

Arctic sea ice is melting, making it harder for polar bears to survive in the wild.

By Elizabeth Winchester

Polar bears' features help them survive in the Arctic. A thick layer of fat helps keep the bears warm.

The top of the world is a wintry wonderland. Icebergs float in the cold Arctic Ocean. In the deep of winter, the temperature often falls to  $-30$  degrees Fahrenheit and the sun never rises. The ocean is surrounded by frozen ground. There are few people or trees, but to polar bears, the Arctic is home.

Polar bears have thick fur, huge paws, and other features that make them well prepared for life in their harsh environment. In fact, they need the Arctic sea ice for survival. But climate change is causing larger and larger areas of summer sea ice to melt. Experts say that if warming patterns continue, the Arctic could be free of summer sea ice by 2050. That may cause two-thirds of the world's 20,000 polar bears to be gone by then, too.

"Global climate change may not be affecting you, but it is really affecting polar bears in the Arctic," Jeffrey Bonner, president of the St. Louis Zoo in Missouri, told TFK (TIME for Kids). Bonner is working with zoo and aquarium officials across the country to prevent the bears from dying out.

The Importance of the Ice

Polar bears can't survive for long on land. Seals are their main source of food. The bears hunt for seals in openings in the sea ice. Polar bears need the ice to get to their prey. In summer, the polar bears that live on land eat very little and wait for the sea ice to return.

Polar bears rely on sea ice as their base for hunting, eating, and breeding.

With the sea ice forming later in the year and melting earlier, polar bears do not have enough opportunity to hunt and eat. Less sea ice makes it harder for the bears to catch the seals. The bears must swim longer distances between ice packs, and they can't always make it. The ice is also getting thinner. These conditions can cause polar bear cubs to become separated from their mothers, who provide them with food.

What Zoos—and You—Can Do

Less ice and snow in the far north is also making the entire planet warmer. Steven Amstrup is the chief scientist of Polar Bears International, a group that is dedicated to saving the bears and their habitat. "The more people who see polar bears and understand their plight, the better the chance we'll alter our warming path in time to save them," he says.

Few people have the chance to see polar bears in the wild. That's where zoos come in. The St. Louis Zoo in Missouri and the North Carolina Zoo in Asheboro both recently opened new polar bear exhibits. "If you save the polar bears, you are doing something dramatic to help the environment," says Bonner.

While there are obstacles to bringing polar bears into the country, Bonner and others are working to show how rescuing orphaned cubs could help the species survive. Zoos would provide the cubs with a safe home. Experts would work to breed the bears and keep polar-bear populations healthy.

You can do your part, too, by protecting the environment and helping efforts to save the bears' habitat. Turn off lights and appliances, and save energy in other ways. "If everybody does small things, that adds up," says Bonner.

Determining Important Ideas

EXPOSITORY NONFICTION, FICTION, AND DRAMA

During this unit, the students focus on determining important ideas in texts to better understand and remember what they read. They also make inferences, visualize, and identify what they learn and wonder as they hear and discuss read-alouds from a variety of genres. During IDR, the students identify important ideas and themes in books they read independently, and they think about how they are applying the comprehension strategies they have learned in their own reading. Socially, they learn the procedure for “Think, Pair, Write” and develop the skill of giving reasons for their thinking. They also practice showing respect for the thinking of others, even when it is different from their own.

This article discusses the current trend in schools across the country to ban the game of tag at recess.

“Homework—Who Needs It?”

(see pages 480–481)

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this unit’s read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1); see page 127 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 119 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 24 lessons this week.

Materials

- “Banning Tag” (see pages 476–477)
- Student Response Book pages 56–57
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- Class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1)
- Assessment Resource Book page 124

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin working with new partners
- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction article
- Think about important ideas in the article
- Share their own opinions about the topic of the article
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

ABOUT DETERMINING IMPORTANT IDEAS AT GRADE 3

The focus of this unit is determining important ideas, a powerful strategy for helping readers understand and retain what they read. In grade 3 of the Making Meaning program, the students begin by determining the important ideas in expository nonfiction texts. In Week 3, they transition to fiction and a discussion of themes, or the important lessons or messages in stories. For more information, see “The Grade 3 Comprehension Strategies” in the Introduction.

1 Pair Students and Get Ready to Work Together

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other’s names. Explain that the same pairs will work together for the next few weeks and that they will focus on explaining their thinking more clearly by giving reasons for their ideas. Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you.

2 Introduce “Banning Tag”

Remind the students that earlier in the year they read and discussed expository nonfiction articles about jump rope and hopscotch. Tell them that today they will read an article about another popular recess game—tag. Have the students open to “Banning Tag” on Student Response Book pages 56–57 and explain that this is the article they will read today. Draw the students’ attention to the article title and section headings, and point out that they are in bold type so readers can find them easily. Remind the students that the title and headings are text features that help readers know what information might be in an article. Read the title and the section headings aloud. Then ask:

Q Based on the title and the section headings, what do you think you might learn from this article?

Tell the students that you will read “Banning Tag” aloud twice and that you would like them to follow along as you read. During the first reading, the students will think about what they are learning. During the second reading, they will think about important ideas in the article.

3 Read Aloud

Read “Banning Tag” aloud slowly and clearly, stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

petition: letter signed by many people, asking for something to change or for an action to be taken (p. 477) versions: kinds (p. 477)

Stop after:

p. 476 “In response to these concerns, schools all over the country are banning the game of tag during recess.”

Ask:

Q What have you learned about why some people think tag should be banned? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing the question as a class, reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 477 “After all, the game of tag has been around for hundreds of years.”

Ask:

Q What are some of the reasons people give for why tag should not be banned? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing the question as a class, reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 477 “That is how this kind of tag got its name.”

Ask:

Q What have you learned about the different types of tag? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing the question as a class, reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the article.

4 Reread and Discuss Important Ideas

Ask:

Q If someone asked you what this article is about, what would you tell him or her?

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, we invite you to continue to practice responding neutrally with interest during class discussions by refraining from overtly praising or criticizing the students’ responses. Try responding neutrally by nodding, asking the students to say more about their thinking, or asking other students to respond. To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view “Responding Neutrally with Interest” (AV23).

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Explain that you will reread the article and that you would like the students to think about what is most important to understand and remember in each part.

Reread the first two paragraphs aloud. Stop after:

p. 476 “In response to these concerns, schools all over the country are banning the game of tag during recess.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What do you think is the most important thing to understand and remember from the part we just read? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite one or two volunteers to share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“Some people think tag is dangerous and should be banned.”

“Some schools are banning tag because kids are getting hurt.”

Read the section “The Other Side.” Stop after:

p. 477 “After all, the game of tag has been around for hundreds of years.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What do you think is the most important thing to understand and remember from the part we just read? [pause] Turn to your partner.

In the same way, reread and discuss the important ideas in the sections “Different Types of Tag” and “Other Games.”

5 Share Opinions About Tag and Learn a Prompt for Explaining Ideas

Point out that people have different opinions about whether or not the game of tag should be banned in schools. Have the students quietly think to themselves about the following question:

Q Do you think banning tag is a good idea? Why or why not?

After a moment, write the following prompt where everyone can see it: The reason I think this is _____. Explain that you will ask the students to share their own opinions about banning tag and that you would like them to use the prompt to give reasons for their thinking. Point out that their reasons may include ideas from the article as well as their own experiences with tag.

 Have the students discuss in pairs their opinions about banning tag. Remind them to use the prompt to explain their thinking. After partners have had a chance to talk, invite a few volunteers to share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"I think it's a bad idea to ban tag. The reason I think this is that tag is a lot of fun and a good way to get exercise."

"I think banning tag is a good idea. The reason I think this is that I've had kids who were playing tag run into me because they weren't looking where they were going. I wasn't even playing and I got hurt."

Point out that people often have different opinions about the same thing and that this is OK. What is important is that they explain their thinking by giving reasons for it. Tell the students that they will continue to focus on giving reasons for their thinking in the coming lessons.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Review and Practice Self-monitoring and "Fix-up" Strategies

Tell the students that they may read texts from any genre during IDR this week. Refer to the "Thinking About My Reading" chart and review the questions on it. Remind the students that it is important to stop, think about what they are reading, and use the questions on the chart to help them monitor their comprehension. If a student does not understand what she is reading, the student should use one or both of the "fix-up" strategies of rereading and reading ahead. If a student has tried both of the "fix-up" strategies and still does not understand the text, she can try the strategies listed on the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart. Alternatively, the student might ask you or a classmate for help.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. Stop them twice during their reading to have them monitor their comprehension by thinking about the charted questions.

After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Beginning today, and continuing throughout the unit, confer individually with the students about the texts they are reading during IDR.

ELL Note

To support your English Language Learners, you may want to model reading a text and stopping periodically to ask yourself the self-monitoring questions listed on the chart. Discuss each question with your students to make sure they understand the process.

Teacher Note

Provide time on a regular basis for the students to record the texts they have completed in their reading logs.

Day 2

Materials

- “Smile—You’ve Got Homework!” (see pages 478–479)
- Student Response Book pages 58–59
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- Small self-stick notes for each student

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Facilitate a brief discussion with the students about using the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart to track their reading comprehension. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q Why is it important to stop as you are reading and ask yourself if you understand what you read?
- Q How do rereading and reading ahead help you make sense of the text?
- Q Which comprehension strategy do you find most helpful when you’re not understanding something you’re reading? Why?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss an opinion article
- Identify what they learn from the article
- Think about important ideas in the article
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday the students read a nonfiction article about banning tag and discussed important ideas in the article, or what they thought was most important to understand and remember. They also shared their own opinions about whether or not tag should be banned. Explain that today the students will hear a nonfiction article that gives information about a topic and also includes the author’s opinion about the topic. They will think about what they learn from the article and about important ideas in the article.

Write the following prompt where everyone can see it: The reason I think this is _____. Remind the students that yesterday they used the prompt to give reasons for their thinking. Point out that the students have been giving reasons for their thinking all year by answering questions like “Why do you think so?” and “What in the text makes you think that?” Explain that now you would like them to take responsibility for giving reasons for their thinking without waiting to be asked. Encourage them to use the prompt to help them do so.

2 Introduce “Smile—You’ve Got Homework!”

Have the students turn to Student Response Book pages 58–59, “Smile—You’ve Got Homework!” and tell them that this is the article they will read today. Explain that this type of article is called an opinion article and that in an opinion article the author gives his or her opinion about a topic and then tries to get the reader to agree with that opinion by giving reasons, or important ideas that support the opinion.

Explain that you will read the article twice and that you would like the students to follow along as you read. During the first reading, the students will think about what they are learning about homework and about the author’s opinion. During the second reading, they will think about the reasons the author gives to support that opinion.

3 Read Aloud

Read “Smile—You’ve Got Homework!” aloud slowly and clearly, stopping as described below.

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing the following vocabulary defined:

exhausted: very tired (p. 478)

benefit of: good thing about (p. 478)

more effectively: better (p. 478)

memorizing: learning something well enough not to forget it (p. 479)

Stop after:

p. 478 “With this information, teachers can decide whether to reteach a lesson or move on.”

Ask:

 Q What have you learned so far? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 479 “Skills like these are very important to academic success.”

Ask:

 Q What did you learn in the part I just read? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. Then reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the article.

4 Reread the Article and Discuss Reasons That Support the Author's Opinion

Ask:

Q What is this author's opinion of homework?

If necessary, point out that the author's opinion is that homework is helpful. Tell the students that you will reread the article and that you would like them to think about the reasons the author gives to support that opinion.

Reread the title of the article and the first paragraph. Stop after:

p. 478 "Here are some others."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

 Q What is a reason the author gives to support the opinion that homework is helpful? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite one or two volunteers to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, point out that one reason the author thinks homework is helpful is that a study showed that children who do homework do better on tests.

Reread the next section, "Practice Makes Perfect." Stop after:

p. 478 "With this information, teachers can decide whether to reteach a lesson or move on."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

 Q What is a reason in this section that supports the author's opinion? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. If necessary, point out that in this section the author gives two reasons why homework is helpful. One reason is that homework provides time for students to practice what they learn in school. Another is that homework helps teachers teach more effectively.

Reread the next section, "Memorizing Facts." Stop after:

p. 479 "Why waste the teacher's time with this type of schoolwork?"

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

 Q What is a reason in this section that supports the author's opinion? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite one or two volunteers to share their thinking. If necessary, point out that in this section the author says that homework is a good opportunity for students to memorize facts they need to learn. Follow the same procedure to reread and discuss reasons in the sections "Organization and Planning" and "School and Home."

Tell the students that in an opinion article, the reasons an author gives to support an opinion are important to understand and remember. They are important ideas. Tell the students that they will hear and discuss another opinion article in the next lesson and think about the important ideas in the article.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Use Comprehension Strategies

Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and then remind the students that these are the comprehension strategies they have learned so far this year. Ask them to notice which strategies they use and where they use them during their reading today. Distribute the self-stick notes and explain that the students should use the self-stick notes to mark places in their texts where they use comprehension strategies and that they should write the names of the strategies on the notes. Tell the students that later you will ask some of them to share the strategies they used with the class. Ask the students to be prepared to talk about how the strategies helped them understand what they read.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the strategies they used with the class. Have each volunteer begin by telling the title of the text he read, the author's name, and what the text is about. Then ask him to name one comprehension strategy he used during the reading today and to describe how that strategy helped him make sense of the text.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

- Identify what they learn from the article
- Think about important ideas in the article
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday the students heard and read an opinion article about homework and thought about the important ideas, or reasons, the author gives to support the opinion that homework is helpful. Explain that today they will do the same thing with another opinion article. Remind the students that in addition to identifying reasons authors give to support their opinions, they have also been working on giving reasons for their own thinking during partner and class discussions. Write the following prompt where everyone can see it: The reason I think this is _____. Remind the students to use the prompt in class discussions to explain their thinking.

2 Introduce “Homework—Who Needs It?”

Have the students turn to Student Response Book pages 60–61, “Homework—Who Needs It?” and explain that this is the article they will read today. Read the title aloud and point out that this article is also about homework. Tell the students that you will read the article twice and that you would like them to follow along as you read. During the first reading, they will think about what they are learning about homework and about the author’s opinion. During the second reading, they will think about the reasons the author gives to support that opinion.

3 Read Aloud

Read “Homework—Who Needs It?” aloud slowly and clearly, stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

debating: arguing over (p. 480)

impact: effect (p. 480)

a burden: something that is difficult to deal with (p. 481)

reluctant: not eager to do something (p. 481)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

evidence: proof (p. 480)

unwind: relax (p. 480)

enjoyable: fun (p. 481)

Stop after:

p. 480 “So why should kids?”

Ask:

Q What have you learned so far? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing the question as a class, continue by reading the section “Let Families Be Families” aloud. Stop after:

p. 481 “It’s important for families to spend the little time they have together talking, reading, and doing things they all enjoy.”

Ask:

Q What did you learn from the part I just read? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing the question as a class, continue reading to the end of the article.

4 Reread the Article and Determine Important Ideas

Ask:

Q What is this author’s opinion of homework?

If necessary, point out that the author of this article does not believe that homework is good for students or families. Explain that you will reread the article and that you would like the students to follow along and think about the reasons the author gives to support that opinion. Remind the students that reasons in an opinion article are important ideas to understand and remember. Explain that you will stop after each section to have partners discuss the reasons in that section.

Reread the title of the article and the first paragraph. Stop after:

p. 480 “Let’s take a look at some others.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is a reason, or important idea, in this section that supports the author’s opinion that homework is not helpful? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite one or two volunteers to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, point out that one reason the author thinks homework is not helpful is that a study showed that there is no significant relationship between time spent on homework and grades.

Reread the next section, “Let Kids Be Kids.” Stop after:

p. 480 “So why should kids?”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is a reason in this section that supports the author’s opinion? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite one or two volunteers to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, point out that in this section the author says that when kids come home from school, they need time to unwind. Follow this procedure to reread and discuss the important ideas in the sections “Let Families Be Families” and “Who Likes Homework?”

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to determine the author’s opinion?
- Are they able to identify the reasons the author gives to support that opinion?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 119 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to determine the author’s opinion and the reasons the author gives to support it, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to determine the author’s opinion and the reasons the author gives to support it, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative text before continuing on to Day 4. Resources for alternative texts are suggested in the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (cccllearninghub.org) to view the list.

Teacher Note

You might wish to use opinion articles that address topics such as whether school should be year-round, whether kids should help with chores around the house, or whether zoos are good or bad for animals.

Tell the students that in the next lesson they will revisit the two opinion articles they have read about homework and discuss their own opinions about the issue.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Use Comprehension Strategies

Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and remind the students to use the comprehension strategies as they read independently today. Distribute the self-stick notes and explain that you would like the students to continue to use the notes to mark places in their texts where they use strategies. Explain that later each student will share with a partner a passage she marked and the comprehension strategy she used with it.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have each student share with a partner a passage she marked and the strategy she used to make sense of it. Have each student begin by telling her partner the title of the text she read, the author's name, and what it is about so far.

Materials

- “Smile—You’ve Got Homework!” (see pages 478–479)
- “Homework—Who Needs It?” (see pages 480–481)
- Student Response Book pages 58–61
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- Small self-stick notes for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Revisit two opinion articles
- Think about important ideas in the articles
- Distinguish their own opinions from those of the authors of the articles
- Compare and contrast the articles
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

1 Review Opinion Articles

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that earlier they heard and read two opinion articles about homework. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you remember about opinion articles? What does an author try to do in an opinion article?

Students might say:

“An opinion article gives the author’s opinion about a topic.”

“The author gives reasons that support his or her opinion.”

“In addition to what [Isaiah] said, the author tries to get the reader to agree with his or her opinion.”

If necessary, review that in an opinion article, the author states an opinion and then gives reasons that support the opinion. Remind the students that the author’s opinion and the reasons he or she gives to support it are important ideas to understand and remember. The author’s goal in an opinion article is to get readers to agree with his or her opinion.

Explain that today the students will revisit the opinion articles they read earlier and think about whether or not they agree with each author’s opinion. Write the following prompt where everyone can see it: The reason I think this is _____. Remind the students to use the prompt to give reasons for their thinking.

2 Revisit “Smile—You’ve Got Homework!”

Have the students turn to “Smile—You’ve Got Homework” on Student Response Book pages 58–59 and quietly review the article on their own. After a few moments, ask:

Q What is the author’s opinion in this article? What reasons does the author give to support that opinion?

Students might say:

“The author’s opinion is that homework is helpful. One reason the author thinks so is that it gives kids a chance to practice what they learn in class.”

“Another reason the author gives is that homework teaches students to organize and plan their time.”

“The author also says that homework gives parents a chance to get more involved in their children’s school lives.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss the questions that follow. Remind the students to give reasons for their thinking, and explain that these reasons may include ideas from the article as well as thoughts from their own experiences with homework. Ask:

Q Do you agree with this author’s opinion of homework? Why or why not?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“I agree because there isn’t always time to memorize the stuff you need to know during school.”

“I disagree because I’m too tired when I get home from school to do more work.”

3 Revisit “Homework—Who Needs It?”

Have the students turn to “Homework—Who Needs It?” on Student Response Book pages 60–61 and quietly review the article on their own. After a few moments, ask:

Q What is the author’s opinion in this article? What reasons does the author give to support that opinion?

Students might say:

“The author’s opinion is that homework isn’t helpful.”

“One reason the author gives is that when students get home from school, they should have time to unwind.”

“The author also says that homework can cause kids to not like school.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss the questions that follow. Remind the students to give reasons for their thinking, and explain that these reasons may include ideas from the article as well as thoughts from their own experiences with homework.

Q Do you agree with this author’s opinion of homework? Why or why not?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share their thinking with the class.

4 Compare and Contrast the Articles

Remind the students that the purpose of an opinion article is to persuade, or convince, the reader to agree with the author’s opinion. Facilitate a class discussion about which article is more persuasive (convincing) using the questions that follow. Point out that the students may have different opinions about which article is more persuasive and that this is fine. What is important is that they give reasons for their opinions. Ask:

Q Which article do you think is more persuasive?

Q What do you think is the most persuasive reason in that article?

Q Did either article change the way you think about homework? Tell us about it.

5 Reflect on Giving Reasons for Opinions

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students did with using the prompt “The reason I think this is . . .” to give reasons for their opinions. Share your own observations and explain that you would like the students to continue to focus on giving reasons for their thinking in the coming days.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Use Comprehension Strategies

Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and remind the students that during IDR this week, they have been thinking about the comprehension strategies they use as they read independently. Explain that again today you would like the students to notice which comprehension strategies they are using and to mark with self-stick notes the places in their texts where they use strategies.

Distribute the self-stick notes and have the students read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which strategy have you used the most during independent reading this week? How does that strategy help you understand what you are reading? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share with the class. Then have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write Opinions About Homework

Remind the students that they have read two articles on the topic of homework. The first article, “Smile—You’ve Got Homework!” informed readers about the reasons why homework is good for students, and the second article, “Homework—Who Needs It?” informed readers about the reasons why homework is bad for students and families. Have the students turn to Student Response Book pages 58–59, “Smile—You’ve Got Homework,” and ask:

Q What were some reasons the author gave to support the opinion that homework is good for students?

As the students share, write their ideas under the heading “Reasons for Homework” where everyone can see them. Have the students turn to Student Response Book pages 60–61, “Homework—Who Needs It?” and ask:

Q What were some reasons the author gave to support the opinion that homework is not good for students?

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit “Banning Tag,” “Smile—You’ve Got Homework!” and “Homework—Who Needs It?” to teach the Week 25 vocabulary lessons.

Technology Tip

Alternatively, you might have the students use the questions to create a poll on a student-friendly social networking site and then ask family members to take the poll online. For more information, view the "Using Social Media" tutorial (AV46).

As the students share, write their ideas under the heading "Reasons Against Homework" where everyone can see them. Ask:

Q After reading both of these articles, which side of the issue do you support? Do you think homework is good or bad for students? Why do you think that?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Tell the students that when they choose to support one side of an issue, they are forming their own opinion about the issue. Remind the students that people might have different opinions about the same thing and that is fine. What matters is that they give reasons to explain their thinking. Then ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing about the side of the issue you support and why you support it.

You might say:

"I agree with the author of the article 'Smile—You've Got Homework!' that homework helps kids learn. I'll write: I agree with the author of 'Smile—You've Got Homework!' that homework helps students learn. Now I'll give a reason why I agree with the author. I'll write: I think that homework is helpful because students need more time to practice what they learn than is available during the school day. Now I'll write another reason to explain my thinking. I'll write: Also, students need to learn how to plan their time, and homework helps with that. Students need to think about how long each assignment will take and in which order they should do them. These are skills they will need later on in high school and college. I think that all teachers should assign homework."

Have the students choose one side of the issue to support and write about why they support it. Encourage the students to refer to the articles in their Student Response Books to support their thinking. If time permits, invite the students to share their writing with the class.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Take a Poll About Homework

Have the class generate lists of what they think are the most persuasive reasons for and against homework, and then post the lists on the class blog. Have the students discuss the lists on the blog with their families and then take a poll of their family members by asking questions such as:

- Q Do you think third-graders should have homework?
- Q Did you have homework in third grade?
- Q How old are you?

Help the students compile and analyze the data from the poll. Facilitate a discussion about the results of the poll by asking questions such as:

- Q What can you learn from the data we collected from our poll?*
- Q How many people think third-graders [should/should not] have homework?*
- Q How many people [had/did not have] homework in third grade?*
- Q What do you notice about the ages of the people who were polled? What do you notice about how people of different ages answered each question?*

Banning TAG

Imagine that you are being chased. You run as fast as you can, but you are not quick enough. You feel hands on your back, touching you. You trip, fall down, skinning your knee. Not again! You are tired of always being “it.”

Has this ever happened to you? If it has, you know that it does not feel very good. Some principals, teachers, and parents are worried that playing tag at recess is too dangerous. They argue that kids run into one another, fall down, and get hurt playing tag. They say that sometimes tag leads to hitting, pushing, and bullying. In response to these concerns, schools all over the country are banning the game of tag during recess.

The Other Side

Some parents and kids think schools should not ban tag. A third-grader from the state of Washington even started a petition to get his principal to change the ban and let the kids play tag again at recess. There are a lot of good things about the game. It is easy to get started because you do not need anything to play except some friends. Also, while you run around, you are getting exercise and having fun at the same time. Many people are upset that recess has to be ruined for everyone just because a few children play too rough. After all, the game of tag has been around for hundreds of years.

Different Types of Tag

There are many different versions of tag. You probably know how to play some of them. One of the most popular versions of tag is “freeze tag,” where instead of being “it” when you are caught, you have to stand still until another player touches you. There is also “tunnel tag,” which is like freeze tag except that your teammate must crawl through your legs before you can play again.

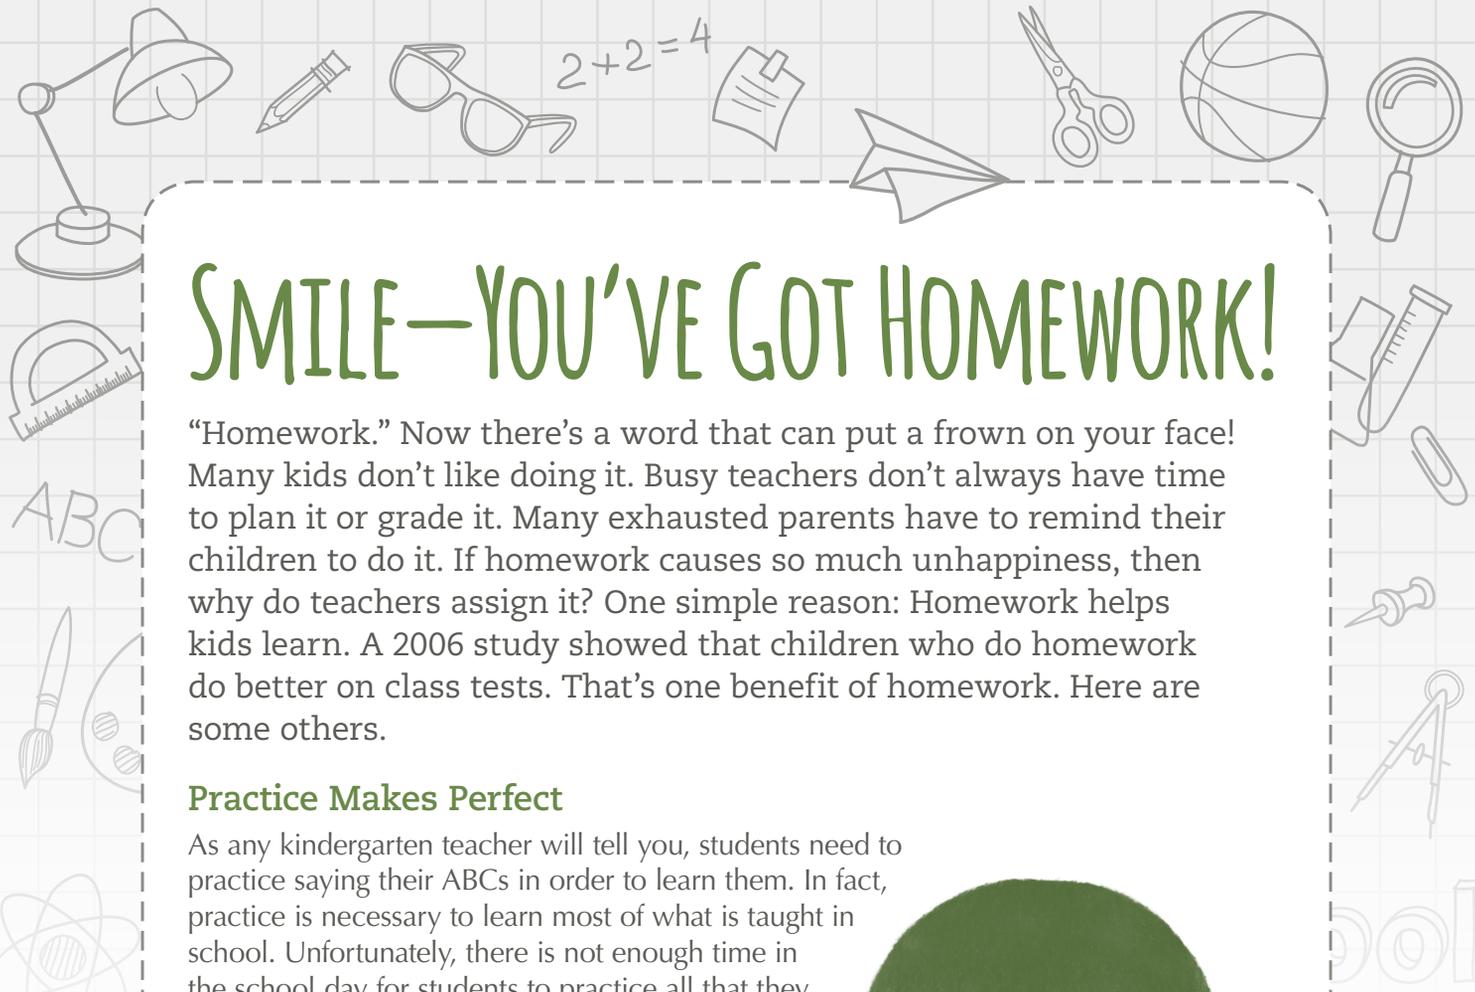

“Monster tag” starts with one person chasing all the others. As each player is tagged, he or she joins hands with “it” to help chase the others. In the end, there is a long chain of players who are all “it,” working together. With all the hands and feet, the chain reminds some people of a monster! That is how this kind of tag got its name.

Other Games

If your school does not allow tag at recess, there are lots of other games you can play instead! If you have a ball, you can organize a game of kickball or four square. With a piece of chalk and a few pebbles, you can play hopscotch. You can probably think of many more fun things to do during recess.

Whatever you are allowed to do at recess, it is important that you play fair and are gentle with others. When everyone feels safe, everyone can have fun!

SMILE—YOU'VE GOT HOMEWORK!

“Homework.” Now there’s a word that can put a frown on your face! Many kids don’t like doing it. Busy teachers don’t always have time to plan it or grade it. Many exhausted parents have to remind their children to do it. If homework causes so much unhappiness, then why do teachers assign it? One simple reason: Homework helps kids learn. A 2006 study showed that children who do homework do better on class tests. That’s one benefit of homework. Here are some others.

Practice Makes Perfect

As any kindergarten teacher will tell you, students need to practice saying their ABCs in order to learn them. In fact, practice is necessary to learn most of what is taught in school. Unfortunately, there is not enough time in the school day for students to practice all that they learn. That’s what homework is for. Homework provides the practice time that students need.

Homework also helps a teacher teach more effectively. Reviewing homework assignments helps the teacher know what the students understand and what they don’t. With this information, teachers can decide whether to reteach a lesson or move on.

Homework helps students practice what they are learning in school.

Memorizing Facts

Like it or not, memorization is an important part of learning in school. Students need to memorize math facts, how words are spelled, historical dates, and other information. But memorizing information—like practicing skills—takes up valuable class time. Having students memorize facts for homework gives teachers more time during the school day for actual teaching. In addition, students don't always need a teacher's help to memorize information. Why waste the teacher's time with this type of schoolwork?

Organization and Planning

Homework can help kids learn how to organize and plan their time. Students with homework must set aside time to get it done. Other activities, like spending time with friends or watching TV, may have to wait until homework is done.

Homework also helps kids learn how to prioritize tasks—or decide which tasks must be done and in what order—and how to plan for how long each task should take. Skills like these are very important to academic success.

School and Home

Homework gives parents a chance to become more involved in their children's school lives. Parents can help with homework while talking with their kids about what they are learning. Parents can also make homework more fun and interesting, and they can help their children see the importance of the work they are doing.

So smile when you hear the word "homework." It's good for you!

Homework provides an opportunity for parents and kids to work together.

Homework—

Who Needs It?

Is homework good for kids? Do kids learn more if they do homework? Teachers, students, and parents have been debating these questions for years. Many studies have looked at the impact of homework on student learning, but there is no clear evidence that homework helps students learn more. In fact, one 2012 study found no significant relationship between time spent on homework and grades. That's one argument against homework, but it's not the only one. Let's take a look at some others.

Let Kids Be Kids

Students spend about seven hours a day in school. Most of that time they are thinking, listening, reading, and writing—pretty exhausting stuff! Kids have little time during the school day to relax or spend time with friends.

When children get home from school, they need time to unwind. They do not need to do more schoolwork! Most adults don't come home from a full day at work and do even more work for their job. So why should kids?

Kids need time to be kids after school.

Let Families Be Families

Homework is a burden for kids, but it can be a burden for moms and dads, too. After a long day, parents are tired. The last thing they want to do is to keep reminding their reluctant children, "Do your homework!" Homework can be confusing or difficult, and parents don't always have time to help. This means that kids must sometimes struggle through hard homework assignments on their own—and moms and dads are left feeling guilty for not helping. This is stress that busy families don't need.

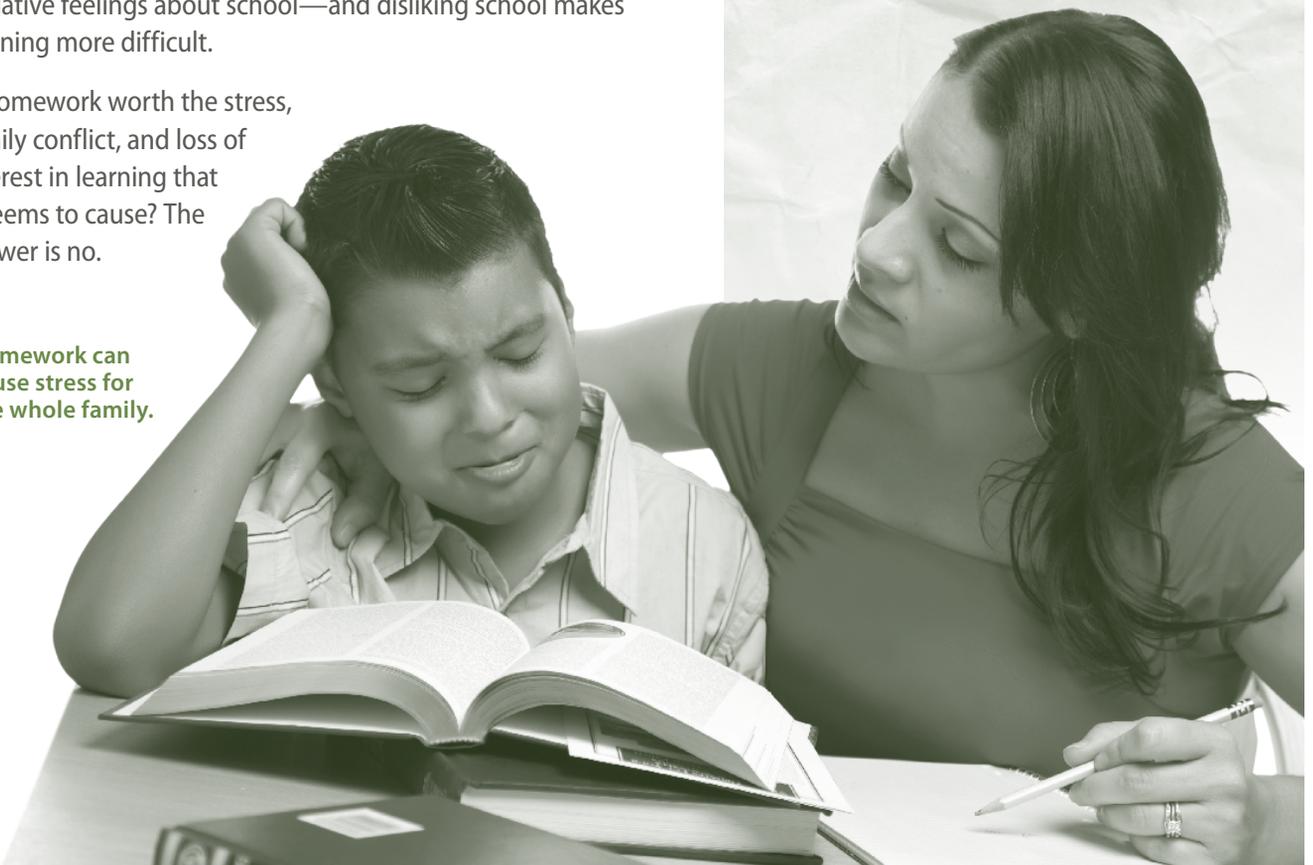

Families need time to do enjoyable things together. Many children and their parents say goodbye in the morning and often don't see each other again until after five o'clock. That leaves only a few hours for family time before going to bed. It's important for families to spend the little time they have together talking, reading, and doing things they all enjoy.

Who Likes Homework?

If you ask students if they like homework, many will probably say they do not. Because students associate homework with school, negative feelings about homework can turn into negative feelings about school—and disliking school makes learning more difficult.

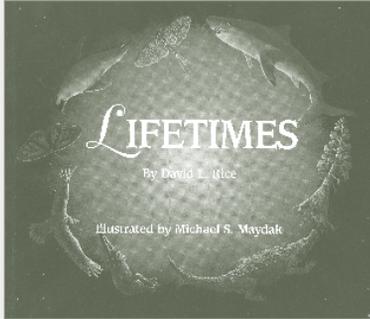

Is homework worth the stress, family conflict, and loss of interest in learning that it seems to cause? The answer is no.

Homework can cause stress for the whole family.

Week 2

OVERVIEW

Lifetimes

by David L. Rice, illustrated by Michael S. Maydak

This book is a collection of short descriptions of the lifetimes of different species of plants and animals and the lessons we can learn from them. In this week's lessons, the students look at the lifetimes of an army ant, an elephant, a saguaro cactus, and a hermit crab.

Online Resources

Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to find your online resources for this week.

Assessment Forms

- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA2)
- "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1)

Professional Development Media

- "Using "Think, Pair, Write"" (AV10)

Comprehension Focus

- Students identify what they learn from expository nonfiction texts.
- Students determine important ideas in expository nonfiction texts.
- Students make inferences to understand expository nonfiction texts.
- Students make text-to-self connections.
- Students read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Students develop the skill of giving reasons for their thinking.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.

Ⓜ DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2); see page 120 of the Assessment Resource Book.

---

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 25 lessons this week.

Materials

- “A lifetime for an army ant is about three years” (Lifetimes, page 6)
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and a marker
- Student Response Book page 62

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction text
- Identify what they learn from the text
- Think about important ideas in the text
- Make text-to-self connections
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

1 Review Determining Important Ideas and Add to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” Chart

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that last week the students heard three opinion articles and discussed the important ideas in each article. Explain that determining, or identifying, important ideas in texts is a strategy that helps readers understand and remember what they read. Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and add determining important ideas to the list of strategies the students have learned. Remind the students that the goal is for them to use the comprehension strategies when they read independently.

Reading Comprehension Strategies

- visualizing
- making inferences about characters
- wondering/questioning
- using text features
- determining important ideas

2 Introduce Lifetimes and the Topic of Ants

Show the cover of Lifetimes and read the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that a lifetime is how long an animal or a plant is expected to live. (For example, a lifetime for a human being is about 85 years.) Show page 6 and explain that today you will read the page about army ants. Ask:

Q What do you think you know about ants?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"They always walk in a line."

"They're very small, and they like food."

"If you step on an anthill, all the ants swarm out."

Tell the students that you will read the passage about ants aloud twice and that during the first reading, you would like them to focus on what they are learning about army ants.

3 Read Aloud and Think About Information Learned

Read page 6 aloud, slowly and clearly, without reading the last sentence. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

cockroaches: brown or black insects that live in warm, dark places

pests: creatures that bother or destroy other animals or plants

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

"ant bridge": bridge made of ants that other ants can walk across (refer to the illustration)

"ant balls": groups of ants clinging together so they can float across water

Stop after:

p. 6 "When they return their houses are completely free of rats, cockroaches, or other pests."

Ask:

Q What interesting things have you learned about army ants? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

4 Reread and Discuss Important Ideas

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 62, where the passage about army ants is reproduced. Tell the students that you will reread the passage and that you would like them to follow along and

Teacher Note

The purpose of not reading the last sentence is to allow the students to come up with their own ideas about what is important. You might choose not to show the page as you read so that students do not read this sentence on their own.

Facilitation Tip

Continue to focus on responding neutrally with interest during class discussions by refraining from overtly praising or criticizing the students' responses. Instead, build the students' intrinsic motivation by responding with genuine curiosity and interest, for example:

- "Say more about that."
- "Explain your thinking further."
- "You have an opinion that's [similar to/different from] what [Savitri] just said. How is it [similar/different]?"
- "Do you agree with [Stephan]? Why or why not?"
- "What questions do you have for [Stephan] about [his] thinking?"

think about what the author most wants readers to understand and remember from this passage.

Read the passage as the students follow along.

Facilitate a class discussion about important ideas in the passage. Write the following prompt where everyone can see it: The reason I think this is _____. Remind the students to use the prompt to give reasons for their thinking. Ask questions such as:

- Q What do you think is most important to understand and remember in this passage?
- Q If you had to say what this passage is about in one sentence, what would you say?

If the students struggle to answer the questions, model thinking aloud about an important idea.

You might say:

"What seems most important to understand and remember in this passage is the idea that army ants work together to do amazing things. The reason I think this is the most important idea is that the other ideas in the passage are all examples of ways that army ants work together."

5 Reflect on Teamwork and Cooperation in the Classroom Community

Point out that army ants survive through teamwork and cooperation. Ask the students to think quietly to themselves about ways they practice teamwork and cooperation in the classroom community. After a few moments, ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What are some things we do in our classroom community that remind you of the way the ants live?
- Q What are some things we can do in our classroom community to be more like the ants?

Tell the students that you will read more from Lifetimes in the next lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Reading with the Class

Tell the students that they may read texts from any genre during IDR this week. Remind the students to use the comprehension strategies they have learned as they read independently today. Encourage them to notice what they learn from their reading and to think about which ideas in their texts seem important to understand and remember. Explain that later you will ask some of them to share things they learned or important ideas from their reading with the class.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the texts they are reading with the class. Have each volunteer tell the title of her text, the author’s name, what the text is about, and either something she learned or an idea she thinks is important from the part she read today. Ask follow-up questions such as:

- Q Why do you think this idea seems important?
- Q What does that make you wonder?
- Q What questions do you have for [Noorah] about what she shared?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their text.

Day 2

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- “A lifetime for an elephant is about 65 years” (Lifetimes, page 19)
- Student Response Book pages 63–64

Teacher Note

If your students are already familiar with the procedure for “Think, Pair, Write,” you do not need to explain it in detail here. Instead, remind the students of your expectations. To see an example, view “Using ‘Think, Pair, Write’” (AV10).

ELL Note

Consider providing extra support to your English Language Learners during “Think, Pair, Write” throughout this unit. Students with limited English proficiency might benefit from drawing pictures rather than writing.

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn the procedure for “Think, Pair, Write”
- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction text
- Identify what they learn from the text
- Think about important ideas in the text
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

ELPS 2.I.v
Step 1 and Step 2
(all, beginning on page 488 and continuing on to page 489)

1 Introduce “Think, Pair, Write”

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Explain that today you will teach the students a cooperative structure called “Think, Pair, Write.” As with “Think, Pair, Share,” you will ask a question and have the students think quietly for a moment. When you signal, they will turn to their partners to share their ideas, and then each student will write his ideas in his own Student Response Book. Ask:

- Q What have you learned about working with a partner during “Think, Pair, Share” that can help you during “Think, Pair, Write”?

Students might say:

“I’ve learned that I am responsible for listening to my partner and for sharing my own ideas.”

“I need to listen carefully to my partner to understand what she’s thinking.”

“If I don’t understand my partner’s idea, I should ask a clarifying question to help me understand.”

Tell the students that the purpose of using “Think, Pair, Write” is to practice explaining their thinking before writing. At the end of the lesson, you will ask them to report how it went.

2 Review Lifetimes and Introduce the Topic of Elephants

Show the cover of Lifetimes and review that earlier the students heard and read the page about army ants. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What is something you learned about army ants from the book?

Show the illustration on page 19 and explain that today you will read the page about elephants. Ask:

Q What do you think you know about elephants?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking

Students might say:

"They squirt water with their trunks."

"They're very big."

"I've seen them do tricks at the circus."

Explain that you will read the page aloud twice. During the first reading, the students will think about what they are learning about elephants. During the second reading, they will think about what seems most important to understand and remember from the passage. Then they will use "Think, Pair, Write" to think about what is most important, share their thinking in pairs, and then individually write their ideas in their own Student Response Books.

3 Read Aloud and Think About Information Learned

Read page 19 aloud slowly and clearly, without reading the last sentence. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

trumpeting sounds: loud noises that sound like a horn injured: hurt or harmed

moaning: making a sad, crying sound

Stop after:

p. 19 "Without water these animals would die."

Ask:

Q What interesting things have you learned about elephants? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share what they learned with the class.

4 Reread and Write About an Important Idea

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 63, where the passage about elephants is reproduced. Ask the students to follow along as you reread the passage and think about what seems most important to understand and remember.

Teacher Note

The purpose of not reading the last sentence is to allow the students to come up with their own ideas about what is important. You might choose to not show the page as you read so that students do not read this sentence on their own.

Teacher Note

One important idea is that elephants have feelings like people do. Another is that elephants are gentle.

Teacher Note

Students may have different ideas about what is important in a passage. Give them time to consider other opinions before giving your own. Encourage them to explain their thinking and to refer to the text to support their opinions.

Read the passage aloud without reading the last sentence. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss the question that follows. Remind the students to use the prompt they have learned to give reasons for their thinking.

Q What do you think is most important to understand and remember in this passage? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Circulate as partners talk and notice whether they are able to identify important ideas in the passage. If the students have difficulty, reread the passage to individual students and ask questions such as:

Q What is this passage mainly about?

Q If you had to tell what this passage is about in one sentence, what would you say?

After partners have had a chance to talk, have the students individually record what they think is most important to understand or remember on Student Response Book page 64. Then have a few volunteers share what they wrote with the class.

Students might say:

“I think the most important idea is that elephants have feelings, just like we do. The reason I think this is that elephants cry when an elephant they love dies.”

“I think it’s important to remember that elephants are gentle. The reason I think this is that the author says that even though elephants are large, they don’t kill or bother other animals.”

Remind the students that thinking about which ideas are most important helps readers understand and remember what they read. Tell them that in the next lesson, they will hear another page from Lifetimes and continue to think about important ideas.

5 Reflect on “Think, Pair, Write”

Help the students reflect on their work together during “Think, Pair, Write.” Ask:

Q What did you and your partner do to explain your thinking during “Think, Pair, Write”?

Students might say:

“I wasn’t sure I understood my partner’s idea, so I asked him to explain his thinking.”

“We took turns saying our ideas.”

“I didn’t hear what my partner said, so I asked her to repeat it.”

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Remind the students to use the comprehension strategies they have learned as they read independently today. Encourage them to notice what they learn from their reading and to think about which ideas in their texts seem important to understand and remember. Explain that later they will share what they learned and the important ideas they noticed with partners.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have each student share with a partner the title of the text he is reading, the author’s name, what the text is about, and either something he learned or an idea that seems important from the part he read today.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

EXTENSION

Learn More About Elephants

Gather a variety of reading materials about elephants for independent reading. Give the students time to read and share some important ideas about elephants with the class.

Materials

- “A lifetime for a saguaro cactus is about 100 years” (Lifetimes, page 20)
- Student Response Book pages 65–66
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction text
- Identify what they learn from the text
- Think and write about important ideas in the text
- Make inferences to understand the text
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

1 Introduce the Topic of Cactuses

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Lifetimes and remind the students that earlier they heard the sections about army ants and elephants and thought about what was important to understand and remember in each section. Show the illustration on page 20 and explain that the page you will read today is about a particular kind of cactus called the saguaro cactus. Ask:

Q What do you think you know about cactuses?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking

Students might say:

“They grow in the desert.”

“They don’t need much water to grow.”

“They have spikes that will prick you if touch them.”

Tell the students that you will read the page aloud twice and that during the first reading, you would like them to pay attention to what they are learning about saguaro cactuses.

2 Read Aloud and Think About Information Learned

Read page 20 aloud slowly and clearly, without reading the last sentence. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

250 gallons: about four bathtubs full

thrives: grows easily

Stop after:

p. 20 “Native Americans who live in the desert use its juicy red fruit to make jam or syrup.”

Ask:

Q What interesting things have you learned about saguaro cactuses? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

3 Reread and Write About an Important Idea

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 65, where the passage about saguaro cactuses is reproduced. Ask the students to follow along as you reread the passage and think about what seems most important to understand and remember.

Read the passage aloud without reading the last sentence. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss the question that follows. Remind the students to use the prompt they have learned to give reasons for their thinking.

Q What do you think is most important to understand and remember in this passage? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Circulate as partners talk and notice whether they are able to identify important ideas in the passage. If the students have difficulty, reread the passage to individual students and ask questions such as:

Q What is this passage mainly about?

Q If you had to tell what this passage is about in one sentence, what would you say?

After partners have had a chance to talk, have the students record what they think is most important to understand or remember on Student Response Book page 66. Then have a few volunteers share what they wrote with the class. Ask follow-up questions such as:

Q Who has questions for [Veena] about what she wrote?

Q Who thought of a different important idea? Read us what you wrote.

ELPS 2.I.v
Step 3 (all)

Teacher Note

One important idea is that saguaro cactuses conserve their resources. Another is that saguaros provide food and water to people and animals that live in the desert.

Teacher Note

Students may have different ideas about what is important in a passage. Give them time to consider other opinions before giving your own. Encourage them to explain their thinking and to refer to the text when giving reasons for their ideas.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to determine important ideas in the passage?
- Are they able to explain why they think those ideas are important?
- Are they using the prompt they learned to help them explain their thinking?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2); see page 120 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to determine important ideas in the passage and explain why they think those ideas are important, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students are able to determine important ideas in the passage and explain why they think those ideas are important, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4, but closely observe students who are struggling. Many students will need repeated experiences to learn this complex skill.
- If only a few students are able to determine important ideas in the passage and explain why they think those ideas are important, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative text before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

Tell the students that you will read more from Lifetimes in the next lesson.

4 Reflect on Giving Reasons for Ideas

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students are doing with remembering to give reasons for their thinking. Ask questions such as:

- Q Have you been remembering to give reasons for your thinking when you share? If not, what might help you remember?
- Q Have you been using the prompt you learned to give reasons for your thinking? How does it help you?

Without mentioning names, share some of your own observations. Remind the students that they are responsible for giving reasons for their thinking whether or not you ask them to do so.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Share Reading with the Class

Remind the students to use the comprehension strategies they have learned as they read independently today. Encourage them to notice what they learn from their reading and to think about which ideas in their texts seem important to understand and remember. Explain that later you will ask some of them to share things they learned or important ideas from their reading with the class.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the texts they are reading with the class. Have each volunteer tell the title of her text, the author’s name, what the text is about, and either something she learned or an idea she thinks is important from the part she read today. Ask follow-up questions such as:

- Q Why do you think this idea seems important?
- Q What does that make you wonder?
- Q What questions do you have for [Mei] about what she shared?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

EXTENSION

Analyze Paired Texts About Saguaro Cactuses

If the students enjoyed learning about saguaro cactuses, you might extend the exploration by reading aloud and discussing a fictional treatment of the subject. Fiction titles about saguaro cactuses include

Teacher Note

You might have the students record what they learn about saguaro cactuses in a double-entry journal. You might title one column “What I Learned About Saguaro Cactuses from a Nonfiction Book” and the other column “What I Learned About Saguaro Cactuses from a Fiction Book.”

Cactus Hotel by Brenda Z. Guiberson, The Seed and the Giant Saguaro by Jennifer Ward, and The Little Saguaro/El sahuarito by Shannon Young.

Prior to reading the fiction book, have the students discuss facts they learned about saguaro cactuses from the nonfiction book Lifetimes and what they are wondering about saguaro cactuses now. Point out that fiction authors are free to mix facts with invention (things they have made up) in any way they wish, so works of fiction cannot always be relied on as sources of factually accurate information. However, fiction stories can help readers understand a topic by allowing them to visualize and imagine it.

Read aloud the fiction book you chose. After the reading, have the students discuss what they learned from hearing a fictional story about a saguaro cactus.

Encourage the students to compare the two texts and make text-to-text connections by asking questions such as:

- Q What more did you learn from [Cactus Hotel] about saguaro cactuses?
- Q What was especially surprising or interesting about [Cactus Hotel]?
- Q *How are the passages about saguaro cactuses in Lifetimes and [Cactus Hotel] the same? How are they different?*
- Q Which text did you like better? Why?

Day 4

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- “A lifetime for a hermit crab is about five years” (Lifetimes, page 7)
- Student Response Book pages 67–68

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss an expository nonfiction text
- Identify what they learn from the text
- Think and write about important ideas in the text
- Make inferences to understand the text
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their ideas

1 Review the Week

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Show the cover of Lifetimes and remind the students that they have heard about army ants, elephants, and saguaro cactuses. Briefly review the sections by asking:

- Q What is something important you learned about army ants?

Q What is something important you learned about elephants?

Q What is something important you learned about saguaro cactuses?

Remind the students that thinking about important ideas in texts is a strategy that helps readers understand and remember what they read. Tell the students that today you will read another section of Lifetimes and ask the students to think about what is important to understand and remember.

2 Introduce the Topic of Hermit Crabs

Show the illustration on page 7 and tell the students that today you will read about hermit crabs. Ask:

Q What do you think you know about hermit crabs?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking

Students might say:

"My friend has one as a pet."

"Sometimes hermit crabs change their shells."

"They live on land, not in water."

Tell the students that you will read the page aloud twice and that during the first reading, you would like them to think about what they are learning about hermit crabs.

3 Read Aloud and Think About Information Learned

Read page 7 aloud slowly and clearly, without reading the last sentence. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

"motor homes": vehicles that you can live in and drive around sea anemone: sea creature that looks like a flower and has poisonous tentacles around its mouth (refer to the illustration)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

recycle: use again

"piggy-backing": getting a ride on someone else's back

Stop after:

p. 7 "... special treat that allows them to find food as the crab moves along."

TEKS 6.G.i
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 4 (all)

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their Student Response Books in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

TEKS 6.G.i
TEKS 6.H.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5 (all)

Ask:

Q What have you learned about hermit crabs? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

4 Reread and Write About Important Ideas

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 67, where the passage about hermit crabs is reproduced. Ask the students to follow along as you reread the passage and think about what is most important to understand and remember about hermit crabs.

Reread the passage without reading the last sentence. Then have the students turn to Student Response Book page 68 and individually think and then write about the question:

Q What do you think is most important to understand and remember from the passage about hermit crabs?

5 Discuss Important Ideas as a Class

Facilitate a discussion about important ideas in the passage by inviting a few students to read what they wrote. Ask follow-up questions such as:

Q Who has questions for [Shawn] about what he wrote?

Q Who thought of a different important idea? Read us what you wrote.

Q What do you think people can learn from the lives of hermit crabs?

6 Review Determining Important Ideas in Nonfiction

Remind the students that during the past two weeks, they have been reading and discussing nonfiction texts and determining, or identifying, the important ideas in those texts—the ideas and information that are important to understand and remember. Tell the students that they will continue to think about important ideas in the coming days.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Share Reading with Partners

Remind the students to use the comprehension strategies they have learned as they read independently today. Encourage them to notice what they learn from their reading and to think about which ideas in their texts seem important to understand and remember. Explain that later they will share what they learned and the important ideas they noticed with partners.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have each student share with a partner the title of the text he is reading, the author’s name, what the text is about, and either something he learned or an idea that seems important from the part he read today.

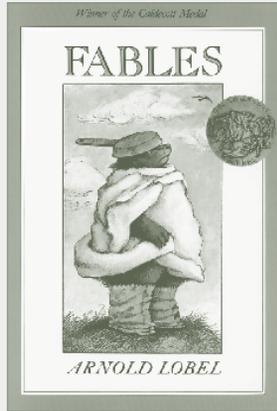

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Lifetimes to teach the Week 26 vocabulary lessons.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 26 lessons this week.

Materials

- “Madame Rhinoceros and Her Dress” (Fables, pages 26–27)

TEKS 6.E.i
 TEKS 6.H.i
 TEKS 8.A.i
 TEKS 9.A.i
 TEKS 10.A.ii
 Student/Teacher Narrative
 Step 2 (all)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Visualize to understand and enjoy the story
- Think about themes in the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

ABOUT TEACHING THEME

Beginning this week, the students discuss important ideas in stories and drama with a particular focus in Week 3 on theme. Theme is an abstract concept that can be difficult for students, and even adults, to recognize and define, and a work of literature may have more than one theme. Themes are often messages or lessons about life that an author wants readers to consider or apply to their own lives. Themes might also focus more broadly on such fundamental conflicts in human existence as good versus evil, self-interest versus community, or change versus tradition.

In grade 3 of the Making Meaning program, the students explore theme by thinking about the lessons learned by characters and the messages sent by authors in stories they read and hear. These experiences lay the foundation for further work with theme in future grades.

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been working on taking responsibility for explaining their thinking without being asked, and tell them that you would like them to continue to work on this skill in the coming days. Write the following prompt where everyone can see it: The reason I think this is _____. Remind the students to use the prompt to help them explain their thinking.

2 Introduce *Fables

Review that the students have spent the past several lessons thinking about important ideas in nonfiction texts. Tell them that this week, they will be hearing and discussing fiction stories. Show the cover of Fables and read the title and the author’s name aloud. Explain that a fable is a “special type of story with animals as characters and with an important theme, or lesson about life.” Show the table of contents on page 3 and point out that there are many fables in the collection. Tell the students that they will hear four of the fables this week.

3 Introduce “Madame Rhinoceros and Her Dress”

Tell the students that the fable they will hear today is about a lady rhinoceros who goes shopping for a new dress. Show the illustration on page 27 and read the title on page 26 aloud. Explain that you will read the fable twice. During the first reading, you will ask the students to close their eyes and visualize the story. During the second reading, you will ask them to think about the themes, or lessons, in the fable.

4 Read Aloud and Visualize

Ask the students to close their eyes and visualize what is happening in the story. Read “Madame Rhinoceros and Her Dress” aloud slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary and stopping as described below. Do not read the moral at the bottom of page 26.

Suggested Vocabulary

adorned: decorated

alluring: attractive; charming

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

glamorous: stylish

envy: jealousy

You have my word: I promise

Stop after:

p. 26 “I will buy the dress, and I will wear it now.”

Have the students open their eyes and ask:

 Q What has happened in the story so far? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing the question as a class, ask the students to close their eyes and continue visualizing the story. Then reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the fable.

Stop after:

p. 26 “Madame Rhinoceros felt more glamorous and alluring with every step.

 First in pairs, and then as a class, have the students talk about what they pictured as they listened to the story. Ask questions such as:

Q What did you picture happening in the story?

Q How did you picture Madame Rhinoceros?

TEKS 9.A.i

Student/Teacher Activity

Steps 4–6 (all, beginning on page 503 and continuing on to page 504)

Teacher Note

The reason for not reading the moral is to allow the students to come up with their own ideas about the story's theme or lesson.

TEKS 6.E.i
TEKS 6.H.i
TEKS 8.A.i
TEKS 10.A.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5 and Step 6 (all)

Facilitation Tip

Continue to focus on responding neutrally with interest during class discussions by refraining from overtly praising or criticizing the students' responses.

Teacher Note

Encourage the students to express different ideas about lessons in the story. As necessary, remind them to explain their thinking and to refer to the text to support their ideas.

5 Reread and Think About Theme

Remind the students that fables contain important themes, or lessons or messages about life. Explain that you will reread the fable and that this time you would like the students to think about what they can learn from the rhinoceros in the story. Reread “Madame Rhinoceros and Her Dress” aloud without reading the moral at the end.

6 Discuss Themes as a Class

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What lesson do you think people can learn from the rhinoceros in this story? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“I think the lesson is that you should trust your own thinking.

The reason I think this is that Madame Rhinoceros knows the dress looks silly on her, but then the salesperson convinces her that it looks good.”

“In addition to what [Diego] said, another lesson is that you shouldn't always believe people who are trying to sell you something. The salesperson told Madame Rhinoceros something that wasn't true so she would buy the dress.”

Remind the students that when they talk about the message or lesson in a story, they are talking about the story's theme. Point out that many stories have more than one theme, or lesson, that readers can learn from. Tell the students that they will continue to think about theme in the coming days as they hear and discuss more fables by Arnold Lobel.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Transition to Fiction and Visualize

Tell the students that for the next three weeks, they will be reading fiction during IDR. If necessary, give the students a few minutes to select fiction books to read. Explain that students who are in the middle of nonfiction texts should work on finishing those books today and begin reading fiction tomorrow.

Encourage the students to visualize as they read independently today. Explain that later you will ask for volunteers to share what they visualized with the class. Have the students read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers who visualized as they were reading to share with the class. Have each volunteer begin by telling the title of her book, the author’s name, and what the book is about. Then ask her to read aloud the passage she visualized and describe what she pictured in her mind as she read that passage. Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Visualize to understand and enjoy the story
- Think about themes in the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking
- Show respect for the thinking of others

1 Discuss Showing Respect for the Thinking of Others

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Review that in the previous lesson, the students heard the fable “Madame Rhinoceros and Her Dress” and talked about themes, or important messages or lessons, in the story. Tell the students that readers can have different opinions about themes in stories and that this is OK. What is important is that they explain their

Materials

- “The Young Rooster” (Fables, pages 36–37)
- Student Response Book pages 69–70

Teacher Note

In the Making Meaning program, showing respect for a range of opinions and ideas is an important part of developing reading comprehension. It allows the students to discuss their reading and their use of comprehension strategies safely and openly, both in pairs and with the class.

thinking and show respect for the thinking of others, even when it is different from their own. Ask:

Q Why is it important that we show respect for others' thinking?

Q How can you show someone you respect his or her thinking?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

"It's important to show respect so people are comfortable sharing."

"I can show respect by not laughing at their ideas or saying that their opinions are wrong."

"I can ask a clarifying question if I don't understand someone's opinion."

That shows the person I want to understand her idea."

Encourage the students to keep these ideas in mind during the lesson today.

2 Introduce "The Young Rooster"

Tell the students that the fable they will hear today is about a young rooster who has a new job. Show the illustration on page 36 and read the title on page 37 aloud. Explain that you will read the fable twice. During the first reading, you will ask the students to close their eyes and visualize the story. During the second reading, you will ask them to follow along in their Student Response Books and think about themes, or lessons, in the fable. Then they will use "Think, Pair, Write" to talk and write about the themes.

3 Read Aloud and Visualize

Have the students close their eyes. Read "The Young Rooster" aloud slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary and stopping as described on the next page. Do not read the moral at the end.

Teacher Note

The reason for not reading the moral is to allow the students to come up with their own ideas about the story's theme or lesson.

Suggested Vocabulary

summoned: called

aged: old

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

drizzle: light rain

Stop after:

p. 37 “‘We need our sunshine!’ shouted a Sheep.”

Ask:

Q What has happened in the story so far? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two students share their thinking. Then reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the fable. Remember to not read the moral.

First in pairs, and then as a class, have the students talk about what they pictured as they listened to the story. Ask questions such as:

Q What did you picture happening in the story?

Q How did you picture the rooster?

4 Reread and Write About Themes

Have the students open to Student Response Book page 69, where “The Young Rooster” is reproduced. Ask the students to follow along as you reread the fable and think about the themes, or lessons, in the story. Reread “The Young Rooster” aloud without reading the moral.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What do you think is a theme, or lesson, in this fable? What in the story makes you think that? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After partners have had a chance to talk, have the students individually record their ideas on Student Response Book page 70. Circulate and observe as they talk and write.

5 Discuss Themes as a Class

Facilitate a class discussion about themes in the fable by inviting a few students to share what they wrote. Remind the students to give reasons for their thinking and to show respect for the thinking of others. Remind the students that they may have different opinions about the themes in the fable and that this is OK. What is important is that they give reasons for their thinking and show respect for the thinking of others.

Students might say:

“I think the lesson is that it’s more important to please yourself than to please other people. The reason I think this is that the rooster is proud of himself even though the other animals are annoyed with him.”

“I think the story teaches us that it’s OK not to be good at something the first time you try it. The rooster doesn’t get the sun to come out on the first day, but he does on the second day.”

“I think the lesson is about not giving up when things aren’t going well. The reason I think this is that the rooster doesn’t give up after the first day.”

TEKS 10.A.ii

Student/Teacher Activity

Step 5 (all, beginning on page

Encourage the students to build on one another's thinking by asking questions such as:

Q Do you agree or disagree with [Peter]? Why?

Q What question do you want to ask [Peter] to better understand his thinking?

6 Reflect on Showing Respect

Help the students reflect on showing respect by asking questions such as:

Q How did you show respect for someone else's thinking today?

Q Did you feel like your classmates showed respect for the ideas you shared? What made you feel this way?

Without mentioning names, share your own observations of how students treated one another with respect.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Think About Themes

Remind the students that they should be reading fiction books during IDR. Ask the students to think as they read about what might be themes, or lessons, in their stories. Explain that sometimes the themes of a story do not become clear until the end of the story, but that the students might be able to guess what the themes might be from what they have read so far. Tell them that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of them to share what they noticed about their stories' themes with the class.

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few volunteers to share the stories they are reading with the class. Have each volunteer begin by telling the title of his book, the author's name, and what the story is about so far. Then facilitate a discussion of theme by asking questions such as:

- Q What do you think might be a theme, or lesson, in this story? What in the story makes you think that?
- Q What do you think the author wants readers to learn or realize from this story? What in the story makes you think that?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

TEKS 10.A.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 7 (discussion questions at end of step on page 509)

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Visualize to understand and enjoy the story
- Think about themes in the story
- Make text-to-text and text-to-self connections
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking and show respect for the thinking of others

Materials

- “The Mouse at the Seashore” (Fables, pages 40–41)
- Student Response Book page 71
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3)
- Wilma Unlimited from Unit 5

1 Introduce “The Mouse at the Seashore”

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Fables and explain that today you will read another fable from the collection by Arnold Lobel. Show the illustration on page 41 and read the title on page 40 aloud. Tell the students that this fable is about a mouse that goes on an adventure. Explain that you will read the fable aloud twice and that during the first reading you would like the students to close their eyes and visualize the story.

2 Read Aloud and Visualize

Ask the students to close their eyes. Read “The Mouse at the Seashore” aloud, slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary and stopping as described on the next page. Do not read the moral.

Suggested Vocabulary

contentment: feeling of being satisfied or happy

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

alarmed: frightened

terrors: very frightening things

came to know trouble and fear: had a difficult, scary time

Stop after:

p. 40 “He was tired and frightened.”

Ask:

 Q What has happened in the story so far? Turn to your partner.

Then ask:

Q What do you think will happen to the mouse?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the fable. Stop after:

p. 40 “He was overwhelmed by a feeling of deep peace and contentment.”

 First in pairs, and then as a class, have the students talk about what they pictured as they listened to the story. Ask questions such as:

Q What did you picture happening in the story?

Q How did you picture the mouse at the end?

3 Reread and Think About Theme

Have the students open to Student Response Book page 71, where “The Mouse at the Seashore” is reproduced. Ask the students to follow along as you reread the fable and think about what people can learn from the mouse in the story.

Reread the fable without reading the moral.

4 Discuss Themes in the Fable

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss the question that follows. Remind the students to give reasons for their thinking and to show respect for the thinking of others. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What is a theme, or lesson, in this fable? What in the story makes you think that? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Students might say:

"I think one lesson in the story is to not give up on your dreams when things get hard. The reason I think this is that the mouse keeps trying to reach the seashore even after he is attacked by birds and dogs."

"Another theme is that sometimes you have to struggle to get what you want."

"I think the lesson is that you shouldn't be afraid. The reason I think this is that the mouse got to see the seashore because he was brave, but his mother and father didn't because they were afraid."

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to identify themes in the fable?
- Do they give reasons from the text to support their thinking?

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA3); see page 121 of the Assessment Resource Book. Then use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are able to identify themes in the fable and give reasons from the text to support their thinking, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to identify themes in the fable and give reasons from the text to support their thinking, proceed with the lesson but consider giving the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using other fables from the collection before continuing on to Day 4.

5 Make Connections

Show the students the cover of Wilma Unlimited and remind them that when they read this book, they talked about what they could learn from Wilma Rudolph's life. Ask:

Q What were some things we learned from Wilma Rudolph's life that we could use in our own lives?

Have a few students share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"She showed us that it's possible to achieve anything if you work really hard."

"We learned about not giving up when things get in your way."

TEKS 6.E.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5 (first discussion question on page 512)

Ask:

Q How does the story “The Mouse and the Seashore” remind you of the story of Wilma Rudolph?

Students might say:

“Both stories are about following dreams.”

“I think the lessons in the stories are the same: you shouldn’t give up when things get hard.”

“Another theme is that you can accomplish great things even if you’re small or sick.”

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q Have you ever worked really hard to accomplish or finish something and felt very happy when you were done? Explain what happened.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Think About Themes

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Ask the students to think as they read about what they notice about the themes, or lessons, in their stories. Tell them that at the end of IDR, you will ask them to share what they noticed with partners.

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students briefly share with partners what they noticed about their stories’ themes. Explain that if a student has not yet noticed a theme in her story, she may share something that seems important from the part she read today. Remind each student to begin sharing by telling the title of the book she read, the author’s name, and what the book is about so far.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

EXTENSION

Read About Arnold Lobel

The book Meet the Authors and Illustrators (Volume One), by Deborah Kovacs and James Preller, includes a brief biography of Arnold Lobel. Read the biography aloud and have the students discuss some of the important ideas in the passage. You may also want to read other books by Arnold Lobel.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Visualize to understand and enjoy the story
- Think about themes in the story
- Make text-to-text connections
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes and write in their reading journals
- Give reasons for their thinking and show respect for the thinking of others

1 Introduce “The Camel Dances”

2 Read Aloud and Visualize

Read “The Camel Dances” aloud slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary and stopping as described on the next page. Do not read the moral at the bottom of page 22.

Materials

- “The Camel Dances” (Fables, pages 22–23)
- Student Response Book page 72
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA1)

Suggested Vocabulary

pirouettes, relevés, arabesques: types of ballet movements fatigue: great tiredness

recital: performance by musicians or dancers

critics: people who have the job of judging all kinds of performances

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

had her heart set on becoming a ballet dancer: wanted very much to be a ballet dancer thing of grace: smooth and easy movement

splendid: excellent

Stop after:

p. 22 “There was no applause.”

Ask:

Q What do you picture happening in the story so far? Turn to your partner.

Without sharing as a class, reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the fable. Remember to not read the moral.

First in pairs, and then as a class, have the students talk about what they pictured as they listened to the story. Ask questions such as:

Q What did you picture happening in the story?

Q How did you picture the camel?

3 Reread and Think About Themes

Have the students open to Student Response Book page 72, where “The Camel Dances” is reproduced. Ask the students to follow along as you reread the fable and to think about the themes, or lessons, in the story. Read the fable without reading the moral.

4 Discuss Themes in the Fable and Make Connections

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What do you think is a theme, or lesson, in this fable? What in the story makes you think that? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share their ideas with the class.

Students might say:

"I think a theme is that you should do what makes you happy. The reason I think this is that the camel keeps dancing even though the other camels tell her she isn't good."

"In addition to what [Sethary] said, I think the lesson is that it's more important to make yourself happy than to try and make other people happy."

"I think a theme is that you should feel proud whenever you work hard at something. The reason I think this is that the camel decides she is a splendid dancer because she worked hard at it."

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q Do the themes in this fable remind you of the themes in any of the other fables you heard this week? Explain your thinking.

Students might say:

"This fable reminds me of the fable about the mouse. Both stories are about following a dream."

"The camel in this fable doesn't care what other people think of her dancing because it makes her happy. That's like the rooster who is proud of his crowing even though the other animals don't like it."

5 Discuss the Author's Message About a Theme

Explain that the author, Arnold Lobel, included a message about a theme in "The Camel Dances." Read the sentence at the bottom of page 22 aloud and write it where everyone can see it: Satisfaction will come to those who please themselves.

As a class, discuss:

Q What does it mean to be satisfied? What do you think the sentence "Satisfaction will come to those who please themselves" means?

Point out that the students may have identified other themes in the fable and that this is OK. Many stories have more than one theme, or lesson, that readers can learn from.

6 Reflect on Giving Reasons for Ideas

Facilitate a brief discussion of how the students are doing with giving reasons for their ideas. Explain that they will have more opportunities to practice this skill in the coming weeks.

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to write, you might use a book they are familiar with to model writing a journal entry about a theme. For example, you might write: I am reading A Day's Work by Eve Bunting. This story is about a boy named Francisco and his grandfather, Abuelo, who get a day job gardening. I think a theme, or lesson, in this story is that people should be honest. The reason I think this is that Francisco tells a lie in the story that gets him and his grandfather into trouble at their job. They end up having to do twice as much work because Francisco wasn't honest.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will revisit Fables to teach the Week 27 vocabulary lessons.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Write in Reading Journals

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Ask the students to think as they read about what they notice about the themes, or the lessons, in their stories. Explain that at the end of IDR, you will ask each student to write a journal entry about a theme or an important idea in his story.

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have them return to their desks and open their Student Response Books to the Reading Journal section. Display the "Journal Entry" chart (WA1) and explain that each student will write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

WA1

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading.

Please include:

- The title and the author's name
- What the story is about
- A theme or lesson in the story and an example from the story that supports that theme, or
- An important idea in the part you read today and a sentence explaining why you think it is important

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write. Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Explore a Genre: Fables

Remind the students that earlier they heard and discussed four fables by Arnold Lobel. Review that a fable is a “special type of story that has animals as characters and a central theme, or lesson about life.” Ask:

Q What other fables have you heard?

Have the students watch or listen to the fables you located. After each fable, briefly discuss questions such as:

Q What do you think is a theme, or lesson, in this fable?

Q How can this lesson help you in your own life?

Technology Tip

There are many fables available online as text, audiobooks, or videos. Prior to doing this activity, go online and locate one or two age-appropriate fables. Try to choose at least one that is an audiobook or video. You can search for fables online using the keywords “fables for children,” “fables for kids video,” or “fables audiobook.” You might wish to bookmark any student-friendly sites you discover on classroom computers for the students to visit later.

Week 4

OVERVIEW

Possum's Tail from Pushing Up the Sky: Seven Native American Plays for Children

by Joseph Bruchac, illustrated by Teresa Flavin

This play is based on a tale from the Cherokee people that explains how the possum got its unusual tail.

Online Resources

Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to find your online resources for this week.

Assessment Forms

- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4)
- “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1)

Comprehension Focus

- Students explore the differences between drama and prose.
- Students use wondering/questioning to make sense of a play.
- Students think about elements of narrative text structure in a play, including character, setting, and theme.
- Students make inferences to understand characters.
- Students read independently.

Social Development Focus

- Students develop the skill of giving reasons for their thinking.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.
- Students work in a responsible way.

⌚ DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 2, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4); see page 122 of the Assessment Resource Book.

---

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 27 lessons this week.

Materials

- Possum's Tail (Pushing Up the Sky, pages 37–46)
- Student Response Book pages 73–82

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a play
- Use wondering/questioning to make sense of the play
- Explore the differences between plays (drama) and prose
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

ABOUT READING DRAMA AT GRADE 3

This week the students are introduced to a new genre, drama. The central focus of the week is on introducing the students to the unique features of plays and on exploring the differences between plays and prose. The students hear a play read aloud by the teacher, reread the same play on their own, and do a dramatic reading of the play as a class. As they discuss narrative elements of the play, including character, setting, and theme, the students have opportunities to practice many of the comprehension strategies they have learned, including wondering/questioning, making inferences, and determining important ideas.

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that during the past few weeks, they have been working with their partners to discuss important ideas and themes in fiction and nonfiction texts. Ask:

Q What has been working well during your partner conversations?

Q What can you do to let your partner know that you respect his or her thinking?

Ask the students to keep what they talked about in mind as they work with their partners this week.

2 Review Fables and Introduce Plays

Remind the students that last week they heard and discussed four fables by Arnold Lobel. Review that a fable is a story with animal characters that teaches a lesson. Tell the students that this week they will hear and read another story with animal characters that teaches a lesson, but that this story is told in a very different way.

Show the cover of Pushing Up the Sky and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Tell the students that this book includes seven stories from different Native American tribes and that the author retells each story as a play. Explain that a play is a “story that is written to be acted out, usually on a stage.”

3 Compare Plays and Other Fiction Stories

Show pages 38–39 of the book and explain that plays are written differently and look different from other kinds of fiction stories. Have the students turn to Student Response Book pages 73–82, where the same pages are reproduced. Ask the students to look carefully at these pages. After a few moments, ask:

- Q What do you notice about how the play is written?
- Q How does the play look different from other stories you’ve read?

Students might say:

“The play gives the name of a character and then tells what the character says. Other stories that we’ve read don’t do that.”

“There are instructions about how to act out the play.”

“In addition to what [Nir] said, the instructions also tell you more about the setting.”

Show page 39 of the book and point to “Scene I” near the top of the page. Tell the students that each section of a play is called a scene and that a scene in a play is like a chapter in a book. Point to the italicized text below “Scene I” and explain that the italicized words are called stage directions and that those directions let the actors know what they should do or how they should move. Point to a few of the characters’ names and explain that the words in bold type are the names of the characters and the words that follow the characters’ names are the dialogue, or what the characters say.

4 Read Aloud and Ask Questions

Show page 37 of the book and explain that the play the students will hear and read this week is called Possum’s Tail.

Ask the students to turn to Student Response Book page 73, and review that this is Scene I of the play, which is where you will begin reading today. Ask the students to follow along as you read the play aloud. Remind the students that good readers ask themselves questions as they read, and explain that you will give them an opportunity to share any questions that come to mind about the play as they listen today. Read the play aloud slowly and clearly, stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

TEKS 9.C.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3 (two discussion questions)

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, show them a few pages of a fiction book and point out some ways in which the book is different from the play. For example, you might point out that the text is written in paragraph form in the book, and it is written as a dialogue in the play. Also, quotation marks are used to show when a character is speaking in the book, and quotation marks are not used in the play.

TEKS 9.C.i
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 3 (last paragraph)

Teacher Note

You might explain that the play is based on a Native American myth and that a myth is a “make-believe story that takes place long, long ago.” Often myths explain why something happens in nature—such as why there is lightning or how the stars came to be. This myth explains how the possum got its unusual tail.

Teacher Note

When reading the play aloud, read all of the text on each page including the stage directions and the characters’ names.

Suggested Vocabulary

turban: long piece of cloth wrapped around someone's head (p. 38)

improvise: make something up as you go along (p. 40)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

stubby: very short (p. 40)

moss: soft plant that grows in the shade (p. 41)

Stop after the last sentence of Scene I:

p. 43 "BEAR: Don't worry. Rabbit has a plan."

Ask:

Q What happened in the scene you just heard? Turn to your partner.

Q What questions do you have about what you just heard? Turn to your partner.

Without sharing as a class, reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the next scene. Follow the same procedure at each of the following stops:

p. 45 "Do not take it off until you are at the meeting."

p. 46 "And Possum no longer brags about his tail!"

Facilitation Tip

Continue to focus on responding neutrally with interest during class discussions by refraining from overtly praising or criticizing the students' responses.

5 Discuss the Play

Discuss the questions that follow as a class. Be ready to reread parts of the play aloud to help the students recall what they heard.

Q What happens in this play?

Q What questions did you have as you listened to the play? Were your questions answered? How?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will hear and read the play again and can listen for answers to any questions they still have.

6 Reflect on Working Together

Facilitate a class discussion about how partners worked together. Ask:

Q What did you do to make sure you worked well with your partner today? What would you like to do [the same way/differently] the next time you work together?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Ask Questions

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Ask the students to notice what questions come to mind as they read today and to think about whether the questions are answered directly, indirectly, or not at all. Tell the students that at the end of IDR, you will ask for volunteers to share their questions with the class.

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Ask for a few volunteers to share their reading with the class. Have each volunteer tell the class the title of the book she read, the author’s name, what the book is about, a question that came to mind as she was reading today, and what, if anything, she found out about the question.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

Materials

- Possum's Tail (Pushing Up the Sky, pages 37–46)
- Student Response Book pages 73–82
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4)

TEKS 7.C.i

Student/Teacher Narrative Step 3 (all, beginning on page 524 and continuing on to page 525), Class Assessment Note (on page 525), and Step 4 (all, beginning on page 525 and continuing on to page 526)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear a play again
- Discuss character, setting, and theme in the play
- Make inferences about characters in the play
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Review Using a Prompt to Explain Ideas

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they have been focusing on using the prompt “The reason I think this is . . .” in both partner conversations and class discussions to explain their thinking. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How has using the prompt helped you explain your thinking?

Remind the students that they are responsible for giving reasons for their thinking, and encourage them to use the prompt to help them do so.

2 Review Character, Setting, and Theme

Remind the students that earlier in the year they learned about some elements that are common to most fiction stories, including character and setting. They made inferences about characters in stories and the problems they face, and they thought about how some characters change over time. They also thought about setting, or where a story takes place, and how that can affect what happens in the story. Last week they learned about another element of story: theme, or the lesson in a story.

Tell the students that today they will hear and read Possum's Tail again and discuss the characters, setting, and themes in the play.

3 Reread Possum's Tail and Make Inferences

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 73, Scene I of Possum's Tail, and ask the students to follow along as you read the play aloud. Read the play aloud slowly and clearly, stopping as described below.

Stop after the last sentence of Scene I:

p. 43 “BEAR: Don’t worry. Rabbit has a plan.”

Ask:

Q How do the other animals feel about Rabbit? How do you know? Turn to your partner.

As pairs talk, notice whether they are using the prompt to explain their thinking and whether they are using evidence from the play to support their ideas.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students referring to the play to explain their thinking?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4); see page 122 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students or about half of the students are referring to the play to explain their thinking, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 3. You may wish to check in during IDR with students who are having difficulty.
- If only a few students are referring to the play to explain their thinking, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1 and 2 of this week using an alternative play before continuing on to Day 3. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of Scene II. Stop after:

p. 45 “Do not take it off until you are at the meeting.”

Ask:

Q Why do you think Possum lets Cricket put the medicine on his tail? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the end of the play. Ask:

Q How do you think Possum feels when he discovers what has happened to his tail? What in the play makes you think so? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

4 Discuss Characters, Settings, and Themes

Facilitate a discussion of the play using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread from the play to help the students recall what they heard.

- Q Who are the main characters in this play?
- Q What kind of character is Possum? What in the play makes you think so?
- Q What kind of character is Rabbit? What in the play makes you think so?

on to page 526)

TEKS 8.D.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 4 (first discussion
question on page 526)

Students might say:

"The main characters in the play are Possum, Cricket, and Rabbit."

"I think Possum is self-centered. The reason I think this is that the only thing he wants to do is talk about his tail."

"I think Possum is greedy. The reason I think this is that he thinks his tail is really great but he wants it to be even better."

"I think Rabbit is clever because he tricks Possum."

"I think Rabbit is mean. The reason I think this is that he ruins Possum's tail forever."

Q What do we know about the setting of this play?

Students might say:

"The setting is the forest, where the animals live."

"The setting changes when the scene changes. The animals are in different parts of the forest in each scene."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What do you think is a theme, or lesson, in this play? What in the play makes you think so? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"I think the lesson is that you shouldn't brag. The reason I think this is that Possum's tail gets ruined because he brags about it too much."

"In addition to what [Camila] said, I think another theme is that you should be satisfied with what you have and not want more. The reason I think this is that if Possum had been satisfied with his tail the way it was, he wouldn't have let Cricket put the medicine on it."

Tell the students that during the next two lessons, they will work to perform the play as a class.

5 Reflect on Using the Prompt

Facilitate a brief discussion of how the students did with using the prompt to explain their thinking. Remind the students that the goal is for them to give reasons for their thinking without you having to ask them to do so.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Think About Characters, Settings, and Themes

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Ask the students to think as they read about what they notice about the characters, settings, and themes in their stories. Tell them that at the end of IDR, you will ask them to share what they noticed with the class.

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Invite a few students to share what they noticed about the characters, settings, and themes of their stories with the class. Have each volunteer begin by telling the title of his book, the author’s name, and what the story is about so far. Then ask questions such as:

- Q Who are the main characters in the story? What do you know about them so far?
- Q What is the setting of the story? Why is that important?
- Q What do you think is a theme, or lesson, in the story? What in the story makes you think that?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

TEKS 7.C.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 6
(discussion questions at end of step)

Materials

- Possum's Tail (Pushing Up the Sky, pages 37–46)
- Student Response Book pages 73–82
- Scratch paper and a pencil

Teacher Note

On Day 4, the students read the play aloud together as a class. If time allows, you might have the students act out the play using the stage directions and props. Have the students use some of the suggestions on pages 38–39 of Pushing Up the Sky or ideas of their own to create props and scenery.

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore the differences between plays (drama) and prose
- Choose parts to read aloud
- Read the play independently
- Read fiction books independently for up to 25 minutes
- Work in a responsible way

1 Review Plays

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that in the previous lessons, they heard and discussed the play Possum's Tail. Remind the students that plays are written so that people can act them out.

Show pages 38–39 and explain that these pages provide information that readers can use to help them act out the play. Point out the list of the characters in the play, the suggestions for how to make props and scenery, and the suggestions for costumes the characters might wear.

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How do these sections make a play different from other stories you have heard and read, such as the fables from last week? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"Other stories don't have a list of the characters in the front."

"In addition to what [Dana] said, most stories don't explain what the characters would wear."

"Plays are different because you are supposed to create the setting by using props and making scenery. In stories you imagine the setting."

Explain that tomorrow the students will read the play aloud as a class, with volunteers reading the parts of different characters. Today the students will have a chance to choose the characters they want to be.

2 Choose Parts

Have the students open to Student Response Book pages 73–82 and direct their attention to the section titled "Characters." Point out that the play Possum's Tail has eight characters with speaking roles, and read the names of the characters aloud. Have each student look at the list of characters and think quietly about which part he or she might like to read aloud. Ask:

Q Which part might you like to read aloud? Why? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing the question as a class, tell the students that they may not all get to read the parts they want, but there are opportunities for everyone to have a speaking part. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q If you don't get chosen to read the part you want, what can you do to act in a responsible way?

Students might say:

"If I don't get to read the part I want, that's OK. There are a lot of parts to read."

"I can volunteer to read a different part."

"I'll be happy reading whichever part I get chosen for."

Tell the students that now they have an opportunity to choose a part to read aloud. For each part, read the name of the character and ask for a volunteer to read the part. As you assign each part, jot down the name of the character and the name of the student who will read the part on a sheet of scratch paper. Tell the students that you will be reading the scene descriptions and the stage directions (the italicized text).

3 Read the Play Independently

Have the students turn to Student Response Book pages 73–82. Explain that today they will read the play silently to themselves, paying careful attention to their own parts (if they have parts). Have the students read the play silently to themselves.

After 10–15 minutes, signal to let the students know that it is time to stop reading. Tell the students that in the next lesson, they will read the play aloud as a class.

4 Reflect on Acting in a Responsible Way

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students did with taking responsibility for themselves during today's lesson. Ask questions such as:

Q What did you do to take responsibility for yourself when we assigned parts today?

Q How does taking responsibility for yourself help build the reading community?

Teacher Note

Note that more than eight students can volunteer for speaking roles. To allow more students to participate, you might also assign the roles of the Narrator, Possum, Rabbit, and Bear by scene (for example, you might choose three students to read Possum's lines—one student can read in Scene I, another can read in Scene II, and still another in Scene III). Some students may not wish to volunteer for a speaking role, and that is OK. Simply have those students follow along as the play is read aloud.

Teacher Note

Save the list of parts for Day 4.

Teacher Note

Encourage the students to think about how they might read their lines expressively. For support with helping the students read with expression, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, "Reading with Expression."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Think About Characters, Settings, and Themes

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Ask the students to think as they read about what they notice about the characters, settings, and themes in their stories. Tell them that at the end of IDR, you will ask them to share what they noticed with partners.

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students briefly share with partners the things they noticed about the characters, settings, and themes in their stories. After partners have had a chance to share, invite a few volunteers to share what they noticed with the class. Ask questions such as:

- Q Who are the main characters in the story? What do you know about them so far?
- Q What is the setting of the story? Why is that important?
- Q What do you think is a theme, or lesson, in the story? What in the story makes you think that?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

TEKS 7.C.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5
(discussion questions at end of step)

In this lesson, the students:

- Read a play aloud as a class
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Work in a responsible way

1 Review the Assigned Parts in Possum's Tail

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and gather in a circle, with partners sitting together. Remind the students that today they will read the play Possum's Tail together. Review that yesterday the students chose parts to read from the play. Refer to the list of parts from Day 3 and read the name of each character and the name of the student who will read that part.

2 Discuss Reading the Play Aloud and Taking Responsibility

Before having the students read the play aloud, facilitate a discussion about how the students will act, both when they read their parts aloud and when they are listening to others read their parts. Ask:

Q Why is it important to speak in a loud, clear voice when you're reading your lines aloud? Turn to your partner.

Q If you can't hear someone who is reading, how can you politely let that person know? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

"It's important to speak in a loud voice so that everyone can hear. If you talk too quietly, the next person might not know that it's her turn to speak."

"It's important to speak clearly so that people can understand what you say. If they don't understand you, they won't understand what is happening in the play."

"If you can't hear someone, you could say, 'Can you read your lines a little louder next time?'"

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q Why is it important to follow along as the play is being read aloud and to be attentive and quiet as others are reading?

Materials

- Possum's Tail (Pushing Up the Sky, pages 37–46)
- List of parts from Day 3
- Student Response Book pages 73–82

If necessary, explain that it is important for students who have speaking roles to be attentive during the read-aloud so that each student knows when it is his turn to read his lines. In addition, it is always respectful and polite to listen when others are speaking or reading aloud. Tell the students that you will check in with them later to see how they did.

3 Read the Play Aloud

Have the students open to Student Response Book page 73. Give the students a few minutes to review their parts. Before you begin reading the play as a class, encourage the students to read their lines with expression in order to make the play more fun and enjoyable to hear. Remind them that you will be reading the scene descriptions and the stage directions, and begin by reading the Scene I description and the first stage direction aloud. Then signal for the narrator to begin reading, and have the students read the entire play aloud.

4 Reflect on Reading the Play as a Class

After the reading, facilitate a discussion about the differences between reading the play on paper and reading it aloud as a class. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What did you notice when you heard the play read aloud by several people?
- Q How did hearing your classmates read the play aloud help you better understand it?

Students might say:

"I noticed that [Nadia] changed her voice when she was speaking as Possum. That helped me imagine the character better."

"Having different people read the voice of each character made it easier for me to tell the difference between characters."

"[Omar] read his lines with a lot of expression and sometimes he even made faces to match the words. That helped me imagine what Rabbit was thinking."

- Q Which did you enjoy more—hearing the play read aloud by several people or reading it silently to yourself? Why?

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 28 lessons this week.

Materials

- Keepers (pages 1–13)
- Small self-stick notes for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a story
- Wonder about the story
- Think about important ideas in the story
- Make inferences about characters in the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking and show respect for the thinking of others

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that for the past few weeks, they have been working on taking responsibility for explaining their thinking without being asked and on showing respect for the thinking of others, even when it is different from their own. Briefly discuss:

- Q What helps you remember to explain your thinking when you share?
- Q Why is it important to show respect for other people's thinking?

Students might say:

"I can use the prompt we learned to give reasons for my thinking."

"It's important to show respect for other people's thinking because we want them to be comfortable sharing."

"You should show respect for other people's thinking because it can help you think about things in a new way."

Encourage the students to keep these ideas in mind during the lesson today.

2 Introduce Keepers

Show the cover of Keepers and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Explain that this is a fiction story about a boy, Kenyon, and his grandmother, Little Dolly. Ask:

-  Q What do you wonder about this story? Turn to your partner.

Invite a few volunteers to share with the class.

Students might say:

"I wonder if that's Kenyon on the cover."

"I wonder what he's writing."

"I wonder what the title Keepers means."

3 Read the First Part of Keepers Aloud

Explain that today you will read the first part of the book. Ask the students to listen carefully and to think about what things seem important to understand and remember in the first part of the story.

Read pages 1–13 of Keepers aloud, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

familiar: well known (p. 4)

stroke: sudden lack of oxygen to the brain caused by the blocking or breaking of a blood vessel (p. 4)

reminder: something that helps a person remember (p. 6)

wallop-bat day: (made-up word) a great day—a good day for hitting baseballs (p. 9)

clenched: squeezed (p. 11; refer to the illustration)

tribe: group of people who share the same ancestors, customs, and laws (p. 13)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

snoring: breathing noisily while sleeping (p. 4)

tip-toed: walked quietly on his toes (p. 6)

muttering: speaking in a low, unclear way with the mouth nearly closed (p. 9)

clean out of the park: completely out of the park, most likely over the fence (p. 9)

park diamond: baseball field (p. 11)

weaves the tale: tells the story (p. 13)

legends: stories about the past that might be true (p. 13)

Stop after:

p. 9 “She was a big-boned woman with great big hands and a great big voice and a great lot of words.”

Ask:

 Q What has happened in the story so far? Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share their thinking with the class. Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading to the next stop:

p. 13 “You cain’t be a Keeper if you a boy.”

Teacher Note

Be prepared to help the students with the dialect in the story, if necessary.

Facilitation Tip

Reflect on your experience over the past few weeks with responding neutrally with interest during class discussions. Does this practice feel natural to you? Are you integrating it into class discussions throughout the school day? What effect is it having on the students? We encourage you to continue to use this practice and to reflect on students' responses as you facilitate class discussions in the future.

TEKS 7.G.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5
(all, beginning on page 538 and continuing on to page 539)

Ask:

Q What have you learned about the meaning of the title Keepers? Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share with the class.

4 Discuss the Reading

Facilitate a class discussion about the reading using the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the prompts they have learned to explain their thinking and to build on one another's thinking.

- Q What seems important in the story so far?
- Q What do you know about Kenyon? What do you know about Little Dolly?
- Q Were any of the things you were wondering explained in the reading today? How were they explained?
- Q What are you wondering about the story now?

Students might say:

"I think it's important that Little Dolly thinks only girls can be Keepers. The reason I think this is that Kenyon is a boy and he likes his grandmother's stories."

"I know that Kenyon loves Little Dolly, even though she makes him do his homework. The reason I think this is that he doesn't like it when people say mean things about her."

"I wonder if Little Dolly will change her mind about only girls being Keepers."

Tell the students that they will hear more of the story tomorrow.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Think About Important Ideas

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Explain that as they read today, you would like them to think about what things are happening in their stories that seem important to understand and remember. Tell the students that they will read silently for 15 minutes. After 15 minutes, you will stop them and ask them to reread, thinking about what is important in the parts they read. Distribute the self-stick notes and explain that the students will use the notes to mark the important ideas as they reread.

Have the students get their books and put self-stick notes where they begin reading. Have them read silently for 15 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

After 15 minutes, signal to let the students know to stop reading. Ask them to watch as you model thinking aloud and marking an important idea in the first part of Keepers.

You might say:

“I think an important idea in this part of the story is that Kenyon wants to be a Keeper. I think this is important because Keepers is the title of the book, and Kenyon is the main character. I’m going to put a self-stick note on page 13 where it says, ‘Kenyon stopped the swing and he knelt beside her. “Little Dolly, I’ll be the Keeper. I love your stories.””

Explain that each student will now reread, beginning at the self-stick note, and will use additional notes to mark places in the story where something important is happening or where there is something that seems important to understand and remember. Have the students reread silently for 10 minutes.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share important ideas they found in their reading with the class. Have each student begin by telling the title of the book he read, the author’s name, and what the book is about. After each volunteer shares an important idea from his reading, ask questions such as:

Q Why do you think the idea you marked is important?

Q What other ideas might be important in this part of the story?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

TEKS 7.G.i
Student/Teacher Narrative

Day 2

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- Keepers (pages 14–25)
- Small self-stick notes for each student

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble recalling clarifying questions, give examples such as:

- “Can you tell me more about that?”
- “What did you mean when you said . . . ?”
- “Can you give me an example of what you mean?”

Teacher Note

If necessary, remind the students to use the prompt “The reason I think this is . . .” to explain why they think those things are important.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss part of a story
- Think about important ideas in the story
- Make inferences about characters in the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Ask clarifying questions
- Give reasons for their thinking

1 Review Asking Clarifying Questions

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that one way to show respect for the thinking of others is to ask clarifying questions when they do not understand an idea someone shares. Ask:

Q If you don’t understand someone’s thinking, what are some questions you can ask to help you understand it better?

Have a few students share their thinking with the class. Encourage the students to use clarifying questions to better understand one another’s ideas.

2 Review Important Ideas in the First Part of Keepers

Show the cover of Keepers and remind the students that they heard the first part of the book earlier. Slowly leaf through pages 1–13 and show the illustrations. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What are the important things to remember from the part you heard yesterday? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share their thinking with the class.

Explain that you will continue reading the story today and that you will finish reading it tomorrow. Ask the students to listen carefully and to notice what things seem important to understand and remember in the part they hear today.

3 Read the Second Part of Keepers Aloud

Read pages 14–25 of Keepers aloud, showing the illustrations and stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

antique store: store selling old objects, such as furniture, dishes, and jewelry (p. 19)

rich aroma: very good smell (p. 20)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

headed out: went out (p. 15)

tourists: people who travel for pleasure (p. 19)

storefronts: sides of stores facing the street (p. 20)

Stop after:

p. 19 "... where she and Kenyon helped the caretaker decorate with flags on holidays."

Ask:

Q What is happening in the story? Turn to your partner.

Reread the last sentence on page 19 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 23 "Mrs. Montgomery looked at that ball glove and he knew she'd figured it out."

Ask:

Q What has happened?

Have one or two students share their thinking. Then use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q How does Kenyon feel at this point in the story? How do you know?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Reread the last sentence on page 23 and continue reading. Stop after:

p. 24 "Can only go forward."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What do you think Kenyon's father means when he says, "You can't go back. Can only go forward"? [pause] Turn to your partner.

4 Discuss Important Ideas

Facilitate a class discussion about the reading using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread parts of the story to help the students recall what they heard.

Q What do you think is important to understand and remember in the part of the story you heard today?

Q What do you think will happen next?

Ask the students to keep their predictions in mind, and tell them that they will hear the rest of the story tomorrow.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Think About Important Ideas

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Explain that again today you would like them to think about ideas in their stories that seem important to understand and remember. Explain that the students will read silently for 15 minutes. After 15 minutes, you will stop them and ask them to reread, thinking about what the important ideas are in the parts they read. Distribute the self-stick notes and remind the students that they will use the notes to mark the ideas they think are important as they reread.

Have the students get their books and put self-stick notes where they begin reading. Have them read silently for 15 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

After 15 minutes, signal to let the students know to stop reading. Ask each student to reread, beginning at the self-stick note, and use additional notes to mark places in the story where something important is happening or where there is something that seems important to understand and remember. Have the students reread silently for 10 minutes.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have each student share with a partner the title of the book she is reading, the author’s name, what the book is about, and one important idea she found in the part she read today. Remind the students to explain why they think the ideas they share are important.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

EXTENSION

Share a Personal Story

Review that in this book Keepers are people who know and keep stories about their families, traditions, or cultures and pass them on orally from one generation to the next. Have each student think about a story about his family that he would like to share. Explain that the story can be one that he has heard from a relative or a friend or one from his own experience. Model by sharing a story about your own family. Have the students share their stories.

Read-aloud/ Guided Strategy Practice

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss the end of a story
- Think about a problem in the story
- Make inferences about characters in the story
- Make text-to-self connections
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Write in their reading journals

Materials

- Keepers (pages 26–32)
- Small self-stick notes for each student
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section
- “Journal Entry” chart (WA2)

1 Discuss the Problem in Keepers

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Keepers and remind the students that in the part of the story they heard yesterday, the main character, Kenyon, has a problem. Leaf through pages 14–25 and show the illustrations. Ask:

Q What is Kenyon’s problem?

Students might say:

“He wanted to buy Little Dolly a special gift for her birthday but he bought himself a baseball glove instead.”

“In addition to what [Helena] said, now Kenyon doesn’t have a gift to give Little Dolly on her birthday and he doesn’t have money to buy one.”

“I think Kenyon’s problem is that he is sorry about what he did and he doesn’t know how to fix it.”

Q How do you think the problem will be solved? What do you think will happen?

Tell the students that you will read the end of the story aloud today. Ask them to listen carefully to find out if Kenyon's problem gets solved.

2 Read the End of Keepers Aloud

Read pages 26–32 of Keepers aloud, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

a box of assorted chocolates: a box with a variety of chocolate candies (p. 28) delicately: gently and carefully (p. 30)

bind: put the pages of a book together between covers (p. 30)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

the porch spilled over with people: there were a lot of people on the porch (p. 28)

don't that beat all: (dialect) isn't that amazing (p. 30)

Stop after:

p. 28 "The cake was delicious and everyone had a good time."

Ask:

Q What has happened? Turn to your partner.

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. Then ask:

Q Why do you think all the townspeople come to Little Dolly's party?

Reread the last sentence on page 28 and continue reading to the end of the story.

3 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread parts of the story to help the students recall what they heard. Ask:

Q What important things happen at the end of the story?

Q How is Kenyon's problem solved?

Q How does Kenyon feel at the end of the story? How do you know?

Q How does Little Dolly feel? How do you know?

Students might say:

"Little Dolly has a party and all the people from the town come to it."

"Kenyon gives Little Dolly a book of her stories and she really likes it."

"Kenyon solves his problem by making a present instead of buying one."

"I think Kenyon feels happy. The reason I think this is that he thinks it's a 'wallop-bat' day, which means a really good day."

"Little Dolly is happy too. I know because Kenyon's present makes her so happy she cries."

4 Make Text-to-self Connections

Remind the students that in the story, Keepers are people who know the stories about their families, traditions, or cultures and keep the stories alive by telling them to others. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Who is a Keeper in your family? What is a story you like to hear that person tell? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few students share with the class. Briefly discuss:

Q Would you like to be a Keeper of your family stories? Why or why not?

Tell the students that they will revisit Keepers in the next lesson and think about themes, or lessons, in the story.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

5 Read Independently and Write in Reading Journals

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Explain that again today you would like them to think about ideas in their stories that seem important to understand and remember. Explain that the students will read silently for 15 minutes. After 15 minutes, you will stop them and ask them to reread, thinking about what the important ideas are in the parts they read. Then each student will write a journal entry about an important idea he noticed.

Distribute the self-stick notes and remind the students that as they reread, they will use the notes to mark the ideas they think are important. Have the students get their books and put self-stick notes where they begin reading. Have them read silently for 15 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

TEKS 6.E.i

TEKS 7.A.i

Student/Teacher Activity

Step 4 (all)

Teacher Note

You will analyze the work the students do in their reading journals in this step for this unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment.

Teacher Note

In Unit 9, the individual student conferences focus on the students' reading habits and feelings about reading. If you have not met with all of your students to discuss the books they are reading during IDR, you may want to do so before beginning the next unit.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

After 15 minutes, signal to let the students know to stop reading. Ask each student to reread, beginning at the self-stick note, and to use additional notes to mark places in the story where something important is happening or where there is something that seems important to understand and remember. Have the students reread silently for 10 minutes.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have the students return to their desks and open their Student Response Books to the Reading Journal section. Then display the “Journal Entry” chart (WA2) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

WA2

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about the book you are reading.

Please include:

- The title and the author’s name
- What the book is about
- An important idea you marked in your reading
- The reason you think it is important

ELL Note

Consider having students with limited English proficiency dictate journal entries for you to write down.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to write, you might use a book they are familiar with to model writing a journal entry about an important idea. For example, you might write: I am reading Keepers by Jeri Hanel Watts. This story is about a boy named Kenyon and his grandmother, Little Dolly. Today I read the end of the story. What seems most important in this part is that Little Dolly decides that Kenyon can be a Keeper even though he’s a boy. The reason I think this is important is that Kenyon has wanted to be a Keeper throughout the whole story, but Little Dolly had told him that only girls could be Keepers.

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

In this lesson, the students:

- Make inferences about the characters in a story
- Think about themes in the story
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Give reasons for their thinking

1 Review the Week

Have the students get their Student Response Books and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and review that this week the students used strategies from the chart to think about and discuss the story Keepers. They wondered and asked questions about the story, thought about the important ideas in different parts of the story, and made inferences to understand the main characters, Kenyon and Little Dolly. Tell the students that today they will think and talk about the lessons Kenyon and Little Dolly learn and also about what they, as readers, can learn from the story.

2 Review Keepers and Discuss Character Change

Review the story by paging through the book and showing the illustrations. Pause on each spread and ask for a student volunteer to retell what is happening in that part of the story. If necessary, reread parts of the story to help the students recall it.

Remind the students that the main characters in a story often change because of things they come to learn or realize between the beginning of the story and the end. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss the questions that follow. Remind the students to give reasons from the story to support their thinking.

Q How does Kenyon change between the beginning of the story and the end? What does he learn or realize that causes him to change? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Q How does Little Dolly change? What does she come to learn or realize? [pause] Turn to your partner.

TEKS 7.B.i
Student/Teacher
Narrative
Step 3 (all)

Teacher Note

If necessary, remind the students that they may have different opinions about the themes in the story and that this is OK. What is important is that they have reasons from the story to support their ideas and that they show respect for the thinking of others, even when it is different from their own.

Students might say:

"In the beginning of the story, Kenyon thinks he needs to spend a lot of money to get Little Dolly a good gift. But then he learns that the best gifts are the ones you make yourself."

"I think Kenyon learns to be more responsible with his money. The reason I think this is that he really feels sorry that he bought the baseball glove."

"In the beginning, Little Dolly thinks that only girls can be Keepers, but when Kenyon gives her the book, she realizes that boys can be Keepers, too."

3 Think and Write About a Theme in Keepers

Remind the students that in addition to the lessons learned by characters, stories also contain themes, or important messages or lessons that readers can use in their own lives. Point out that the lessons characters learn are usually connected to the story's themes. Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 83, "Think and Write About a Theme in Keepers." Ask the students to think quietly to themselves about the following questions:

Q What do you think is a theme, or message or lesson, in this story? What in the story makes you think that?

After a moment or two, have the students individually record their answers on Student Response Book page 83.

4 Discuss Themes as a Class

Facilitate a class discussion about the themes in the story by inviting students to share what they wrote. Ask follow-up questions such as the ones below, and encourage the students to ask clarifying questions if they do not understand an idea someone shares.

Students might say:

"I think one theme is that boys and girls can do the same things. The reason I think this is that Kenyon proves he can be a Keeper even though he's a boy."

"I think another theme is that buying things won't make you happy. Kenyon doesn't feel happy after he buys the baseball glove."

"I think the message is that you feel happy when you make the people you love happy. The reason I think this is that Kenyon feels really happy when Little Dolly likes his present."

Q How might you use this lesson in your own life?

Q Does this theme remind you of themes in other stories you have read? Which ones?

Q Who wrote about a different theme? Read us what you wrote.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to identify themes in the story?
- Can they connect those themes back to the text?
- Do they give reasons for their thinking without being asked?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA5); see page 123 of the Assessment Resource Book. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students or about half of the students are able to identify themes in the story, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Unit 9. You may wish to check in during IDR with students who are having difficulty.
- If only a few students are able to identify themes in the story, you may wish to repeat this week using an alternative text before continuing on to Unit 9. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list.

5 Reflect on the Unit

Refer to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and remind the students that they have spent the past several weeks thinking about important ideas and themes in different kinds of texts. Review that thinking about important ideas and themes helps readers understand and remember what they read and connect it to their own lives. Encourage the students to continue to think about important ideas and themes as they read independently.

Facilitate a brief discussion about how partners worked together over the past few weeks. Tell the students that they will continue to work with the same partners next week.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Think About Themes

Remind the students that they are reading fiction during IDR. Ask the students to think as they read about what they notice about the themes, or the lessons, in their stories. Tell them that at the end of IDR, you will ask some of them to share what they noticed about their stories’ themes with the class.

Have the students get their books and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students about their reading.

Vocabulary Note

Next week, you will revisit Keepers to teach the Week 29 vocabulary lessons.

Teacher Note

ELPS 5.F.iii

Writing About Reading
(all, beginning on page 550
and continuing on to page 551)

Materials

- Keepers

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share what they noticed about themes with the class. Have each volunteer begin by telling the title of her book, the author’s name, and what the story is about so far. Discuss the themes in the story by asking questions such as:

- Q What do you think is a theme, or lesson, in this story? What in the story makes you think that?
- Q What do you think the author wants readers to learn or realize from this story? What in the story makes you think that?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their books.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Make Inferences About the Character Little Dolly in Keepers

Show the cover of Keepers and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Ask:

- Q What happens in this story?

Explain that today you will reread parts of the story and ask the students to think about what kind of person Little Dolly is. Remind the students that they can figure out a lot about a character like Little Dolly by paying attention to clues such as how the character acts and what she says and does. Review that this is called making inferences about the character.

Ask the students to listen carefully as you read for clues they can use to make inferences about Little Dolly. Then reread pages 1–13 and 28–32 aloud.

After reading, ask:

- Q What kind of person is Little Dolly? What in the story makes you think so?

Students might say:

"Little Dolly is a good grandmother. The reason I think this is that she tells Kenyon stories and makes sure he does his homework."

"She's smart. I know this because she's the Keeper of a lot of stories and she has to be smart to remember them all."

"In addition to what [Noriko and Junio] said, she's sharp even though she's 90 years old. When Kenyon tries to sneak out of the house to play baseball, she catches him and tells him he has to do his homework first."

"Little Dolly is popular. I know because all the people from town show up to celebrate her birthday."

Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing a paragraph about Little Dolly's personality.

You might say:

"I think that the things Little Dolly says and does show that she is a smart lady and a loving grandmother. I'll start by writing: I think that the character Little Dolly in Keepers by Jeri Hanel Watts is a smart person and a loving grandmother to the main character, Kenyon. Now I need to give reasons from the story to explain why I think that. I'll write: I know Little Dolly is smart because she remembers her family's entire history and can tell interesting stories about it. Now I'll write about how I know Little Dolly is a loving grandmother: I know Little Dolly loves Kenyon because she takes care of him and makes sure he does his homework so he'll do well in school. At the end of the story, she tells Kenyon that he can be the next Keeper of the family stories even though he's a boy, which shows that she thinks he's very special."

Explain that the students will now write their own paragraphs about the kind of person they think Little Dolly is, using the inferences they made from clues in the story. Remind them to include the title of the book and the author's name in their paragraphs as well as the clues in the story that helped them make their inferences. If time permits, invite volunteers to share what they wrote with the class.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 8. Partners will stay together for Unit 9.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1). Periodically, have a few students share with the class what they are reading at home.

Assessment

- Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students' reading comprehension using the "Individual Comprehension Assessment" record sheet (IA1); see page 128 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Unit 9

Revisiting The Reading Community

During this unit, the students review the books they have read this year and select favorite books to recommend to their classmates for summer reading. They write and share book recommendations, and they generate summer reading lists based on others' recommendations. They also review the reading comprehension strategies they have learned this year and discuss how the strategies help them make sense of what they read. During IDR, the students read texts of their choice and share and discuss what they are reading with the class. Socially, they act in fair and caring ways, and they listen to the thinking of others and respectfully share their own. They also discuss their growth as readers and as members of a classroom community.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ If you used the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) from Unit 2 as a survey of the students’ reading goals and interests, you might review the students’ responses to those questions prior to beginning your IDR conferences this week. For more information, see “IDR Conferences” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1); see page 139 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, make sure that each student has selected a book to recommend and has located a copy of the book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, select a book to model writing a book recommendation about (see Step 2). Be prepared to say what the book is about, explain what you like about the book, and identify an exciting or interesting passage to read aloud. The book you choose for modeling could be a Making Meaning book, another popular book you have read aloud, a book on the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list, or a book the students have not heard before.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, collect five read-aloud books that your students might enjoy hearing (see Step 2). The books you select could include Making Meaning books the students liked when you read them earlier this year, other popular books you have read aloud, books on the “Grade 3 Alternative Texts” list, or books the students have not heard before.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 138 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (cclearninghub.org) to access and print this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.

Vocabulary Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, teach the Week 29 lessons this week.

Day 1

Selecting Favorite Books and Reflecting

Materials

- Student Response Book, Reading Log section
- “Reflecting on Our Reading Lives” chart (WA1)
- Student Response Book page 84
- Class set of “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1)

Teacher Note

You will not assign new partners this week. Have the students work with their Unit 8 partners.

Teacher Note

We suggest the students limit their summer reading recommendations to books and not consider other types of texts—such as poems, articles, or functional texts—that may appear in their reading logs.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review the books they have read this the year
- Discuss favorite books with partners
- Select books to recommend for summer reading
- Reflect and write about their reading lives
- Reflect on their growth as readers
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that during this last week of the program the students will reflect on the books they have read this year and will choose a book they especially liked to recommend to their classmates for summer reading. They will also review the comprehension strategies they have learned and will think about how they have grown as readers and as members of a community.

Tell the students that at the end of the week, you will ask them to discuss some things they enjoyed about working with partners this year. Encourage them to focus during the coming week on enjoying their partner work and on using the skills they have learned to help them in their work together.

2 Review Reading Logs

Remind the students that they have been keeping track of the texts they read independently in their reading logs. Have them open their Student Response Books to the Reading Log section. Explain that you would like each student to read the entries in his reading log and put a star next to any book he especially enjoyed. Give the students a few minutes to review and mark their logs.

3 Share Favorite Books and Select Books to Recommend

When most students have finished, signal for their attention. Have partners take turns sharing the entries they marked and explaining what they especially liked about those books. After a few minutes, signal for the students’ attention and invite a few volunteers to briefly share their favorite books with the class. After volunteers have shared, point out that good readers often recommend books they especially enjoyed to other readers. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which of your favorite books do you think other students would most enjoy reading during the summer? Why? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and invite a few volunteers to share with the class.

Students might say:

“One of my favorite books is How Droofus the Dragon Lost His Head by Bill Peet. I think other students might enjoy reading it because it’s exciting and the ending is surprising.”

“I loved reading Lilly’s Purple Plastic Purse by Kevin Henkes. I would recommend it to other students because Lilly is so funny.”

Explain that tomorrow each student will write a recommendation of a favorite book to share with the class. Ask each student to quietly decide which book she will recommend and circle it in her reading log.

4 Write About Reading Lives

Explain that the students will now have a chance to think about how they have grown and changed as readers over the year. Remind them that they started the year thinking about their reading lives, and tell them that they will think about this again now that they are nearing the end of the year.

Display the “Reflecting on Our Reading Lives” chart (WA1) and explain that the students will first think, and then write, about the questions on the chart. Read the questions aloud, pausing after each question to give the students time to think.

Reflecting on Our Reading Lives

- What are some of your favorite books now? Why?
- Where is your favorite place to read?
- What does the word reading mean to you?
- When you don’t understand something you are reading, what do you do?
- What kinds of books did you read for the first time this year? What topics did you read about for the first time?

WA1

Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 84, “Thoughts About My Reading Life,” and record their answers to the questions.

Teacher Note

Allow time before the next lesson for the students to locate copies of the books they will recommend.

Teacher Note

Use "Turn to Your Partner" as needed during this discussion to increase accountability and participation.

5 Discuss Growth as Readers

Give the students a few minutes to review and reflect on what they wrote. Ask them to spend a few quiet moments thinking about how they have changed and grown as readers over the year. Facilitate a discussion about the students' growth as readers using questions such as:

- Q How do you think you have changed or grown as a reader? What makes you think that?
- Q What questions do you want to ask [Lionel] about what he said?
- Q Do others think they have changed or grown in a similar way? Why do you think so?

Students might say:

"My favorite books used to be the Flat Stanley books. I still like those books, but my new favorite books are mysteries."

"At the beginning of the year when I didn't understand something I was reading, I just skipped over it. Now I use strategies to try and figure it out."

"I used to think reading meant reading words. Now I think reading means thinking about a story."

You might want to share some of your general observations about ways your students have changed or grown as readers over the year.

You might say:

"I notice that you are more thoughtful now than you were at the beginning of the year about choosing books that are at the right levels for you. I also notice that you are monitoring your own reading comprehension and trading out books you decide are too hard or too easy. Many of you are also more comfortable talking about the books you have read than you were at the beginning of the year."

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

6 Read Independently and Discuss Summer Reading Plans

Tell the students that they can read fiction, nonfiction, poetry, or plays during IDR this week. Ask the students to think as they read about whether they would recommend the texts they are reading to others. Tell them that later they will share with the class what they have read. Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

You may wish to confer a final time with individual students during this unit. In each conference, ask the student to tell you about the text she is reading and discuss how her reading habits have changed, how she feels about herself as a reader, and what she is interested in reading.

Document your observations for each student on an “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 139 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share briefly about whether they would recommend the texts they are reading to the class. Remind each student to begin by telling the title of the text, the author’s name, and what the text is about so far.

After a few volunteers have had a chance to share, facilitate a discussion about the students’ summer reading plans by asking questions such as:

- Q What are you interested in reading this summer?
- Q Why is it important for you to keep reading this summer?
- Q What habits can you create for yourself to make sure you keep reading this summer?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

SOCIAL SKILLS ASSESSMENT NOTE

During this final week of the program, assess the students’ social skill development using the “Social Skills Assessment Record” sheet (SS1); see page 144 of the Assessment Resource Book. Compare your notes from the fall, winter, and spring, and evaluate each student’s social skill development over the course of the year.

Revisit Read-alouds

Have the books in the Making Meaning program and other books you have read aloud during the year available for the students to browse and revisit. Give each pair time to sit with a book, read it or retell it to each other, and talk about it. Each day, allow time for a few pairs to briefly share their books with the class or for pairs to share their books with other pairs.

Teacher Note

As you confer, you might compare the student’s responses to the questions on the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) from Unit 2 with her responses to the questions on the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) from this unit. You might share with the student some changes you noticed and ask her what led to those changes.

Teacher Note

Provide time for the students to record the texts they have completed in their reading logs.

Teacher Note

You might use the information you collected about your students’ social skill development over the course of the year to help you plan for next year. Ask yourself questions such as:

- What was challenging for my students this year in terms of their social development?
- How might I help next year’s students grow socially?
- What skills should I emphasize with the students next year to help them build a safe and caring reading community?

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Explore the Community Library Online

Take some time to explore the community library’s website (you might search the site for topics like “children’s services” and “children’s e-books”). Many libraries offer access to collections of e-books, music, and audiobooks through downloads to personal computers, tablets, and other mobile devices. You might ask your school librarian or a librarian from the community library to come to your classroom and introduce your students to a few of the online services available to them.

Day 2

Preparing Book Recommendations

Materials

- “Book Recommendation” chart (WA2)
- Book for modeling a book recommendation, selected ahead
- Student Response Book page 85
- Student-selected books to recommend
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart

TEKS 7.D.i
TEKS 7.D.iii
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 2
(all, beginning on page 562
and continuing on to page 563)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a book recommendation
- Write book recommendations
- Share recommendations with partners
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own
- Give feedback in a caring way

1 Get Ready to Work Together

Have the students bring their Student Response Books, pencils, and the books they have chosen to recommend and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that yesterday they reviewed their reading logs and thought about which books they especially enjoyed. Each student also chose one book to recommend to others for summer reading.

Explain that today each student will write a recommendation for the book she chose and identify an interesting part of the book to read aloud when she shares her recommendation with the class.

2 Model Writing a Book Recommendation

Display the “Book Recommendation” chart (WA2) and ask the students to watch and listen as you model writing a book recommendation. Begin by showing the cover of the book and reading the title and the author’s name aloud. Then think aloud as you complete each section of the chart.

You might say:

"The book I want to recommend for your summer reading is Stuart Little by E. B. White." (Write the title and the author's name on the chart.) "Now I will write a few sentences that tell what the book is about. I'll write: It's a story about a mouse named Stuart who leaves home to find his best friend, Margalo, a bird who has disappeared from her nest. Stuart has exciting adventures as he looks for Margalo. Next, I'll explain why I like this book. I'll write: I like this book because Stuart is a funny character and he goes from one wild adventure to another. Finally, I will think of a particularly exciting or interesting part of the book to read aloud. The part about the sailboat race is very interesting, so I'll make a note to remind myself to read that part and write the page numbers that go with it: An exciting part that I can read aloud is the part about the sailboat race (pages 36–38)."

After you have written your recommendation, ask the students to listen as you read the passage you selected aloud.

3 Discuss Book Recommendations

Ask the students to think quietly about the book recommendation you made and the recommendations they will write. After a few moments, facilitate a class discussion using the following questions:

- Q Does this recommendation make you want to read [Stuart Little]? Why or why not?
- Q What do you notice about my description of what the book is about? What information did I include in my description?
- Q What did you notice about the passage I chose to read aloud?

Students might say:

"I want to read Stuart Little because I like stories about friendship and it sounds funny."

"You told who the characters in the story are, but not how the story ends."

"The passage wasn't from the very end of the book. It didn't give anything important away."

"It was easy to visualize what was happening in the passage."

If necessary, point out that you shared some important information about the book, but you did not retell the whole story or give away the ending. You included just enough information to make readers want to read the whole text.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as:

- Q What did you enjoy most about this book?
- Q What is a part you remember well?
- Q What is a part that made you wonder and ask questions?
- Q What is a part that was easy to visualize, or picture in your mind?

4 Write Book Recommendations

Ask the students to open to Student Response Book page 85, “Book Recommendation.” Have each student spend a few minutes reviewing the book he chose and thinking about what information to include in his recommendation. Remind the students that the goal is to make others want to read the book without giving away too much information about it. After a few minutes, signal for the students’ attention and have them write their recommendations. Circulate and observe the students as they write, and provide assistance as needed.

5 Share Book Recommendations with Partners

Have partners share their recommendations and passages with each other and discuss the following questions. Write the questions where everyone can see them:

- Does the recommendation give just enough information?
- Does the recommendation make you want to read the book?
- Does listening to the passage make you curious about the book?

Allow time before the next lesson for the students to revise their recommendations based on partner feedback.

6 Discuss Working with Partners

After partners have discussed their book recommendations, call for the students’ attention and briefly discuss:

- Q How was talking with your partner helpful?
- Q How did you and your partner give each other feedback in a caring way?

Explain that the students will have opportunities in the coming days to share their book recommendations with the class.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Review and Discuss Self-monitoring and “Fix-up” Strategies

Remind the students that this year they learned techniques they can use to monitor their comprehension, or make sure they understand what they are reading. Direct their attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and review that they learned to stop and think about what they are reading by asking themselves the questions on the chart. They learned that if they do not understand what they are reading, they can use the “fix-up” strategies of rereading and reading ahead. If they still do not understand what they are reading, they can also try the strategies listed on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart or they can ask you or a classmate for help.

Have the students get their texts and read silently for up to 25 minutes. Stop them twice during their reading and have them monitor their comprehension by thinking about the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart. After the students have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students. For each conference, ask the student to tell you about the text he is reading and discuss how his reading habits have changed, how he feels about himself as a reader, and what he is interested in reading.

Document your observations for each student on an “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 139 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Facilitate a brief class discussion about using the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart to track their reading comprehension. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q Why is it important to stop as you are reading and ask yourself if you understand what you have read?
- Q How do rereading and reading ahead help you make sense of text?
- Q Which comprehension strategy do you find the most helpful when you're not understanding something you're reading? Why?

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

Teacher Note

As you confer, you might compare the student's responses to the questions on the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) from Unit 2 with his responses to the questions on the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) from this unit. You might share with the student some changes you noticed and ask him what led to those changes.

Day 3

Sharing Book Recommendations and Reflecting

Materials

- Student Response Book pages 85–86
- “Book Recommendation” chart (WA2) from Day 2
- Student-selected books to recommend

Facilitation Tip

Reflect on your experience over the past year using the Facilitation Tips included in the Making Meaning program. Did using the facilitation techniques feel natural to you? Have you integrated them into your class discussions throughout the school day? What effect did using the facilitation techniques have on your students? We encourage you to continue to use the facilitation techniques and to reflect on the students’ responses as you facilitate class discussions in the future.

Teacher Note

You might consider taking your students on a short field trip to the community library.

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin their summer reading lists
- Share book recommendations with the class
- Identify books they want to read
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Introduce the Summer Reading List

Have the students bring their Student Response Books, pencils, and the books they are sharing for their book recommendations and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Tell the students that today they will take turns sharing their book recommendations for summer reading with the class. Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 86, “Summer Reading List.” Explain that as they hear recommendations for books they might want to read this summer, they will add these titles to the “Summer Reading List.” Point out that the page has space to write the title of each book, the author’s name, and a few words to remind them what the book is about.

Display the “Book Recommendation” chart (WA2) from Day 2 and remind the students that yesterday you modeled making a book recommendation. Invite the students to add the book you recommended to their summer reading lists if they wish.

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q If you hear about a book you are interested in reading, how might you find that book this summer?

Students might say:

“I might find the book at the public library.”

“If a friend has the book, I could borrow it.”

“I might look for it at the bookstore or on the Internet.”

Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students will interact in a kind and respectful way during the sharing. Ask:

- Q How do you want your classmates to respond to your book recommendation, whether they would choose to read your book or not? Why?
- Q How can you let your classmates know that you are interested in the book they are sharing and that you appreciate the work they’ve done to share it with you?

Students might say:

"I want people to listen carefully when I read my recommendation. I would also like them to ask me questions about my book."

"After someone shares a recommendation with the class, we can thank them."

"We can ask them to tell us more about why they liked the book."

"We can tell them what we liked about the passage they read."

2 Share Book Recommendations

Call on a volunteer to share her book recommendation with the class. Remind the student to show the cover and read the title and the author's name aloud before reading her recommendation and the selected passage. When the student has finished sharing, ask:

Q [Daria], why did you choose that passage?

Facilitate a brief class discussion using questions such as:

Q What questions do you want to ask [Daria] about the book she shared?

Q What did you hear about this book or in the passage that [Daria] read aloud that got you interested in or made you curious about the book?

Q Do you have enough information to decide whether you want to add this book to your summer reading list? If not, what else do you want to know?

Ask the student who shared the book to write the title of the book and the author's name clearly where everyone can see them. Have the students copy this information onto their summer reading lists if they are interested in reading the book over the summer.

Have several more students share their book recommendations with the class. After each student shares, allow time for questions and discussion and for interested students to add to their reading lists.

3 Discuss Working Together

Have the students who shared their recommendations today talk briefly about how they felt the class treated them while they were sharing. Ask:

Q What made you feel like your classmates were interested in what you were sharing?

Q If you weren't sure that your classmates were interested, what made you unsure?

Remind the students of your expectation that they will do their part to help create a safe, caring community in the class. Assure the students that if they did not share their book recommendations today, they will have time to share them later.

Technology Tip

You might create a space on the class blog for the students to post their recommendations for summer reading. Over the summer, the students can view their classmates' recommendations for summer reading, post summaries of books they have read, and write comments and questions about recommended books. For more information about setting up and maintaining a class blog, view the "Using Blogs in the Classroom" tutorial (AV45). Prior to allowing the students to post comments on the class blog, you might teach Technology Mini-lesson 3, "Showing Respect Online."

Teacher Note

If not all of the students are able to share their book recommendations, make time later in the day or on another day for them to share before proceeding with the Day 4 lesson.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

4 Read Independently and Share Interesting or Surprising Things with the Class

Ask the students to think as they read independently today about interesting or surprising things in their texts. Explain that later you will ask some of them to share interesting or surprising things in their texts with the class. Have the students get their texts and read independently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

Teacher Note

As you confer, you might compare the student's responses to the questions on the "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1) from Unit 2 with her responses to the questions on the "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1) from this unit. You might share with the student some changes you noticed and ask her what led to those changes.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students. For each conference, ask the student to tell you about the text she is reading and to discuss how her reading habits have changed, how she feels about herself as a reader, and what she is interested in reading.

Document your observations for each student on an "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 139 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Have a few volunteers share interesting or surprising things in their texts with the class. Remind each student to begin by telling the title of the text, the author's name, and what the text is about.

Have the students return to their desks and put away their texts.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Use Online Book Recommendations to Add to Summer Reading Lists

Review that the students have been creating summer reading lists. Tell the students that today they will explore websites that recommend books for summer reading to find more titles they might be interested in adding to their lists.

Display your browser page and go to one of the websites you previewed. Model navigating the website and read aloud some of the book recommendations. Afterward, discuss questions such as:

- Q What did you learn about the book? What else would you like to find out about it?
- Q Are you interested in reading this book? Why or why not?

Allow time for interested students to add the books to their summer reading lists.

Technology Tip

Prior to doing this activity, locate and preview age-appropriate websites about summer reading recommendations using the keywords "grade 3 summer reading lists" or "grade 3 book recommendations."

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a student-selected book
- Plan their summer reading
- Reflect on the comprehension strategies they are using
- Read independently for up to 25 minutes and write in their reading journals
- Reflect on their contributions to the reading community
- Reflect on how they have benefited from the reading community

1 Reflect on Partner Work

Have the students bring their pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that over the course of the year, they have worked with many partners. Ask a few volunteers to share some of their favorite things about working with partners this year. Facilitate a class discussion using questions such as:

- Q Think about how you worked with your first partner this year and how you work with partners now. How have you grown as a partner?
- Q What are three things that you liked most about working with partners this year?

Students might say:

"At first it was hard, but we got better and better at it."

"I think the more we got to know each other, the more we were a community."

"I agree with [Kevin]. Being in this community has helped me because I used to be too shy to say anything to the class. I don't feel that way anymore."

"In addition to what [Elena] said, I liked working with a partner. I liked having someone to talk to, not having to be quiet all the time, and getting to work with different partners."

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What is one thing you learned about working well with a partner that you want to take with you next year?

You might want to share some of your general observations about ways your students have changed or grown when working with partners over the year.

Materials

- Five read-aloud books, selected ahead
- Sheet of scratch paper for each student
- Student Response Book page 86
- "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart
- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA1)
- Self-stick notes for each student
- "Journal Entry" chart (WA3)
- Student Response Book, Reading Journal section
- Copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1) for each student

You might say:

"I remember how some students didn't want to work with assigned partners at the beginning of the year. Now you are much better at working with any partner. I also noticed that you relied much more heavily on me at the beginning of the year to help you solve your problems. Now you are able to solve many problems by yourselves."

Tell the students that today they will have another opportunity to share their thinking with their partners.

2 Choose a Read-aloud Book

Write the titles of the five read-aloud books you selected where everyone can see them. Show the students the books, and explain that the class will choose one of these books to hear read aloud today. Tell them that you selected books you thought they would enjoy hearing (or hearing again). Give a brief synopsis of each book that is new to the students and, if necessary, briefly review the books from earlier in the year.

Explain that you would like each student to choose the three books he is most interested in hearing and to write these three titles on a sheet of scratch paper. The title with the most votes is the one you will read aloud today. Before having the students vote, ask:

- Q How will you decide which three books to choose? What will you think about?
- Q Why is it important to make your choices based on what you are really interested in hearing rather than on what other people are choosing?

Distribute a sheet of scratch paper to each student. Have the students write their three book choices, and collect the votes. Have the students turn to Student Response Book page 86, "Summer Reading List," and add the titles of any of these five books that they might want to read or reread this summer. While they are doing this, tally the votes. After you have tallied the votes, tell the class which book was chosen for today's read-aloud.

3 Review the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" Chart

Direct the students' attention to the "Reading Comprehension Strategies" chart and review that the students learned and practiced each of these strategies this year. Review that the goal of learning comprehension strategies is to help them actively think about what they are reading in order to make sense of it. Ask:

- Q Which strategies do you find yourself using regularly? How do those strategies help you make sense of what you're reading?
- Q When might it make sense to use [making inferences]? How might this strategy help you read?

Technology Tip

Alternatively, you might use a web-based polling system to have the students submit their votes. Search online using the keywords "online polling system" or "online polling tool." For more information, view the "Using Social Media" tutorial (AV46).

Remind the students to think about the comprehension strategies they are using as they listen to today’s read-aloud, and explain that you will ask them to discuss their thinking after the reading.

4 Introduce the Book and Read Aloud

Introduce the book by showing the cover, reading aloud the information on the cover (for example, the title and the names of the author and the illustrator) and providing any necessary background information.

Read the book aloud, showing the illustrations. Stop periodically to have partners discuss what they have heard so far.

5 Discuss the Reading as a Class

Facilitate a discussion of the book using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages to help the students recall what they heard.

- Q What is this [story] about?
- Q What do you want to add to what [Lawrence] said?
- Q Which comprehension strategy or strategies did you use as you listened to this [story]? How did that help you understand the [story]?

6 Reflect on the Reading Community

Remind the students that yesterday they reflected on their reading lives and growth as readers. Explain that the students will now have a chance to think about how they did with creating a safe and caring community this year and how they personally have changed as members of the community.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

- Q What have we done to create a safe and caring community this year? [pause] Turn to your partner.
- Q What have you done to contribute to the reading community this year? [pause] Turn to your partner.
- Q How has it felt to be part of the reading community? How has it helped you? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and invite a few volunteers to share.

Teacher Note

Use “Turn to Your Partner” as appropriate to encourage thinking and participation.

Students might say:

"I think we did a good job creating a caring and safe reading community. Whenever we had problems, we talked about them so we could get along better."

"I agree with [Lily] because the more we got to know each other, the more comfortable we felt talking to each other and sharing our ideas."

"I contributed to the reading community by listening respectfully to my classmates."

"Being a part of the reading community has helped me feel confident about reading."

"I used to be too shy to talk to my partner, but now I can talk to any partner I have."

Encourage the students to become caring members of their classroom reading community next year and to enjoy their summer reading.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Take this opportunity to reflect on your students' growth over the year by asking yourself questions such as:

- Are the students using the comprehension strategies successfully? Which strategies seem to be the most challenging for the students?
- Has the students' enjoyment of reading grown? What evidence do I notice?
- How might I help next year's students grow as readers?
- What was challenging for my students this year in terms of their social development?
- How might I help next year's students grow socially?

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 138 of the Assessment Resource Book.

INDIVIDUALIZED DAILY READING

7 Read Independently and Write in Reading Journals

Distribute self-stick notes to each student. Tell the students to use the self-stick notes to mark places where they notice they are using reading comprehension strategies in their texts. Have the students get their texts and read independently for up to 25 minutes. After they have settled into their reading, confer with individual students.

IDR CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer individually with the students. For each conference, ask the student to tell you about the text he is reading and discuss how his reading habits have changed, how he feels about himself as a reader, and what he is interested in reading.

Document your observations for each student on an “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 139 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Display the “Journal Entry” chart (WA3) and explain that you would like each student to write a journal entry. Also explain your expectations for what the journal entry should include.

Journal Entry

Write a journal entry about a comprehension strategy you used. Please include:

- The title of the text and the author’s name
- What the text is about
- A comprehension strategy you used
- How the strategy helped you understand the text

WA3

Ask the students to think quietly about what they will write about. After a moment, have partners take turns sharing what they plan to write.

Have the students return to their desks and open their Student Response Books to the Reading Journal section. Give the students a few minutes to write in their journals. If time permits, have a few volunteers share their journal entries with the class.

EXTENSIONS

Review the Summer Reading Lists

Have the students review the books on their summer reading lists. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What kinds of books did you choose for summer reading? Does that surprise you? Why or why not?

Teacher Note

As you confer, you might compare the student’s responses to the questions on the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) from Unit 2 with his responses to the questions on the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) from this unit. You might share with the student some changes you noticed and ask him what led to those changes.

Vocabulary Note

Next week you will teach the Week 30 vocabulary lessons. In Week 30, the students review words they have learned this year.

Teacher Note

For information on wrapping up this unit, see “End-of-unit Considerations” on the next page.

You might ask the students to put stars next to the books they want to read first. Encourage them to read as many of the books on their lists as they can this summer. Also encourage them to talk with family members and friends about the books they are reading and to add books that seem interesting to their reading lists.

Host an End-of-year Summer Reading Fair

Have the students invite other classes to a “Summer Reading Fair.” Have the students read aloud their book recommendations and passages from their books to small groups of students. The invited students will have an opportunity to hear book recommendations, preview the books, and get a glimpse into the reading lives of the students. Students might also make posters to advertise their favorite books. If there is a school library or librarian available, you might want to involve the library or librarian in the activity.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 9 and the Making Meaning program. Send each student home with his or her Student Response Book and a copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to share their reading logs, reading journals, and summer reading lists with their families.

IDR MINI-LESSONS

Mini-lesson 1

Selecting Appropriately Leveled Texts

🕒 DO AHEAD

- ✓ During this lesson, the students will sit in small groups as they browse through book bins and select appropriately leveled texts (see Step 3). Prior to beginning the lesson, decide how you will group the students. We recommend groups of three or four students.
- ✓ Create one book bin with 15–20 books for each group. In every bin, be sure to include fiction and nonfiction books at a variety of levels. Determine where in your classroom you will place each bin (for example, at a table or other location around the room).
- ✓ Select three books to use to model selecting an appropriately leveled text: one book at an appropriate independent reading level, one “too-easy” book, and one “too-difficult” book. Be ready to describe the front and back covers of each book and to explain why each book interests you. Also, be ready to read a few pages of each book aloud and to point out and count any unfamiliar words in a passage. Place the books in one of the book bins you have prepared. See Step 2.
- ✓ Prepare a sheet of chart paper titled “Choosing a Book at the Right Level.” See Step 2.

Materials

- Three books for modeling, prepared ahead
- “Choosing a Book at the Right Level” chart, prepared ahead, and a marker
- Collection of fiction and nonfiction books in book bins, prepared ahead

In this lesson, the students:

- Review what they know about selecting appropriately leveled texts
- Discuss the importance of selecting appropriately leveled texts for IDR
- Review a procedure for selecting books at their independent reading levels
- Practice choosing books at their independent reading levels
- Share their book choices and reflect

ABOUT SELECTING APPROPRIATELY LEVELED TEXTS

In order for the students to grow as readers, they need to spend time reading texts they can comprehend and read fluently with few miscues (accuracy errors). For that reason, during IDR they read books at their independent reading levels. This lesson supplements the instruction in IDR by giving the students guidance in identifying and selecting books that are at their independent reading levels. For more information, see “Reading Appropriately Leveled Texts” in the Introduction.

1 Review and Discuss Selecting Appropriately Leveled Texts

Have the class gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that during IDR it is very important that they read books at the right levels. Review that a book that is at the right level is not too difficult and not too easy; it has words the students can read and understand and a story or topic that is interesting to them. Remind the students that reading books at the right levels will help them to become stronger readers.

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you think about when you are choosing a book at the right level for you?

Students might say:

“First I look for a book that’s interesting to me.”

“When I find a book that looks interesting, I open it to any page and read a little bit.”

“As I read, I keep track of how many words I don’t know on the page.”

“If the book seems too easy or too hard to read on my own, I put it back in the library.”

Review that a book is at the right level for a student to read during IDR if the student likes it, is interested in it, and can read and understand most of the words. Explain that today the students will talk about why it is important to read books at the right levels during IDR.

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How do you know if a book is too easy? Turn to your partner.

Q How do you know if a book is too difficult? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Teacher Note

At other times during the day, you might provide the students with opportunities to read books that are above or below their independent reading levels.

Students might say:

"A book that's too easy might have only a few words on each page."

"If a book is too easy, it could mean that I know every single word and can read the book really fast."

"A book might be too difficult if it has a lot of words I don't know."

"If a book is too difficult, it could mean that I can't understand what it's about."

If necessary, explain that reading books that are too easy will not help the students become stronger readers since they might not have the opportunity to practice reading new words or to think about new ideas. If they read books that are too difficult, they might skip important parts of the book and they might not understand what they read. Then ask:

Q Why is it important to read books that are at the right level for you during IDR?

Students might say:

"When you read a book that's at the right level for you, it's more fun to read."

"It's important because if a book is at the right level, you'll understand it better."

"When you read a book at the right level, you learn more."

"It's important because reading books at the right level helps us get better at reading."

Tell the students that today you will model choosing a book at the right level for IDR by checking to see if you know most of the words in the book. Explain that later in the lesson each student will have a chance to practice choosing his own books at the right level.

2 Model and Introduce the "Choosing a Book at the Right Level" Chart

Ask the students to watch and listen as you model choosing a book at the right level. Ask the students to notice what you do and think about when you select the book.

Take the "too-easy" book you selected (see "Do Ahead") out of the book bin. Briefly model looking through the book, reading a few pages aloud, and thinking aloud about whether the book interests you and whether it is at the right level for you. Explain that normally we read silently when we read independently, but that you will read aloud so that the students can hear what is happening in the book.

You might say:

"First, I'll look at the front and back covers of the book. The title is The Barn Owls, and the author's name is Tony Johnston. This book looks interesting to me. I like the topic, barn owls, and the illustration on the front cover caught my attention. Next, I'll read a few pages to see if this book is at the right level for me. As I read, I'll count any words I don't know, using my fingers. [Read a few pages aloud.] I know all of the words on these pages, and they're easy words. Also, I notice that there are only a few words on each page. This book seems too easy for me, so I'll put it back in the bin and pick another book."

Put back the first book and take the "too-difficult" book you selected earlier out of the bin. Again, briefly model looking through this book, reading a few pages aloud, and thinking aloud about whether the book interests you and whether it is at the right level for you.

You might say:

"The title of this book is The Birthday Swap, and the author's name is Loretta Lopez. The title makes me curious to find out what a 'birthday swap' is, and I like the colorful cover. Now I'll read a few pages to see if I can understand this book. Just like I did with the first book, I'll pay attention to how many words I don't know, and I'll count those words using my fingers. [Read a few pages aloud.] I counted five words on this page that I don't know: curio, trinkets, ceramic, marionettes, and sequins. If I skip them, I don't really understand what is happening in the story. I might put this book back for now and try reading it again some other time, or maybe I'll ask someone to read it with me."

Put back the "too-difficult" book and take the appropriately leveled book you selected earlier out of the book bin. Model looking through this book, reading a few pages aloud, and thinking aloud about whether the book interests you and whether it is at the right level for you.

You might say:

"This book is Those Shoes by Maribeth Boelts. Looking at the cover, I think it's about a boy who really wants a special pair of shoes. I think I'd enjoy this story. I'll read a few pages, and as I read, I'll count any words that I don't know. [Read a few pages aloud.] I see some long words in the second sentence: guidance counselor. But I know what that means—a guidance counselor is a teacher at school who helps kids and gives them advice. Here's an unfamiliar word farther down the page: thrift. I don't know what that means, so I'll count that as one word I don't know. Here's a second word I don't know: limp. I'll count that, too. I've reached the end of the page, and there are only two words I don't know. Now I'll ask myself if I understood most of what I read. Yes, I did. That means this is probably a book at the right level for me."

Ask:

Q What did you see me do when I was choosing a book at the right level for me? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"I saw you read the title and look at the front and back covers. You thought about whether the book looked interesting."

"Also, you opened the book and read some pages."

"You read a page and counted all the words you didn't know."

"You thought about what you read and asked yourself if you understood it."

Direct the students' attention to the "Choosing a Book at the Right Level" chart and read the title aloud. As volunteers share, record their responses on the chart. Be ready to paraphrase them so that your chart is similar to the example in the diagram below.

Choosing a Book at the Right Level

1. Look at and read the front and back covers.
2. Read a few pages.
3. Count words you do not know.
4. Check to see if you understand what you read.

Teacher Note

You might post the "Choosing a Book at the Right Level" chart in your classroom library for the students to refer to when choosing books during IDR.

Tell the students that you will post the "Choosing a Book at the Right Level" chart where everyone can see it. Explain that the students can refer to it any time they need help choosing a book at the right level to read during IDR.

3 Practice Selecting Appropriately Leveled Texts

Organize the students into small groups. Have them bring their current IDR books and sit with their groups. Tell the students that they will now have a few minutes to look through the books they chose earlier and to think about whether these books are at the right levels for them to read independently. Explain that if they decide any books are not right for them, they should put them to the side. In a few minutes, they will have a chance to return these books and choose new books at the right levels.

Give the students a few minutes to look through their books and decide if they are at the right levels. Circulate and provide assistance as needed.

When the students have finished looking through their books, signal for their attention. Distribute one book bin to each group. Have the students return any books they set aside to the bins. Explain that now they will browse quietly through the bins to choose two or three new books at the right levels for them. Remind the students to handle and share the books in a responsible way.

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What can you do to give each person in your group a chance to choose books from the bin?

Students might say:

"I can take just one book at a time to look at."

"After I take a book, I'll move so that someone else can browse."

"I can put any book that I'm not interested in reading back where I found it."

Q What will you do if someone else is looking at a book that you want to look at?

Students might say:

"I can wait a moment to see if the person puts the book down. Then I can look at it."

"I can look at a different book."

"I can say, 'It's okay. I'll look at that book another time.'"

Have the students browse through the bins and choose two or three books at the right levels for reading independently.

Tell the students that once they have chosen their books, they should begin reading one of them independently. Circulate and observe, helping students as needed.

4 Share Books and Reflect

Signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading. Describe some responsible behaviors you noticed as the students were selecting and reading their books. Tell the students that they will have many opportunities to practice selecting and reading books that are at the right levels for them to read during IDR.

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What book did you choose? Why is it at the right level for you?

Invite several volunteers to share their books with the class. Encourage them to say more about how they decided that their books were at the right levels for them.

ELL Note

You might provide the prompt "I chose this book because . . ." to your English Language Learners to help them verbalize their answers to this question.

Mini-lesson 2

Self-monitoring and Using “Fix-up” Strategies

ELPS 4.F.i
ELPS 4.F.ii
IDR Mini-lesson 2
Steps 1–7 (all instruction including Teachers Notes, beginning on page 528 and continuing on to page 587)

Materials

- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- One book for modeling, prepared ahead
- “Fix-up’ Strategies” chart, prepared ahead, and a marker

Teacher Note

You might teach this lesson in multiple sessions, modeling one “fix-up” strategy and then allowing the students to practice it during the first session. Repeat the procedure to teach additional “fix-up” strategies at other times.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Select an appropriately leveled book to use for modeling “fix-up” strategies (see Step 2 and Step 4). Identify in advance passages that you can use to model the strategies, and think about what you will say. For more information, see “About Self-monitoring and Using ‘Fix-up’ Strategies” below.
- ✓ Prepare a sheet of chart paper titled “‘Fix-up’ Strategies” (see Step 3).
- ✓ Be ready to review the “Thinking About My Reading” chart from Unit 1.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review self-monitoring during IDR
- Learn “fix-up” strategies to help them understand what they read
- Practice using “fix-up” strategies with IDR books
- Reflect on using “fix-up” strategies

ABOUT SELF-MONITORING AND USING “FIX-UP” STRATEGIES

Self-monitoring is an important metacognitive strategy that enables readers to recognize when they are reading the words of a text but are not thinking about and comprehending it. In Unit 1, the students learn questions they can ask themselves to monitor their comprehension as they read. In this mini-lesson, the students review self-monitoring and learn strategies they can use to repair, or “fix,” their comprehension when they do not understand what they have read. These “fix-up” strategies include going back and rereading the text slowly and carefully, reading on to see if there is information that helps them better understand the text, using context clues to figure out the meaning of unfamiliar words or phrases, employing a comprehension strategy such as visualizing or looking at text features, and asking for help.

1 Review Self-monitoring and Introduce “Fix-up” Strategies

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that reading books at the right levels helps them become stronger readers. Direct the students’ attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart. Review that one way strong readers know if they are reading books that are right for them is by pausing while they read to ask themselves questions about what they have read and how well they understand it.

Thinking About My Reading

What is happening in my book?

Do I understand what I am reading?

Do I know what most of the words mean?

Is this book interesting and fun to read?

Tell the students that there might be times when they ask themselves these questions and realize that they do not understand what they have read. Tell the students that today they will learn some “fix-up” strategies—tools that they can use to “fix” their understanding when they realize they do not understand what they have read.

2 Model Rereading and Reading Ahead

Explain that one strategy the students can use when they realize they do not understand what they read is to reread and read ahead. Show the front and back covers of the book you have chosen. Read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Ask the students to watch and listen as you model reading, pausing to check your understanding, and then rereading and reading ahead to help you understand what you read. Explain that normally we read silently when we read independently, but that you will read this book aloud so that the students can hear what is happening in the book.

You might say:

“My book is Sunken Treasure by Gail Gibbons. [Read a passage aloud and then pause.] I’ll ask myself: Do I understand what I’ve read so far? Do I know what most of the words mean? Although I understand most of what I read, I’m not sure what the word wreck means. I’ll go back and reread the passage slowly and carefully. As I reread, I’ll look for clues to help me figure out the meaning of this word. [Reread the passage aloud, slowly and carefully.] After reading the passage again, I notice that the second sentence describes the ‘rotting hull of a ship’ on the ocean floor. I think that’s a clue. The word wreck might be another way of talking about a sunken ship. I think that makes sense, but to be sure, I’ll read ahead to look for more clues that might help me. [Read a few sentences ahead.] Yes, the next sentence talks about ‘the sinking of a ship.’ Now I feel sure that a wreck is a sunken ship. I understand what I’ve read, so I’ll continue reading.”

3 Discuss What the Students Noticed and Introduce the “‘Fix-up’ Strategies” Chart

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What did I do when I reread the passage?
- Q What did I do when I read ahead?

Students might say:

“When you realized that you didn’t understand something, you went back and reread the passage.”

“You reread the passage really slowly and carefully.”

“You looked for clues in the story to help you understand a word you didn’t know.”

“When you read ahead in the book, you looked to see if there were more clues that might help you.”

As the students share, record their responses on the “‘Fix-up’ Strategies” chart. Be ready to rephrase their responses so that your chart is similar to the example in the diagram below.

“Fix-up” Strategies

When you don’t understand what you are reading:

- Go back and reread slowly and carefully.
- Look for clues in the text.
- Read ahead to look for more clues or information.

Direct the students’ attention to the “‘Fix-up’ Strategies” chart and briefly review the strategies. Remind the students that these are some strategies they can use when they realize that they do not understand what they have read.

4 Model Using a Reading Comprehension Strategy and Add to the Chart

Tell the students that another “fix-up” strategy they can use when they do not understand what they read is to use one of the comprehension strategies they have learned.

Teacher Note

If you are teaching this mini-lesson during Unit 1, prior to the introduction of the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart, you might skip Step 4 and wait until a later unit to teach this strategy.

Ask the students to watch and listen as you continue reading from your book and model using a comprehension strategy to help you understand what you read.

You might say:

"I'll continue reading my book. [Read a passage aloud and then pause.] I'll ask myself: Do I understand what I've read? Do I know what most of the words mean? I understand most of what I read, but I'm confused about how the Spanish galleon the Atocha sank. I know it sank during a bad storm, but I don't understand exactly how it happened. How can I help myself understand what I read? I'll try visualizing as I reread the passage. [Reread the passage aloud.] When I reread the passage, I pictured what was happening in my mind. I imagined an ocean storm with strong winds and big waves. I pictured a huge wave lifting the Atocha and bashing it against a rocky reef. Then I pictured the wooden part of the ship breaking, with pieces of wood floating in the water. Finally, I imagined the ship sinking underwater. By visualizing this passage, I understand better how the Atocha sank. Now I understand what I've read, so I'll keep reading."

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did I do when I didn't understand what I read?

Students might say:

"You [pictured what was happening in the story] to help you understand what you read."

"You [visualized to help you understand exactly how the ship sank]."

"You [reread the passage and tried to picture what was happening in your mind]."

As the students share, record their responses on the "Fix-up" Strategies chart. Be ready to rephrase their responses so that your chart is similar to the example in the diagram below.

"Fix-up" Strategies

When you don't understand what you are reading:

- Go back and reread slowly and carefully.
Look for clues in the text.
- Read ahead to look for more clues or information.
- Use a reading comprehension strategy.

Teacher Note

Model using a comprehension strategy that the students have learned and that is appropriate for the book you have chosen.

5 Add “Ask for Help” to the Chart and Prepare to Read Independently

Briefly review the “Fix-up’ Strategies” chart. Tell the students that if they try using these “fix-up” strategies but are still confused about what they are reading, they can ask for help. Add Ask for help to the chart.

Explain that if none of these strategies work, the students should consider selecting a different book.

“Fix-up” Strategies

When you don’t understand what you are reading:

- Go back and reread slowly and carefully. Look for clues in the text.
- Read ahead to look for more clues or information.
- Use a reading comprehension strategy.
- Ask for help.

Ask the students to get their IDR books and find places to sit. Explain to the students that they will read their books silently, pausing to ask themselves the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart. If they realize that they do not understand what they are reading, they will practice using the “fix-up” strategies. Tell them that later they will share their experiences with the class.

6 Read Independently and Practice Using “Fix-up” Strategies

Have the students read silently for a few minutes. Remind them to ask themselves the questions on the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and to use “fix-up” strategies as needed. Circulate and observe, assisting students as needed. After a few minutes, signal to let the students know when it is time to stop reading.

7 Reflect on Self-monitoring and Using “Fix-up” Strategies

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What did you notice as you checked your understanding while reading? What questions did you ask yourself?
- Q What did you do when you realized that you didn’t understand what you read?

Review that strong readers pause while reading to check their understanding and use “fix-up” strategies when they realize that they do not understand something they have read. Tell the students that they can refer to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and the “Fix-up Strategies” chart during IDR or any time they are reading.

Introducing IDR Conferences

Mini-lesson 3

DO AHEAD

- ✓ During this lesson, you will model conferring with a student about a book he is reading independently as the rest of the class observes (see Step 4). Think in advance about the questions you will ask.
- ✓ Make two copies of the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet for the unit you are currently teaching.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review procedures and expectations for IDR
- Discuss the importance of IDR conferences
- Learn what happens during an IDR conference
- Practice reading independently
- Reflect on acting responsibly during IDR

ABOUT IDR CONFERENCES

IDR conferences provide you with opportunities to get to know each student as a reader, talk with individual students about their reading, identify areas of strength, and note areas in which a student needs support. To learn more, see “IDR Conferences” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book or view “Setting Up IDR Conferences” (AV29).

Materials

- Two copies of the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet for your unit
- “Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences” for your unit, Assessment Resource Book

1 Gather and Review the Purpose of IDR

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that IDR is a time when each of them reads independently in a book she enjoys. Review that during IDR, the students read books at their own reading levels and practice the reading comprehension strategies they are learning in the Making Meaning program. Remind them that the more reading practice they do in books at their independent levels, the stronger they will become as readers.

Tell the students that while they are reading independently, you will meet with one student at a time to talk about the book that he is reading. Explain that these one-on-one meetings are called conferences and that today the students will learn more about what happens during a conference.

2 Discuss the Importance of IDR Conferences

Explain that during an IDR conference, the students will talk about their books and share whatever thoughts or feelings they have about them. Point out that an IDR conference is also a time when they can share how they feel about themselves as readers. Explain that by conferring with the students about their reading, you can learn about their strengths as readers and talk with them about how they can become even stronger readers.

3 Describe an IDR Conference

Tell the students that you will explain what happens during most IDR conferences; afterward, you will model conferring with a student volunteer. Briefly explain what happens during an IDR conference.

You might say:

"After all of you have chosen books and have begun reading silently, I will ask one student to bring his or her IDR book and confer with me. Let's say that I ask [Mei] to confer with me. She and I will go to a quiet table where we can talk by ourselves. I'll start the conference by asking her to tell me about her book so far. I might also ask why she chose the book and whether or not she likes it. Then I might ask her to read a passage from the book aloud, I might read a passage aloud as she listens, or she and I might take turns reading aloud from her book. Finally, [Mei] and I will talk about the passage and anything else she would like to share about her book."

Tell the students that during an IDR conference, you will write notes to help you remember what book the student is reading and what your discussion is about.

4 Model an IDR Conference and Discuss

Tell the students that now you will model an IDR conference. Choose a volunteer and ask her to get her IDR book and sit next to you. Ask the rest of the class to listen respectfully and notice what happens during the conference.

Confer with the student volunteer. As you confer, take notes using an “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet from the unit you are currently teaching (see “Do Ahead”) and refer to the “Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences” as necessary.

After the conference, thank the student volunteer. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What did you notice when [Mei] and I were conferring about this book?
- Q What questions do you have about IDR conferences?

5 Discuss Expectations During IDR Conferences

Remind the students that while you are conferring with individual students, the rest of the class will be reading their books independently. Briefly review your expectations for the students during this time.

You might say:

“While I am conferring with a student, I expect you to read silently to yourself until I signal for you to stop reading. I also expect you to stay seated and to not walk around the classroom. Finally, please try not to interrupt me as I’m conferring with another student.”

Ask:

- Q What might you do if you have a question while I am conferring with another student?

Students might say:

“If I have a question, I can quietly ask my partner.”
“I can write down my question so that I remember it for later.”
“I can ask you my question later.”

- Q What might you do if you are having problems with the book you’re reading or if you need a new book?

Students might say:

“If I’m having problems with my book, I can quietly ask my partner.”
“I can reread the part of the book that is giving me problems.”
“I can choose another book at my reading level to read.”

Tell the students that they will practice reading independently while you confer with another student. Ask them to keep these expectations in mind as they read.

Teacher Note

Record your observations on an “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet and refer to the “Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences” as necessary.

6 Practice Reading Independently and Reflect

Have the students get their IDR books and begin reading independently. After the students have settled into their reading, select a student to confer with.

After you have completed the conference, signal for the students’ attention. Facilitate a brief discussion about how the students acted responsibly while you were conferring. Ask questions such as:

- Q What did we do well when we read independently?
- Q What can we do to make sure independent reading and IDR conferences go smoothly?

Mini-lesson 4

Reading with Expression

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider pairing your English Language Learners with native English speakers during this lesson, and think in advance about which students to pair.
- ✓ During this lesson, you will model reading aloud the “Excerpt from Miss Nelson Is Missing!” chart (WA1). Practice reading the excerpt both with and without expression and attention to the characters’ emotions (see Step 3).
- ✓ Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print a class set of “Excerpt from Miss Nelson Is Missing!” (BLM1).
- ✓ Collect a variety of fiction books at various levels that the students can use to practice reading with expression (see Step 6).

Materials

- Miss Nelson Is Missing! from Unit 1
- “Excerpt from Miss Nelson Is Missing!” chart (WA1)
- Class set of “Excerpt from Miss Nelson Is Missing!” (BLM1)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear part of a familiar book read aloud fluently
- Discuss how paying attention to characters’ personalities and emotions helps them read fluently
- Practice reading aloud with expression and attention to characters’ personalities and emotions
- Work responsibly in pairs
- Reflect on the importance of reading fluently

ABOUT READING FLUENCY

Fluency is the ability to read text accurately, automatically, and with expression. Students who read fluently have made the leap from word-by-word processing of text to smoother, more natural-sounding reading (when reading aloud and when reading silently to themselves). When students read fluently, they are able to focus on the meaning of what they are reading rather than on reading individual words.

Instruction in strategies for building fluency such as automatic word recognition, meaningful phrasing, pausing for punctuation, and reading with expression can support comprehension and boost students' motivation to read. Fluency instruction is most effective when students are given many opportunities to read and reread texts at an appropriate reading level. Echo and choral reading, partner reading, and presentation/performance experiences (such as Readers' Theater and dramatic reading) offer meaningful ways for the students to interact with texts and develop fluency.

1 Review Miss Nelson Is Missing!

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Miss Nelson Is Missing! and read the title and the names of the author and the illustrator aloud. Remind the students that they heard this book earlier. Page through the book, showing the illustrations to help the students recall the story. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you remember about this book?

Students might say:

"It's about a class of students who act rude and silly. They don't listen to their teacher, Miss Nelson, who is very nice."

"One day Miss Nelson doesn't come to school. Another teacher named Miss Viola Swamp comes instead. Miss Swamp is very strict and mean."

"The kids are scared of Miss Swamp. They want Miss Nelson to come back."

"When Miss Nelson comes back, the kids are so happy to see her that they behave much better. I think Miss Swamp was actually Miss Nelson in disguise."

If necessary, briefly review the story. Tell the students that today you will read part of Miss Nelson Is Missing! aloud and that you would like them to listen carefully to how you read the words of the story.

2 Introduce the Excerpt

Show pages 8–10 of the book and explain that this is the part of the story in which Miss Nelson does not come to school and Miss Viola Swamp appears. Display the "Excerpt from Miss Nelson Is Missing!" chart (WA1), and tell the students that this is an excerpt from the pages of the story you just showed them.

Teacher Note

You might teach this lesson in multiple sessions, teaching Steps 1–4 during the first session and Steps 5–6 at another time.

Explain that you will read the excerpt aloud in two different ways. Ask the students to listen carefully as you read and to think about what they notice during your first reading and what they notice during your second reading.

3 Read the Excerpt With and Without Expression and Discuss

Read the excerpt aloud twice. The first time you read, read expressively and let your voice reflect the characters' personalities and emotions. The second time you read, do not read expressively.

After you have read the excerpt aloud twice, ask:

Q What did you notice about the two ways I read the excerpt?

Students might say:

"The first time you read it, it was more exciting."

"The first time, you made your voice sound mean when Miss Swamp was talking."

"I noticed that you made Miss Swamp sound different from the kids the first time you read."

"The second time, I noticed that you read all the words the same way. It wasn't as interesting. It also wasn't as easy to understand what was happening."

Tell the students that the first time you read, you paid attention to the characters' personalities (what they are like as people) and their emotions (feelings).

Direct the students' attention to the "Excerpt from Miss Nelson Is Missing!" chart. Point to the sentences "'Wow!' yelled the kids. 'Now we can really act up!'" and "'Today let's be just terrible!' they said.'" Explain that in the beginning of the excerpt, the students feel excited and are planning to misbehave, so you read that part in an excited voice.

Point to the sentence "'Where is Miss Nelson?' asked the kids." Explain that after Miss Swamp appears, the students become scared and confused, so you changed your voice to express their fear and confusion. Tell the students that when you pay attention to the characters' personalities and emotions and express them in your reading, we say you are reading with expression, or feeling.

Explain that reading with expression helps you read fluently. When you read fluently, you read in a way that makes a story interesting and easy for listeners to understand. Tell the students that fluent readers use their voices to show the personality of a character, or what the character is like, and how he or she is feeling.

Point out that during your second reading of the excerpt, you did not read with expression, which made the excerpt less interesting and more difficult for listeners to understand.

4 Reread the Excerpt and Discuss

Direct the students' attention back to the "Excerpt from Miss Nelson Is Missing!" chart. Tell the students that you will reread the excerpt. Ask them to follow along as they listen and to think about Miss Swamp's personality, or what she is like as a person. Read aloud expressively, letting your voice reflect Miss Swamp's personality as you read.

After you have read the excerpt, ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you think Miss Swamp's personality is? How did the way I read the words help you know that?

Students might say:

"I think Miss Swamp is mean. I noticed that Miss Swamp 'hissed' when she talked. You made your voice sound mean when you read her words."

"In addition to what [Michelle] said, you used a mean voice when Miss Swamp told the students to get out their arithmetic books."

Review that you read the excerpt with expression—using your voice to express the characters' personalities and how they are feeling. Point out that you paid attention to the words in the excerpt that describe how the characters speak, such as yelled, hissed, and snapped, and that you used those words to make your reading expressive. Underline yelled, hissed, and snapped on the chart.

Review that when fluent readers read aloud to others or to themselves, they use their voices to express the characters' personalities and how they are feeling. Tell the students that reading fluently is important because it helps readers better understand and enjoy books.

5 Model Partner Reading and Have the Students Practice Reading with Expression

Distribute a copy of "Excerpt from Miss Nelson Is Missing!" (BLM1) to each student. Explain that the students will take turns reading the excerpt aloud to each other in pairs.

Ask the students to watch and listen as you model reading with a partner. Choose a volunteer to be your partner and ask him to sit next to you. Tell the students that you will read the first four lines of the excerpt aloud with expression and that your partner will follow along on his copy of the excerpt and listen carefully. Then have your partner read the same part of the excerpt aloud as you follow along and listen carefully.

Point out that you and your partner read aloud slowly and clearly, followed along with the words in the excerpt, and listened carefully. Remind the students to pay attention to what the characters are like and how they are feeling to help them read expressively.

Teacher Note

You might explain that fluent readers also use punctuation marks to help them read expressively. Point out the sentences "Now we can really act up!" "Today let's be just terrible!" and "Not so fast!" in the excerpt. Explain that readers put emotion, such as excitement, anger, or fear, into their voices when they read a sentence that ends with an exclamation point. Point to the question mark in the sentence "Where is Miss Nelson?" in the excerpt, and explain that readers should also read a sentence that ends with a question mark as though they are actually asking a question.

Teacher Note

If your students have experience with partner reading, you might consider skipping the modeling in this step.

Have partners take turns reading the entire excerpt aloud to each other. Circulate and assist students as needed. After partners have taken turns reading the excerpt, ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you notice about your reading when you read the excerpt with expression?

Students might say:

"I slowed down because I was paying more attention to the characters' feelings and thinking about how to express them in my reading."

"As I read, I changed my voice so that what Miss Swamp says sounded different from what the kids say."

Q What did you notice about how your partner read?

Students might say:

"When my partner was reading, I could really tell the difference between the characters."

"I noticed that her reading was fun to listen to. I liked it."

If time permits, you might invite a few volunteers to read the excerpt aloud to the class.

Teacher Note

If a student does not have a fiction IDR book, allow her to select one from the fiction books you collected in advance.

6 Read IDR Books with Expression and Discuss

Have the students get their IDR books and sit with their partners. Ask each student to take a few minutes to look through his book and find one or two pages in which a character is feeling happy, sad, angry, curious, confused, or another emotion. Then have the students read their chosen pages silently, paying attention to the characters' feelings and personalities. Circulate and assist students as needed.

After a few minutes, signal for the students' attention. Have partners take turns reading their pages aloud to each other with expression. Ask the students to read in voices that are loud enough for them and their partners to hear, but not so loud that their classmates cannot hear themselves read.

After partners read their pages aloud to each other, ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you like about hearing your partner read his or her book with expression?

Students might say:

"I liked the way my partner changed his voice to make the character sound very happy when he was reading."

"I liked it when my partner used different voices for each character's words."

"I liked it because it made the book sound more interesting. It helped me understand how the character feels."

Remind the students that reading with expression is part of becoming a fluent reader. Review that reading fluently is important because it helps readers better understand and enjoy books.

Encourage the students to practice reading with expression when they read during IDR or any time they are reading.

Reading in Meaningful Phrases

Mini-lesson 5

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider pairing English Language Learners with native English speakers during this lesson, and think in advance about which students to pair.
- ✓ During this lesson, you will use the “Excerpt from Two Bobbies” chart (WA2) to model reading aloud. Practice reading the excerpt aloud both with and without meaningful phrasing and attention to the natural rise and fall of your voice (see Step 3).
- ✓ During this lesson, you will use the “Excerpt from Two Bobbies” chart (WA2) to model chunking, marking it up to indicate how you might read it aloud with meaningful phrasing. Think in advance about how you will mark up the excerpt (see Step 4).
- ✓ Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print a class set of “Excerpt from Two Bobbies” (BLM2).
- ✓ Collect a variety of nonfiction books at various levels that the students can use to practice reading in meaningful phrases (see Step 7).

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear part of a familiar nonfiction book read aloud fluently
- Discuss how grouping words into meaningful phrases helps them read fluently
- Practice reading aloud in meaningful phrases
- Work responsibly in pairs
- Reflect on the importance of reading fluently

Materials

ABOUT READING FLUENCY

Fluency is the ability to read text accurately, automatically, and with expression. Students who read fluently have made the leap from word-by-word processing of text to smoother, more natural-sounding reading (when reading aloud and when reading silently to themselves). When students read fluently, they are able to focus on the meaning of what they are reading rather than on reading individual words.

Instruction in strategies for building fluency, such as automatic word recognition, meaningful phrasing, pausing for punctuation, and reading with expression, can support comprehension and boost students' motivation to read. Fluency instruction is most effective when students are given many opportunities to read and reread texts at an appropriate reading level. Echo and choral reading, partner reading, and presentation/performance experiences (such as Readers' Theater and dramatic reading) offer meaningful ways for the students to interact with texts and develop fluency.

Teacher Note

You might teach this lesson in multiple sessions, teaching Steps 1-5 during the first session and Steps 6-7 at another time.

1 Review Two Bobbies

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Two Bobbies and read the title and the names of the authors and the illustrator aloud. Remind the students that they heard this nonfiction book earlier. Page through the book, and show the illustrations to help the students recall the story. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you remember about this book?

Students might say:

"It's a true story about a dog named Bobbi and a cat named Bob Cat. The book is about what happened to them after Hurricane Katrina."

"Bobbi and Bob Cat were left on their own after the hurricane. They roamed around looking for food, but they always stayed together."

"They were rescued and taken to an animal shelter. Then people realized that Bob Cat was blind and that Bobbi was taking care of him. But no one could find their owners."

"After a TV show told Bobbi and Bob Cat's story, many people wanted to give them a new home. Now Bobbi and Bob Cat have a new home together."

If necessary, briefly review the story. Tell the students that today you will read part of Two Bobbies aloud and that you would like them to listen carefully to how you read the words of the story.

2 Introduce the Excerpt

Show pages 6–9 of the book and explain that this is the part of the story right after the hurricane in which Bobbi and Bob Cat are alone at their house, waiting for help. Display the "Excerpt from Two Bobbies" chart (WA2), and tell the students that this is an excerpt from the pages of the story you just showed them.

Explain that you will read the excerpt aloud in two different ways. Ask the students to listen carefully as you read and to think about what they notice during your first reading and what they notice during your second reading.

3 Read the Excerpt With and Without Attention to Phrasing and Discuss

Read the excerpt aloud twice. The first time you read, read smoothly, grouping words into logical, meaningful phrases and allowing the natural rise and fall of your voice to reflect the phrasing.

The second time you read, group words and phrases in ways that are illogical and unnatural, and read in a choppy manner, rushing some words and phrases while reading others in a halting, word-by-word fashion. Keep the pitch of your voice relatively flat.

After you have read the excerpt aloud twice, ask:

Q What did you notice about the two ways I read the excerpt?

Students might say:

"The first time, your reading sounded smooth. It was easy to understand, like you were talking to us."

"The second time, you kept stopping in places that sounded strange. Sometimes you read the words too fast."

"I agree with [Eli]. The second time, you kept starting and stopping in weird places."

"The second time, I couldn't understand what you were reading. It was hard to tell what was happening in the story."

Tell the students that the first time you read the excerpt, you grouped words together into phrases that made sense in the story and that sounded natural, as if you were talking. Explain that grouping words together into meaningful phrases when you read is called chunking and that this is something fluent readers do. Tell the students that chunking can make their reading smoother, more natural sounding (like speech), and easier for readers to understand.

Point out that during your second reading, you did not think about chunking, or grouping, words into meaningful phrases; instead, you focused on just one word at a time and did not think about its meaning in the excerpt as you read. Explain that this made your reading less fluent—or slow and choppy in some parts of the excerpt and rushed in other parts. It also made your reading more difficult for listeners to understand.

4 Model Chunking the Excerpt

Direct the students' attention back to the "Excerpt from Two Bobbies" chart. Tell them that you will think aloud and model chunking the Students who do not read fluently may use rushed or halted phrasing. Having the students hear and discuss examples of proper and improper phrasing helps build their awareness of what fluent reading sounds like.

(all, beginning on page 597 and continuing on to page 599)

Teacher Note

We suggest using single slash marks to indicate shorter pauses that occur mid-sentence and double slash marks to indicate longer pauses at the end of sentences.

Teacher Note

To ensure that your reading sounds natural and fluent, we suggest that you do not over-emphasize the brief (single-slash) pauses that occur mid-sentence and do not coincide with commas. Instead, use the natural rise and fall of your voice to subtly indicate these very short pauses.

excerpt so that it makes sense and sounds natural when you read it aloud. Explain that as you read, you will insert slashes to show which groups of words you might chunk into meaningful phrases.

You might say:

"I will read the first sentence aloud and think about how to chunk it in a way that makes sense and sounds natural, as if I were talking. I'll try putting a single slash after the word Cat because I think I might pause there in the sentence. Since this pause is very short, I used just one slash. I'll put double slash marks at the end of the sentence after the period because that's where I pause long enough to let listeners know that the sentence has ended. Now I'll read the sentence aloud: 'Bobbi and Bob Cat/ were left behind.//' Listening to myself read aloud, I think it sounds choppy. I don't naturally pause after the words Bob Cat. Maybe the sentence would sound better if I read it as one chunk. I'll try that instead: 'Bobbi and Bob Cat were left behind.//' Yes, that sounds more natural to me.

Now I'll read the next two sentences aloud and think about chunking them in ways that make sense. I'll try this: 'Bobbi had been tethered/ with a length of chain.// Bob Cat stayed by her side.//' Yes, that sounds good to me. I pause very briefly after the word tethered, so I'll keep that single slash there, and I put double slash marks after each period. I think the sentence 'Bob Cat stayed by her side' is so short that it should be all one chunk. It might sound strange and choppy if I read it another way, for example: 'Bob Cat/ stayed/ by her side.//'

Now I'll chunk the last sentence in the paragraph. I'll try this: 'Together, in the silent heat,/ they waited for/ help/ to come.//' I don't think that sounds natural. The first half of the sentence sounds rushed, and the second half sounds choppy. Also, I didn't pay attention to the two commas in the sentence. I'll try a different way of chunking, using the commas as clues: 'Together,/ in the silent heat,/ they waited for help to come.//' That sounds better to me. I think reading the sentence like that makes it easier for listeners to understand."

Continue thinking aloud and modeling to the end of the excerpt. As you model, invite volunteers to suggest ways to chunk sentences and discuss their thinking with the class.

5 Reread the Excerpt with Attention to Phrasing and Discuss

Tell the students that you will reread the chunked excerpt fluently. Ask them to follow along as they listen and to think about what they notice about your reading.

Reread the marked-up "Excerpt from Two Bobbies" chart fluently, attending to phrasing and allowing the natural rise and fall of your voice to reflect the phrasing.

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you notice about the chunked words on the chart?

Students might say:

"I noticed that some chunks were short and only had a few words. Other chunks were longer."
"I noticed that whenever there is a comma or a period, there is a slash."

If necessary, point out that some chunks have just a few words while other chunks have more words. Explain that the length of each chunk depends on the meaning of the words, whether the words sound natural when they are chunked together, and the presence of punctuation such as commas and periods. Then ask:

Q What did you notice about my voice as I read?

Students might say:

"Your reading sounded like you were talking."
"I noticed that you paused when you reached a slash. When you reached a double slash mark, you paused longer."
"I noticed that when you got to the end of a chunk, you stopped for a second. Sometimes your voice got lower at the end of a chunk."

Explain that when fluent readers read aloud, they may try chunking a sentence in several different ways and then ask themselves which way makes sense and sounds the most like regular speech.

6 Model Partner Reading and Have the Students Practice Reading with Attention to Phrasing

Distribute a copy of "Excerpt from Two Bobbies" (BLM2) to each student. Tell the students that they will take turns reading the excerpt aloud to each other in pairs.

Ask the students to watch and listen as you model reading with a partner. Choose a volunteer to be your partner and ask her to sit next to you. Tell the students that you will read the first paragraph of the excerpt fluently, grouping the words into meaningful phrases, and that your partner will follow along on her copy of the excerpt and listen carefully. Then have your partner read the first paragraph of the excerpt aloud as you follow along and listen carefully.

Point out that you and your partner read aloud slowly and clearly, followed along with the words in the excerpt, and listened carefully. Remind the students to pay attention to how they and their partners group the words into meaningful phrases or chunks.

Teacher Note

You might point out that you changed your voice, letting it go slightly up or slightly down, as you read the chunked words. Tell the students that this is something fluent readers often do and that it is part of what makes their reading sound natural, like speech. Encourage the students to experiment with changing the pitch of their voices as they read aloud later in the lesson.

Teacher Note

If your students have experience with partner reading, you might consider skipping the modeling in this step.

TEKS 4.A.iii

Student/Teacher Activity Step 6 (all, beginning on page 599 and continuing on to page 600)

Have partners take turns reading the entire excerpt aloud to each other. Circulate and assist students as needed. After partners have taken turns reading the excerpt aloud to each other, ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you notice about your reading when you grouped the words into chunks?

Students might say:

"I noticed that my reading sounded smoother."

"As I read, I tried to think about how to chunk words in ways that made sense and sounded like talking."

"I let my voice go up and down as I read, and it sounded better."

"I noticed that I didn't rush through my reading. I slowed down, and it sounded better."

Q What did you notice about how your partner read?

Students might say:

"When my partner was reading, I could really understand what was happening in the story."

"I noticed that his reading was easy to listen to. I liked it."

If time permits, you might invite a few volunteers to read the excerpt aloud to the class.

Teacher Note

If a student does not have a nonfiction IDR book, allow him to select one from the nonfiction books you collected in advance.

7 Read IDR Books with Attention to Phrasing and Discuss

Have the students get their IDR books and sit with their partners. Ask each student to take a few minutes to look through her book and find a passage she is interested in reading. Then have the students read their chosen passages silently, paying attention to how they might chunk the words into meaningful phrases. Circulate and assist students as needed.

After a few minutes, signal for the students' attention. Have partners take turns reading their pages aloud to each other, chunking the text as they read. Ask the students to read in voices that are loud enough for them and their partners to hear, but not so loud that their classmates cannot hear themselves read. Tell partners to listen carefully to each other because you will ask them to share what they noticed with the class.

After partners read their pages aloud to each other, ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you notice when you were reading and chunking the words into meaningful phrases?

Q What did you notice about how your partner read?

Remind the students that chunking, or grouping words into meaningful phrases when they read, is part of becoming a fluent reader. Review that reading fluently is important because it helps readers better understand and enjoy books.

Encourage the students to practice chunking when they read during IDR or any time they are reading.

Using Word-analysis Strategies

Mini-lesson 6

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print a class set of “A New Robot” (BLM3).
- ✓ Prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title “Word-analysis Strategies.” See Step 3.

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn word-analysis strategies to figure out the meanings of unfamiliar words
- Practice word-analysis strategies during IDR
- Reflect on using word-analysis strategies

ABOUT WORD-ANALYSIS STRATEGIES

During this lesson, the students are introduced to word-analysis strategies they might use to help them determine the meanings of unfamiliar words when reading independently. At grade 3, the lesson focuses on using prefixes, suffixes, and base words; recognizing compound words; and using context clues to verify that a meaning makes sense. If you have introduced your students to word-analysis strategies during small-group reading instruction that are different from those suggested here, you can adapt this lesson to reflect your earlier instruction.

1 Introduce Using Word-analysis Strategies

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they are reading books independently during IDR to help them become stronger readers.

Step 2 (all, beginning on page 602 and continuing on to page 603)

Teacher Note

You might teach this lesson in multiple sessions, teaching Steps 2 and 3 and allowing the students to practice those strategies during the first session, and then teaching the remaining steps of the lesson at another time.

Tell the students that while they are reading independently, they might come across unfamiliar words, or words whose meanings they do not know. Explain that today the students will learn strategies to help them analyze, or carefully study, unfamiliar words to figure out their meanings.

2 Model Identifying Prefixes, Suffixes, and Base Words

Display the “A New Robot” chart (🗺️ WA3), and distribute a copy of “A New Robot” (BLM3) to each student. Read the title aloud and explain that this is a fictional passage about a scientist. Tell the students that you will read the passage aloud. Ask them to follow along as you read and to notice what you do when you come to unfamiliar words.

Read the first paragraph of “A New Robot” aloud slowly and clearly. Pause when you come to the word cleverest and circle it on the chart. Model figuring out its meaning by identifying a known suffix and base word.

You might say:

“Here’s an unfamiliar word. What can I do to figure out what it means? I’ll begin by looking carefully to see if I recognize any parts of the word. Yes, this word has an ending I recognize: -est. This is a suffix, a letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make another word. I know that the suffix -est means ‘most.’ Do I recognize any other parts of the word? Looking again, I see that the remaining part is actually the word clever, which means ‘smart.’ So this unfamiliar word is the word clever combined with the suffix -est, to make the word cleverest, which means “the most clever.” Does that meaning make sense in the passage? I’ll reread to see if it does. Yes, it does make sense because Professor Z is clearly very smart and an excellent scientist.”

Continue reading the first paragraph. Pause when you come to the word inventions and circle it on the chart. Model figuring out its meaning by identifying a base word.

You might say:

“Here’s another unfamiliar word. I’ll look carefully to see if I recognize any parts of the word. I recognize invent. I know invent means ‘to create or make something new.’ I also see what might be a suffix, but I don’t know its meaning. Still, I can use what I know about the word invent to figure out the meaning of inventions. Based on the meaning of invent, I think that inventions are probably new things that Professor Z has created or made. Does that make sense in the sentence? Yes, I think so. If Professor Z has created lots of new things, that would make her famous.”

Read the second and third paragraphs. Pause when you come to the word rebuilds in the third paragraph, and circle it on the chart. Model figuring out its meaning by identifying a known prefix and base word.

You might say:

"Here's another unfamiliar word. I'll look carefully at it to see if I recognize any parts of the word. First, I notice the letters re- at the beginning. These letters form a prefix, a letter or group of letters added to the beginning of a word to make another word. I know the prefix re- can mean 'again.' Do I recognize any other parts of the word? Yes, I recognize builds. The word builds means 'puts something together,' and so I think that rebuilds must mean 'puts something together again.' Does that make sense when I reread the passage? Yes, because Professor Z builds the robot a first time, takes it apart, and then puts it together again in a new and better way."

3 Discuss the Modeling and Introduce the "Word-analysis Strategies" Chart

After you have read the first three paragraphs, ask and discuss:

Q What did I do to analyze the unfamiliar words and figure out their meanings? Turn to your partner.

After partners have discussed the question, direct the students' attention to the "Word-analysis Strategies" chart and read the title aloud. Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"First you looked carefully at each word. You asked yourself if you recognized any parts of the word."

"When you looked at cleverest, the first part you recognized was the suffix -est. When you looked at rebuilds, you recognized the prefix re-."

"When you looked at inventions, you didn't know the suffix, but you did recognize that the other part of the word was invent."

"You used the parts you recognized to figure out the unfamiliar word's meaning. Then you asked yourself if the meaning made sense in the sentence."

As the students share, record their responses on the chart. Be ready to paraphrase them so that your chart is similar to the example in the diagram on the next page. If necessary, review the strategies you used to figure out the meanings of the unfamiliar words.

TEKS 2.A.xiii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3 (all, beginning on page 603 and continuing on to page 604) and Step 5 (all, beginning on page 605 and continuing on to page 606)

Teacher Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, you might remind the students of other prefixes and suffixes they have learned or vocabulary words that contain familiar base words.

Teacher Note

You will add an additional strategy to the chart in Step 4. Leave space in your chart to do this, as shown in the sample diagram.

Word-analysis Strategies

Look carefully at the word. Ask yourself:

- Do I recognize any parts of the word?
- Look for a prefix or suffix you know.
- Look at the part of the word to which the prefix or suffix is added. Ask yourself: Is this part a word I recognize? Do I know its meaning?

- Use what you know about the parts of the word to figure out its meaning.
- After you have figured out the meaning of the word, reread the sentence(s). Ask yourself: Does the meaning make sense?

4 Model Identifying Compound Words and Add to the Chart

Tell the students that you will continue reading the passage. Ask them to continue noticing what you do when you come to unfamiliar words.

Read the fourth paragraph of “A New Robot” aloud. When you reach the word spacecraft, point to it and tell the students that this word is unfamiliar to you. Circle it on the chart, and model figuring out the meaning by identifying it as a compound word.

You might say:

“This word is unfamiliar to me. As I did before, I’ll look to see if I recognize any parts of the word. I recognize two words I know, space and craft. Now I recognize that this is a compound word, a word that’s made up of two smaller words. I can use what I know about the meanings of space and craft to figure out what spacecraft means. Space has several meanings, but here I think the writer is talking about outer space because Professor Z mentions the planet Mars. Craft also has several meanings, but here I think the writer is talking about a ship or something else that people travel in. So I think that a spacecraft is ‘a ship in which astronauts travel when they visit outer space.’ Does that meaning make sense in the sentence? Yes, it does.”

Follow the same procedure to model figuring out the meaning of the word spacesuit. After you have read the fourth paragraph, ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did I do to figure out the meanings of spacecraft and spacesuit?
Turn to your partner.

After partners have discussed the question, direct the students' attention to the "Word-analysis Strategies" chart. Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

"First you looked carefully at the word to see if you recognized any parts of it."

"You noticed that it was a compound word made up of two words you already knew."

"When you thought about the meanings of space and suit, you figured out the meaning of spacesuit."

"After you figured out the meaning, you asked yourself if it made sense in the passage, and it did."

Using the students' responses, add a strategy about recognizing compound words to the chart. Be ready to paraphrase so that your chart is similar to the example in the diagram below.

Word-analysis Strategies

Look carefully at the word. Ask yourself:

- Do I recognize any parts of the word?
- Look for a prefix or suffix you know.
- Look at the part of the word to which the prefix or suffix is added. Ask yourself:
Is this part a word I recognize? Do I know its meaning?
- Ask yourself: Is it a compound word? Look for two or more words you know inside the unfamiliar word.
- Use what you know about the parts of the word to figure out its meaning.
- After you have figured out the meaning of the word, reread the sentence(s). Ask yourself: Does the meaning make sense?

Teacher Note

If you are teaching the vocabulary lessons, you might remind the students of other compound words they have learned.

Teacher Note

If the students do not identify any unfamiliar words, point to and circle the word oddest on the chart. Ask and briefly discuss, “What might you do if you come to this word and you don’t know what it means?” In the same way, you might discuss some of the following words in the final paragraphs: inspiration, reimagined, awestruck, thankful, inspection, reviews, improvement.

Briefly review the chart, pointing to each strategy as you read it. Remind the students that these are things they can do to figure out words they do not know when they are reading independently.

5 Have Partners Practice the Strategies

Tell the students that now partners will read the last four paragraphs of the passage together using their copies of “A New Robot” (BLM3). Remind the students that if they come across an unfamiliar word, they can use the ideas on the “Word-analysis Strategies” chart to figure out its meaning.

Give partners a few minutes to read and discuss the last four paragraphs. Circulate and observe, assisting students as needed.

When most students are finished, signal for their attention. Have one or two volunteers take turns reading the final paragraphs aloud. Then discuss as a class:

- Q Did you and your partner come across an unfamiliar word? If so, what was the word?
- Q What did you do to figure out the meaning of the word?

Students might say:

“We looked carefully at the word to see if we recognized any parts of it.”

“We looked for a prefix or suffix to see if we could find one that we recognized. We noticed the prefix re-.”

“We realized that awestruck is a compound word made up of awe and struck. That helped us figure out the meaning.”

“We recognized the word improve in the word improvement. That helped us figure out what improvement means.”

As volunteers share, point out the strategies they used on the “Word-analysis Strategies” chart.

6 Practice Using Word-analysis Strategies During IDR

Ask the students to get their IDR books and find places to sit. Explain that they will read quietly for a few minutes. Encourage the students to use the strategies on the chart to help them figure out the meanings of unfamiliar words in their books. Explain that later they will have a chance to share any strategies they used with the class.

Have the students read their IDR books quietly for a few minutes. Circulate and assist students as needed.

7 Reflect on Using Word-analysis Strategies

Signal for the students' attention. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q Were there any words in your book that were unfamiliar to you? What did you do to figure out their meanings?

Tell the students that using word-analysis strategies to figure out the meanings of unfamiliar words will help them become stronger readers and better understand and enjoy books.

Tell the students that they can refer to the “Word-analysis Strategies” chart when they read during IDR or any time they are reading.

- ✓ Prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” and the class rules for staying safe online (see Step 4).
- ✓ Find out if your school has an acceptable use policy that the students and their families need to sign before the students can use computers. Be prepared to review the policy with the students in Step 4.
- ✓ (Optional) You might set up a class website and create an online version of the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart and other useful lists or information.

Materials

- “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart, prepared ahead, and a marker
- Copy of the digital citizenship family letter (BLM1) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Work in pairs
- Learn and use the term digital citizen
- Compare staying safe online to staying safe in the real world
- Reflect on class rules for staying safe online

ABOUT DIGITAL CITIZENSHIP LESSONS

In Technology Mini-lessons 1-3, the students think about and discuss how to use the Internet in safe, secure, and respectful ways. The lessons culminate in the students signing “Our Digital Citizenship Contract,” which lists rules and agreements for responsible online behavior at school. After each lesson, the students are encouraged to share what they learned with their families and to create similar rules and agreements for online behavior when not at school. If possible, plan to teach all three digital citizenship lessons in order before the students do projects that involve online work.

1 Gather and Discuss Going Online

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. If possible, have current Making Meaning partners work together. Tell the students that during the school year, they will have opportunities to use the Internet in various ways. Remind them that the Internet is a worldwide network of computers that millions of people use every day to search for information, visit websites, and send e-mail. Using the Internet, or going online, connects the students to the world and allows them to find interesting facts and information. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What kinds of things do you like to do online?

2 Introduce Digital Citizenship

Tell the students that just as they need to be responsible citizens in real life by following rules and treating people well, they also need to be responsible citizens when they are online. When they go online to connect with people or to find information, they are participating in a kind of community. Being responsible and making good choices in this community is known as being a good digital citizen. Tell the students that one way to be a good digital citizen is to follow certain online safety rules.

3 Compare Staying Safe Online to Staying Safe in the Real World

Explain that staying safe when going online can be similar to staying safe in the real world. Ask the students to listen as you describe the following scenario aloud:

"Hazel's friend Chloe calls asking if Hazel wants to meet her and her mom at the park. Hazel lives around the corner from the park, so she asks for permission to walk there on her own. Hazel's mom says yes and reminds her to stay safe and be careful."

Point out that Hazel asks for permission before she walks to the park. This helps her stay safe because her mom knows where she is going. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What might Hazel do to stay safe while walking to the park? How will that keep her safe?

Students might say:

"Hazel should walk on sidewalks and look both ways before crossing the street."

"Hazel should go straight to the park and not stop anywhere else along the way. That way she won't get lost."

Then use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q How might going online be similar to going for a walk in your neighborhood? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

"There are a lot of places to go on the Internet, so you have to know which places are safe to visit."

"You could get lost if you don't know where you're going."

"You shouldn't talk to people you don't know when you are on a walk or when you are online."

If the students do not mention it, point out that there are countless numbers of websites on the Internet, so it is important to know what to look for and what to avoid. Explain that just as it is important to know how to get to the park and how to be safe as you walk there, it is important to know which websites are safe to visit and which ones should be avoided. Just as you would not share private information with people you do not know on a walk to the park, it is important that you do not share private information with people you do not know online. Point out that just as you would tell an adult if you noticed anything suspicious on a walk, it is important to tell an adult if you notice anything suspicious online. It is also important to ask for help whenever you need it.

4 Introduce Class Rules for Staying Safe Online

Explain that this year the students will have opportunities to go online at school and that today they will discuss the rules they need to follow to stay safe. Post the chart titled "Our Digital Citizenship Contract" where everyone can see it, and read each rule to the class.

Teacher Note

You may want to give the students specific examples of ways they will use the Internet at school this year.

Our Digital Citizenship Contract

We will get permission before going online.

We will ask the teacher or a responsible adult before going to an unknown website.

We will ask the teacher or a responsible adult for help if we come across any information that is confusing or makes us uncomfortable.

We will ask the teacher or a responsible adult before downloading anything from the Internet.

We will ignore advertisements and pop-ups.

We will leave computer and search settings alone.

We will follow all school computer rules.

Teacher Note

You may want to explain that downloading means “copying files, games, or applications from the Internet onto your computer, tablet, or smartphone.”

Teacher Note

If your school has an acceptable use policy that students and their families need to sign before the students can use the computers, review it with the students and confirm that the settings on the search engines on your school’s computers are set to “Strict,” “Safe,” or a comparable mode.

5 Reflect on Online Safety Rules

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have the students discuss how the rules will help keep them safe online by asking questions such as:

Q Why do you think [ignoring advertisements and pop-ups] is important?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“Ads won’t help us with our schoolwork, so there’s no reason to click them.”

“We don’t shop online when we are in school, so it’s a good idea to ignore them.”

Then ask:

Q What else might we do to stay safe online? Why do you think that?

As the students share, add their ideas to the chart.

Explain that you would like the students to pledge, or promise, to follow these rules for staying safe online. Tell them that in coming lessons they will discuss other ways to be good digital citizens and add them to the chart.

Teacher Note

Save the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart to use in Technology Mini-lesson 2. If you have not already done so, you might set up a class website (see “Do Ahead”) and create an online version of the chart.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of the digital citizenship family letter (BLM1).

Teacher Note

Have the class help you list ideas for favorite child-friendly websites on a sheet of chart paper. Post the list where everyone can see it, and add an online version to your class website. Give the students time to explore the websites on the list, and continue to add new ones throughout the year.

Mini-lesson 2

Materials

- “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart from Technology Mini-lesson 1 with privacy rules added, and a marker

Teacher Note

Plan to teach this lesson soon after teaching the previous technology mini-lesson (see Technology Mini-lesson 1).

Teacher Note

Keep the online privacy rules in the last three lines covered until you introduce them in Step 4.

6 Discuss Staying Safe Online When Not at School

Tell the students that you would like them to discuss with their families the rules for online safety they learned today, and encourage them to come up with similar rules for staying safe online when they are outside of school.

Plan to check in with the students throughout the year to discuss how they are doing with following the online safety rules.

Maintaining Privacy Online

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Add the online privacy rules to the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart (see Step 4). Cover the new rules with another sheet of paper until you introduce them in Step 4.

In this lesson, the students:

- Work in pairs
- Recognize when it is appropriate to share private information
- Reflect on class rules for online privacy

1 Review Staying Safe Online

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. If possible, have current partners work together.

Remind the students that they have been thinking about what it means to be a good digital citizen. In the previous lesson, they learned that staying safe online is a lot like staying safe in the real world. Direct their attention to the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart (with the privacy rules covered) and briefly review the safety rules the students have learned for using the Internet.

2 Introduce Maintaining Privacy Online

Tell the students that another way to be a good digital citizen is to follow certain online privacy rules, or rules for keeping private information safe. Explain that following these rules will help protect both themselves and their computers when they are online.

3 Discuss When to Share Private Information

Tell the students that the kind of information that is important to keep private online can be similar to the kind of information that is important to keep private in real life. Ask them to listen as you describe the following scenario:

"Jared is excited to go to the zoo with his grandpa. He loves animals, especially monkeys. When he and his grandpa arrive at the zoo, there is a line at the monkey exhibit. There is a woman in front of them reading a book about monkeys, and Jared asks her about it. They start talking, and he tells her how much he loves animals and that he wants to be a zoologist when he grows up."

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q Do you think it is appropriate (OK) for Jared to share that he wants to be a zoologist with the woman in line? Why?
- Q Imagine that the woman in line asks Jared for his [e-mail address]. Do you think that would be appropriate? Why or why not?

Students might say:

"I think it is OK for him to say that he wants to be a zoologist. He is just sharing his excitement about animals."

"There's no reason for Jared to share his e-mail address. He doesn't know the person well."

"You should only share your e-mail address with someone you want to contact you."

Then use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss questions such as:

- Q How is sharing [what you want to be when you grow up] with someone you don't know different from sharing [your e-mail address or your phone number]? [pause] Turn to your partner.
- Q Do you think it is a good idea to share [your computer password] with someone you don't know? Why do you think that? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Explain that contact information, such as your name, address, phone number, and e-mail

Teacher Note

You might mention that in some cases it may be OK to share a handle, or online nickname (e.g., "brightshadow" or "hamsterbunny"), if it does not reveal private information.

Remind the students that they should not choose handles and usernames that include personal information, such as their real names, ages, or locations (e.g., "chloe94501" or "Audrey2006"). Students should also choose passwords that are hard to guess. Many people choose passwords that are easy to remember, like "12345," "password," or their pet's name—but these are easy for strangers to guess or figure out. Search online using the keywords "kid's random password generator" or "kid's username generator" to find free tools to create strong passwords and usernames.

address, and information such as computer passwords and usernames are private; they should be shared only with people you know and trust. Explain that personal photos and videos are also private information. Tell the students that just as they do not share private information with people they do not know in real life, they should not share private information with people they do not know online.

4 Introduce Class Rules for Online Privacy

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q Have you ever been asked to share information about yourself online? If yes, what kind of information?

Students might say:

"I play an online video game that asks for my name and age."

"When I want to use my e-mail account, I need to enter my password."

"Some kids' websites ask you to enter your birthday if you want to join."

Tell the students that to protect themselves and their computers, they should never share private information about themselves, their families and friends, or their computers when they are online. Explain that when they use the Internet at school, they will need to follow certain privacy rules. Direct their attention to the "Our Digital Citizenship Contract" chart and uncover the rules that you added to it.

Read each rule to the class.

Our Digital Citizenship Contract

We will get permission before going online.

We will ask the teacher or a responsible adult before going to an unknown website.

We will ask the teacher or a responsible adult for help if we come across any information that is confusing or makes us uncomfortable.

We will ask the teacher or a responsible adult before downloading anything from the Internet.

We will ignore advertisements and pop-ups.

We will leave computer and search settings alone.

(continues)

We will follow all school computer rules.

We will keep personal contact information private.

We will keep sign-in information (such as usernames and passwords) private.

We will keep personal photos and videos private.

5 Reflect on Online Privacy Rules

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss why each rule is important. Ask:

Q Why do you think it’s important to [keep your contact information, passwords, and photos private] when online? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“You might end up with a lot of advertisements in your e-mail if you share your e-mail address on a website.”

“Passwords are like keys. They are meant to let you in but keep other people out.”

“You don’t know what people might do with your photos, so you should only share them with people you really trust.”

Ask:

Q What other privacy rules might we want to add to the chart? Why do you think that?

As the students share, add their ideas to the chart.

Explain that you would like the students to pledge, or promise, to follow the online privacy rules, just as they did with the online safety rules. Remind them that agreeing to use the Internet in safe and secure ways will help them be good digital citizens. State your expectation that the students will try their best to act according to the rules on the contract when they are online at school.

6 Discuss Maintaining Online Privacy When Not at School

Tell the students that you would like them to discuss with their families the online privacy rules they learned today. Encourage them to come up with similar rules for maintaining privacy online outside of school. Plan to check in with the students throughout the year to discuss how they are doing with following the online privacy rules.

Teacher Note

Save the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart to use in Technology Mini-lesson 3. If you have added the chart from Mini-lesson 1 to your class website, update it to include today’s new rules.

Mini-lesson 3

Showing Respect in Digital Communications

Materials

- “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart from Technology Mini-lesson 2 and a marker
- Lined paper for each student

Teacher Note

Plan to teach this lesson soon after teaching the first two technology mini-lessons (see Technology Mini-lesson 1 and Technology Mini-lesson 2).

Teacher Note

If you have established class norms for respectful behavior, you may want to review them.

In this lesson, the students:

- Work in pairs
- Compare online interactions with face-to-face interactions
- Generate classroom agreements for showing respect in digital communications
- Copy and sign the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract”

1 Review Digital Citizenship

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. If possible, have current partners work together.

Remind the students that they have been talking about how to stay safe and maintain privacy while using the Internet. Briefly review the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart and ask:

Q How can these rules help you stay safe and maintain privacy online?

Tell the students that today they will talk about ways to show respect to one another in digital communications.

2 Discuss Being a Respectful Community Member

Remind the students that this year, they have been focusing on building a community in which they treat one another with respect, and point out ways you have observed them being respectful.

You might say:

“I’ve noticed that you share materials with other students and that you listen well to the person who is speaking. I’ve also noticed how you use kind words when talking with one another. You also give respectful and helpful feedback to your partners.”

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What are other ways you show one another respect?

Students might say:

“My partner and I take turns talking.”

“When someone else is talking, I turn and face her so she knows I am paying attention.”

“I don’t say mean things about people.”

3 Compare Digital and Face-to-face Communications

Explain that communicating with people digitally is similar to communicating with people face-to-face—with some very important differences. Point out ways the students have interacted (communicated) or might interact with one another online this year, such as by e-mailing, texting, or by posting a comment on a class blog or website. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss questions such as:

Q How is [e-mailing a friend] similar to [talking to a friend at school]? How is it different? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Q What do you think is the most important difference between digital and face-to-face communications? Why do you think that? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Students might say:

“If you’re texting or chatting online, you can’t see the other person’s face, and it’s hard to tell how he feels. You might accidentally write something that hurts his feelings.”

“When you’re talking to a friend face-to-face, it’s just the two of you. But when you’re posting a comment on your friend’s blog, everyone can read what you write.”

“The biggest difference is that when people are online, they might not care as much about being respectful because they don’t think they will ever meet the person they are interacting with.”

“Sometimes it’s easier for people to write mean things in an e-mail than it is to say mean things face-to-face. They forget there’s a real person on the other end.”

“If you write something mean online, it’s harder to take your words back. That’s different from when you are face-to-face. Once you say something mean online, it’s out there forever.”

If necessary, point out to the students that they often cannot see the person they are interacting with digitally, so it is easy to forget that they are communicating with a real person who has feelings. They cannot see the person’s facial expressions or body language, so it is difficult to tell how that person is reacting to their texts, e-mails, or comments. This means that the students need to pay special attention to the tone of their writing to make sure their messages are clear and respectful. Also point out that, as good digital citizens, they need to be respectful even when they do not know the person they are interacting with online.

4 Generate Ideas for Being Respectful in Digital Communications

Tell the students that you want them to develop a set of agreements for respectful online behavior to add to the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart. Explain that you would like them to begin by thinking

TEKS 1.D.iii

Student/Teacher Activity

Steps 4–6

(all, beginning on page 617 and continuing on to page 619)

about and discussing a few situations. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

- Q Students from another class have posted their published poems on the school website, and the teacher asks you to read and comment on them. How can you show respect in your comments? [pause] Turn to your partner.
- Q In a class blog, I ask you to post your opinions about whether or not schools should have music and art classes. Different members of the class have very different opinions on the topic. How might you show respect in your posts? [pause] Turn to your partner.
- Q You are researching online for a class project about owls. You come across a blog on owls written by a student you’ve never met. As you read it, you find inaccurate (wrong) information and decide to point this out in a comment. What might you do before posting your comment? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class, and write them where everyone can see them. As the students share, facilitate a discussion by asking questions such as:

- Q Why is [rereading what you wrote before posting a comment] important?
- Q How will [thinking about how the other person might feel] help you be respectful?

5 Decide on Agreements and Add to the Contract

Have the class review the ideas you recorded, and together decide on a list of four or five statements that describe the way they want to treat one another online and that they can all agree upon. These statements are called agreements.

Ask questions such as:

- Q Can we combine any of these ideas into one agreement? If so, which ones?
- Q Is there anything else we should add to this list? What is it?

Students might say:

“I think we can combine ‘reread what we write’ and ‘think about others’ feelings.’ We could say that we will reread what we write and think about how our words make others feel.”

“I think we should add ‘don’t write anything online that you wouldn’t say to someone in person.’”

Continue the discussion until everyone agrees on the list, and then add the agreements to the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart.

Remind the students that agreeing to use the Internet in safe, secure, and respectful ways will help them be good digital citizens. State your expectation that the students will try their best to act according to the rules and agreements on the contract when they are communicating digitally at school.

Teacher Note

If necessary, restate the class agreements positively, and record them as “We will . . .” statements. For example:

- We will always use respectful language in our writing.
- We will reread what we write before we text, e-mail, or post a comment.
- We will think about others’ feelings before we post a comment.
- We will remember there is a real person on the other end of the computer.
- We will choose to be respectful with all the people we communicate with online, whether we know them or not.

Teacher Note

This discussion might require another class period. Reaching agreement may mean deleting, combining, or modifying ideas on the list.

If you have added the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart to your class website, update it to include the new rules.

6 Have Students Copy and Sign the Contract

Have the students return to their desks. Distribute a sheet of lined paper to each student. Explain that you would like them to write down the entire “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart. Then have them sign the contract.

7 Discuss Digital Citizenship When Not at School

Tell the students that you would like them to bring the contract home and discuss it with their families. Encourage them to work together with their families to come up with similar agreements for staying safe, maintaining privacy, and showing respect in digital communications when they are outside of school.

Teacher Note

Post the “Our Digital Citizenship Contract” chart near the classroom computer(s) for the students to refer to when they go online throughout the year.

Teacher Note

Throughout the year, review the students’ commitment to being good digital citizens, and check in regularly to see how they are doing. You may decide to modify or add to the class contract as needed.

Choosing Effective Search Terms

Mini-lesson 4

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to teaching this lesson, make sure that each student (or pair of students, if the students are working in pairs) has selected an appropriate topic to research and generated a few research questions.
- ✓ Become familiar with a few search engines and decide which one you will use for this lesson (see the Teacher Note in Step 1).
- ✓ Check that the preferences on the search engine you select to use with the class have been set to “Strict,” “Safe,” or a comparable setting.
- ✓ Prepare a chart with the title “How to Turn a Research Question Into a Search Query” (see Step 3).
- ✓ (Optional) You might set up a class website and create an online version of the “How to Turn a Research Question Into a Search Query” chart and other charts.

In this lesson, the students:

- Work in pairs
- Learn and use the terms search engine, search term, and search query
- Identify the best terms for an effective search query

Materials

- Whiteboard with a search engine displayed, prepared ahead
- Chart paper and a marker
- Lined paper for each student
- “How to Turn a Research Question Into a Search Query” chart, prepared ahead
- Students’ research notes, prepared ahead

ABOUT TEACHING THE ONLINE RESEARCH LESSONS

Technology Mini-lessons 4-7 are designed to support the students as they conduct online research. The students learn how to write effective search queries, understand the results of online searches, narrow their search results and use filters, and evaluate the credibility of the sources they find. These lessons assume that each student (or pair of students) has already selected a topic to research and generated research questions. The students will use their topics to practice the online research skills they learn.

The skills taught in Technology Mini-lessons 4-7 build on one another, so plan to teach them in order and at corresponding stages in the students' research. For example, teach Technology Mini-lesson 4, "Choosing Effective Search Terms," after the students have identified a research topic, and teach Technology Mini-lesson 7, "Evaluating Research Sources," after the students have searched for and collected several online sources.

1 Introduce Searching for Information Online

Have the students bring their pencils and notes about their research topics (see "Do Ahead") and sit with partners together, facing the whiteboard. If possible, have current Making Meaning partners work together.

Remind the students that during the school year they have opportunities to use the Internet for various reasons. Point out that one reason they might use the Internet is to research, or search for information about, a topic. Review that the students have already selected research topics and thought about specific questions related to their topics that they might research.

Tell the students that today they will learn how to use a search engine to find information on the Internet. Explain that a search engine is a web-based tool that searches the Internet using words you type into a search bar. Finding the information you are looking for requires knowing how to choose the best words, or search terms, to type into a search engine.

2 Model Choosing Best Terms for a Search Query

Direct the students' attention to the search engine displayed on the whiteboard, and point to the search bar where search terms are entered. Explain that good researchers start with a research question and then identify words within the question to use for their search. For example, if you are researching elephants and want to know more about where elephants live, you might start with the research question, "Where do elephants live?"

Teacher Note

Many search engines are available, including some that are intended for students' use. You may already have a preferred search engine that you use most often. Spend some time becoming familiar with a few search engines and decide which one you will use for this lesson.

TEKS 13.B.ii
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 2
(all, beginning on page 620
and continuing on to page 621)

Write the question on a sheet of chart paper where everyone can see it (see the diagram below). Explain that you will use the question to help you identify a set of words, or search terms, for your search and that the set of search terms you choose is called a search query.

Explain that a search query tells a search engine what information is needed. Search queries are not usually complete sentences because they use only words directly related to the topic of the search. Ask the students to listen carefully as you model changing the question “Where do elephants live?” into a search query.

You might say:

“I know I need the word elephants because elephants are the animals I am researching, and I need live because it is the specific information about elephants that I want. So elephants and live are my search terms—I am going to circle them. I don’t need the words where and do because they don’t say anything about the information I need, so I will cross them out. Now I have the words elephants and live, but what I really want to know is the natural environment elephants prefer to live in, so maybe I should change the word live to habitat. [Cross out live and write habitat above it.] I think that will help. Now I have the words elephants and habitat. I’ll cross out the s in elephants, so my search query will be elephant habitat.”

Type the search query into the search engine’s search bar and display the results. Read some of the results aloud. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How useful do you think these search results will be for the research topic?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

If needed, point out any results that directly address your research topic.

3 Choose Best Terms for a Search Query

Distribute lined paper to each student. Explain that the students will follow the same procedure to turn a different research question into a search query. Post the chart titled “How to Turn a Research Question Into a Search Query” where everyone can see it, and read each step aloud.

Teacher Note

After discussing the search query results with the students, you may want to demonstrate how changing the order of the words in your search query affects the search results.

TEKS 13.B.ii

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3 and Step 4 (all, beginning on page 621 and continuing on to page 622)

How to Turn a Research Question Into a Search Query

1. Write down your research question.
2. Circle the words you definitely need.
3. Cross out unnecessary words.
4. Add or substitute more specific words if needed.
5. Decide in what order to write the words.

Direct the students' attention back to the chart paper on which you recorded the research question "Where do elephants live?" Under that question, write What do elephants like to eat? and have the students copy it onto their sheets of paper. Ask partners to read the question carefully and follow the steps on the "How to Turn a Research Question Into a Search Query" chart to decide on a search query.

Circulate and observe. If necessary, direct the students' attention to the chart and remind them to follow each step. Review that queries use only words directly related to the research question.

When most pairs have finished, signal for the students' attention and have a few volunteers share their queries with the class.

Remind the students that a search query tells a search engine exactly what information to search for about a research topic.

4 Continue Online Research

Explain that the students will use what they learned today in their own research. Have them look at their notes and identify any questions they have about their research topics. Invite them to use the "How to Turn a Research Question Into a Search Query" chart to write queries about their topics.

When the students have demonstrated that they know how to choose effective search terms, see Technology Mini-lesson 5 to teach them how to understand their search results.

Teacher Note

The students may decide on a search query such as foods elephants eat, elephant diet, or favorite elephant foods.

Teacher Note

Save the "How to Turn a Research Question Into a Search Query" chart to post as needed later.

You might also want to create an online version of this chart and add it to your class website (see "Do Ahead") for students to refer to anytime during their online research.

Teacher Note

If your school has an acceptable use policy, review it with the students.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Read Steps 2 and 3 of the lesson to familiarize yourself with the features of a search results page and of web addresses.
- ✓ Type the query elephant habitat into a search engine and have the search results page ready to display on the whiteboard in Step 2.
- ✓ Prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title “Common Domain Suffixes” and add the explanations shown in the diagram (see Step 4).
- ✓ Identify a few examples of websites with the domain suffixes from the “Common Domain Suffixes” chart (for example, .com, .edu, .gov, .org) and bookmark them to display on the whiteboard in Step 4.
- ✓ Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print a class set of “Evaluating Search Results” (BLM2).

In this lesson, the students:

- Work in pairs
- Learn and use the terms search result, web address, domain suffix, and snippet
- Explore the features of a search results page
- Learn key parts of web addresses
- Identify potentially useful sites for their research topics

1 Introduce Search Results Page

Have the students bring their research notes and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing the whiteboard.

Review that the students can use an Internet search engine to find information about a research question and that, in the previous lesson, they learned how to choose search terms for a query. Remind the students that a well-written query uses only words that are directly related to the research question.

Explain that today the students will discuss the page that lists the results of a query and learn how to decide which websites to use in their research.

2 Discuss Features of a Search Results Page

Display the search results page you prepared ahead. Review that this is the page that appeared when you typed the query elephant habitat into

Materials

- Whiteboard with search results displayed, prepared ahead
- Chart paper and a marker
- “Common Domain Suffixes” chart, prepared ahead
- “Web Address and Snippet Example” chart (WA1)
- Students’ research notes
- “Evaluating Search Results” chart (WA2)
- “Evaluating Search Results” (BLM2)

Teacher Note

Plan to teach this lesson soon after teaching the previous technology mini-lesson (see Technology Mini-lesson 4). You may want to briefly review the previous lesson before starting this one.

TEKS 9.F.ii
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 1 and Step 2 (all,
beginning on page 623 and
continuing on to page 624)

Teacher Note

You might explain that the list of search results is many pages long and that the search engine has organized the list in a particular order. The results that appear on the first page of search results are generally web pages that contain information that relates most directly to the query (in this case, elephant habitat). Results that appear on subsequent pages usually contain information that is less directly related to the query. Tell the students that every search engine has a slightly different way of organizing search results but that each uses some kind of ranking system.

Teacher Note

Most search engines provide filters such as News, Web, Images, Maps, Videos, and Books.

Teacher Note

Most web browsers display under the web address a line or two of text excerpted directly from the suggested web page. This text is called different things in different browsers. For the purposes of these mini-lessons, we will use the term snippet.

TEKS 9.F.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Steps 3–6 (all, beginning on
to page 628)

the search bar. Explain that this page is called the search results page. Tell the students that a search results page will look different depending on the search engine you use, but that all search results pages have features in common.

Point to the list of web pages in the main column and explain that these web pages are the search results—in this case, sources of information about elephant habitats. Explain that a web page is part of a website and that most websites have more than one web page. Tell the students that they will look more closely at the websites later.

Point to any advertisements on the page and explain that advertisements are often marked with the words ads or sponsored results and are frequently listed in the left- or right-hand column or at the top or bottom of the page. Tell the students that when they are doing research, they should ignore the advertisements. Ads are trying to sell something and, for that reason, they are not a good source of information about a research topic.

Next, point out the filters, which are often found across the top of the search results page or in the left-hand panel. Explain that filters are search tools that let you control the type of search result that will be displayed on the page. Tell the students they will learn about filters in another lesson.

Direct the students' attention back to the list of web pages in the main column of the page and review that these are the search results, or sources of information, you might explore to learn about elephant habitats. Choose one of the search results and point to the first line. Tell the students that this is the title of the web page. Explain that any search terms (the words elephant and habitat) that happen to appear in the title are in bold type.

Point to the web address and explain that the web address tells exactly where a specific web page is located online. Explain that on many search results pages, the web address is located underneath the title.

Point to the line or lines of text below the web address. Tell the students that this small piece of text is taken directly from the web page and is called a snippet. As in the web title, any search terms that appear in the snippet are in bold type. Explain that the snippet may provide clues to help the students figure out if a web page will be useful to them.

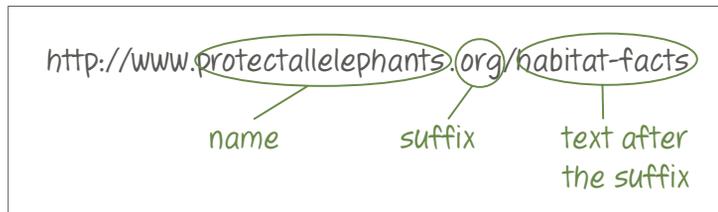

If the students need more practice understanding the parts of an individual search result, choose one or two more search results from the search results page to review with the class.

3 Identify Parts of a Web Address

Tell the students that anyone can post information on the Internet, so not all of what they find will be useful or reliable for research. Good researchers know how to look for clues about the type of information that a source, such as a website, will provide in order to choose the best sources to use for their report. One way to do this is to look at the parts of a web address. Remind the students that a web address tells exactly where a specific website is located online.

Choose one of the web addresses from your search results page and write it on a sheet of chart paper (see the diagram below). Point to the name (the text that follows http://www and precedes a suffix such as .com or .org) and circle it. Ask the students to listen as you describe and label this part of the web address.

You might say:

"The name of a website in a web address may give information about the owner of the website, the topic of the site, and whether or not it will help in our research. The name of a website is usually found after the letters http and www. The name of this site is protect all elephants, which means it's probably a website that belongs to a person or group that believes that elephants should be protected. Sometimes there is no http or www in the web address."

Point to the domain suffix and circle it. Ask the students to continue listening as you describe and label this part of the web address.

You might say:

"The domain suffix of a website comes after the name and also gives helpful information about the website. The suffix of this website is .org, which tells me that this website probably belongs to a nonprofit organization that helps people or animals or supports other causes by providing education and other resources. In this case, I think the website belongs to an organization that wants to protect elephants."

Point to the letters and numbers after the suffix and circle them. Ask the students to continue listening as you describe and label this part of the web address.

You might say:

"Sometimes letters and numbers come after the suffix. These letters and numbers indicate a particular web page in the website. The text after the suffix often gives me clues about the website. This web address tells me that this web page will have facts about elephant habitats. Looking at the name, domain suffix, and text after the suffix makes me think that this website is for people who want to protect elephants and that the web page will help them learn about the elephants' habitats."

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Do you think the web pages that are part of the website [www.protectallephants.org] will be useful for my research topic? Why or why not? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a moment, have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“I think it will be useful because it looks like it will have facts about where elephants live.”

“Since it’s a website about protecting elephants, it will probably have information about why elephants are in danger. That might be useful, too.”

4 Discuss Domain Suffixes

Tell the students that the domain suffix identifies the purpose and audience of the website. Explain that there are many different domain suffixes and that it is important to understand what they mean. Post the chart titled “Common Domain Suffixes” where everyone can see it, and read the examples aloud.

Common Domain Suffixes

- .com: a commercial website, or a website that buys or sells things
- .edu: a website that belongs to an educational institution, such as an elementary school or college
- .gov: a government website
- .org: a website that often belongs to a nonprofit organization or a group that supports causes by providing education and resources
- countries’ domain suffixes: countries sometimes have their own suffixes, for example, China (.cn), the United Kingdom (.uk), Brazil (.br), etc.

Display some examples of websites with different domain suffixes (see “Do Ahead”), one at a time. As you display each website, point out the domain suffix in the web address and facilitate a brief discussion about the kind of information each site provides. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss questions such as:

Q What kind of website is this? What do you think people use it for? [pause]
Turn to your partner.

Q How is this website similar to others you’ve seen? How is it different?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Remind the students that understanding what a domain suffix means will help them choose the best sources for their research. Explain that they should always ask for help if they are confused or do not recognize a suffix. They will have the chance to add other suffixes to the chart throughout the year.

Remind the students that often web addresses have additional letters and numbers after the suffix. This text can sometimes provide additional clues about the content of the web page.

If the students need more practice understanding domain suffixes and the additional letters and numbers after the suffix, choose one or two more web addresses to discuss with the class.

5 Explore a Web Address and a Snippet

Explain that the class will work together to explore a web address and a snippet from your page of search results for the query elephant habitat. Remind the students that a snippet is a line or two of text taken directly from the web page and that it appears as part of a search result. Display the “Web Address and Snippet Example” chart (WA1), or substitute a web address and snippet of your choice.

Web Address and Snippet Example

<http://www.everythingelephantsforyou.com/toys-and-games>

Everything for elephant lovers: toys, games, books, habitat maps, adventure travel, movies, and more.

WA1

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is the [name/domain suffix] of this website? What does it tell you about the kind of site it is? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Q What does the [text after the suffix/snippet] tell you about the website?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Q Do you think this site might be helpful for my research? Why or why not?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

If possible, have the students evaluate their search results soon after you teach this lesson.

If you have a class website, you might create online versions of the charts “Common Domain Suffixes” and “Evaluating Search Results.”

Students might say:

“The name of the website is ‘Everything Elephants for You.’ I think it’s for people who love elephants. It might even have stuff for sale.”

“I agree with [Chloe] that this website is selling things about elephants. The suffix is .com, so I know this site is for a business.”

“The text after the suffix tells me that this site sells toys and games.”

“The snippet also tells me that this site sells books and maps that show elephant habitats.”

“I don’t think this website will be helpful for your research. It is mostly about selling stuff related to elephants.”

Remind the students that understanding web addresses and snippets will help them decide which sites will be useful for their research topics and which sites they can skip.

If the students need more practice exploring the web addresses and snippets, choose one or two more examples to review with the class. Tell them that you will post the chart of the labeled web address and the “Common Domain Suffixes” chart for use throughout the year.

6 Evaluate Search Results

Explain that the students will use what they learned today the next time they go online to find websites for their research topics. Display the “Evaluating Search Results” chart (WA2) and distribute a copy of “Evaluating Search Results” (BLM2) to each student. Read the chart aloud as the students follow along. Ask them to keep these instructions with their research notes. Explain that the next time they use the computer, they will follow these instructions for evaluating their search results.

WA2

Evaluating Search Results

- Choose a query for your research topic.
- Type the query into a search engine and print the first page of results.
- Look at each search result and think about:
  - the parts of the web address (the name, domain suffix, and the text after the suffix).
  - the snippet of text from the web page.
- Circle the sites you think might be good sources of information for your research. Write the reasons you chose these sites.

When the students have demonstrated that they know how to evaluate their search results, see Technology Mini-lesson 6 to teach them how to narrow their results.

Narrowing Search Results and Using Filters

Mini-lesson 6

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Type the query elephant habitat into a search engine and have the search results page ready to display in Step 2.
- ✓ Prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title “How to Refine Search Queries” and include the steps shown in the diagram (see Step 2).
- ✓ Type the query African elephants into a search engine and have the search results page ready to display in Step 3.
- ✓ Familiarize yourself with the filters of the search engine you use, and prepare to model filtering search results in Step 5.
- ✓ Prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title “Filters We Can Use” and include the filters shown in the diagram in Step 6 or list other filters you would like the students to explore this year (see Step 6).

In this lesson, the students:

- Work in pairs
- Learn how to refine search terms to narrow a search
- Practice refining search terms to narrow a search
- Learn how to use filters to show certain types of search results
- Explore search engine filtering tools

1 Introduce Narrowing a Search

Have the students bring their research notes (including any printed pages of search results) and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing the whiteboard.

Briefly review that the students have been using search engines to find information about their research topics on the Internet. Remind them that finding the information they want first requires choosing search terms, or the best words for their search. Then they use the search terms to create a search query, which they type into a search engine.

Explain that as the students search online, they will sometimes need to narrow, or focus, their searches to find sources with the information they want. Tell the students that today they will learn some ways to narrow a search.

Materials

- Whiteboard with search results displayed, prepared ahead
- Chart paper and a marker
- “How to Refine Search Queries” chart, prepared ahead
- Lined paper for each student
- “Filters We Can Use” chart, prepared ahead
- Students’ research notes

Teacher Note

Plan to teach this lesson soon after teaching the previous technology mini-lesson (see Technology Mini-lesson 5). You may want to briefly review the previous lesson before starting this one.

You might also consider teaching this lesson in multiple sessions. Teach Steps 1-3 in one session and Steps 4-7 at another time.

2 Model Narrowing a Search by Refining the Search Query

Display the search results page you prepared ahead (see “Do Ahead”). Review that this is the search results page that appeared when you typed the search query elephant habitat into the search bar. Point out that the sources in this list of search results give information about the habitats of elephants in general. Write the search query elephant habitat on a sheet of chart paper where everyone can see it.

Tell the students that as you researched your topic, you learned that there are two main types of elephants, the African elephant and the Asian elephant. Explain that now you want to narrow your search to find information specifically about the habitat of Asian elephants. To narrow your search, you will refine, or make more specific, the search query by changing the search terms in it (see the diagram below).

Ask the students to listen carefully as you model narrowing your search by refining the search query elephant habitat.

You might say:

“The current page of search results shows sources about the habitats of elephants in general. These results are too broad because I only want information about the habitat of Asian elephants. How can I revise the search query elephant habitat so that I get search results with the information I am looking for? First I’ll ask myself if I need to delete or change the search terms elephant and habitat at all. No, I don’t think so, because both of those terms still apply to my search. Next I’ll ask myself what additional words I might add to my search term to make it more specific and focused on the information I want to find. I’ll try adding one word, Asian, because I’m interested in Asian elephants. [Add ‘Asian’ to the end of the query.] Now my search query is elephant habitat Asian. That is OK, but I think the query would make more sense if I moved Asian to the beginning. [Cross out ‘Asian’ at the end of the query and insert it at the beginning.] Now my search query is Asian elephant habitat. I think this query will tell the search engine what information I want.”

Asian elephant habitat ~~Asian~~

Type the new search query, Asian elephant habitat, into the search engine’s search bar and display the results. Read some of the results aloud. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q What do you notice about these search results? How well did the search query Asian elephant habitat work to narrow the search results? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a few volunteers have shared, post the chart titled “How to Refine Search Queries” where everyone can see it, and read each step aloud:

How to Refine Search Queries

1. Write down your search query and look at the search terms carefully.
2. Ask yourself: Do any of these words no longer apply to my search? If so, change or delete them.
3. Ask yourself: What new words can I add or substitute to make my search more specific? Add any new words.
4. Read your new search terms. Decide in what order to write the words.

Teacher Note

If necessary, remind the students that a search query is not usually a complete sentence because it uses only words, or search terms, directly related to the topic of the search.

3 Practice Refining Search Queries

Direct the students’ attention back to the chart paper on which you recorded the search query Asian elephant habitat. Write African elephants on the next line, and tell the students that this is the search query you used to find information about African elephants. Distribute lined paper to the students and have them write the search term “African elephants.”

Display the search results page you prepared ahead (see “Do Ahead”) and explain that this is the search results page that appears when you type in the search query African elephants. Point out that the sources in this list of search results give a wide range of information about African elephants.

Tell the students that you want to narrow your search to focus on how long African elephants live. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you refine the search query African elephants to find only information about how long they live? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Give partners a few minutes to discuss the question and ask them to refine the search query. Circulate and observe. If necessary, direct the students’ attention to the “How to Refine Search Queries” chart and remind them to follow each step.

When most pairs have finished, signal for the students’ attention and invite a few volunteers to share their search terms with the class.

Teacher Note

The students may decide on search terms such as African elephants lifespan, African elephants years of life, and African elephants life.

Record the students' search terms on the chart paper. Discuss questions such as:

Q What do you notice about [Noor and Hector's] search term?

Q Does their search term make the search narrower and more specific? Why or why not?

Guide the students to decide as a class which search term they would like to type into the search engine. Then type the new search query into the search engine's search bar and display the results. Read some of the results aloud. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What do you notice about these search results? How well did the search query [African elephant lifespan] work to narrow the search results? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share with the class.

Briefly direct the students' attention to the "How to Refine Search Queries" chart and remind them that they can use these steps whenever they need to narrow a search.

4 Introduce Filters

Retype the search query Asian elephant habitat into the search engine's search bar and display the results. Remind the students that this is the page of search results that appeared when you typed the search query Asian elephant habitat into the search engine's search bar and that they saw these search results earlier.

Point to the filters on the page and explain that filters are tools that allow you to sort through your search results to see results of a certain type only. Filters let you control the kind of information that will be displayed on the results page. Read the names of the filters aloud. Then ask:

Q What kind of information do you think will be displayed if we click the [Videos] filter? What kind of information do you think will be filtered (left) out?

5 Model Using Filters

Explain that not all search engines provide the same filters but that there are some that frequently appear. You will demonstrate how to use one of these filters, and then the class will work together to explore other filters.

Explain that as part of your research, you would like to find photographs of the habitat of Asian elephants. Tell the students that the Images filter will sort through all of the search results for Asian elephant habitat and then show you only the search results that are images, or pictures. Ask the students to watch and listen carefully as you click the Images filter and demonstrate how to use it.

You might say:

"I typed Asian elephant habitat into the search bar, and the search engine gave me this page showing all the search results. But I would like to see only the search results that are images because I want only photos that show the habitat of Asian elephants. When I click the Images filter, I get a page showing only the search results that are photos, drawings, maps, and other images.

Looking at the page of images is helpful, but I can filter these search results even more—so that I see only the results that are photographs. To do this, I will click the Photos advanced search filter. The advanced search filters are usually displayed under the main filters or are displayed under the main filters when I click Search Tools. [Click the Photos filter.] That helps a lot. Now I have many photos to choose from. I can focus my results even more by choosing the size of a photo and even a specific color. [Click an image.] When I click an image, I get a link to its source. When I find an image I want to use, I will write the web address down in my research notes so that I will remember where to find it again."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q How did the Images filter change the results that were shown? [pause]
Turn to your partner.

Q Do you think these results are useful? Why or why not? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class.

Students might say:

"Using the Images filter let you see only the results that were photos and drawings and other kinds of pictures."

"The Images filter is useful because it's a quick way to look at all the images at once."

"I think there are some photos you might be able to use in your research."

6 Practice Using Filters

Explain that the students will practice using other filters to continue searching for specific information about the habitat of Asian elephants. Post the "Filters We Can Use" chart where everyone can see it, and briefly describe each filter listed.

Teacher Note

You may want to add to this list throughout the year.

Filters We Can Use

- Images
- Maps
- News
- Videos

Direct the students' attention back to the original search results page, showing all the results for Asian elephant habitat on the whiteboard. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What filter(s) might I use to see [an Asian elephant moving through its habitat]? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their ideas. If necessary, explain that the Videos filter might provide examples of Asian elephants moving through their habitat. Click the Videos filter and display the search results. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How did the Videos filter change the results that were shown?

Q Do you think these results are useful? Why or why not?

Students might say:

“I think the results are useful because there are a lot of videos showing Asian elephants in their natural habitat.”

“Now you can actually see videos of what Asian elephants are like when they aren't in zoos!”

Use the same procedure to demonstrate how to use the News and Maps filters, or invite volunteers to the whiteboard to practice using the filters. Discuss the results with the class.

Point out that when the students use filters to show only certain types of search results, the results may not always be useful for their research topics. Remind them that good researchers always evaluate and choose their research sources carefully.

Tell the students that you will post the “Filters We Can Use” chart in the classroom for them to use throughout the year.

7 Refine Search Queries and Use Filters for Research

Briefly direct the students' attention to the "How to Refine Search Queries" chart and the "Filters We Can Use" chart. Explain that the students can refine search terms to narrow an online search and that they can also use filtering tools to show only certain types of search results.

Encourage the students to look at their research notes and review the search queries they are using to find information online. Ask them to think about how they might refine their search queries to get more useful and more specific results. Also encourage the students to think about any filters they would like to use.

Explain that the next time they use the school computer they will work in pairs to refine their search terms and use filters to get more information for their research topics. Tell the students that they will have an opportunity to print any information that is useful.

When the students have demonstrated that they know how to refine search queries to narrow their search results and how to use filters to show only certain types of results, see Technology Mini-lesson 7 to teach them how to choose credible sources for their research.

Teacher Note

If possible, have the students practice narrowing their searches and print useful research sources soon after you teach this lesson. Have the students save their printed online sources to use in Technology Mini-lesson 7.

If you have a class website, you might create online versions of the charts "How to Refine Search Queries" and "Filters We Can Use."

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prepare a chart with the title “Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source” and include the labels and questions shown in the diagram (see Step 3).
- ✓ Type the query elephant habitat into a search engine and have the search results page ready to display in Step 4.

Materials

- “Characteristics of a Good Research Source” chart (WA3)
- “Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source” chart, prepared ahead
- Whiteboard with search results displayed, prepared ahead
- Students’ printed online sources from Technology Mini-lesson 6
- “Evaluating Research Sources” chart (WA4)

Teacher Note

Plan to teach this lesson soon after teaching the previous technology mini-lesson (see Technology Mini-lesson 6). You may want to briefly review the previous lesson before starting this one.

TEKS 9.F.ii
Student/Teacher
Activity
 Step 2–6 (all, beginning on page 636 and continuing on to page 639)

In this lesson, the students:

- Work in pairs
- Evaluate research sources
- Choose credible sources for their research

1 Introduce Evaluating Sources

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing the interactive whiteboard. If possible, have current partners work together.

Point out that many of the students have begun to research their topics on the Internet and are ready to choose sources for their research projects. Remind the students that anyone can post information on the Internet, so it is important to choose their sources carefully. Explain that today the students will learn how to identify sources of information they can trust and use.

2 Discuss the Characteristics of a Good Source

Tell the students that the sources they use for their reports should have information that is reliable, current, and accurate. Display the “Characteristics of a Good Research Source” chart (WA3) and briefly discuss each term with the class.

Characteristics of a Good Research Source

- reliable: trustworthy or dependable
- current: up-to-date or recently written
- accurate: correct, without mistakes

WA3

Tell the students that in order to determine whether a source is reliable, current, and accurate they need to evaluate, or think carefully about, the source.

3 Introduce Questions for Evaluating a Source

Explain that good researchers ask themselves questions about a source when deciding whether or not to use it. Post the “Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source” chart where everyone can see it. Introduce each set of questions by pointing out the characteristic. Then tell the students to listen as you read each question aloud.

Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source

Reliable:

- Who is the author of the page? Is the author an expert? How do I know?
- What is the web address? Is the information from a site that is trustworthy? How do I know?
- Is this website providing information mainly to try to get someone to buy something?

Current:

- When was the information written?
- Do the links from the site work, or are they outdated?

Accurate:

- Are there sources listed for the information on the page? What are they?
- Can you find other sources with the same information?

Point out that the students will not always find answers to all the questions on the chart but that asking them will help the students decide whether or not the source has information they can trust.

4 Model Evaluating a Research Source

Display the search results page you prepared (see “Do Ahead”) and remind the students that this is the results page for the query elephant habitat. Click one of the web page results. Read the information on the website aloud and ask the students to listen as you consider whether or not the source is reliable, current, and accurate by answering the questions on the “Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source” chart.

You might say:

“First I will answer questions to evaluate whether or not the site is reliable. This page doesn’t list a specific author, but I can tell from the domain suffix .org in the web address that the site is probably a nonprofit organization about saving elephant habitats. The site seems to be a source of news and information for people who are interested in elephants, and the site isn’t selling anything, so I think it’s trustworthy. Now I’ll answer questions to decide if the information is current. It doesn’t say when the information was written, but one paragraph refers to the years 2001–2005, which means it’s not very current. [Click other links on the site.] All the links are working, and the information on other pages of this site is current. Last, I will answer questions to see if the site is accurate. There are no sources listed on the site, but I can find some of the same facts and information on a few other websites about elephants. I think I can use the information on this site for my research, but I think it would be good to find sites with more current information, too.”

TEKS 9.E.i

TEKS 9.E.v

Student/Teacher Activity

Step 5 and Step 6

(all, beginning on page 638
continuing on to page 639)

5 Evaluate Research Sources

Explain that the class will work together to evaluate another research source. Display the search results page from Step 4 again, and click another result to display a website.

Read aloud the information on the web page as the students follow along. Then have partners evaluate the reliability of the source by answering the questions under the “Reliable” heading on the “Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source” chart. After a moment, have volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Students might say:

“The domain suffix is .edu, which means that it is part of a school or university. That makes me think the site is trustworthy.”

“The website is a news and information site for kids, and there are no ads trying to sell stuff, so I think it’s trustworthy.”

In the same way, have partners continue evaluating the source by answering the questions under the “Current” and “Accurate” headings on the chart. Then ask and briefly discuss:

- Q Do you think this is a good source to use for my research project? Why or why not?
- Q What other questions might be important to add to the “Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source” chart? Why do you think that?

Add the students’ suggestions to the chart and explain that you will post the chart in the classroom for the students to use throughout the year.

6 Continue Evaluating Sources

Have the students return to their seats with partners sitting together. Ask them to spend a few moments gathering the sources they printed for their topics. Display the “Evaluating Research Sources” chart (WA4) and have partners work quietly together for 10–15 minutes to evaluate their printed sources. Explain that the next time the students use the school computers, they can evaluate the sources online by checking links or looking for additional sources with the same information.

Evaluating Research Sources

- Read the information on the page carefully.
- Read the questions on the “Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source” chart and write down any answers you find.
- Write down whether you think the source is reliable, current, and accurate and include reasons why.

WA4

Teacher Note

If possible, have the students use computers to evaluate their research sources online soon after you teach this lesson.

If you have a class website, you might create an online version of the “Questions to Ask When Evaluating a Source” chart.

Making Meaning®

The Collaborative Classroom

The Collaborative Classroom differs from traditional learning environments in that students and teachers work together on shared academic and social goals.

The Collaborative Classroom is an intentional environment in which collaboration goes beyond conventional cooperation and compliance. Students become caring members of a learning community who take responsibility for their own learning. As students think, talk, and share ideas, they come to value the thinking of others. They become thoughtful readers and engaged speakers and listeners. They discuss and debate big ideas with respect, clarity, and understanding.

Making Meaning in a Collaborative Classroom

The Making Meaning program embodies the practices of the Collaborative Classroom.

Students in Making Meaning classrooms demonstrate:

- Close reading of varied, complex texts
- Strategies for unlocking word meanings
- Deeper understanding of content
- Ownership of their own learning
- Intrinsic motivation to remain on task
- Improved self-esteem
- An increase in academic performance

"I love how authentic the lessons and focus strategies are. It's what good readers, listeners, and community members do in real life."

An isometric illustration of a library or school building. The scene is filled with books of various sizes, some standing upright and others lying flat. In the foreground, a person is sitting on a bench reading a book, and another person is sitting on a chair reading a book. A dog is sitting on the ground near the person on the chair. A tree with a circular canopy is in the center. The background shows a building with windows and a door. The entire scene is rendered in a light green color scheme.

Introduction

Overview of the Vocabulary Lessons

Vocabulary plays a critical role in children’s growth as readers. If they do not understand the words they are reading, children cannot make sense of text. It follows, then, that expanding students’ vocabularies is vital to their reading success. The Vocabulary Teaching Guide provides 30 weeks of vocabulary instruction that build students’ word knowledge, supplementing and supporting the reading comprehension lessons in the Making Meaning® Teacher’s Manual. This vocabulary instruction incorporates the latest research to give you the tools you need to boost your students’ word power.

Like the Making Meaning lessons, the vocabulary lessons are unique in their blend of academic instruction and support for students’ social and ethical development. The lessons teach high-utility words found in or relating to the read-aloud texts. The students learn four to six words each week in lessons designed to take 15–20 minutes each. The lessons combine direct instruction in word meanings with activities that require the students to think deeply about the words and use them as they talk with their partners and the class. The activities are designed to be both challenging and fun, and to help instill in your students a love of words and an appreciation for learning new words.

New to the Vocabulary Lessons

In this revision of the Vocabulary Teaching Guide, we have added content, assessment, and technology features designed to support your teaching and your students’ vocabulary knowledge and social development. These include:

- Additional weeks of instruction at every grade
- New read-aloud texts and new vocabulary words
- Enhanced lesson support for vocabulary instruction, including digital picture cards (K–1) and digital word cards (K–6)
- Online, interactive whiteboard activities for displaying picture cards (K–1), word cards (K–6), and prompts (K–6) used during instruction
- Print and digital teaching guides with links to professional development media and lesson resources

- An online assessment tool, the CCC ClassView™ assessment app, for capturing and synthesizing assessment data
- Additional support for incorporating technology through tips and tutorials

Unique Pedagogy

The vocabulary lessons' unique pedagogy grows out of years of research on vocabulary and child development. It focuses on character education and social and ethical development and supports teachers in expanding their students' vocabularies and building a word-rich classroom environment.

RESEARCH BASED/CLASSROOM TESTED

Children learn words in many different ways, such as by talking with teachers, friends, and family members, listening to stories, and reading independently; but this incidental word-learning is not enough. For students to develop the rich and varied vocabulary they need to communicate effectively and succeed academically, direct instruction in specific words is needed (Stahl 1999). Researchers and leaders in the field of vocabulary instruction, including Bauman and Kame'enui, McKeown and Beck, and Stahl,* have identified instructional practices that best help children build their vocabularies—practices we have incorporated into the Vocabulary Teaching Guide:

- Provide explicit instruction in a set of carefully chosen, high-utility words.
- Begin instruction by introducing a word in context.
- Provide a student-friendly definition of the word and examples of the way it is used.
- Give students opportunities to engage actively with the word in meaningful ways when they first encounter it, such as by applying it to their own experiences.
- Have students practice using the word through engaging activities.
- Provide multiple exposures to the word over an extended period of time.
- Teach strategies that students can use to learn words independently, such as recognizing synonyms, antonyms, and words with multiple meanings, and using context to determine word meanings.

We developed the Vocabulary Teaching Guide in consultation with classroom teachers who piloted the lessons and gave us extensive feedback to ensure that the program addresses the needs of all students and is easily implemented.

Lessons at a Glance

The following sections describe the lesson resources, the process of selecting vocabulary words, the approach to meaningful discussion of the words, the strategies that support vocabulary acquisition, and the social development objectives of the program and how they are achieved.

LESSON RESOURCES

At grade 3, vocabulary instruction includes:

- A teaching guide
- Access to online resources via the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) developed for the vocabulary lessons, including interactive whiteboard activities, assessment forms, reproducible word cards, family letters and other reproducibles, and professional development media

In addition to the lesson resources above, the instruction in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide is also supported by a variety of print and digital components that accompany the Making Meaning program, including children’s trade books, the Assessment Resource Book, the Digital Teacher’s Set, and access to the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) and the CCC ClassView app (classview.org). For more information about these program components, see “Program at a Glance” in the Introduction of the Teacher’s Manual.

For more information about the CCC Learning Hub, CCC ClassView, and the interactive whiteboard activities, see “Using the Technology Features” on page xxv.

THE WORDS

The vocabulary words were selected from the read-aloud texts used in grade 3 of the Making Meaning lessons. To develop an initial word list, we asked this critical question: Which words in the Making Meaning texts are most useful for the students to know? In answering this question, we were guided by the work of Isabel Beck and her colleagues at the University of Pittsburgh. Beck states that the best candidates for instruction are words that students are not likely to use frequently but that educated adults regularly use in their speech and writing and that appear in a wide range of texts students might encounter. She refers to these words as Tier Two* words. The words we selected as candidates for instruction were those we *Tier One words are high-frequency words that typically do not require instruction. Tier Three words are less frequently used words often associated with science, social studies, and other content areas. For more information, see Bringing Words to Life: Robust Vocabulary Instruction, 2nd ed. by Isabel L. Beck, Margaret McKeown, and Linda Kucan (The Guilford Press, 2013).

believed met Beck’s Tier Two criteria. In addition, we looked for words that would be interesting and fun for the students to learn and use.

In some instances, a Making Meaning text did not yield six words that met our criteria. To provide words for instruction, we included words that do not appear in the text but that represent concepts or ideas that are important to the story and worthwhile for the students to know. These “concept words” appear in italics in word lists in the week they are introduced.

To check the validity of our word choices, we asked our grade 3 pilot teachers to review the list, and we made changes based on their recommendations. For a complete list of the grade 3 words and their meanings, see Appendix B.

INTRODUCING THE WORDS

Vocabulary instruction becomes meaningful for students when the words they are learning are tied to a familiar and relevant context. The Making Meaning read-aloud texts provide that context. During a vocabulary lesson, the students reencounter words that they heard earlier during a Making Meaning lesson. Each word is introduced by rereading the text that includes the word. The students then hear the word defined in student-friendly language.

WORD CARDS

A digital whiteboard activity that includes the word and the prompt(s) used to discuss the word are provided for each word in the grade 3 program. Additionally, reproducible wall word cards are provided on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). Each reproducible wall word card shows the card number and the word and its definition.

The program provides two options for displaying the word cards: The words may be projected on an interactive whiteboard using the whiteboard activities provided with each lesson, or the reproducible wall word cards may be printed and posted where everyone can see them.

The word cards are also used during Ongoing Review activities. An interactive whiteboard activity is provided for displaying the words and prompts on each ongoing review day. For more information about Ongoing Review, see “Retaining the Words” on page xxv.

QUESTIONS AND ACTIVITIES

After the students have been introduced to a word, they practice using it by answering questions that require them to think about the word in other contexts. Many questions have them relate the word to their own experiences, and follow-up questions ask them to explain their thinking, encouraging them to think more deeply about the word. (When have you volunteered to help do something beneficial? Why did you volunteer?)

The students also use the words in a variety of activities:

- Act Out the Words. The students act out a word or guess which word you or a classmate is acting out.
- Create a Sentence. They use a vocabulary word in a sentence.
- Describe the Character. They choose the vocabulary word that best describes a character in a character sketch.
- Does That Make Sense? They decide whether or not a scenario that includes a vocabulary word makes sense.
- Find Another Word. They identify the vocabulary word that can replace an underlined word or words in a sentence. (Caleb found out his best friend is going to the same camp as he is. He was so happy he shouted with excitement. [whooped])
- Finish the Story. They choose the word that best completes a story they hear.
- I'm Thinking of a Word and Which Word Am I? They use clues you provide to figure out which word you are thinking of.
- Imagine That! They visualize a situation and then use the vocabulary word to discuss their mind pictures.
- Make a Choice. They use their knowledge of a word to make a choice about the word. (Which of these would clatter: pots and pans or blankets? Why?)
- Tell Me a Story. They hear the beginning of a story that includes a vocabulary word and they use their knowledge of the word to make up an ending for the story.
- What Do You Think About? They tell what they picture in their minds when they hear a word.
- What Might You Say or Do? They use a vocabulary word to tell what they might say or do in an imagined situation.
- What's the Missing Word? They identify the vocabulary word that can fill in the blank in a sentence. (On warm, sunny days, our cat, Percy, _____ in the sun and takes naps. [lounges])
- Which Word Goes With? They tell how a vocabulary word relates to a word they all know, such as school or cat.

INDEPENDENT WORD-LEARNING STRATEGIES

Research shows that students benefit from both learning individual words and learning strategies for determining the meanings of unknown words they hear or encounter in their independent reading. In grade 3, the students learn the following strategies:

- Recognizing synonyms
- Recognizing antonyms
- Using the prefixes un- and re- to determine word meanings
- Using the suffixes -est and -ful to determine word meanings
- Using context to determine word meanings
- Recognizing idioms
- Recognizing shades of meaning
- Recognizing words with multiple meanings
- Using a print dictionary to determine word meanings
- Using an online dictionary to determine word meanings
- Using a glossary to determine word meanings

Each strategy is introduced through the discussion of a vocabulary word. (For example, recognizing shades of meaning is introduced through the word plop in Week 3.) For additional practice in using the strategies, More Strategy Practice activities are provided periodically. Although these activities are optional, we encourage you to do them with your students. We believe the students will benefit from the additional exposure to the strategies. For tables of the strategies and the weeks in which they are introduced and reviewed, see Appendix C.

The table on the next page provides a snapshot of how independent word-learning strategies are developed across grades K–6.

ALIGNMENT WITH STANDARDS

Lessons in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide have been carefully designed to focus on standards aimed at vocabulary acquisition and use.

- Words taught or explored include both grade-appropriate general academic and domain-specific words. The general academic words taught as target words are identified with asterisks in Appendix B, “Grade 3 Words and Definitions.” For Extension activities in which domain-specific words are explored, see Appendix D, “Additional Activities.”

- Students practice using the words they are learning in both partner and whole-class conversations. Questions require the students to make real-life connections between the words and their own experiences. (The program’s focus on conversations about words, together with the teaching of social skills such as speaking clearly and listening carefully to others, also brings the program into alignment with standards for speaking and listening.)
- In lessons and review activities, the students explore the nuances of word meanings and relationships among words, including synonyms, antonyms, and shades of meaning.
- Students are formally taught grade-appropriate strategies they can use to figure out word meanings when reading independently. These include using context, identifying multiple meanings, recognizing idioms, and using prefixes, suffixes, and roots.

For more about how the program aligns to specific state standards, see the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

Teaching the Vocabulary Lessons

The grade 3 program consists of 30 weeks of lessons numbered consecutively throughout the year. Each week has five days of instruction. Beginning in Week 2, an Ongoing Review activity in which the students review previously taught words is included.

How a Week Is Organized

Each week begins with a Resources list, which specifies the physical materials and the supplemental activities for the entire week, while the Online Resources list indicates all the materials that are available digitally on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). The Resources list is followed by the week's Overview, which includes lists of the six vocabulary words taught that week, the five words reviewed during Ongoing Review, the word-learning strategies taught or reviewed during the week, and the vocabulary and social development focuses. A "Do Ahead" section contains suggestions for preparing for the week.

120 | Making Meaning Vocabulary Teaching Guide, Grade 3

Week 6 | 121

Each week includes five days of instruction. On Days 1 and 2, three words are taught and reviewed. On Days 3 and 4, three more words are taught and reviewed. On Day 5, five words previously taught are reviewed in an activity called "Ongoing Review." (Week 1, in which six words are reviewed during Ongoing Review, is an exception.)

The chart below shows how a week is structured.

Day 1	Day 2	Day 3	Day 4	Day 5
3 words taught	Day 1 words reviewed	3 words taught	Day 3 words reviewed	Ongoing Review

Teaching the Vocabulary Lessons with the Making Meaning Lessons

We suggest you teach the week’s lessons from the Vocabulary Teaching Guide the week after you teach the read-aloud text from the Making Meaning lessons in the Teacher’s Manual. (For example, teach Week 1 in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide a week after you have taught Unit 1, Week 1 in the Teacher’s Manual.) Waiting a week helps to ensure that the students have thoroughly discussed the read-aloud text before revisiting it during the vocabulary lessons. (If you prefer to teach the vocabulary lessons in the same week as you teach the read-aloud text in the Making Meaning lessons, be sure to completely finish the reading of the text, which may extend across two or more days, before you introduce the words. Otherwise, you run the risk of teaching words that the students have not encountered in the reading.)

The calendar below shows one way you might structure a week of Making Meaning lessons and vocabulary lessons.

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
Reading comprehension lesson	Reading comprehension lesson	Reading comprehension lesson	Reading comprehension lesson
Vocabulary lesson	Vocabulary lesson	Vocabulary lesson	Vocabulary lesson	Vocabulary Ongoing Review

For a table that shows each week of the vocabulary lessons, the read-aloud text you will use during that week, and the week in which that text was taught in the Making Meaning Teacher’s Manual, see Appendix A.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT AND COOPERATIVE STRUCTURES

Like the Making Meaning lessons in the Teacher's Manual, the lessons in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide help students develop socially and ethically as well as academically. During the lessons, the students frequently discuss words with their partners through the cooperative structures “Turn to Your Partner” and “Think, Pair, Share.” The cooperative structures increase the students’ engagement and accountability and ensure that all the students have opportunities to practice using the words.

We recommend that you use the same partners for the vocabulary lessons that you have assigned for the Making Meaning lessons. We also recommend that you incorporate the social focuses of the Making Meaning lessons into the vocabulary lessons. Social development focuses are provided with each vocabulary lesson. Reinforcing social skills as the students work together will help them develop caring and respectful relationships and create a safe and supportive classroom environment conducive to sharing their thinking.

Planning and Teaching the Lessons

To prepare to teach a week from the Vocabulary Teaching Guide, begin by reading the week’s introductory pages. The Resources list identifies the Making Meaning read-aloud text or texts, supplementary activities, and online resources for the week. The week’s Overview acquaints you with the vocabulary words and independent word-learning strategies to be taught and reviewed during the week, as well as the academic and social focuses of the week. In particular, review the “Do Ahead” section. It alerts you to any materials you need to gather or prepare for the week.

PREPARING FOR A LESSON

- Read the entire lesson. Pay particular attention to the questions and prompts and anticipate how your students will respond. Teacher Notes provide suggestions to support struggling students.
- Prepare or collect any necessary materials, including the appropriate Making Meaning read-aloud text.
- Practice reading aloud the part of the text that introduces each word. You might use self-stick notes to mark the starting and stopping points of the read-aloud. Focus on emphasizing the vocabulary word where it appears in the text.
- Review the definition of each word. You might write each definition on a self-stick note and place the note on the page of the read-aloud where the word is introduced.

- Review the word cards and how they are introduced in the lesson. (See “Using the Technology Features” on page xxv.)
- Plan any teacher examples or modeling required in the lesson.
- Review any More Strategy Practice, More ELL Support, or Extension activities in a lesson, and decide if and when you will do them. Collect any necessary materials.
- Plan how you will pace the lesson to keep it moving. A lesson is designed to take, on average, 15–20 minutes.

TIPS FOR TEACHING THE LESSONS

We offer the following tips to help you teach the lessons:

- Anticipate room arrangement needs. We recommend a classroom arrangement that allows for whole-class gatherings, discussions, and space for movement. A rug or library area is ideal. If this is not possible, arrange the students so that they can hear you clearly, see the read-aloud text, and participate in partner and whole-class discussions.
- Use the lesson definition. It is important to define each word as it is defined in the lesson. Each definition has been carefully written in simple, student-friendly language, and the activities have been developed based on the definitions.
- Correct ungrammatical responses by modeling standard language. During a discussion, a student may use a word in a way that shows he understands its meaning but that is incorrect grammatically (for example, “I determination to finish cleaning my room even though it was hard work”). We suggest you point out that the student’s response demonstrates that he knows what the word means and then restate his response using correct grammar (for example, “What you said shows that you know what determination means, but we usually say, ‘I was determined to finish cleaning my room even though it was hard work’”).

LESSON LENGTH AND PACING

The lessons take, on average, 15–20 minutes. Lessons in the first few weeks of the program may take longer as you practice the cooperative structures (“Turn to Your Partner” and “Think, Pair, Share”) and the students become accustomed to using the prompts. (See “Using the Prompts to Discuss the Words” on the next page.)

It is important to monitor the pace of the lessons, not only to complete them in a reasonable amount of time but also to help the students stay focused and engaged. To maintain the pace of the lessons, we suggest the following:

- Keep partner conversations brief.
- After partners have shared, have only one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class, even if other students have their hands up.
- During whole-class discussions, have only two or three volunteers share their thinking. If many students want to contribute to the discussion, use “Turn to Your Partner” to give partners an opportunity to share with each other. Then have only one or two volunteers share with the class.

USING THE PROMPTS TO DISCUSS THE WORDS

To learn a new word well, it is critical that the students use the word often and, whenever possible, in sentences. To facilitate this practice, we frequently ask the students to reply to questions with prompted responses. The prompts are a critical component of the program. They provide the students with the language they need to use a new word confidently and successfully. The prompts also ensure that the students will actually say the vocabulary word as they discuss it during partner and whole-class sharing, which is important if they are to learn and remember the word. In addition, the prompts support the students’ oral language development and are especially helpful to English Language Learners.

To encourage the students to use the prompts, you might display them using the whiteboard activities provided with each lesson, or print and display the prompts where everyone can see them using the printable prompts you will find on the CCC Learning Hub. Once the students have become accustomed to using the prompts, they might choose to use a word in a sentence of their own. That is fine. What is important is that the students say the word as they discuss it and use that word correctly.

FULL AND ABBREVIATED LESSONS

In Weeks 1–5 of the program, all the procedures for introducing words and conducting activities have been fully written out to support you as you become familiar with the program. We refer to these lessons as “full lessons.” By Week 6 you will be familiar with most of the procedures. For this reason, the language of the procedures has been abbreviated. In the first two weeks of these “abbreviated lessons,” a Teacher Note will direct you to the full version of a procedure in Weeks 1–5 should you wish to review it.

HELPFUL LESSON FEATURES

The lessons include a number of features that help you navigate the instruction, and that provide background information, tips, and supplemental activities to extend or support word learning. These lesson features are listed in the table below.

Helpful Lesson Features

- Topic Notes. These notes appear at the beginning of some lessons and provide background information about important aspects of the instruction, including lesson structure, purpose, pedagogy, and approach.
- Teacher Notes. These notes appear in the lesson margins and alert you to a variety of things, including the purposes of various activities, hints for reviewing previously taught words, and ways to support struggling students. Notes also provide additional information about the words themselves.
- Cooperative Structure Icons. These icons indicate where in a lesson a cooperative structure, “Turn to Your Partner” or “Think, Pair, Share,” is used.
- Whiteboard Activity Icons. These icons show where in a lesson a whiteboard activity is used.
- “You might say.” This feature provides sample language you can draw on when you model how a word is used. If the students struggle to understand or use a word, you might use “You might say” suggestions to provide support.
- ELL Notes. These notes suggest ideas for supporting your English Language Learners. Spanish cognates are provided for some words. (See “Support for English Language Learners (ELLs)” on page xxx.)
- More ELL Support Activities. These supplemental activities focus on building English Language Learners’ vocabulary and oral language skills.
- Prompt Cues. The word PROMPT identifies language you can use to prompt the students’ responses to a question or activity. Each prompt relates to the vocabulary word being discussed.
- Class Vocabulary Assessment Notes. These notes help you observe and assess the whole class during Ongoing Review activities. (See “Assessments” on page xxvii.)
- Technology Tips. These tips suggest ways you might use an interactive whiteboard or other technology during a lesson.
- More Strategy Practice Activities. These optional activities provide the students with further instruction and practice in independent word-learning strategies, such as recognizing synonyms and antonyms and using context to determine word meanings.
- Extension Activities. These supplemental activities extend student learning by exploring independent word-learning strategies not formally taught in the program, figurative language, and other interesting ways that authors use words.

Using the Technology Features

The Making Meaning program incorporates digital technology to enhance your students' learning experience and streamline your preparation, instruction, and assessment processes. For information on the Digital Teacher's Set, the CCC Learning Hub, and the CCC ClassView app, see "Digital Teacher Resources" in the Introduction of the Teacher's Manual.

For teaching the vocabulary lessons, a variety of online resources have been developed to directly support the vocabulary instruction for each week and are available on the CCC Learning Hub. For more information, see the "Using the CCC Learning Hub" tutorial (AV39).

- Whiteboard activities. These interactive activities allow you to display the words as they are taught during the week, display the prompts as they are used in a day's lesson, and, on occasion, guide students seamlessly through games and activities used to review the words in Days 2, 4, and 5. For more information, see the "Using CCC's Whiteboard Activities" tutorial (AV40).
- Printable reproducibles. These resources, including weekly family letters, word cards, and crossword puzzles, provide additional lesson support for students and their families. For more information on how these can be used, see "Additional Ways to Review the Words" on the next page.
- Assessment forms. These online forms allow you to record the students' progress on both class and individual assessments. You can print these forms from the CCC Learning Hub or use the CCC ClassView app to electronically record data for the class. For more information about the CCC ClassView app, view the "Using the CCC ClassView App" tutorial (AV41).
- Professional development media and technology tutorials. These brief videos help you with effective implementation of the lessons. Technology Tips, located in the margins of the lessons, alert you to these videos and also suggest ways to incorporate technology into the instruction.

Retaining the Words

Research shows that students need multiple encounters with a word to make it a permanent part of their vocabulary. The Vocabulary Teaching Guide provides opportunities for the students to frequently hear and practice using the words they are learning.

ONGOING REVIEW ACTIVITIES

On Day 5 of each week, the students review previously learned words through Ongoing Review activities. These activities are similar to the activities used in the lessons. An interactive whiteboard activity is provided for displaying the cards, prompts, and occasional interactive games and activities for each Ongoing Review day. Additionally, reproducible word cards for the review words are provided on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

INTEGRATING PREVIOUSLY TAUGHT WORDS INTO LESSONS

To further support the students' word retention, words that have been taught in the program are sometimes reused in the introduction of a new word or in an activity. In these cases, a Teacher Note provides the word's definition so you can review it with the students.

ADDITIONAL WAYS TO REVIEW THE WORDS

We encourage you to look for opportunities outside of vocabulary time to review the words and help the students retain their meanings. You might:

- Use the words when you talk with the students.
- Encourage the students to use the words with their classmates. When you hear a word used, call attention to it.
- Encourage the students to use the words in their writing.
- Invite the students to listen and look for the words outside of the classroom. Track the words they hear and see by writing them on a classroom chart. If you hear a word used outside of class, discuss the use of the word with the students.
- Reproducible word cards in a small size are available for each week on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). Make copies of the appropriate cards each week, one set for each student. Have the students keep the cards to review in class, or have them take the cards home to practice the words with their families.
- Each week send a family letter home with the students that includes a list of the words and definitions they are learning. You will find weekly family letters, in both English and Spanish, on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). Ask the students to review and practice the words with family members.
- Keep copies of word cards in a learning center. The students can use the cards for word sorts and games such as "Concentration" and "Go Fish." Encourage the students to invent their own games using the cards and to play vocabulary games such as "Which Word Am I?"
- Make crossword puzzles and word searches using the words. Reproducible crossword puzzles are also available on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

Creating a Word-rich Classroom

Creating a classroom in which words are valued and enjoyed is an important step in helping your students develop an appreciation for words and word learning. Here are some suggestions for building a word-rich classroom:

- Exhibit your own curiosity about words. Talk about interesting words you see and hear and invite the students to share their own interesting words.
- Apply sophisticated words to everyday classroom situations.
- Encourage the students to suggest words for the class to learn. Collect the words in a suggestion box or list them on a chart. Choose some words to explore as a class.
- Make word resources available, including various dictionaries, a thesaurus, books of puns and riddles, stories and poems that use wordplay, and books of word games such as crossword puzzles and word searches.
- Play language games such as “Telephone,” sing songs, chant rhymes, and introduce the students to puns and riddles.
- Notice playful or creative uses of language in and outside of class, including made-up words, interesting proper names, idioms, and figures of speech such as metaphors, similes, and personification. Discuss these words with your students, model thinking of additional examples, and invite the students to give examples.

Assessments

The assessment tools in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide are designed to help you evaluate your students’ knowledge of the words they are learning and make informed instructional decisions as you progress through the program. Both formative and summative assessment tools are provided.

You will find record sheets for all assessments, as well as instructions and student response sheets for individual assessments, in the Assessment Resource Book. You may choose to record your students’ progress using printed copies of the forms from the Assessment Resource Book or through the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). Alternatively, you can use the CCC ClassView app to electronically record, sort, synthesize, and report assessment data for each student and the whole class. For more information, see “CCC ClassView App” in the Introduction of the Teacher’s Manual.

FORMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Formative assessments help you reflect on your students' vocabulary growth over time through class observation and support you in differentiating instruction as necessary.

Class Vocabulary Assessment

Class Vocabulary Assessment Notes occur every two weeks (in Weeks 2, 4, 6, etc.) during the Ongoing Review activity. They are designed to help you evaluate the performance and needs of the whole class. During this assessment, we suggest that you walk around and observe the students. Ask yourself the questions in the Class Vocabulary Assessment Note and follow up as appropriate with the suggested interventions. You can record your observations on the corresponding "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA). Additional suggestions for reviewing and practicing words can be found in "Retaining the Words" on page xxv.

SUMMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Individual Vocabulary Assessment

At grades 2–6, the Individual Vocabulary Assessment is designed to help you assess individual students' knowledge of the words. The assessment occurs after Weeks 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, and 30. These multiple-choice assessments use activity formats familiar to the students from the weekly lessons. The students record their answers on the corresponding "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check" answer sheet (IA). You will find teacher instruction sheets and reproducible answer sheets in the Assessment Resource Book and on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

Student Self-assessment

At grades 2–6, the Student Self-assessment gives the students an opportunity to take responsibility for their learning by reflecting on their knowledge of the words using the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA). Analysis of the response sheets alerts you to words in need of further review and practice.

We recommend that you administer the Student Self-assessment in place of or in addition to the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, with the students evaluating their knowledge of words you select. Suggestions for using the results of the assessment are included on the instruction sheet.

Other Ways to Assess Individual Progress

The Individual Vocabulary Assessment and Student Self-assessment are two useful tools for measuring an individual student’s word knowledge. We encourage you to consider using one or more of the following tasks periodically to provide you with additional information about a student’s understanding of the words:

- Ask the student what he or she knows about a word.
- Have the student use words he or she chooses to write or tell a story.
- Have the student act out a word.
- Have the student make a picture card that illustrates what the word means.

For more information about the assessments in the vocabulary lessons, see “About Vocabulary Assessment” in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

Special Considerations

Support for English Language Learners (ELLs)

Learning new vocabulary can be especially challenging for ELLs. Strategies identified by researchers as “best practice” in ELL vocabulary instruction are inherent in the design of the vocabulary lessons. They are summarized in the table below.

ELL Vocabulary Instruction Strategies in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide

ELL Strategies	Use in the Vocabulary Lessons
Introduce a word in a meaningful context.	Each word is introduced through a familiar read-aloud text.
Define the word in clear, simple language.	Lessons provide classroom-tested, student-friendly definitions.
Use visual aids to support word learning.	When appropriate, lessons use text, photographs, and illustrations or real objects to make word meanings concrete. Teachers or student volunteers frequently act out words.
Model the way words are used.	Lessons include language that teachers can use to model or explain how a word is used. Prompts model for students how to use a word correctly.
Help students connect words to personal experience.	Teacher questions “personalize” a word by having students use the word to talk about themselves and their experiences.
Provide many opportunities to discuss and use a word in a variety of contexts.	Students practice using a word in various ways and review the word frequently.
Invite students to respond to words physically by associating a word with an action, gesture, or expression.	Students act out words and use gestures and expressions to convey meaning during role-playing activities.
Review words frequently.	Ongoing review activities give students a chance to review words each week.

ADDITIONAL ELL SUPPORT

The program also includes these features to provide further support to ELLs:

- ELL Notes. These notes provide specific suggestions for modifying or enhancing instruction during a lesson to support ELLs. Suggestions include using realia (real objects) to introduce words, defining unfamiliar words in the activities, or simplifying activities and questions.
- Spanish cognates. An ELL Note will alert you when a Spanish cognate (a Spanish word that has a pronunciation, meaning, and spelling similar to an English word—for example, prefer/preferir) is provided for a word taught in the program. During a lesson, you might write the Spanish cognate underneath the English word and briefly point out letters and sounds that are the same or similar in both words. Research shows that teaching cognate awareness accelerates the English language vocabulary development of Spanish-speaking ELLs. For help in pronouncing the Spanish cognates, see Appendix E.
- More ELL Support activities. More ELL Support activities are provided in some weeks and give ELLs additional opportunities to build vocabulary and oral language skills.
- Spanish family letters. Weekly family letters provided on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) are available in Spanish and include the vocabulary words and definitions.

For more information about English Language Learners and how to support them, see “Support for English Language Learners (ELLs)” in the Introduction of the Making Meaning Teacher’s Manual.

Building the Home-School Connection

Keeping families informed about their children’s participation in the vocabulary program helps family members understand and appreciate how their children are building their vocabulary and how they can support that development.

FAMILY LETTERS

We provide a letter to send home with the students at the end of each week, available in both English and Spanish. Each letter includes the week’s words and meanings and suggestions for helping the students review the words and build their word-learning skills. The family letters are included in the Online Resources list for each week and can be accessed via the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

Introduce Whiz, Squirm, and Rap

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words whiz, squirm, and rap
- Discuss words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Practice using “Turn to Your Partner”
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Taught

whiz (p. 3)

Whiz means “move very fast.” Some things that whiz make a buzzing or hissing sound.

squirm (p. 5)

Squirm means “wiggle, or twist your body from side to side, usually because you are bored or uncomfortable.”

rap (p. 10)

Rap means “tap or hit something sharply (forcefully) and quickly.” Rap is also a “type of music in which words are spoken in time to music with a steady beat.”

ABOUT PROMPTED RESPONSES

To learn a new word well, it is critical that the students use the word often and, whenever possible, in sentences. To facilitate this practice, we frequently ask the students to reply to questions with prompted responses. These structured responses may seem awkward or stilted initially, but the students will soon become comfortable using them. It is important for the students to use the prompts in both whole-class discussions and partner conversations.

We recommend that you project the prompts for each word using an interactive whiteboard. Alternatively, you might display them using a document camera or write them on chart paper. For more information about the prompts, see “Using the Prompts to Discuss the Words” in the Introduction.

ABOUT RECOGNIZING WORDS WITH MULTIPLE MEANINGS

This week we introduce the students to recognizing words with multiple meanings, a strategy they can use independently to figure out the meanings of unfamiliar words. The students learn that many words have more than one meaning and that often the meanings are very different. They learn that if they encounter a word with multiple meanings as they listen to or read a text, they

"About Prompted Responses" and "About Recognizing Words with Multiple Meanings" (all, beginning on page 5 and continuing on to page 6)

Teacher Note

Incorporate this week’s social development focuses into the lessons by encouraging the students to listen respectfully to one another and to take responsibility for their learning and behavior. At the end of a lesson, you might ask the students what they did to be good listeners. For more about social development in the vocabulary lessons, see “Social Development and Cooperative Structures” in the Introduction.

Teacher Note

This lesson may require an extended class period. You might want to stop the lesson at the end of Step 5 and then finish the lesson later in the day or the next day.

Teacher Note

The students can work within partnerships already established during the Making Meaning lessons, or you may assign new partners for the vocabulary lessons. For more information on assigning partners randomly, see “Social Development and Cooperative Structures” in the Introduction.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty thinking of words, stimulate their thinking by asking questions such as “What is a word you use a lot?” “What is a word you think is fun to say?” and “What is a word that makes you think happy thoughts?”

ELL Note

English Language Learners may struggle to understand verbal definitions. Using the illustrations from the book to introduce a word provides the students with critical visual support for learning the word’s meaning.

can usually figure out the correct meaning by thinking about how the word is used. This week the students explore multiple meanings of the word rap. For a complete table of words with multiple meanings taught in grade 3 and the weeks in which they are introduced, see Appendix C. For more information about recognizing words with multiple meanings and other word-learning strategies, see “Independent Word-learning Strategies” in the Introduction.

GET READY TO LEARN NEW WORDS

1 Introduce the Vocabulary Lessons

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. If necessary, review the procedure for gathering on the rug. Remind the students of your expectations for how they should move and sit.

Introduce the vocabulary lessons by telling the students that this year they will learn many new and interesting words that they can use when they talk with one another and when they write. Tell them how much you enjoy learning and using words, and then share some of your favorite words with the class.

You might say:

“One of my favorite words is delicious because I love delicious food. Another of my favorite words is giggle because I love to hear my daughter giggle, and giggle is a fun word to say.”

Briefly discuss as a class:

Q What are some of your favorite words? Why do you like those words?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

INTRODUCE AND USE WHIZ

2 Introduce and Define Whiz

Tell the students that the words they will learn this year are from or about the read-aloud books in the Making Meaning lessons. Show the cover of Miss Nelson Is Missing! and read the title and the names of the author and illustrator aloud. Remind the students that they heard this story earlier and explain that today’s words are from the story.

Show page 3 and remind the students that at the beginning of the story the children in Miss Nelson’s class are misbehaving. Read page 3 aloud, emphasizing the word whizzed.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is whiz, and explain that whiz means “move very fast.” Explain that some things that whiz make a buzzing or hissing sound. Point to the paper planes in the picture on page 3 and explain that as the planes whizzed, or moved very fast, through the air, they may have made a buzzing sound.

Display word card 1 (🔊 WA1) and have the students say the word whiz.

3 Introduce Using the Prompts

Tell the students that to learn a new word like whiz well, it is important that they use the word in sentences. Explain that saying the word in a sentence will help them learn to pronounce the word, use it correctly, and remember its meaning.

Tell the students that as they discuss questions about the word whiz and other words, you will give them sentence starters, which are sentences that they will use to answer the questions. Tell the students that these sentence starters are called “prompts,” and explain that the students will use prompts to discuss the words today. Click ❶ on word card 1 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt.

4 Play “Whizzing or Not Whizzing?” and Practice Using the Prompts

Tell the students that partners will play “Whizzing or Not Whizzing?” Explain that you will describe something or someone that is either whizzing or not whizzing. Tell the students that when you say “Turn to your partner,” partners will discuss whether the thing or person you described is whizzing or not whizzing and explain why they think so.

Begin by saying:

- A turtle is moving slowly through the grass.

Ask:

 Q Is the turtle whizzing through the grass? Why do you think that?

Point to prompt 1. Then say “Turn to your partner” and have partners use the prompt to share their thinking.

whiz

PROMPT 1: The turtle [is/is not] whizzing through the grass because . . .

Technology Tip

Whiteboard activities (WAs) can be displayed using an interactive whiteboard. Alternatively, you may print the whiteboard activities and project them using a projection device. For more information, view the “Using CCC’s Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV40).

Teacher Note

We suggest you display word card 1 (WA1) on an interactive whiteboard and click the appropriate number to reveal each prompt as it is used.

Teacher Note

If necessary, review the procedures for “Turn to Your Partner” (see Step 1 in Unit 1, Week 1, Day 2 of the Teacher’s Manual).

ELL Note

Prompts are especially helpful to students with limited English proficiency. For more information about supporting English Language Learners, see “Support for English Language Learners (ELLs)” in the Introduction.

Teacher Note

Follow this procedure for all subsequent “Turn to Your Partner” activities.

Teacher Note

Repeating the definition of the word and having the students pronounce it provides another opportunity for the students to hear the word and think about its meaning.

Teacher Note

You may wish to explain that people might also squirm when they are nervous, frightened, or excited.

Teacher Note

If necessary, model the movement yourself.

ELL Note

Seeing words acted out and acting out words themselves are especially beneficial to English Language Learners who may struggle to understand a verbal definition.

PROMPT 1: “The turtle [is/is not] whizzing through the grass because . . .”

When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, have the students discuss:

- A train is speeding down the tracks at 100 miles per hour.

Q Is the train whizzing down the tracks? Why do you think that?
[Click 2 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The train [is/is not] whizzing down the tracks because . . .”

Point to the word whiz and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “move very fast”?

INTRODUCE AND USE SQUIRM

5 Introduce and Define Squirm

Show pages 4–5 of Miss Nelson Is Missing! and read both pages aloud, emphasizing the word squirmed.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is squirm, and explain that squirm means “wiggle, or twist your body from side to side, usually because you are bored or uncomfortable.” Explain that the children in Miss Nelson’s class would not sit still and pay attention. Instead, they squirmed—or wiggled—in their seats.

Display word card 2 ( WA2) and have the students say the word squirm.

6 Act Out Squirming

Ask the students to imagine that they are uncomfortable sitting on the rug and are squirming. Then ask a volunteer to show the class what it looks like to squirm.

Discuss as a class:

Q What did you see [Alicia] doing when she squirmed?

Click 1 on word card 2 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: When _____ squirmed, [he/she] . . .

PROMPT 1: “When [Alicia] squirmed, she . . .”

Have the students act out squirming on the rug.

7 Discuss Times the Students Have Squirmed

Explain that most people squirm occasionally, and give a few examples of times you have squirmed.

You might say:

“I was sitting on a hard park bench, and after a while I began to squirm because the bench was uncomfortable. Sometimes if I’m watching a movie that isn’t interesting, I start to squirm in my seat because I’m bored.”

Ask:

Q When have you squirmed in your seat because you were uncomfortable or bored? [Click 2 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I squirmed in my seat when . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word squirm and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “wiggle, or twist your body from side to side, usually because you are bored or uncomfortable”?

INTRODUCE AND USE RAP

8 Introduce and Define Rap

Show pages 10–11 of Miss Nelson Is Missing! and review that in this part of the story the children first meet Miss Swamp. Read the pages aloud, emphasizing the word rapped.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is rap, and explain that rap means “tap or hit something sharply (forcefully) and quickly.” Explain that Miss Swamp wants to get the noisy children’s attention, so she raps on the desk—taps on it sharply and quickly—with a ruler. Model rapping by tapping sharply and quickly on a desk or table with a ruler.

Display word card 3 (🎧 WA3) and have the students say the word rap.

9 Act Out Rapping

Ask a volunteer to show the class what rapping on a desk or table with his knuckles looks like. Then ask:

Q What did you see [Amal] do when he rapped on the [desk/table]?

Click 1 on word card 3 (WA3) to reveal the first prompt and have a few volunteers use it to share their thinking.

PROMPT 1: When _____ rapped on the _____, [he/she] . . .

WA3

Teacher Note

You may want to model the difference between rapping and lightly tapping.

Teacher Note

If no student is able to model rapping, model it yourself.

Teacher Note

You might say “blank” for the missing word or words and explain that this is where the students use their own words to answer the question.

PROMPT 1: “When [Amal] rapped on the [desk/table], he . . .”

Ask:

Q Why might you rap on someone’s door? [Click 2 on WA3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I might rap on someone’s door because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students' attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word rap and ask:

Q What's the new word we are learning that means "tap something sharply and quickly"?

10 Discuss Another Meaning of Rap

Tell the students that words often have more than one meaning and that sometimes the meanings are very different. Discuss as a class:

Q What else do you know about the word rap?

If necessary, explain that rap is also a "type of music in which words are spoken in time to music with a steady beat."

Point to the word rap and ask:

Q What's the new word we are learning that means "tap or hit something sharply (forcefully) and quickly" and is also a type of music?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

---

EXTENSION

Explore Onomatopoeia

Explain that the word whiz is an example of onomatopoeia and that onomatopoeia is "a type of word that sounds like the thing it is describing." Point out that when you say whiz, the word sounds like the noise something makes when it whizzes. Discuss other examples of onomatopoeia, such as beep, buzz, crunch, quack, oink, moo, slurp, and squish. Ask the students for additional examples.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing words with multiple meanings, you might search online using the keywords "whiteboard multiple-meaning words activities." For more information, view the "Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities" tutorial (AV42).

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of the introductory family letter (BLMI). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Teacher Note

You might create a chart titled "Onomatopoeia." Invite the students to listen and look for other examples, discuss them, and add them to the chart. Encourage the students to use onomatopoeia in their writing.

For examples of onomatopoeia, visit the CCC Learning Hub (cccllearninghub.org) to view the "Onomatopoeia" list in the General Resources section.

Day 2

Review Whiz, Squirm, and Rap

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, talk about a word you thought was fun to discuss. For example, say “I think the word squirm was fun to talk about because it was funny when you acted out squirming on the rug. I also thought it was fun when we talked about the word rap because you had some funny ideas about why you might rap on someone’s door.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words whiz, squirm, and rap from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

whiz

Whiz means “move very fast.” Some things that whiz make a buzzing or hissing sound.

squirm

Squirm means “wiggle, or twist your body from side to side, usually because you are bored or uncomfortable.”

rap

Rap means “tap or hit something sharply (forcefully) and quickly.” Rap is also a “type of music in which words are spoken in time to music with a steady beat.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

If necessary, review the procedure for gathering on the rug; then gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you.

Display the daily review cards (WA4). Remind the students that yesterday they learned three words from the story Miss Nelson Is Missing! Explain that today they will talk more about the words. Point to each of the following words as you review the pronunciation and meaning: whiz, squirm, and rap.

Discuss as a class:

- Q Which of the words we learned yesterday do you think was especially fun to talk about? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA4) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: I think the word _____ was especially fun to talk about because . . .

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [whiz] was especially fun to talk about because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Game “Which Word Goes With?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Which Word Goes With?” Explain that you will write a word the students know, like bus or rock, where everyone can see it and the students will think about which of the vocabulary words goes with the word you wrote. Tell the students that when you say “Turn to your partner,” partners will discuss their thinking. Then you will ask some partners to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that the word you write might go with more than one of the vocabulary words. Tell the students that partners may not always agree and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Tell the students that before they do the activity in pairs, they will practice as a class. Write the word bus where everyone can see it and read the word aloud. Direct the students’ attention to the daily review cards (WA4) and ask:

Q Which of these words do you think goes with bus? Why do you think that?

Give the students a few moments to think about the questions. Then click 2 to reveal the prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I think [whiz] goes with bus because . . .”

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble answering the questions, think aloud about associations you might make and why. For example, say “I think whiz goes with bus because a bus that is going really, really fast would whiz down the highway. I think squirm goes with bus, too, because sometimes people squirm in their seats during a long ride on a bus. I think rap can go with bus, also, because you might rap on the window of a bus to get someone’s attention.”

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble making associations, think aloud about associations you might make or ask questions such as “How might the word whiz go with rock? When might a rock whiz by you?” “How might the word squirm go with rock? Might you squirm if you were sitting on a rock? Why?” and “How might the word rap go with rock? How might you use a rock to rap on something?”

Remind the students that there are no right or wrong responses. What is important is that the students explain the thinking behind their associations and demonstrate an understanding of the word’s meaning.

Write the word rock where everyone can see it and read the word aloud. Then ask:

Q Which of these words do you think goes with rock? Why do you think that? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I think [whiz] goes with rock because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Tell the students that tomorrow they will learn and talk about three new words.

Day 3

Introduce Snap, Likely, and Unlikely

Materials

- Miss Nelson Is Missing!
- Word card 4 (WA5)
- Word cards 5–6 (WA6)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words snap, likely, and unlikely
- Discuss the prefix un-
- Discuss antonyms
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Taught

snap (p. 10)

Snap means “speak sharply or angrily.”

likely (p. 20)

When something is likely, it probably will happen or is probably true.

unlikely

Unlikely means “not likely.” When something is unlikely, it probably will not happen or is probably not true.

ABOUT CONCEPT WORDS

Most words taught in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide are taken directly from the read-aloud texts used in the Making Meaning program. Occasionally, however, we teach a word that does not appear in the book. We refer to those words as concept words. In the week in which they are introduced, concept words appear in italics in word lists.

In some cases, we teach a concept word because it enables us to introduce or review an important independent word-learning strategy, such as recognizing antonyms or using a prefix to determine a word's meaning. For example, on Day 3 of this week, the concept word unlikely is taught with likely to introduce the students to antonyms and the prefix un-. In other cases, we teach a concept word because it represents a concept or idea that is important to the story and worthwhile for the students to know. For example, we teach the concept word obstinate in connection with the book Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move (Week 10) because it describes an important aspect of the main character's personality and is a synonym for the word stubborn. For more information about concept words, see "The Words" in the Introduction.

ABOUT USING PREFIXES AND SUFFIXES TO DETERMINE WORD MEANINGS

Research shows that teaching students to use word parts such as prefixes and suffixes to unlock word meanings can help them become more proficient independent word-learners and contribute to their vocabulary growth (White 1989). This week the students learn the first of four word parts they will explore this year: the prefix un-, meaning "not." In subsequent lessons, they will learn the prefix re- (again) and the suffixes -ful (full of) and -est (most). For tables of the prefixes and suffixes taught, the words through which they are introduced, and the lessons in which they are taught and reviewed, see Appendix C. For more information about using prefixes and suffixes and other word-learning strategies, see "Independent Word-learning Strategies" in the Introduction.

ABOUT RECOGNIZING ANTONYMS

In this lesson, the students are introduced to antonyms, or "words with opposite meanings," through the words likely and unlikely. In subsequent lessons, some of the antonyms they will learn are unfortunate and fortunate, immature and mature, predator and prey, and aggressive and unaggressive. Discussing a word and its opposite requires students to think about the critical attributes of the words and helps them understand and remember the words. We suggest you start an antonym chart this week and add to it during the year as the students learn new antonyms (see the more strategy practice activity "Start an Antonym Chart" on page 19). For a complete table of the antonyms taught in grade 3 and the weeks in which they are introduced, see Appendix C.

Steps 1–3 (all,
beginning on page
16 and continuing to page 17)

INTRODUCE AND USE SNAP

1 Introduce and Define Snap

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you.

Direct the students' attention to the book Miss Nelson Is Missing! and remind them that they learned three words from the story. Explain that today they will learn three more words from or about the story.

Show pages 10–11 of the book and review that in this part of the story the children first meet Miss Swamp. Read the pages aloud, emphasizing the word snapped.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is snap, and explain that snap means “speak sharply or angrily.” Point out that Miss Swamp is angry with the children because they are misbehaving. When they ask where Miss Nelson is, Miss Swamp snaps at them, or speaks angrily. Reread Miss Swamp’s words in a sharp tone: “Never mind that! Open those arithmetic books!”

Display word card 4 (🎧 WA5) and have the students say the word snap.

2 Discuss Snap

Ask:

Q How might you feel if someone snapped at you? Why?

Click 1 on word card 4 (WA5) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

snap

PROMPT 1: If someone snapped at me, I might feel _____ because . . .

WA5

PROMPT 1: “If someone snapped at me, I might feel [angry] because . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q What might you say to someone who snapped at you?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “If someone snapped at me, I might say . . .”

3 Discuss Whether Olive Snapped

Explain that you are going to tell something that an imaginary third-grader named Olive said. Partners will decide whether or not Olive snapped when she spoke and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice, slowly and clearly.

- Olive’s friend asked her if she wanted to go for a bike ride. “I can’t,” said Olive with a smile. “But thanks for asking me.”

Ask:

Q Did Olive snap? Why do you think that? [Click 3 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I [think/don’t think] Olive snapped because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- Olive was working on a jigsaw puzzle. “Can I help you with the puzzle?” asked Olive’s little brother. “No, you cannot,” said Olive in an angry voice. “Stop bothering me.”

Point to the word snap and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “speak sharply or angrily”?

INTRODUCE AND USE LIKELY AND UNLIKELY

4 Introduce and Define Likely

Show pages 20–21 of Miss Nelson Is Missing! Review that in this part of the story the children are wondering what happened to Miss Nelson. Read pages 20–24 aloud, emphasizing the word likely.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is likely, and explain that when something is likely, it probably will happen or is probably true. Explain that it did not seem likely that Miss Nelson was eaten by sharks, went to Mars, or was carried off by butterflies because those things probably would not happen.

Display word cards 5–6 (WA6) and click to reveal word card 5. Have the students say the word likely.

Teacher Note

Olive is an imaginary character who appears frequently in activities during the year. If the students know someone whose name is Olive, you may want to select another name for the character.

Teacher Note

You might explain to the students that the word to which one adds a prefix is sometimes known as a base word.

Teacher Note

For more practice with antonyms, see the more strategy practice activity “Start an Antonym Chart” on page 19.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing antonyms, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard antonyms activities.” To find web-based activities that focus on using prefixes to determine word meanings, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard prefixes activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

5 Introduce Unlikely, the Prefix un-, and Antonyms

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is unlikely. Click to reveal word card 6 on word cards 5–6 (WA6) and have students say the word unlikely.

Point to the prefix un- in unlikely and explain that un- is a prefix. Tell the students that a prefix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the prefix un- means “not” and that when un- is added to the word likely, it makes the word unlikely, which means “not likely.” Explain that when something is unlikely, it probably will not happen or is probably not true. Remind the students that it is unlikely that Miss Nelson was eaten by sharks, went to Mars, or was carried off by butterflies.

Point out that likely and unlikely are antonyms, and explain that antonyms are “words with opposite meanings.”

6 Discuss What the Students Are Likely and Unlikely to Do After School

Remind the students that when something is likely to happen, it probably will happen.

Ask:

Q What are you likely to do after school today? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA6

likely      unlikely

PROMPT 1: After school, I'm likely to . . .

1    2

PROMPT 1: “After school, I’m likely to . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Follow up by asking each volunteer:

Q Why are you likely to [play soccer with Eve and Jocasta] after school?

Remind the students that when something is unlikely to happen, it probably will not happen. Then have the students discuss the following question using the same procedure:

Q What are you unlikely to do after school today? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “After school, I’m unlikely to . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Follow up by asking each volunteer:

Q Why are you unlikely to [visit your grandmother in Florida] after school?

Point to the words likely and unlikely and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “probably will happen or is probably true”?

Q What is the antonym of likely?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

More Strategy Practice activities provide the students with additional opportunities to review and use an independent word-learning strategy. The activities are optional and can be done at the end of a lesson or at another time.

Start an Antonym Chart

Help the students develop an understanding of antonyms by starting an antonym chart. Write the title “Antonyms” on a sheet of chart paper and post the chart where everyone can see it. Remind the students that antonyms are “words with opposite meanings” and that they discussed the antonyms likely and unlikely. Review the meanings of likely and unlikely and write the words on the chart.

Invite the students to suggest other antonyms and add them to the chart. (If the students have trouble thinking of antonyms, stimulate their thinking by providing a few more examples, such as forward and backward, long and short, and rise and fall.) Throughout the year, encourage the students to share other antonyms they think of with the class; then add the antonyms the students suggest to the chart.

Teacher Note

Listen as partners share their thinking. If the students are struggling to answer the question, call for their attention and give some examples of things they are unlikely to do after school (for example, tear up their homework, stay up late, play outside after dark, read 100 chapter books, or build a rocket ship). Then ask the question again.

---

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker

---

Teacher Note

Post the “Antonyms” chart to use throughout the year.

Discuss the Multiple Meanings of Snap

Remind the students that words often have more than one meaning and that sometimes the meanings are very different. Write snap where everyone can see it and remind the students that snap means "speak sharply or angrily." Discuss as a class:

Q What else do you know about the word snap?

If necessary, ask follow-up questions such as:

Q If a turtle snaps, what does it do?

Q If the cap on a marker snaps shut, what does it do?

Q If you snap a twig, what do you do?

Explain that snap can mean any of the following:

- "Bite or grab suddenly," as when a turtle snaps at its food
- "Close with a clicking sound," as when a marker cap snaps shut
- "Break with a loud cracking sound," as when you snap a twig

Tell the students that when they hear a word like snap that has more than one meaning, they can usually figure out the correct meaning by thinking about how the word is used. Explain that you will read a sentence that uses the word snap. Students will decide which definition of snap is the correct meaning in the sentence.

Read the following sentence aloud:

- The fox snapped at the hen.

Ask:

Q What does snap mean in the sentence? Why do you think that?

Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT: "I think snap means ['bite or grab suddenly'] because . . ."

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- Jerome's mother snapped at him for playing with his food.
- A tree outside our house snapped in the storm.
- Susie filled the container with rice and snapped the lid shut.

Review Snap, Likely, and Unlikely

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words snap, likely, and unlikely from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

snap

Snap means “speak sharply or angrily.”

likely

When something is likely, it probably will happen or is probably true.

unlikely

Unlikely means “not likely.” When something is unlikely, it probably will not happen or is probably not true.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you.

Display the daily review cards (WA7). Remind the students that yesterday they learned three words from or about Miss Nelson Is Missing! Point to each of the following words as you review the pronunciation and meaning: snap, likely, and unlikely. Tell the students that today they will think more about these words.

Discuss as a class:

- Q Which of the words we learned yesterday might you use in your writing? How might you use the word?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA7)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM2) for each student

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, give examples of how they might use a word in a story, poem, or other writing. For example, say “If you were writing a story and someone said something angrily, you might use the word snapped instead of said because snapped means ‘spoke sharply or angrily.’ You might also use snap in a poem because it rhymes with lots of other words like rap, clap, and tap. If you were writing in your journal about what you might do this weekend, you might use the word likely to tell about the things you will probably do.”

snap      likely      unlikely

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____ in my writing. I might write . . .

1   2   3   4   5

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [unlikely] in my writing. I might write . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Discuss Whether We Would Be Likely or Unlikely to Snap

Ask the students to imagine the following situation:

- You are in a bad mood. You want to be left alone, but your friend keeps pestering you and asking you over and over, “What’s the matter? What’s the matter?”

Ask:

Q Would you be likely or unlikely to snap at your friend? Why? [Click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If my friend is pestering me, I would be [likely/unlikely] to snap at her because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3 Discuss What We Are Likely and Unlikely to Do This Evening

Tell the students that you will ask them a question about something they might do this evening, and partners will discuss whether they are likely or unlikely to do it. Explain that the students may not always agree and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Begin by asking:

Q Is it likely or unlikely that you'll have dessert with dinner this evening? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "It's [likely/unlikely] that I'll have dessert because . . ."

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students' attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, have the students discuss:

Q Is it likely or unlikely that you'll read a book this evening? Why? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: "It's [likely/unlikely] that I'll read a book this evening because . . ."

Q Is it likely or unlikely that you'll go to bed early this evening? Why? [Click 5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: "It's [likely/unlikely] that I'll go to bed early this evening because . . ."

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about some of the words they have been learning.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM2). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA8)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

likely

When something is likely, it probably will happen or is probably true.

rap

Rap means “tap or hit something sharply (forcefully) and quickly.” Rap is also a “type of music in which words are spoken in time to music with a steady beat.”

snap

Snap means “speak sharply or angrily.”

squirm

Squirm means “wobble, or twist your body from side to side, usually because you are bored or uncomfortable.”

unlikely

Unlikely means “not likely.” When something is unlikely, it probably will not happen or is probably not true.

whiz

Whiz means “move very fast.” Some things that whiz make a buzzing or hissing sound.

ABOUT ONGOING REVIEW

Research shows that it is critical for students to use a word repeatedly over an extended period of time if the word is to become a permanent part of their vocabularies. Each week we provide an activity for reviewing words. The words reviewed today are the six words the students learned this week. Beginning next week, the review will include words from the most recent week and previous weeks. For more information about Ongoing Review and helping the students retain vocabulary, see “Retaining the Words” in the Introduction.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA8). Remind students that they learned these words earlier. Explain that today they will talk more about the words.

Point to the word whiz and ask:

Q What do you know about the word whiz?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Remind them to use the word whiz as they share their ideas.

Use the same procedure to review the remaining words.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that they will do an activity called “Imagine That!” Explain that you will describe a few imaginary situations. Tell the students that as they listen, they will make pictures in their minds and use the words to discuss what they imagined. Explain that before playing the game in pairs, they will play a round as a class.

Ask the students to close their eyes and picture the following situation:

- You are working quietly at your seat. A person at your table starts rapping on the tabletop with a pencil.

Ask:

Q Are you likely or unlikely to snap at the person? Why? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Open your eyes.

whiz	squirm	rap
snap	likely	unlikely

PROMPT 1: If someone is rapping on the table, I am [likely/unlikely] to snap at the person because . . .

1 2

WA8

Teacher Note

Even when the students know the meaning of a word, it is often difficult for them to articulate a definition. For this reason, we do not ask the students the question “What does the word whiz mean?” Instead we ask them what they know about the word, giving them an opportunity to show their understanding of the word’s meaning in various ways (for example, by using the word in a sentence, giving an example of a situation in which the word might be used, or acting out the word). If the students do not recall the meaning of the word, tell them.

PROMPT 1: “If someone is rapping on the table, I am [likely/unlikely] to snap at the person because . . .”

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Have the students imagine and discuss the following situation in pairs:

- You are on a trip with your family. You have been sitting in the back seat of the car for an hour.

Q Are you likely or unlikely to be squirming? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I am [likely/unlikely] to be squirming because . . .”

Tell the students that next week they will learn more new words.

Introduce Bustle, Volunteer, and Debris

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words bustle, volunteer, and debris
- Discuss synonyms
- Practice using “Think, Pair, Share”
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act in fair and caring ways
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Taught

bustle (p. 4)

Bustle means “rush or hurry in an excited, noisy, or busy way.”

volunteer (p. 8)

Volunteer means “offer to do something or help someone by choice.” When you volunteer, you do something because you want to do it. You do not expect pay or a reward.

debris (p. 11)

Debris is the “scattered pieces of something that has been thrown away, broken, or destroyed.”

ABOUT RECOGNIZING SYNONYMS

In this lesson, the students discuss synonyms, or “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.” Connecting a new word to a known word that is a synonym helps the students remember the new word. Synonyms also provide the students with words that can replace overused words in their writing, making their writing more interesting. We suggest that you start a synonym chart this week and add to it during the year as the students learn new synonyms (see the more strategy practice activity “Start a Synonym Chart” on page 35). For a complete table of the synonyms taught in grade 3 and the weeks in which they are introduced, see Appendix C.

Materials

- Two Bobbies: A True Story of Hurricane Katrina, Friendship, and Survival
- Word card 7 (WA1)
- Word card 8 (WA2)
- Word card 9 (WA3)

INTRODUCE AND USE BUSTLE

1 Introduce and Define Bustle and Introduce Synonyms

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you.

Show the cover of Two Bobbies, read the title and name of the authors aloud, and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Explain that the words they will learn this week are from the story.

Remind the students that Two Bobbies is the true story of a dog named Bobbi and a cat named Bob Cat and what happened to them when Hurricane Katrina struck New Orleans in 2005. Show pages 4–5 and ask the students to listen carefully as you read the beginning of the story. Then read page 4 aloud, emphasizing the word bustled.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is bustle, and explain that bustle means “rush or hurry in an excited, noisy, or busy way.” Explain that when the authors write that the city of New Orleans “bustled with life day and night,” they mean that at all hours of the day, the busy people of New Orleans bustled here and there, or hurried or rushed in an excited way.

Tell the students that bustle, hurry, and rush are synonyms, and explain that synonyms are “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.”

Display word card 7 (🎧 WA1) and have the students say the word bustle.

2 Discuss Bustle

Remind the students that when people are bustling, they are rushing about or hurrying in an excited, noisy, or busy way. Give examples of times you have bustled or seen people bustling.

You might say:

“When my family gets ready for visitors, we bustle about the house, or rush about busily, vacuuming, straightening things up, and preparing food. When we took our field trip to the science museum last week, groups of students were bustling through the hallways—they were walking quickly and talking loudly and excitedly about the exhibits.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q Where might you see people bustling? Why?

Give the students a few moments to think about the question. Then click 1 on word card 7 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt and say “Turn to your partner.” Have partners take turns using the prompt to answer the questions.

Teacher Note

For more practice with synonyms, see the more strategy practice activity “Start a Synonym Chart” on page 35.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing synonyms, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard synonyms activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is an [outdoor/indoor] place where people might bustle, or rush or hurry in an excited, noisy, or busy way?” and “Where might you see people bustle during school? After school? On the weekend?”

Teacher Note

Follow this procedure for all subsequent “Think, Pair, Share” activities.

bustle

PROMPT 1: I might see people bustling _____ because . . .

PROMPT 1: “I might see people bustling [at a shopping mall] because . . .”

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss as a class:

Q When have you bustled? Why?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I bustled when [I was getting ready for school today] because . . .”

Point to the word bustle and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “rush or hurry in an excited, noisy, or busy way”?

INTRODUCE AND USE VOLUNTEER

3 Introduce and Define Volunteer

Show page 8 of Two Bobbies and review that after the storm Bobbi and Bob Cat are stranded without food or water. Read page 8 aloud, emphasizing the word volunteers.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is volunteer, and explain that volunteer means “offer to do something or help someone by choice.” When you volunteer, you do something because you want to do it. You do not expect pay or a reward. Point to the volunteers in the boat on page 8 and explain that they are volunteering, or offering to help save people and animals in New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina.

Display word card 8 (🌐 WA2) and have the students say the word volunteer.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, ask questions such as “When have you bustled because you were late? Excited? Anxious?” “When have you bustled because you had a lot to get done in a short time?” and “When have you been part of a group of people who were bustling?”

ELPS 1.A.ii
Step 3 and Step 4
(all, beginning on page 33 and continuing on to page 34)

🌐 ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of volunteer is voluntario/a.

4 Discuss Volunteering

Remind the students that when people volunteer, they offer to do something or help someone by choice. Give examples of times you have volunteered or seen people volunteering.

You might say:

"I volunteer at my local animal shelter. I help feed the animals and play with the cats and dogs. I'm not getting paid to help. I do it because I want to and because I love animals. Many times without being asked you volunteer to help me here in the classroom. For example, [Jake and Cinna] recently volunteered to help me straighten up the game shelf and tidy up the library."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you volunteered to help do something? Why did you volunteer? [Pause; click ❶ on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "I volunteered to [help my brother do his homework] because . . ."

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students' attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompts to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q How did you feel when you volunteered? Why did you feel that way?

Click ❷ to reveal the next prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: "When I volunteered I felt [happy] because . . ."

Point to the word volunteer and ask:

Q What's the new word we are learning that means "offer to do something or help someone by choice"?

INTRODUCE AND USE DEBRIS

5 Introduce and Define Debris

Show pages 10–11 of Two Bobbies and read page 11 aloud, emphasizing the word debris.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is debris, and explain that debris is the "scattered pieces of something that has been thrown away, broken, or destroyed."

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "When have you helped someone who didn't ask for help?" and "When have you helped someone without expecting anything in return?"

Point to the picture on page 13 and explain that the litter, furniture, and toys on the sidewalk are debris. Explain that Hurricane Katrina destroyed houses and other buildings across New Orleans, leaving behind lots of debris.

Display word card 9 (🗨️ WA3) and have the students say the word debris.

6 Discuss Debris

Remind students that you see debris after a disaster such as a hurricane. For example, after an earthquake shakes a city, you might see debris such as pieces of concrete, metal, and glass from collapsed buildings and bridges. After a house fire, you might see debris such as scorched (burned) wood and clothing, bricks, and glass.

Ask:

Q What debris might you see after a tornado has struck a town? Why?
[Click 1 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Debris I might see after a tornado or hurricane is . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word debris and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means the “scattered pieces of something that has been thrown away, broken, or destroyed”?

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Start a Synonym Chart

Help the students further explore synonyms by starting a synonym chart. Prepare a sheet of chart paper titled “Synonyms” and post the chart where everyone can see it. Write the words bustle, hurry, and rush on the chart and review that the words bustle, hurry, and rush are synonyms, or “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.”

Explain that when the students write stories, reports, and other pieces, they can use the synonyms they are learning. Explain that using synonyms helps them avoid using the same words over and over and makes their writing more interesting.

Throughout the year, encourage the students to share other synonyms they think of with the class; then add the synonyms the students suggest to the chart. As synonyms are introduced in vocabulary lessons, add them to the chart as well.

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker

---

Teacher Note

Post the “Synonyms” chart to use throughout the year.

Day 2

Review Bustle, Volunteer, and Debris

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, talk about a word you thought was especially fun to discuss. For example, say “I thought the word bustle was especially fun to talk about because you gave some interesting examples of times when you have bustled. I also thought it was fun when we talked about the word volunteer because so many of you like to volunteer.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words bustle, volunteer, and debris from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act in fair and caring ways
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

bustle

Bustle means “rush or hurry in an excited, noisy, or busy way.”

volunteer

Volunteer means “offer to do something or help someone by choice.” When you volunteer, you do something because you want to do it. You do not expect pay or a reward.

debris

Debris is the “scattered pieces of something that has been thrown away, broken, or destroyed.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the daily review cards (WA4). Remind the students that yesterday they learned three words from the story Two Bobbies. Point to each of the following words as you review the pronunciation and meaning: bustle, volunteer, and debris. You might give the meaning or ask the students to tell you what they know about the word. Explain that today they will talk more about the words.

Discuss as a class:

- Q Which of the words we learned yesterday do you think was especially fun to talk about? Why?

Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt and have volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

bustle

volunteer

debris

PROMPT 1: I think the word _____ was especially fun to talk about because . . .

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [bustle] was especially fun to talk about because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2

 Introduce the Game “I’m Thinking of a Word”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “I’m Thinking of a Word.” Explain that you will think aloud about one of the vocabulary words, and partners will discuss which word they think it is. Explain that partners may not always agree, and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Tell the students that before they play the game in pairs, they will practice as a class. Begin by reading the following clue aloud, slowly and clearly:

- I’m thinking of a word you might use to describe trash and litter on the beach.

Discuss as a class:

Q What word am I thinking of? Why do you think that?

Give the students a few moments to think about the questions. Then click 2 to reveal the prompt, and have one or two students use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “You’re thinking of the word [debris] because . . .”

3 Play the Game in Pairs

Play a round of the game with the students in pairs, using the following clue:

- I'm thinking of a word that is a synonym of the word rush.

Ask:

Q What word am I thinking of? Why do you think that? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “[Ms. Collins] is thinking of the word [bustle] because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Continue playing the game using the following clues:

- I'm thinking of a word that tells what you do when you help someone without asking for anything in return. (volunteer)
- I'm thinking of a word that tells what you might do when you are excited and in a hurry to get somewhere. (bustle)
- I'm thinking of a word you might use to describe the fallen objects that cover the ground after an earthquake. (debris)
- I'm thinking of a word that describes what you do when you help clean up the classroom after an art project. (volunteer)

Tell the students that tomorrow they will learn and talk about three new words.

Teacher Note

For more practice, you or the students might make up additional clues.

Introduce Devastate, Ruckus, and Lounge

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words devastate, ruckus, and lounge
- Review synonyms
- Discuss using context to determine word meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Taught

devastate (p. 12)

Devastate means “destroy or badly damage.”

ruckus (p. 18)

Ruckus means “noisy confusion or excitement.”
Something unexpected or frightening can cause a ruckus.

lounge (p. 30)

Lounge means “sit or lie in a lazy or relaxed way.”

ABOUT USING CONTEXT TO DETERMINE WORD MEANINGS

This week we formally introduce the students to using context to determine word meanings, an important word-learning strategy they can use in their independent reading. In this lesson, the students learn that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of a word by reading the sentence that includes the word, or the sentence that comes before or after that sentence, to look for clues. In subsequent lessons, the students will review and practice the strategy. It is important to point out that we have the students practice the strategy only when the text of a read-aloud provides explicit clues to a word’s meaning. If you wish to use other texts to provide the students with more practice in using context to determine word meanings, we suggest that you look for words that are clearly defined or explained by the context, so that the students will not have to guess at the meanings. For a complete table of words for which students use context to determine their meanings in grade 3 and the weeks in which they are introduced, see Appendix C. For more information about using context clues to determine word meanings and other word-learning strategies, see “Independent Word-learning Strategies” in the Introduction.

Materials

- Two Bobbies: A True Story of Hurricane Katrina, Friendship, and Survival
- Word card 10 (WA5)
- “Sentences from Two Bobbies” chart (WA6)
- Word card 11 (WA7)
- Word card 12 (WA8)

INTRODUCE AND USE DEVASTATE

1 Introduce and Define Devastate and Review Synonyms

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you.

Show pages 12–13 of Two Bobbies and review that the hurricane caused a lot of damage to the city of New Orleans. Read the first sentence on page 12 aloud, emphasizing the word devastated.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is devastate. Explain that devastate means “destroy or badly damage” and that devastate and destroy are synonyms. Review that synonyms are “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.” Point to the picture on page 13 and explain that the hurricane devastated, or destroyed, the city of New Orleans. Display word card 10 (WA5) and have the students say the word devastate.

Discuss as a class:

Q What other words can you think of that are synonyms of devastate and destroy?

Click 1 on word card 10 (WA5) to reveal the first prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA5

devastate

PROMPT 1: _____ is a synonym of devastate and destroy.

PROMPT 1: “[Wreck] is a synonym of devastate and destroy.”

Explain that wreck, ruin, and demolish are synonyms of devastate and destroy.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of devastate is devastar.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words devastate, destroy, wreck, ruin, and demolish to it.

2 Imagine a Flood That Devastates a Town

Remind the students that places can be devastated by nature. For example, a hurricane, earthquake, or tornado can devastate, or destroy, a city. Insects and droughts can devastate farmland.

Ask the students to close their eyes and imagine:

- A flood devastates a town near where you live. You and your friends rush to the town and volunteer to help rescue people and pick up debris.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What might you see after a flood has devastated a town? [Pause.]
Open your eyes. [Click 2 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “After a flood has devastated a town, I might see . . .”

After partners have talked, click 3 to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 3: “[Leo] said that after a tornado has devastated a town, he might see . . .”

Point to the word devastate and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “destroy or badly damage”?

INTRODUCE AND USE RUCKUS

3 Introduce and Define Ruckus and Introduce Using Context to Determine Word Meanings

Display the “Sentences from Two Bobbies” chart (WA6). Show pages 18–19 of Two Bobbies and remind the students that in this part of the story Bobbi and Bob Cat have been rescued, taken to a shelter, and placed in separate rooms. Read the charted sentences aloud where they appear on page 18, emphasizing the word ruckus.

Tell the students that ruckus is the next word they will learn today. Direct their attention to the context sentences on the chart (WA6), and explain that these are the sentences you just read. Point to the word ruckus and underline it. Tell the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word—like ruckus—by looking for clues. Explain that they can look for clues by reading the sentence that includes the word, or by reading the sentences before or after. Explain that, as you read the sentences again, you want the students to think about what the word ruckus might mean and which words in the sentences are clues to the meaning of ruckus.

TEKS 3.B.iii
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 3
(second paragraph on page 41)

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you may wish to write the context sentences where everyone can see them.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on using context to determine word meanings, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard context clues activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

TEKS 3.B.iii

Student/Teacher Activity

Step 3

(two discussion questions on page 42)

Teacher Note

If the students do not immediately determine the meaning of ruckus from the context, give them the definition rather than having them guess.

Read the sentences aloud. Then discuss as a class:

Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word ruckus might mean?

Point to the first prompt and read it aloud.

WA6

Sentences from *Two Bobbies

All night long Bobbi howled and barked. Bob Cat paced back and forth.

No one could sleep with Bobbi making such a ruckus.

PROMPT 1: I think ruckus might mean . . .

PROMPT 2: The clues _____ help me figure out the meaning of the word ruckus.

PROMPT 1: “I think ruckus might mean . . .”

After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that ruckus means “noisy confusion or excitement.” Something unexpected or frightening can cause a ruckus. Then ask:

Q What clues help you figure out the meaning of the word ruckus?

Point to the second prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking.

PROMPT 2: “The clues [‘howled and barked’] help me figure out the meaning of the word ruckus.”

Circle the context clues on the chart as the students identify them. If necessary, point out that howled and barked, paced back and forth, and no one could sleep are clues that help us figure out that a ruckus is “noisy confusion or excitement.”

Display word card 11 (WA7) and have the students say the word ruckus.

4 Review the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that they will do the activity “Imagine That!” Review that you will describe a few imaginary situations, and the students will make pictures in their minds and use the words to discuss what they imagined.

Have the students close their eyes and picture the following scene in their minds:

- We are in the cafeteria eating lunch. Our principal [Mrs. Clements] rides into the cafeteria on a horse.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Would that cause a ruckus? Why? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think that [would/would not] cause a ruckus, because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Ask follow-up questions such as:

- Q [Quinn], you said the students might be afraid of the horse. How might that cause a ruckus?
- Q [Tomiko], you said that everyone would want to pet the horse. How might that cause a ruckus?

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- We are at recess on the playground. We hear a loud noise. We look up and see a spaceship coming toward us.

Q Would that cause a ruckus? Why? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Point to the word ruckus and ask:

- Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “noisy confusion or excitement”?

INTRODUCE AND USE LOUNGE

5 Introduce and Define Lounge

Show pages 30–31 of Two Bobbies and review that in this part of the book Bobbi and Bob Cat have been adopted by Melinda and have a new home. Read the first paragraph on page 30 aloud, emphasizing the word lounges.

Tell the students that lounge is the last word they will learn today and that lounge means “sit or lie in a lazy or relaxed way.” Explain that Bobbi lounges, or sits and relaxes, in the pond on hot days.

Display word card 12 (🗨️ WA8) and have students say the word lounge.

6 Discuss and Act Out Lounging

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q After a hard day at school, where do you most enjoy lounging at home? What do you do when you lounge? [Pause; click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

lounge

PROMPT 1:

I most enjoy lounging . . .

and

When I lounge, I . . .

1 2

WA8

PROMPT 1: “I most enjoy lounging . . .” and “When I lounge, I . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask a volunteer to act out lounging at home after a hard day. Then discuss as a class:

Q What did you see [Julian] doing when he lounged?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt and have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class:

PROMPT 2: “When [Julian] lounged, he . . .”

Point to the word lounge and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “sit or lie in a lazy or relaxed way”?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

Review Devastate, Ruckus, and Lounge

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words devastate, ruckus, and lounge from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act in fair and caring ways
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

Display the daily review cards (WA9) and remind the students that yesterday they learned these three words from the story Two Bobbies. Point to each of the following words as you review the pronunciation and meaning: devastate, ruckus, and lounge. Explain that today they will talk more about these words.

You might give the meaning or ask the students to tell what they know about the words. Discuss as a class:

Q Which of these words might you use when you are talking to your family or friends? How might you use the word?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA9) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [ruckus]” and “I might say, [‘Kevin, stop making a ruckus. I am trying to read’].”

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA9)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the “Week 2 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) for each student

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 1 and 2, you might distribute a copy of the "Week 2 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3) to each student.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Discuss "Would You?" Questions

Tell the students that you will ask them questions about the words. Point to the words lounge and ruckus, and ask:

 Q Would you lounge if there was a ruckus outside? Why? [Click 2 on WA9 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I [would/would not] lounge if there was a ruckus outside because . . ."

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students' attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss the following questions using the same procedure:

[ruckus, devastate]

 Q Would you make a ruckus if someone devastated your neighborhood playground? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "I [would/would not] make a ruckus if someone devastated my neighborhood playground because . . ."

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about some of the words they have been learning.

EXTENSION

Explore Vivid Verbs in Two Bobbies

Tell the students that good writers like Kirby Larson and Mary Nethery, the authors of Two Bobbies, often use interesting or unusual verbs, or action words, to help readers picture in their mind what is happening in a story. Show pages 6–7 of the book and review that Bobbi and Bob Cat were stuck in the storm. Explain that as you read, you want the students to listen for interesting verbs that help them picture in their mind what happens during the storm. Then read the first paragraph on page 6 aloud. Discuss as a class:

Q What verbs help you picture what happens during the storm?

If necessary, explain that the words roared, pounded, and pushed help us picture how powerful the storm was.

Explain that we sometimes refer to interesting verbs like roared, pounded, and pushed as vivid verbs and that the word vivid means "clear and strong." Explain that vivid verbs paint a clear picture for the reader of what is happening in a story.

Encourage the students to use vivid verbs in their own writing.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act in fair and caring ways
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

bustle

Bustle means “rush or hurry in an excited, noisy, or busy way.”

lounge

Lounge means “sit or lie in a lazy or relaxed way.”

ruckus

Ruckus means “noisy confusion or excitement.” Something unexpected or frightening can cause a ruckus.

squirm

Squirm means “wiggle, or twist your body from side to side, usually because you are bored or uncomfortable.”

unlikely

Unlikely means “not likely.” When something is unlikely, it probably will not happen or is probably not true.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the ongoing review cards (WA10). Remind the students that they learned these words earlier. Explain that today they will think and talk more about the words.

Point to the word ruckus, pronounce it, and have the students say it. Ask:

Q What do you know about the word ruckus?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Remind them to use the word ruckus as they share their ideas.

Repeat the procedure to review the remaining words.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA10)
- Ongoing review activity (WA11)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Game “Act Out the Words”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Act Out the Words.” Explain that before the students play the game in pairs, they will play the game as a class. Explain that you will point to a word, review its meaning, and ask a volunteer to act out the word.

Point to the word squirm on the ongoing review cards (WA10) and review its meaning. Then ask a volunteer to act out for the class how she would look if she were squirming.

Remind the class to watch the volunteer carefully. Then discuss as a class:

Q What did you see [Rose] do when she acted out the word squirm?

Then click 1 to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: When _____ acted out

PROMPT 1: “When [Rose] acted out [squirm], . . .”

Point to the word bustle and have partners take turns acting out the word. Then have one or two volunteers act out bustling for the class. Ask:

Q What did you see Jermaine do when he acted out the word bustle?

Point to prompt 1 and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “When [Jermaine] acted out [bustle], . . .”

Using the same procedure, discuss the word loungue.

3 Introduce the Game “What’s the Missing Word?”

Tell the students that they will play a game called “What’s the Missing Word?” Explain that you will read some sentences aloud and that a word will be missing from each one. Explain that the students will decide which vocabulary word could replace the missing word and explain why they think so. Tell the students that they will discuss the first sentence as a class, and then you will ask partners to discuss the other sentences 28with each other and share their thinking with the class.

Display the ongoing review activity (🎧 WA11) and begin playing the game:

1. Point to the words bustle, lounge, ruckus, squirm, and unlikely. Then click ❶ to reveal the first sentence and read it aloud. Point out that a word is missing.

- Sentence 1: On warm sunny days, our cat, Percy, _____ in the sun and takes naps.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence. Then ask:

Q What’s the missing word? Why do you think so?

Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt. Point to the prompt and read it aloud.

PROMPT: “I think [lounges] is the missing word because . . .”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion of this sentence by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the correct word in place. Read the sentence again with the word lounges.

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Teacher Note

Each sentence on the ongoing review activity (WA11) has a corresponding number: the first sentence is ❶; the second sentence is ❷; the third sentence is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the sentence.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click reveals the correct answer and the story with the correct word in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the students need to change the form of the word to complete the sentence by adding an ending such as -s, -es, or -ing.

WA11

4 Continue Playing the Game in Pairs

Now play the game in pairs:

1. Click ② to reveal the second sentence. Read the sentence aloud twice, slowly and clearly.
  - Sentence 2: It's very _____ that a cat and mouse will be friends.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence. Then ask:

Q What's the missing word? Why do you think so? [Click ② again and read the prompt aloud.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: "I think [unlikely] is the missing word because . . ."

Have partners use the prompt to take turns answering the questions. When partners have finished talking, signal for their attention and have one or two pairs use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion of this sentence by clicking ② a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place. Then reread the sentence with the word unlikely.
4. Click ② to clear the screen.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following sentences:

- Sentence 3: Wild monkeys running down the aisle of a grocery store would cause a _____. (ruckus)
- Sentence 4: On the first day of school, everyone _____ with excitement. (bustles)
- Sentence 5: During long car rides, I always _____ in my seat. (squirm)

Explain that next week the students will learn more new words.

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students able to act out the words and choose the appropriate word to complete each sentence?
- Does their discussion of the words indicate that they understand the words' meanings?
- Do they enjoy learning and using new words?

(continues)

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 151 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word’s meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word’s meaning, provide further practice by asking a question that requires the student to talk about the word in terms of her own experiences. For example, ask questions such as “When have you had to bustle because you were late getting somewhere? What did you do when you bustled?” or “It is likely that you will eat dinner this evening. What is something that it is unlikely you will do this evening? Why do you say it is unlikely?”

For more information about reviewing and practicing the words, see “Retaining the Words” in the Introduction.

Introduce Swerve, Flick, and Speedy

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words swerve, flick, and speedy
- Review synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Taught

swerve (p. 75)

Swerve means “change directions quickly, usually to avoid something.”

flick (p. 75)

Flick means “move, or make something move, with a quick, sudden motion.”

speedy

Speedy means “fast.”

Materials

- “Seal” (see page 75)
- “Seal” poem (WA1)
- Word card 13 (WA2)
- “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA3)
- Word card 14 (WA4)
- Word card 15 (WA5)

INTRODUCE AND USE SWERVE

1 Introduce and Define Swerve

Display the poem “Seal” (WA1) and remind the students that they heard this poem earlier. Remind the students that in this poem the poet describes how a seal moves. Have the students follow along as you read the following lines aloud, emphasizing the word swerve:

See how he swims
With a swerve and a twist,
A flip of the flipper,
A flick of the wrist!

Tell the students that swerve is the first word they will learn today. Explain that swerve means “change directions quickly, usually to avoid something.” Explain that seals swerve as they swim, and use your arm to show how a seal looks as it swerves through the water. Point out that swerving, or changing directions quickly, helps the seal avoid predators such as sharks. Explain that people also swerve.

Display word card 13 (WA2) and have the students say the word swerve. Ask:

Q Why do you think someone might swerve?

Click ❶ on word card 13 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA2

swerve

PROMPT 1: I think someone might swerve because . . .

❶

PROMPT 1: “I think someone might swerve because . . .”

2 Introduce the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Tell the students that they will do an activity called “Tell Me a Story.” Explain that you will tell them the beginning of a story that includes the word swerve. They will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story. Tell the students that before they do the activity in pairs, they will practice the activity as a class.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (❷ WA3) and show story 1 and its accompanying prompt. Read the story aloud, slowly and clearly:

- Story 1: You are riding your bike on a street in your neighborhood. Suddenly, you have to swerve because . . .

Ask:

Q How might you finish the story? Why did you have to swerve?

Give the students a few moments to think; then point to prompt 1 on the chart and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA3

Tell Me a Story

You are riding your bike on a street in your neighborhood.
Suddenly, you have to swerve because . . .

---

PROMPT 1: I have to swerve because . . .

Teacher Note

If you are not using an interactive whiteboard, write each story where everyone can see it.

PROMPT 1: “I have to swerve because . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q What does it look like when you swerve?

Q What does it feel like when you swerve?

3 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story” in Pairs

Continue doing the activity in pairs. Tell the students that you will tell them the beginning of another story that includes the word swerve.

Show story 2 on the chart (WA3) and read it aloud, slowly and clearly:

- Story 2: You are walking down the sidewalk on your way to school. A car passes by you on the street. All of a sudden, the car swerves because . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share.” Ask:

Q How might you finish the story? Why does the car swerve? [Pause; point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The car swerves because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word swerve and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “change directions quickly, usually to avoid something”?

INTRODUCE AND USE FLICK

4 Introduce and Define Flick

Remind the students that seals use their flippers to swim quickly through the water. Then direct the students’ attention to the poem “Seal” (WA1) and have the students follow along with you as you reread the following lines, emphasizing the word flick:

See how he swims
With a swerve and a twist,
A flip of the flipper,
A flick of the wrist!

Tell the students that flick is the next word they will learn today. Explain that flick means “move, or make something move, with a quick, sudden motion.” Explain that when the poet says “flick of the wrist,” he is describing how the seal swerves and twists by flicking, or moving, his wrist quickly.

Display word card 14 (C WA4) and have the students say the word flick.

5 Act Out Flicking a Piece of Lint

Explain that animals flick other parts of their bodies. Some animals, such as horses and cows, flick their tails when flies or other insects bother them. Flick your arm and hand to simulate an animal flicking its tail.

Explain that people sometimes use their fingers to flick something, or move it with a quick motion. Ask the students to watch as you act out flicking an imaginary piece of lint off of your clothes with your finger.

Have partners take turns acting out flicking a crumb off their shirt.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q What did you do when you acted out flicking a crumb off your shirt?

Click 1 on word card 14 (WA4) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “When I flicked a crumb, I . . .”

Then ask:

Q What else besides a crumb or a piece of lint might you flick with your finger? [Click 2 on WA4 to reveal the next prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I might flick [a marble] with my finger.”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word flick and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “move, or make something move, with a quick, sudden motion”?

INTRODUCE AND USE SPEEDY

6 Introduce and Define Speedy and Review Synonyms

Direct the students’ attention to the poem “Seal” (WA1) and remind the students that seals swim very quickly through the water. Have the students follow along with you as you read the following lines aloud:

Quicksilver-quick,
Softer than spray,
Down he plunges
And sweeps away;

Explain that when the poet says “Quicksilver-quick,” he is describing the seal as an animal that is very fast. Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is a synonym of quick and fast—the word speedy.

Remind the students that synonyms are “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.”

Display word card 15 (🔊 WA5) and have the students say the word speedy.

7 Discuss Speedy

Remind the students that seals are speedy.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What other animals are speedy? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “A [jaguar] is speedy.”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point out that people can be speedy. Ask and discuss as a class:

Q Who do you know who is a speedy runner?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “[Jared] is a speedy runner.”

Point to the word speedy and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that is a synonym of fast?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

---

EXTENSION

Explore Movement Words in “Seal”

Display the poem “Seal” (🔊 WA1).

Tell the students that the poet William Jay Smith uses many interesting words in the poem “Seal.” Some of them help us imagine how the seal moves through the water. Direct the students’ attention to the poem, and explain that you are going to read parts of the poem again. Explain that you want the students to follow along and look for words that help them imagine, or picture in their minds, how the seal is moving.

---

Teacher Note

You may want to point out that speedy is related to the word speed, which means “quickness or fast movement.”

---

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to name speedy animals, provide a few examples (rabbits, jaguars, cheetahs, horses, squirrels, eagles, mosquitoes). Then ask the question again.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing synonyms, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard synonyms activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

Read the first part of the poem, stopping after “Minnow feed!” Ask:

Q What words help you picture how the seal is moving?

As the students identify words, underline them in the poem. If they do not identify the words dives, zoom, and darts, point out the words and underline them. Follow up by asking:

Q What do you picture in your mind when you hear the words dives, zoom, and darts?

Using the same procedure, read the second part of the poem, beginning with “See how he swims” and ending with “And sweeps away.” Have the students identify the “movement words.” If they do not identify the following words, point them out and underline them: swims, swerve, twist, flip, flick, plunges, and sweeps. Follow up by asking:

Q What do you picture in your mind when you hear the words swerve, twist, and flip?

Encourage the students to use interesting movement words like these in their own poems, stories, and other writing to paint a word picture for their readers.

Day 2

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you.

Display the daily review cards (🗨️ WA6) and remind the students that they learned these words from “Seal.” Point to each of the following words as you review the pronunciation and meaning: swerve, flick, and speedy. Explain that today they will talk more about the words.

Tell the students that you are going to ask some questions about the words and that you may ask them to share their partners’ thinking, so they should listen carefully to what their partners say.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which of these words do you think is the most interesting? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Game “Finish the Story”

Tell the students that they are going to play a game called “Finish the Story.” Explain that you will read a story, leaving off the last word. Then partners will decide which word makes the best ending for the story. Tell

Teacher Note

Tell the students that tomorrow they will learn and talk about three new words.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Discuss Other Speedy Animals

Review that the poem "Seal" describes a speedy seal moving through the water. Review that speedy means "fast." When an animal is speedy it moves very fast. Explain that the seal is just one kind of speedy animal and there are many others.

Ask:

Q What other animal is speedy? Why are [cheetahs] speedy?

Have the students discuss the question in pairs using the following prompt:

PROMPT: "I chose [cheetahs]. [Cheetahs] are speedy because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking.

Day 3

Introduce Utter, Whoop, and Plop

Materials

- “Seal” (see page 75)
- “Seal” poem (WA1) from Day 1
- Word card 16 (WA8)
- Word card 17 (WA9)
- Word card 18 (WA10)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words utter, whoop, and plop
- Discuss shades of meaning
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act in fair and caring ways
- Share their partners’ thinking

Words Taught

utter (p. 75)

Utter means “say something or make some sort of sound.”

whoop (p. 75)

Whoop means “shout from excitement.”

plop (p. 75)

Plop means “sit down heavily or put something down heavily.”

ABOUT RECOGNIZING SHADES OF MEANING

This week the students begin an exploration of shades of meaning that continues throughout the program. In this lesson, they are introduced to recognizing shades of meaning among verbs that differ in manner through a discussion of the words plop and sit. Later in the year, they are introduced to shades of meaning among adjectives that differ in intensity (for example, happy and exhilarated). Recognizing differences among words helps the students remember the words and enables them to use more precise and interesting words in conversation and in their writing. For a complete table of the words with shades of meaning discussed in the program, see Appendix C. For more information about recognizing words with multiple meanings and other word-learning strategies, see “Independent Word-learning Strategies” in the Introduction.

INTRODUCE AND USE UTTER

1 Introduce and Define Utter

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you.

Display the poem “Seal” (WA1) and review that William Jay Smith, the author of “Seal,” describes how fast a seal moves. Have the students follow along as you read the following lines of the poem aloud, emphasizing the word utter:

Before you can think,
Before you can utter
Words like “Dill pickle”
Or “Apple butter,”
Back up he swims

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is utter. Explain that utter means “say something or make some sort of sound.” Explain that when the poet says the seal swims back up to the surface before you can utter, or say, “Dill pickle” or “Apple butter,” he is describing in a funny way how fast the seal is moving. Explain that in addition to words, people utter sounds.

Ask:

Q Why might people utter a sound?

Display word card 16 (🌐 WA8) and have the students say the word utter.

2 Play “What Might You Utter?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “What Might You Utter?” Explain that you will describe a situation. Partners will discuss what words or sounds they might utter in that situation and why. Tell the students that you will ask them to share their partners’ thinking, so they need to listen carefully. Begin with the following scenario:

- You are excited about going to a sleepover at your best friend’s house. Then you find out the sleepover has been cancelled because your friend is sick.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What might you utter when you hear that the sleepover has been cancelled? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

utter

PROMPT 1: I might utter _____ because . . .

WA8

ELL Note

Explain that “the sleepover has been cancelled” means that the sleepover is not going to happen anymore.

PROMPT 1: “I might utter [a moan] because . . .”

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt and have one or two volunteers share their partners’ thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “[Tess] said she might utter [a moan] because . . .”

If the students need more practice with the word, discuss the following scenario using the same procedure:

- Your mother says your family is going for a two-week camping trip in a desert.

Point to the word utter and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “say something or make some sort of sound”?

INTRODUCE AND USE WHOOP

3 Introduce and Define Whoop

Direct the students’ attention to the poem “Seal” (WA1) and review that the poet also describes the sounds a seal makes. Read the following lines of the poem aloud, emphasizing the word whoop:

Back up he swims
Past Sting Ray and Shark,
Out with a zoom,
A whoop, a bark;

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is whoop. Explain that whoop means “shout from excitement.” Point out that the seal whoops and barks because he is excited to be playing in the water and catching fish.

Write the word whoopee where everyone can see it. Underline whoop in whoopee and explain that the words whoop and whoopee are related. Explain that whoopee is a word people sometimes say when they whoop, or shout from excitement.

Display word card 17 (WA9) and have the students say the word whoop.

4 Discuss Times the Students Have Whooped

Explain that people whoop when they are excited, and give a couple of examples of times you have whooped or heard someone whoop.

You might say:

“Last summer I went to an amusement park with my daughter. We rode the rollercoaster and I whooped the entire time. I recently bought my nephew a guitar for his birthday. He smiled and whooped after he unwrapped his gift.”

Ask:

Q When have you whooped because you were excited? [Click ❶ on WA9 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I whooped when . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word whoop and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “shout from excitement”?

INTRODUCE AND USE PLOP

5 Introduce and Define Plop

Direct the students’ attention to the poem “Seal” (WA1) and review that at the end of the poem, the seal jumps out of the water. Read the last four lines of the poem aloud, emphasizing the word plops:

Before you can say
Whatever you wish,
He plops at your side
With a mouthful of fish!

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is plop. Explain that when you plop, you sit down heavily or put something down heavily. Point out that the seal plops, or sits down heavily, after his swim.

Display word card 18 (🔊 WA10) and have the students say the word plop.

6 Discuss Plop and Sit and Introduce Shades of Meaning

Explain that plop and sit mean about the same thing, with one important difference. When you plop, you do not just sit in the usual way—you sit down heavily. Tell the students that you will act out sitting in the usual way and then plopping, and that you want them to notice the difference. First, sit down slowly and carefully in your chair. Then plop into the chair by sitting heavily and carelessly, as if you are exhausted. Discuss as a class:

Q What did you see me do when I plopped into my chair?

Click ❶ on word card 18 (WA10) to reveal the first prompt.

PROMPT 1: “When you plopped into your chair, you . . .”

Then ask:

Q Why might a person plop?

Click ❷ to reveal the next prompt.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing shades of meaning, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard shades of meaning activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you might ask volunteers to act out sitting and plopping into a chair.

Teacher Note

You might start a chart of words with shades of meaning titled “Just the Right Word.” Write the word plop on the chart, along with its definition, “sit down heavily or put something down heavily.”

Teacher Note

You might create a chart titled “Onomatopoeia.” Invite the students to listen and look for other examples, discuss them, and add them to the chart. Encourage the students to use onomatopoeia in their writing.

---

Teacher Note

For examples of onomatopoeia, visit the CCC Learning Hub (cclearninghub.org) to view the “Onomatopoeia” list in the General Resources section.

PROMPT 2: “A person might plop because . . .”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word plop and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “sit down heavily or put something down heavily”?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

---

EXTENSION

Explore Onomatopoeia

Write the word plop where everyone can see it. Remind the students that plop means “sit down heavily or put something down heavily.” Explain that the word plop can also mean “the sound that something makes when it falls into water without splashing.” Ask the students to listen carefully as you drop a penny into a cup of water. Ask:

Q What did you hear when I dropped the penny into the water?

Explain that the word plop is an example of onomatopoeia, and that onomatopoeia is the “use of words that sound like what they are describing.” Point out that when you say the word plop, the word sounds like the sound something makes when it plops.

Write the words whoop and whoopee where everyone can see them and explain that they are also examples of onomatopoeia because they are words that sound like sounds. Add whoop and whoopee to the list. Discuss other examples of onomatopoeia such as hiss, clap, squish, and pop. Ask the students for additional examples and add them to the list.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words utter, whoop, and plop from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act in fair and caring ways
- Share their partners' thinking

Words Reviewed

utter

Utter means "say something or make some sort of sound."

whoop

Whoop means "shout from excitement."

plop

Plop means "sit down heavily or put something down heavily."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you.

Display the daily review cards (WA11) and remind the students that they learned these words earlier. Point to each of the following words as you review the pronunciation and meaning: utter, whoop, and plop. Explain that today they will talk more about the words.

Tell the students that you are going to ask some questions about the words. Ask them to listen carefully to their partners because you will ask them to share their partners' thinking.

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Which of these words might you use to tell a story? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA11 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA11)
- Week 3 family letter (BLM1)

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [whoop] to tell a story about [my first ride on a horse] because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and click 2 to reveal the next prompt. Then ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their partners’ thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “[Eli] said he might use the word [whoop] to tell a story about [his first ride on a horse] because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Think More About the Words

Direct the students’ attention to the words at the top of the daily review cards (WA11) and tell them that they will use these words to discuss some things that Olive is doing. Point to the word utter, and explain that this is the first word the students will use. Then read this scenario:

- Olive’s first soccer game of the season is Saturday. When she wakes up Saturday morning, she is very surprised to find out that the game has been cancelled.

Ask:

 Q What might Olive utter? Why do you think that? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “Olive might utter [‘Oh, no! I can’t believe it’] because . . .”

Using the same procedure, have the students discuss the following scenarios:

[plop]

- Olive is helping her mother. She is carrying a bag of groceries from the car into the kitchen of her house.

Q Will Olive plop the bag of groceries down on the kitchen table? Why do you think that? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: "Olive [will/will not] plop the bag of groceries down because . . ."

[whoop]

- Olive's cousin arrives for a visit.

Q Will Olive whoop when she sees her cousin? Why do you think that? [Click 5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: "Olive [will/will not] whoop when she sees her cousin because . . ."

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Ongoing Review

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Share ideas with one another

Words Reviewed

devastate

Devastate means "destroy or badly damage."

swerve

Sswerve means "change directions quickly, usually to avoid something."

utter

Utter means "say something or make some sort of sound."

volunteer

Volunteer means "offer to do something or help someone by choice." When you volunteer, you do something because you want to do it. You do not expect pay or a reward.

whoop

Whoop means "shout from excitement."

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA12)
- Ongoing review activity (WA13)

Teacher Note

You might explain that the students may need to change the form of the word to complete the sentence by adding an ending such as -s, -ing, or -ed.

Teacher Note

Each sentence in the ongoing review activity (WA13) has a corresponding number: the first sentence is ①; the second sentence is ②; the third sentence is ③; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the sentence.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the sentence with the correct answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the ongoing review cards (🎧 WA12). Remind the students that they learned these words earlier. Explain that today they will talk more about the words.

Point to the word swerve and ask:

Q What do you know about the word swerve?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Remind them to use the word swerve as they share their ideas.

Use the same procedure to review the remaining words.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Game “Find Another Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Find Another Word.” Explain that you will show a sentence with one or more words underlined. You will read each sentence aloud, and partners will decide which vocabulary word can replace the underlined part of the sentence. Tell the students that before partners play the game with one another, they will play the game as a class.

Display the ongoing review activity (🎧 WA13) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ① to reveal the first sentence. Point to the sentence and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined words.

- Sentence 1: During the storm, the boat changed directions quickly to avoid rocks. The waves were huge and it was very difficult for the captain to see.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence and the underlined words. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word could replace the underlined words? Why?

Click ① again to reveal the prompt.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [swerved] could replace changed directions quickly because . . .”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place.

WA13

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

3 Play the Game in Pairs

Now play the game with the students in pairs:

1. Click ❷ to reveal the second sentence and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined word.
  - Sentence 2: After dinner Monique offered to do the dishes. Her dad gave her a big hug and said, "Thank you."
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence and the underlined word. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word could replace the underlined word? Why? [Click ❷ again and point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I think [volunteered] could replace offered because . . ."

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❷ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place.
4. Click ❷ to clear the screen.

Teacher Note

You might point out that students learned the word debris earlier and that debris is the “scattered pieces of something that has been thrown away, broken, or destroyed.”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following sentences:

- Sentence 3: Caleb found out his best friend is going to the same camp that he is. He was so happy he shouted with excitement. (whooped)
- Sentence 4: On the news, we watched a flood destroy many homes and businesses. They were completely underwater, and there was debris everywhere. (devastate)
- Sentence 5: Rona’s favorite board game was lost when her family moved. “I can’t believe it’s gone,” she said when she discovered that the game was lost. (uttered)

Tell the students that next week they will learn more new words.

Poem

Seal

by William Jay Smith

See how he dives
From the rocks with a zoom!
See how he darts
Through his watery room
Past crabs and eels
And green seaweed,
Past fluffs of sandy
Minnow feed!
See how he swims
With a swerve and a twist,
A flip of the flipper,
A flick of the wrist!
Quicksilver-quick,
Softer than spray,
Down he plunges
And sweeps away;
Before you can think,
Before you can utter
Words like “Dill pickle”
Or “Apple butter,”
Back up he swims
Past Sting Ray and Shark,
Out with a zoom,
A whoop, a bark;
Before you can say
Whatever you wish,
He plops at your side
With a mouthful of fish!

Introduce Flutter, Clutch, and Dodge

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words flutter, clutch, and dodge
- Review using context to determine word meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Taught

flutter (p. 5)

Flutter means “wave or flap rapidly.”

clutch (p. 8)

Clutch means “grab or hold onto something tightly.”

dodge (p. 20)

Dodge means “move quickly to avoid someone or something.”

INTRODUCE AND USE FLUTTER

1 Introduce and Define Flutter

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you.

Show the cover of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock, read the title and name of the author aloud, and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Explain that the words they will learn this week are from the story.

Remind the students that The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock is about a peacock named Prewitt who has a tail that is different from the other peacocks’ tails. Show pages 4–5 and review that Travis the tiger chases Prewitt and the other peacocks, hoping for a meal. Read page 5 aloud, emphasizing the word fluttering.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is flutter, and explain that flutter means “wave or flap rapidly.” Point to the flying peacocks in the picture and explain that when Travis leaps at them, they flutter their wings, or flap them rapidly, to fly into the treetops. Point out that many birds flutter their wings to fly fast, and insects such as butterflies and moths also flutter their wings. Ask the students to flutter their arms, or flap them, like a bird or butterfly fluttering its wings.

Display word card 19 (WA1) and have the students say the word flutter.

Materials

- The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock
- Word card 19 (WA1)
- Word card 20 (WA2)
- “Sentence from The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock” (WA3)
- Word card 21 (WA4)

Teacher Note

Explain that rapidly means “very quickly or very fast.”

2 Act Out Fluttering Eyelashes

Tell the students that when people get a piece of dirt in their eye, they flutter their eyelashes, or move them rapidly up and down, to get rid of the dirt. Have the students turn to their partners and act out fluttering their eyelashes as if they had a piece of dirt in their eyes. Then have a volunteer demonstrate for the class.

Ask:

Q What did you see [Spiro] do when he fluttered his eyelashes?

Click 1 on word card 19 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

flutter

PROMPT 1: When _____ fluttered [his/her] eyelashes, [he/she] . . .

1 2

WA1

PROMPT 1: “When [Spiro] fluttered his eyelashes, he . . .”

3 Discuss Clothes Fluttering on a Clothesline

Explain that things such as flags, curtains, and clothes on a clothesline can also flutter, or flap rapidly.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When might the clothes on a clothesline flutter? [Click 2 on WA1 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The clothes on a clothesline might flutter when . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word flutter and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “wave or flap rapidly”?

INTRODUCE AND USE CLUTCH

4 Introduce and Define Clutch

Show pages 8–9 of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock and review that in this part of the story Prewitt notices that his tail is changing. Read page 8 aloud, emphasizing the word clutching.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is clutch, and explain that clutch means “grab or hold onto something tightly.” Point to the clutching claws in the illustration on page 9 and explain that the feathery arms of the monster have claws that can clutch things, or grab or hold onto things tightly.

Display word card 20 (🔊 WA2) and have the students say the word clutch.

5 Discuss Times the Students Have Clutched Things

Give some examples of when you have clutched or seen someone clutching something, and model clutching.

You might say:

“I clutch things like books when I don’t want to drop them.” [Model clutching a book.] “Sometimes my baby niece clutches my finger and won’t let go. Recently I went to a baseball game. The left fielder caught a fly ball and clutched it in his mitt with both hands.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you clutched something or seen someone clutching something? [Pause; click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I clutched . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q What did it look like when you [clutched your dog’s leash]?

Have volunteers model what it looked like when they clutched or saw someone clutching.

Point to the word clutch and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “grab or hold onto something tightly”?

ELPS 1.A.ii
Step 4 and Step 5 (all)

ELPS 2.E.iii
Step 5 (all, including teacher note in the green margin next to Step 5)

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reviewing the definition of clutch and asking questions such as “When have you clutched something so that you wouldn’t drop or lose it?” and “When have you clutched someone’s hand? When has someone clutched your hand?”

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you may wish to write the context sentence where everyone can see it.

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 6
(two discussion questions on page 82)

INTRODUCE AND USE DODGE

6 Introduce and Define Dodge and Review Using Context to Determine Word Meanings

Display the “Sentence from The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock” chart (WA3). Show pages 20–21 of the book and remind the students that when Prewitt decides he will stay and keep his tail, the other peacocks chase him. Read the charted sentence aloud where it appears on page 20, emphasizing the word dodge.

Tell the students that dodge is the last word they will learn today. Direct their attention to the context sentence on the chart (WA3), and explain that this is the sentence you just read. Point to the word dodge and underline it. Remind the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word—like dodge—by rereading the sentence that includes the word, and looking for clues. Explain that, as you reread the sentence, you want the students to think about what the word dodge might mean and which words in the sentence are clues to the meaning of dodge.

Read the sentence aloud; then ask:

-  Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word dodge might mean? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

WA3

Sentence from *The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock

By zigzagging in and out through the trees and darting under bushes and ferns Prewitt managed to dodge his pursuers.

_____

PROMPT 1: I think dodge might mean . . .

PROMPT 2: The clues _____ help me figure out the meaning of the word dodge.

PROMPT 1: “I think dodge might mean . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that dodge means “move quickly to avoid someone or something.” Prewitt dodges, or moves quickly to avoid the other peacocks, and he gets away from them. Then ask:

-  Q What words in the sentence are clues to the meaning? [Point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The clues [‘zigzagging in and out’ and ‘darting under bushes’] help me figure out the meaning of the word dodge.”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Circle the context clues on the chart as the students identify them. If necessary, point out that “zigzagging in and out” and “darting under bushes” are clues that help us figure out that dodge means “move quickly to avoid someone or something.”

7 Discuss Times the Students Have Dodged Things

Display word card 21 (🔊 WA4) and have the students say the word dodge. Give a few examples of when you have dodged someone or something or seen someone dodge.

You might say:

“I dodged children playing on the playground today while I was on recess duty. Yesterday in the grocery store, one of the workers spilled a box of apples. I had to dodge the apples rolling on the floor.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you dodged something or seen someone dodge something?
[Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I dodged . . .” or “I saw [a soccer player] dodge . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word dodge and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “move quickly to avoid someone or something”?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

Day 2

Review Flutter, Clutch, and Dodge

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA5)

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, review the meaning of flutter and ask the question again.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review the words flutter, clutch, and dodge from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

flutter

Flutter means “wave or flap rapidly.”

clutch

Clutch means “grab or hold onto something tightly.”

dodge

Dodge means “move quickly to avoid someone or something.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you.

Display the daily review cards (WA5). Remind the students that yesterday they learned three words from The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock. Explain that today they will talk more about the words.

Point to the word flutter and ask:

Q What might flutter on a windy day? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA5) to reveal the first prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA5

flutter

PROMPT 1: On a windy day _____ might flutter because . . .

1 2 3 4 5

PROMPT 1: “On a windy day [leaves on a tree] might flutter because . . .”

Point to the word clutch and ask:

Q What might you clutch on a windy day? Why?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “On a windy day you might clutch . . .”

Point to the word dodge and ask:

Q What might you dodge on the playground? Why?

Click 3 to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 3: “On the playground you might dodge . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Game “Which Word Goes With?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Which Word Goes With?” Review that you will write a word they know, like forest or classroom, where everyone can see it and that they are to think about which of this week’s words goes with the word you wrote. Explain that when you say “Turn to your partner,” partners will discuss their thinking. Then you will ask some partners to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that the word you write might go with more than one of the vocabulary words. Tell the students that partners may not always agree and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Write the word forest where everyone can see it, and read the word aloud. Then point to words on the daily review cards (WA5) and use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which of this week’s words do you think goes with forest? Why do you think that? [Pause; click 4 on WA5 to reveal the next prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “I think [flutter] goes with forest because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble answering the questions, give a few examples of associations you might make and why. For example, say “I think flutter goes with forest because you might see birds or butterflies fluttering their wings in a forest. I think clutch can go with forest, also, because you might clutch a friend’s hand if you are walking in a scary forest. I think dodge can go with forest, too, because you might have to dodge a limb or pinecone that falls from a tree.” Then repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble answering the questions, give a few examples of associations you might make, or ask questions such as “How might the word flutter go with classroom? What might flutter in a classroom?” “How might the word clutch go with classroom? What might you clutch in a classroom?” and “How might the word dodge go with classroom? What might you dodge in a classroom?”

Teacher Note

For a list of common homophones, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Homophones” list in the General Resources section.

Using the same procedure, have the students discuss which word they think goes with classroom. Click 5 to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 5: “I think [dodge] goes with classroom because . . .”

Tell the students that tomorrow they will learn and talk about three new words.

EXTENSION

Explore Homophones with Tail and Tale

Write the words tail and tale where everyone can see them. Ask the students what they notice about the words.

Explain that tail and tale are homophones, and that homophones are “words that are pronounced the same way but are often spelled differently and have different meanings.” Have the students discuss the meanings of tail and tale. If necessary, point out that The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock is a story, or tale, about a peacock’s tail. Have the students discuss the meanings of these other homophones: ate/eight, blew/blue, meat/meet, and right/write. Invite the students to watch for other homophones in their reading, and discuss the examples they find.

Day 3

Introduce Heartbreaking, Fury, and Bewildered

Materials

- The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock
- Word card 22 (WA6)
- Word card 23 (WA7)
- Word card 24 (WA8)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words heartbreaking, fury, and bewildered
- Review shades of meaning and synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Taught

heartbreaking (p. 7)

Heartbreaking means “very sad or upsetting.”

fury (p. 11)

Fury means “great anger.”

bewildered (p. 26)

Bewildered means “confused or puzzled.” When you are bewildered, you are not sure what to do or think.

INTRODUCE AND USE HEARTBREAKING

1 Introduce and Define Heartbreaking and Review Shades of Meaning

Gather the students with partners sitting together, facing you.

Direct the students' attention to the book The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock and remind them that they learned three words from the story. Explain that today they will learn three more words from the story.

Show pages 6–7 of the book and review that in this part of the story Prewitt and the other peacocks flutter to the top of a tree to get away from Travis the tiger. Read the first paragraph aloud, emphasizing the word heartbreaking.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is heartbreaking. Explain that heartbreaking means sad, with an important difference—if something is heartbreaking, it is not just a little sad, it is very sad or upsetting.

Display word card 22 (🎧 WA6) and have the students say the word heartbreaking.

Discuss as a class:

Q Why do you think losing a tail feather is heartbreaking for the peacocks?

Click 1 on word card 22 (WA6) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: Losing a tail feather is heartbreaking because . . .

WA6

PROMPT 1: “Losing a tail feather is heartbreaking because . . .”

If necessary, explain that these storybook peacocks are proud of their beautiful tails and that losing a tail feather is heartbreaking, or very sad and upsetting, for them.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing shades of meaning, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard shades of meaning activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

Teacher Note

If you started a “Just the Right Word” chart, add the word heartbreaking, along with its definition “very sad or upsetting.”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something you own that you would be very sad or upset to lose?” and “What is your favorite toy/book/piece of clothing?”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of fury is furia.

Teacher Note

You may want to explain that the word furious comes from the word fury and that furious means “very angry.” If you started a synonym chart, add fury and anger to it.

2 Talk About Something That Would Be Heartbreaking to Lose

Remind the students that it is heartbreaking for the peacocks to lose a tail feather. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is something that would be heartbreaking for you to lose? Why?
[Pause; click 2 on WA6 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “It would be heartbreaking if I lost . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word heartbreaking and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “very sad or upsetting”?

INTRODUCE AND USE FURY

3 Introduce and Define Fury and Review Synonyms

Show pages 10–11 of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock. Remind the students that in this part of the story the other peacocks notice Prewitt’s tail for the first time. Read pages 10–11 aloud, emphasizing the word fury. Then read the first sentence on page 12 in a furious voice: “What’s come over you, Prewitt! What on earth have you done to your tail!” he squawked.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is fury, and explain that fury means “great anger.” Explain that fury and anger are synonyms and review that synonyms are “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.”

Display word card 23 (WA7) and have the students say the word fury. Discuss as a class:

Q Why do you think Phineas is in a fury, or feeling great anger?

Click 1 on word card 23 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “Phineas is in a fury because . . .”

If necessary, explain that Phineas thinks Prewitt has changed his tail to make it spooky, and this makes Phineas very angry.

4 Discuss Whether Olive Is in a Fury

Explain that you are going to describe something that an imaginary third-grader named Olive is doing. Partners will decide whether she is in a fury or not. Explain that partners may not always agree and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- It's Olive's birthday. She unwraps a present and discovers that it is a computer. She throws her hands up and shouts, "A computer! I didn't expect this!"

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Is Olive in a fury? Why? [Click 2 on WA7 to reveal the next prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "Olive [is/is not] in a fury because . . ."

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students' attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, have the students discuss:

- Olive is at the library. When she asks the librarian for a book she wants, he says, "Sorry. Every copy is checked out." Olive stomps her foot and shouts, "This isn't fair! I must have that book!"
- Olive is at the zoo with her friend Orlando. Orlando wants to visit the monkey house, but Olive wants to see the snake exhibit. "I've got an idea!" shouts Olive. "Let's do both!"

Point to the word fury and ask:

Q What's the new word we are learning that means "great anger"?

INTRODUCE AND USE BEWILDERED

5 Introduce and Define Bewildered

Show pages 24–25 of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock and remind the students that the peacocks are chasing Prewitt and suddenly encounter old Travis. Read pages 24–27 aloud, emphasizing the word bewildered.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is bewildered. Explain that bewildered means "confused or puzzled" and that bewildered, confused, and puzzled are synonyms. Explain that when you are bewildered, you aren't sure what to do or think. Point out that the peacocks are bewildered, or confused and puzzled, because they do not understand why Travis ran away. Explain that once they figure out that Prewitt's tail scared the tiger, they are not bewildered any more.

Display word card 24 (C WA8) and have the students say the word bewildered.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add bewildered and its synonyms to it.

6 Discuss Whether Olive Is Bewildered

Explain that you are going to describe something that happens to the imaginary third-grader, Olive, and partners will decide whether Olive is bewildered. Remind the students that partners may not always agree and that that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Olive's friend Orlando is mad at her. Olive isn't sure why.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Is Olive bewildered? Why? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Olive [is/is not] bewildered because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss the following situations:

- Olive finds out that Orlando is angry with her because she didn't go to Orlando's birthday party.
- Olive is working on a jigsaw puzzle. She can't figure out where the pieces go.

Point to the word bewildered and ask:

Q What's the new word we are learning that means “confused or puzzled”?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

---

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Shades of Meaning with Sad and Heartbreaking

Write the words sad and heartbreaking where everyone can see them. Discuss as a class:

Q How are the words sad and heartbreaking alike? How are they different?

If necessary, review that sad and heartbreaking mean about the same thing, but that if something is heartbreaking, it is not just a little sad, it is very sad or upsetting.

Tell the students that you will describe a situation. Explain that partners will discuss whether the situation would be a little sad or whether it would be heartbreaking, and why they think so.

Begin by saying:

- Your parents decide to move your family to a city far away.

Ask:

Q Would it be a little sad or would it be heartbreaking if your parents decided to move your family far away? Why? Turn to your partner.

Have partners use the prompt to take turns answering the question:

PROMPT: "It would be [heartbreaking] because . . ."

Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to briefly share with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- You get into an argument with your best friend.
- You drop your popcorn in the movie theater.

Tell the students that now that they know the word heartbreaking, they have just the right word to use in their writing when they want to describe something that is very sad or upsetting.

Review Heartbreaking, Fury, and Bewildered

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that you are going to describe an imaginary situation and have them talk with their partner about how they might feel or what they might do in that situation.

Begin by having the students imagine:

- Your friend asks you if she can play your video game. You say, “No.” Your friend stomps out of the room in a fury.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How would you feel? What would you do? Why? [Pause; click 4 on WA9 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “If my friend stomped out in a fury, I would . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask one or two volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, have the students imagine and discuss these situations:

- You are reading a book. It is a heartbreaking story about a boy and his dog.

Q How would you feel? What would you do? Why? [Pause; click 5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: “If I were reading a heartbreaking book, I would . . .”

- You are helping your mom make a birdhouse. She asks you to hand her a nail from the toolbox. You are bewildered because you see five different kinds of nails.

Q How would you feel? What would you do? Why? [Pause; click 6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 6: “If I were bewildered, I would . . .”

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about some of the words they have been learning.

EXTENSION

Explore Sensory Details in The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock

Tell the students that good writers like Bill Peet, the author of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock, use descriptive words and phrases in their stories that help readers imagine how things look, feel, taste, smell, and sound. Explain that we call words and phrases that appeal to our senses sensory details.

---

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

---

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 3 and 4, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 4 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

Day 5

Ongoing Review

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA10)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 1” answer sheet (IA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record” sheet (SR1)
- “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR1)
- (Optional) Class set of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1)

Show pages 8–9 of The Spooky Tail of Prewitt Peacock and remind the students that Prewitt’s tail begins to change. Tell the students that as you read aloud from this part of the story, you want them to close their eyes and listen for words or phrases that help them imagine how Prewitt’s tail looks. Then read page 8 aloud, slowly and clearly, without showing the illustration. Have the students open their eyes and ask:

Q What words or phrases did you hear that help you imagine how Prewitt’s tail looks?

If necessary, point out that the phrases “doubled in size,” “fierce black eyebrows,” “jagged mouth,” “enormous eyes,” “feathery arms,” and “wildly clutching claws” help us imagine Prewitt’s tail, which has grown to look like a monster. Point out that sensory details like these paint a picture with words, which helps make a story interesting and fun to read and hear. Encourage the students to use sensory details in their own writing.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

clutch

Clutch means “grab or hold onto something tightly.”

debris

Debris is the “scattered pieces of something that has been thrown away, broken, or destroyed.”

dodge

Dodge means “move quickly to avoid someone or something.”

heartbreaking

Heartbreaking means “very sad or upsetting.”

speedy

Speedy means “fast.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA10). Remind the students that they learned these words earlier. Explain that today they will talk more about the words. Point to the word clutch, pronounce it, and have the students say it.

Ask:

Q What do you know about the word clutch?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class. Remind them to use the word clutch as they share their ideas.

Repeat the procedure to review the remaining words.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Discuss “Would You?” Questions

Tell the students that you are going to ask them some questions about the words. Explain that partners will talk about each question; then you will ask a few pairs to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the words clutch and heartbreaking and ask:

Q Would you clutch your friend’s hand during a heartbreaking part of a movie? Why? [Click 1 on WA10 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for their attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students’ responses show that they know what the words mean?
- Do the students experience difficulty using or explaining any of the words?
- Are the students using the words they are learning in their writing?

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 152 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word’s meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word’s meaning, provide further practice through an activity modeled on “Act Out the Words” (see Week 2, Day 5, Step 2). For example, you might say, “Imagine you are dodging an orange falling from a tree. Act that out.” Then say, “Imagine you are watching a heartbreaking show. Act that out.”

For more information about reviewing and practicing the words, see “Retaining the Words” in the Introduction.

Assessment Notes (continued)

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT

Before continuing with the week 5 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students' understanding of words taught in Weeks 1–4 using the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 1" answer sheet (IA1). You might record the progress of individual students and the progress of your students as a whole using the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record" sheet (SR1) and the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record" sheet (CR1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment" on page 153 of the Assessment Resource Book.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate her understanding of words taught in Weeks 1–4 using the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Student Self-assessment" on page 157 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Introduce Floppy, Recall, and Clatter

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words floppy, recall, and clatter
- Review antonyms and synonyms
- Use a print dictionary to determine a word's meaning
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

floppy (p. 10)

Floppy means "soft and hanging down loosely."

recall

Recall means "remember."

clatter (p. 13)

When things clatter, they bang together or rattle noisily.

ABOUT USING A DICTIONARY AND GLOSSARY

In lessons and More Strategy Practice activities across the year, the students explore using print and online dictionaries and glossaries. On Day 1 of this lesson, the students are introduced to using a print dictionary (through the word recall). The students will discuss additional features of a print dictionary that will enable them to locate a word, to determine its pronunciation, and to understand the different forms of a word that may appear in a dictionary. For a complete list of lessons or More Strategy Practice activities in which dictionaries and glossaries are explored, see Appendix C. For more information about using a dictionary, glossary, or thesaurus and other word-learning strategies, see "Independent Word-learning Strategies" in the Introduction.

INTRODUCE AND USE FLOPPY

1 Introduce and Define Floppy and Review Antonyms

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the cover of Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) and read the title and the name of the author aloud. Remind the students that they heard this story earlier, and explain that today's words are from or about the story.

Materials

- Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later)
- Word card 25 (WA1)
- Word card 26 (WA2)
- Word card 27 (WA3)
- One dictionary for each pair of students (collected ahead)

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart, add floppy and stiff to it.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing antonyms, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard antonyms activities.”

For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

Show page 10 and review that Aunt Flossie has lots of different hats. Read the first four sentences on page 10 aloud, emphasizing the word floppy.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is floppy, and explain that floppy means “soft and hanging down loosely.” Explain that floppy and stiff are antonyms, and review that antonyms are “words with opposite meanings.” Explain that Aunt Flossie has stiff hats that stand up straight, and floppy hats that hang down loosely and hide her eyes.

Display word card 25 (C WA1) and have the students say the word floppy.

2 Discuss Floppy Things

Give a few examples of things that are floppy.

You might say:

“We learned that hats can be floppy. Other clothing can be floppy, as well. Sometimes people wear floppy sweatshirts or floppy pants that hang loosely from their bodies. A dog’s ears can be floppy. I have an old teddy bear that is floppy. It is soft and its head and arms hang down loosely.”

Ask:

Q What do you own or what have you seen that is floppy? Why do you say it is floppy? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA1

PROMPT 1:

I have a floppy . . .

or

I have seen a floppy . . .

PROMPT 1: “I have a floppy . . .” or “I have seen a floppy. . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3 Act Out Being Floppy

Explain that people’s arms, legs, and heads can be floppy, or hang down loosely, and model a floppy head and floppy arms. Have the students stand up straight with their arms stiff at their sides. Then ask them to make their arms and head floppy.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q What did you do to make your arms and head floppy? How did you feel when you were floppy?

Click 2 on word card 25 (WA1) to reveal the next prompt and have a few volunteers use it to share their thinking.

PROMPT 2: “To make my arms and head floppy, I . . .”

Point to the word floppy and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “soft and hanging down loosely”?

INTRODUCE AND USE RECALL

4 Introduce Using a Dictionary

Show the cover of Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) and explain that today the students will do something different to learn about the next word from the story—they will use a dictionary. Show the cover of the dictionary, read the title aloud, and ask:

Q What is a dictionary? When have you used a dictionary?

If necessary, explain that a dictionary is a “book that lists words in alphabetical (A-B-C) order and gives their meanings and other information.” Point out that if the students are not sure what a word means, they can “look it up” in the dictionary.

Distribute a dictionary to each pair of students. Have partners open their dictionaries to the first page of the dictionary that has guide words and point to the guide words at the top of the page. Tell the students that these words are called “guide words” and explain that they show the first and last words that are defined on the page. Explain that the “guide words” can help the students find a word they are looking for. Also point out that dictionary words are listed alphabetically (in A-B-C order) on the page and that each word is followed by its meaning or meanings. Discuss as a class:

Q What other information about the words is provided on this page?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. As necessary and appropriate, point out that a dictionary gives the spelling of each word; its division into syllables; the pronunciation; the part of

Teacher Note

If your students have not had experience with alphabetizing words, you may want to provide practice in that skill prior to teaching this lesson.

Teacher Note

Walk around the room and observe as the students are looking up the word. If many students are struggling, call for their attention. Model using the guide words in your copy of the dictionary to find the word. Then give the students another minute or two to find the word. For more practice using a dictionary, see the more strategy practice activity “Use a Print Dictionary” on page 106.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add recall and remember to it at the end of the lesson.

Listen as partners share ideas. Support struggling students by reviewing the meaning of recall and asking questions such as “What is a good time you recall, or remember, from last week/last year?” and “What is a good time you recall having with your family or friends?”

speech (whether the word is a noun, verb, adjective, or other part of speech); and other forms of the word, such as the -ing and -ed forms of a verb. Point out that, for some words, a sentence that shows how you might use the word is also provided.

5 Use the Dictionary to Discuss the Word Recall and Review Synonyms

Show pages 10–11 of Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later). Point out that in this story, Aunt Flossie’s hats help her recall things that have happened in her life, and explain that recall is the next word the students will learn today. Display word card 26 (🗨️ WA2) and have students say the word recall.

Give partners a few minutes to find the word recall in their dictionaries.

When most pairs have finished talking, ask a volunteer to read the definition. Point out that recall means “remember,” and explain that recall and remember are synonyms, or “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.”

Read pages 11–13 aloud. Then discuss as a class:

Q What does Aunt Flossie recall?

Click ❶ on word card 26 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt.

PROMPT 1: “Aunt Flossie recalls . . .”

If necessary, point out that Aunt Flossie recalls a big fire that burned in her city when she was a child.

6 Recall Good Times

Remind the students that in the story Aunt Flossie recalls both bad times and good times in her life. Show pages 16–17 of the book and review that in this part of the story Aunt Flossie recalls going to a big parade where people cheered and shouted.

Ask:

Q What is a good time that you recall? Why was it a good time?

[Click ❷ on WA2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I recall . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word recall and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “remember”?

INTRODUCE AND USE CLATTER

7 Introduce and Define Clatter

Show pages 12–13 again and remind the students that Aunt Flossie recalls a big fire. Reread the following text, emphasizing the word clattering: “. . . we could hear fire engines racing down St. Paul. Horses’ hooves clattering.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is clatter, and explain that when things clatter, they bang together or rattle noisily. Point to the horses in the illustration on page 12 and explain that fire engines used to be pulled by horses. Their hooves clattered, or made a loud banging noise, when they hit the street.

Display word card 27 ( WA3) and have the students say the word clatter.

8 Play “Clatter or Not Clatter?”

Give a couple of examples of things that clatter.

You might say:

“When you put dishes away, they sometimes clatter, or make a loud, rattling noise as one dish hits another. If you shook a plastic box with markers in it, the markers would clatter, or make a loud, rattling noise as they bumped against the plastic box.”

Tell the students that partners will play “Clatter or Not Clatter?” Explain that you will describe something and when you say “Turn to your partner,” partners will discuss whether the thing you described does or does not clatter, and why.

Begin by saying:

- Roller skates going over a bumpy sidewalk

Ask:

Q Do the roller skates clatter? Why or why not? [Click  on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “The roller skates [do/do not] clatter because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for their attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- Metal toys hitting the floor

PROMPT 2: “The metal toys [do/do not] clatter because . . .”

- A feather floating to the ground

PROMPT 3: “The feather [does/does not] clatter because . . .”

- Coins in someone’s pocket as they run

PROMPT 4: “The coins [do/do not] clatter because . . .”

Point to the word clatter and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means “bang together or rattle noisily”?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Use a Print Dictionary

Write the following words from Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) where everyone can see them: sniff (p. 11), smoky (p. 11), cheer (p. 17), and ripple (p. 24).

Distribute a dictionary to each pair of students. Explain that the students will practice using a dictionary by “looking up” words from Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later). If necessary, review how to use a dictionary by reminding the students that words are listed alphabetically, that guide words help them find a word on a page, and that word entries include the meaning and pronunciation of each word.

Direct the students’ attention to the words and explain that the words are from Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later). Tell the students that partners will choose one of the words they want to know about, look it up in the dictionary, and share what they learned about the word with the class.

Give partners a few minutes to choose a word, find it in the dictionary, and discuss the word entry. When most pairs have finished, discuss each word as a class by asking:

Q Who looked up the word [smoky]? What did you find out about the word?

Q Who else looked up the word [smoky]? What can you add to what [Elizabeth and Kimo] told us about the word?

Encourage the students to continue to use the dictionary to look up the meanings of words they do not know.

Review Floppy, Recall, and Clatter

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words floppy, recall, and clatter from Day 1

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Activity “What Do You Think About?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Do You Think About?” Explain that you will say one of the words and that you want them to notice what they think about when they hear the word.

Model the activity by giving a few examples of what comes into your mind when you hear the word clatter.

You might say:

“When I hear the word clatter, I think of the sound my keys made this morning when I dropped them. They clattered, or made a loud rattling noise, when they hit the floor.”

Then point to the word clatter and ask:

Q What comes to mind when you hear the word clatter? Why?

Give the students a few moments to think about the question. Click 2 on the daily review cards (WA4) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “When I hear the word clatter, I think of . . .”

Continue the activity in pairs by pointing to the word floppy, pronouncing it, and giving the students a moment or two to think to themselves.

 Q What comes to mind when you hear the word floppy? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “When I hear the word floppy, I think of . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss the word recall using the same procedure. Click 4 to reveal the prompt.

PROMPT 4: “When I hear the word recall, I think of . . .”

Tell the students that tomorrow they will learn and talk about three more words.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, stimulate their thinking by asking questions such as “What kinds of things clatter?” and “When have you heard something clatter?”

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Discuss a Family Member or Special Older Person

Review that in Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) Sarah and Susan visit their Great-great-aunt Flossie every Sunday. Aunt Flossie tells her nieces stories about her hats and takes them out for crab cakes after.

Ask the students to think about a family member such as an aunt, uncle, or grandparent, or other older person that they especially like, and why they like him or her. Then ask:

- Q Who is an older family member or another older person with whom you have a special relationship?
- Q Why do you like [him/her]?
- Q What do you call [him/her]?

Have volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking:

PROMPT: "I like [my great-uncle Juan Carlos] because . . ."

Introduce Disaster, Celebration, and Retrieve

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words disaster, celebration, and retrieve
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own
- Explain their thinking

Words Taught

disaster

A disaster is an "event such as a fire, flood, or storm that causes a lot of damage or suffering."

celebration

A celebration is a "happy event held to honor a special occasion."

retrieve

Retrieve means "bring or get something back."

INTRODUCE AND USE DISASTER

1 Introduce and Define Disaster

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Direct the students' attention to Aunt Flossie's Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) and remind them that they learned three words from and about the story. Explain that today they will learn three more words about the story.

Show pages 12–13 of the book and remind the students that in this part of the story Aunt Flossie recalls a fire in Baltimore that burned for days and days. Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is disaster, and explain that a disaster is an “event such as a fire, flood, or storm that causes a lot of damage or suffering.” Point out that a big fire like the one Aunt Flossie describes would be a disaster because many buildings would be devastated and people would suffer because they lost their homes.

Display word card 28 (🌐 WA5) and have the students say the word disaster.

2 Discuss Whether Events Are Disasters

Give a few more examples of natural and other disasters.

You might say:

“When a tornado whips through a town destroying everything in its path, it’s a disaster because the tornado causes a lot of damage and suffering. When a bridge or building collapses and many people are injured, that’s a disaster. When a plane crashes, that’s a disaster, too.”

Explain that you will describe an event. When you say “Turn to your partner,” partners will discuss whether the thing you described is a disaster, and why.

Begin by saying:

- A river overflows and floods the streets of a town with water and debris.

Ask:

Q Is this a disaster? Why or why not? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of disaster is desastre.

Teacher Note

You might point out that students learned the word devastate earlier and that devastate means “destroy or badly damage.”

Teacher Note

You might point out that students learned the word debris earlier and that debris is the “scattered pieces of something that has been thrown away, broken, or destroyed.”

disaster

PROMPT 1: It [is/is not] a disaster because . . .

PROMPT 1: “It [is/is not] a disaster because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for their attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- You spill a glass of milk on the floor.
- A volcano erupts and destroys a city.
- Your dog digs up your neighbor’s vegetable garden.

Point to the word disaster and ask:

Q What’s the new word we are learning that means an “event such as a fire, flood, or storm that causes lots of damage or suffering”?

INTRODUCE AND USE CELEBRATION

3 Introduce and Define Celebration

Show pages 16–17 and remind the students that in this part of the story Aunt Flossie recalls a very exciting day. Read pages 16–17 aloud.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is celebration and explain that a celebration is a “happy event held to honor a special occasion.” Explain that the parade is part of a celebration, or happy event, honoring the end of the war.

Display word card 29 (🌐 WA6) and have the students say the word celebration.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of celebration is celebración.

Teacher Note

You might want to explain that the words celebration and celebrate are related and that the word celebration is formed by adding the suffix -ion to the word celebrate. For more about the suffix -ion, see the extension activity “Explore the Suffix -ion” on page 113.

4 Discuss a Celebration

Explain that some celebrations are big, like the parade Aunt Flossie describes, and other celebrations are small, with just a few friends or family members. Give an example of a large and a small celebration you have attended.

You might say:

"I went to a big celebration when a new park opened in my neighborhood. Hundreds of people gathered at the park to hear speeches, play games, and eat. I had a small celebration this year for my birthday. I went out for dinner with a few friends."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you been to a celebration? What were you celebrating? What did you do? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "I went to a celebration . . ."

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for their attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word celebration and ask:

Q What's the new word we are learning that means a "happy event held to honor a special occasion"?

INTRODUCE AND USE RETRIEVE

5 Introduce and Define Retrieve

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is retrieve and explain that retrieve means "bring or get something back." Show pages 26–27 and review that the wind has blown Aunt Flossie's favorite hat into the water. A dog named Gretchen retrieves the hat, or brings it back to Aunt Flossie. Explain that you will read this part of the story aloud and ask the students to listen for what Gretchen does to retrieve the hat.

Display word card 30 (WA7) and have students say the word retrieve. Read pages 26–27 aloud, stopping after the sentence, "Hurray for Aunt Flossie's hat!" Discuss as a class:

Q What does Gretchen do to retrieve the hat?

Click 1 on word card 30 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: "Gretchen retrieves the hat by . . ."

If necessary, point out that Gretchen retrieves the hat by jumping into the water, swimming to the hat, and bringing it back in her mouth.

6 Discuss Ways to Retrieve Things

Explain that you will describe something that needs to be retrieved and ask the students to imagine what they might do to retrieve it.

Begin by saying:

- You have been playing at a friend's house. When you get home, you realize you left your jacket at the friend's house.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What might you do to retrieve your jacket? [Pause; click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “To retrieve my jacket, I would . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Why did you say [“I might call my friend on the phone”]? How would that help you retrieve your jacket?

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- You are flying a kite in the park and it gets stuck in a tree.

PROMPT 3: “To retrieve the kite, I would . . .”

- You and your sister are playing catch in your front yard. You miss the ball and it lands in the neighbor's yard.

PROMPT 4: “To retrieve the ball, I would . . .”

Point to the word retrieve and ask:

Q What's the new word we are learning that means “bring or get something back”?

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about the words they learned today.

EXTENSION

Explore the Suffix -ion

Write the word celebrate where everyone can see it. Review that celebrate is a verb, or action word, that means “do something special for a happy occasion.” Write the word celebration next to the word celebrate. Underline the suffix -ion in the word celebration, and explain that -ion is a suffix. Explain that the suffix -ion means “the act or result of doing

Teacher Note

You might explain that a suffix is a “letter or a group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.” You might also explain that when you add the suffix -ion to the word celebrate, you drop the e to spell celebration.

Teacher Note

Write the word invent where everyone can see it. Explain that invent is a verb, or action word, that means “think up and create something new.”

Ask:

Q What word do we make when we add the suffix -ion to the word invent?

Q What is an invention?

If necessary, explain that when we add -ion to invent we make the noun invention, which means the “act or result of inventing” or the “thing that is thought up and created.”

Using the same procedure, discuss the words create and creation and confuse and confusion.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Point to the word disaster on the daily review cards (WA8). Explain that you will ask the students to make a picture in their minds. Then they will use the word disaster to talk about what they pictured.

Ask the students to close their eyes and picture this scene:

- You walk into the classroom and find books, markers, pencils, and paper scattered everywhere. Tables, chairs, and windows are broken. Water is all over the floor.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Is this a disaster? Why or why not? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 2 on WA8 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “It [is/is not] a disaster because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After a few moments, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, review the remaining words and scenarios:

[celebration]

- You go to a park. You see a man decorating a table with balloons and colorful ribbons. There is a cake on the table.

 Q Is this man preparing for a celebration? Why or why not? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Tell the students that tomorrow they will talk more about some of the words they have been learning.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

For a list of common compound words, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Compound Words” list in the General Resources section.

EXTENSION

Discuss the Compound Word Hatboxes

Write this sentence from page 8 of Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later) where everyone can see it: “We sip our tea and eat our cookies, and then Aunt Flossie lets us look in her hatboxes.” Explain that it is a sentence from Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later). Read the sentence, emphasizing the word hatboxes. Point to the word and explain that hatboxes is a compound word. Explain that a compound word is a “word made up of two or more shorter words.” Tell the students that if they see a compound word in their reading and are not sure what it means, they can figure out the meaning by identifying the shorter words that make up the compound word and thinking about what each word means.

Discuss as a class:

Q What are the shorter words that make up the compound word hatboxes?

If necessary, point to the words hat and boxes and explain that these are the shorter words that make up hatboxes.

Q What do you think the word hatbox means? What is a hatbox?

If necessary, explain that a hatbox is a “box for storing hats.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Game “Which Word Am I?”

Tell the students that partners will use the words to play the game “Which Word Am I?” Direct the students’ attention to the ongoing review cards (WA9) and explain that you will describe one of the words and partners will discuss which word they think you are describing.

Tell the students that before they do the activity in pairs, they will practice as a class. Begin with the following clue:

- I’m how you might describe a ponytail.

Give the students a few moments to think about the clue. Then ask:

Q Which word am I? Why?

Click 1 on the ongoing review cards (WA9) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word is [floppy] because . . .”

Continue the activity in pairs by reading the following clue:

- I’m what you are feeling when you are very, very angry.

Ask:

 Q Which word am I? Why? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word is [fury] because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention and ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss the following clues using the same procedure:

- I’m what you do when you remember what you did last weekend. (recall)
- I’m what you do when you sit down heavily on the couch. (plop)
- I’m what you feel when you wake up with a chicken in your bed. (bewildered)

Tell the students that next week they will learn more new words.

Teacher Note

You might continue the game by inviting the students to make up additional clues.

Fortunate means “lucky.”

immense

Immense means “huge or very large.”

ABOUT ABBREVIATED LESSONS

Beginning this week, parts of the lesson that are essentially the same from week to week are abbreviated. Teacher Notes refer you to a fully written-out example of each abbreviated part, if you wish to review it. For more information about abbreviated lessons, see “Full and Abbreviated Lessons” in the Introduction.

INTRODUCE AND USE UNFORTUNATE AND FORTUNATE

1 Introduce and Define Unfortunate and Review the Prefix un-

Briefly review The Paper Bag Princess.

Show pages 6–7 and remind the students that Elizabeth is going to marry Prince Ronald, but a dragon ruins her plans. Read page 6 aloud, emphasizing the word unfortunately.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is unfortunate. Display word cards 31–32 (🌐 WA1) and click to reveal word card 31. Have the students say the word unfortunate.

Point to the prefix un- in unfortunate and review that un- is a prefix that means “not.” Tell the students that as you read this part of the

2 Introduce and Define Fortunate and Review Antonyms

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is fortunate. Click to reveal word card 32 on word cards 31–32 (WA1) and have the students say the word fortunate. Explain that fortunate and unfortunate are antonyms, and review that antonyms are “words with opposite meanings.” Ask:

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I think fortunate means . . .”

If necessary, explain that fortunate means “lucky.”

3 Discuss Whether Olive Is Unfortunate or Fortunate

Explain that you are going to describe something that is happening to the imaginary third-grader, Olive. Partners will decide whether she is unfortunate or fortunate, and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Olive is at the bookstore. When she asks the salesperson for a comic book she wants, he says, "It's your lucky day. This is our last copy."

Ask:

Q Is Olive unfortunate or fortunate? Why? [Click 3 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "Olive is [unfortunate/fortunate] because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, have the students discuss:

- Olive is walking on the sidewalk after a rainstorm. A car drives through a puddle and splashes her with rainwater.
- Olive is eating lunch with her friend Orlando. As she lifts a spoonful of soup to her mouth, Orlando shouts, "Stop! There's a fly in your soup!"

Point to the words unfortunate and fortunate and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

4 Introduce and Define Immense and Review Shades of Meaning

Show pages 10–11 of The Paper Bag Princess and remind the students that in this part of the story Elizabeth finds the dragon by following a trail of burnt forests and horses' bones. Read the first paragraph on page 10 aloud, emphasizing the word huge.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is immense and that immense means the same thing as large, with this important difference: when something is immense, it is huge or very large.

Display word card 33 ( WA2) and have the students say the word immense.

Teacher Note

For an example of how to prompt the students to use a word, see Week 1, Day 1, Step 3.

Teacher Note

Invite the students to make up their own "Is Olive Unfortunate or Fortunate?" scenarios. You might stimulate their thinking by providing them with a setting (for example, "Olive is at school," or "Olive is at the zoo").

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of immense is inmenso/a.

ELL Note

You might want to show the students the illustration on page 13 and point out that the dragon, door, knocker, and handle are all immense.

Teacher Note

If you started a "Just the Right Word" chart, add the word immense along with its definition "huge or very large."

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What immense animals have you seen at the zoo or in books?” “What immense things have you seen on TV or in movies?” and “What immense things do you see in the sky?”

Materials

- The Paper Bag Princess

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, ask “What do we mean when we say a family hikes on a trail?”

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing words with multiple meanings, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard multiple-meaning words activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

5 Discuss Things We Have Seen That Are Immense

Name a few things you have seen that are immense (for example, a skyscraper, redwood tree, passenger plane, mountain, and ocean).

Ask:

Q When have you seen something that is immense? Where did you see it?
[Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I saw an immense . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word immense and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Explore Multiple Meanings of Trail

Review that words can have more than one meaning and that the meanings are often very different. Show pages 8–9 of The Paper Bag Princess, and read the last sentence aloud, emphasizing the word trail. Point to the word trail and ask:

Q What do you think the author means when he writes about a trail of burnt forests and horses’ bones?

If necessary, explain that in the sentence trail means “the marks, signs, and smells left behind by someone or something that can often be followed.” When an animal leaves a trail of paw prints, it leaves marks behind that someone can follow to try to find them. Then ask:

Q What else do you know about the word trail?

If necessary, explain that trail can also mean “a path that someone follows to go somewhere or achieve something.” Discuss as a class:

Q Where might you find a trail?

Review Fortunate, Unfortunate, and Immense

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review the words fortunate, unfortunate, and immense from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking

Words Reviewed

unfortunate

Unfortunate means “unlucky.”

If the students have difficulty thinking of an ending, review the definition of unfortunate and think aloud about an ending. For example, say “The unfortunate thing that happens is that Jimmy falls and sprains his ankle.” Then reread the beginning of the story and repeat the questions.

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss the remaining words:

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Review that you will tell the beginning of a story that includes one of the vocabulary words. The students will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (📄 WA4) and show story 1 and its accompanying prompts. Tell the students that story 1 uses the word unfortunate. Then read the story aloud, slowly and clearly:

- Story 1: It is a pleasant day. Jimmy is hiking in the mountains, enjoying the scenery. Then something unfortunate happens. The unfortunate thing that happens is . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q How might you finish the story? What unfortunate thing happens to Jimmy? [Pause; point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

You might point out that students learned the word bewildered earlier and that bewildered means “confused or puzzled.” When you are bewildered, you are not sure what to do or think.

Teacher Note

You might point out that students learned the word plop earlier and that plop means “sit down heavily or put something down heavily.”

Day 3

Introduce Fierce/Fiercest, Magnificent, and Ungrateful

Materials

- The Paper Bag Princess
- Word card 34 (WA5)
- Word card 35 (WA6)
- Word card 36 (WA7)

- Learn and use the words fierce/fiercest, magnificent, and ungrateful
- Discuss the suffix -est
- Review the prefix un-
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking

Words Taught

fierce/fiercest (p. 12)

Fierce means “dangerous or violent.” Fiercest means “most dangerous or most violent.”

magnificent (p. 16)

If something is magnificent, you admire it because of its great beauty or size.

Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 1 (all)

INTRODUCE AND USE FIERCE AND FIERCEST

1 Introduce and Define Fierce and Fiercest and Discuss the Suffix -est

Show pages 12–13 of The Paper Bag Princess, and remind the students that in this part of the story Elizabeth finds the dragon. Read the following sentences aloud, emphasizing the word fiercest: “‘Wait,’ shouted Elizabeth. ‘Is it true that you are the smartest and fiercest dragon in the whole world?’”

Tell the students that fiercest is the first word they will learn today. Display word card 34 (WA5) and have the students say the word fiercest. Point to the word fierce in fiercest and explain that fierce means “dangerous or violent.”

Teacher Note

You may want to point out that when you add the suffix -est to fierce, you drop the final e to spell fiercest.

Point to the letters est at the end of the word and explain that -est is a suffix. Explain that a suffix is a “group of letters that are added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the suffix -est means “most” and that when you add -est to fierce you make the word fiercest. Review that fiercest means “most dangerous or most violent.” Explain that Elizabeth wants to know if the dragon is the fiercest, or most dangerous, dragon in the whole world.

2 Discuss Things That Are Fierce

Point out that many animals can be fierce, or dangerous or violent. Ask:

Q What animal do you think is fierce? Why? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think [a lion] is fierce because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss as a class:

Q What animal do you think is the fiercest animal in the world? Why?

Click 2 on word card 34 (WA5) to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I think [a tiger] is the fiercest animal because . . .”

Explain that the word fierce is also used to describe violent or dangerous weather or people. Ask and briefly discuss as a class:

Q What do you think a fierce thunderstorm would sound and look like? Why?

Q How might a fierce person act? Why?

Point to the word fiercest and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

For more practice using the suffix -est, see the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -est” on page 134.

Teacher Note

For a list of common suffixes, visit the CCC Learning Hub (cclearninghub.org) to view the “Suffixes” list in the General Resources section.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on using suffixes to determine word meanings, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard suffixes activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

INTRODUCE AND USE MAGNIFICENT

3 Introduce and Define Magnificent

Show pages 16–17 of The Paper Bag Princess and review that the dragon shows Elizabeth that he is the fiercest dragon in the whole world by breathing out as much fire as he can. Read page 16 aloud, emphasizing the word magnificent.

Tell the students that magnificent is the next word they will learn today and explain that if something is magnificent, you admire it because of its great beauty or size. Explain that Elizabeth wants the dragon to use up his fire, so she tricks him by telling him that his fiery breath is magnificent—that she admires his fiery breath because it is so powerful and destructive.

Display word card 35 (🗨️ WA6) and have the students say the word magnificent.

4 Discuss Magnificent Things

Name things you think are magnificent—that you admire because of their great beauty or size (for example, the Grand Canyon, the view from the top of a mountain, a whale, the ocean, the flowers blooming in your neighborhood’s garden, or a spectacular catch or home run by a baseball player).

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you seen something magnificent? Why did you think it was magnificent? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I saw a magnificent [volcano on TV]. It was magnificent because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word magnificent and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE UNGRATEFUL

5 Introduce Ungrateful and Use the Prefix un- to Determine the Meaning

Show pages 24–25 of the book and remind the students that at the end of the story Elizabeth tricks the dragon and saves Prince Ronald. Read page 24 aloud.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What animal/place/thing have you seen that you admired because it was beautiful or immense?”

Explain that Prince Ronald is ungrateful, and tell the students that ungrateful is the last word they learn today. Display word card 36 (WA7) and have the students say the word ungrateful.

Point to the prefix un- in ungrateful and review that un- is a prefix that means “not.” Tell the students that as you read this part of the story again, you want them to think about what the word ungrateful might mean.

Reread page 24 aloud. Ask:

Q Based on what you heard and what you know about the prefix un-, what do you think ungrateful means?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Explain that ungrateful means “not thankful or not grateful.” If you are ungrateful, you do not thank someone who has done something for you or show your appreciation. Point out that even though Elizabeth saves Prince Ronald from the dragon, the prince does not thank her or show appreciation. He is ungrateful.

6 Discuss Whether Olive Is Grateful or Ungrateful

Explain that you will describe something that the imaginary third-grader Olive is doing. Partners must decide whether she is grateful or ungrateful, and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Olive’s mom makes her a special breakfast on the first day of school. Olive snaps unpleasantly, “Mom, I don’t want this stuff! I want my usual breakfast!”

Ask:

Q Is Olive grateful or ungrateful? Why? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Olive is [grateful/ungrateful] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q You said that Olive is [ungrateful]. What might she say if she were [grateful]?

Using the same procedure, discuss the following scenarios:

- Olive’s friend Orlando reminds her that her science report is due tomorrow. Olive says, “Thank you for reminding me, Orlando!”
- Olive leaves her jacket on the playground. Orlando finds it and brings it to her. Olive shouts, “What are you doing with my jacket, Orlando? Give it to me!”

Point to the word ungrateful and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart earlier, add ungrateful and grateful to it.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word snap earlier and that snap means “speak sharply or angrily.”

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -est

Remind the students that a suffix is a “group of letters that are added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Write the word fiercest where everyone can see it. Review that the suffix -est means “most,” and point out that when -est is added to the word fierce it makes the word fiercest, which means “most fierce.”

Explain that you are going to reread the sentence in The Paper Bag Princess that includes the word fiercest. Tell the students that you want them to listen for another word in the sentence that ends with the suffix -est. Then reread this sentence aloud: “‘Wait,’ shouted Elizabeth. ‘Is it true that you are the smartest and fiercest dragon in the whole world?’”

Ask:

- Q What word did you hear that ends with the suffix -est?
- Q What do you think the word smartest means?

If necessary, explain that smartest means “most smart.”

Invite the students to think of other words that use the suffix -est and list them where everyone can see them. You might stimulate their thinking by asking questions such as “What word means the most tall? Most slow? Most big?”

Review Fierce/Fiercest, Magnificent, and Ungrateful

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words fierce/fiercest, magnificent, and ungrateful from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking

Words Reviewed

fierce/fiercest

Fierce means “dangerous or violent.” Fiercest means “most dangerous or most violent.”

magnificent

If something is magnificent, you admire it because of its great beauty or size.

Tell the students that they will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Review that you will tell them the beginning of a story that includes one of the vocabulary words. Then partners will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA9) and show story 1 and its accompanying prompt. Tell the students that story 1 uses the word fiercest. Then read the story aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Story 1: Petunia and Paul are at the park. They see the fiercest squirrel they have ever seen. It is the fiercest squirrel because . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

If the students have difficulty thinking of an ending, review the definition of fiercest and give some examples of an ending. For example, say “It is the fiercest squirrel because it has immense sharp teeth that are really scary.” Then reread the beginning of the story and repeat the questions.

Point to prompt 3. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q How does saying [“I don’t want your icky salad”] show that Petunia is ungrateful?

Point to prompt 5 and have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 5: “Saying [‘I don’t want your icky salad’] shows that Petunia is ungrateful because . . .”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

magnificent

If something is magnificent, you admire it because of its great beauty or size.

unfortunate

- Ongoing review cards (WA10)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

For an example of how to review the words, see Week 1, Day 5, Step 1.

Rather than having the students choose between two things, you might have them discuss each thing individually by first asking, “Would pots and pans clatter when they hit each other? Why?” and then asking, “Would blankets clatter when they hit each other? Why?”

ABOUT ABBREVIATED ONGOING REVIEW ACTIVITIES

Beginning this week, parts of the Ongoing Review activities have been abbreviated. A teacher note refers you to a fully written-out example of the activity, if you wish to review it.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🌐 WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Game “Make a Choice”

Explain that partners will use the words to play a game called “Make a Choice.” Point to the word clatter and tell the students that they will play the first round of the game with the word clatter. Explain that you will describe two things and ask them to decide which one they think would clatter and tell why they think so. Explain that partners may not always agree and that is OK. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Ask:

PROMPT 5: “I think [a lion at the zoo] is magnificent because . . .”

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students' choices show that they understand the meanings of the words?
- Can they use the words to explain their thinking?
- Are they using the words spontaneously at other times of the day?

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 160 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice in using the word by reviewing the word's meaning and then asking a question that requires the student to talk about the word in terms of his own experiences. For example, ask questions such as “When have you had to flick something? Why did you flick it?” or “When has something unfortunate happened to you? Why was it unfortunate?”

Introduce Doubtful, Nifty, and Ghastly

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words doubtful, nifty, and ghastly
- Discuss the suffix -ful
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

doubtful (p. 12)

Doubtful means “uncertain or unsure.” When you are doubtful, you are full of doubt.

nifty (p. 12)

Nifty means “very good, clever, or useful.”

ghastly (p. 23)

Ghastly means “horrible.”

ABOUT ABBREVIATED LESSONS

Beginning in Week 6, parts of the lesson that are essentially the same from week to week are abbreviated. Teacher Notes refer you to a fully written-out example of each abbreviated part, if you wish to review it. For more information about abbreviated lessons, see “Full and Abbreviated Lessons” in the Introduction.

INTRODUCE AND USE DOUBTFUL

1 Introduce and Define Doubtful

Review that Julius, the Baby of the World is about a mouse named Lilly and her baby brother, Julius. Show page 12 of the book and read it aloud, emphasizing the word doubtful.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is doubtful. Explain that doubtful means “uncertain or unsure.” Explain that Lilly’s parents are doubtful about leaving Julius alone with Lilly because they are not sure how she will treat him.

Display word card 37 (WA1) and have the students say the word doubtful.

Materials

- Julius, the Baby of the World
- Word card 37 (WA1)
- Word card 38 (WA2)
- Word card 39 (WA3)

Teacher Note

For an example of how to introduce the week’s vocabulary words and review the read-aloud text, see Week 2, Day 1, Step 1.

Teacher Note

You may want to remind the students that earlier they discussed the suffix -est when they learned the word fiercest. The suffix -est means “most.”

Teacher Note

For more practice with the suffix -ful, do the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -ful” on page 146.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on using suffixes to determine word meanings, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard suffixes activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

Teacher Note

For an example of how to prompt the students to use a word, see Week 1, Day 1, Step 4.

2 Introduce the Suffix -ful

Point to the suffix -ful in doubtful and explain that -ful is a suffix. Remind the students that a suffix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the suffix -ful means “full of.” Explain that when you add -ful to doubt, it makes the word doubtful, which means “full of doubt.”

3 Discuss Whether Olive Is Doubtful

Explain that you will describe something that is happening to the imaginary third-grader Olive; then partners will decide whether or not she is doubtful and why they think so. Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice:

- Olive wants a new bike for her birthday, but she isn't sure if she will get one.

Ask:

-  Q Is Olive doubtful about getting a bike for her birthday? Why? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

doubtful

PROMPT 1: I think Olive [is/is not] doubtful because . . .

1

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I think Olive [is/is not] doubtful because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss one or both of the following scenarios:

- Olive studied hard for her spelling test. She is sure she did well.

-  Q Is Olive doubtful about how well she did on the test? Why? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

- Olive wants to go to the baseball game, but she isn't feeling well. She probably won't go to the game.

Q Is Olive doubtful about going to the game? Why? [Point to prompt 1.]
Turn to your partner.

Point to the word doubtful and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE NIFTY

4 Introduce and Define Nifty

Show page 12 of Julius, the Baby of the World again, and remind the students that Lilly's parents are doubtful about leaving her alone with Julius. Reread this sentence aloud, emphasizing the word nifty: "Lilly tried to frighten Julius with her nifty disguises."

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is nifty. Explain that nifty means "very good, clever, or useful." Point to Lilly's disguises in the first two illustrations and explain that they are nifty because they are good disguises.

Display word card 38 (C WA2) and have the students say the word nifty.

5 Discuss Things That Are Nifty

Give examples of things you think are nifty.

You might say:

"My new car is nifty. It has lots of room in the back for carrying things, which is useful, and the seats are very comfortable. I think the drawing Doreen did yesterday is nifty. It shows so much imagination, and the colors are beautiful. It's a very good drawing!"

Ask:

Q What is something you think is nifty? Why? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "I think [my bike] is nifty because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word nifty and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

For an example of how to review a word at the end of a discussion, see Week 1, Day 1, Step 4.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "What is something you own that you like a lot?" "What is something of yours that you use a lot—that you couldn't do without?" and "What is something you have seen that you like a lot?"

INTRODUCE AND USE GHASTLY

6 Introduce and Define Ghastly and Review Synonyms

Show pages 22–23 of Julius, the Baby of the World and review that Lilly has dreams and nightmares about Julius. Read the pages aloud, emphasizing the word ghastly.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is ghastly. Explain that ghastly is a synonym for horrible and review that synonyms are “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.” Explain that Lilly’s nightmare about a giant Julius eating her with a fork is ghastly, or horrible.

Discuss as a class:

Q What other synonyms can you think of for the words ghastly and horrible? What other words mean almost the same thing?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that bad, awful, and terrible are synonyms for ghastly and horrible.

Display word card 39 (🗨️ WA3) and have the students say the word ghastly.

7 Imagine a Ghastly Giant

Ask the students to imagine they are going to write a story about a ghastly giant named Ghastly Glenora. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What would Ghastly Glenora look like? What would she sound like?
[Pause; click 1 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Ghastly Glenora would [look/sound] like . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Why would [having big teeth and sharp claws] be ghastly?

Point to the word ghastly and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -ful

Write the word doubtful where everyone can see it. Point to -ful in doubtful and review that -ful is a suffix that means “full of.” Review that when you add -ful to the word doubt you make the word doubtful, which means “full of doubt.”

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the word ghastly and its synonyms to it.

Write the word hope where everyone can see it and ask:

Q What word do you make when you add the suffix -ful to the word hope?

Q What do you think the word hopeful means?

Using the same procedure, have the students discuss the words helpful (help + -ful) and truthful (truth + -ful).

You might list the words doubtful, hopeful, helpful, and truthful on a sheet of chart paper titled “-ful Words.” During the next few weeks, invite the students to listen and watch for other words with the suffix -ful and add the words to the chart (for example, beautiful, careful, wonderful, successful, painful, powerful, colorful, and hateful).

Review Doubtful, Nifty, and Ghastly

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words doubtful, nifty, and ghastly from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking

Words Reviewed

doubtful

Doubtful means “uncertain or unsure.” When you are doubtful, you are full of doubt.

nifty

Nifty means “very good, clever, or useful.”

ghastly

Ghastly means “horrible.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which of the words we learned yesterday might you use in your writing? How might you use the word? [Pause; click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

Teacher Note

For an example of how to introduce the review activities, see Week 1, Day 2, Step 1.

doubtful

ghastly

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____ in my writing. I might write . . .

1 2 3 4

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [nifty] in my writing. I might write . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Game “Act Out the Words”

Tell the students you are going to play the game “Act Out the Words.” Ask the students to imagine the following scenario:

- Your friend asks you to go for a bike ride, but it looks like it is going to rain. You are doubtful about going with your friend.

Ask:

 Q How might you look? What might you say? Turn to your partner.

Have partners take turns acting out how they would look and what they would say if they were doubtful about going on the bike ride. Then have a volunteer act out how he would look and what he would say for the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q What did you see [Taran] do when he acted out looking doubtful? What did you hear him say?

Click 2 on the daily review cards (WA4) to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 2: “When [Taran] acted out looking doubtful, he [looked/said] . . .”

Q How does saying [“I’m not sure I can go”] show that [Taran] is doubtful?

Using the same procedure, have the students act out how they would look and what they would say in the following situations:

- Your friend gives you a pencil box he made. You think the pencil box is nifty.

Click 3 to reveal the prompt.

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of the activity, see Week 2, Day 5, Step 2.

PROMPT 3: “When [Kayla] acted out getting a nifty pencil box she [looked/said] . . .”

- Your friend makes a pizza. He gives you a slice to eat. The pizza tastes ghastly.

Click 4 to reveal the prompt.

PROMPT 4: “When [Marcus] acted out eating a ghastly piece of pizza he [looked/said] . . .”

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Review the Suffix -est and Discuss the Words Niftiest and Ghastliest

Remind the students that the suffix -est means “most.” Write the word niftiest where everyone can see it and ask:

Q What word do you make when you add the suffix -est to the word nifty?

Follow up by asking:

Q Based on what you know about the suffix -est, what do you think the word niftiest means?

Using the same procedure, discuss the word ghastliest.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Further Explore the Suffix -est

Remind the students that the suffix -est means “most” and that when -est is added to the word nifty, it makes the word niftiest, which means the “best, cleverest, or most useful.” Ask:

Q What is the niftiest toy or game you have or know about? Why is it the niftiest?

Ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT: “The niftiest [toy] I [have] is [a magic kit] because [I can do all kinds of interesting tricks].”

Tell the students that nicest is another word that uses the suffix -est, and discuss the meaning of nicest (“most nice”). Then ask:

Q What is the nicest day you have ever had? Why was it the nicest?

Ask a few volunteers to use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT: “The nicest day I ever had was [when my favorite uncle came to visit us] because [I hadn’t seen him for three years].”

---

Teacher Note

You might explain that when you add -est to nifty and ghastly you change the final y to an i to spell niftiest and ghastliest.

Teacher Note

Before beginning this activity, we recommend that you do the more strategy practice activity “Review the Suffix -est and Discuss the Words Niftiest and Ghastliest” above with your students.

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words dazzle, quiver, and command
- Review synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills

Dazzle means "amaze or impress."

quiver (p. 28)

Quiver means "tremble or shake."

command (p. 30)

Command means "order someone to do something."

INTRODUCE AND USE DAZZLE

1 Introduce and Define Dazzle and Review Synonyms

Briefly review Julius, the Baby of the World.

Show pages 16–17 of the book and remind the students that Lilly's parents think everything that Julius does is wonderful. Read page 16 aloud, emphasizing the word dazzled.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is dazzle. Explain that dazzle means "amaze or impress" and that dazzle, amaze, and impress are synonyms. Review that Lilly's parents are dazzled, or amazed, when Julius babbles and gurgles. Display word card 40 (WA5) and have the students say the word dazzle.

Ask:

Q Why aren't Lilly's parents dazzled when Lilly talks like Julius?

Click 1 on word card 40 (WA5) to reveal the first prompt.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words dazzle, amaze, and impress to it.

dazzle

PROMPT 1: Lilly's parents aren't dazzled because . . .

1 2

PROMPT 1: "Lilly's parents aren't dazzled because . . ."

Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

2 Talk About Things That Have Dazzled Us

Give a few examples of things that have dazzled you.

You might say:

"I was dazzled by the beautiful sunset last night. It was amazing. When I went to the Grand Canyon, the scenery dazzled me. I saw Ellen do a nifty trick on her skateboard. I was dazzled, or very impressed, because I certainly couldn't do that trick."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What is something that has dazzled you? Why was it dazzling?
[Pause; click 2 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I was dazzled by [the fireworks on the Fourth of July] because . . ." or "The [whale show at the animal park] was dazzling because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word dazzle and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "Have you ever been on a trip and seen something dazzling, or very beautiful? What did you see?" "What is something you have seen someone do that dazzled, or impressed, you?" and "What have you seen on TV, at the movies, or in a book that dazzled, or amazed, you?"

INTRODUCE AND USE QUIVER

3 Introduce and Define Quiver

Show page 28 of Julius, the Baby of the World and review that Cousin Garland says mean things about Julius. Read page 28 aloud, emphasizing the word quivered.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is quiver. Explain that quiver means “tremble or shake” and that quiver, tremble, and shake are synonyms. Explain that people might quiver, or shake, because they are angry, nervous, excited, or scared. Explain that Lilly is so mad that her tail quivered, or shook.

Display word card 41 ( WA6) and have the students say the word quiver.

4 Practice Using the Word Quiver

Remind the students that people sometimes quiver, or tremble or shake, when they are angry or upset, like Lilly in the story. Review that people also sometimes quiver when they are excited, nervous, or scared. Tell the students that you will describe two situations; then partners will decide which situation might make them quiver and explain why they think so.

Ask the students to imagine the following scenarios:

- You are giving a speech to the whole school.
- You are talking to your best friend.

Ask:

Q Which situation might make you quiver? Why? [Click  on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think [giving a speech to the whole school] might make me quiver because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

If the students need further practice with the word quiver, discuss these two situations:

- You are riding an enormous roller coaster.
- You are riding the bus to school.

Point to the word quiver and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words quiver, tremble, and shake to it.

ELL Note

As you discuss when people quiver, act out quivering.

Teacher Note

You might discuss each situation individually by asking, “If you are giving a speech to the whole school, might you quiver? Why?” and “If you are talking to your best friend, might you quiver? Why?”

INTRODUCE AND USE COMMAND

5 Introduce and Define Command

Show pages 30–31 of Julius, the Baby of the World and review that Lilly is furious when Cousin Garland says mean things about Julius. Read page 30 aloud, emphasizing the word commanded.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is command. Explain that command means “order someone to do something” and that command and order are synonyms. Explain that Lilly commands, or orders, her cousin to be nice to Julius. Reread Lilly’s words in a commanding voice: “Kiss! Admire! Stroke!”

Display word card 42 (🗨️ WA7) and have the students say the word command.

6 Act Out Asking and Commanding

Explain that commanding someone to do something looks and sounds different from asking them to do it. Explain that you are going to ask a student volunteer to stand; then you are going to command that student to stand. Explain that you want the students to watch carefully and notice how asking and commanding are different.

Using a pleasant voice and demeanor, ask a student volunteer to stand. Then, using a commanding voice and demeanor, command another student to stand.

Ask:

Q What did you notice about how I looked and sounded when I asked [Theresa] to stand and when I commanded [Enrique] to stand?
[Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “When [Ms. Allen] asked [Theresa] to stand, she [looked/sounded] . . .” and “When [Ms. Allen] commanded [Enrique] to stand, he [looked/sounded] . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, have a student volunteer first ask a classmate to hand him a pencil and then command the classmate to hand him the pencil. Ask the students to discuss how the volunteer looked and sounded when he asked and commanded.

Follow up by briefly discussing as a class:

Q How might you feel if someone commanded you to do something? Why?

Point to the word command and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words command and order to it.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play "Which Word Am I?"

Tell the students that partners will play the game "Which Word Am I?" Direct the students' attention to the words at the top of the daily review cards (WA8). Explain that you will describe one of the words and then partners will discuss which word you are describing. Then you will ask a few pairs to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

You may want to review that synonyms are "words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing."

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word nifty earlier and that nifty means “very good, clever, or useful.”

Teacher Note

Introduce Particularly, Speechless, and Reunite

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words particularly, speechless, and reunite
- Review synonyms
- Discuss the prefix re-
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Build on one another's thinking

Words Taught

particularly (p. 2)

Particularly means “especially or mainly.”

speechless (p. 5)

Speechless means “unable to speak because you are shocked, surprised, or very angry.”

reunite

Reunite means “come together again after being separated.”

INTRODUCE AND USE PARTICULARLY

1 Introduce and Define Particularly and Review Synonyms

Briefly review Boundless Grace. Show page 2 of the book and review that Grace likes stories. Read the first paragraph aloud, emphasizing the word particularly.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is particularly. Explain that particularly means “especially or mainly.” Point out that Grace likes all kinds of stories, but she particularly, or especially or mainly, likes stories about fathers. They are her favorite stories. Explain that particularly, especially, and mainly are synonyms.

Display word card 43 (🌐 WA1) and have the students say the word particularly.

Materials

- Boundless Grace
- Word card 43 (WA1)
- Word card 44 (WA2)
- Word card 45 (WA3)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of particularly is particularmente.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add particularly, especially, and mainly to it.

2 Practice Using Particularly

Remind the students that Grace particularly likes to read stories about fathers. Ask:

 Q What kinds of stories do you particularly like to read? Why? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

particularly

PROMPT 1: I particularly like to read stories about . . .

1 2

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I particularly like to read stories about . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point out that reading is something Grace particularly likes to do. Ask and discuss as a class:

Q What do you particularly like to do? Why?

Click 2 on word card 43 (WA1) to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 2: “I particularly like to . . .”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word particularly and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE SPEECHLESS

3 Introduce and Define Speechless

Show page 5 of Boundless Grace and review that Grace finds out that her father wants her to visit him in Africa. Read the text aloud, emphasizing the word speechless.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is speechless. Explain that speechless means “unable to speak because you are shocked, surprised, or very angry.” Explain that Grace is speechless, or unable to speak, because she is surprised by the news that she will visit her papa.

Display word card 44 (🗨️ WA2) and have the students say the word speechless.

4 Discuss Whether the Students Would Be Speechless

Explain that you will have the students imagine a situation and then discuss whether or not they would be speechless in that situation and why.

Begin by asking the students to imagine the following scenario:

- You are playing on the playground. You hear a noise and look up. On the roof of the school stands an immense gorilla.

Ask:

Q Would you be speechless? Why? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I [would/would not] be speechless because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- You are at home. The telephone rings. It’s your best friend calling. She wants to know whether you’ll go for a bike ride with her.
- You are at home. Your father calls a family meeting. “I have news,” he announces. “We’re moving to the South Pole!”

Point to the word speechless and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE REUNITE

5 Introduce Reunite and the Prefix re-

Show page 7 of Boundless Grace and remind the students that Grace goes to Africa to visit her father. Read the first paragraph on page 7 aloud.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is reunite and explain that reunite means “come together again after being separated.” Point to the illustration at the top of page 7 and explain that Grace has not seen her father in a long time. When Grace and Papa reunite, or come together again, they are very happy.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word immense earlier and that immense means “huge or very large.”

Teacher Note

You may want to remind the students that earlier they learned the prefix un-, which means “not.”

Teacher Note

For more practice with the prefix re-, do the more strategy practice activity “Explore Words with the Prefix re-” below.

Teacher Note

If students struggle to answer the questions or have not reunited with anyone, ask alternative questions such as “When have you seen two people reunited?” “How do you think it feels to reunite with someone? Why?” and “How might a person act when they are reunited with someone? What might they say? Why?”

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker

Teacher Note

For a list of common prefixes, visit the CCC Learning Hub (cclearninghub.org) to view the “Prefixes” list in the General Resources section.

Display word card 45 (🗨️ WA3) and have students say the word reunite. Point to the prefix re- in reunite and explain that re- is a prefix. Review that a prefix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the prefix re- means “again.” Explain that when you add the prefix re- to the word unite, which means “come together,” you make the word reunite. Review that reunite means “come together again after being separated.”

6 Discuss Reuniting with Someone

Explain that it is fun to reunite with someone you have not seen for a while, and give a few examples of people reuniting.

You might say:

“At the beginning of the school year, you reunite with friends you haven’t seen all summer. That’s fun because you can talk about all the things you did during the summer. Teachers also enjoy reuniting at the start of school and talking about their summers. If a grandmother, cousin, or other relative lives far away, it’s fun to reunite with them because you are happy to be with them again.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you reunited with someone? What happened?
[Pause; click 1 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I reunited with . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word reunite and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Explore Words with the Prefix re-

Prepare a sheet of chart paper titled “Words with the Prefix re-.” On the paper write the word reunite. Review that re- is a prefix and that a prefix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word.” Remind the students that the prefix re- means “again” and that when you add re- to the word unite you make the word reunite, which means “come together again after being separated.”

Tell the students that knowing that re- means again can help them figure out the meaning of a word that begins with the prefix. Write the word refold on the chart and explain that refold is a word made by adding the prefix re- to the word fold. Ask:

Q Based on what you know about the prefix re-, what do you think the word refold means? What would a person do if he or she refolded clothes?

If necessary, explain that refold means “fold again.”

Using the same procedure, have the students discuss the meanings of rewash and reheat.

Ask the students for other examples of words with the prefix re-, discuss their meanings, and add them to the chart (for example, recook, recopy, recycle, redecorate, refill, reelect, refry, remix, renew, repack, repaint, repay, reproduce, reread, rerun, retell, or rewrite). Throughout the year, ask the students to listen and watch for other words that use the prefix re- and add any new examples to the list.

Review Particularly, Speechless, and Reunite

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words particularly, speechless, and reunite from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking

Particularly means “especially or mainly.”

speechless

Speechless means “unable to speak because you are shocked, surprised, or very angry.”

reunite

Reunite means “come together again after being separated.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which of the words we used yesterday might you use when you talk to a friend? How might you use the word? [Pause; click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA4

particularly      speechless      reunite

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____ when I talk to a friend. I might say . . .

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [speechless] when I talk to a friend. I might say . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Which Word Am I?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Which Word Am I?” Direct the students’ attention to the words at the top of the daily review cards (WA4). Explain that you will describe one of the words and then partners will discuss which word you are describing. Then you will ask a few pairs to share their thinking with the class.

Begin by reading the following description aloud:

- I’m what you do when you get together with a friend you haven’t seen in a long time.

Q Which word am I? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “We think the word is [reunite] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following clues:

- I'm a synonym for the word especially. (particularly)
- I begin with a prefix that means "again." (reunite)
- I'm a word you use to describe people who can't speak because they are very surprised. (speechless)
- I mean "mainly." (particularly)
- I'm what you might be if you're angry or shocked. (speechless)

EXTENSION

Introduce and Discuss the Suffix -less

Remind the students that a suffix is a "letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word." Explain that the suffix -less means "without" and that when -less is added to the word speech, it makes the word speechless. Review that speechless means "without speech or unable to speak." Have the students discuss the meaning of other words that use the suffix, such as careless, harmless, hopeless, penniless, powerless, sleepless, tasteless, and useless.

Teacher Note

You may want to review that synonyms are "words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing."

INTRODUCE AND USE CROSS

1 Introduce and Define Cross

Show page 10 of Boundless Grace and review that Grace is getting to know her father's new family. Read the page aloud, emphasizing the word cross.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is cross. Explain that cross means "annoyed and angry." Explain that even though Grace likes Neneh and Bakary, she is upset that her father has a new wife and children, so she decides to be cross, or annoyed and angry, with Jatou.

Display word card 46 (🗉 WA5) and have the students say the word cross.

2 Discuss Being Cross

Give examples of situations in which people might feel cross.

You might say:

"Sometimes people feel cross, or annoyed and angry, when they are not feeling well or are having a bad day. Sometimes they feel cross when they don't get to do something they want to do. Sometimes people feel cross when someone says or does something hurtful to them."

Ask:

 Q When have you felt cross recently? Why were you cross? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA5

cross

PROMPT 1: I felt cross when . . .

1

PROMPT 1: "I felt cross when . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss as a class:

Q How do you look and sound when you are cross?

Teacher Note

You might explain that cross, annoyed, and angry are synonyms. If you started a synonym chart, add the word cross and its synonyms to it.

Have one or two volunteers act out how they look and sound for the class. Point to the word cross and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

3 Discuss Another Meaning of Cross

Remind the students that words often have more than one meaning and that sometimes the meanings are very different. Discuss as a class:

Q What else do you know about the word cross?

If necessary, explain that cross also means “go from one side of something to another.” Explain that people cross bridges and roads and rivers and oceans, too.

INTRODUCE AND USE SAVORY

4 Introduce and Define Savory

Show page 11 of Boundless Grace and read the page aloud, emphasizing the word savory.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is savory. Explain that savory means “pleasant to smell or taste.” Explain that even though Jatou’s dish was savory, or pleasant to smell, Grace acted cross and would not eat it.

Display word card 47 (🌍 WA6) and have students say the word savory.

5 Discuss Savory Foods

Describe a food you think is savory.

You might say:

“I think enchiladas are savory. The house is filled with great smells when they are baking, and I love the spicy flavors.”

Ask:

Q What food do you think is savory? Why? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[Roasted potatoes] are savory because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask:

Q What is a food you think is not savory? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “[Lima beans] are not savory because . . .”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of savory is sabroso/a.

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word savory and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE REALIZE

6 Introduce and Define Realize

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is realize and explain that realize means “become aware of something or understand something that you did not understand before.” Display word card 48 (WA7) and have the students say the word realize.

Show pages 24–25 of Boundless Grace and explain that as you read the end of the story you want the students to think about what Grace realizes, or understands, that she did not understand before.

Read pages 24–25 aloud. Ask:

Q What does Grace realize? What does she understand that she did not understand before? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the first prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Grace realizes that . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

If necessary, explain that Grace realizes that there is nothing wrong with her family, even though they do not all live together. She realizes that families are what you make them.

7 Discuss What Olive Realizes

Explain that you will describe something that is happening to our imaginary third-grade friend Olive, and partners will decide what she realizes.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice:

- Olive is riding in a car. She is drinking a cup of juice. The car hits a bump and juice splashes all over Olive’s shirt. “What a mess!” she moans. “I should have known better!”

Ask:

Q What does Olive realize? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Olive realizes that . . .”

Teacher Note

You may want to explain that the re at the beginning of the word realize is not the prefix re- because when you take the re away from realize, you are not left with a word.

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- Olive is getting ready for school on a cold morning. She puts her coat on a chair by the door so she won't forget it. When the school bus arrives, Olive rushes out the door and gets on the bus. As the bus pulls away, Olive shouts, "Stop the bus! Let me out!"

Point to the word realize and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSION

Discuss the Compound Words Roadside and Watermelon

Write this sentence from page 7 of Boundless Grace where everyone can see it: "There were sheep wandering along the roadside and people selling watermelons under the trees."

Direct the students' attention to the sentence you wrote and explain that it is a sentence from Boundless Grace. Explain that the sentence contains two compound words. Remind the students that a compound word is a "word made up of two or more shorter words." Tell the students that as you read the sentence aloud you want them to follow along and look for the compound words. Then read the sentence aloud.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q What compound words do you see in the sentence?

If necessary, tell the students that the compound words are roadside and watermelons.

Remind the students that they can figure out the meaning of a compound word by identifying the shorter words that make up the compound word and thinking about what each word means.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q What are the shorter words that make up the compound word roadside?

Q What do you think the word roadside means?

If necessary, explain that a roadside is "the area along the side of a road."

In the same way, discuss the meaning of watermelons. If necessary, explain that a watermelon is a type of melon (fruit) that has a watery pulp (flesh) that is pink, red, or yellow.

1. Click ② to reveal the second story and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined words.
  - Story 2: Monica described the horrible events. “First, there was a loud crack. Then the tree fell on the house. It was _____.”
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story. Then point to the word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word makes the best ending for the story? Why? [Click ② again and point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I think the word [ghastly] makes the best ending because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ② a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place.
4. Click ② to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following stories:

- Story 3: First, Nathan spilled his milk. Then he missed the bus. When he got to school, he realized he had left his homework at home. “Goodness,” Miss Thompson said. “You sure are _____.” (unfortunate)
- Story 4: Charity was waiting for her friend Jorge to enter the school bus. After the bus went past his stop she asked the bus driver if Jorge was coming to school today, and the bus driver replied, “It’s _____.” (doubtful)
- Story 5: Coach Lillian asked her players to leave the basketballs in the gym closet until after warm-ups. She stepped outside to take a phone call and when she returned everyone was bouncing basketballs around and shooting hoops. She was very _____. (cross)

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students' choices show that they understand the meanings of the words?
- Do they use the vocabulary words to explain their thinking?
- Are they using the vocabulary words in their writing?

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 161 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice in using the word by having the students play the game "Which Word Am I?" (See Week 5, Day 5, Step 2.)

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Before continuing with the week 9 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students' understanding of words taught in Weeks 5–8 using the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 2" answer sheet (IA1) on page 165 of the Assessment Resource Book. For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment" on page 162 of the Assessment Resource Book.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate her understanding of words taught in Weeks 5–8 using the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Student Self-assessment" on page 166 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Teacher Note

For more information about the vocabulary assessments, see "About Vocabulary Assessments" in the Assessment Overview of the Assessment Resource Book.

Introduce Reluctant, “Have Eyes in the Back of Your Head,” and Cluttered

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words reluctant, cluttered, and the idiom “have eyes in the back of your head”
- Discuss idioms
- Review using context to determine word meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

reluctant

If you are reluctant to do something, you do not want to do it.

have eyes in the back of your head (p. 10)

If you have eyes in the back of your head, you seem to be aware of everything that is happening around you—even things you cannot see.

cluttered (p. 10)

If a place is cluttered, it is messy. There are things scattered here, there, and everywhere.

ABOUT RECOGNIZING IDIOMS

This week the students are introduced to the following idioms: “have eyes in the back of your head” and “have a change of heart.” They learn that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.” The students also learn that idioms can make speech and writing more interesting because they are a way to say ordinary things in funny or unusual ways. In subsequent lessons, the students will discuss the idioms “blow your top” and “throw yourself into something.” We suggest that you start an idiom chart this week and add to it during the year (see the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Idioms and Start an Idiom Chart” on page 193). For a complete table of the idioms taught in grade 3, see Appendix C. For more information about recognizing idioms and other word-learning strategies, see “Independent Word-learning Strategies” in the Introduction.

Materials

- The Raft
- Word card 49 (WA1)
- Word card 50 (WA2)
- “Sentences from The Raft” (WA3)
- Word card 51 (WA4)

1 Introduce and Define Reluctant

Briefly review The Raft.

Show pages 6–7 and tell the students that at the beginning of the story we learn that Nicky is reluctant to spend the summer at his grandma’s house. Tell the students that reluctant is the first word they will learn today, and explain that if you are reluctant to do something, you do not want to do it. Display word card 49 (🌐 WA1) and have the students say the word reluctant.

Show pages 6–7 again and explain that as you read this part of the story you want the students to think about why Nicky is reluctant to spend the summer at his grandma’s house. Read page 6 aloud. Discuss as a class:

Q Why is Nicky reluctant to spend the summer at his grandma’s house?

Click 1 on word card 49 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

The screenshot shows a digital interface for a word card. At the top, the word "reluctant" is displayed in a rounded rectangular box. Below it, a green prompt reads: "PROMPT 1: Nicky is reluctant to spend the summer at his grandma's house because . . .". At the bottom of the card, there are two circular buttons labeled "1" and "2".

WA1

🌐 ELL Note

You might point to Nicky in the illustration on page 7 and explain that his expression and posture show that he is feeling reluctant to go to his grandma’s house. (He is frowning and is leaning to one side with his chin in his hand.)

PROMPT 1: “Nicky is reluctant to spend the summer at his grandma’s house because . . .”

If necessary, review that Nicky is reluctant to spend the summer at his grandma’s house because there is no one to play with and she does not have a TV.

2 Discuss Being Reluctant

Give examples of things you are or were reluctant to do.

You might say:

“Sometimes I am reluctant to try something new, like ice-skating or painting, because I may not do it very well. When I was little, I was reluctant to go to the doctor because I didn’t like getting shots.”

Ask:

Q What is something you are reluctant to do? Why? [Click 2 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I am reluctant to [swim in the deep end of the pool] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word reluctant and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE “HAVE EYES IN THE BACK OF YOUR HEAD”

3 Introduce and Define “Have Eyes in the Back of Your Head”

Show pages 10–11 of the book and review that Nicky is about to have supper with his grandma on his first evening at her house. Read the first three paragraphs aloud, emphasizing the words had eyes in the back of her head.

Tell the students that the next “word” they will learn is actually a phrase—“have eyes in the back of your head.” Explain that if you have eyes in the back of your head, you seem to be aware of everything that is happening around you—even things you cannot see. Explain that Nicky’s grandma has her back turned and cannot see him, but she seems to know that he is sticking his finger in the syrup. It is as if she has eyes in the back of her head.

Display word card 50 (WA2) and have the students say the phrase “have eyes in the back of your head.”

4 Introduce Idioms

Point to “have eyes in the back of your head” and tell the students that “have eyes in the back of your head” is an idiom. Explain that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.”

Explain that when we say people have eyes in the back of their head, we do not mean that they actually have eyes in the backs of their heads. We mean that they are aware of things going on around them that they cannot see.

Teacher Note

For a list of common idioms, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Idioms” list in the General Resources section.

5 Discuss People Who Have Eyes in the Backs of Their Heads

Give examples of people you know or have known who seem to have eyes in the backs of their heads.

You might say:

“My Great Aunt Clara seemed to have eyes in the back of her head. When we were playing outside, she always seemed to know when my cousins and I were doing something we shouldn’t be doing—even though she couldn’t see us. My father seemed to have eyes in the back of his head, too. He knew whenever our dog Pepper was digging up the yard or chewing on a shoe—even when Pepper was somewhere where my dad couldn’t see him.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Why do parents of young children need to have eyes in the backs of their heads? [Pause; click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Parents of young children need to have eyes in the backs of their heads because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Who do you know who seems to have eyes in the back of her head? [Pause; click 2 on WA2 to reveal the next prompt.] Why do you say that?

PROMPT 2: “[My mother] seems to have eyes in the back of her head because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the phrase “have eyes in the back of your head” and review the pronunciation and meaning of the idiom.

INTRODUCE AND USE CLUTTERED

6 Introduce and Define Cluttered and Review Using Context to Determine Word Meanings

Display the “Sentences from The Raft” chart (WA3). Show pages 10–11 of The Raft again and remind the students that in this part of the story Nicky is waiting in the living room while his grandma makes dinner. Read the charted sentences aloud where they appear on page 10, emphasizing the word cluttered.

TEKS 3.B.iii

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 6 (all, beginning on page 184 and continuing on to page 185)

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you may wish to write the context sentences where everyone can see them.

Tell the students that cluttered is the last word they will learn today. Direct their attention to the context sentences on the chart (WA3), and explain that these are the sentences you just read. Point to the word cluttered and underline it. Remind the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word like cluttered by rereading the sentence that includes the word, or sentences before or after, and looking for clues. Explain that, as you reread the sentences that include the word cluttered, you want the students to think about what the word cluttered might mean and which words in the sentences are clues to the meaning of cluttered.

Read the sentences aloud. Ask:

Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word cluttered might mean? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

WA3

Sentences from The Raft

Books were scattered everywhere—on the tables, on the chairs, even on the floor. Three of the walls were cluttered with sketches and stuffed fish and charts of the river. Several fishing poles hung from the fourth with a tackle box, a snorkel, and a mask on the floor beneath them.

PROMPT 1: I think cluttered might mean . . .

PROMPT 2: The clues _____ help me figure out the meaning of the word cluttered.

PROMPT 1: “I think cluttered might mean . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that if a place is cluttered, it is messy. There are things scattered here, there, and everywhere.

Then ask:

Q What words in the sentences are clues to the meaning? [Point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The clues [‘books were scattered everywhere’] help me figure out the meaning of the word cluttered.”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Circle the context clues on the chart as the students identify them. If necessary, point out that books were scattered everywhere—on the tables, on the chairs, even on the floor

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of the activity, see Week 1, Day 5, Step 2.

are clues that help us figure out that if a place is cluttered, it is messy. Explain that the many other items lying or hanging about, such as the sketches, charts, fishing poles, and mask, are additional clues to the meaning of cluttered.

Display word card 51 (🗨️ WA4) and have the students say the word cluttered.

7 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Give some examples of other cluttered places:

You might say:

“My attic is cluttered with lots of different things. There are boxes of pictures, toys, and old clothes. Sometimes my desk becomes cluttered with too many papers, books, and pens. I think it’s hard to work at a cluttered desk.”

Tell the students that they will do the activity “Imagine That!” You will describe an imaginary situation, and the students will make pictures in their minds and use the word cluttered to discuss what they imagined.

Have the students close their eyes and picture the following scene in their minds:

- You are visiting a friend. You walk into his bedroom, and it is cluttered.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What do you see in your friend’s cluttered bedroom? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 🗨️ on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “In my friend’s cluttered bedroom, I see [socks, shirts, and other dirty clothes lying on the bed and on the floor].”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word cluttered and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Review Reluctant, “Have Eyes in the Back of Your Head,” and Cluttered

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words reluctant and cluttered and the idiom “have eyes in the back of your head” from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Build on one another’s thinking

Words Reviewed

reluctant

If you are reluctant to do something, you do not want to do it.

have eyes in the back of your head

If you have eyes in the back of your head, you seem to be aware of everything that is happening around you—even things you cannot see.

cluttered

If a place is cluttered, it is messy. There are things scattered here, there, and everywhere.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🗨️ WA5). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word and idiom.

Ask:

Q Which of the words do you think is the most interesting? Why?

[Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think [‘have eyes in the back of your head’] is the most interesting because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Finish the Story”

Tell the students that they are going to play a game called “Finish the Story.” Explain that you are going to read some stories about a girl named Liana and that you will leave off the last word of each story. Review that you will point to the words and that partners will decide which word makes the best ending for the story.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA5)
- Daily review activity (WA6)

Teacher Note

If you are not using an interactive whiteboard, you might write the words and stories where everyone can see them.

Teacher Note

Each story on the daily review activity (WA6) has a corresponding number: the first story is 1; the second story is 2; and the third story is 3. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story and the word choices.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click reveals the correct answer.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Display the daily review activity (WA6) and begin playing the game:

1. Click 1 to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud twice, slowly and clearly. Point out that the ending is missing.
  - Story 1: Liana wanted to go to the park and play with her friends. Her father stopped her and said, "Clean your room first. It is dirty and _____."
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story. Then ask:

Q Which word makes the best ending for the story? Why do you think that? [Pause; click 1 again and read the prompt aloud.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: "I think [cluttered] makes the best ending because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion of this story by clicking 1 a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place. Then reread the story with the word cluttered at the end.

4. Click 1 to clear the screen.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following stories:

- Story 2: Liana did not want to clean her room. Her friends were waiting and there was just too much to do. She was _____. (reluctant)
- Story 3: Liana was cleaning her room quickly so she could meet her friends. She decided to hide clothes and books under her bed rather than put them away. She heard her father say from the other room, "Don't try to hide things under your bed. I will be checking." "Wow!" Liana exclaimed. "It is like he _____." (has eyes in the back of his head)

Introduce Handy, Whoosh, and “Have a Change of Heart”

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words handy and whoosh and the idiom “have a change of heart”
- Review synonyms and idioms
- Review shades of meaning
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

handy (p. 22)

Handy means “useful or easy to use.”

whoosh (p. 24)

Whoosh means “move very fast.” When something whooshes, it makes a rushing or hissing sound.

have a change of heart

If you have a change of heart, you change your opinion or the way you feel about something.

INTRODUCE AND USE HANDY

1 Introduce and Define Handy and Review Synonyms

Show pages 22–23 of The Raft. Review that Nicky spends lots of time on the raft and he asks his grandma for drawing paper to keep on board. Read the last paragraph on page 22 aloud, emphasizing the word handy.

Tell the students that handy is the first word they will learn today. Explain that handy means “useful or easy to use” and that handy and useful are synonyms. Review that synonyms are “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.” Point to the raft on page 23 and explain that grandma says the snorkel and mask might be handy, or useful, on the raft.

Display word card 52 (WA7) and have students say the word handy.

Ask:

- Q Why might a snorkel and mask be handy, or useful, to have if you are on a raft?

Materials

- The Raft
- Word card 52 (WA7)
- Word card 53 (WA8)
- Word card 54 (WA9)

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add handy and useful to it.

Teacher Note

To support struggling students, ask questions such as “What do you use a snorkel and mask for?” and “What might Nicky do with a snorkel and mask?”

Click 1 on word card 52 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

handy

PROMPT 1: A snorkel and mask would be handy to have on a raft because . . .

1 2

WA7

PROMPT 1: “A snorkel and mask would be handy to have on a raft because . . .”

2 Discuss Handy Things

Explain that many things are handy, or useful, and give some examples:

You might say:

“My wallet is very handy, or useful. It holds my money, driver’s license, and credit cards. Sunglasses are handy because they protect your eyes from the sun. Your backpacks are very handy. They hold your books, papers, and binders.”

Ask:

 Q What do you own that is handy? [Click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.]
Why is it handy?

PROMPT 2: “My [jacket] is handy because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word handy and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE WHOOSH

3 Introduce and Define Whoosh

Show pages 24–25 of The Raft. Review that Nicky likes watching animals when he spends time on the raft. Read the first paragraph on page 24 aloud, emphasizing the word whooshed.

Tell the students that whoosh is the next word they will learn today and that whoosh means “move very fast.” Point to the blue heron on pages 24–25 and explain that the bird whooshes, or moves very quickly, onto the raft. Explain that when something whooshes it makes a rushing or hissing sound. Move your hand and make a whooshing sound to act out a bird flying quickly by.

Display word card 53 (🎧 WA8) and have students say the word whoosh.

4 Play “Did It Whoosh?”

Explain that things, as well as animals, can whoosh, or move very fast making a rushing or hissing sound. Give some examples of things that whoosh.

You might say:

“A fire truck might whoosh by with its sirens blaring and lights flashing.” [Make a whooshing sound.] “A baseball might whoosh by a batter.” [Make a whooshing sound.]

Tell the students that they will play a game called “Did It Whoosh?” Explain that you will describe something and partners will decide whether it whooshes.

Begin by saying:

- A jet plane speeding through the air

Ask:

Q Would a jet plane speeding through the air whoosh? Why or why not?
[Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “A [jet plane speeding through the air] [would/would not] whoosh because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss the following:

- A snowball zipping past your ear
- A leaf drifting slowly to the ground

Point to the word whoosh and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE “HAVE A CHANGE OF HEART”

5 Introduce “Have a Change of Heart” and Review Idioms

Remind the students that earlier they learned the idiom “have eyes in the back of your head,” and review that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.” Tell the students that the last “word” they will learn today is actually another idiom—“have a change of heart.” Explain that if you have a change of heart, you change your opinion or the way you feel about something.

Display word card 54 (🎧 WA9) and have the students say the phrase “have a change of heart.”

Explain that when you say you have had a change of heart, you do not mean that your heart has actually changed in some way. Instead, you mean that you have changed the way you feel about something.

Show pages 36–37 of The Raft and remind the students that in the beginning of the story Nicky was reluctant to spend the summer at his grandma’s house, but by the end of the story, Nicky has had a change of heart. Explain that as you read this part of the story you want the students to think about why Nicky had a change of heart.

Read page 36 aloud. Discuss as a class:

Q How has Nicky had a change of heart? Why did he have a change of heart?

Click 1 on word card 54 (WA9) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “Nicky has a change of heart because . . .”

If necessary, explain that Nicky has had a change of heart because he thought summer at the river would be boring, but he actually has had a fun summer spending time with his grandma and on the raft, learning about the river and all its animals.

Teacher Note

For more practice with idioms, see the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Idioms and Start an Idiom Chart” on page 193.

6 Discuss Having a Change of Heart

Give examples of times when you or someone you know has had a change of heart.

You might say:

"When I was younger, I thought I wanted to study medicine and become a doctor. During college, I had a change of heart—I changed my mind—and decided that I wanted to be a teacher because I didn't enjoy studying medicine as much as I thought I would, and I discovered that I loved working with children. My brother wanted to move to Alaska. After he learned how cold it gets during the winter, he had a change of heart and decided to move to California instead, where it's warmer."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you had a change of heart about something? Why did you have a change of heart? [Pause; click 2 on WA9 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I had a change of heart about [joining the soccer team] because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the phrase "have a change of heart" and review the pronunciation and meaning of the idiom.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Idioms and Start an Idiom Chart

Write the phrases "have eyes in the back of your head" and "have a change of heart" on a sheet of chart paper. Remind the students that "have eyes in the back of your head" and "have a change of heart" are both idioms and that an idiom is an "expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean." Remind the students that when we say that someone has eyes in the back of their head, we do not mean they actually have eyes in the back of their head. Instead, we mean that the person is aware of things happening that he cannot see. Remind the students that when we say that someone has a change of heart, we do not mean that her heart actually changes. Instead, we mean that the person changes her opinions or feelings about something.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking alternative questions, such as "When have you made a decision about doing something or going somewhere and then changed your mind?" and "When have you had a strong opinion about someone or something and then changed your opinion?"

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker

Day 4

Review Handy, Whoosh, and “Have a Change of Heart”

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA10)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

Explain that there are thousands of idioms in the English language and that people use idioms because they are a way to say ordinary things in interesting or unusual ways. For example, if we say that someone “has ants in his pants,” we do not mean the person actually has ants in his pants. Instead, we mean that the person is so excited he cannot sit still. If we say “it’s raining cats and dogs,” we don’t mean that cats and dogs are falling from the sky. Instead, we mean that it is raining very hard.

Tell the students that “hit the road” is another idiom. Explain that when we say it is time to “hit the road,” we do not actually mean it is time to hit a road with our hands. Ask:

Q What do we mean when we say it is time to “hit the road”? (leave one place and go to another)

In the same way, discuss:

- catch someone’s eye
- over the moon about

Write the word Idioms on a sheet of chart paper. Write the idioms “have eyes in the back of your head,” “have a change of heart,” “has ants in his pants,” “raining cats and dogs,” “hit the road,” “catch someone’s eye,” and “over the moon about” on the chart. Ask the students to listen for other idioms and to look for them in their reading. Regularly add the idioms the students discover to the chart.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words handy and whoosh and the idiom “have a change of heart” from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking

Words Reviewed

handy

Handy means “useful or easy to use.”

whoosh

Whoosh means “move very fast.” When something whooshes, it makes a rushing or hissing sound.

have a change of heart

If you have a change of heart, you change your opinion or the way you feel about something.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🗉 WA10). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word and idiom.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which word do you think is especially interesting? Why? [Click 1 on WA10 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think [whoosh] is especially interesting because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Which Word Am I?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Which Word Am I?” Review that you will give a clue about one of the words. Partners will figure out the word or phrase and explain why they think it is that word.

Begin with:

- I am how you describe something that flies by quickly and makes a hissing sound.

Ask:

Q Which word am I? Why? [Click 2 on WA10 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “We think the word is [whoosh] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- I am how you describe something useful like a cell phone. (handy)
- I am an expression you might use when you change your mind about something. (have a change of heart)

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Review Whoosh and Discuss Shades of Meaning

Write the words whoosh and move where everyone can see them. Say each word and have the students say the words. Tell the students that whoosh and move mean almost the same thing, but that they are different in one important way. Ask:

Q In what way are the words whoosh and move different?

If necessary, remind the students that whoosh means “move very fast.” Review that when something whooshes, it makes a rushing or hissing sound as it passes by.

Explain that you are going to read a story about our friend Olive’s paper airplane. Tell the students that as they listen, you want them to think about whether the paper airplane is moving or whooshing. Then read the following story aloud, slowly and clearly:

- Olive made a paper airplane for her friend Manny. She wants to surprise him with the gift. As he walks in the room, she throws the paper airplane and it flies across the room towards Manny.

Ask:

Q Do you think the paper airplane moved, or did it whoosh? Why do you think that? [Read the prompt aloud.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I think the paper airplane [whooshed] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Tell the students that thinking about how the word whoosh is like the word move and how it is different can help them remember the word and use it correctly. Tell the students that now that they know the word whoosh, they have just the right word to use in their writing when they want to tell that someone or something moved very fast.

---

Teacher Note

If you started a “Just the Right Word” chart, add the word whoosh and its definition (“move very fast”) to it.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking

Words Reviewed*command

Command means “order someone to do something.”

flutter

Flutter means “wave or flap rapidly.”

If you have eyes in the back of your head, you seem to be aware of everything that is happening around you—even things you cannot see.

savory

Savory means “pleasant to smell or taste.”

speechless

Speechless means “unable to speak because you are shocked, surprised, or very angry.”

REVIEW THE WORDS*1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA11) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS*2 Play “Which Word Am I?”

Tell the students that partners will play “Which Word Am I?” Explain that you will give a clue about one of the words and the students will figure out the word.

Begin by saying:

- I am what you do when you order someone to do something.

Q Which word am I? Why? [Click 1 on WA11 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “We think the word is [command] because . . .”

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA11)

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

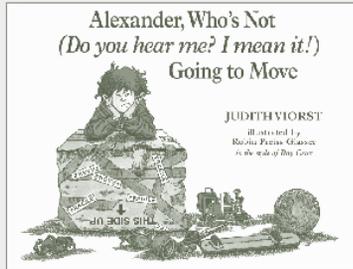

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- I am what you might be when you are so surprised you can't find any words to explain how you feel. (speechless)
- I am what you might say about a person who knows what is happening in the other room even though she can't see it. (have eyes in the back of your head)

- Review synonyms and antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

INTRODUCE AND USE OBSTINATE

1 Introduce and Define Obstinate and Review Synonyms

Show page 5 of the book and review that everyone in Alexander’s family, except Alexander, is getting ready to move. Read pages 5–7 aloud.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is obstinate. Explain that obstinate means “stubborn” and that obstinate and stubborn are synonyms. Review that synonyms are “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.” If you are obstinate, you are unwilling to change your mind about something. Point out that even though Alexander’s parents explain why the family must move, Alexander is obstinate. He does not want to move, and he is not willing to change his mind.

Display word card 55 (WA1) and have the students say the word obstinate.

Materials

- Alexander, Who’s Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move
- Word card 55 (WA1)
- Word cards 56–57 (WA2)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of obstinate is obstinado/a.

Teacher Note

If you have started a synonym chart, add obstinate and stubborn to it.

2 Discuss Being Obstinate

Give examples of times you have been obstinate or seen someone being obstinate.

You might say:

“When I was little, I was obstinate, or stubborn, about trying new foods. I would say ‘No’ when new foods were offered to me, and no one could get me to change my mind. Recently I saw a little girl in the supermarket being obstinate. Her mother asked her to put back a candy bar she had taken from a box, but the little girl would not do it. She said, ‘No! No! No!’ and would not change her mind.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you been obstinate or seen someone being obstinate? What happened? [Pause; click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

obstinate

PROMPT 1:

I was obstinate when . . .

or

I saw _____ being obstinate when . . .

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I was obstinate when . . .” or “I saw [my little brother] being obstinate when . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word obstinate and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE IMMATURE AND MATURE

3 Introduce and Define Immature

Show page 9 of Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move and review that Alexander's brothers tease him when he says he will not move. Read the first two sentences on page 9 aloud, emphasizing the word immature: "Nick says I'm a fool and should get a brain transplant. Anthony says I'm being immature."

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is immature, and explain that immature means "childish or silly." An immature person acts like someone much younger.

Point to the picture of Alexander in the illustration on page 9 and explain that Anthony thinks Alexander is being immature, or childish, when he pouts and says he will not move.

Display word cards 56–57 (🌐 WA2) and click to reveal word card 56. Have the students say the word immature.

4 Introduce Mature, Think About What It Might Mean, and Review Antonyms

Show page 29 of Alexander, Who's Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move. Review that Alexander's mother, father, and even his brother Nick try to comfort him about all the change that lies ahead. Read the last two sentences on page 29 aloud, emphasizing the word mature: "Nick says if I'm lonesome in my new room by myself, he might let me sleep with him for a little while. Anthony says that Nick is being mature."

Explain that the last word the students will learn today is mature. Click to reveal word card 57 and have the students say the word mature. Explain that mature and immature are antonyms and review that antonyms are "words with opposite meanings."

Discuss as a class:

Q If mature and immature are antonyms, what do you think mature might mean?

Click 1 on word cards 56–57 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: "I think mature might mean . . ."

If necessary, explain that mature means "grown up or adult." Explain that a mature person is sensible and reasonable. He or she is not being immature or childish.

Follow up by asking:

Q How is Nick being grown up, or mature?

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of immature is inmaduro/a.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of mature is maduro/a.

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart, add immature and mature to it.

5 Discuss How Alexander Is Mature

Show page 30 and explain that by the end of the story Alexander is being mature, or sensible and reasonable like an adult. Explain that as you read this part of the story you want the students to think about how Alexander is being mature.

Read page 30 aloud. Then ask:

Q How is Alexander being mature? What is he doing that is reasonable and sensible?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “Alexander is being mature . . .”

If necessary, explain that Alexander is being mature when he agrees to move with his family and starts to pack. He is being sensible and reasonable and is no longer acting childish and silly.

6 Discuss Whether Olive Is Being Mature or Immature

Tell the students that you will describe something that Olive is doing and partners will decide if Olive is being mature or immature and why.

Begin by saying:

- Olive is working quietly at her desk at school. Her friend Orlando makes a funny face at her. Olive ignores Orlando and continues to do her work.

Ask:

 Q Is Olive being mature or immature? Why? [Click 3 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “We think Olive is being [mature] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- Olive wants to go to Orlando’s house to play baseball. Olive’s mother tells her she can’t go because her cousin is coming to visit. When her cousin arrives, Olive pouts and won’t talk to her.
- Olive is riding her skateboard. She sees a group of children down the street. She wants to show them how well she skateboards, so she speeds up and whirls in and out among them. She knocks one little boy to the ground.
- Olive and Orlando are hungry. Olive has a muffin in her lunchbox. She breaks the muffin in half so that both she and Orlando get a piece.

Point to the words mature and immature and review the pronunciations and meanings of the words.

PROMPT: “[Messy] is the synonym of [cluttered].”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking. Then have a volunteer draw a line from the word cluttered to the word messy.

Discuss the remaining words the same way. When you get to the final two words, have the students discuss them together by asking:

Q Which word in column 2 is the synonym of heartbreaking and which word is the synonym of celebration?

Day 2

Review Obstinate, Immature, and Mature

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

EXTENSION

Introduce and Discuss the Prefix im-

Remind the students that a prefix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the prefix im- means “not” and that when im- is added to the word mature it makes the word immature, which means “not mature.” Have the students discuss the meaning of other words that use the prefix, such as impatient, imperfect, impolite, impossible, and improper.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words obstinate, immature, and mature from Day 1

fantasize

PROMPT 1: Alexander fantasizes that . . .

❶   ❷

PROMPT 1: “Alexander fantasizes that . . .”

2 Discuss What We Fantasize

Explain that it is fun to fantasize, or imagine pleasant or exciting things that are unlikely to happen in real life, and give examples of things you or other people fantasize.

You might say:

“When I was your age, I fantasized that I was a basketball star, even though I wasn’t a very good basketball player. I also fantasized that I could fly like a superhero. My sister used to fantasize that she was a beautiful princess living in a palace.”

Ask:

 Q What is something you fantasize? [Click ❷ on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I fantasize . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is a superpower you wish you had?” and “What is a fun adventure you can imagine having?”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of barricade is barricada.

INTRODUCE AND USE BARRICADE

3 Introduce and Define Barricade

Show pages 24–25 of the book and review that Alexander is fantasizing about what he might do when the movers arrive. Read the first sentence on page 24 aloud, emphasizing the word barricade.

Tell the students that barricade is the next word they will learn today and explain that barricade means “block the way by putting up barriers or obstacles.” Explain that Alexander fantasizes that he will barricade his bedroom door, or put barriers or obstacles like boxes and chairs in front of the door, so the movers cannot get in.

Display word card 59 ( WA6) and have the students say the word barricade.

4 Imagine Barricading the Bedroom Door

Ask the students to imagine that their family is moving and they do not want to go. Like Alexander, they decide to barricade their bedroom door so the movers cannot get in.

Ask:

 Q What would you do to barricade your bedroom door? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I would barricade the door by . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q How would [pushing a table against the door] barricade it?

Click 2 on word card 59 (WA6) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

INTRODUCE AND USE RECONSIDER

5 Introduce Reconsider and Review the Prefix re-

Show pages 30–31 of Alexander, Who’s Not (Do you hear me? I mean it!) Going to Move, and point out that Alexander reconsiders his decision about moving. At first he says he is not going to move, but then he thinks more about it and changes his mind. Read page 30 aloud.

Display word card 60 (🌐 WA7) and have the students say the word reconsider.

Point to the prefix re- in reconsider and review that re- is a prefix that means “again.” Remind the students that they discussed the prefix earlier when they learned the words reunite and reuse. Explain that when re- is added to the word consider, which means “think about a decision,” it changes the word to reconsider, which means “think again about a decision.”

6 Discuss Times the Students Have Reconsidered Decisions

Give examples of times you have reconsidered a decision.

You might say:

“Recently my friend Ava asked me to go to a movie with her. It was a school night, so I said no, but then I reconsidered, or thought again about my decision. I decided it would be fun to see Ava even if it was a school night, so I changed my mind and went to the movie. Last night I decided I would make spaghetti for dinner, but then I remembered that we had eaten spaghetti for dinner earlier in the week, so I reconsidered and decided to make tacos.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you reconsidered a decision? Why did you reconsider it?
[Pause; click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I reconsidered a decision when . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word reconsider and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

2 Introduce the Activity “What Might You Say or Do?”

Tell the students that partners will do an activity called “What Might You Say or Do?” Explain that you will ask the students to imagine a situation, and then partners will tell each other what they might say or do in that situation.

Point to the word realize and explain that the first situation includes the word realize. Ask the students to imagine:

- You are excited to go to a play with your sister. Then you realize that the play has been cancelled.

Ask:

 Q What might you say or do if you realize that the play has been cancelled? [Click 1 on WA9 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “After I realize the play is cancelled, I might . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

[reunite]

- You miss your friend who moved away last year. You want to reunite with him.

 Q What might you say or do to reunite with your old friend? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If I were trying to reunite with my friend, I might . . .”

[disaster]

- Your school playground was damaged during a windstorm. There are branches and debris everywhere. It is a disaster!

 Q What might you say or do to clean up after the disaster in your school playground? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “To clean up after the disaster on the school playground, I might . . .”

Teacher Note

You might point out that the students learned the word debris earlier and that debris is the “scattered pieces of something that has been thrown away, broken, or destroyed.”

[have a change of heart]

- You ask your mother to take you to the zoo, but she says she is too busy. You desperately try to make her have a change of heart.

Q What might you say or do to make your mother have a change of heart about going to the zoo? [Click 4 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “If I wanted my mother to have a change of heart about going to the zoo, I might . . .”

[dazzle]

- Your school is putting on a talent show next week. You want to dazzle the school with an amazing act.

Q What might you say or do to dazzle the school in a talent show? [Click 5 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: “If I wanted to dazzle the school during the talent show, I might . . .”

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students’ associations indicate that they understand the words’ meanings?
- Can they explain why they made each association?
- Do they enjoy talking about the words?

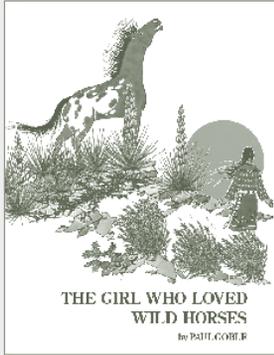

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 169 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word’s meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word’s meaning, provide further practice in using the word by reviewing the word’s meaning and then asking a question that requires the student to talk about the word in terms of his or her own experiences. For example, ask questions such as “When have you been dazzled by something? Why did it dazzle you?” or “When have you reunited with someone? How did you feel?”

Introduce Belongings, Faint, and Cling

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words belongings, faint, and cling
- Review using context to determine word meanings and using a dictionary
- Review words with multiple meanings and synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

belongings (p. 5)

Belongings are “things someone owns, or things that belong to someone.”

faint (p. 8)

Faint means “not clear or strong.” If something is faint, it is difficult to hear, see, or smell. Faint also means “become dizzy and lose consciousness.”

cling (p. 12)

Cling means “hold onto someone or something very tightly.”

INTRODUCE AND USE BELONGINGS

1 Introduce and Define Belongings

Briefly review The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses.

Show pages 4–5 and review that the people move from place to place to follow the buffalo. Read page 5 aloud, emphasizing the word belongings.

Explain that belongings are “things someone owns, or things that belong to someone.” Explain that when the people move, they pack up their tipis and belongings, such as clothing and blankets, and load them onto horses.

Display word card 61 (🌐 WA1) and ask the students to say the word belongings.

2 Discuss Favorite Belongings

Explain that all of us have favorite belongings—things we own that are special to us—and give a couple of examples of your favorite belongings.

ELL Note

You might bring a favorite belonging to class to show to the students.

You might say:

“One of my favorite belongings is an album of family photos. The pictures help me remember my family and the fun times we have had. My running shoes are another favorite possession. They’re the most comfortable running shoes I’ve ever owned.”

Explain that you will ask partners to discuss a question, and then a few of them will share their partners’ thinking with the class.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

PROMPT 1: One of _____ favorite belongings is

PROMPT 1: “One of [Ellen’s] favorite belongings is [her soccer jersey] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word belongings and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE *F*AIN

3 Introduce Faint and Use Context to Determine Its Meaning

Display the “Sentence from The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses” chart (WA2). Show pages 8–9 of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses again and review that the girl falls asleep among the horses. Read the charted sentence aloud where it appears on page 8, emphasizing the word faint.

Tell the students that faint is the next word they will learn today. Direct their attention to the context sentence on the chart (WA2), and explain that this is the sentence you just read. Point to the word faint and

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you may wish to write the context sentence where everyone can see it.

underline it. Remind the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word like faint by rereading the sentence that includes the word, and looking for clues. Explain that as you reread the sentence, you want the students to think about what the word faint might mean and which words in the sentence are clues to its meaning.

Read the sentence aloud. Ask:

Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word faint might mean? [Point to the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Sentence from The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses

A faint rumble of distant thunder did not waken her.

PROMPT 1: I think faint might mean . . .

PROMPT 2: The clues _____ help me figure out the meaning of the word faint.

WA2

PROMPT 1: “I think faint might mean . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that faint means “not clear or strong.” Explain that if something is faint, it is difficult to hear, see, or smell. The girl is not awakened by the thunder because it is a faint sound that comes from far away. Then ask:

Q What words in the sentence are clues to the meaning? [Point to the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The clues [‘distant thunder’ and ‘did not waken her’] help me figure out the meaning of the word faint.”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Circle the context clues on the chart as the students identify them. If necessary, point out that distant thunder and did not waken her are clues in the sentence that tell us that the sound of the thunder is far away and not clear or strong. It is faint.

Display word card 62 (WA3) and have the students say the word faint.

4 Discuss Another Meaning of Faint

Point to the word faint and review that in the story faint means “not clear or strong.” Explain that the word faint has another meaning. Review that many words have more than one meaning and that sometimes the meanings are very different.

Ask:

Q What else do you know about the word faint? What happens when someone faints?

Click 1 on word card 62 (WA3) and show the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers share their thinking.

faint

PROMPT 1:

The word faint can also mean . . .

or

When someone faints . . .

1 2

WA3

PROMPT 1: “The word faint can also mean . . .” or “When someone faints . . .”

Explain that faint can also mean “become dizzy and lose consciousness.”

Remind the students that if they hear or read a word that has more than one meaning, they can usually figure out the correct meaning by thinking about how the word is used. Explain that you will read a story that includes the word faint. Partners will decide whether faint means “not clear or strong” or “become dizzy and lose consciousness” and explain why they think so.

Read the following story aloud twice:

- John was not feeling well. His head ached and he felt weak and dizzy. Suddenly the room began to spin before his eyes, and he swayed back and forth. He knew he was going to faint.

Ask:

 Q In the story, does faint mean “not clear or strong” or “become dizzy and lose consciousness”? Why do you think that? [Click 2 on WA3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I think faint means [‘become dizzy and lose consciousness’] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- The night was dark, and John was home alone. Across the room he heard a faint tapping at the window. Speechless, he crept toward the sound. The faint tapping grew louder. When he reached the window and peeked outside, he saw a branch brushing against the glass. “Whew!” John sighed with relief.

Point to the word faint and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE CLING

5 Introduce and Define Cling and Review Synonyms

Show pages 12–13 of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses and review that when a storm causes the herd to gallop away, the girl jumps on the back of a horse. Read page 12 aloud, emphasizing the word clung.

Explain that clung is a form of the word cling and that cling means “hold onto someone or something very tightly.” Explain that the girl twists her fingers into the horse’s mane and clings, or holds on tightly, so that she will not fall under the horses’ hooves. Act out how she might have used her hands to cling to the horse.

Remind the students that earlier they learned the word clutch, which also means “hold onto something tightly,” and explain that cling and clutch are synonyms or “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.”

Display word card 63 (🔊 WA4) and have the students say the word cling.

6 Discuss When and Why We Cling

Explain that, like the girl in the story, people sometimes cling to something or someone when they feel afraid or unsafe. Explain that people also cling to something they do not want to drop or lose. Give a few examples of situations in which people cling.

You might say:

“People sometimes cling to a handrail when they are walking down stairs so they won’t fall. If you are riding a roller coaster and feeling afraid, you might cling to the side of the car or the safety bar. My nephew clings to his father’s hand in the subway when a train speeds by.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you clung to something or someone? Why did you cling?
[Pause; click 🔊 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

You might point out that the students learned the word speechless earlier and that speechless means “unable to speak because you are shocked, surprised, or very angry.”

Teacher Note

If you have started a synonym chart, add cling and clutch to it.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you held on tightly to something because you did not want to fall?” and “When have you held something tightly because you did not want to drop it or lose it?” If the students cannot think of a time they clung to something or someone, ask them when they have seen someone clinging or when someone might cling.

PROMPT 1: “I clung to [the seat in the airplane] when . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word cling and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Use a Dictionary to Discuss Words with Multiple Meanings

Remind the students that in Week 5 they used print dictionaries to look up words from Aunt Flossie’s Hats (and Crab Cakes Later). Review that words in a dictionary are listed alphabetically, and that guide words appearing at the top of each page help us find where a word is listed. Point out that each entry includes the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Explain that often a dictionary entry includes more than one definition of a word. Write the word fine where everyone can see it and tell the students that the word fine has many meanings.

Tell the students that you are going to read a sentence and that they must listen carefully to determine the meaning of fine as it is used in the sentence. Turn to page 24 of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses, show the illustration, and read: “The people gave them fine things to wear: colorful blankets and decorated saddles.” Ask:

Q What do you think the word fine means in this sentence?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Then ask the students to look up fine in their dictionaries and read each definition. If necessary, explain that fine can mean “very good or excellent” (such as a fine piece of clothing), “very thin or small” (such as a fine thread), or “in good health” (such as a person feeling fine). Now ask:

Q Which definition best fits the way to describe the colorful blankets and saddles that the people gave the wild horses?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. If necessary, explain that the definition “very good or excellent” best fits the way the word is used in the story. Point out that when a word has more than one meaning, reading the words around it helps readers know which meaning fits the story and helps them understand the way the word is used.

Write the following sentences from The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses where everyone can see them:

- “Every day when she had helped her mother carry water and collect firewood, she would run off to be with the horses.” (p. 8)
- “She spread her blanket and lay down.” (p. 8)

Have partners look up the words collect and spread, and choose the meaning of each word that best fits the story.

Encourage the students to continue to use the dictionary to look up and better understand words with multiple meanings.

Review Belongings, Faint, and Cling

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words belongings, faint, and cling from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use prompts to build on one another’s thinking

Words Reviewed

belongings

Belongings are “things someone owns, or things that belong to someone.”

faint

Faint means “not clear or strong.” If something is faint, it is difficult to hear, see, or smell. Faint also means “become dizzy and lose consciousness.”

cling

Cling means “hold onto someone or something very tightly.”

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA5)

Teacher Note

You may want to remind the students that they learned the word cross earlier and that cross means “annoyed and angry.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🗂️ WA5). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Point to the word belongings. Ask:

Q Would you be cross if someone took your belongings? Why?

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Which Word Am I?”

Explain that partners will play “Which Word Am I?” You will give a clue about one of the words and partners will figure out the word.

Begin by saying:

- I am a synonym for clutch.

Q Which word am I? Why? [Click 4 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “I think the word is [cling] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- I mean “the things someone owns.” (belongings)
- You use me to describe something that is difficult to see. (faint)
- I mean “hold onto something very tightly.” (cling)
- I can mean “become dizzy and lose consciousness.” (faint)
- I’m the things that belong to you. (belongings)
- I’m how you might describe a noise you can barely hear. (faint)

Introduce Roam, Joyful, and Sorrowful

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words roam, joyful, and sorrowful
- Review the suffix -ful
- Review antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

roam (p. 16)

Roam means “wander or move about without any particular purpose or place to go.”

joyful (p. 16)

Joyful means “full of joy or very happy.”

sorrowful

Sorrowful means “full of sorrow or very sad.”

Materials

- The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses
- Word card 64 (WA6)
- Word cards 65–66 (WA7)

INTRODUCE AND USE ROAM

1 Introduce and Define Roam

Show pages 16–17 of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses. Review that the girl rides with the horses during a thunderstorm. After the storm passes, she and the horses fall asleep. Read page 16 aloud, emphasizing the word roamed.

Explain that roam means “wander or move about without any particular purpose or place to go,” and tell the students that roam and wander are synonyms. Explain that the wild horses do not live in one particular place. Instead, they roam, or wander, the hills, living wherever they find food and water.

Display word card 64 (🗨️ WA6) and have the students say the word roam.

2 Act Out Roaming

Tell the students that you are going to roam the classroom. Ask them to watch carefully. Explain that afterward you will have partners talk about what they noticed. Then roam the classroom by moving from place to place without any particular purpose.

Ask:

Q What did you notice me doing when I roamed the classroom? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: When _____ roamed, [he/she] . . .

PROMPT 1: “When [Mrs. Jenson] roamed, she . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

You might invite a volunteer to roam around the classroom and have the students comment on what they notice.

3 Discuss Where We Like to Roam

Explain that people sometimes roam a place when they have free time or want to look around the place. Give a couple of examples of places you have roamed or where you have seen others roam.

You might say:

"I sometimes roam my garden on a nice day. I walk here and there, smelling the flowers and enjoying the sunshine. My nephew loves to roam a toy store. He wanders about in each aisle looking at the toys. Sometimes he stops for a moment to examine a toy he particularly likes; then he moves on."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Where is a place you like or might like to roam? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I like to roam [the park near where I live] because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word roam and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE JOYFUL

4 Introduce Joyful and Use the Suffix -ful to Determine Its Meaning

Show pages 16–17 of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses again, and review that the stallion asks the girl to live with the horses. Reread the last two sentences on page 16 aloud, emphasizing the word joyfully: "He welcomed her to live with them. She was glad, and all her horses lifted their heads and neighed joyfully, happy to be free with the wild horses."

Display word cards 65–66 (WA7) and reveal word card 65. Have the students say the word joyful.

Point to the suffix -ful in joyful and review that -ful is a suffix. Review that a suffix is a "letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word." Review that the students learned about the suffix -ful when they learned the word doubtful, and remind them that it means "full of."

Ask:

Q *Based on what you know about the suffix -ful, what do you think the word joyful might mean?*

Click 1 on word cards 65–66 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "Where is a place in your neighborhood/at school that you like to roam?" "Where is a place you have visited on vacation that was fun to roam?" and "Where is a place that you would like to visit and roam?"

joyful 66

PROMPT 1: I think joyful means . . .

1 2 3 4

PROMPT 1: “I think joyful means . . .”

If necessary, explain that joyful means “full of joy or very happy,” and point out that joyful and happy are synonyms. Explain that the girl’s horses are joyful, or full of joy, when they learn that they are going to live with the wild horses.

5 Talk About Joyful Times and Events

Explain that the word joyful is often used to describe a time or event (something that happens) in your life that is very happy, and give a few examples of joyful times or events you or others have experienced.

You might say:

“My wedding was a joyful, or very happy, event. The births of my children were also joyful events. Special days such as birthdays and holidays are often joyful times. Special events such as trips and parties can also be joyful.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What time or event in your life was joyful? Why was it joyful? [Pause; click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “A joyful time in my life was when . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word joyful and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE SORROWFUL

6 Introduce Sorrowful and Review Antonyms

Explain that the last word the students will learn today is sorrowful. Click to reveal word card 66 and have the students say the word sorrowful.

Point to the words joyful and sorrowful on the chart and explain that joyful and sorrowful are antonyms, or words with opposite meanings.

Ask:

Q If joyful and sorrowful are antonyms, what do you think sorrowful means?

Click 3 to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 3: “I think sorrowful means . . .”

If necessary, explain that sorrowful means “full of sorrow or very sad.” Point out that sorrowful ends with the suffix -ful, which means “full of.”

7 Talk About Sorrowful Times and Events

Point out that people experience joyful times and events in their lives, but they also experience sorrowful times and events. Give a few examples of sorrowful times or events you or others have experienced.

You might say:

“When I was your age, my dog Brownie ran away, and he never came back. That was a sorrowful time for me. My best friend recently moved away, and that was a sorrowful event because I miss having her near me.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What time or event in your life was sorrowful? Why was it sorrowful?
[Pause; click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “A sorrowful time in my life was when . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word sorrowful and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

If students struggle to think of a sorrowful time or event, ask alternative questions such as “When has someone you know been sorrowful, or sad?” or “What is something that might happen to you that would be sorrowful?”

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart, add joyful and sorrowful to it. If you started a synonym chart, add these synonyms to it: roam and wander, joyful and happy, and sorrowful and sad.

EXTENSION

Explore Similes in The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses

Show the illustration on pages 12–13 of The Girl Who Loved Wild Horses and review that it shows the wild horses running from the storm.

Explain that the author of the book, Paul Goble, describes them with the phrase “galloping away like the wind.” Explain that by saying that the horses run, or gallop, away like the wind, the author helps us imagine how fast the herd is running.

Explain that “galloping away like the wind” is a simile and that a simile is a “comparison of one thing to another using the words like, as, or than.” Tell the students that good writers like Paul Goble use similes to help readers picture in their mind what is being described.

Show page 15 and explain that on this page the author continues to describe the horses running from the thunder and lightning. Tell the students that as you read this page, you want them to listen for what the horses are compared to. Then read the first paragraph on page 15 aloud. Ask:

- Q What are the horses compared to in the paragraph you just heard?
- Q How does comparing the horses running to a brown flood help you picture what the horses look like?

Read and discuss the following simile in the same way:

p. 20 “He snorted and his hooves struck as fast as lightning.”

Day 4

Review Roam, Joyful, and Sorrowful

Synonym Match
1	2
cluttered	useful
fantasize	especially
handy	messy
obstinate	imagine
particularly	stubborn
PROMPT: _____ is the synonym of _____.

WA10

Point to the words in column 1, and explain that these are vocabulary words the students have learned. Point to the words in column 2, and explain that these are synonyms of the vocabulary words in column 1. Explain that partners will match each vocabulary word to its synonym. Remind the students that synonyms are “words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.”

Point to the word cluttered. Then point to the words in column 2 and ask:

Q Which word in column 2 is the synonym of cluttered?

Point to the prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT: “[Messy] is the synonym of [cluttered].”

Then have a volunteer draw a line from the word cluttered to the word messy.

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words shuffle, swarm, and urgent
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way
- Use prompts to build on one another's thinking

Words Taught

shuffle (p. 6)

Shuffle means “slide the feet along the ground or floor while walking.” When people shuffle, they barely lift their feet. Shuffle also means “mix playing cards to change their order.”

swarm (p. 8)

A swarm is a “large group of people or insects that gather or move together.”

urgent (p. 8)

Urgent means “very important.” If something is urgent, it needs to be taken care of immediately.

INTRODUCE AND USE SHUFFLE

1 Introduce and Define Shuffle

Briefly review A Day's Work.

Show pages 6–7 and review that Francisco and his grandfather are waiting in the parking lot with other men who are hoping to get work. Read the first sentence on page 6 aloud, emphasizing the word shuffled.

Explain that shuffle means “slide the feet along the ground or floor while walking.” Explain that when people shuffle, they barely lift their feet. Explain that the workers are probably shuffling around the parking lot because they are tired or bored as they wait for work. Act out how the men might look as they shuffle around.

Display word card 67 (🎧 WA1) and have the students say the word shuffle.

2 Act Out Shuffling

Remind the students that people sometimes shuffle, or slide their feet along the ground, when they are tired or bored, like the workers in the story. Explain that people also shuffle when they are moving or carrying something heavy. Explain that you will act out shuffling as you move a heavy piece of furniture, and ask the students to watch carefully. Then act out shuffling as you move a piece of furniture.

Ask:

-  Q What did you notice me doing when I shuffled? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “When [Mr. Gong] shuffled, he . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask and discuss as a class:

- Q If you were rushing to get ready for school, would you shuffle? Why?

Click 2 on word card 67 (WA1) to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 2: “If I were rushing to get ready for school, I [would/would not] shuffle because . . .”

Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word shuffle and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

3 Discuss Another Meaning of Shuffle

Point to the word shuffle and remind the students that a word can have more than one meaning and that sometimes the meanings are very different.

Ask and discuss as a class:

- Q What else do you know about the word shuffle? What do you do when you shuffle cards?

ELL Note

You might demonstrate or act out shuffling a deck of playing cards.

Click ③ to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 3: “Shuffle can also mean . . .” or “When you shuffle cards, you . . .”

Explain that shuffle can also mean “mix playing cards to change their order.” Remind the students that if they hear or read a word like shuffle that has more than one meaning, they can usually figure out the correct meaning by thinking about how the word is used.

INTRODUCE AND USE SWARM

4 Introduce and Define Swarm

Show pages 8–9 of A Day’s Work and review that Mr. Benjamin comes to the parking lot looking for workers. Read the first two paragraphs of page 8 aloud, emphasizing the word swarm.

Explain that a swarm is a “large group of people or insects that gather or move together.” Explain that to get to the van first, Francisco darts through the swarm, or large group, of men who have gathered to find work.

Display word card 68 (WA2) and have the students say the word swarm.

5 Talk About Swarms of People and Insects

Ask:

 Q Where might you see a swarm of people? Why? [Click ① on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “You might see a swarm of people . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask:

 Q Where might you see a swarm of insects? Why? [Click ② to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “You might see a swarm of insects . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word swarm and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE URGENT

6 Introduce and Define Urgent

Review that Francisco tells Mr. Benjamin that his grandfather is a fine gardener. Read the last paragraph on page 8 aloud, emphasizing the word urgently.

Explain that urgent means “very important.” Tell the students that if something is urgent, it needs to be taken care of immediately. Explain that Francisco waves urgently to his grandfather because it is very important that his grandfather come right away. If he does not, Mr. Benjamin might choose one of the other workers. Act out how Francisco might have looked as he waved urgently.

Display word card 69 (🎧 WA3) and have the students say the word urgent.

7 Play “Urgent or Not Urgent?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Urgent or Not Urgent?” Explain that you will tell a story, and that partners will decide if the situation is urgent or not urgent, and why they think so.

- You and a friend are running on the playground. Your friend trips and falls and scrapes his knee.

Ask:

Q Would it be urgent for you to get help for your friend? Why? [Click 1 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “It [would/would not] be urgent for me to get help because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, imagine and discuss:

- You get home from school. There is a telephone message for you from a friend. Your friend’s message says, “I have something important to tell you. Call me back.”

Q Would it be urgent for you to call your friend back? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “It [would/would not] be urgent for me to call my friend back because . . .”

Point to the word urgent and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSION

Discuss the Suffix -ly

Remind the students that a suffix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the suffix -ly means “in a certain way” or “how.” Explain that when -ly is added to the word urgent, which means “very important,” it makes the word urgently, which means “in an urgent, or very important, way.”

Explain that the suffix -ly can be added to other vocabulary words they have learned, and have the students discuss the meaning of each of these words: frantically, speedily, fortunately, unfortunately, and fiercely.

Review Shuffle, Swarm, and Urgent

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words shuffle, swarm, and urgent from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way
- Agree and disagree respectfully

Words Reviewed

shuffle

Shuffle means “slide the feet along the ground or floor while walking.” When people shuffle, they barely lift their feet. Shuffle also means “mix playing cards to change their order.”

swarm

A swarm is a “large group of people or insects that gather or move together.”

urgent

Urgent means “very important.” If something is urgent, it needs to be taken care of immediately.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which of the words that we learned yesterday do you think is particularly interesting? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

PROMPT 1: “I think [swarm] is particularly interesting because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Which Word Goes With?”

Explain that partners will play “Which Word Goes With?” Review that you will write a word where everyone can see it and the students will decide which of this week’s vocabulary words go with the word you wrote and why.

Write the word help where everyone can see it.

Ask:

Q Which of this week’s words do you think goes with help? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “We think [urgent] goes with help because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss which vocabulary word goes with these words:

- worried

PROMPT 3: “We think [shuffle] goes with worried because . . .”

- move

PROMPT 4: “We think [swarm] goes with move because . . .”

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble making associations, call for attention and give a few examples of an association you might make, or ask questions such as [help] “How might the word urgent go with help?” “When might it be urgent that you get help?” [worried] “How might the word swarm go with worried?” “Might you be worried around a swarm of insects? Why?” and [move] “How might the word shuffle go with move?” “How do people move when they shuffle?”

EXTENSION

Explore Spanish Words in A Day's Work

Tell the students that they are going to discuss some of the Spanish words that Francisco's grandfather, Abuelo, speaks in A Day's Work. Show pages 14–15 and review that Ben hires Francisco and Abuelo to pull weeds. Explain that as you read this part of the story aloud, you want the students to listen for the Spanish word gracias and think about what gracias might mean. Then read page 14 aloud. Ask:

Q What do you think the Spanish word gracias means? Why do you think that?

If necessary, explain that gracias means “thank you.” Explain that Abuelo says “thank you” to Ben because Ben gives him a hat to wear. Write the word gracias where everyone can see it and have the students say the word.

In the same way, discuss the word bueno (“all right” or “OK”) on page 16 and the words muy bonito (“very pretty”) on page 20. Be sure to read enough of the text so that the students can use context clues to figure out the words' meanings.

Introduce Motion, Prowl, and “Blow Your Top”

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words motion and prowl and the idiom “blow your top”
- Review idioms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

motion (p. 10)

Motion means “tell someone something through a movement of the hand, head, or other part of the body.”

prowl (p. 18)

Prowl means “move quietly or secretly, trying not to be seen or heard.”

blow your top

“Blow your top” means “get very angry.”

Materials

- A Day's Work
- Word card 70 (WA5)
- Word card 71 (WA6)
- Word card 72 (WA7)

INTRODUCE AND USE MOTION

1 Introduce and Define Motion

Show pages 10–11 of A Day's Work and review that Ben decides to hire Francisco and his grandfather. Read the first two paragraphs on page 10 aloud, emphasizing the word motioned.

Tell the students that motion means “tell someone something through a movement of the hand, head, or other part of the body.” Explain that in addition to using words to tell Francisco and his grandfather to jump into the truck, he also motions to them. Act out how Ben might have motioned.

Display word card 70 (🎧 WA5) and have the students say the word motion.

Teacher Note

The students will probably be familiar with the meaning of motion as a noun (the motion of waves, slow motion). You may want to explain that motion is “movement, or the way that something moves.”

2 Act Out Motioning

Ask the students to watch carefully as you motion for a volunteer to stand up.

Ask:

Q What did you see me do when I motioned for [Darnell] to stand up? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

motion

PROMPT 1: When _____ motioned for _____ to stand up, [he/she] . . .

1 2

WA5

PROMPT 1: “When [Ms. Lee] motioned for [Darnell] to stand up, she . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask:

Q How might you motion for someone to sit down? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “To motion for someone to sit down, I might . . .”

As a class, have the students discuss and act out how they might motion for someone to:

- be quiet
- follow them

Point to the word motion and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE PROWL

3 Introduce and Define Prowl

Show pages 18–19 of A Day’s Work and review that Francisco and his grandfather are working on the bank by the road. Read the first three paragraphs aloud, emphasizing the word prowled.

Explain that prowl means “move quietly or secretly, trying not to be seen or heard.”

Explain that animals such as cats prowl, or move quietly or secretly, when they are hunting other animals.

Display word card 71 (🗉 WA6) and have the students say the word prowl.

4 Act Out Prowling

Explain that people also prowl. Ask the students to watch closely as you act out how a person might prowl.

Ask:

Q What did you notice me doing when I prowled? [Click ❶ on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “When [Ms. Lee] prowled, she . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask:

Q Why might a person prowl? [Click ❷ to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “A person might prowl because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Ask one or two volunteers to act out how they might prowl.

Point to the word prowl and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE “BLOW YOUR TOP”

5 Introduce and Define “Blow Your Top”

Show pages 22–23 of A Day’s Work and review that Ben discovers that Francisco and Abuelo have dug up the plants and left the weeds. Then read page 22 aloud.

Tell the students that the last “word” they will learn today is actually a phrase—“blow your top.” Explain that “blow your top” means “get very angry”—so angry that you feel like your head might explode. Explain that Ben blows his top, or gets very angry, when he discovers Francisco and Abuelo’s mistake.

Display word card 72 (🗨️ WA7) and have the students say the phrase “blow your top.”

Point to “blow your top,” and explain that “blow your top” is an idiom. Remind the students that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.”

Explain that when we say a person blows his top, we do not mean that the top actually blows off the person’s head. We mean that the person gets very angry.

6 Discuss Things That Might Make the Students Blow Their Tops

Explain that when you blow your top, you are more than a little upset or annoyed. You are furious.

Tell the students that you will describe a situation and partners will discuss whether the situation would make them blow their tops, and why. Explain that partners may not always agree, and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Begin by saying:

- Your best friend says she will go to a movie with you on Saturday. You’re excited because it’s a movie you really want to see. Then, on Saturday morning, your friend tells you she can’t go.

Teacher Note

For a list of common idioms, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Idioms” list in the General Resources section.

Q Would you blow your top if your friend said she couldn't go to the movie? Why? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "I [would/would not] blow my top because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss one or more of the following scenarios:

- You worked very hard to build a model volcano for a science project. You are carrying it to school and you trip. You drop the volcano, and it breaks into pieces.
- You are wearing a brand new jacket. You are walking across the playground and the sprinklers come on, soaking you from head to toe.

Point to the idiom "blow your top" and review the pronunciation and meaning of the phrase.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Review the Prefix re- and Discuss the Word Replanted

Write this paragraph from page 26 of A Day's Work on chart paper, and underline the word replanted: "Ben said they would. "The roots are still there. If they're replanted early, they'll be all right."

Show pages 26–27 and review that Abuelo learns that he and Francisco took out all the plants and left the weeds. Francisco asks Ben whether or not the plants will live.

Direct the students' attention to the charted sentences and explain that this is how Ben replies to Francisco's question. Explain that as you read these sentences, you want the students to think about what the word replanted might mean. Then read the sentences aloud.

Point to the word replanted in the charted sentence, and remind the students that re- is a prefix that means "again." Ask:

Q *Based on what you know about the prefix re- and what is happening in the story, what do you think the word replanted might mean?*

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

If necessary, explain that replanted means "planted again." Explain that Ben says that if the plants are planted again soon, they will survive.

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker

EXTENSION

Discuss the Suffix -er and the Word Prowler

Prepare a sheet of chart paper titled “-er Words.” On the paper, write the words prowl and prowler. Remind the students that a suffix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the suffix -er means a “person who.” Explain that when you add -er to prowl, it makes the word prowler. Ask the students what they think the word prowler might mean, and explain that a prowler is a “person who prowls, or moves quietly, through a house or building in order to steal things.”

Explain that the suffix -er is used in many words. Add a few examples to the chart and discuss each one (for example, teach/teacher, write/writer, and run/runner). Then ask the students for other examples and add them to the list. If the students struggle to think of words, stimulate their thinking by asking questions such as “What do you call a person who gardens? drives? manages? leads? follows? listens?”

Encourage the students to listen and watch for other -er words and add them to the chart.

Day 4

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗨️ WA9). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Finish the Story”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Finish the Story.” Review that you will tell a story, leaving off the last word. Explain that partners will finish the story by deciding which of the ongoing review words makes the best ending for it.

Display the ongoing review activity (🗨️ WA10) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud twice, slowly and clearly.
  - Story 1: Jamal is afraid of snakes. On a trip to the zoo, he is scared to go into the reptile house. His friend Lanie tries to coax him by saying, “The snakes are behind glass and there are lots of other cool reptiles like lizards and crocodiles!” Jamal replies, “All right, maybe I will _____.”
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

- Q Which vocabulary word makes the best ending for the story? Why? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I think the word [reconsider] makes the best ending because . . .”

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place.

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA10) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the story with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students' responses indicate that they understand the words' meanings?
- Can they explain why they choose each word to finish a story?
- Are they using the words in their writing?

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 170 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by having the students play "Which Word Am I?" (see Week 5, Day 5, Step 2).

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Before continuing with the week 13 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students' understanding of words taught in Weeks 9-12 by using the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 3" answer sheet (IA1) on page 174 of the Assessment Resource Book. For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment" on page 171 of the Assessment Resource Book.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate her understanding of words taught in Weeks 9-12 using the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Student Self-assessment" on page 175 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Introduce Slog, Commence, and Flabbergasted

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words slog, commence, and flabbergasted
- Review synonyms
- Review shades of meaning
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

slog (p. 6)

Slog means “walk slowly and heavily, as if you are walking through deep snow or mud.”

commence (p. 9)

Commence means “begin or start.”

flabbergasted (p. 15)

Flabbergasted means “very surprised, or shocked or astonished.”

INTRODUCE AND USE SLOG

1 Introduce and Define Slog and Review Shades of Meaning

Briefly review Mailing May.

Show pages 6–7 and review that May wants to earn money to buy a train ticket. She walks through the snow to Mr. Alexander’s Department Store to ask for a job. Read the last two paragraphs on page 6 aloud, emphasizing the word slogged.

Tell the students that slog means about the same things as walk, with this important difference: if you slog, you don’t just walk, you walk slowly and heavily. Explain that May slogged her way home, or walked slowly and heavily, because she was walking through deep snow. Point out that when you walk through deep snow it is difficult to lift your feet, so you walk slowly and with heavy steps. Act out how May might have looked as she slogged through the snow.

Display word card 73 (🗉 WA1) and ask the students to say the word slog.

Materials

- Mailing May
- Word card 73 (WA1)
- Word card 74 (WA2)
- Word card 75 (WA3)

Teacher Note

If you started a “Just the Right Word” chart, add the word slog along with its definition, “walk slowly and heavily.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that previously they learned the word shuffle, and point out that shuffle and slog are both ways of walking, but they are different. Review that shuffle means “slide the feet along the ground or floor while walking,” and show the students the difference between shuffling and slogging by acting out these two ways of walking.

2 Discuss Slogging Through Mud

Have the students imagine they are walking across a muddy field after a heavy rain. The mud is very deep—up to their ankles.

Ask:

-  Q Would you slog, or walk slowly and heavily, across the muddy field? Why? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA1

slog

PROMPT 1: I [would/would not] slog across the muddy field because . . .

1 2

PROMPT 1: “I [would/would not] slog across the muddy field because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Then ask a volunteer to act out slogging across a field of deep mud. Follow up by asking:

- Q What did you see [Tran] do when he slogged across the field?

Ask the students to imagine they are walking across the same field a week later. The mud has dried and the ground is solid under their feet.

Ask:

-  Q Would you slog across the dry field? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] slog across the dry field because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word slog and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE COMMENCE

3 Introduce and Define Commence and Review Synonyms

Show pages 8–9 of Mailing May and review that May is disappointed because she cannot find a way to visit her grandmother. Read the first paragraph on page 9 aloud, emphasizing the word commenced.

Tell the students that commence means “begin or start,” and explain that commence, begin, and start are synonyms. Point out that when May’s parents commence, or begin, whispering and peeking at her, it makes her feel worse.

Display word card 74 (🌐 WA2) and ask the students to say the word commence.

4 Discuss When Activities Commence

Ask:

Q When does our school day commence? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[Our school day] commences . . .”

Then discuss as a class:

Q When does recess usually commence?

Q When does lunch commence?

Point to the word commence and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE FLABBERGASTED

5 Introduce and Define Flabbergasted and Review Shades of Meaning

Show pages 14–15 of Mailing May and review that Pa and Leonard take May to the train station to talk to the postmaster, Sam Perkins. Read page 15 aloud, emphasizing the word flabbergasted.

Explain that flabbergasted means about the same thing as surprised, with this important difference: If you are flabbergasted, you are not just a little surprised, you are very surprised. You are shocked or astonished. Explain that May and Mr. Perkins are flabbergasted, or very surprised, when Pa says he wants to mail May.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of commence is comenzar.

Teacher Note

If you have started a synonym chart, add commence, begin, and start to it. You may also want to explain that commence and end are antonyms, or “words with opposite meanings.” If you have started an antonym chart, you may want to add commence and end to it.

Teacher Note

You may want to explain that flabbergasted, surprised, shocked, and astonished are synonyms and add them to the synonym chart.

Teacher Note

If you started a “Just the Right Word” chart, add the word flabbergasted along with its definition, “very surprised, or shocked or astonished.”

ELL Note

As you describe being flabbergasted, act out what you did and said. For example, you might open your eyes wide, cover your mouth with your hand, or gasp and say, “Oh, wow!”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you been very surprised by something someone said to you?” or “When have you been very surprised by something you saw someone do in person or on TV or in a movie?” Alternatively, ask “When have you seen someone who was very surprised? Why was the person surprised?”

Display word card 75 ( WA3) and have the students say the word flabbergasted.

6 Discuss Being Flabbergasted

Describe a time when you were flabbergasted.

You might say:

“I was flabbergasted when I opened my garage door one day and found that there was a pigeon in the garage. I was even more flabbergasted when the pigeon walked right up to me expecting to be fed!”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you been flabbergasted, or very surprised? Why were you flabbergasted? [Pause; click 1 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I was flabbergasted when . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q How did you look when you were flabbergasted [by your surprise party]?

Q What did you say?

Point to the word flabbergasted and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Shades of Meaning with Surprised and Flabbergasted

Write the words surprised and flabbergasted where everyone can see them. As a class, discuss:

Q How are the words surprised and flabbergasted alike? How are they different?

If necessary, review that surprised and flabbergasted mean about the same thing, with one important difference: If you are flabbergasted, you are not just a little surprised, you are very surprised. You are shocked or astonished.

Explain that you are going to describe something. Partners will discuss whether they would be a little surprised by it, or whether they would be flabbergasted by it, and why.

Begin by saying:

- You are walking to school. A monkey whizzes by you on a bicycle.

Ask:

- Q Would you be a little surprised, or would you be flabbergasted, if a monkey whizzed by you? Why? Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I would be [flabbergasted] because . . .”

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. In the same way, discuss one or both of the following:

- At school, you see the janitor mopping the floor.
- During class, a flimsy bookshelf snaps and all the books crash to the floor.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Discuss Where the Students Would Like to Be “Mailed To”

Show pages 20–21 of Mailing May and review that May is “mailed to” Lewiston, Idaho, to visit her grandmother—she rides in the mail car of a train because her parents cannot afford a ticket. Read page 21 aloud.

Ask the students to think about a place they would like to be “mailed to”—or travel to on a train or airplane—and why they would like to go there. Then ask:

- Q Where would you like to be “mailed to” and why?

Have the students use the prompt to share their thinking with a partner:

PROMPT: “I would like to be ‘mailed to’ [Los Angeles] because [my cousins live there and we always have so much fun together playing at the beach].”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word whiz (“move very fast”) earlier.

Day 2

Review Slog, Commence, and Flabbergasted

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)
- “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA5)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words slog, commence, and flabbergasted from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use prompts to build on one another’s thinking

Words Reviewed

slog

Slog means “walk slowly and heavily, as if you are walking through deep snow or mud.”

commence

Commence means “begin or start.”

flabbergasted

Flabbergasted means “very surprised, or shocked or astonished.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which word do you think is the most fun to use? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA4

PROMPT 1: “I think [flabbergasted] is the most fun to use because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

2 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Explain that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Remind the students that you will tell them the beginning of a story that includes a vocabulary word. They will use what they know about the word and their imaginations to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (🗺️ WA5). Point to story 1 and begin by reading the story aloud twice, slowly and clearly (see WA5 below).

- Story 1: George and Jane are living in the rainforest. They leave their hut to find food. They slog through . . .

Q How might you finish the story? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Tell Me a Story

George and Jane are living in the rainforest. They leave their hut to find food. They slog through . . .

_____

PROMPT 1: They slog through . . .

PROMPT 2: George and Jane would slog through _____ because . . .

WA5

PROMPT 1: “They slog through . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Why would George and Jane slog through [deep piles of wet leaves]?

Point to prompt 2 (WA5) and have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “George and Jane would slog through [deep piles of wet leaves] because . . .”

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty thinking of an ending, review the definition of slog and think aloud about an ending. (For example, say “They slog through a river of mud and deep piles of wet leaves covering the forest floor.”) Then reread the beginning of the story and repeat the question.

Discuss the following stories using the same procedure:

- Story 2: George and Jane are resting under a kapok tree. They hear thunder and realize that a storm is coming. When the rain commences, they . . .

Q How might you finish this story? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “When the rain commences, they . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q Why would George and Jane [find shelter under a tree] when the rain commences?

Point to prompt 2. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 4: “George and Jane [find shelter under a tree] when the rain commences because . . .”

- Story 3: George and Jane return to their hut. They are flabbergasted when . . .

Q How might you finish this story? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: “They are flabbergasted when . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q Why would George and Jane be flabbergasted if [their hut collapsed during the storm]?

Point to prompt 2. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 6: “George and Jane are flabbergasted when they see [their hut collapsed during the storm] because . . .”

Introduce Permissible, Impermissible, and Adventuresome

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words permissible, impermissible, and adventuresome
- Review antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Share their partners' thinking with the class
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

permissible (p. 16)

Permissible means “allowed or permitted.” If something is permissible, you can do it.

impermissible

Impermissible means “not allowed or permitted.” If something is impermissible, you may not do it.

adventuresome (p. 22)

If you are feeling adventuresome, you are feeling bold and ready for an adventure.

INTRODUCE AND USE PERMISSIBLE

1 Introduce and Define Permissible

Show pages 16–17 of Mailing May and remind the students that May and her father ask Mr. Perkins if he can mail May to her grandmother. Read the following sentence aloud, emphasizing the word permissible: “Well, the rule book says nothing about children, but it is permissible to mail baby chicks.”

Tell the students that permissible means “allowed or permitted.” Explain that if something is permissible, you can do it. Review that Mr. Perkins jokes that he does not know if he can mail a girl but he does know he can mail baby chicks because that is permissible, or allowed.

Display word cards 76–77 (🗉 WA6) and reveal word card 76. Have the students say the word permissible.

Materials

- Mailing May
- Word cards 76–77 (WA6)
- Word card 78 (WA7)

Teacher Note

You may want to mention that permissible, allowed, and permitted are synonyms. If you have started a synonym chart, add the words to it at the end of the lesson.

INTRODUCE AND USE IMPERMISSIBLE

2 Introduce Impermissible and Review Antonyms

Show pages 16–17 of Mailing May again, and remind the students that according to Mr. Perkins, “The postal code says not to mail lizards or insects or anything smelly.” Explain that mailing these things is impermissible and that impermissible is the next word the students will learn today. Explain that impermissible means “not allowed or permitted.” If something is impermissible, you may not do it. Explain that permissible and impermissible are antonyms, or “words with opposite meanings.”

Reveal word card 77 (WA6) and have the students say the word impermissible.

3 Discuss What Is Permissible and Impermissible in the Classroom

Give a few examples of things that are permissible in the classroom.

You might say:

“In our classroom, it is permissible to write stories during writing time, ask questions if we raise our hands, and talk with our partners during ‘Turn to Your Partner.’”

Explain that you are going to ask partners to discuss questions about the word permissible and that you want them to be ready to share their partners’ thinking with the class. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What else is permissible in the classroom? What else are you allowed to do? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Have the students use the prompt to take turns answering the questions:

permissible impermissible

PROMPT 1: It is permissible to . . .

1 2 3 4

WA6

PROMPT 1: “It is permissible to . . .”

After partners have talked, click 2 on word card 77 (WA6) to reveal the next prompt, and have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their partner’s thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “[Jenn] said it is permissible to . . .”

Using the same procedure, discuss:

Q What is something impermissible, or not allowed, in the classroom? Why is it impermissible? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “[Running] is impermissible because . . .”

Click 4 to reveal the next prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their partner’s thinking with the class.

PROMPT 4: “[Alex] said [interrupting someone who is talking] is impermissible because . . .”

Point to the words permissible and impermissible and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

INTRODUCE AND USE ADVENTURESOME

4 Introduce and Define Adventuresome

Show pages 22–23 of Mailing May and review that Leonard helps May board the train. Read this paragraph aloud, emphasizing the word adventuresome: “At exactly seven o’clock, the train chugged away from my home and headed down the mountain. I felt as adventuresome as Daniel Boone!”

Explain that if you are feeling adventuresome, you are feeling bold and ready for an adventure. Point out that May feels adventuresome, or bold and ready for an adventure, because she is traveling as mail on the train.

Display word card 78 (WA7) and have the students say the word adventuresome. Point out the word adventure in adventuresome.

5 Discuss Feeling Adventuresome

Tell the students about a time when you felt adventuresome.

You might say:

“Last weekend I was feeling adventuresome—I was in the mood to try something new and exciting. So I decided to give inline skating a try. I had never done it before, so I was a little anxious, but I tried it anyway. I had a wonderful time.”

Teacher Note

If the students need further practice with the words permissible and impermissible, ask questions such as “What is [permissible/impermissible] on the playground?” and “What is [permissible/impermissible] in the cafeteria?”

Teacher Note

You might point out that Daniel Boone was a famous American pioneer, or explorer.

Teacher Note

If necessary, explain that bold means “brave” and that an adventure is an “unusual or exciting experience that you will remember.”

Teacher Note

You might want to explain that the words adventuresome and adventure are related and that the word adventuresome is formed by adding the suffix -some to the word adventure. For more about the suffix -some, see the extension activity “Explore the Suffix -some.”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something you want to do but have never done before?” and “If you were bored and wanted to do something exciting, what might you do?”

Teacher Note

You might explain that a suffix is a “letter or a group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q If you felt adventuresome, what might you do? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “If I felt adventuresome, I might [go on a roller coaster] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word adventuresome and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSIONS

Explore the Suffix -some

Write the word adventure where everyone can see it. Explain that adventure is a noun that means “exciting experience.” Write the word adventuresome next to the word adventure. Underline the suffix -some in the word adventuresome, and explain that -some is a suffix. Explain that the suffix -some means “full of, or causing.” Explain that when you add the suffix -some to the noun adventure, you make the adjective adventuresome, which means “full of adventure.”

Write the word trouble where everyone can see it. Explain that trouble is a noun that means “problems or difficulties.” Ask:

Q What word do we make when we add the suffix -some to the word trouble?

Q What do you mean when you say something is troublesome?

If necessary, explain that when we add -some to trouble we make the adjective troublesome, which means “causing problems or trouble.”

Using the same procedure, discuss the words quarrel and quarrelsome and awe and awesome.

Explore the Prefix im-

Write the word impermissible where everyone can see it. Explain that im- is a prefix that means “not” and that when you add the prefix im- to the word permissible, which means “allowed or permitted,” you make the word impermissible, which means “not allowed or permitted.”

Tell the students that knowing that the prefix im- means “not” can help them figure out the meanings of other words that use the prefix. Write the word possible on the board. Ask:

Q What do you know about the word possible? What do we mean when we say something is possible?

If necessary, explain that if something is possible, it can be done. Ask:

Q *What word do we make when we add the prefix im- to possible?*

Write the word impossible on the board. Ask:

Q *Based on what you know about the word possible and the prefix im-, what does impossible mean?*

If necessary, explain that if something is impossible, it is not possible. It cannot be done. In the same way, discuss the meanings of other words that use the prefix, such as imperfect and impolite.

Review Permissible, Impermissible, and Adventuresome

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words permissible, impermissible, and adventuresome from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way
- Agree and disagree respectfully

Words Reviewed

permissible

Permissible means “allowed or permitted.” If something is permissible, you can do it.

impermissible

Impermissible means “not allowed or permitted.” If something is impermissible, you may not do it.

adventuresome

If you are feeling adventuresome, you are feeling bold and ready for an adventure.

ABOUT USING VOCABULARY WORDS IN SENTENCES

Using a vocabulary word in a sentence is an excellent way for the students to demonstrate their understanding of the word. However, creating a sentence that conveys a word's meaning—a sentence that goes beyond "She contemplates" or "It was meager"—can be challenging. In this lesson, the students are introduced to using words in sentences through an activity called "Create a Sentence." The students begin by completing sentences you start. In subsequent lessons, these sentence starters gradually disappear, and the students develop their own sentences, supported by teacher questions as needed. For more information about "Create a Sentence" and other activities, see "Questions and Activities" in the Introduction.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA9). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to complete the sentence, remind them that if something is urgent it is very important and must be done. Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (For example, say “Before going to bed, it is urgent that you brush your teeth,” or “Before going to bed, it is urgent that you put your pajamas on.”) Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

The purpose of the follow-up question is to encourage the students to think more deeply about the word and whether the volunteer’s sentence conveys the word’s meaning.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do an activity called “Create a Sentence.” Explain that you will read aloud the beginning of a sentence that uses a vocabulary word. They will use what they know about the word and their imaginations to finish the sentence. Explain that before partners do the activity together, they will practice as a class.

Point to the word urgent and review that urgent means “very important.” If something is urgent, it needs to be taken care of immediately. Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Before going to bed, it is urgent . . .

Discuss as a class:

- Q How might you complete the sentence? What urgent, or very important, thing must you do before you go to bed?

Click 1 on the ongoing review cards (WA9) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

- Q Does it make sense to say “Before going to bed, it is urgent that [you brush your teeth]”? Why?

3 Do the Activity in Pairs

Point to the word cling and explain that the next sentence uses the word cling. Review that cling means “hold onto someone or something very tightly.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- During the movie, Sophia screams and clings . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What might Sophia cling to during the movie? Why might she cling? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Have partners use the prompt to discuss how they might complete the sentence.

PROMPT 2: “During the movie, Sophia screams and clings to [her brother] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “During the movie, Sophia screams and clings to [her brother]”? Why?

Point to the word joyful and explain that the next sentence uses this word. Review that joyful means “full of joy or very happy.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- After Mikko’s graduation, there was a joyful . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What joyful event might there be after a graduation? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Have partners discuss how they might complete the sentence.

PROMPT 3: “After Mikko’s graduation, there was a joyful . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that people cling, or hold onto someone or something very tightly, when they feel afraid or unsafe. Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (For example, say “During the movie, Sophia screams and clings to her brother because she is excited.” or “During the movie, Sophia screams and clings to the couch because a scary monster jumps out of the bushes.”) Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that joyful means “full of joy or very happy.” Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (For example, say “After Mikko’s graduation, there was a joyful celebration with music and presents” or “After Mikko’s graduation, there was a joyful party with family and friends.”) Reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

4 Discuss Questions About the Remaining Words

Tell the students that you will ask them questions about the words they did not review in “Create a Sentence,” and they will discuss the questions with their partner. Ask:

[motion]

Q When might you motion someone to be quiet? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Introduce Coax, Snug, and Advise

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words coax, snug, and advise
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

coax (p. 4)

Coax means “persuade someone to do something by talking to the person gently and kindly.”

snug (p. 5)

Snug means “comfortable, warm, and cozy.”

advise (p. 16)

Advise means “tell someone what you think he or she should do.”

INTRODUCE AND USE COAX

1 Introduce and Define Coax

Briefly review Brave Irene.

Show pages 4–5 and review that Irene’s mother is too tired to deliver the duchess’s gown. Reread page 4 aloud, emphasizing the word coax.

Explain that coax means “persuade someone to do something by talking to the person gently and kindly.” Explain that Irene coaxes, or gently persuades, her mother to lie down because she knows her mother is not feeling well and needs to rest.

Display word card 79 (🌐 WA1) and have the students say the word coax.

2 Discuss and Act Out Coaxing

Give an example of a time you coaxed a person or animal, and act out what you said and the gentle tone of voice you used.

You might say:

“I once coaxed a frightened cat down from a tree. I said, ‘Please, little kitty, come down from the tree.’”

Materials

- Brave Irene
- Word card 79 (WA1)
- Word card 80 (WA2)
- Word card 81 (WA3)

ELL Note

You might act out what Irene could have said to coax her mother into bed, using a gentle tone. For example, say “You should rest, Mama. Please get into bed. I’ll take the dress to the duchess.”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to recall when they coaxed a person or animal, ask them to discuss when they saw someone coaxing a person or animal or have them imagine a situation in which someone might have to coax a person or animal.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you coaxed a person or animal? What did you say? [Pause; click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

coax

PROMPT 1: I coaxed . . .

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I coaxed . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Ask one or two volunteers to act out what they said when they coaxed. Remind them to use a gentle tone of voice.

Explain that you are going to give partners a chance to practice coaxing each other. Ask the students to imagine the following scenario:

- You and your partner are at the amusement park. You want to go on the roller coaster, but your partner doesn't.

Ask:

Q What might you say to coax your partner to go on the roller coaster with you? Turn to your partner.

Remind the students to use a gentle tone of voice when they coax their partners.

When most pairs have finished, call for their attention. Have one or two pairs act out what they would say to coax their partners.

Point to the word coax and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE SNUG

3 Introduce and Define Snug

Show pages 4–5 of Brave Irene again, and review that Irene packs the gown into a big box and gets ready to take it to the duchess. Reread the last paragraph on page 5 aloud, emphasizing the word snugly.

Explain that the next word the students will learn is snug and that snug means “comfortable, warm, and cozy.” Point out that Irene wants her mother to feel snug, or comfortable and warm, in bed, so she tucks the blankets in around her.

Display word card 80 (🔊 WA2) and have the students say the word snug.

4 Discuss Places Where We Feel Snug

Describe some places where you feel snug, or comfortable, warm, and cozy.

You might say:

“I feel snug in my sleeping bag when my family goes camping. It’s so warm and cozy on a cold night. I also feel snug when I sit in my easy chair at home. The chair is soft and comfortable, and it sits in a warm corner of the room.”

Ask:

Q Where do you feel snug? Why do you feel snug there? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I feel snug . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word snug and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE ADVISE

5 Introduce and Define Advise

Show pages 16–17 of Brave Irene and review that Irene is trying to make her way through the snow to the palace. Reread page 16 aloud, emphasizing the word advise.

Explain that advise means “tell someone what you think he or she should do.” Point out that Irene thinks she might be lost and wishes someone could advise her, or tell her which direction she should walk.

Display word card 81 (🔊 WA3) and have the students say the word advise.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by providing a few more examples of places where someone might feel snug (for example, tucked into bed with the blankets pulled up, curled up on a couch, or sitting between two other people in the back seat of a car).

6 Imagine How We Might Advise Someone

Describe a time when you advised someone or someone advised you.

You might say:

"The other day Timothy couldn't find his library book. I advised him, or told him what I thought he should do. I said, 'Why don't you look in your cubby?' When I was young, my aunt told me what I should do when I grow up. She advised me to be a teacher. I followed her advice."

Ask the students to imagine the following scenario:

- At recess a classmate says to you, "I had an argument with my best friend. I'm really angry with her, but I feel sad because we argued. What do you think I should do?"

Ask:

Q What would you advise your classmate to do? Why? [Click 1 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "I would advise him to . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word advise and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

---

EXTENSIONS

Discuss the Suffix -er and the Word Adviser

Explain that the suffix -er means "a person who." Explain that when you add -er to advise, it makes the word adviser, which means "a person who advises." (You may want to point out that when you add the suffix -er to advise, you drop the final e.)

Discuss a few other words with the suffix -er and add them to the chart (for example, jog/jogger, preach/preacher, sing/singer). Then ask the students for other examples and add them to the list. If the students struggle to think of words, stimulate their thinking by asking questions such as "What do you call a person who swims? farms? bakes? hikes? dances?"

Explore Related Words: Snug and Snuggle

Write the word snug where everyone can see it, and review that snug means “comfortable, warm, and cozy.”

Tell the students that knowing the meaning of snug can help them figure out the meanings of other words that are related to snug. Write this sentence where everyone can see it:

Lena snuggled with her cat, Chester, on a cold winter morning.

Ask:

Q What word in the sentence is related to snug? Why do you say that?

If necessary, point out that snuggle is related to snug, and that you can see part of the word snug (s-n-u-g) in snuggle. Then ask:

Q Based on what you know about the word snug and clues in the sentence, what do you think the word snuggle means?

If necessary, explain that snuggle means “lie close to someone or something, or hold something close for warmth,” and point out that Lena snuggles, or lies close to, Chester for warmth on a cold morning.

Day 2

EXTENSION

Explore Vivid Verbs in Brave Irene

Tell the students that good writers like William Steig, the author of Brave Irene, often use interesting or unusual verbs, or action words, to help readers picture in their mind what is happening in a story. Show pages 8–9 of the book and review that Irene is taking the gown to the palace during a snowstorm. Explain that as you read page 9 aloud, you want the students to listen for interesting verbs that help them picture in their mind what happens when the wind starts to blow harder. Then read page 9 aloud. Discuss as a class:

Q What verbs help you picture what happens when the wind starts to blow harder?

ELL Note

Explain that flung means “threw hard” and that scattered means “separated in different directions.”

If necessary, explain that the words ripped, flung, swept up, and scattered help us picture how the powerful wind tears branches from trees and tosses them about and sweeps up and scatters the snow.

Explain that we sometimes refer to interesting verbs like ripped, flung, swept up, and scattered as vivid verbs and that the word vivid means “clear and strong.” Explain that vivid verbs paint a clear picture for the reader of what is happening in a story.

Encourage the students to use vivid verbs in their own writing.

Day 3

- Review shades of meaning and multiple meanings
- Review synonyms
- Use a dictionary or glossary
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

Delirious means “very happy and excited.”

fret (p. 25)

Fret means “worry or get upset about something.”

cherish (p. 30)

Cherish means “care for something deeply.” If you cherish something, you treat it with great care because it is very important to you.

INTRODUCE AND USE DELIRIOUS

1 Introduce and Define Delirious

Show pages 24–25 of Brave Irene and review that Irene finally reaches the palace with the duchess’s gown. Read the first paragraph on page 24 aloud, emphasizing the word delirious.

Explain that delirious means “very happy and excited.” Point to the picture of the smiling duchess on page 24 and explain that she is delirious, or extremely happy, because her beautiful new gown has arrived in time for her to wear it to the ball.

Display word card 82 (🔊 WA5) and have the students say the word delirious.

2 Discuss and Act Out Being Delirious and Review Shades of Meaning

Tell the students that when people are delirious, they are not just a little happy and excited, they are very happy and excited.

Describe a couple of situations in which people are delirious and discuss what they do and say.

You might say:

"Sometimes baseball fans are delirious, or extremely happy and excited. They scream and jump up and down and shout, 'Hurray!' People on TV game shows are sometimes delirious after they win a prize. They throw their hands in the air and shout, 'I can't believe it! I won!'"

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Ask one or two volunteers to act out what they did and said when they were delirious.

Point to the word delirious and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "When have you been so happy that you jumped up and down?" and "When have you shouted because you were so happy and excited?" If the students continue to struggle, ask them to discuss when they saw someone who was delirious or to imagine a situation in which someone would be delirious.

Teacher Note

Tell the students that now that they know the word delirious, they have just the right word to use in their writing when they want to describe someone who is very happy and excited. If you started a "Just the Right Word" chart, add delirious and its definition to it.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add fret and worry to it.

INTRODUCE AND USE FRET

3 Introduce and Define Fret and Review Synonyms

Show pages 24–25 of Brave Irene again and review that Irene wants to go home. Read the first paragraph on page 25 aloud, emphasizing the word fret.

Tell the students that fret means “worry or get upset about something” and explain that fret and worry are synonyms. Explain that Irene is worried about her sick mother and wants to get home as soon as possible. The duchess tells Irene not to fret and that she can go home in the morning.

Display word card 83 (🗨️ WA6) and have the students say the word fret.

4 Discuss Things We Have Fretted About

Explain that everyone frets, or worries, sometimes and describe a few things the students might fret about (for example, being late for school, a misplaced softball glove, or what Mom will say after they spill juice on a new sweatshirt). Describe something you fret about.

You might say:

“I’m fretting about my dog because she hasn’t been eating or acting like herself. I’m worried that she might be sick.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is something you have fretted about? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I fretted about . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q How might someone look when he or she is fretting?

Click 2 on word card 83 (WA6) to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 2: “When someone is fretting, he or she might . . .”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Ask the volunteers to act out how someone might look when he is fretting.

Point to the word fret and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE CHERISH

5 Introduce and Define Cherish

Show page 29 of Brave Irene and review that the duchess sends Irene home in a sleigh after receiving her gown. Read page 30 aloud, emphasizing the word cherished.

Explain that cherish means “care for something deeply.” Explain that if you cherish something, you treat it with great care because it is very important to you. Explain that the duchess cherishes her gown, or cares for it deeply. She sends a note to Mrs. Bobbin thanking her for the gown.

Display word card 84 (🗨️ WA7) and have the students say the word cherish.

6 Discuss Things We Cherish

Explain that people often have possessions (things they own) that they especially cherish, or treat with great care because they are very important to them. Give an example of a possession you cherish.

You might say:

“I have a watch I cherish because it belonged to my grandfather. I wind it regularly and keep it safe in a box in my desk because it’s very important to me. It helps me remember my grandfather.”

Ask:

Q What possession do you cherish? Why? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I cherish [my bike] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word cherish and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Q What information is provided for the word [bicycle]?

Have volunteers share their thinking. As necessary, point out these key features:

- A sentence or phrase that shows how the word is used

Point out any additional information or features, which may include lists of synonyms or antonyms, the etymology (history) of the word, or links to related words or other information. Then briefly discuss:

Q In what ways is this online dictionary [different from/the same as] a print (book) dictionary?

Q Which type of dictionary do you prefer? Why?

Direct the students’ attention to the words you wrote and explain that the words are from Brave Irene. Tell the students that partners will choose one of the words they want to know about, search for the word in the online dictionary, and share what they learned about the word with the class.

Give pairs a minute or two to choose a word, look it up in the online dictionary, and read and discuss the word entry. When most pairs have finished, discuss each word as a class by asking:

Q Who looked up the word [bumble]? What did you find out about the word?

Q Who else looked up the word [bumble]? What can you add to what [Robert and Shannon] told us about the word?

Encourage the students to continue to use an online or print dictionary to look up the meanings of words they do not know.

Review Delirious, Fret, and Cherish

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words delirious, fret, and cherish from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Reviewed

delirious

Delirious means “very happy and excited.”

fret

Fret means “worry or get upset about something.”

cherish

Cherish means “care for something deeply.” If you cherish something, you treat it with great care because it is very important to you.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Point to the word delirious and ask:

Q Would you be delirious if your best friend moved away? Why? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA8

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the “Week 14 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) for each student

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 13 and 14, you might distribute a copy of the "Week 14 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3) to each student.

PROMPT 1: "I [would/would not] be delirious because . . ."

Using the same procedure, discuss:

 Q Would you fret if your best friend found a new friend? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I [would/would not] fret if my best friend found a new friend because . . ."

 Q If your friend gave you a picture he drew of you, would you cherish it? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "I [would/would not] cherish a picture my friend drew of me because . . ."

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play "Imagine That!"

Have the students imagine the following scenario:

- You cherish a T-shirt you made because it has the names of your friends on it. It disappears. You look everywhere, but you can't find it.

Ask:

 Q Do you fret, or are you delirious? Why? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: "I [fret/am delirious] because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- One day you are cleaning your room. You look under your bed. You see the T-shirt you cherish.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Another Meaning of Delirious

Point to the word delirious and review that delirious means "very happy and excited." Remind the students that words can have more than one meaning and that the meanings may be very different. Explain that delirious can also mean "confused because of a high fever." Explain that sometimes, when people are very sick, they become delirious, or confused. They may not know where they are or recognize family members. They sometimes say things that do not make sense.

Remind the students that if they hear or read a word that has more than one meaning, they can usually figure out the correct meaning by thinking about how the word is used. Explain that you will read a story that includes the word delirious. Partners will decide whether delirious means “very happy” or “confused because of a high fever.”

Read the following story aloud twice:

- The man had been very sick for days. He was unable to eat and had a high fever. He was delirious and called out “Where am I? Where am I?” over and over.

Ask:

Q In the story, what does delirious mean? Why? Turn to your partner.

Discuss the following story the same way:

- Jana wanted a dog more than anything. She begged her parents for weeks to let her have a puppy. When they finally said yes, Jana was delirious. “Thank you! Thank you! Thank you!” she shouted, as she jumped up and down and clapped excitedly.

commence

Commence means “begin or start.”

flabbergasted

Flabbergasted means “very surprised, or shocked or astonished.”

prowl

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of this activity, see Week 13, Day 5, Step 2.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to complete the sentence, remind them that when a person is feeling adventuresome, they feel bold and ready for an adventure. Then repeat the questions. If the students continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (For example, “George and Jane are feeling adventuresome so they decide to explore a cave in the woods” or “George and Jane are feeling adventuresome so they decide to try skydiving.”) Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

The purpose of the follow-up question is to encourage the students to think more deeply about the word and whether the volunteer’s sentence conveys the word’s meaning.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA9). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Explain that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that you will tell the students the beginning of a sentence that uses one of the words. They will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to finish the sentence. Explain that before partners do the activity together, they will practice as a class.

Point to the word adventuresome on the chart and review that adventuresome means “bold and ready for an adventure.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud:

- George and Jane are feeling adventuresome so they decide to . . .

Ask:

- Q How might you complete the sentence? What might George and Jane decide to do if they are feeling adventuresome?

Click 1 on WA9 to reveal the prompt and have a few volunteers use it to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “George and Jane are feeling adventuresome so they decide to . . .”

Follow up by asking:

- Q Does it make sense to say “George and Jane are feeling adventuresome so they decide to [explore a cave in the woods]”? Why?

Point to the word slog on the chart and review that slog means “walk slowly and heavily, as if you are walking through deep snow or mud.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud:

- To get home, Matt had to slog through . . .

Ask:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What might Matt slog through to get home?

Click 2 to reveal the prompt and have a few volunteers use it to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “To get home, Matt had to slog through . . .”

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “To get home, Matt had to slog through [a foot of snow]”? Why?

3 Do the Activity in Pairs

Tell the students that partners will now do the activity together. Point to the word flabbergasted on the chart and review that flabbergasted means “very surprised, or shocked or astonished.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud:

- Rosario was flabbergasted when she got home and discovered . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What might Rosario have been flabbergasted to discover? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “Rosario was flabbergasted when she got home and discovered . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “Rosario was flabbergasted when she got home and discovered [a raccoon in her kitchen]”? Why?

Point to the word commence and explain that the next sentence uses this word. Review that commence means “begin or start.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud:

- When the rain commenced, Mario . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What might Mario have done when the rain commenced? Why? [Pause; click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

If the students are struggling, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (For example, “To get home, Matt had to slog through piles of wet leaves” or “To get home, Matt had to slog through a vacant lot full of weeds.”) Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that flabbergasted means “very surprised, or shocked or astonished.” Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (For example, say “Rosario was flabbergasted when she got home and discovered six inches of water on the floor” or “Rosario was flabbergasted when she got home and discovered a raccoon in her kitchen.”) Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that commence means “begin or start.” Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (You might say “When the rain commenced, Mario put up his umbrella because he did not want to get soaked” or “When the rain commenced, Mario ran into the house because he wasn’t wearing a raincoat.”) Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that prowl means “move quietly or secretly, trying not to be seen or heard.” Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (For example, say “As the baby slept, her mother prowled around the nursery, cleaning up the toys” or “As the baby slept, her mother prowled around the kitchen looking for a snack.”) Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

PROMPT 4: “When the rain commenced, Mario [ran into the house] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “When the rain commenced, Mario [ran into the house]”? Why?

Point to the word prowl and explain that the last sentence uses this word. Review that prowl means “move quietly or secretly, trying not to be seen or heard.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud:

- As the baby slept, her mother prowled . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? Where might a mother prowl? Why might she prowl when her baby is sleeping? [Pause; click 5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: “As the baby slept, her mother prowled . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “As the baby slept, her mother prowled [around the kitchen looking for a snack]”? Why?

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students able to use the words to create sentences?
- Can they explain why they completed the sentence the way they did?
- Do they enjoy learning and using new words?

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 178 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word’s meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word’s meaning, provide further practice in creating sentences that use the word or act out the word and talk about what they did.

Introduce Flimsy, Long, and Gruff

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words flimsy, long, and gruff
- Review the suffix -est
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

flimsy (p. 5)

Flimsy means “thin and weak.” If something is flimsy, it is not sturdy or strong.

long (p. 5)

Long means “want something very much.” Long also means “more than the average length, or not short.”

gruff (p. 6)

Gruff means “unpleasant or rude.” If someone is gruff, he or she may seem unfriendly or mean.

INTRODUCE AND USE FLIMSY

1 Introduce and Define Flimsy

Briefly review Brave Harriet.

Show pages 4–5 and read the first paragraph aloud, emphasizing the word flimsy.

Tell the students that flimsy means “thin and weak.” Explain that if something is flimsy, it is not sturdy or strong. Explain that Harriet thinks the airplane looks flimsy, or not sturdy or strong, on the ground, but when she sees the plane in the air, she realizes that it is not flimsy. It is strong enough to lift a person into the clouds.

Display word card 85 (WA1) and have the students say the word flimsy.

Materials

- Brave Harriet
- Word card 85 (WA1)
- Word card 86 (WA2)
- Word card 87 (WA3)
- A sheet of paper and two objects made of sturdy material (collected ahead)

Teacher Note

You may want to remind the students that they learned the suffix -est when they discussed the word fiercest. You may also want to point out that when you add -est to flimsy, you change the y to an i to spell flimsiest.

2 Review the Suffix -est and Discuss Which Object Is Flimsiest

Write the word flimsiest where everyone can see it and pronounce the word. Point to the suffix -est in flimsiest and review that -est is a suffix that means “most.” Explain that when you add -est to flimsy you make the word flimsiest, which means “most flimsy, or weakest.”

Show the students the sheet of paper and the two sturdy objects you collected and ask:

-  Q Which of these do you think is the flimsiest, or weakest: the sheet of paper, [the plastic ruler], or [the metal stapler]? Why? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA1

flimsy

PROMPT 1: I think the _____ is the flimsiest because . . .

1 2

PROMPT 1: “I think the [sheet of paper] is the flimsiest because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Demonstrate that the sheet of paper is the flimsiest by tearing it. Point out that the other objects are not flimsy. They are made of sturdy materials and do not tear or break easily.

3 Look for Other Flimsy Classroom Objects

Ask the students to look around the room quietly and find something that they think is flimsy. After a few moments, call for the students’ attention.

Ask and discuss as a class:

- Q What is something you saw that you think is flimsy? Why do you think it is flimsy?

Click 2 on word card 85 (WA1) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “The [chart stand] is flimsy because [it has a wobbly leg and falls over all the time].”

Point to the word flimsy and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE LONG

4 Introduce and Define Long

Show pages 4–5 of Brave Harriet again and review that as soon as Harriet Quimby sees an airplane, she begins taking flying lessons. Read the last paragraph on page 5 aloud, emphasizing the word longing.

Explain that long means “want something very much.” Explain that Harriet longs, or very much wants, to be among the first people to fly an airplane.

Display word card 86 (WA2) and have the students say the word long.

5 Talk About Things We Long to Do

Tell the students about something you long or have longed to do.

You might say:

“When I was young, I longed to take ballet lessons, but I had no way to get to class. Now I long to travel and see ballet performed in different countries.”

Ask:

Q What is something you long to do? Why? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I long to [visit my cousins in Mexico] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word long and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

6 Discuss Another Meaning of Long

Point to the word long and review that long means “want something very much.” Remind the students that words often have more than one meaning and that the meanings can be very different.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q What else do you know about the word long? What do you mean when you say “I took a long nap”?

Click 2 on word card 86 (WA2) to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “Long can also mean . . .” or “When I take a long nap . . .”

Explain that long can also mean “more than the average length, or not short.”

Review that when the students hear or read a word such as long that has more than one meaning, they can usually figure out the meaning by thinking about how the word is used.

INTRODUCE AND USE GRUFF

7 Introduce and Define Gruff

Show pages 6–7 of Brave Harriet and review that in this part of the story Harriet tells what it was like when she first started to fly. Read the first three paragraphs on page 6 aloud. Use a gruff voice when you read the official’s words and emphasize the word gruffly at the end of the sentence: “‘No woman has ever received a license to fly,’ the official told me gruffly.”

Tell the students that gruff means “unpleasant or rude.” Explain that if someone is gruff, the person may seem unfriendly or mean. Explain that the official does not like the idea of a female pilot. For that reason he is gruff, or rude, when he speaks to Harriet.

Display word card 87 (WA3) and have the students say the word gruff.

8 Play “Is Olive Gruff?”

Explain that partners will play “Is Olive Gruff?” Explain that you will describe how the imaginary third grader Olive is acting and partners will discuss whether Olive is gruff, or unpleasant or rude, and why they think so.

Begin by saying:

- When Ned invites Olive to play at recess, Olive says, “No! I don’t want to play with you.”

Ask:

 Q Is Olive gruff? Why? [Click 1 on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think Olive [is/is not] gruff because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- Olive asks her little sister, “Would you like to play a video game with me? You can pick the game.”
- Olive’s friend comes over to play. Olive says, “Go away! Leave me alone!”

Point to the word gruff and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -est

Remind the students that a suffix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Write the word flimsiest where everyone can see it, and review that the suffix -est means “most.” When -est is added to the word flimsy, it makes the word flimsiest, which means “most flimsy, or weakest.”

Write the word strong where everyone can see it and ask:

Q What word do you make if you add the suffix -est to the word strong?

Q What does the word strongest mean?

If necessary, explain that strongest means “most strong.”

Then ask:

Q Who is the strongest person you know? Why do you say that? [Show the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “The strongest person I know is [my dad] because . . .”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, have the students add the suffix -est to the word kind, discuss the meaning of kindest, and talk about the kindest person they know.

Day 2

Review Flimsy, Long, and Gruff

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words flimsy, long, and gruff from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners' ideas

Words Reviewed

flimsy

Flimsy means "thin and weak." If something is flimsy, it is not sturdy or strong.

long

Long means "want something very much." Long also means "more than average length, or not short."

gruff

Gruff means "unpleasant or rude." If someone is gruff, he or she may seem unfriendly or mean.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which of the words you learned yesterday was the most fun to talk about? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Discuss “Would You?” Questions

Explain that you will ask some questions that partners will discuss.

Ask:

Q Would you like to live in a house made of flimsy materials? Why?
[Click 2 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] like to live in a house made of flimsy materials because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Using the same procedure, discuss:

Q Would you long to see your best friend if he went away for a week? Why?
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I [would/would not] long to see my best friend because . . .”

Q Would you be angry if your friend spoke to you gruffly? Why? Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “I [would/would not] be angry if my friend spoke to me gruffly because . . .”

Day 3

Introduce Persist, Strain, and Adjust

Materials

- Brave Harriet
- “Sentences from Brave Harriet” chart (WA5)
- Word card 88 (WA6)
- Word card 89 (WA7)
- Word card 90 (WA8)
- A classroom object you can adjust (prepared ahead)

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you may wish to write the context sentences where everyone can see them.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of persist is persistir.

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words persist, strain, and adjust
- Review using context clues
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

persist (p. 10)

Persist means “keep doing something, even though it is difficult.” If you persist, you refuse to give up.

strain (p. 17)

Strain means “pull or push hard.”

adjust (p. 17)

Adjust means “move or change something slightly to improve it or make it fit more comfortably.”

INTRODUCE AND USE PERSIST

1 Introduce and Define Persist and Review Using Context to Determine Word Meanings

Display the “Sentences from Brave Harriet” chart ( WA5). Show pages 10–11 of Brave Harriet and remind the students that Gustav Hamel, a pilot friend of Harriet’s, tries to persuade her not to fly across the English Channel. Harriet tells him that she is not afraid and that she has a good compass. Read the charted sentences aloud where they appear on page 10, emphasizing the word persisted.

Tell the students that persist is the first word they will learn today. Direct their attention to the context sentences on the chart (WA5), and explain that this is the sentence you just read. Point to the word persisted and underline it. Remind the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word—like persist—by rereading the sentence that includes the word, and looking for clues. Explain that as you reread the sentences you want the students to think about what the word persist might mean and which words in the sentence are clues to the meaning of persist.

Read the sentence aloud. Ask:

Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word persist might mean? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

WA5

Sentences from Brave Harriet

Gustav frowned and looked at his shoes, but he didn't give up. "Look here," he persisted, "you can have the glory without the danger."

PROMPT 1: I think persist might mean . . .

PROMPT 2: The clue _____ helps me figure out the meaning of the word persist.

PROMPT 1: "I think persist might mean . . ."

Have partners use the prompt to share their thinking. After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that persist means "keep doing something, even though it is difficult." If you persist, you refuse to give up. Explain that Gustav persists in trying to convince Harriet not to fly. He does not give up, even though Harriet is annoyed with him and makes it very clear that she longs to fly.

Ask:

Q What words in the sentence are clues to the meaning? [Point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "The clue ['he didn't give up'] helps me figure out the meaning of the word persist."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Circle the context clue on the chart as the students identify it. If necessary, point out that "he didn't give up" is a clue that helps us figure out that persist means "keep doing something, even though it is difficult."

2 Talk About Persisting

Display word card 88 (WA6) and have the students say the word persist. Give an example of a time when you persisted.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something that took you a long time to learn how to do?” and “What is something you learned to do that was difficult at first?”

You might say:

“When I first learned to ice skate, I kept falling down. But I persisted, or kept trying, because I really wanted to skate. After many tries, I could finally skate without falling.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you persisted in doing something? When have you kept trying to do something, even though it was difficult? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA6

PROMPT 1: “I persisted when I . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q Why do you think it is important to persist, or keep trying to do something, even if it is difficult?

Click 2 on word card 88 (WA6) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I think it is important to persist because . . .”

Point to the word persist and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE STRAIN

3 Introduce and Define Strain

Show pages 16–17 of Brave Harriet and review that Harriet is getting ready to fly across the English Channel. Read the first two sentences aloud, emphasizing the word straining.

Explain that strain means “pull or push hard.” Explain that the men strain to keep the plane on the ground, pulling hard on the wheels and tail to keep the plane from lifting into the air.

Display word card 89 (🌍 WA7) and have the students say the word strain.

4 Act Out Straining and Discuss Times We Have Strained

Ask the students to watch carefully as you act out straining to push a heavy boulder. Then act out straining to push a boulder, using sounds and facial expressions to emphasize the strain.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q How did I look when I strained? How did I sound?

Click 1 on word card 89 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “When you strained, you [looked/sounded] like . . .”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q When have you strained to push, pull, or lift something? [Pause; click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I strained to [push/pull/lift] . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word strain and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE ADJUST

5 Introduce and Define Adjust

Show pages 16–17 again and review that Harriet is getting ready to fly. Read this sentence aloud, emphasizing the word adjusted: “I adjusted my goggles, held my compass tightly, and gave them a thumbs-up.”

Explain that adjust means “move or change something slightly to improve it or make it fit more comfortably.” Explain that Harriet adjusts her goggles so that they fit more comfortably and allow her to see more clearly. Act out how Harriet might have adjusted her goggles.

Display word card 90 (🌍 WA8) and have the students say the word adjust.

Teacher Note

You might act out straining to push another object, such as a heavy couch or other piece of furniture, or you might act out straining to pull or lift a heavy object, such as a box.

🌍 ELL Note

For additional practice, you might invite volunteers to act out pushing or pulling a heavy object and then have the class comment on what they noticed.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, ask them when they have seen someone struggle to push, pull, or lift something, or ask them to imagine when someone might strain to push, pull, or lift something.

🌍 ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of adjust is ajustar.

Teacher Note

If you wear glasses, you might show the students how you adjust them to make them fit more comfortably.

6 Act Out Adjusting

Point to the object you have selected to adjust and tell the students that you will adjust it. Ask them to watch you carefully. Then adjust the object.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q What did I do to adjust [the blinds]? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[Mr. Coble] adjusted [the blinds] by . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that people sometimes adjust their position, or change the way they are sitting or standing, to be more comfortable. Explain that at your signal you would like the students to adjust their position on the rug so that they are sitting more comfortably. Then signal for the students to adjust their position.

Ask and discuss as a class:

Q What did you do to adjust your position?

Click 2 on word card 90 (WA8) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “To adjust my position, I . . .”

Ask each volunteer to act out what she did to adjust her position.

Point to the word adjust and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Another Meaning of Adjust

Write the word adjust where everyone can see it. Review that adjust means “move or change something slightly to improve it or make it fit more comfortably.” Remind the students that words often have more than one meaning, and explain that adjust can also mean “get used to something new and different.” Explain that when something new happens in your life, such as getting a new baby brother or sister or starting a new school year with a new teacher, you have to adjust, or get used to the new situation.

Teacher Note

If the students need more work with the word adjust, act out adjusting another object, such as a poster or picture on the wall, calendar or schedule on a bulletin board, or blinds or curtains on a window, or have a student volunteer adjust the object. Have the class comment on what they notice.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you had to adjust, or get used, to a new situation? [Pause; show the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I had to adjust when . . .”

Have volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with class.

EXTENSION

Explore Related Words: Persist and Persistence

Write the word persist on the board and review that persist means “keep doing something, even though it is difficult.” If you persist, you refuse to give up. Tell the students that knowing the meaning of persist can help them figure out the meaning of a word that is related to persist. Write these sentences where everyone can see them:

Max was determined to finish his science fair project and stayed up all night working on it. It was his persistence that helped him win the science fair.

Ask:

Q Which word in the sentences is related to persist? Why do you say that?

If necessary, point out that persistence is related to persist, and that you can see the word persist in persistence. Then ask:

Q Based on what you know about the word persist and clues in the sentences, what do you think the word persistence means? What is persistence?

If necessary, explain that persistence is “determination to do something even though it is difficult.” Point out that Max stayed up all night to finish his science fair project. In the end, he won the science fair because of his persistence and hard work.

Explain to students that many things, including schoolwork, take persistence, or hard work. Discuss as a class:

Q What else do you need persistence for? Why?

- I’m what you do when you keep trying. (persist)
- I mean “pull hard.” (strain)
- I’m what you might do if you are lying uncomfortably in bed. (adjust)

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Explain that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that you will tell the students the beginning of a sentence that uses one of the words. They will use what they know about the word and their imaginations to finish the sentence.

Point to the word coax and review that coax means “persuade someone to do something by talking to the person gently and kindly.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud:

- On a hot summer day, Patti and Paul walk down to the lake. Patti is too scared to go swimming. Paul tries to coax her to swim by saying . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What might Paul say to coax Patti to go swimming? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

When most pairs have finished talking, have two or three pairs share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “Paul tries to coax her to swim by saying [“Come on, Patti, the water is nice and cool!”]”? Why?

3 Create Their Own Sentences

Point to the word long and explain that the next sentence uses the word long. Tell the students that instead of finishing a sentence you start, you want partners to work together to make a sentence of their own that uses the word long.

Review that long means “want something very much.” Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word long in a sentence? For example, when have you longed for something you could not have? How do you feel when you long for something and can’t have it? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

When most pairs have finished talking, have two or three pairs share their sentences with the class. Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“I long to take horseback riding lessons, but my parents say I must wait until I’m twelve?”]? Why?

Point to fret and explain that the last sentence uses this word. Review that fret means “worry or get upset about something.” Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word fret in a sentence? For example, when have you fretted about something, or what is something you fret about? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

When most pairs have finished talking, have two or three pairs share their sentences with the class. Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“I fretted before my first soccer game”]? Why?

4 Play “Cross or Delirious?”

Direct the students’ attention to the ongoing review cards (WA10). Explain that you are going to describe a situation and partners will decide if they would be cross or delirious in that situation and why they think so. Point to the words cross and delirious and review their meanings.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reviewing that if you coax someone, you persuade them to do something by talking to them kindly. Then ask questions such as “What are some things that Paul could say to try to get Patti to go swimming?” and “What might make you want to go swimming in a lake?” Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something you long for that you must wait until you are older to have?” and “What is something you can do to help you get what you long for?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “Something I long for but must wait to have is . . .” or “To get what I long for, I can . . .”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you been worried about something?” and “Why were you worried?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “I fretted . . .” or “I fretted because . . .”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word savory earlier and that it means “pleasant to smell or taste.”

Begin with the following:

- Your best friend is sleeping over at your house tonight.

Ask:

Q Would you be cross or delirious? Why? [Click 1 on WA10 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “We would be [cross/delirious] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

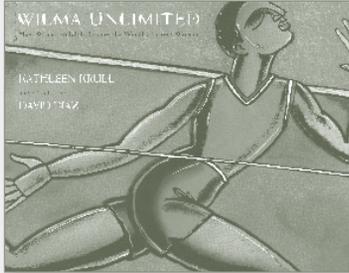

Using the same procedure, discuss:

- You discover that your older sister has borrowed your bike without asking.
- You walk into the kitchen and smell a savory feast.

- Review idioms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Contribute ideas that are different from their partners’ ideas

Words Taught

lively (p. 8)

Lively means “active.” Someone who is lively is energetic and full of life.

memorable (p. 22)

Memorable means “worth remembering.” Something that is memorable is not easy to forget.

- Word card 91 (WA1)
- Word card 92 (WA2)
- Word card 93 (WA3)

INTRODUCE AND USE LIVELY

1 Introduce and Define Lively

Briefly review Wilma Unlimited.

Explain that the first word the students will learn today is lively. Tell them that lively means “active,” and explain that if someone is lively, the person is energetic and full of life.

Show pages 6–7 and review that even though young Wilma was often very sick, she was a lively child. Point to Wilma in the illustration on page 7 and explain that Wilma’s love of running and jumping shows that she is lively.

Turn to page 8 and review that just before she turned five, Wilma became ill with polio. Read the last sentence on page 8 aloud, emphasizing the word lively: “The news spread around Clarksville: Wilma, that lively girl, would never walk again.”

Point out that Wilma’s family and friends were worried that Wilma would no longer be the lively, or active, girl they knew.

Display word card 91 (WA1) and have the students say the word lively.

2 Discuss Things We Do When We Feel Lively

Review that when people are lively, they are energetic and full of life. Give an example of what you do when you feel lively.

You might say:

“When I feel lively, I want to be outdoors doing something active like running, biking, or hiking. Sometimes when I feel lively, I work around the house or in my garden.”

Ask:

Q What do you do when you feel lively? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: When I feel lively, I . . .

1 2

WA1

PROMPT 1: “When I feel lively, I . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3 Review the Suffix -est and Discuss When We Feel Liveliest

Write the words liveliest and lively where everyone can see them and then pronounce the words. Point to the suffix -est in liveliest and remind the students that they learned this suffix earlier. Review that the suffix -est means “most,” and explain that when you add -est to lively you make the word liveliest, which means “most lively, or most active, energetic, or full of life.”

Ask:

Q At what time of day do you feel the liveliest (most lively): morning, afternoon, or evening? Why? [Click 2 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

You might explain that when you add -est to lively, you change the y to an i to spell liveliest.

PROMPT 2: “The time of day when I feel liveliest is . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word lively and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE MEMORABLE

4 Introduce and Define Memorable

Show pages 22–23 of Wilma Unlimited and remind the students that Wilma worked hard to learn to walk again without her leg brace. Read page 22 aloud, emphasizing the word memorable.

Tell the students that memorable means “worth remembering.” Explain that something that is memorable is not easy to forget. Point out that the day Wilma and her mother mailed the brace to the hospital was memorable, or worth remembering, because Wilma hated the brace and from then on she would not have to wear it.

Display word card 92 (🌐 WA2) and have the students say the word memorable.

5 Discuss Memorable Occasions or Experiences

Tell the students about a few memorable occasions or experiences in your life and what made them memorable.

You might say:

“My trip to Mexico last year was a memorable experience. I had a wonderful time. It’s a trip I’ll always remember. The surprise birthday party my students gave me last year was also memorable. I’ll never forget it.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you had a memorable experience, or an experience worth remembering? What made it memorable? [Pause; click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “My [first day in third grade] was memorable because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word memorable and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of memorable is memorable.

Teacher Note

You may wish to explain that memorable is related to the word memory. You might write memory next to memorable and point out that you can see part of the word memory in memorable.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something that happened to you that you will never forget?” “What is something memorable that you have done at school? at home? with your family?” and “Where is a memorable place you have visited?”

INTRODUCE AND USE “THROW YOURSELF INTO SOMETHING”

6 Introduce and Define “Throw Yourself into Something” and Review Idioms

Review that Wilma Unlimited tells how Wilma became a champion athlete. Show pages 24–25 and review that when Wilma stopped wearing her leg brace, she was able to take part in the sports and games she could not play before. Read the first paragraph on page 24 aloud, emphasizing the words “throw herself into basketball.”

Tell the students that “throw yourself into something” means “do something with a lot of energy and enthusiasm.” Explain that when you throw yourself into something, you work hard and do your very best. Explain that Wilma threw herself into basketball, or played it with lots of energy and enthusiasm and did her very best, because she was excited to finally be able to play.

Explain that “throw yourself into something” is an idiom, and review that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.” Explain that when we say you throw yourself into something, we do not mean that you actually throw your body into something. Instead, we mean that you do something with lots of energy and enthusiasm.

Display word card 93 (🗨️ WA3) and have the students say “throw yourself into something.”

7 Discuss “Throw Yourself into Something”

Give examples of times you or people you know have thrown themselves into something.

You might say:

“On weekends, I throw myself into working in my garden. I get up early and weed and plant until it gets dark. Last year my son threw himself into the school play. He was so excited to be in the play that he practiced his lines for hours and hours. My sister is throwing herself into a volunteer clean-up project in her neighborhood. She’s spending a lot of time raking leaves and picking up trash.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you thrown yourself into something? What did you do?
[Pause; click 1 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I threw myself into [helping my dad clean out our basement]. I . . .”

Teacher Note

If you started an idiom chart, add “throw yourself into something” to it.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you started a new hobby or played a new sport and tried to do your very best?” “What playground game do you play with lots of energy and enthusiasm?” “When have you volunteered to help out [at home or school/in your neighborhood] and worked hard?” and “When have you done something at [home/school] that you really enjoyed and did with lots of enthusiasm?”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the idiom “throw yourself into something” and review the pronunciation and meaning.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Explore the Words Sickliest and Fastest in Wilma Unlimited

Write the word liveliest and remind the students that the suffix -est means “most.” Review that when you add -est to the word lively, you make the word liveliest, which means “most lively.”

Explain that you will read a sentence from Wilma Unlimited that includes two words that use the suffix -est. Tell the students that you want them to listen for the words with the -est suffix. Then read the following sentence from page 38 of the book aloud twice, slowly and clearly: “Wilma Rudolph, once known as the sickliest child in Clarksville, had become the fastest woman in the world.”

Ask:

Q What words did you hear that end with the suffix -est?

Write the words sickliest and fastest on the board.

Point to the word sickliest and explain that as you read the sentence aloud again, you want the students to think about what the word sickliest might mean.

Reread the sentence aloud. Ask:

Q Based on what you just heard and what you know about the suffix -est, what do you think the word sickliest might mean?

If necessary, explain that sickliest means “most sickly or most often sick.”

Discuss the meaning of fastest using the same procedure.

---

ELL Note

You may want to write the sentence on chart paper or where everyone can see it.

INTRODUCE AND USE INTENSE

1 Introduce and Define Intense

Show pages 28–29 of Wilma Unlimited and review that Wilma was in Rome getting ready to compete in her first Olympic race, which no one expected her to win. Read the second paragraph on page 28 aloud, emphasizing the word intense.

Explain that intense means “very great or strong.” Point out that because the Olympics would be on television, millions of people would be watching Wilma and the other athletes. This put intense, or very great, pressure on them because they did not want to fail with so many people watching.

Display word card 94 (WA5) and ask the students to say the word intense.

2 Discuss Intense Heat and Cold

Remind the students that intense means “very great or strong” and explain that intense is sometimes used to describe very great heat or cold.

Explain that exhilarated means about the same thing as happy, with this important difference: if you are exhilarated, you are not just a little
