This week the students begin an exploration of shades of meaning that continues throughout the program. In this lesson, they are introduced to recognizing shades of meaning among verbs that differ in manner through a discussion of the words devour and eat. In later lessons, they will discuss shades of meaning among other verbs that differ in manner and among adjectives that differ in intensity (for example, stroll and walk). Recognizing differences among words helps the students remember the words and enables them to use more precise and interesting words in conversation and in their writing. For a complete table of the words with shades of meaning discussed in the program, see Appendix C. For more information about recognizing shades of meaning and other word-learning strategies, see “Independent Word-learning Strategies” in the Introduction.

INTRODUCE AND USE DEVOUR

1 Introduce Devour and Review Synonyms and Using Context to Determine Word Meanings

Briefly review Big Cats.

Show pages 16–17 of the book and remind the students that tigers have big appetites. Read the following sentence from page 17 aloud, emphasizing the word devour: “In a single day, eating at several meals until it is full, an adult tiger can devour almost half its own weight in meat.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is devour. Display the “Sentence from Big Cats” chart (🌐 WA1) and explain that this is the sentence you just read. Point to the word devour and underline it. Remind the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word like devour by rereading the sentence that includes the word to look for clues. Explain that as you read the sentence again, you want the students to think about what the word devour might mean and which words in the sentence are clues to its meaning.

Read the sentence aloud twice. Ask:

-  Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word devour might mean? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Sentence from Big Cats

In a single day, eating at several meals until it is full, an adult tiger can devour almost half its own weight in meat.

PROMPT 1: I think devour means _____.

PROMPT 2: The word _____ is a clue to the meaning of devour because . . .

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I think devour means [‘eat’].”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Then ask:

-  Q Which words in the sentence are clues to the meaning of devour? [Point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The word [eating] is a clue to the meaning of devour because . . .”

Teacher Note

For an example of how to introduce the week’s vocabulary words and review the read-aloud text, see Week 2, Day 1, Step 1.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of devour is devorar.

Teacher Note

For an example of how to prompt the students to use a word, see Week 1, Day 1, Step 4.

If necessary, explain that devour means “eat something quickly and hungrily” and that devour and eat are synonyms. Point out that the words “eating at several meals until it is full” are clues to the meaning of devour.

Display word card 37 (🗉 WA2) and have the students say the word devour.

2 Discuss Devouring Food and Introduce Shades of Meaning

Review that devour means about the same thing as eat and point out that there is one important difference: if an animal devours its food, it does not eat slowly or in small bits. It eats quickly and hungrily. Explain that animals like big cats devour their prey, or eat their prey quickly and hungrily, because they are hungry and because they do not want other animals to steal their food. Point out that people sometimes devour food as well, especially if they are very hungry. Ask:

Q Why is it not a good idea to devour your food? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

devour

PROMPT 1: It is not a good idea to devour your food because . . .

PROMPT 1: “It is not a good idea to devour your food because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that Seymour Simon could have written that a tiger can eat almost half its own weight in meat, but he chose to use the word devour because he wanted readers to clearly picture in their minds how quickly and hungrily a tiger can eat. Tell the students that now that they know the word devour, they have just the right word to use in their own writing when they want to write about someone or something eating quickly and hungrily.

Point to the word devour and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words devour and eat to it.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing shades of meaning, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard shades of meaning activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

INTRODUCE AND USE DIGNIFIED

3 Introduce and Define Dignified

Show pages 18–19 of Big Cats and review that the male lion is sometimes referred to as the “King of Beasts.” Read the second sentence on page 19 aloud, emphasizing the word dignified.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is dignified, and explain that dignified means “confident, calm, and in control.” Point out that lions appear to have a dignified manner, or way of behaving. They seem calm and in control.

Display word card 38 (🇺🇸 WA3) and have the students say the word dignified.

4 Describe Dignified People

Explain that a person who is dignified has self-confidence and self-control. A dignified person does not lose his temper and stays calm even in a stressful situation. Tell the students about someone who you think is dignified, and describe the dignified way the person behaves.

You might say:

“I think my mother is dignified. Even when she is upset or angry, she never raises her voice. She stays calm and in control of herself.”

Discuss as a class:

Q Who do you know who is dignified? Why would you describe the person as dignified?

Click ❶ on word card 38 (WA3) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “[My dad] is dignified because . . .”

5 Discuss Whether Tulip Is Dignified

Explain that you are going to describe something that our fifth-grade friend Tulip is doing; then partners will discuss whether Tulip is being dignified and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Tulip is giving a report to her class. Some of her classmates are being noisy, so Tulip waits patiently for them to settle down. When the class is quiet, Tulip begins to talk.

Ask:

 Q Is Tulip being dignified? Why? [Click ❷ on WA3 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Tulip [is/is not] being dignified because . . .”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, ask questions such as “Who do you know who always seems calm, confident, and in control? When have you seen that person act in a dignified way?”

Teacher Note

You might explain that the opposite of dignified is undignified and that un- is a prefix that means “not.”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Tulip is standing in the lunch line. She is hungry and the line is moving slowly. She grabs her stomach, makes loud groaning noises, and shouts, "I'm starving! Feed me! Feed me!"
- Tulip trips over a tree root on the playground. She stands up, calmly brushes herself off, and continues to play.

Point to the word dignified and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE THUNDEROUS

6 Introduce and Define Thunderous

Show pages 18–19 of Big Cats again, and remind the students that the male lion is sometimes referred to as the “King of Beasts” because of his dignified and majestic, or king-like, manner. Explain that the lion also has a majestic roar. Then read the second paragraph on page 19 aloud, emphasizing the word thunderous and stopping after the sentence “A loud roar can be heard from a distance of five miles.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is thunderous, and explain that thunderous means “making a loud, rumbling noise like thunder.” Review that the lion’s thunderous, or loud and rumbling, roar can be heard from five miles away.

Display word card 39 (🗨️ WA4) and have the students say the word thunderous.

7 Discuss Thunderous Noises

Remind the students that a thunderous noise is a loud, rumbling noise like thunder.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What things might make a thunderous noise? [Pause; click 1 on WA4 to reveal the prompt. Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[A semitruck] might make thunderous noise [on the highway].”

Point to the word thunderous and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

You might ask the students how Tulip would behave in the lunch line if she were being dignified.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What vehicles, animals, or musical instruments might make thunderous noises?” Alternatively, name a few things that make thunderous noise (garbage trucks, trains, tractors, jet engines, drums, elephants, stampeding herds of horses, crowds of people) and then ask, “What else might make a thunderous noise?”

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Explore Shades of Meaning with Devour and Eat

Write the words devour and eat where everyone can see them. Discuss as a class:

Q How are the words devour and eat alike? How are they different?

If necessary, review that devour and eat mean about the same thing, but that when an animal devours its food, it does not eat slowly or in small bits. It eats quickly and hungrily. Tell the students that you are going to describe a scenario in which an animal is eating. Then they will discuss whether it is devouring its food and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- A pig sees the farmer pouring slop into his trough. He races over to the trough and begins to eat. Slop is flying everywhere as the pig noisily finishes off the whole trough of food.

Ask:

Q Is the pig devouring his food, or eating it slowly in small bits? Why?

PROMPT: “The pig is [devouring/slowly eating] his food because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- A cat walks up to her food dish and sniffs her meal. She takes a bite and chews it thoroughly before taking another bite.

Tell the students that now that they know the word devour, they have just the right word to use in their writing when they want to describe a person or animal who is eating very quickly and hungrily.

EXTENSION

Explore the Suffix -ous

Remind the students that a suffix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Write the word thunderous where everyone can see it, and underline the suffix -ous. Explain that the suffix -ous means “having” or “full of.” Point out that when -ous is added to the word thunder, it makes the word thunderous. Review that thunderous means “making a loud, rumbling noise like thunder.”

Teacher Note

You might post a chart of words with shades of meaning titled “Just the Right Word” to use throughout the year. Write the word devour on the chart, along with its definition, “eat something quickly and hungrily.”

Write the word danger where everyone can see it. Ask:

Q What word do you make when you add the suffix -ous to the word danger?

Q What does dangerous mean?

Use the same procedure to have the students discuss the meaning of other words that use the suffix -ous, such as humorous, joyous, adventurous, poisonous, courageous, or mountainous.

Teacher Note

For a list of common suffixes, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the "Suffixes" list in the General Resources section.

Review Devour, Dignified, and Thunderous

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words devour, dignified, and thunderous from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA5)

Words Reviewed

devour

Devour means "eat something quickly and hungrily."

dignified

Dignified means "confident, calm, and in control."

thunderous

Thunderous means "making a loud, rumbling noise like thunder."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA5). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Would it be dignified to devour your food? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA5) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

For an example of how to introduce the review activities, see Week 2, Day 2, Step 1.

devour

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word stun earlier and that stun means “shock or greatly surprise.”

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of the activity, see Week 1, Day 3, Step 6.

PROMPT 1: “It [would/would not] be dignified to devour your food because . . .”

Then ask:

Q Would you be stunned if the person next to you let out a thunderous roar? Why?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] be stunned if the person sitting next to me let out a thunderous roar because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “What Might You Say or Do?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Might You Say or Do?” Remind the students that you will describe a situation; then partners will use the vocabulary words to talk about what they might say or do in that situation.

Begin by reading the following situation aloud:

- You and a friend go to your house after school. Your friend spots a plate of muffins on the counter. Your friend says, “I’m starving! I am going to devour those muffins!”

Then ask:

 Q What might you say or do if your friend said he was going to devour the muffins? Why? [Click 3 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “If my friend said he was going to devour the muffins, I might [tell him he couldn’t] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following situations:

- It is your first day at a new school. You want to behave in a dignified manner to make a good impression on your teacher and classmates.

Q What might you say or do during your first day at the new school to be dignified? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “To be dignified, I might . . .”

- You are sound asleep. Suddenly you are awakened by a thunderous noise outside your bedroom window.

Q What might you say or do when you hear the thunderous noise outside your window? [Click 5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: “If I were awakened by a thunderous noise, I might . . .”

Introduce Scarce, Blunt, and Widespread

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words scarce, blunt, and widespread
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking

Words Taught

scarce (p. 17)

Scarce means “difficult to get or find.” If something is scarce, there is very little of it.

blunt (p. 35)

Blunt means “not sharp or pointed.” Blunt also means “straightforward and honest in what you say.”

widespread (p. 38)

Widespread means “spread, scattered, or happening over a large area.”

Materials

- Big Cats
- Word card 40 (WA6)
- Word card 41 (WA7)
- Word card 42 (WA8)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of scarce is escaso/a.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the words scarce and plentiful are antonyms. If you started an antonym chart, add the words scarce and plentiful to it.

INTRODUCE AND USE SCARCE

1 Introduce and Define Scarce

Show pages 16–17 of Big Cats, and review that tigers are carnivores (meat eaters) that eat other wild animals such as elephants, deer, bears, wild pigs, and frogs. Read the following sentence from page 17 aloud, emphasizing the word scarce: “In places where wild animals are becoming scarce, tigers prey heavily on cattle and sheep.”

Tell the students that scarce is the first word they will learn today, and explain that scarce means “difficult to get or find.” Point out that if something is scarce, there is very little of it. Explain that when wild animals become scarce, or difficult to find, tigers prey on farm animals such as cattle and sheep.

Display word card 40 ( WA6) and have the students say the word scarce.

2 Discuss Things That Can Become Scarce

Tell the students that sometimes water becomes scarce in an area. When water becomes scarce, there is very little of it.

Discuss as a class:

Q Why might water become scarce?

Click 1 on word card 40 (WA6) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA6

PROMPT 1: “Water might become scarce if . . .”

Ask the students to imagine that paper has become scarce in the classroom, so we have to conserve, or save, the paper we have. Ask:

 Q If paper became scarce, what might we do to conserve paper? [Click 2 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If paper became scarce, we might conserve it by . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word scarce and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE BLUNT

3 Introduce and Define Blunt

Show pages 34–35 of Big Cats and review that this section of the book is about cheetahs. Read the first two sentences on page 35 aloud, emphasizing the word blunted.

Tell the students that blunt is the next word they will learn today, and explain that blunt means “not sharp or pointed.” Tell the students that, unlike the sharp claws of tigers and lions, the cheetah’s claws are blunt, or not sharp or pointed.

Display word card 41 ( WA7) and have the students say the word blunt.

4 Discuss Blunt Pencils and Crayons

Explain that utensils and tools, like knives, axes, and scissors, can become blunt, or not sharp or pointed. Pencils and crayons can also become blunt.

Discuss as a class:

Q Why might a pencil or crayon become blunt?

Click 1 on word card 41 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “A pencil or crayon might become blunt because . . .”

5 Discuss Another Meaning of Blunt and Play “Was Tulip Blunt?”

Explain that, like other words they have learned, the word blunt has more than one meaning. Review that in Big Cats, blunt means “not sharp or pointed.” Explain that blunt can also mean “straightforward and honest in what you say.” Explain that when you are blunt, you say what you honestly think, even though it may hurt another person’s feelings.

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Was Tulip Blunt?” Explain that you will describe something that our friend Tulip said; then partners will discuss whether Tulip was blunt and explain why they think so.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the words sharp and pointed are antonyms of the word blunt. If you started an antonym chart, add the word blunt and its antonyms to it.

ELL Note

Show the students a blunt crayon or pencil and compare it to one that is sharp or pointed.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word moocher earlier and that a moocher is a “person who tries to get something without paying or working for it.”

Teacher Note

You might point out that the word widespread is a compound word that is made up of the smaller words wide and spread.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Tulip’s friend Daphne asked Tulip if she liked her new haircut. Tulip said, “I like the front, but the back is too short.”

Ask:

Q Was Tulip blunt? Why? [Click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [do/do not] think Tulip was blunt because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Tulip’s brother Greg asked Tulip if she would help him clean his room. Tulip didn’t really want to, but she said, “Sure, Greg, I’ll help you.”
- Tulip’s friend Sherry was always asking people for food at lunchtime. When she asked Tulip if she could have her apple, Tulip said, “No, Sherry, you cannot. And I think you should stop being a moocher.”

Point to the word blunt and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE WIDESPREAD

6 Introduce and Define Widespread

Show pages 38–39 of Big Cats and review that big cats have been hunted and trapped for sport and for their fur for many years. Read the following sentence from page 38 aloud, emphasizing the word widespread: “In the 1960’s and 1970’s, the demand for fur coats made from the skins of spotted cats led to widespread killing of the leopard, cheetah, and jaguar, along with smaller spotted cats such as the snow leopard and clouded leopard.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is widespread. Explain that widespread means “spread, scattered, or happening over a large area.” Explain that the killing of spotted cats was widespread, or scattered over many countries, during the 1960s and 1970s. It was not limited to one place.

Display word card 42 (WA8) and have the students say the word widespread.

7 Discuss Sports and Games with Widespread Popularity

Tell the students that baseball is a sport that has widespread popularity. Point out that people all over the world play and watch baseball.

Ask:

Q What other sports or games have widespread popularity? Why do you think that? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think [soccer] has widespread popularity because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss as a class:

Q If scientists discovered that a giant space rock was hurtling toward Earth, do you think it would cause widespread fear? Why?

Click 2 on word card 42 (WA8) to reveal the prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I [do/do not] think a space rock would cause widespread fear because . . .”

Point to the word widespread and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Learn About Big Cats

Review that Big Cats tells what cats such as lions, tigers, and leopards look like and how they live. Give the students a few moments to recall what they heard about big cats. Then ask:

Q What is one interesting thing you learned about big cats?

PROMPT: “One interesting thing I learned is that . . .”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Day 4

Review Scarce, Blunt, and Widespread

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA9)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student

Teacher Note

For an example of how to introduce the review activities, see Week 2, Day 2, Step 1.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words scarce, blunt, and widespread from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

Words Reviewed

scarce

Scarce means "difficult to get or find." If something is scarce, there is very little of it.

blunt

Blunt means "not sharp or pointed." Blunt also means "straightforward and honest in what you say."

widespread

Widespread means "spread, scattered, or happening over a large area."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA9). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Which of yesterday's words might you use in your writing? How might you use the word? [Pause; click 1 on WA9 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

scarce

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____. I might write . . .

WA9

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [scarce]. I might write . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Game “Which Word Am I?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Which Word Am I?” Point to the words on the daily review cards (WA9) and review that you will describe one of the words and then partners will discuss which word you are describing. Then you will ask a few pairs to share their thinking with the class.

Begin by reading the following description aloud:

- I’m how you would describe the end of a spoon.

Give the students a few moments to think about the clue. Then ask:

Q Which word am I? Why do you think that? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I think the word is [blunt] because . . .”

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following clues:

- I’m how you would describe storm damage that covers a large area. (widespread)
- I’m how you would describe water in a desert. (scarce)
- I’m how you would describe a person who says exactly what she means. (blunt)
- I’m an antonym of pointed and sharp. (blunt)
- I’m an antonym of plentiful and numerous. (scarce)
- I’m how you would describe rain that is falling across several counties. (widespread)

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of the game, see Week 2, Day 5, Step 2.

Teacher Note

You might continue the activity by having each pair of students choose a word, develop a “Which Word Am I?” clue for it, and then share the clue with the class.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA10)
- Ongoing review activity (WA11)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

Words Reviewed

disadvantage

A disadvantage is "something that causes a problem or makes it harder to succeed."

extend Extend means "lengthen or stretch out." Extend also means "offer or give."

sociable

Sociable means "friendly or liking to be with others."

stun

Stun means "make unconscious or unable to think clearly." Stun also means "shock or greatly surprise."

vary

Vary means "are different."

ABOUT ABBREVIATED ONGOING REVIEW ACTIVITIES

Parts of the Ongoing Review activity have been abbreviated. A Teacher Note refers you to a fully written-out example of the activity, if you wish to review it.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Teacher Note

For an example of how to review the words, see Week 1, Day 5, Step 1.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Game “Find Another Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Find Another Word.” Remind the students that you will show several stories with one or more words underlined. You will read each story aloud, and partners will decide which of the vocabulary words could replace the underlined part of the story.

Display the ongoing review activity (🎧 WA11) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined word.
 - Story 1: Alan is in a cooking contest. He has never cooked anything before, so he has a problem that will make it harder for him to succeed.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story and the underlined words. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word could replace the underlined words? Why? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [disadvantage] could replace problem that will make it harder for him to succeed because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place.

disadvantage	extend	sociable	stun	vary
--------------	--------	----------	------	------

STORY 1: Alan is in a cooking contest. He has never cooked anything before, so he has a disadvantage.

❶ ❷ ❸ ❹ ❺ ❻

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

WA11

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of the game, see Week 2, Day 2, Step 2.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the students may need to change the form of the word to complete the story by adding an ending such as -s, -ing, or -ed.

Teacher Note

Each sentence on the ongoing review activity (WA11) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

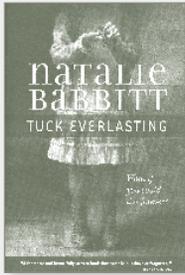

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the story with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following stories:

- Story 2: Bianca is on a weeklong ski vacation. On the last day of her trip, so much snow falls that she cannot leave her cabin. The storm lengthens her vacation by two days. (extends)
- Story 3: Meerkats are friendly animals. They live and work together to protect and feed the clan. They also take turns teaching and babysitting the youngest members of the clan. (sociable)
- Story 4: The hockey player was not able to think clearly when the puck hit his helmet. He skated slowly around the rink, trying to clear his head. (stunned)
- Story 5: The kinds of books Ana likes to read are different. She tries to pick out a book from a new genre each time she goes to the library. (vary)
- Story 6: Omar wants everyone in his class to attend his birthday party, so he gives an invitation to each of his classmates. (extends)

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing synonyms (review)
- Recognizing shades of meaning (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from the story.
- Students review synonyms.
- Students review shades of meaning.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students analyze why it is important to be respectful.
- Students build on one another's thinking during class and partner discussions.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 173 of the Assessment Resource Book.

(continues)

- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 2” answer sheet (IA1); see page 177 of the Assessment Resource Book. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.
- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 5, make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1); see page 180 of the Assessment Resource Book. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the following materials: “Week 8 Word Cards” (BLM2) and “Week 8 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Tranquil, Contemplate, and Meager

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words tranquil, contemplate, and meager
- Review synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

Words Taught

tranquil (p. 5)

Tranquil means “calm or peaceful.”

contemplate (p. 5)

Contemplate means “think about something seriously or look at something carefully.”

meager (p. 6)

Meager means “very small in amount or hardly enough.”

INTRODUCE AND USE TRANQUIL

1 Introduce and Define Tranquil and Review Synonyms

Briefly review pages 3–45 of Tuck Everlasting.

Remind the students that at the beginning of chapter 1 the author, Natalie Babbitt, describes the road that leads to Treegap. Read the following sentence from page 5 aloud, emphasizing the word tranquil: “It widened and seemed to pause, suggesting tranquil bovine picnics: slow chewing and thoughtful contemplation of the infinite.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is tranquil, and explain that tranquil means “calm or peaceful.” Point out that tranquil, calm, and peaceful are synonyms. Explain that the author tells us that the road to Treegap winds through tranquil, or calm and peaceful, countryside—countryside that would be a good place for a quiet picnic.

Display word card 43 (🌐 WA1) and have the students say the word tranquil.

2 Imagine a Tranquil Place

Explain that spending time in a tranquil, or calm and peaceful, place can be restful and relaxing, especially if you are feeling anxious or stressed. Give one or two examples of places that you think are tranquil.

Materials

- Tuck Everlasting
- Word card 43 (WA1)
- Word card 44 (WA2)
- Word card 45 (WA3)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of tranquil is tranquilo/a.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words tranquil, calm, and peaceful to it.

You might say:

"I like to visit the pond near my house because it is tranquil. Walking by the tranquil pond after a stressful day always makes me feel better. In the winter, I like to spend weekends in the mountains. I think that being surrounded by snow and the peace and quiet of the mountains is tranquil."

Ask the students to close their eyes and visualize a tranquil place. It might be a familiar place, such as a room at home, a place they have visited, or an imaginary place. Ask them to picture what the place looks like and what they are doing there. After a few moments, have them open their eyes.

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss the following questions.

Q What tranquil place did you picture? Why do you think it is tranquil?
[Pause; click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

tranquil

WA1

PROMPT 1: "The tranquil place I pictured is [my bedroom]. I think [my bedroom] is tranquil because . . ."

Point to the word tranquil and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE CONTEMPLATE

3 Introduce and Define Contemplate

Reread the following sentence on page 5 aloud, this time emphasizing the word contemplation: "It widened and seemed to pause, suggesting tranquil bovine picnics: slow chewing and thoughtful contemplation of the infinite."

Tell the students that contemplation is a form of the word contemplate, and that contemplate is the next word they will learn today. Explain that contemplate means “think about something seriously or look at something carefully.” Point out that tranquil places, like the calm and peaceful countryside around the road to Treegap, are good places to contemplate, or think seriously about something.

Display word card 44 (🌐 WA2) and have the students say the word contemplate.

4 Discuss Contemplating, or Thinking Seriously About, Things

Review that one meaning of contemplate is “think about something seriously.” Give examples of times when you have contemplated something, or thought seriously about what to do or say.

You might say:

“Before I bought a present for my best friend, I contemplated what to get for her—I thought seriously about it. My sister was upset with me for forgetting to water her plants. I contemplated what to say to her to let her know I was sorry.”

Ask:

Q When have you contemplated something? When have you thought seriously about what to do or say? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I contemplated . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

5 Discuss Contemplating, or Looking At, Things

Remind the students that contemplate can also mean “look at something carefully.” Explain that people sometimes contemplate, or look carefully at, something they think is especially beautiful, such as a painting, photograph, or view of the ocean. People also contemplate something they need to understand or remember, such as a map or a set of directions or instructions.

Show the cover of Tuck Everlasting. Tell the students that they will spend a few moments quietly contemplating the cover. Explain that as they contemplate the cover, you want them to pay attention not only to what they see on the cover but also to what they are thinking about as they look at the cover.

Show the front cover to the students for a few moments. Then ask:

Q What did you see as you contemplated the cover, or what did you think about? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “As I contemplated the book cover, I [saw/thought about] . . .”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of contemplate is contemplar.

After partners have finished talking, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word contemplate and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE MEAGER

6 Introduce and Define Meager

Tell the students that you will read more of the author’s description of the road leading to Treegap. Then read aloud from pages 5–6, beginning with “On the other side of the wood, the sense of easiness dissolved” on page 5 and ending with “And all at once the sun was uncomfortably hot, the dust oppressive, and the meager grass along its edges somewhat ragged and forlorn” on page 6. Emphasize the word meager when you come to it.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is meager, and explain that meager means “very small in amount or hardly enough.” Explain that the grass along the side of the road becomes meager, or very small in amount, as the road approaches the Fosters’ house. There is not much grass there at all.

Display word card 45 (🗨️ WA3) and have the students say the word meager.

7 Play “Is It Meager?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Is It Meager?” Explain that you will read a scenario; then partners will discuss whether or not the scenario describes a meager amount of something and explain why they think that. Remind the students that partners may not always agree and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Juan uses a bucket of water to water his garden.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Is a bucket of water a meager amount of water? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “A bucket of water [is/is not] a meager amount of water because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Bernadette ate a piece of toast for breakfast.

Q Is a piece of toast a meager amount of food? Why? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “A piece of toast [is/is not] a meager amount of food because . . .”

- The students set a goal of collecting 100 pounds of cans for recycling, but they collected only 25 pounds.

Q Is 25 pounds a meager amount of cans? Why? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “Twenty-five pounds [is/is not] a meager amount of cans because . . .”

Point to the word meager and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Draw and Discuss a Tranquil Place

Remind the students that at the beginning of Tuck Everlasting, Natalie Babbitt describes a tranquil, or calm and peaceful, part of the road that leads to Treegap. Review that the students imagined and discussed some tranquil places.

Ask:

Q What is a tranquil place that you or your partner imagined?

Ask the students to draw a picture of a tranquil place. Explain that the picture can be based on one of the places that they have discussed or a different place. Have the students share their pictures in pairs. Encourage them to use the following prompt as they talk to one another:

PROMPT: “In my tranquil place . . .”

Ask one or two volunteers to share their drawings and what they talked about with the group.

Day 2

Review Tranquil, Contemplate, and Meager

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words tranquil, contemplate, and meager from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

Words Reviewed

tranquil

Tranquil means "calm or peaceful."

contemplate

meager

Meager means "very small in amount or hardly enough."

ABOUT USING VOCABULARY WORDS IN SENTENCES

Using a vocabulary word in a sentence is an excellent way for the students to demonstrate their understanding of the word. However, creating a sentence that conveys a word's meaning—a sentence that goes beyond "He contemplates" or "It was meager"—can be challenging. In this lesson, the students are introduced to using words in sentences through an activity called "Create a Sentence." The students begin by completing sentences that you start. In subsequent lessons, these sentence starters will gradually disappear, and the students will develop their own sentences, supported by teacher questions as needed. For more information about "Create a Sentence" and other activities, see "Questions and Activities" in the Introduction.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Then use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q If you were writing a story about a peaceful grove of trees, which of these words might you use? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

meager

PROMPT 1: If I were writing a story about a peaceful grove of trees, I might use the word _____ because . . .

1 2 3 4

PROMPT 1: “If I were writing a story about a peaceful grove of trees, I might use the word [tranquil] because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do an activity called “Create a Sentence.” Explain that you will read aloud the beginning of a sentence that uses one of yesterday’s vocabulary words. Then they will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to finish the sentence. Explain that before partners do the activity together, they will practice as a class.

Point to the word tranquil on the daily review cards and review that tranquil means “calm or peaceful.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- After school each day, Michael walks to the tranquil . . .

Discuss as a class:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What tranquil, or calm and peaceful, place might Michael walk to after school each day?

Click 2 on the daily review cards (WA4) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “After school each day, Michael walks to the tranquil . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “After school each day, Michael walks to the tranquil [beach to watch the sunset]”? Why?

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to complete the sentence, remind them that a tranquil place is somewhere that a person might go to relax if she is feeling stressed or anxious. Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. For example, say “After school each day, Michael walks to the tranquil garden to relax” or “After school each day, Michael walks to the tranquil hillside to read his book.” Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

The purpose of the follow-up question is to encourage the students to think more deeply about the word and whether the volunteer’s sentence conveys the word’s meaning.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that people contemplate, or think seriously about, something when it is very important to them. Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. For example, say “Before writing in her grandmother’s birthday card, Sophia contemplated all of the reasons her grandmother is special” or “Before writing in her grandmother’s birthday card, Sophia contemplated all of the fun things they had done together.” Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that meager means “very small in amount or hardly enough.” Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. For example, say “Rico was disappointed to see the meager amount of coins in his coin jar” or “Rico was disappointed to see the meager amount of watermelon left in the cafeteria.” Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

3 Do the Activity in Pairs

Point to the word contemplate and explain that the next sentence uses the word contemplate. Review that contemplate means “think about something seriously or look at something carefully.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Before writing in her grandmother’s birthday card, Sophia contemplated . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

- Q How might you complete the sentence? What might Sophia contemplate? Why might she contemplate that? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

Have partners use the prompt to discuss how they might complete the sentence.

PROMPT 3: “Before writing in her grandmother’s birthday card, Sophia contemplated [the best way to say how special her grandmother is] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

- Q Does it make sense to say “Before writing in her grandmother’s birthday card, Sophia contemplated [all of her grandmother’s wonderful qualities]”? Why?

Point to the word meager and explain that the last sentence uses this word. Review that meager means “very small in amount or hardly enough.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Rico was disappointed to see the meager amount of . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

- Q How might you complete the sentence? What did Rico see that was meager? [Pause; click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Have partners discuss how they might complete the sentence.

PROMPT 4: “Rico was disappointed to see the meager amount of . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

- Q Does it make sense to say “Rico was disappointed to see the meager amount of [lemons on his lemon tree]”? Why?

Introduce Grimace, Stroll, and Battered

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words grimace, stroll, and battered
- Review shades of meaning
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act respectfully toward their partners

Words Taught

grimace (p. 14)

Grimace means “twist your face.” People usually grimace because they are in pain or because they do not like something.

stroll (p. 17)

Stroll means “walk in a slow, relaxed way.”

battered (p. 25)

When something is battered, it is worn down and damaged from age and use.

Materials

- Tuck Everlasting
- Word card 46 (WA5)
- Word card 47 (WA6)
- Word card 48 (WA7)

INTRODUCE AND USE GRIMACE

1 Introduce and Define Grimace

Turn to page 14 of Tuck Everlasting and remind the students that, in this part of the story, Winnie is tossing pebbles through a cloud of gnats toward a toad. Read the following sentence from the top of page 14 aloud, emphasizing the word grimace: “The gnats were too frantic to notice these intrusions, however, and since every pebble missed its final mark, the toad continued to squat and grimace without so much as a twitch.”

Tell the students that grimace is the first word they will learn today, and explain that grimace means “twist your face.” Explain that in the story a toad seems to grimace, or twist its face, but that we usually use the word grimace to talk about something a person might do. Explain that people usually grimace, or twist their faces, because they are in pain or because they do not like something.

Display word card 46 (WA5) and have the students say the word grimace.

Ask the students to watch as you act out grimacing because you are in pain. Then grimace as if you are in pain. Discuss as a class:

Q What did you see me do when I grimaced?

Click ❶ on word card 46 (WA5) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

grimace

PROMPT 1: When you grimaced, you . . .

❶ ❷

WA5

PROMPT 1: “When you grimaced, you . . .”

Ask the students to act out grimacing.

❷ Play “Would You Grimace?”

Review that grimace means “twist your face,” and that people usually grimace because they are in pain or because they do not like something. Tell the students that partners are going to play a game called “Would You Grimace?” Explain that you are going to describe an imaginary situation; then partners will discuss whether they would grimace in that situation and explain why.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Your dad picks you up from school in a shiny new car.

Ask:

 Q Would you grimace if your dad picked you up from school in a shiny new car? Why? [Click ❷ on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] grimace because . . .”

Repeat the procedure to discuss one or more of the remaining scenarios.

- Your dog runs into the house. She smells like she was sprayed by a skunk.
- While you are helping your neighbor move a heavy wooden desk, you accidentally set it down on your foot.
- Your sister surprises you by making you pancakes for breakfast.

Point to the word grimace and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE STROLL

3 Introduce and Define Stroll and Review Shades of Meaning

Turn to page 17 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, Winnie meets the man in the yellow suit for the first time. Read the first sentence on page 17 aloud, emphasizing the word strolling.

Tell the students that stroll is the next word they will learn today. Explain that stroll means about the same thing as walk, with this important difference—if you are strolling, you are not walking at a normal speed. You are walking in a slow, relaxed way.

Display word card 47 (🗉 WA6) and have the students say the word stroll. Ask the students to watch as you stroll. Then act out strolling. (You might pretend to be window-shopping as you stroll or casually enjoying the scenery—humming to yourself or whistling as you walk.) Then discuss as a class:

Q What did you see me doing when I strolled?

Click ❶ on word card 47 (WA6) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “When you strolled, you . . .”

4 Play “Is Tulip Strolling?”

Remind the students that Tulip is an imaginary girl in fifth grade. Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Is Tulip Strolling?” Explain that you will read a scenario that describes something Tulip is doing; then partners will decide whether Tulip is strolling or not strolling and explain why they think that.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Tulip is late for school, so she races to the bus stop.

Ask:

Q Is Tulip strolling? Why do you think that? [Click ❶ on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Tulip [is/is not] strolling because . . .”

Repeat the procedure to have partners discuss one or both of the following scenarios:

- Tulip and her dad are taking a slow walk in their favorite park. They love walking here because it is so tranquil.
- Tulip notices that her friends are playing her favorite game on the other side of the field. She cannot wait to join them, so she hurries over.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on recognizing shades of meaning, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard shades of meaning activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

Teacher Note

If you started a “Just the Right Word” chart, add the word stroll with its definition: “walk in a slow, relaxed way.”

Point to the word stroll and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE BATTERED

5 Introduce and Define Battered

Turn to page 25 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, Winnie first notices Jesse Tuck sitting by the spring. Read the following sentence from page 25 aloud, emphasizing the word battered: “He was thin and sunburned, this wonderful boy, with a thick mop of curly brown hair, and he wore his battered trousers and loose, grubby shirt with as much self-assurance as if they were silk and satin.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is battered. Explain that when something is battered, it is worn down and damaged from age and use. Point out that Jesse’s trousers might look battered, or worn down and damaged, because he has worn them very often for a long time.

Display word card 48 (🗨️ WA7) and have the students say the word battered.

6 Imagine Things That Look Battered

Review that when something looks battered, it looks worn down and damaged because it is old and has been used a lot. Give an example of something that you have seen that looked battered.

You might say:

“My mother has a rocking chair that is battered. She has had the rocking chair since I was a baby, and she also used it while my younger brother and sister were babies. She still uses it now when she watches my nephew. The fabric of the chair looks battered because it is faded, and there are rips here and there. The fabric on the back and seat of the chair is very thin.”

Have the students close their eyes and imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- You are in your front yard. A battered car drives by.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What does the battered car look like? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “The battered [car] . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss one or both of the following scenarios:

- Your grandfather shows you a battered stuffed animal from his childhood.

Q What does the battered stuffed animal look like? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

- Your cousin's lucky basketball shoes are quite battered.

Q What do the battered shoes look like? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Point to the word battered and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSION

Discuss Vivid Language

Explain that when an author uses words that help readers create pictures in their minds, we say the author is using “vivid language.” Explain that vivid means “sharp and clear” and that vivid language “paints” a sharp, clear mental picture for the reader. Tell the students that you will read a paragraph from Tuck Everlasting in which the author describes the wood near Winnie’s home. Explain that you want them to close their eyes and listen for vivid language that helps them create pictures of the wood in their minds. Then read the following paragraph aloud twice:

p. 24 “For the wood was full of light, entirely different from the light she was used to. It was green and amber and alive, quivering in splotches on the padded ground, fanning into sturdy stripes between the tree trunks. There were little flowers she did not recognize, white and palest blue; and endless, tangled vines; and here and there a fallen log, half rotted but soft with patches of sweet green-velvet moss.”

Discuss as a class:

Q What vivid language did you hear? What language helped you create a picture of the scene in your mind?

If necessary, tell the students that vivid language such as “full of light,” “green and amber and alive,” “quivering in splotches,” “white and palest blue,” and “endless, tangled vines,” helps readers picture the scene.

Day 4

Review Grimace, Stroll, and Battered

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the "Week 8 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words grimace, stroll, and battered from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act respectfully toward their partners

Words Reviewed

grimace

Grimace means "twist your face." People usually grimace because they are in pain or because they do not like something.

stroll

battered

When something is battered, it is worn down and damaged from age and use.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Which of these words might you use when you are talking with a friend or family member? How might you use the word or words?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA8) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA8

grimace stroll battered

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____ when I am talking with _____. I might say . . .

1 2 3 4

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [stroll] when I am talking with [my sister]. I might say . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that you will tell the students the beginning of a sentence that uses one of the words. Then they will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to finish the sentence. Explain that before partners do the activity together, they will practice as a class.

Point to the word grimace on the daily review cards. Review that grimace means “twist your face,” and that people usually grimace because they are in pain or because they do not like something. Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Kira grimaced because . . .

Discuss as a class:

Q How might you complete the sentence? Why might Kira grimace?

Click 2 to reveal the prompt and have a few volunteers use it to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “Kira grimaced because . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “Kira grimaced because [she bumped her head on the car door]”? Why?

3 Do the Activity in Pairs

Point to the word stroll on the daily review cards, and explain that the next sentence uses the word stroll. Review that stroll means “walk in a slow, relaxed way.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- On a warm summer evening, Jaylon strolled . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How would you complete the sentence? Where might Jaylon stroll on a warm summer evening? [Pause; click 3 on WA8 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “On a warm summer evening, Jaylon strolled . . .”

Teacher Note

If the students are struggling, remind them that people grimace when they are in pain or because they do not like something. Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. (For example, say “Kira grimaced because the soup tasted horrible” or “Kira grimaced because she stubbed her toe on the sidewalk.”) Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

The purpose of the follow-up question is to encourage the students to think more deeply about the word and whether the volunteer’s sentence conveys the word’s meaning.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that when people stroll, they walk slowly because they are relaxed. Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. For example, say “On a warm summer evening, Jaylon strolled along the beach” or “On a warm summer evening, Jaylon strolled down a path in the community garden.” Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reminding them that things that are battered are worn down and damaged from age and use. Then repeat the questions. If they continue to struggle, provide examples of ways the sentence might be completed. For example, say “Randi exclaimed, ‘Wow, that battered jacket is really old!’” or “Randi exclaimed, ‘Wow, that battered jacket has a lot of holes in it!’” Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 7 and 8, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 8 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “On a warm summer evening, Jaylon strolled [to the park]”? Why?

Point to the word battered and explain that the last sentence uses this word. Review that when something is battered, it is worn down and damaged from age and use. Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Randi exclaimed, “Wow, that battered jacket . . .”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What might Randi say about the battered jacket? [Pause; click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “Randi exclaimed, ‘Wow, that battered jacket . . .’”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “Randi exclaimed, ‘Wow, that battered jacket [needs to be replaced!]’”? Why?

Explore Similes in Tuck Everlasting

Turn to page 29 in Tuck Everlasting. Remind the students that, in this part of the story, Winnie is trying to convince Jesse to let her drink from the spring. Tell the students that Winnie tells Jesse that she is “about dry as dust.” Explain that by writing that Winnie is as dry as dust, the author—Natalie Babbitt—helps us imagine how thirsty Winnie must be.

Tell the students that “dry as dust” is a simile. Explain that a simile is a “comparison of one thing to another, using the word like, as, or than.” Tell the students that good writers like Natalie Babbitt use similes to help readers imagine what they are describing.

Turn to page 32. Review that in this part of the story, Winnie is on a horse, being led away by the Tucks. Explain that the author describes how Winnie feels as she rides, and she compares Winnie’s backbone to something. Tell the students that as you read from this part of the book, you want the students to listen for what Winnie’s backbone is compared to. Then read the following sentence from page 32 aloud twice: “She clung to the saddle and gave herself up to the astonishing fact that, though her heart was pounding and her backbone felt like a pipe full of cold running water, her head was fiercely calm.” Ask:

Q What is Winnie’s backbone compared to in the sentence you just heard?

Q How does comparing Winnie’s backbone to a pipe full of cold running water help you imagine how Winnie feels?

Read and discuss the following simile, using the same procedure:

p. 44 “Jesse sang funny old songs in a loud voice and swung like a monkey from the branches of trees, showing off shamelessly for Winnie, calling to her, ‘Hey, Winnie Foster, watch me!’ and ‘Look what I can do!’”

Ongoing Review

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act respectfully toward their partners

Words Reviewed

blunt

devour

dignified

grimace

Grimace means “twist your face.” People usually grimace because they are in pain or because they do not like something.

meager

Meager means “very small in amount or hardly enough.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Activity “What Do You Think About?”

Tell the students that partners will do an activity called “What Do You Think About?” Point to the ongoing review cards (WA9) and explain that

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 2” answer sheet (IA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record” sheet (SR1)
- “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR1)
- (Optional) Class set of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1)

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to make associations, support them by asking questions such as “Who do you know who speaks bluntly?” “When have you been blunt?” “What things can be blunt?” and “What do you see in our classroom or have at home that is blunt?”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to make associations, call for the students’ attention and think aloud about what comes into your mind when you hear the word devour. For example, close your eyes and say “When I hear the word devour, I picture my dog devouring his food. It seems like the bowl is empty within seconds. I also think about a trip I took to the zoo. I saw a whale devour a whole bucket of fish.”

If the students continue to struggle, support them by asking questions such as “When have you seen an animal or person devour something?” “When might you feel like you could devour a meal?” and “How might you feel after devouring a meal?”

you want the students to notice what they think about, or what pictures come into their minds, when they hear each of the words.

Tell the students that before they do the activity in pairs, they will practice as a class. Point to and pronounce the word blunt, and explain that they will think about the word blunt first.

Model the activity by closing your eyes and thinking aloud about what comes into your mind when you hear the word blunt.

You might say:

“When I hear the word blunt, I think of my dad because he says what he thinks even if it hurts other people’s feelings. I also think of my coffee table because the edge is blunt, or not sharp.”

Have the students close their eyes; then ask:

Q What do you think about when you hear the word blunt? Why?

Give the students a few moments to think about the questions; then have them open their eyes. Click 1 to reveal the prompt. Have two or three volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

grimace meager

PROMPT 1: When I hear the word _____, I think of _____ because . . .

WA9

PROMPT 1: “When I hear the word [blunt], I think of [my pencil] because . . .”

3 Do the Activity in Pairs

Tell the students that they will now do the activity in pairs. Point to and pronounce the word devour. Explain that the students will notice what they think about when they hear the word devour; then partners will share their thinking with each other.

Have the students close their eyes. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What do you think about when you hear the word devour? Why? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Point to prompt 1 on WA9.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “When I hear the word [devour], I think of [a pie-eating contest] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining words. If the students struggle with a word, model thinking aloud about associations you make to the word, or ask supporting questions like those in the notes.

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the associations the students are making show that they understand the words' meanings?
- Are they showing a growing interest in learning and using new words?

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 173 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice through an activity modeled on “Does That Make Sense?” (see Week 1, Day 5, Step 2). For example, if the students are struggling with the word grimace, play “Does That Make Sense?” by using the word (correctly or incorrectly) and asking the students if the word grimace makes sense in the sentence. (You might use the sentence “Sigmund grimaced when his favorite song came on the radio.”)

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

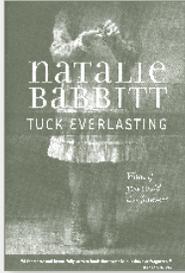

Before continuing with the week 9 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students' understanding of words taught in Weeks 5–8 by using the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 2” answer sheet (IA1) on page 177 of the Assessment Resource Book. For instructions on administering this assessment, see “Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment” on page 174 of the Assessment Resource Book.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate her understanding of words taught in Weeks 5–8 using the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see “Completing the Student Self-assessment” on page 178 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Word-learning Strategy

- Recognizing words with multiple meanings (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from the story.
- Students review words with multiple meanings.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students analyze why it is important to be respectful.
- Students build on one another's thinking during class and partner discussions.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 1, review the more strategy practice activity “Discuss the Multiple Meanings of Scour” on page 208.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 9 Word Cards” (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Day 1

Introduce Scour, Helter-skelter, and Loll

Materials

- Tuck Everlasting
- Word card 49 (WA1)
- Word card 50 (WA2)
- Word card 51 (WA3)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words scour, helter-skelter, and loll
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

Words Taught

scour (p. 50)

Scour means “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material.” Scour also means “search an area very carefully in order to find something.”

helter-skelter (p. 51)

If things are helter-skelter, they are lying about in a disorganized, confusing, or careless way.

loll (p. 51)

Loll means “sit or stand in a relaxed or lazy way.”

INTRODUCE AND USE SCOUR

1 Introduce and Define Scour

Briefly review pages 46–75 of Tuck Everlasting.

Turn to page 50 and review that in this part of the story, the author describes how orderly Winnie's life was at home. Read the following sentence from page 50 aloud, emphasizing the word scoured: “Under the pitiless double assaults of her mother and grandmother, the cottage where she lived was always squeaking clean, mopped and swept and scoured into limp submission.”

Tell the students that scour is the first word they will learn today, and explain that scour means “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material.” Explain that Winnie's mother and grandmother scoured, or thoroughly cleaned, their cottage, so that there was not a speck of dirt anywhere.

Display word card 49 (WA1) and have the students say the word scour.

2 Discuss Things the Students Might Scour

Explain that when people scour something, they usually scrub it or rub it because it is very dirty or badly stained. People often use a strong soap or cleanser and something such as steel wool or a stiff brush when they scour. Give one or two examples of things you scour and act out what you look like as you scour.

You might say:

"I sometimes have to scour my muffin pan after I've baked muffins to remove the baked-on batter. I scour the kitchen sink after I've cooked a meal, to make sure it is clean."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What is something you have scoured or have seen someone scour? Why were you or the person scouring it? [Pause; click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

scour

PROMPT 1: I scoured _____ because . . .

1 2 3 4

WA1

PROMPT 1: "I scoured [my dog's bowl] because . . ."

Q What did you use to scour [your dog's bowl]?

Click 2 on word card 49 (WA1) to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 2: "To scour [my dog's bowl], I used . . ."

3 Discuss Another Meaning of Scour

Remind the students that some words have more than one meaning and that those meanings are often very different. Explain that scour can also mean “search an area very carefully in order to find something.” Give a few examples of times when you have scoured a place to find something.

You might say:

“I lost my keys this morning and scoured my entire house—I looked everywhere—before I found them buried in the couch. When my son’s hamster escaped from its cage, we scoured his room, or carefully searched every nook and cranny, until we found the hamster.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss the questions that follow. Ask the students to be ready to share their partners’ thinking with the class.

Q When have you scoured your house, your room, or another place to look for something? Why? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I scoured [the library] because . . .”

After partners have talked, click 4 to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their partners’ thinking with the class.

PROMPT 4: “[Isabel] said she scoured [the library] because . . .”

Point to the word scour and review the pronunciation and meanings of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE HELTER-SKELTER

4 Introduce and Define Helter-skelter

Turn to page 51 of Tuck Everlasting and remind the students that in this part of the story, the author describes the inside of the Tucks’ house. Read the first full paragraph on page 51 aloud, beginning with “The parlor came next . . .,” and emphasizing the word helter-skelter when you come to it.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is helter-skelter. Explain that if things are helter-skelter, they are lying about in a disorganized, confusing, or careless way. Explain that the furniture in the Tucks’ parlor was helter-skelter—it had been placed here, there, and everywhere in a disorganized, confusing, or careless way. Review that the sofa was alone in the middle of the room, the table was off in one corner, and three armchairs and a rocking chair were placed aimlessly around the room.

Display word card 50 (WA2) and have the students say the word helter-skelter.

5 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Imagine That!” Remind them that you will describe a scene and ask them to picture the scene in their minds. Then partners will use the word helter-skelter to talk about what they pictured.

Have the students close their eyes and imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- You walk into your friend’s bedroom and notice that things are helter-skelter.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is helter-skelter in your friend’s room? What does the room look like? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[Clothes] are helter-skelter in the room. The [clothes] are . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scene:

- After a busy day, Mr. Umland’s classroom has been left with everything helter-skelter.

Q What is helter-skelter in Mr. Umland’s classroom? What does the classroom look like? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Point to the word helter-skelter and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE LOLL

6 Introduce and Define Loll

Return to page 51 of Tuck Everlasting and tell the students that you are going to reread one of the sentences from the paragraph that describes the furniture in the Tucks’ parlor. Then read the following sentence from page 51 aloud, emphasizing the word loll: “An ancient green-plush sofa lolled alone in the center, like yet another mossy fallen log, facing a soot-streaked fireplace still deep in last winter’s ashes.”

Tell the students that loll is the last word they will learn today, and explain that loll means “sit or stand in a relaxed or lazy way.” Explain that the Tucks’ old green sofa appeared to loll, or sit in a relaxed or lazy way, in the middle of the parlor.

Display word card 51 (WA3) and have the students say the word loll.

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of the activity, see Week 1, Day 1, Step 10.

7 Act Out and Discuss Lolling

Explain that we usually use the word loll to talk about the way a person—not an object—sits or stands. Ask the students to watch as you model lolling in a chair. Then ask:

Q What did you see me do when I lolled in the chair?

Click 1 on word card 51 (WA3) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “When you lolled in the chair, you . . .”

Ask a volunteer to act out lolling against the wall of the classroom. Then ask:

 Q What did you see [Sheila] do when she lolled against the wall? [Click 2 on WA3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “When [Sheila] lolled against the wall, she . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that we often loll when we are feeling very relaxed or tired. Ask:

 Q Where at home do you like to loll? What do you do when you loll? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “At home, I like to loll [on my bed]. When I loll, I . . .”

Point to the word loll and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss the Multiple Meanings of Scour

Review that scour can mean “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material” or “search an area very carefully in order to find something.”

Tell the students that when they hear or read a word like scour that has more than one meaning, they can usually figure out the correct meaning by thinking about how the word is used. Explain that you will read a sentence that includes the word scour; then the students will decide whether scour means “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material” or “search an area very carefully in order to find something.” Read the following sentence aloud twice:

- When Paolo’s cat ran away, Paolo and his family scoured the neighborhood until they found him.

Ask:

Q In the sentence, does scour mean “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material” or “search an area very carefully in order to find something”? Why?

PROMPT: “I think scour means [‘search an area very carefully in order to find something’] because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following sentences:

- Ellen scoured the lasagna dish until all of the burned cheese was gone.
- When Jordan lost his wedding ring, he scoured every room in his house to find it.

Review Scour, Helter-skelter, and Loll

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words scour, helter-skelter, and loll from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking

Words Reviewed

scour

Scour means “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material.” Scour also means “search an area very carefully in order to find something.”

helter-skelter

If things are helter-skelter, they are lying about in a disorganized, confusing, or careless way.

loll

Loll means “sit or stand in a relaxed or lazy way.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q If a friend asked you to help her scour her kitchen floor, would you grimace? Why?

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word grimace earlier and that grimace means “twist your face.” Review that people usually grimace because they are in pain or because they do not like something.

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA4) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA4

scour helter-skelter loll

PROMPT 1: If a friend asked me to help her scour her kitchen floor, I [would/would not] grimace because . . .

1 2 3 4

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word contemplate earlier and that contemplate means “think about something seriously or look at something carefully.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word pandemonium earlier and that pandemonium is “chaos or confusion.”

PROMPT 1: “If a friend asked me to help her scour her kitchen floor, I [would/would not] grimace because . . .”

Using the same procedure, discuss the following question:

Q If the books and papers inside your desk were helter-skelter, would you contemplate straightening up your desk? Why?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 2: “If the books and papers inside my desk were helter-skelter, I [would/would not] contemplate straightening up my desk because . . .”

Q If there were pandemonium on your street, would you loll in your front yard? Why?

Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 3: “If there were pandemonium on my street, I [would/would not] loll in my front yard because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Explain that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that you will tell the students the beginning of a sentence that uses one of the words. Then they will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to finish the sentence.

Point to the word scour on the daily review cards (WA4) and review that scour means “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material.” Review that scour also means “search an area very carefully in order to find something.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Gloria scoured her bicycle after . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? Why might Gloria have to scour her bicycle? [Pause; click 4 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “Gloria scoured her bicycle after . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their sentences.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “Gloria scoured her bicycle after [she rode it through a big mud puddle]”? Why?

3 Have the Students Create Their Own Sentences

Point to the word helter-skelter on the daily review cards (WA4), and explain that the next sentence will use the word helter-skelter. Tell the students that, instead of finishing a sentence you start, you want partners to work together to make up a sentence of their own that uses the word helter-skelter.

Review that if things are helter-skelter they are lying about in a disorganized, confusing, or careless way. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q *How might you use the word helter-skelter in a sentence? For example, what things in a kitchen or living room might be helter-skelter, or why might a person leave his home looking helter-skelter?* [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q *Does it make sense to say [“The woman left her home looking helter-skelter when she got a call from her daughter’s school”]? Why?*

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reviewing that scour means “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material.” Then ask questions such as “Why might a person have to thoroughly clean her bicycle? What might have happened that made the bicycle so dirty that it needed to be scoured?” Then reread the sentence starter and repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What items in a desk drawer, cabinet, or closet or on a bookshelf might be helter-skelter?” and “Why might someone have to hurry out of her home, leaving it looking helter-skelter?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “The markers were thrown back into the container helter-skelter because . . .” or “The woman left her home looking helter-skelter when she got a call from . . .” Then repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

If a pair’s sentence does not convey the meaning of helter-skelter, help the students develop the sentence further by asking follow-up questions.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by using loll in a sentence or by asking questions such as “Where might a person loll [at home/at a friend’s house/at school]?” If they continue to struggle, provide sentence starters such as “After recess, Chau was exhausted, so he lolled . . .” or “It was too hot to play outside, so Sofia lolled . . .”

Point to the word loll and explain that the last sentence will use this word. Review that loll means “sit or stand in a relaxed or lazy way.” Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word loll in a sentence? For example, where might someone feel comfortable lolling, or when might someone want to loll? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have two or three pairs share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“The parents lolled on the beach while their children played”]? Why?

Day 3

Introduce Luxurious, Thrust, and Hunch

Materials

- Tuck Everlasting
- Word card 52 (WA5)
- Word card 53 (WA6)
- Word card 54 (WA7)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words luxurious, thrust, and hunch
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking

Words Taught

luxurious (p. 56)

Luxurious means “very comfortable or pleasurable.”

thrust (p. 62)

Thrust means “push or shove suddenly or with force.”

hunch (p. 65)

Hunch means “bend your body into an arch or hump.” A hunch is a “feeling, not based on facts, that something will happen or is true.”

INTRODUCE AND USE LUXURIOUS

1 Introduce and Define Luxurious

Turn to page 56 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, Winnie is eating a meal at the Tucks’ home for the first time. Read the following sentences on page 56 aloud, emphasizing the word luxurious: “There were no napkins. It was all right, then, to lick the maple syrup from your fingers. Winnie was never allowed to do such a thing at home, but she had always thought it would be the easiest way. And suddenly the meal seemed luxurious.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is luxurious, and explain that luxurious means “very comfortable or pleasurable.” Explain that Winnie feels that eating with the Tucks is luxurious, or very comfortable or pleasurable, because she is allowed to behave in ways that she is not able to at home. For example, she can lick maple syrup from her fingers.

Display word card 52 (🗉 WA5) and have the students say the word luxurious.

2 Imagine a Luxurious Game Room

Review that in the story the author, Natalie Babbitt, uses the word luxurious to describe an experience that Winnie is having that is very comfortable or pleasurable. Explain that we more often use the word luxurious to describe things—like furniture or clothing or places like houses or rooms—that are very comfortable or pleasurable. Give one or two examples of objects or places that you think are luxurious.

You might say:

“I have a pair of gloves that are luxurious. They are extremely soft, warm, and comfortable. I saw a house on TV that seemed luxurious. The couches and beds looked cozy, the backyard appeared to be very tranquil, and there were beautiful decorations on the wall.”

Ask the students to close their eyes and imagine that they are visiting a house that has a luxurious game room. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What do you see in the luxurious game room? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: In the luxurious game room, I see . . .

PROMPT 1: “In the luxurious game room, I see . . .”

Q What does the luxurious chair look like? What does it feel like? [Pause.]
Open your eyes. [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The luxurious chair [looks/feels] . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word luxurious and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE THRUST

3 Introduce and Define Thrust

Turn to page 62 of Tuck Everlasting. Review that in this part of the story, Tuck and Winnie are in a rowboat on the pond, and Tuck is explaining to Winnie why she must not drink from the spring. Read the following sentence from the last paragraph on page 62 aloud, emphasizing the word thrust: “The rowboat had drifted at last to the end of the pond, but now its bow bumped into the rotting branches of a fallen tree that thrust thick fingers into the water.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is thrust, and explain that thrust means “push or shove suddenly or with force.” Explain that the author is “painting a picture” with words when she writes that it seemed as if the fallen tree had thrust, or shoved with sudden force, its branches like fingers into the water. Ask the students to imagine how the branches might have looked thrust, or pushed, like fingers through the surface of the pond.

Display word card 53 (WA6) and have the students say the word thrust.

4 Discuss Thrusting Things

Review that when you thrust something, you push or shove it suddenly or with force. For example, if you want to dig into hard ground with a shovel, you do not gently push the shovel into the ground. Instead, you thrust the shovel into the ground, or push it with force. Ask a volunteer to act out thrusting a shovel into the ground.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the past tense of thrust is thrust.

Explain that sometimes people thrust open doors, or open doors suddenly or with force. Act out thrusting open a door, or invite a volunteer to act it out. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Why might someone thrust open a door? [Pause; click ① on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Someone might thrust open a door because . . .”

Explain that people sometimes thrust, or suddenly shove, things like notes or slips of paper into their pockets. Act out thrusting a note into your pocket or invite a volunteer to act it out. Then discuss as a class:

Q Why might a person thrust a note or a slip of paper into his or her pocket?

Click ② on word card 53 (WA6) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “A person might thrust a note or a slip of paper into his or her pocket because . . .”

Point to the word thrust and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE HUNCH

5 Introduce and Define Hunch

Turn to pages 64–65 of Tuck Everlasting. Remind the students that in this part of the story, Tuck has explained to Winnie what might happen if anyone else found out about the spring. Read the following sentence from pages 64–65 aloud, emphasizing the word hunched: “Winnie, struggling with the anguish of all these things, could only sit hunched and numb, the sound of the water rolling in her ears.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is hunch, and explain that hunch means “bend your body into an arch or hump.” Explain that people often hunch when they are tired or upset. Tell the students that Winnie hunches, or bends her body into an arch or hump, because she is upset about what Tuck has told her. Act out how Winnie might have looked hunched in the rowboat.

Display word card 54 (WA7) and have the students say the word hunch.

6 Act Out and Discuss Hunching

Ask the students to close their eyes. Tell them to imagine that it is the end of the day and that they are very tired. Explain that they are so tired that they are hunching, or bending their bodies into arches or humps. Have them open their eyes; then have a volunteer act out hunching. Discuss as a class:

Q What did you notice [Blake] doing when he hunched?

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “Why might a firefighter or police officer thrust open a door?” “Why might someone thrust open our classroom door?” and “Why might you thrust open a door at home?”

Click ❶ on word card 54 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt and have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking.

PROMPT 1: “When [Blake] hunched, he . . .”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you hunched or seen someone hunch? [Pause; click ❷ on WA7 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I hunched when . . .” or “I saw [my mom] hunch when . . .”

7 Discuss Another Meaning of Hunch

Review that many words have more than one meaning and that the meanings are often very different. Point to the word hunch and remind the students that in the story hunch means “bend your body into an arch or hump.” Tell the students that the word hunch has another meaning. Explain that a hunch is a “feeling, not based on facts, that something will happen or is true.” Give examples of times when you or someone you know has had a hunch about something.

You might say:

“I have a hunch that my daughter’s soccer team will win their big game this weekend. I’m not sure why, but it is a feeling that I have. The other day, my dad called because he had a hunch that I might need to talk. He did not have a reason to think that, but he was right—I had had a bad day and I was so happy he called.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you had a hunch, or a feeling, about something? [Pause; click ❸ to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I had a hunch that . . .”

Point to the word hunch and review the pronunciation and meanings of the word.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you had a feeling that a friend or family member had something important to tell you?” or “When have you had a hunch, or feeling, that something exciting might happen?”

Review Luxurious, Thrust, and Hunch

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words luxurious, thrust, and hunch from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act respectfully toward their partners

Words Reviewed

luxurious

Luxurious means “very comfortable or pleasurable.”

thrust

hunch

Hunch means “bend your body into an arch or hump.” A hunch is a “feeling, not based on facts, that something will happen or is true.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which of yesterday’s words do you think was interesting to talk about? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

luxurious thrust hunch

PROMPT 1: I think the word _____ was interesting to talk about because . . .

WA8

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [luxurious] was interesting to talk about because . . .”

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Remind them that you will tell the students the beginning of a sentence that uses one of the vocabulary words. Then they will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to finish the sentence.

Point to the word luxurious and review that luxurious means “very comfortable or pleasurable.” Then read the following sentence starter aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Sally felt lucky to be wearing such a luxurious . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you complete the sentence? What might a person wear that is luxurious? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Sally felt lucky to be wearing such a luxurious . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say “Sally felt lucky to be wearing such a luxurious [pair of boots]”? Why?

3 Have the Students Create Their Own Sentences

Point to the word thrust on the daily review cards (WA8), and explain that the next sentence will use the word thrust. Tell the students that instead of finishing a sentence you start, you want partners to work together to make up a sentence of their own that uses the word thrust.

Review that thrust means “push or shove suddenly or with force.” Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word thrust in a sentence? For example, what is an object that a person might thrust? Why would they thrust it? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

When most pairs have finished talking, have a few volunteers share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“I had to thrust the spoon into the ice cream”]? Why?

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by reviewing the meaning of luxurious and then asking questions such as “What type of clothing might be luxurious?” “What jewelry might Sally consider luxurious?” and “What might you wear that you consider luxurious?”

ELPS 1.A.ii
Step 3 and second Teacher Note on p. 218

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you thrust a door open?” If they continue to struggle, provide sentence starters such as “Gordon had to thrust his fork . . .” or “I thrust my hands into my pockets when . . .”

Teacher Note

If a pair’s sentence does not convey the meaning of thrust (for example, “I had to thrust” or “She thrusts”), point out that the sentence does not make the meaning of thrust clear, and help the students develop the sentence further by asking follow-up questions such as “What did you have to thrust? Why?” or “What did she thrust?”

Point to the word hunch and explain that the last sentence will use this word. Review that hunch means “bend your body into an arch or hump” or a “feeling, not based on facts, that something will happen or is true.” Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word hunch in a sentence? For example, when do people hunch their bodies, or when might someone have a hunch? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

When most pairs have finished talking, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“I hunched my body when my baseball team lost the game”]? Why?

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you hunched your body because you were tired or upset?” and “What might you do if you have a hunch that your friend has a surprise for you?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “I hunched my body when . . .” or “Peter had a hunch that . . .” Then repeat the questions.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Ongoing Review

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act respectfully toward their partners

Words Reviewed

battered

When something is battered, it is worn down and damaged from age and use.

helter-skelter

If things are helter-skelter, they are lying about in a disorganized, confusing, or careless way.

luxurious

scarce

Scarce means “difficult to get or find.” If something is scarce, there is very little of it.

thunderous

Thunderous means “making a loud, rumbling noise like thunder.”

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- Ongoing review activity (WA10)

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of the game, see Week 3, Day 2, Step 2.

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA10) has a corresponding number: the first story is ①; the second story is ②; the third story is ③; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the story with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗨️ WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Finish the Story”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Finish the Story.” Remind them that you will tell them a story, leaving off the last word; partners will then decide which vocabulary word will make the best ending for the story and explain why they think so.

Display the ongoing review activity (🗨️ WA10) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ① to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud twice, slowly and clearly.
 - Story 1: Julius had to cut his fishing trip short because he was not catching anything. The fish were _____.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which of these words makes the best ending for the story? Why do you think that? [Click ① again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I think [scarce] makes the best ending because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two pairs use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion of the story by clicking ① a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place. Then reread the story with the word scarce at the end.

Day 1

Introduce Contented, Uneasy, and Soothe

Materials

- Tuck Everlasting
- Word card 55 (WA1)
- Word card 56 (WA2)
- Word card 57 (WA3)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words contented, uneasy, and soothe
- Review synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

Words Taught

contented (p. 90)

Contented means "satisfied or happy."

uneasy (p. 94)

Uneasy means "nervous, worried, or anxious."

soothe (p. 95)

Soothe means "make someone or something calmer or less upset."

INTRODUCE AND USE CONTENTED

1 Introduce and Define Contented and Review Synonyms

Briefly review pages 76–110 of Tuck Everlasting. Turn to page 90 and review that in this part of the story, Winnie and the Tucks are sitting in the parlor; they are about to have breakfast together. Read the following sentence from page 90 aloud, emphasizing the word contentedly: "Mae surveyed it all and sighed contentedly."

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is contented, and explain that contented means "satisfied or happy." Point out that contented, satisfied, and happy are synonyms. Explain that Mae is contented, or satisfied or happy, because her whole family and Winnie are together in the parlor for breakfast.

Display word card 55 (WA1) and have the students say the word contented.

2 Discuss Times the Students Have Felt Contented

Review that when people are contented, they feel satisfied or happy. Give examples of times when you have felt contented.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of contented is contento/a.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words contented, satisfied, and happy to it.

You might say:

"I felt contented after Open House last month. I was happy to meet your families and I think the night went very well. I was contented at Thanksgiving dinner this year. We ate a lot of good food and spent a wonderful afternoon as a family."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you felt contented? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: I felt contented when _____ because . . .

WA1

PROMPT 1: "I felt contented when [I finished a great book] because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word contented and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE UNEASY

3 Introduce and Define Uneasy and Review Synonyms

Turn to page 94 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, the man in the yellow suit has come to the Tucks' house to get Winnie. Read the following sentences from page 94 aloud, emphasizing the word uneasily: "Mae sat down on the edge of the rocker, and Tuck sat, too, but his eyes were narrowed. Jesse said, uneasily, 'Who in tarnation do you think you—' But Tuck interrupted. 'Hush, boy. Let him speak his piece.'"

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words uneasy, nervous, worried, and anxious to it.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is uneasy, and explain that uneasy means “nervous, worried, or anxious.” Point out that uneasy, nervous, worried, and anxious are synonyms. Explain that Jesse felt uneasy, or anxious, because he was not sure what the man in the yellow suit wanted from the Tucks.

Display word card 56 (🗉 WA2) and have the students say the word uneasy.

4 Discuss Feeling Uneasy

Explain that all of us feel uneasy at times, and give some examples of times when you or someone you know felt uneasy.

You might say:

“When I was younger, I always felt uneasy when I had to speak in front of the class. I was always a little nervous, and I worried that I would say something silly. The first time I went skiing and used the chairlift, I was uneasy because the chair went high into the sky and swayed back and forth.”

Ask:

Q When have you felt uneasy? Why were you uneasy? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I was uneasy when [I forgot to study for a spelling test] because . . .”

Point to the word uneasy and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE SOOTHE

5 Introduce and Define Soothe

Turn to page 95 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, the man in the yellow suit is explaining to the Tucks that he knows who they are and that they live forever. Read the following sentence from page 95 aloud, emphasizing the word soothing: “He spread his long, white fingers in a soothing gesture.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is soothe, and explain that soothe means “make someone or something calmer or less upset.” Explain that the man in the yellow suit made a soothing gesture with his hands because the Tucks were beginning to get upset, and he wanted them to calm down so that he could finish his story. Act out how the man in the yellow suit might have looked as he gestured soothingly. (For example, you might raise your hands to waist level, open your palms, spread your fingers, and move your hands back and forth gently.)

Reveal word card 57 (🔊 WA3) and have the students say the word soothe.

6 Discuss What Might Soothe Someone

Remind the students that when you soothe someone, you make the person feel calmer or less upset. Give examples of times when you have soothed someone or someone has soothed you.

You might say:

"Recently a friend of mine was upset because she got a parking ticket. To soothe her, or make her feel calmer and less upset, I made her a cup of tea and told her a funny story about a time I got a ticket. When I was in fourth grade, I had an argument with my best friend. I came home from school crying. My mother soothed me by hugging me and listening while I explained what had happened."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss the questions that follow. Ask the students to be ready to share their partners' thinking with the class.

Q When have you soothed someone or when has someone soothed you? What did you or the person do that was soothing? [Pause; click 1 on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "[My friend April] soothed [me] when . . ." and "[She] soothed [me] by . . ."

After partners have talked, click 2 on word card 57 (WA3) to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their partners' thinking with the class:

PROMPT 2: "[Neil] said that [his friend April] soothed [him] when . . ." and "[She] soothed [him] by . . ."

Point to the word soothe and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSION

Explore the Suffix -ly and Discuss the Word Contentedly

Write the word contentedly where everyone can see it. Explain that the word contentedly is made by adding the suffix -ly to the word contented. Tell the students that one meaning of the suffix -ly is "in a certain way." Explain that contentedly means "in a contented way, or in a satisfied or

Extension

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word hospitable earlier and that hospitable means “friendly, welcoming, and generous to visitors.”

You might also point out that when you add -ly to the word hospitable, you drop the e to spell hospitably.

happy way.” Point out that in Tuck Everlasting, Mae sighs contentedly—she sighs in a contented way—when her family and Winnie sit down to eat breakfast together. Ask:

Q When might you sigh contentedly, or in a contented way?

PROMPT: “I might sigh contentedly if . . .”

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Write the word hospitably where everyone can see it. Point out that hospitably is made up of the word hospitable and the suffix -ly. Ask:

Q Based on what you know about the word hospitable and the suffix -ly, what do you think the word hospitably means? What do we mean when we say that someone acts hospitably?

If necessary, explain that hospitably means “in a hospitable way, or in a friendly, welcoming, and generous way.” Explain that if you greet a class visitor hospitably, you greet the visitor in a friendly, welcoming way. Repeat the procedure to discuss the words sociably and tranquilly.

Day 2

Review Contented, Uneasy, and Soothe

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words contented, uneasy, and soothe from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking

Words Reviewed

contented

uneasy

Uneasy means “nervous, worried, or anxious.”

soothe

Soothe means “make someone or something calmer or less upset.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

-  Q Which of yesterday's words do you think was especially fun or interesting to talk about? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA4

contented uneasy soothe

PROMPT 1: I think the word _____ was especially [fun/interesting] to talk about because . . .

PROMPT 1: "I think the word [contented] was especially [fun/interesting] to talk about because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity "Create a Sentence"

Tell the students that partners will do the activity "Create a Sentence." Review that partners will work together to create sentences that use the vocabulary words. Point to the word contented on the daily review cards (WA4) and review that contented means "satisfied or happy."

Then use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

-  Q How might you use the word contented in a sentence? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their sentences with the class.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "Why might someone feel contented, or satisfied or happy?" If the students continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as "Michelle was contented after her birthday party because . . ." or "Zeke was contented during the science fair because . . ."

Teacher Note

For the word uneasy, support struggling students by asking questions such as “What might make you feel uneasy at school? At home? At the dentist?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “Araceli felt uneasy as she talked with her mother because . . .” or “When Arun opened the door, he felt uneasy because . . .”

For the word soothe, support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you soothed a friend or a family member?” and “When has someone soothed you?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “My sister needed me to soothe her after . . .” or “My dog soothed me by . . .”

Teacher Note

Prior to doing this extension, you might do the extension activity “Explore Similes in Tuck Everlasting” in Week 8, Day 4.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“I was contented when I finally trained my parrot to say my name”]? Why?

Use the same procedure to have partners work together to create sentences that use the words uneasy and soothe.

EXTENSION

Explore Metaphors in Tuck Everlasting

Turn to page 60 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, Winnie and Tuck are getting into the rowboat on the pond so that Tuck can speak to Winnie about the spring. Ask the students to listen carefully as you read how the author describes the sun as it begins to set. Then read the following sentence from page 60 aloud twice: “The sun was dropping fast now, a soft red sliding egg yolk, and already to the east there was a darkening to purple.”

Explain that the author, Natalie Babbitt, wants us to visualize how the sun looks as it is setting, so she says that the setting sun is a “soft red sliding egg yolk.” Tell the students that when the author writes that the sun is a “soft red sliding egg yolk” she has created a metaphor. Explain that a metaphor is a “comparison of one thing to another without using the words like, as, or than.”

Turn to page 85 and explain that in this part of the story, Winnie is fishing with Miles. Tell the students that the author compares a dragonfly to something. Tell the students that as you read from this part of the story, you want them to listen for what the dragonfly that Winnie sees is compared to. Then read the following sentence from the first paragraph on page 85 aloud: “A dragonfly, a brilliant blue jewel, darted up and paused over the lily pads, then swung up and away.” Ask:

Q What is the dragonfly that Winnie sees compared to in the sentence you just heard?

If necessary, explain that the author compares the dragonfly to a brilliant blue jewel.

Q How does comparing the dragonfly to a brilliant blue jewel help you picture what the dragonfly looks like?

Tell the students that good writers like Natalie Babbitt use metaphors to help readers visualize what they are describing.

Introduce Envious, Emerge, and Reliable

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words envious, emerge, and reliable
- Review synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking

Words Taught

envious (p. 103)

If you are envious, you feel jealous of someone because that person has something you would like to have.

emerge (p. 105)

Emerge means “appear.” When something emerges, it comes out so that it can be seen.

reliable (p. 108)

Someone or something that is reliable can be trusted or depended on.

INTRODUCE AND USE ENVOUS

1 Introduce and Define Envious

Turn to page 103 of Tuck Everlasting. Review that, in this part of the story, Mae has just struck the man in the yellow suit in the head with Tuck's shotgun, and Tuck is staring at the man lying motionless on the ground. Read the following sentence from page 103 aloud, emphasizing the word envious: “It was as if he were entranced and—yes, envious—like a starving man looking through a window at a banquet.”

Tell the students that envious is the first word they will learn today. Explain that if you are envious, you feel jealous of someone because that person has something you would like to have. Explain that Tuck is envious of the man in the yellow suit because he has the ability to die, to move on—something that Tuck would like to have.

Display word card 58 (WA5) and have the students say the word envious.

Materials

- Tuck Everlasting
- Word card 58 (WA5)
- Word card 59 (WA6)
- “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA7)
- Word card 60 (WA8)

Teacher Note

You might point out that in this sentence, the author uses a simile to compare Tuck to a starving man looking at a banquet. Explain that this comparison helps us imagine what Tuck looks and feels like as he stares at the man in the yellow suit.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of envious is envidioso/a.

2 Play “Is Tulip Envious?”

Remind the students that an envious person is jealous because another person has something that the envious person wants. Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Is Tulip Envious?” Explain that you will describe a situation that Tulip is in; then partners will decide whether Tulip is envious or not envious and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Tulip watches a TV show about beautiful Hawaii. “People in Hawaii are lucky to live in such a beautiful place,” she thinks. “But I’m happy where I am,” she decides. “I live in a beautiful state, too.”

Ask:

Q Is Tulip envious of the people who live in Hawaii? Why do you think that? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

envious

PROMPT 1: Tulip [is/is not] envious because . . .

PROMPT 1: “Tulip [is/is not] envious because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss one or both of the following scenarios:

- Tulip’s friend gets a very popular book for her birthday. Tulip thinks, “Wow, that is such a good book! I wish I had it.”
- Tulip tries out for the lead role in the school play, but her classmate Tina gets the part instead. Tulip is upset and angry. “That part should be mine,” she thinks. “It’s so unfair.”

Point to the word envious and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE EMERGE

3 Introduce and Define Emerge and Review Synonyms

Turn to page 105 of Tuck Everlasting and remind the students that, in this part of the story, the constable is taking Mae to jail and bringing Winnie back home. Read the following sentence from page 105 aloud, emphasizing the word emerging: “Up through the dim pine trees they went, the constable’s breath wheezing in her ears, and emerging from the coolness and the green, Winnie saw again the wide world spread before her, shimmering with light and possibility.”

Tell the students that emerge is the next word they will learn today, and explain that emerge means “appear.” Explain that when something emerges, it comes out so that it can be seen. Point out that emerge and appear are synonyms. Explain that Winnie, the constable, and Mae emerged, or appeared, from within the cool, green wood as they made their way into town.

Display word card 59 (🌍 WA6) and have the students say the word emerge.

Discuss as a class:

Q What might Winnie have seen as she emerged from the wood?

Click ❶ on word card 59 (WA6) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “As Winnie emerged from the wood, she might have seen . . .”

4 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Remind the students that when something emerges, it appears, or comes out so that it can be seen. Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Review that you will tell the beginning of a story that includes the word emerge. Then students will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (🌍 WA7) and show story 1 and its accompanying prompts. Read the story aloud, slowly and clearly:

- Story 1: Glenn is sitting on the beach admiring the moonlight sparkling on the water. He hears a noise behind him and turns around. Emerging from the shadows is . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q How might you finish the story? What might be emerging from the shadows behind Glenn? What might happen next? [Pause; point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words emerge and appear to it.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of emerge is emerger.

Tell Me a Story

Glenn is sitting on the beach admiring the moonlight sparkling on the water. He hears a noise behind him and turns around. Emerging from the shadows is . . .

PROMPT 1:

Emerging from the shadows is . . .

and

After _____ emerges . . .

PROMPT 1: “Emerging from the shadows is . . .” and “After [the raccoon] emerges . . .”

Point to the word emerge and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE RELIABLE

5 Introduce and Define Reliable

Turn to page 108 in Tuck Everlasting. Review that in this part of the story, Winnie has come home and is sitting alone in her room thinking about everything that has happened. Remind the students that she is upset and that she sits in her old rocking chair because it usually soothes, or calms, her. Then read the following sentence aloud, emphasizing the word reliably: “She rocked, gazing out at the twilight, and the soothing feeling came reliably into her bones.”

Tell the students that reliable, a form of the word reliably, is the last word they will learn today. Explain that someone or something that is reliable can be trusted or depended on. Point out that Winnie expects a soothing feeling to come to her when she rocks in her chair, and that she is able to depend on that feeling—it is reliable.

Display word card 60 (🗨️ WA8) and have the students say the word reliable.

ELPS 3.D.i

Steps 5–6 and Teacher Note on page 235

6 Discuss Reliable People

Explain that we often use the word reliable to describe the people in our lives who we can depend on and trust. Give a few examples of people in your life who are reliable.

You might say:

"Our principal is reliable. We can trust that she will be there for us when we need her. My son's babysitter is reliable. I can depend on her to be at my house right on time when she is babysitting. My car mechanic is reliable. Anytime my car has a problem, I trust him to repair it."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Who is a reliable person that you know? Why is that person reliable?
[Pause; click ❶ on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "[My doctor] is reliable because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following:

Q In what ways might you be a reliable person? [Pause; click ❷ to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I might be a reliable person by . . ."

Ask:

Q Why is it important to be a reliable person?

Click ❸ on word card 60 (WA8) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 3: "It is important to be a reliable person because . . ."

Point to the word reliable and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "What is something that your family might trust you to do?" "What is something that your friends might depend on you for?" and "What is something that you might do each day/week/month for people you care about?"

Display the “Synonym Match” chart (WA9).

WA9

Synonym Match

contented	appear devour	satisfied
emerge	peaceful tranquil	worried
uneasy	eat

PROMPT: _____ is the synonym of
_____.

Tell the students that partners will play “Synonym Match.” Point to the words in column 1, and explain that these are vocabulary words that the students have learned. Point to the words in column 2 and explain that these are synonyms of the words in column 1. Explain that partners will match each vocabulary word to its synonym.

Point to the word contented, pronounce it, and have the students pronounce it.

Then point to the words in column 2 and ask:

Q Which word in column 2 is the synonym of contented? Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “[Satisfied] is the synonym of [contented].”

Repeat the procedure to discuss the remaining words. When you get to the final two words, have the students discuss them together by asking:

Q Which word in column 2 is the synonym of tranquil, and which word is the synonym of uneasy?

Review Envious, Emerge, and Reliable

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words envious, emerge, and reliable from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act respectfully toward their partners

Words Reviewed

envious

If you are envious, you feel jealous of someone because that person has something you would like to have.

emerge

Emerge means “appear.” When something emerges, it comes out so that it can be seen.

reliable

Someone or something that is reliable can be trusted or depended on.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q If your neighbor got a new puppy, would you be envious? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA10) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA10

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA10)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the “Week 10 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) for each student

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word uneasy earlier and that uneasy means “nervous, worried, or anxious.”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “Why might a person feel envious?” and “When have you felt envious?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter.

Teacher Note

For emerge, support struggling students by asking “What might emerge from a pond?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter.

For reliable, support struggling students by asking “Why might a police officer/firefighter/doctor be reliable?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 9 and 10, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 10 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

PROMPT 1: “If my neighbor got a new puppy, I [would/would not] be envious because . . .”

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following questions:

Q Would you feel uneasy if you saw a snake emerge from the bushes? Why?

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] feel uneasy if I saw a snake emerge from the bushes because . . .”

Q If your friend forgot to return a pencil that she borrowed from you, would you call her reliable? Why?

PROMPT 3: “If my friend forgot to return my pencil, I [would/would not] call her reliable because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that partners will work together to create sentences that use the vocabulary words.

Point to the word envious and review that if you are envious, you feel jealous of someone because that person has something you would like to have. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word envious in a sentence? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“Kate felt envious when her older sister got to drive a car”]? Why?

Use the same procedure to have partners work together to make up sentences that use the words emerge and reliable.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act respectfully toward their partners

Words Reviewed

contemplate

Contemplate means “think about something seriously or look at something carefully.”

inform

Inform means “give or tell information.”

loll

Loll means “sit or stand in a relaxed or lazy way.”

scour

Scour means “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material.” Scour also means “search an area very carefully in order to find something.”

soothe

Soothe means “make someone or something calmer or less upset.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA11) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Game “What’s the Missing Word?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “What’s the Missing Word?” Remind them that you will read a sentence that has a word missing. Partners must decide which of the vocabulary words is the missing word and explain why they think so.

ELPS 4.C.i

Steps 1–2 and Teacher Notes on page 240

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA11)
- Ongoing review activity (WA12)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of the game, see Week 3, Day 5, Step 2.

Teacher Note

Each sentence on the ongoing review activity (WA12) has a corresponding number: the first sentence is ①; the second sentence is ②; the third sentence is ③; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the sentence.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the sentence with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the students may need to change the form of the word to complete the sentence by adding an ending such as -s, -ing, or -ed.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word sociable earlier and that sociable means “friendly or liking to be with others.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word scarce earlier and that scarce means “difficult to get or find.” If something is scarce, there is very little of it.

Display the ongoing review activity (WA12) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ① to reveal the first sentence. Point to the sentence and read it aloud.
 - Sentence 1: Petra had to _____ the floor after her dog tracked in mud from outside.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q What's the missing word? Why do you think so? [Click ① again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I think [scour] is the missing word because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ① a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place.

SENTENCE 1: Petra had to scour the floor after her dog tracked in mud from outside.

① ② ③ ④ ⑤

WA12

4. Click ① to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following sentences:

- Sentence 2: Evan wanted to be more sociable, so he _____ ways to be friendly to his classmates. (contemplated)
- Sentence 3: When her little sister fell and skinned her knee, Lorrianna _____ her by giving her a hug and bandaging her knee. (soothed)
- Sentence 4: When Alvin _____ in his chair at the wedding, his mom asked him to sit up straight. (lollod)
- Sentence 5: The mayor _____ the people that water was getting scarce and that they would have to conserve it for a while. (informed)

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Can the students identify the word that completes each sentence?
- Do their explanations show that they understand the vocabulary words' meanings?
- Are they using the words they are learning in their writing?

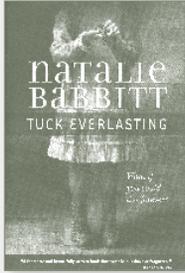

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 181 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by having the students each create a picture card of the word with a definition in her own words on the back of the card. Explain that the picture card should illustrate what the word means. You might model the process by drawing a picture that illustrates the meaning of one of this week's review words.

widespread

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from the story.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students analyze the effect of their behavior on others and on the group work.
- Students develop the skill of confirming that they understand another person's thinking by repeating back what they heard and using clarifying questions and statements.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, collect a handkerchief or a tissue to introduce the word dab. (See Step 3.)
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, collect one or two sheets of paper to introduce the word rustle. (See Step 5.)
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, collect two metal objects (for example, a small trash can and a pair of scissors, or a metal water bottle and a spoon) to introduce the word clank. (See Step 1.)
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print "Week 11 Word Cards" (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Day 1

Introduce Exert, Dab, and Rustle

Materials

- Tuck Everlasting
- Word card 61 (WA1)
- Word card 62 (WA2)
- Handkerchief, collected ahead
- One or two sheets of paper, collected ahead
- Word card 63 (WA3)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words exert, dab, and rustle
- Build their speaking and listening skills

Words Taught

exert (p. 111)

When you exert yourself, you work hard to do something.

dab (p. 113)

Dab means “touch something lightly and gently, usually with something soft.”

rustle (p. 118)

Rustle means “make a soft brushing sound.” Things like paper, leaves, and stiff cloth rustle.

INTRODUCE AND USE EXERT

1 Introduce and Define Exert

Briefly review pages 111–139 of Tuck Everlasting.

Turn to page 111 and review that in this part of the story, Winnie has returned home from her stay with the Tucks. One very hot morning, she steps outside her cottage. Read the following sentence from the first paragraph on page 111 aloud, emphasizing the word exertion: “It was the hottest day yet, so heavy that the slightest exertion brought on a flood of perspiration, an exhaustion in the joints.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is exert, which is a form of the word exertion. Explain that when you exert yourself, you work hard to do something. Explain that the weather in Tregap is so hot that if Winnie exerts herself—or works hard to do anything—at all, she will start sweating and feel exhausted, or very tired.

Display word card 61 (WA1) and have the students say the word exert.

2 Discuss Times When the Students Exerted Themselves

Review that when you exert yourself, you work hard to do something. Give the students examples of times when you have exerted yourself.

You might say:

"I exerted myself when I helped my dad put up a fence in his backyard. It was hard work! I had to exert myself when I earned my teaching credential. It took a lot of effort to do my very best work and learn how to be a good teacher."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you exerted yourself? [Pause; click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

exert

WA1

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "When have you exerted yourself, or worked hard, when you were playing outside?" "When have you exerted yourself when you were helping with chores around the house?" and "When have you exerted yourself to do classwork/homework?"

PROMPT 1: "I exerted myself when . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word exert and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE DAB

3 Introduce and Define Dab

Turn to page 113 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, Winnie's grandmother has come outside with her to bring a bowl of water to the toad. Read the following sentence from page 113 aloud, emphasizing the word dabbing: "I never saw such heat in my life," said Winnie's grandmother, dabbing uselessly at her neck with a handkerchief."

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is dab, and explain that dab means "touch something lightly and gently, usually with something soft."

Display word card 62 (WA2) and have the students say the word dab.

Explain that in the story Winnie’s grandmother is sweating in the heat, so she is dabbing her neck, or touching it lightly and gently, with a handkerchief. Ask the students to watch carefully. Then act out what the grandmother did by dabbing your neck with the handkerchief or tissue that you collected ahead.

Ask:

Q What did you see me doing when I dabbed my neck?

Click 1 on word card 62 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt and have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “When you dabbed your neck, you . . .”

4 Play “Is Tulip Dabbing?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Is Tulip Dabbing?” Explain that you will describe something that Tulip is doing, and partners will discuss whether Tulip is dabbing or not dabbing and explain why they think so. Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Tulip gently cleans her little brother’s scraped knee with a cotton ball.

Ask:

 Q Is Tulip dabbing her brother’s knee? Why? [Click 2 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Tulip [is/is not] dabbing her [brother’s knee] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Tulip scours her muddy boots with a rough brush until they are clean.
- Tulip lightly touches a soft cloth to the lenses of her glasses to clean them.

Point to the word dab and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE RUSTLE

5 Introduce and Define Rustle

Turn to page 117 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, Winnie is waiting inside her cottage for midnight, when she will help the Tucks free Mae from jail. Explain that Winnie can tell a storm is coming because of the way the air feels and the things that she sees, smells, and hears around her. Read the following sentences from pages 117–118 aloud, emphasizing the word rustling: “For outside, though it was almost dark, shreds of the hard brown-yellow light lingered on the rims of things, and there was a wind beginning, small gusts that rattled the fence gate and set the trees to rustling. The smell of rain hung sweet in the air.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word scour earlier, and that scour means “clean something thoroughly by rubbing it with a rough material.”

Teacher Note

You might point out that the author, Natalie Babbitt, uses sensory details—details that describe the way things feel, look, smell, and sound—to help the reader imagine what it is like outside Winnie’s cottage as the storm approaches.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is rustle, and explain that rustle means “make a soft brushing sound.” Point out that Winnie hears the leaves on the trees near her house rustle—make a soft brushing sound—as small gusts of wind blow outside.

Explain that things like paper, leaves, and stiff cloth rustle when they brush against something. Demonstrate a rustling sound by brushing two sheets of paper against each other or brushing a sheet of paper on the table or the floor.

Display word card 63 (🗉 WA3) and have the students say the word rustle.

6 Imagine Something Rustling

Have the students close their eyes and imagine that they are in their beds, sleeping peacefully when they are awakened by rustling, or soft brushing, sounds outside their window.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is causing a rustling sound outside your window? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 1 on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[A raccoon sifting through the trash] is causing a rustling sound outside my window.”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss as a class:

Q What might you do if you heard a rustling sound outside your window?

Click 2 on word card 63 (WA3) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “If I heard a rustling sound outside my window, I might . . .”

Point to the word rustle and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Day 2

Review Exert, Dab, and Rustle

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words exert, dab, and rustle from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills

Words Reviewed

exert

When you exert yourself, you work hard to do something.

dab

Dab means “touch something lightly and gently, usually with something soft.”

rustle

Rustle means “make a soft brushing sound.” Things like paper, leaves, and stiff cloth rustle.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q If you were writing a story about a camping trip, which of these words might you use? How might you use the word? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

If the word exert is the students' only response, encourage the use of other words by asking “How might you use the word [dab/rustle] in a story about a camping trip?”

WA4

exertdabrustle

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____. I might write . . .

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [exert]. I might write . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Discuss “Would You?” Questions

Tell the students that you will ask them some questions. Explain that each question will include one of yesterday’s vocabulary words and a vocabulary word that they learned earlier in the year.

Point to the word exert on the daily review cards (WA4).

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Would you exert yourself to gather a meager amount of berries from a prickly bush? Why? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] exert myself to gather a meager amount of berries because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following questions:

[dab]

Q Would you dab your face with a napkin after devouring your dinner? Why? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I [would/would not] dab my face with a napkin after devouring my dinner because . . .”

[rustle]

Q Would you feel uneasy if you heard something rustle in the bushes beside you? Why? [Pause; click 4 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “I [would/would not] feel uneasy if I heard something rustle in the bushes beside me because . . .”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word meager earlier and that meager means “very small in amount or hardly enough.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word devour earlier and that devour means “eat something quickly and hungrily.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word uneasy earlier and that uneasy means “nervous, worried, or anxious.”

Day 3

Introduce Clank, Heave, and Budge

Materials

- Tuck Everlasting
- Two metal objects, collected ahead
- Word card 64 (WA5)
- Word card 65 (WA6)
- Word card 66 (WA7)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words clank, heave, and budge
- Build their speaking and listening skills

Words Taught

clank (p. 123)

When something clanks, it makes a short, loud sound like metal being hit.

heave (p. 124)

Heave means “pull, throw, or lift with a lot of effort.”

budge (p. 124)

Budge means “move just a little.”

INTRODUCE AND USE CLANK

1 Introduce and Define Clank

Turn to page 123 of Tuck Everlasting and review that in this part of the story, Winnie is helping the Tucks get Mae out of her jail cell. Read the following sentences from page 123 aloud, emphasizing the word clanked: “They heard the constable’s footsteps coming up to Mae’s cell. The barred door clanked.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is clank. Explain that when something clanks, it makes a short, loud sound like metal being hit. Demonstrate a clanking sound by striking together the two metal objects you collected. Explain that when the constable closes the cell door, it clanks, or makes the short, loud sound of metal being hit.

Display word card 64 (WA5) and have the students say the word clank.

2 Play “Would It Clank?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Would It Clank?” Explain that you will describe two objects striking together; then partners will decide whether the objects would clank or not clank, and explain why they think so. Begin with:

- A spoon hitting the side of a metal bowl

Ask:

Q Would a spoon hitting the side of a metal bowl clank? Why? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

clank

PROMPT 1: It [would/would not] clank because . . .

WA5

PROMPT 1: “It [would/would not] clank because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss one or more of the following:

- A rubber mallet hitting a drum
- An axe chopping through a piece of wood
- Coins being dropped into a metal can

Point to the word clank and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE HEAVE

3 Introduce and Define Heave

Turn to page 124 of Tuck Everlasting. Remind the students that in this part of the story, Miles is trying to take the barred window of Mae’s jail cell out of the wall so that Mae can escape. Review that Miles has taken all of the nails out of the frame and is waiting for thunder to crack so that he can pull the frame out without being heard. Read the following sentence from page 124 aloud, emphasizing the word heave: “In the midst of the noise, Miles gave a mighty heave.”

Tell the students that heave is the next word they will learn today, and explain that heave means “pull, throw, or lift with a lot of effort.” Explain that Miles heaves the window, or pulls it with a lot of effort, when the thunder cracks.

Display word card 65 (🔊 WA6) and have the students say the word heave.

4 Act Out and Discuss the Word Heave

Explain that we usually use the word heave to talk about pulling, throwing, or lifting things that are very heavy. For example, to place a heavy sack of dirt onto the back of a truck, you would have to heave the sack, or lift it with a lot of effort. Act out heaving a heavy sack onto a truck.

Ask:

 Q What did you see me do when I acted out heaving a heavy sack onto a truck? [Click ❶ on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “When you acted out heaving a heavy sack onto a truck, you . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Have a volunteer act out heaving, or pulling, a heavy canoe out of the water. Then ask:

 Q What did you see [Matthias] do when he acted out heaving a heavy canoe out of the water? [Click ❷ to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “When [Matthias] acted out heaving a heavy canoe out of the water, he . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q When have you heaved something or seen someone heave something? [Pause; click ❸ to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I heaved [a heavy box of tools onto a table] when [I was helping my mom clean the garage]” or “I saw [my sister] heave [a box of books into her car] when [she went to college].”

Point to the word heave and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE BUDGE

5 Introduce and Define Budge

Return to page 124 of Tuck Everlasting and review that Miles has just tried to heave the barred window of Mae’s cell out of the wall. Then read the following sentence aloud, emphasizing the word budge: “But the window did not budge.”

Tell the students that budge is the last word they will learn today, and explain that budge means “move just a little.” Explain that although

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you moved or helped someone move something that was very heavy?” or “When have you seen someone lift a heavy object such as a backpack full of books or a box full of dishes?” If the students cannot recall when they have heaved something, have them look around the room for objects they would have to heave to move.

Miles gives a mighty heave, the window does not budge, or move even a little.

Display word card 66 (🌐 WA7) and have the students say the word budge.

6 Discuss Things That Will Not Budge

Explain that we usually use the word budge with the word not to talk about something that will not move or that we cannot move even a little. Give one or two examples, emphasizing the phrase “not budge.”

You might say:

“There’s a big rock in my front yard that I want to get rid of, but when I try to move it, it will not budge—it won’t move even a little. My niece is three, and when she does not get her way, she sits down on the floor and will not budge until she gets what she wants.”

Have the students look around the classroom for objects that would not budge if they tried to move them. Then discuss as a class:

Q What objects in the classroom would not budge if you tried to move them?

Click 1 on word card 66 (WA7) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking.

PROMPT 1: “[The sink] would not budge if I tried to move it.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What objects outside the classroom can you think of that would not budge if you tried to move them? [Pause; point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[A tree] would not budge if I tried to move it.”

Point to the word budge and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSION

Explore Onomatopoeia

Write the word clank where everyone can see it. Tell the students that the word clank is an example of onomatopoeia. Explain that onomatopoeia is the “use of words that sound like what they are describing.” Point out that when you say the word clank, the word sounds like the noise something makes when it clanks.

Write the word splash where everyone can see it and explain that splash is another example of onomatopoeia. Discuss other examples of onomatopoeia, such as whiz, beep, buzz, crunch, quack, and slurp. Ask the students for additional examples.

🌐 ELL Note

You might ask a volunteer to demonstrate trying to budge one of the objects the students mention.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to identify things they could not budge, give a few examples—such as a tree, a car, a wall, or an elephant—and then ask the question again.

Teacher Note

You might create a chart titled “Onomatopoeia” and write the words clank and splash on it. Invite the students to listen and look for other examples, discuss them, and add them to the chart. Encourage the students to use onomatopoeia in their writing.

For additional examples of onomatopoeia, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Onomatopoeia” list in the General Resources section.

Day 4

Review Clank, Heave, and Budge

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words clank, heave, and budge from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Practice using clarifying questions and statements

Words Reviewed

clank

When something clanks, it makes a short, loud sound like metal being hit.

heave

Heave means "pull, throw, or lift with a lot of effort."

budge

Budge means "move just a little."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

- Q Which of yesterday's words do you think was especially interesting to talk about? Why? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

budge

PROMPT 1: I think the word _____ was especially interesting to talk about because . . .

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [clank] was especially interesting to talk about because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Activity “What Do You Think About?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Do You Think About?” Point to the words on the daily review cards (WA8) and explain that you want the students to notice what they think about, or what pictures come into their minds, when they hear each of the words.

Point to the word clank and tell the students that they will think about the word clank first. Model the activity by closing your eyes and thinking aloud about what comes into your mind when you hear the word clank.

You might say:

“When I hear the word clank, I think of my husband because when he does the dishes, the spoons, knives, and forks always clank when he puts them in the dishwasher. I also think of my young niece, because she likes to clank metal spoons against pots and pans.”

Have the students close their eyes. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What do you think about when you hear the word clank? Why? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “When I hear the word [clank], I think of [my bicycle] because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining words on the daily review cards (WA8). If the students struggle with a word, model thinking aloud about associations you make to the word, or ask supporting questions like those in the note.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to make associations, support them by asking questions such as “What objects have you heard clank?” “When have you or someone you know clanked two metal objects together?” and “What do you see in the classroom that might clank?”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Practice using clarifying questions and statements

Words Reviewed

budge

Budge means “move just a little.”

emerge

Emerge means “appear.” When something emerges, it comes out so that it can be seen.

stroll

tranquil

Tranquil means “calm or peaceful.”

widespread

Widespread means “spread, scattered, or happening over a large area.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Game “I’m Thinking of a Word”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “I’m Thinking of a Word.” Explain that you will think aloud about one of the vocabulary words; then partners will discuss which word they think it is and explain why they think that. Remind the students that partners may not always agree, and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Tell the students that before they play the game in pairs, they will practice as a class. Begin by reading the following clue aloud, slowly and clearly:

- I’m thinking of a word you might use to describe the worldwide excitement during the Olympic Games.

Discuss as a class:

Q What word am I thinking of? Why do you think that?

Give the students a few moments to think about the questions. Then click 1 on the ongoing review cards (WA9) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA9

budgeemergestroll

tranquilwidespread

PROMPT 1: You're thinking of the word _____ because . . .

PROMPT 1: “You’re thinking of the word [widespread] because . . .”

3 Play the Game in Pairs

Play a round of the game with the students in pairs, using the following clue:

- I’m thinking of a word that is a synonym of the word peaceful.

Ask:

 Q What word am I thinking of? Why do you think that? [Click 2 on WA9 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “[Ms. Hardisty] is thinking of the word [tranquil] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Repeat the procedure to continue playing the game, using the following clues:

- I’m thinking of a word that tells what something does when it moves just a little. (budge)
- I’m thinking of a word that tells what you do when you come out from your hiding spot. (emerge)
- I’m thinking of a word you might use to describe a quiet place in the park. (tranquil)
- I’m thinking of a word that tells what you do when you take a relaxing walk on the beach. (stroll)

Teacher Note

For more practice, you or the students might make up additional clues.

Introduce Harbor, Picturesque, and Peculiar

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words harbor, picturesque, and peculiar
- Review synonyms
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use clarifying questions or statements

harbor (p. 2)

Harbor means “protect or shelter.”

picturesque (p. 4)

When a place is picturesque, it is beautiful or pleasant to look at.

peculiar

Peculiar means “strange or odd.”

Materials

- The Van Gogh Cafe
- Word card 67 (WA1)
- Word card 68 (WA2)
- Word card 69 (WA3)

INTRODUCE AND USE HARBOR

1 Introduce and Define Harbor

Remind the students that they heard and discussed the first two chapters of The Van Gogh Cafe: “The Cafe” and “The Possum.” Review that in the first chapter, “The Cafe,” the narrator describes the Van Gogh Cafe and its history.

Open the book to page 1 and read aloud the first paragraph of the story on pages 1–2. Emphasize the word harbor when you come to it.

Tell the students that harbor is the first word they will learn today, and explain that harbor means “protect or shelter.” Review that the cafe was once a theater where magical things happened. There was so much magic in the theater that now, years later, the cafe walls still harbor magic, or protect or shelter magic.

Display word card 67 (WA1) and have the students say the word harbor.

2 Discuss Harbor

Explain that people sometimes harbor, or protect or shelter, other people who have lost their homes. For example, relatives or neighbors might harbor a family that loses its home in a fire until the family finds another place to live.

Explain that it is against the law, however, to harbor a criminal (a person who has broken the law). Discuss as a class:

Q Why do you think it is against the law to harbor a criminal?

Click 1 on word card 67 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

The screenshot shows a digital word card for the word "harbor". At the top, the word "harbor" is displayed in a rounded rectangular box. Below this, the text reads: "PROMPT 1: I think it is against the law to harbor a criminal because . . .". At the bottom of the card, there are two circular buttons labeled "1" and "2". The "1" button is highlighted, indicating it is the active prompt.

WA1

PROMPT 1: "I think it is against the law to harbor a criminal because . . ."

Explain that people sometimes harbor stray or injured animals. Then ask:

 Q If a stray cat that looked sick wandered into your yard, would you harbor it? Why? [Click 2 on WA1 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I [would/would not] harbor the cat because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word harbor and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE PICTURESQUE

3 Introduce and Define Picturesque

Review that at the beginning of Chapter 1, "The Cafe," we find out that the Van Gogh Cafe is located in the town of Flowers, Kansas. In Chapter 2, "The Possum," the narrator describes what that part of Kansas looks like. Read the first three sentences on page 4 aloud, emphasizing the word picturesque.

Tell the students that picturesque is the next word they will learn today, and explain that when a place is picturesque, it is beautiful or pleasant to look at.

Display word card 68 (🎧 WA2) and have the students say the word picturesque.

Explain that we usually use the word picturesque to describe a pleasant-looking place, such as a beautiful mountain, sparkling stream, or meadow full of trees and flowers. Explain that the narrator would not describe Kansas as picturesque, because it is so flat.

Discuss as a class:

Q Do you think the area where we live is picturesque? Why do you think that?

Click 1 on word card 68 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “I [do/do not] think the area where we live is picturesque because . . .”

4 Discuss Picturesque Places

Explain that all of us have seen picturesque, or beautiful or pleasant, places in person, on TV, or in movies. Give one or two examples of picturesque places that you have seen.

You might say:

“I think the park near my house is picturesque. It has lots of beautiful green grass and flowers, and there is a fountain that is very pleasant to look at. I saw a show about the Grand Canyon on TV. It is very picturesque. The Grand Canyon has spectacular canyons and towering, colorful rock formations. The views are wonderful.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What picturesque place have you seen? Why do you think it is picturesque? [Pause; click 2 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “[Redwood Park] is a picturesque place because . . .”

Point to the word picturesque and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

You might point to the word picture within picturesque on the word card and explain that the words picture and picturesque are related. Explain that a place that is picturesque is a good subject for a picture, or it could be described as being as “pretty as a picture.”

INTRODUCE AND USE PECULIAR

5 Introduce and Define Peculiar and Review Synonyms

Turn to page 7 and remind the students that Clara notices a possum hanging upside down in the tree outside the cafe. Read the following sentences from the second full paragraph on page 7 aloud: “Now, this is the magic of the Van Gogh Cafe: not one person says, ‘Amazing! A possum upside down on Main Street!’ No, everyone is not all that surprised.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is peculiar. Explain that peculiar means “strange or odd” and that the words peculiar, strange, and odd are synonyms.

Explain that if a possum were hanging from a tree outside any other cafe, people might think it was peculiar, or strange or odd. Point out that the customers at the Van Gogh Cafe do not think it is peculiar at all, because the cafe is a magical place.

Display word card 69 (🗉 WA3) and have the students say the word peculiar.

6 Discuss Peculiar Things That Have Happened

Point out to the students that most of the time our lives are pretty normal or ordinary, but occasionally something peculiar, or strange or odd, happens. Give one or two examples of peculiar things that have happened to you or to someone you know.

You might say:

“The other evening someone kept calling me on the telephone and hanging up. It happened at least a dozen times. That was very peculiar—and very annoying. My friend told me that she’s been hearing a peculiar scratching noise inside her kitchen wall. She’s not sure what’s causing the noise. It’s very odd.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What peculiar thing has happened to you or to someone you know?
[Pause; click 1 on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “A peculiar thing that happened to [my dad] is . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the word peculiar and its synonyms to it. Remind the students that they can use a synonym, like peculiar, in their writing to replace an overused word, like strange, to make their writing more interesting.

7 Discuss a Very Peculiar Day at School

Ask the students to imagine they have a very peculiar day at school when strange things happen.

Discuss as a class:

Q What might happen during a very peculiar day at school?

Click 2 on word card 69 (WA3) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “It would be peculiar if . . .” and “A peculiar thing that might happen is . . .”

Point to the word peculiar and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Another Meaning of Harbor

Write the word harbor where everyone can see it. Review that in the story harbor means “protect or shelter.” Then explain that the word harbor has another meaning.

Discuss as a class:

Q What else do you know about the word harbor? What is a harbor?

PROMPT: “A harbor is . . .”

If necessary, explain that a harbor is a “place where ships can find shelter (be safe from storms) or unload their cargo.”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, ask questions such as “What peculiar thing might happen when you first walk into the classroom? During [reading/writing/math] time? During recess? At lunch?” If the students continue to struggle, provide a couple of examples of peculiar things that might happen. For example, say “It would be peculiar if I walked into the classroom and discovered that all the furniture was gone. It would be peculiar if I opened my journal and a moth flew out.”

Day 2

Review Harbor, Picturesque, and Peculiar

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words harbor, picturesque, and peculiar from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use clarifying questions or statements

Words Reviewed

harbor

Harbor means “protect or shelter.”

picturesque

When a place is picturesque, it is beautiful or pleasant to look at.

peculiar

Peculiar means “strange or odd.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which of yesterday’s words do you think was especially fun or interesting to talk about? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA4

peculiar

PROMPT 1: I think the word _____ was especially [fun/interesting] to talk about because . . .

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [peculiar] was especially [fun/interesting] to talk about because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that partners will work together to create sentences that use the vocabulary words.

Point to the word harbor, and review that harbor means “protect or shelter.” Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word harbor in a sentence? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“We harbored our cousins after their house was destroyed in a tornado”]? Why?

Using the same procedure, have partners work together to use picturesque and peculiar in sentences.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “Who or what might you harbor? Why?” If the students continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “We harbored our relatives because . . .” or “I harbored the bird because . . .”

Teacher Note

Support students who struggle to use the word picturesque by asking questions such as “What might you see in a picturesque place?” and “What have you seen that was picturesque?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “On vacation I saw a picturesque . . .” or “I thought the meadow was picturesque because . . .”

Support students who struggle to use the word peculiar by asking questions such as “When has something peculiar happened to you?” and “When have you seen something peculiar?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “My brother acts peculiar when . . .” or “Last night there was a peculiar . . .”

Day 3

Introduce Conspicuous, Suit, and Spectacle

Materials

- The Van Gogh Cafe
- Word card 70 (WA5)
- “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA6)
- Word card 71 (WA7)
- Word card 72 (WA8)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words conspicuous, suit, and spectacle
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use clarifying questions or statements

Words Taught

conspicuous

Conspicuous means “obvious or noticeable.”

Something that is conspicuous stands out and can be seen easily.

suit

Something that suits you is right for you or meets your needs.

spectacle

A spectacle is an “unusual or remarkable sight.”

INTRODUCE AND USE CONSPICUOUS

1 Introduce and Define Conspicuous

Open The Van Gogh Cafe to page 4 and review that the narrator describes the landscape of Kansas as flat and not picturesque. Read the following sentences from page 4 aloud: “But in Kansas at least things get noticed. The flatness makes everything count and not one thing slips by. That is why, if a possum was going to choose to hang upside down somewhere, Kansas would be a good choice. People would notice.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is conspicuous, and explain that conspicuous means “obvious or noticeable.” Something that is conspicuous stands out and can be seen easily. Explain that, because there is not much else to see around the cafe, the possum is conspicuous, or obvious or noticeable. It stands out.

Display word card 70 (WA5) and have the students say the word conspicuous.

Ask:

Q What is something in the classroom that is conspicuous?

Click 1 on word card 70 (WA5) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the antonym of conspicuous is inconspicuous, which means “not conspicuous, or not obvious or noticeable.” If you started an antonym chart, add the words conspicuous and inconspicuous to it.

conspicuous

PROMPT 1: _____ in the classroom is conspicuous.

PROMPT 1: “[The computer] in the classroom is conspicuous.”

2 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Review that you will tell the beginning of a story that includes the word conspicuous. Then the students will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (🗨️ WA6).

Tell Me a Story

Peter is going to his brother Todd’s baseball game. Peter wants to be conspicuous so that Todd can find him in the crowd. To be conspicuous, Peter . . .

PROMPT 1: To be conspicuous, Peter . . .

PROMPT 2: _____ is conspicuous because . . .

Read story 1 aloud slowly and clearly.

- Story 1: Peter is going to his brother Todd’s baseball game. Peter wants to be conspicuous so that Todd can find him in the crowd. To be conspicuous, Peter . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you finish the story? What might Peter do to be conspicuous? [Pause; point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “To be conspicuous, Peter . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Why is [waving a big sign that says, “Way to go, Todd!”] being conspicuous?

Point to prompt 2 and have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking.

PROMPT 2: “[Waving a big sign that says, ‘Way to go, Todd!’] is conspicuous because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following story:

- Story 2: Julia writes a note to her mother telling her she is going to a friend’s house. Julia wants to leave the note in a conspicuous place so that her mother will find it. The conspicuous place Julia chooses is . . .

 Q How might you finish the story? Where might Julia leave the note so that it is conspicuous? [Pause; point to prompt 3.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “The conspicuous place Julia chooses is . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q Why would [taping the note to the refrigerator] make the note conspicuous?

PROMPT 4: “[Taping the note to the refrigerator] would make the note conspicuous because . . .”

Point to the word conspicuous and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE SUIT

3 Introduce and Define Suit

Remind the students that Clara and her father live in Kansas and that her mother lives in New York City. Read the following sentences from the second full paragraph on page 5 aloud: “Clara’s mother doesn’t like Kansas and she lives in New York City, where Clara visits her each June. But Clara preferred Kansas the moment she laid eyes on it. Kansas is like a tall person relaxing, she says. It seems right for her.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is suit. Explain that something that suits you is right for you or meets your needs. Explain that Kansas suits Clara, or is right for her, because she is comfortable there—she likes the slower, more relaxing pace. Explain that Kansas does not suit, or is not right for, Clara’s mother, so she lives in New York City.

Display word card 71 ( WA7) and have the students say the word suit.

Discuss as a class:

Q Does the place where we live suit you? Is it right for you? Why?

Click 1 on word card 71 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “[Kirkland] [does/does not] suit me because . . .”

4 Discuss Occupations That Would Suit the Students

Explain that teaching is an occupation (kind of work) that suits you, or is right for you, and explain why.

You might say:

“Teaching suits me because I enjoy being around young people and I like helping them learn.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q If you had to choose an occupation, what job do you think would suit you? Why? [Pause; click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I think [being a writer] would suit me because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Tell the students that an occupation that seems boring, dirty, or dangerous might not suit you, and give an example of an occupation that would not suit you.

You might say:

“Being a construction worker would not suit me. Construction workers often work on tall buildings, and I don’t like heights.”

Discuss as a class:

Q What job do you think would not suit you? Why?

Click 3 to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 3: “I think [being a doctor] would not suit me because . . .”

Point to the word suit and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, ask questions such as “Do you enjoy living here? Why?” and “What are some things you [like/dislike] about living here?”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What occupation or job do you think would be interesting or fun? Why?” “What topic do you enjoy learning about?” “What is something you know you are good at?” and “What do you enjoy doing in your free time?”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of spectacle is espectáculo.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by giving an example of a spectacle. The example might be outlandish or realistic. For example, say “The spectacle is a bunch of chattering monkeys that appear out of nowhere” or “The spectacle is a big white rabbit hopping across the playground.” Then ask “What is another spectacle, or unusual or remarkable sight, that would get everyone’s attention?”

INTRODUCE AND USE SPECTACLE

5 Introduce and Define Spectacle

Open the book to page 9 and review that the possum comes back to the cafe at the same time every morning and that after a few days people start leaving food for him. Read the third full paragraph on page 9 aloud: “The possum isn’t hungry. But a stray dog from the other end of town is, and he starts stopping by for breakfast. So does a thin cat and two baby kittens. And a shy small mouse. Several sparrows. Even a deer.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is spectacle. Explain that a spectacle is an “unusual or remarkable sight.” Explain that all the stray animals gathering beneath the possum’s tree for breakfast is a spectacle, or an unusual or remarkable sight.

Display word card 72 ( WA8) and have the students say the word spectacle.

6 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Imagine That!” Have the students close their eyes and imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- You are outside during recess. Suddenly, everyone stops playing and stares at a spectacle on the playground.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q What is the spectacle? What unusual or remarkable sight grabs everyone’s attention? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click  on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “The spectacle is . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- You are walking downtown. Suddenly, you stop and stare in amazement at the spectacle ahead of you.

Point to the word spectacle and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Discuss Sports That Would Suit the Students

Remind the students that something that suits you is right for you or meets your needs. Explain that they are going to think about and discuss sports that suit them, or sports that are right for them. Give an example of a sport that is right for you.

You might say:

"Soccer suits me because I am a fast runner, and you need to run quickly to play soccer."

Ask:

Q What sport suits you? Why?

PROMPT: "[Basketball] suits me because . . ."

Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the group.

EXTENSION

Fun with Puns

Explain that a pun is a joke based on one word that has two meanings or on two words that sound alike but have different meanings.

Tell the students that there are many types of puns, and give a few examples from the list that follows. After each pun, discuss the way the use of language makes it funny.

- A tailor sometimes has to suit himself.
- The inventor of a hay-baling machine made a bundle.
- Two pencils decided to have a race. The outcome was a draw.
- I've been to the dentist several times, so I know the drill.
- Did you hear about the guy who got hit in the head with a can of soda? [Pause, ask for ideas, and then repeat the question and give the answer.] He was lucky it was a soft drink.

Day 4

Review Conspicuous, Suit, and Spectacle

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA9)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the "Week 12 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words conspicuous, suit, and spectacle from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use clarifying questions or statements

Words Reviewed

conspicuous

Conspicuous means "obvious or noticeable." Something that is conspicuous stands out and can be seen easily.

suit

Something that suits you is right for you or meets your needs.

spectacle

A spectacle is an "unusual or remarkable sight."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

-  Q Is a person wearing a bright orange vest conspicuous? Why? [Click 1 on WA9 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “A person wearing a bright orange vest [is/is not] conspicuous because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following:

 Q Does being solitary suit you? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Being solitary [does/does not] suit me because . . .”

 Q Would a parade of soldiers be a spectacle? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “A parade of soldiers [would/would not] be a spectacle because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that partners will work together to create sentences that use the vocabulary words.

Point to the word conspicuous on the daily review cards (WA9) and review that conspicuous means “obvious or noticeable.” Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q How might you use the word conspicuous in a sentence? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“Gloria thought her bright red coat might make her too conspicuous, but she wore it anyway”]? Why?

Repeat the procedure to have partners work together to create sentences that use the words suit and spectacle.

Teacher Note

You might review that solitary means “living or being alone.”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What might a person wear to be conspicuous?” and “When have you been conspicuous?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter.

Teacher Note

Support students who struggle to use the word suit by asking questions such as “What kinds of clothing suit you?” and “What kinds of weather suit you?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 11 and 12, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 12 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA10)
- Ongoing review activity (WA11)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 3” answer sheet (IA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record” sheet (SR1)
- “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR1)
- (Optional) Class set of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use clarifying questions or statements

Words Reviewed

contented

envious

If you are envious, you feel jealous of someone because that person has something you would like to have.

peculiar

Peculiar means “strange or odd.”

reliable

Someone or something that is reliable can be trusted or depended on.

uneasy

Uneasy means “nervous, worried, or anxious.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Introduce the Activity “Describe the Character”

Tell the students that partners will do an activity called “Describe the Character.” Explain that you will show a story; then partners will decide which vocabulary word best describes the main character in the story and explain why they think so. Tell the students that before they do the activity in pairs, they will practice as a class.

Display the ongoing review activity (🗉 WA11) and begin the activity:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Tell the students that the main character in the first story is a cat named Hairy; then point to the story and read it aloud:

- Story 1: Hairy spent the day napping in a sunny spot on the carpet. When she got up, she stretched for a while and then strolled over to her bowl to eat dinner. After dinner, she curled up in her owner's lap, purring.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word describes Hairy? Why?

Click ❶ on the ongoing review activity (WA11) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: "The word [contented] best describes Hairy because . . ."

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word.

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

3 Do the Activity in Pairs

Continue the activity with the students in pairs.

1. Click ❷ to reveal the next story. Tell the students that the main character in the next story is a boy named Jorge; then point to the story and read it aloud:

- Story 2: It was Jorge's week to take care of Freckles, his class's pet guinea pig. Every morning, Jorge got to the classroom early to feed Freckles, clean his cage, and make sure that he had enough water.

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA11) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word stroll earlier and that stroll means "walk in a slow, relaxed way."

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, reread the story and think aloud about which word best describes Hairy. For example, say "I think the word contented best describes Hairy, because contented means 'satisfied or happy.' Hairy spent her day resting, eating, and snuggling with her owner, so she's probably contented."

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word best describes Jorge? Why? [Click 2 again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The word [reliable] best describes Jorge because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking 2 a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word.
4. Click 2 to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following stories:

- Story 3: Kim’s dog, Lady, liked to hang around with the neighborhood cats. Many people believed that Lady thought she was a cat herself! (peculiar)
- Story 4: Nikko’s friend invited him to go horseback riding. When Nikko arrived at the stable, he saw a horse stomping and kicking at the gate. He began to wonder if going horseback riding was a good idea. (uneasy)
- Story 5: Sherice found out that her friend was going to have a baby brother. Sherice had been begging her parents for a brother or sister for a long time. She was happy for her friend, but she couldn’t help being a little jealous. (envious)

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Can the students identify the vocabulary words?
- Do their explanations show that they understand the words’ meanings?
- Are they using the words accurately in writing and in conversations outside of the vocabulary lessons?

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 182 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word’s meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word’s meaning, provide further practice by having the students play “Which Word Am I?” (see Week 2, Day 5, Step 2).

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Before continuing with the week 13 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students' understanding of words taught in Weeks 9–12 using the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 3" answer sheet (IA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment" on page 183 of the Assessment Resource Book.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate his understanding of words taught in Weeks 9–12 using the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Student Self-assessment" on page 187 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Word-learning Strategies

- Using the suffix -less to determine word meanings
- Recognizing antonyms (review)
- Using the suffix -er to determine word meanings (review)
- Using the Latin root mot to determine word meanings

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the poems.
- Students discuss using the suffix -less to determine word meanings.
- Students review antonyms and using the suffix -er to determine word meanings.
- Students use the Latin root mot to determine word meanings.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students analyze the effect of their behavior on others.
- Students develop the skill of using prompts to extend a conversation.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 1, review the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -less” on page 287.
- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 3, review the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Words with the Latin Root mot” on page 295.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 13 Word Cards” (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Thoughtless, Thoughtful, and Desert/Deserter

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words thoughtless, thoughtful, and desert/deserter
- Discuss the suffix -less
- Review antonyms
- Review the suffix -er
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Taught

thoughtless

Thoughtless means “without thought for the feelings or needs of others.”

thoughtful

Thoughtful means “full of thought for the feelings or needs of others.”

desert/deserter (p. 300)

Desert means “abandon, or leave someone or something that should not be left behind.” A deserter is a “person who deserts.”

INTRODUCE AND USE THOUGHTLESS AND THOUGHTFUL

1 Introduce and Define Thoughtless and Introduce the Suffix -less

Briefly review “Speech Class.” First read the entire poem aloud, and then reread the second and third stanzas.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is thoughtless. Explain that thoughtless means “without thought for the feelings or needs of others.” Explain that a thoughtless person is inconsiderate and does not think carefully about what he says or does.

Point out that when Jim and Joe’s classmates laugh at them and make fun of the way they talk, they are being thoughtless. They are not thinking about how their hurtful comments might affect Jim and Joe.

Display word cards 73–74 (🔊 WA1) and click to reveal word card 73. Have the students say the word thoughtless.

Materials

- “Speech Class” (see page 300)
- Word cards 73–74 (WA1)
- Word card 75 (WA2)

Teacher Note

For more practice with the suffix -less, see the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -less” on page 287.

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart, add the words thoughtful and thoughtless to it.

Teacher Note

You might point to the suffix -ful in thoughtful and explain that -ful is a suffix that means “full of.”

Point to the suffix -less in thoughtless and explain that -less is a suffix. Remind the students that a suffix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the suffix -less means “without” or “having no.” Point out that when the suffix -less is added to the word thought, it makes the new word thoughtless, which means “without thought for the feelings or needs of others.”

2 Introduce and Define Thoughtful and Review Antonyms

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is thoughtful. Click to reveal word card 74 on word cards 73–74 (WA1) and have the students say the word thoughtful.

Explain that thoughtful and thoughtless are antonyms, or “words with opposite meanings.”

Discuss as a class:

Q If thoughtful and thoughtless are antonyms, and thoughtless means “without thought for the feelings or needs of others,” what do you think thoughtful means?

Click 1 on word cards 73–74 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

thoughtless thoughtful

PROMPT 1: I think thoughtful means . . .

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I think thoughtful means . . .”

If necessary, explain that thoughtful means “full of thought for the feelings or needs of others.” Explain that a thoughtful person thinks carefully about what she says or does, is considerate, and pays attention to other people’s feelings and needs.

3 Discuss Ways That Tulip Might Be Thoughtful or Thoughtless

Tell the students that you will describe a situation involving our fifth-grade friend Tulip. Partners will discuss what Tulip might do or say if she were being thoughtful and if she were being thoughtless.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Tulip accidentally walks onto her neighbor's flower bed, crushing many of the flowers.

Ask:

Q If she were thoughtful, what might Tulip do or say? [Click 2 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If she were thoughtful, Tulip might . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Then ask:

Q If she were thoughtless, what might Tulip do or say? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “If she were thoughtless, Tulip might . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- Tulip's friend Ross is wearing a belt he made himself. Tulip thinks the belt looks peculiar.

Point to the words thoughtless and thoughtful and review the pronunciations and meanings of the words.

INTRODUCE AND USE DESERT AND DESERTER

4 Introduce and Define Desert and Deserter and Review the Suffix -er

Remind the students that in the poem “Speech Class,” Jim sympathizes with Joe. Then reread these final lines of the poem: “I felt like a deserter / and wanted you / to have my voice.”

Tell the students that the last words they will learn today are desert and deserter. Explain that desert means “abandon, or leave someone or something that should not be left behind.” Explain that a deserter is a “person who deserts.”

Teacher Note

You might review that peculiar means “strange or odd.”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of desert is desertar.

The Spanish cognate of deserter is desertor/ora.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they discussed the suffix -er earlier when they learned the word moocher (“a person who tries to get something without paying or working for it”). If you started a “Words with the Suffix -er” chart, add the word deserter to it.

Tell the students that we usually use the word deserter to talk about a soldier who leaves the army without permission. Explain that Jim compares himself to a deserter because he feels that he abandoned Joe, or left him behind when he should not have, to face speech class and the classmates’ taunts by himself.

Display word card 75 (🗨️ WA2) and have the students say the words desert and deserter.

Point to the suffix -er at the end of the word deserter, and review that -er is a suffix that means a “person who.” Explain that when the suffix -er is added to the word desert, it makes the new word deserter, which means a “person who deserts.”

5 Play “Did Tulip Desert Someone?”

Review that desert means “abandon, or leave someone or something that should not be left behind.” Explain that if someone leaves a sick kitten by the side of the road, he has deserted the kitten, or left it behind when he should not have. But if a person leaves a sick kitten at an animal hospital, intending to come back for the kitten when it is well, the person has not deserted the kitten.

Tell the students that they will play a game called “Did Tulip Desert Someone?” Explain that you will describe something our friend Tulip does to someone; then partners will discuss whether or not Tulip deserted the person and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following story aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Tulip walks her little brother to school on his first day of kindergarten. When she leaves him at the kindergarten room door, she says, “I’ll pick you up at two o’clock”—and she does.

Ask:

-  Q Did Tulip desert her brother? Why do you think that? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Tulip [did/did not] desert her [brother] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- Tulip is at a movie with her friend. In the middle of the movie, Tulip leaves and does not come back.

-  Q Did Tulip desert her friend? Why do you think that? [Point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Point to the words desert/deserter and review the pronunciations and meanings of the words.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -less

Prepare a sheet of chart paper titled “Words with the Suffix -less.” Below the title, write The suffix -less means “without” or “having no.”

Review that -less is a suffix, or a “letter or group of letters that is added to the end of a word to make a new word.” Remind the students that the suffix -less means “without” or “having no.” Review that when the suffix -less is added to the word thought, it makes the word thoughtless, which means “without thought for the feelings or needs of others.” Write the word thoughtless on the chart.

Tell the students that knowing that the suffix -less means “without” or “having no” can help them figure out the meaning of other words that use the suffix -less. Write the word fearless on the chart. Discuss as a class:

Q What do you think the word fearless means?

PROMPT: “I think the word fearless means . . .”

Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that fearless means “without fear” or “having no fear.” Invite the students to think of other words that use the suffix -less, and list them on the chart. If they struggle to think of words, stimulate their thinking by asking questions such as “What word means ‘without a job?’; ‘Having no end?’; ‘Having no taste?’” (jobless; endless; tasteless). Other -less words you might discuss are hopeless, joyless, odorless, painless, and penniless.

Post the chart, encourage students to continue to listen and watch for words with the suffix -less, and add any new examples to the chart.

EXTENSION

Discuss the Suffix -ful

Explain that -ful at the end of the word thoughtful is a suffix that means “full of.” Point out that when the suffix -ful is added to the word thought, it makes the new word thoughtful, which means “full of thought for the feelings or needs of others.” Discuss a few other familiar words that use the suffix -ful (for example, beautiful, hopeful, and painful).

Explain that knowing that the suffix -ful means “full of” can help the students figure out the meanings of other words that use the suffix that they may not know. Ask the students to use their knowledge of the suffix to figure out the meaning of the word joyful.

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker

Teacher Note

Save the “Words with the Suffix -less” chart to use throughout the year.

Day 2

Review Thoughtless, Thoughtful, and Desert/Deserter

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA3)
- “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words thoughtless, thoughtful, and desert/deserter from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Reviewed

thoughtless

Thoughtless means “without thought for the feelings or needs of others.”

thoughtful

Thoughtful means “full of thought for the feelings or needs of others.”

desert/deserter

Desert means “abandon, or leave someone or something that should not be left behind.” A deserter is a “person who deserts.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA3) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [thoughtful]. I might write . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Remind the students that you will tell them the beginning of a story that includes one of the vocabulary words. Then the students will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (C WA4) and show story 1 and its accompanying prompt. Tell the students that story 1 uses the word thoughtless. Then read story 1 aloud, slowly and clearly.

- Story 1: Lori is at a movie with her friend. She becomes annoyed when some thoughtless people in front of her . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you finish the story? What might the thoughtless people do or say? [Pause; point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Tell Me a Story

Lori is at a movie with her friend. She becomes annoyed when some thoughtless people in front of her . . .

PROMPT 1: Lori becomes annoyed when some thoughtless people in front of her . . .

WA4

PROMPT 1: “Lori becomes annoyed when some thoughtless people in front of her . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following stories on the chart (WA4):

- Story 2: It is Harry’s birthday. When he arrives at school, his thoughtful friends . . .

Q How might you finish the story? What might Harry’s thoughtful friends do or say? [Pause; point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “When Harry arrives at school, his thoughtful friends . . .”

- Story 3: Suzette is riding her bicycle. She decides to desert her bicycle because . . .

Q How might you finish the story? Why might Suzette decide to desert her bicycle? [Pause; point to prompt 3.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “Suzette decides to desert her bicycle because . . .”

Teacher Note

For a list of common heteronyms, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Heteronyms” list in the General Resources section.

EXTENSION

Discuss Desert and Explore Other Heteronyms

Write the words desert (dih-ZURT) and desert (DEH-zurt) where everyone can see them. Point to each word as you pronounce it. Then ask the students what they notice about the words.

Tell the students that the words desert and desert are heteronyms. Explain that heteronyms are “words that are spelled the same but have different pronunciations and meanings.” Have the students discuss the meanings of desert and desert. Then have them discuss the meanings of these other heteronyms: bass (pronounced BAS and BAYS); bow (pronounced BOW and BOH); close (pronounced KLOHZ and KLOHS); and dove (pronounced DUHV and DOHV). Have the students watch for other heteronyms in their reading, and discuss the examples they find.

Introduce Motionless, Reverie, and Fanciful

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words motionless, reverie, and fanciful
- Discuss the Latin root mot
- Review the suffix -less
- Review antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Taught

motionless

Motionless means “without motion, still, or not moving.”

reverie

A reverie is a “pleasant daydream.”

fanciful

Fanciful means “imaginary, or not real.”

INTRODUCE AND USE MOTIONLESS

1 Introduce and Define Motionless

Briefly review “Eraser and School Clock.” Then read the poem aloud.

Remind the students that as the narrator struggles with the test, he begins to daydream. Then reread the lines that begin with “I look / Up at the school clock” and end with “In their hands, / Erasers, too.”

Explain that the narrator daydreams that time stops, the test stops, and his friends freeze, or become motionless. Tell the students that motionless is the first word they will learn today, and explain that motionless means “without motion, still, or not moving.”

Display word card 76 (🎧 WA5) and have the students say the word motionless.

Materials

- “Eraser and School Clock” (see page 301)
- Word card 76 (WA5)
- Word card 77 (WA6)
- Word card 78 (WA7)

Teacher Note

You might explain that motionless and still are synonyms. If you started a synonym chart, add the words to it.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that earlier they discussed the Latin roots mem (“mind”) and memor (“to remember”) when they learned the word memento (“something given or kept as a reminder of a person, place, or experience”).

Teacher Note

If you started a “Words with the Suffix -less” chart, add the word motionless to it.

Technology Tip

To find web-based activities that focus on using Greek and Latin roots to determine word meanings, you might search online using the keywords “whiteboard Greek and Latin roots activities.” For more information, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV42).

2 Introduce the Latin Root mot and Review the Suffix -less

Point to the root mot in motionless on word card 76 (WA5) and explain that mot is a root. Review that a root is a “word or part of a word that is used to make other words.” Remind the students that many roots come to English from other languages. Explain that mot comes from Latin, a language that was spoken by the people of ancient Rome. Tell the students that in Latin, mot means “move.”

Point to the suffix -less in motionless, and review that -less is a suffix that means “without.” Explain that if you know the meanings of the suffix -less and the root mot, you can put them together to figure out that motionless means “without motion, still, or not moving.”

3 Discuss Motionless

Review that later in the poem, the narrator daydreams that he goes out onto the playground. Tell the students that as you read this part of the poem again, you want them to listen for who is motionless, or still or not moving, on the playground. Then reread the italicized section of the poem aloud, stopping after the line “Of each sweet homer.”

Ask:

-  Q Who is motionless on the playground? Why do you think that? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA5

motionless

PROMPT 1: The _____ is motionless because _____.

PROMPT 1: “The [janitor] is motionless because [the poem says ‘the janitor is frozen to his broom’].”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that the janitor is motionless because the poem says that he is “frozen to his broom”; the gardener is motionless because the poem says that he is frozen “to his lasso of hose and sprinkler”; and the principal is motionless because he is frozen “to his walkie-talkie.”

Then discuss as a class:

Q When have you been motionless? Why were you motionless?

Click 2 on word card 76 (WA5) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I was motionless when [I was getting my hair cut] because . . .”

Point to the word motionless and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE REVERIE

4 Introduce and Define Reverie

Review that in the poem “Eraser and School Clock” the narrator imagines that he is on the playground hitting homers, instead of in the classroom taking a test. Reread the italicized section of the poem aloud, ending with the line “What a dream.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is reverie, and explain that a reverie is a “pleasant daydream.” Point out that the narrator’s reverie, or pleasant daydream, is about people standing motionless in amazement as he hits homer after homer.

Display word card 77 (WA6) and have the students say the word reverie.

5 Discuss a Reverie

Explain that all of us have favorite reveries, or pleasant daydreams. Tell the students about one of your favorite reveries.

You might say:

“One of my favorite reveries is that I am swimming with a pod of dolphins. One of them lets me grab onto its fin, and it swims me in to shore.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is one of your favorite reveries? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “One of my favorite reveries is . . .”

ELL Note

You might invite a volunteer to sit motionless for a few moments and then ask the class to discuss what they noticed. Alternatively, you might have all the students sit motionless for a minute and then ask “Was it difficult to be motionless? Why?”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word reverie and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE FANCIFUL

6 Introduce and Define Fanciful and Review Antonyms

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is fanciful. Explain that fanciful means “imaginary, or not real.” Tell the students that fanciful and real are antonyms, or opposites. Point out that the narrator’s baseball reverie is fanciful. It is imaginary, or not real.

Display word card 78 (WA7) and have the students say the word fanciful.

7 Discuss Fanciful Stories

Explain that we often use the word fanciful to describe the very strange or unbelievable characters, creatures, and events in fairy tales and science fiction stories. Tell the students about something you have read or seen in a movie or on TV that was obviously fanciful.

You might say:

“I am reading a book about a woman who is transported back in time by touching a special rock. The story is fanciful, because I know that something like that could never really happen. It’s imaginary, or not real.”

Discuss as a class:

Q What is something you have read or seen in a movie or on TV that is obviously fanciful?

Click 1 on word card 78 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “I [read/saw] a fanciful [story] about [a talking car].”

Ask the students to imagine that they are going to write a story about a fanciful animal that becomes their pet; then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What does the fanciful animal in your story look like? Sound like? How will it move? What will you call the animal? [Pause; click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The fanciful animal in my story . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart, add the words fanciful and real to it. You might also explain that fanciful and imaginary are synonyms. If you started a synonym chart, add the words to it.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Words with the Latin Root mot

Write the word motionless where everyone can see it. Review that motionless means “without motion, still, or not moving.” Remind the students that motionless includes the root mot, which means “move.” Tell the students that knowing the meaning of the root mot can help them figure out the meanings of other words that use the root.

Write the word motor where everyone can see it, and point out that it includes the root mot. (You might underline the root.) Ask:

Q What do you know about the word motor?

Q What is a motor? What does a motor do?

If necessary, explain that a motor is the “part of a machine that makes it move.”

Write the word motivate where everyone can see it and point out that it also includes the Latin root mot. Ask:

Q What do you know about the word motivate?

Q When might you need to be motivated?

If necessary, explain that motivate means “move a person to do something.”

Use the same procedure to discuss one or more of the following words:

- automotive (something that “moves by itself”)
- promote (“move forward”)
- demote (“move down”)

Day 4

Review Motionless, Reverie, and Fanciful

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words motionless, reverie, and fanciful from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Reviewed

motionless

Motionless means "without motion, still, or not moving."

reverie

fanciful

Fanciful means "imaginary, or not real."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8). Review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q If you were writing a story about a character named Daydreamy Dave, which of these words might you use? How might you use the word? Why? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA8

motionlessreveriefanciful

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____. I might write . . .

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [reverie]. I might write . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Does That Make Sense?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Does That Make Sense?” Review that you will read a scenario that includes one of the vocabulary words. Partners will decide whether the word makes sense in the scenario and explain why they think so.

Point to the word motionless on the daily review cards (WA8) and explain that the first scenario includes the word motionless. Read the following scenario aloud:

- The mouse stood motionless, hoping he would not be seen, as the owl flew overhead.

Ask:

Q Does the word motionless make sense in this scenario? Why do you think that? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The word [motionless] [does/does not] make sense because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining scenarios.

[reverie]

- Trina awoke from her reverie, shaking with fear.

[fanciful]

- Harley wrote a fanciful story about a boy with wings who flew to Mars.

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of this game, see Week 1, Day 5, Step 2.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- Ongoing review activity (WA10)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Reviewed

fanciful

Fanciful means “imaginary, or not real.”

harbor

Harbor means “protect or shelter.”

picturesque

When a place is picturesque, it is beautiful or pleasant to look at.

spectacle

A spectacle is an “unusual or remarkable sight.”

thrust

Thrust means “push or shove suddenly or with force.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Find Another Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Find Another Word.” Review that you will show several sentences that have one or more words underlined. You will read each sentence aloud, and then partners will decide which of the vocabulary words could replace the underlined part of the sentence.

Display the ongoing review activity (WA10) and begin:

1. Click 1 to reveal the first story (see WA10 on the next page). Point to the sentence and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined word.
 - Sentence 1: Though Darrel knew that the elves in the story were imaginary, he secretly hoped to meet one someday.

Teacher Note

Each sentence on the ongoing review activity (WA10) has a corresponding number: the first sentence is 1; the second sentence is 2; the third sentence is 3; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the sentence.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the sentence with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence and the underlined word. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word could replace the underlined words? Why?
[Click 1 again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [fanciful] could replace imaginary because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking 1 a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place.

fanciful	harbor	picturesque	spectacle	thrust
----------	--------	-------------	-----------	--------

SENTENCE 1: Though Darrel knew that the elves in the story were fanciful, he secretly hoped to meet one someday.

1 2 3 4 5

WA10

4. Finally, click 1 to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following sentences:

- Sentence 2: Moments after the alarm went off, police officers forcefully pushed the door open. (thrust)
- Sentence 3: Tricia, who lived in a big city, was envious of her cousins who lived in a beautiful mountain town. (picturesque)
- Sentence 4: The family emerged from the basement, where they had been sheltered during the tornado. (harbored)
- Sentence 5: A large crowd gathered when they saw the dog riding a skateboard—it was quite a remarkable sight! (spectacle)

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word envious earlier and that if you are envious, you feel jealous of someone because that person has something you would like to have.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word emerge earlier, and that emerge means “appear.” When something emerges, it comes out so that it can be seen.

Poem

Speech Class

by Jim Daniels

(for Joe)

We were outcasts—
you with your stutters,
me with my slurring—
and that was plenty for a friendship.

When we left class to go to the therapist
we hoped they wouldn't laugh—
took turns reminding the teacher:
“Me and Joe have to go to shpeesh class now,” or “M-m-me and J-Jim ha-have to go to

Mrs. Clark, therapist, was also god, friend, mother.
Once she took us to the zoo on a field trip:
“Aw, ya gonna go look at the monkeys?”
“Maybe they'll teach you how to talk.”
We clenched teeth and went and felt the sun and fed the animals and we were a family of broken words.

For years we both tried so hard
and I finally learned where to put my tongue and how to make the sounds
and graduated,
but the first time you left class without me
I felt that punch in the gut—
I felt like a deserter
and wanted you
to have my voice.

Poem

Eraser and School Clock

by Gary Soto

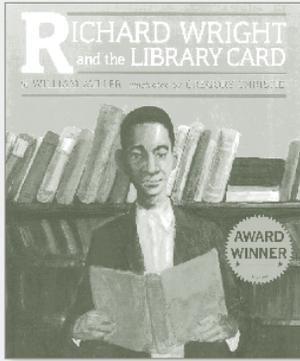

My eraser
Is pink
And car-shaped.
It skids across
My math test,
Which is a mess of numbers,
All wrong, like
When I unscrewed
The back of my watch
And the workings
Fell out.
The teacher frowned
When she saw
The watch,
Its poor heart
Torn out. Now
I'm working
On my math,
And I think,
I think, I think
I know. I look
Up at the school clock
With its hammerlike tick.
I could tear
Open its back,
And perhaps
The springs and gears
Would jump
And time stop.
This test could stop,
And my friends
Freeze, pencils
In their hands,
Erasers, too.
All would freeze,

Including my teacher,
And I could blow
On the skid marks
Of my eraser.
*I walk out
To the playground,
My eight fingers
And two thumbs
Wrapped around
A baseball bat.
The janitor
Is frozen
To his broom,
The gardener
To his lasso of Hose and sprinkler,
And the principal
To his walkie-talkie.
I hit homer
After homer,
And they stand,
Faces frozen
And mouths open,
Their eyes maybe moving,
Maybe following
The flight
Of each sweet homer.
What a dream.
I shrug
And look around
The classroom
Of erasers and pencils,
The clock racing
My answers to the finish.

Word-learning Strategies

- Using the prefix dis- to determine word meanings (review)
- Recognizing antonyms (review)
- Using the prefix pre- to determine word meanings (review)
- Using the Latin root judice to determine word meanings
- Using the suffix -less to determine word meanings (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the stories.
- Students review the prefixes dis- and pre-.
- Students review antonyms and the suffix -less.
- Students discuss the Latin root judice.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students practice the procedure for “Group Brainstorming.”
- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students develop the skills of including everyone in and contributing to group work, and using prompts to extend a conversation.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 1, review the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Words with the Prefix pre-” on page 309.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 14 Word Cards” (BLM2) and “Week 14 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 190 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Introduce Hunger, Discourteous, and Prejudice

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words hunger, discourteous, and prejudice
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include one another and contribute to group work
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

hunger (p. 12)

Hunger is a “strong desire or want.”

discourteous

Discourteous means “not courteous, or disrespectful or rude.”

prejudice

Prejudice is an “unfair opinion of someone based on the person’s race, religion, or other characteristic.”

INTRODUCE AND USE HUNGER

1 Introduce and Define Hunger

Briefly review Richard Wright and the Library Card.

Show pages 12–13. Remind the students that Richard loves to read and that as a child he read anything he could find. Read the last two paragraphs on page 12 aloud, emphasizing the word hunger.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is hunger, and explain that hunger is a “strong desire or want.” Point out that Richard has a hunger, or strong desire, for words and books. He wants with all his heart to read and learn.

Display word card 79 (WA1) and have the students say the word hunger.

2 Discuss Hungering to Learn About Something

Explain that, like Richard, many people hunger for knowledge, or have a strong desire to learn things. Give one or two examples of things that you have hungered to learn.

Materials

- Richard Wright and the Library Card
- Word card 79 (WA1)
- Word card 80 (WA2)
- Word card 81 (WA3)

Teacher Note

You might point out that hunger can also mean “pain or weakness caused by not eating enough food.”

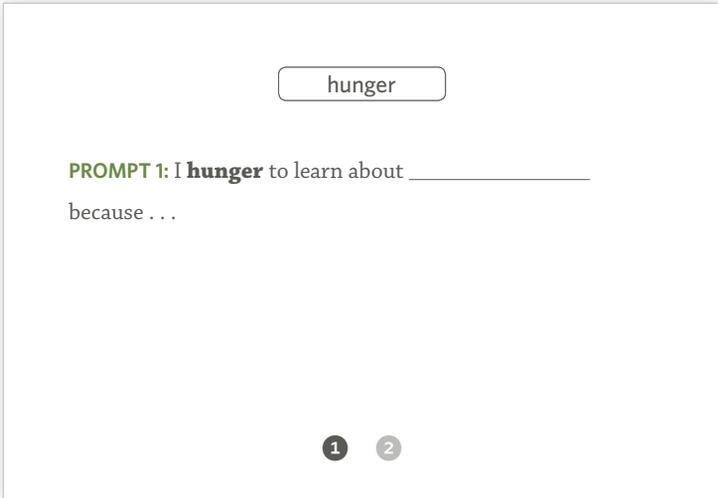

You might say:

“When I was your age, I hungered to learn about the ancient Egyptians. I was especially fascinated by mummies and read everything I could find about them. These days I hunger to learn all I can about gardening. I want to grow my own vegetables, so I’m learning about vegetables that will grow in our climate.”

Tell the students that you will ask partners to discuss things they hunger to learn about, and then a few of them will share their partners’ thinking with the class.

Ask:

 Q What is something you hunger to learn about? Why? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I hunger to learn about [kites] because . . .”

After partners have talked, click 2 on word card 79 (WA1) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their partners’ thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “[Tanisha] hungers to learn about [computers] because . . .”

Point to the word hunger and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE DISCOURTEOUS

3 Introduce and Define Discourteous and Review the Prefix dis- and Antonyms

Show pages 22–23 of Richard Wright and the Library Card, and review that Richard uses Jim Falk’s library card to check out books. Read page 22 aloud. Use a loud voice and sharp tone when the librarian says, “Are you sure these books aren’t for you?”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is discourteous. Explain that discourteous means “not courteous, or disrespectful or rude.”

Explain that the librarian is discourteous when she loudly asks Richard if the books are his. She’s discourteous again when she laughs at him when he says he cannot read. She makes Richard feel embarrassed and uncomfortable.

Display word card 80 (🌐 WA2) and have the students say the word discourteous.

Point to the prefix dis- in discourteous and review that dis- is a prefix that means “not.” Explain that when the prefix dis- is added to the word courteous, which means “polite and respectful,” it makes the new word discourteous, which means “not courteous, or disrespectful or rude.” Point out that discourteous and courteous are antonyms.

4 Play “Is Tulip Being Discourteous?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Is Tulip Being Discourteous?” Explain that you will describe something that Tulip is doing; then partners will discuss whether Tulip is being courteous or discourteous and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud twice, slowly and clearly:

- Tulip is studying in the library. The people next to her are whispering and giggling. Tulip turns to them and says in a loud, angry voice, “Shhh! I’m trying to study!”

Ask:

Q Is Tulip being courteous or discourteous? Why? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Tulip is being [courteous/discourteous] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Tulip is waiting in line at the movie theater. The person in front of her steps out of line to talk to a friend, and then gets back in line in front of Tulip. Tulip says to her, “Excuse me, you stepped out of line, so you need to go to the end of the line.”
- Tulip is working on an art project. A student at her table asks Tulip if she can borrow a marker Tulip is using. Tulip says, “No. Sometimes you don’t return things you borrow.”

Point to the word discourteous and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of discourteous is descortés.

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart, add the words courteous and discourteous to it. If you started a chart of dis- words, add discourteous to it.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of prejudice is prejuicio.

INTRODUCE AND USE PREJUDICE

5 Introduce and Define Prejudice

Show pages 22–23 of Richard Wright and the Library Card again, and review that the librarian questions Richard about the library books. Reread the following sentences from page 22 aloud: “But Richard told the lady what she wanted to hear, what she believed was true about all black boys like him. ‘No ma’am,’ he said. ‘These books aren’t for me. Heck, I can’t even read.’”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is prejudice. Explain that prejudice is an “unfair opinion of someone based on the person’s race, religion, or other characteristic.”

Explain that the librarian’s prejudice is her unfair belief that African Americans cannot read. Point out that when Richard says, “Heck, I can’t even read,” he is using the librarian’s prejudice, or unfair opinion about his race, to trick her into thinking that the library books cannot possibly be for him.

Display word card 81 ( WA3) and have the students say the word prejudice.

6 Introduce the Prefix pre- and the Latin Root judice

Point to the prefix pre- in prejudice and explain that pre- is a prefix that means “before.” Remind the students that a prefix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word.”

Point to judice in prejudice and explain that judice is a Latin root that means “judgment.” Explain that adding the prefix pre- to the root judice makes the new word prejudice. Explain that prejudice is forming an opinion or making a judgment about someone before you know the person; point out that prejudice can be based on the person’s race, religion, or other characteristic.

7 Discuss Whether Someone Is Prejudiced

Write the word prejudiced where everyone can see it. Tell the students that we use the word prejudiced to describe someone who has a prejudice. Explain that the librarian in the story can be described as prejudiced because she has an unfair opinion about Richard that is based on his race. Explain that, in addition to race, people are sometimes prejudiced because of another person’s religious beliefs, age, or gender (whether the person is male or female).

Tell the students that you will describe a situation; then partners will decide if the person in the situation is prejudiced and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- An elderly couple wants to buy a car. The salesperson says, “Elderly people are unsafe drivers. I don’t feel comfortable selling you a car.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Is the salesperson prejudiced? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[The salesperson] [is/is not] prejudiced because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Martin offers to babysit his neighbor’s son. Martin’s neighbor says, “Boys don’t know how to take care of children. Babysitting is a job only a girl can do.”
- Sheila goes to a tryout for a youth hockey team. The hockey coach says to Sheila, “I’m glad to see a girl at tryouts today. I am hoping we will have a team with both boys and girls!”

Point to the words prejudice and prejudiced and review the pronunciations and meanings of the words.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Words with the Prefix pre-

Prepare a sheet of chart paper titled “Words with the Prefix pre-.” Below the title write The prefix pre- means “before.” Write the word prejudice on the chart.

Review that pre- is a prefix and that a prefix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word.” Remind the students that the prefix pre- means “before” and that when pre- is added to the Latin root judice, it makes the new word prejudice. Review that prejudice is forming an opinion or making a judgment about someone before you know the person, and that it can be based on the person’s race, religion, or other characteristic.

Tell the students that knowing that pre- means “before” can help them figure out the meaning of other words that begin with the prefix. Write the word preview on the chart. Explain that preview is a word made by adding the prefix pre- to the word view.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Based on what you know about the prefix pre- and the word view, what do you think the word preview means? What is a movie preview? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that the Latin root judice means “judgment.”

Teacher Note

You might also discuss the prefix pre- in the word prefix. Point out that the word fix means “attach,” and explain that prefix means “attach, or add, before.” Explain that a prefix is added before a word to make a new word.

Teacher Note

Save the “Words with the Prefix pre-” chart to use throughout the year.

PROMPT: “I think the word preview means [watch ahead of time] because . . .” and “A movie preview is . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

If necessary, explain that preview means “view, or look at or watch something ahead of time.” Explain that a movie preview is the showing of a movie or parts of a movie before it opens for everyone to see.

Use the same procedure to have the students discuss the meanings of preheat and preorder.

Ask the students for other examples of words with the prefix pre-, discuss their meanings, and add them to the chart (for example, precaution, prehistoric, prepay, preregister, or preschool). Post the chart and encourage the students to continue to listen and watch for other words that use the prefix pre-, and add any new examples to the chart.

Day 2

Review Hunger, Discourteous, and Prejudice

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words hunger, discourteous, and prejudice from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in the discussions
- Contribute to group work
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Reviewed

hunger

Hunger is a “strong desire or want.”

discourteous

Discourteous means “not courteous, or disrespectful or rude.”

prejudice

Prejudice is an “unfair opinion of someone based on the person’s race, religion, or other characteristic.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🗉 WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which of yesterday's words do you think was interesting or fun to talk about? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

hungerdiscourteousprejudice

PROMPT 1: I think the word _____ was [interesting/fun] to talk about because . . .

PROMPT 1: "I think the word [hunger] was [interesting/fun] to talk about because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity "Create a Sentence"

Tell the students that partners will do the activity "Create a Sentence." Review that partners will work together to create sentences that use the vocabulary words.

Point to the word hunger on the chart, and review that hunger is a "strong desire or want."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q How might you use the word hunger in a sentence? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few pairs share their sentences with the class.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "What is something you hunger to do?" and "Where is a place you hunger to visit?" If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as "After the cold winter, I hungered for . . ." or "When I finished the first book in the series, I hungered to . . ."

Teacher Note

Support students who struggle to use the word discourteous by asking questions such as “When have you seen someone be discourteous?” and “What might you say or do if someone is discourteous to you?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “The girl next door was discourteous when . . .” or “When Harold was discourteous to his sister, he . . .”

Support students who struggle to use the word prejudice by asking questions such as “When have you seen an example of prejudice or heard about someone facing prejudice?” and “What might you say to someone who you saw acting in a prejudiced way?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “Nayla showed prejudice against men when . . .” or “Richard Wright experienced prejudice when . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“I hunger to see my favorite band in concert”]? Why?

Use the same procedure to have partners work together to create sentences that use the words discourteous and prejudice.

EXTENSION

Explore an Interesting Word: Episode

Write the word episode where everyone can see it. Show the “Author’s Note” on page 32 of Richard Wright and the Library Card. Read the title aloud and tell the students that on this page the author gives more information about Richard Wright’s life and explains where the idea for the book came from. Tell the students that as you read from this part of the book, you want them to listen for an interesting word—the word episode—and think about what it might mean.

Read page 32 aloud. Then reread the first sentence, emphasizing the word episode. Ask:

Q Based on what you heard, what do you think the word episode might mean?

PROMPT: “I think the word episode might mean . . .”

If necessary, explain that an episode is an “event or series of events in a person’s life.” Explain that gaining access to the public library in Memphis was an important episode, or event, in Richard’s life.

Introduce Bundle, Selfless, and Resilient

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words bundle, selfless, and resilient
- Review the suffix -less
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in the discussions
- Contribute to group work
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Taught

bundle (p. 19)

Bundle means “wrap or tie things together.”

selfless

Selfless means “unselfish, or without thought for yourself.” When you are selfless, you are more concerned about others than about yourself.

resilient

Resilient means “able to recover from or adjust to misfortune or change.”

INTRODUCE AND USE BUNDLE

1 Introduce and Define Bundle

Briefly review Uncle Jed’s Barbershop.

Show pages 16–17. Point to Sarah Jean and her parents in the illustration on page 17, and review that Sarah Jean’s parents take her to the hospital and find out that she needs an operation. They cannot afford to pay for it, so they take Sarah Jean home.

Then show pages 18–19 and read the first sentence on page 19 aloud, emphasizing the word bundled.

Tell the students that bundle is the first word they will learn today, and explain and that bundle means “wrap or tie things together.” Point out that Sarah Jean’s mother bundles, or wraps, Sarah Jean in a blanket to keep her warm on the way home.

Display word card 82 (C WA5) and have the students say the word bundle.

Materials

- Uncle Jed’s Barbershop
- Word card 82 (WA5)
- Word card 83 (WA6)
- Word card 84 (WA7)

Teacher Note

You might explain that the words bundle and wrap are synonyms. If you started a synonym chart, add the words to it.

2 Discuss Bundling Up

Explain that when we wrap ourselves in a blanket or put on warm clothing because it is cold, we say we are “bundling up.”

Discuss as a class:

Q When have you had to bundle up? What did you bundle up in?

Click 1 on word card 82 (WA5) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

bundle

PROMPT 1:

I had to bundle up when . . .

and

I bundled up in . . .

1 2 3 4

WA5

Teacher Note

You might tell the students that the word bundle can also be a noun. Explain that a group of things that is wrapped or tied together is sometimes called a bundle (for example, a bundle of newspapers).

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, name other things people bundle, for example, sticks, tree limbs, pieces of wood, letters, postcards, photographs, dollar bills, and magazines. Then repeat the question.

3 Discuss Bundling Letters

Review that in addition to “wrap,” bundle means “tie things together.” Explain that sometimes people use string or twine to bundle newspapers, or tie them together. Bundling them makes them easier to store or carry. Sometimes people use rubber bands to bundle their computer cords under their desks to keep the cords tidy.

Discuss as a class:

Q What else might people bundle?

Click 2 to reveal the prompt and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “People might bundle [sticks].”

Ask the students to imagine they have a bunch of letters from a friend. They put the letters into a neat stack so that they can bundle them. Ask:

 Q What might you use to bundle the letters? [Click 3 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I might use [ribbon] to bundle the letters.”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by discussing as a class:

Q Why might you bundle the letters?

Click 4 to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 4: “I might bundle the letters because . . .”

Point to the word bundle and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE SELFLESS

4 Introduce and Define Selfless and Review the Suffix -less

Show pages 18–19 of Uncle Jed’s Barbershop again, and review that Sarah Jean’s father finds Uncle Jed and tells him about the operation Sarah Jean needs. Read the second paragraph on page 19 and the first paragraph on page 21 aloud.

Tell the students that selfless is the next word they will learn today, and explain that selfless means “unselfish, or without thought for yourself.” When you are selfless, you are more concerned about others than about yourself. Review that Uncle Jed has been saving every penny so that he can open a barbershop. When he uses his money to pay for Sarah Jean’s surgery instead, he is being selfless, or unselfish. He is more concerned about Sarah Jean’s health than about his barbershop.

Display word card 83 (🔊 WA6) and have the students say the word selfless.

Point to the suffix -less in selfless and review that -less is a suffix that means “without.” Point out that adding the suffix -less to the word self makes the new word selfless, which means “without self.” When people are selfless, they act without thinking about themselves—they focus on the needs of others.

5 Play “Selfless or Not Selfless?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Selfless or Not Selfless?” Explain that selfless people sacrifice (give up) something they care about to help others. Give a few examples of selfless acts that you know about.

TEKS 3.C.iii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3

Teacher Note

You might explain that the words selfless and unselfish are synonyms, and add the words to the synonym chart. You might also explain that the words selfless and selfish are antonyms, and add them to the antonym chart.

Teacher Note

You may want to remind the students that they discussed the suffix -less when they learned the words thoughtless (“without thought for the feelings or needs of others”) and motionless (“without motion, still, or not moving”). If you started a chart of -less words, add the word selfless to it.

You might say:

"A friend of mine went to Ghana, a country in western Africa, as a volunteer. He taught people there how to irrigate, or create a watering system for, their crops. He was being selfless because he gave up his job and three months of his time to share what he knew with people in another country. Firefighters and police officers are selfless because they are willing to sacrifice their lives to save or help other people."

Tell the students that you will describe something that a person is doing, and partners will decide if the person is being selfless and why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Rebecca and six of her friends are going on a rafting trip. When they get to the river, they find out that only six people can fit on the raft. Rebecca volunteers to stay behind so her friends can go.

Ask:

Q Is Rebecca being selfless? Why do you think that? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "[Rebecca] [is/is not] being selfless because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Ben donates most of his old clothes to charity, but he keeps an old sweatshirt he especially likes.
- A factory owner decides to close her factory because pollution from the factory is hurting the environment. All of her workers lose their jobs.

Discuss as a class:

Q When have you, or when has someone you know, been selfless?

Click 2 on word card 83 (WA6) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: "[I] was selfless when . . ."

Point to the word selfless and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE RESILIENT

6 Introduce and Define Resilient

Show pages 22–23 of Uncle Jed’s Barbershop and remind the students that a few years after Sarah Jean’s operation, Uncle Jed has almost enough money to open his barbershop. Read pages 22–25 aloud.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is resilient. Explain that resilient means “able to recover from or adjust to misfortune or change.” Explain that Uncle Jed is resilient because he is able to adjust after he loses his money. He does not give up his dream. Instead he starts saving money again.

Display word card 84 (🗨️ WA7) and have the students say the word resilient.

7 Discuss Being Resilient

Review that a resilient person recovers from a bad situation or is able to adjust to it. Give a few examples of people you know who are resilient.

You might say:

“My sister’s best friend, Molly, moved away last summer. My sister was sad and lonely for a while, but in time she made new friends. She and Molly talk to each other once a week and they text and e-mail in between. My sister is resilient because she was able to recover from the disappointment of her friend moving away. My niece fell off her bike and broke her arm. Some children would be afraid to ride their bikes again after an accident like that, but not my niece. She went riding the very day her cast came off. She was resilient because she was able to get over her fear of getting hurt and ride her bike.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you, or when has someone you know, been resilient? [Pause; click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[I] was resilient when . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word resilient and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you been able to recover, or feel better, after something sad or disappointing happened to you?” and “When have you been able to adjust to a change at home or at school?”

Day 4

Review Bundle, Selfless, and Resilient

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the "Week 14 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words bundle, selfless, and resilient from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include one another and contribute to group work
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Reviewed

bundle

Bundle means "wrap or tie things together."

selfless

Selfless means "unselfish, or without thought for yourself." When you are selfless, you are more concerned about others than about yourself.

resilient

Resilient means "able to recover from or adjust to misfortune or change."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Which of yesterday's words might you use when you are talking with your friends or family? How might you use the word or words?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA8) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [bundle] when I am talking with [my little brother]. I might say . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that partners will work together to create sentences that use the vocabulary words.

Point to the word bundle on the daily review cards and review that bundle means “wrap or tie things together.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word bundle in a sentence? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few pairs share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“I bundled up in my warm jacket”]? Why?

Use the same procedure to have partners work together to use selfless and resilient in sentences.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What might someone bundle?” and “What might someone use to bundle a stack of papers?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “Jayden carefully bundled . . .” or “I bundled up in . . .”

Teacher Note

Support students who struggle to use the word selfless by asking questions such as “When have you seen someone be selfless?” and “What might a selfless person do?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “The selfless person gave up . . .” or “Celia was selfless when she offered to . . .”

Support students who struggle to use the word resilient by asking questions such as “Why might a doctor say a patient is resilient?” and “When have you been resilient after something unfortunate happened?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “The doctor said Mason is resilient because . . .” or “Lanie was resilient after . . .”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 13 and 14, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 14 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- Ongoing review activity (WA10)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include one another and contribute to group work
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Reviewed

conspicuous

Conspicuous means “obvious or noticeable.” Something that is conspicuous stands out and can be seen easily.

motionless

Motionless means “without motion, still, or not moving.”

resilient

Resilient means “able to recover from or adjust to misfortune or change.”

thoughtful

Thoughtful means “full of thought for the feelings or needs of others.”

thoughtless

Thoughtless means “without thought for the feelings or needs of others.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Activity “Describe the Character”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Describe the Character.” Review that you will show a story; then partners will discuss which vocabulary word best describes the main character in the story and explain why they think so.

Display the ongoing review activity (🎧 WA10) and begin the activity:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Tell the students that the main character in the first story is Theo; then point to the story and read it aloud:

- Story 1: Theo is at his cousin's surprise party. He is waiting behind the couch, trying very hard not to move a muscle. If Theo moves, his cousin may hear him and the surprise would be ruined.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word best describes Theo? Why? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “The word [motionless] best describes Theo because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word.

conspicuous	motionless	resilient	thoughtful	thoughtless
-------------	------------	-----------	------------	-------------

STORY 1: Theo is at his cousin's surprise party. He is waiting behind the couch, trying very hard not to move a muscle. If Theo moves, his cousin may hear him and the surprise would be ruined.

❶ ❷ ❸ ❹ ❺

WA10

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following stories:

- Story 2: Glenna is working on an art project. She wants to use the blue paint, but John has the only bottle. She takes the bottle from John's desk, even though he is still using it. (thoughtless)
- Story 3: Trevor dyes his hair purple and green for Crazy Hair Day. When he gets to school, Trevor notices that he stands out—he is the only one with crazy hair. Crazy Hair Day is not until next week! (conspicuous)

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA10) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word delectable earlier and that delectable means “delicious, or very good to taste or smell.”

- Story 4: Asia falls and scrapes her knee during the soccer game. She gets right up and keeps playing. (resilient)
- Story 5: Malcolm knows his sister will be hungry after her basketball game, so he makes her a delectable turkey sandwich for lunch. (thoughtful)

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Can the students identify the vocabulary words?
- Do their explanations show that they understand the words' meanings?
- Are they using the words accurately in writing and in conversations outside of the vocabulary lessons?

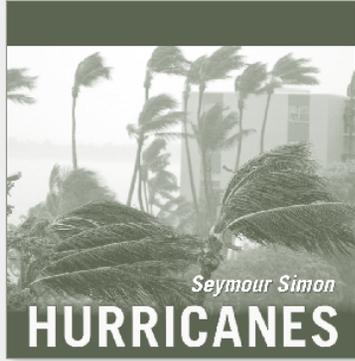

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 190 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice through an activity modeled on “Does That Make Sense?” (see Week 1, Day 5, Step 2).

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing shades of meaning (review)
- Recognizing words with multiple meanings (review)
- Recognizing synonyms (review)
- Using context to determine word meanings (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the book.
- Students review shades of meaning and words with multiple meanings.
- Students review synonyms.
- Students review using context to determine word meanings.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students analyze the effect of their behavior on others and on the group work.
- Students develop the skills of including everyone in and contributing to group work, and using prompts to extend the conversation.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, preview pages 10–11 of Hurricanes. (You did not read these pages during the Making Meaning lesson.) You will read aloud from page 11 to introduce the word typical.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, preview pages 12–13 and 16–17 of Hurricanes. (You did not read these pages during the Making Meaning lesson.) You will read aloud from pages 13 and 16 to introduce the words calamity and mobile.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 15 Word Cards” (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Moist, Contact, and Typical

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words moist, contact, and typical
- Review shades of meaning
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include one another and contribute to group work

Words Taught

moist (p. 8)

Moist means “damp or slightly wet.”

contact (p. 8)

When you come in contact with something, you touch it. Contact also means “communicate or get in touch with someone.”

typical (p. 11)

If something is typical, it is like others of its type. It is a good example of its kind.

INTRODUCE AND USE MOIST

1 Introduce and Define Moist and Review Shades of Meaning

Briefly review Hurricanes.

Show pages 8–9 and remind the students that this part of the book describes how hurricanes form. Then read the following sentence from the second paragraph on page 8 aloud, emphasizing the word moist: “They begin life in the warm, moist atmosphere over tropical ocean waters.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is moist, and explain that moist means “damp or slightly wet.” Point out that something that is moist is not very wet or soaking wet. It is just a little wet, or damp. Explain that the atmosphere in which hurricanes form is moist, or a little wet.

Display word card 85 (WA1) and have the students say the word moist.

Materials

- Hurricanes
- Word card 85 (WA1)
- Word card 86 (WA2)
- Word card 87 (WA3)

Teacher Note

If you started a “Just the Right Word” chart, add the word moist and its definition to it.

You might explain that moist and damp are synonyms. If you started a synonym chart, add the words moist and damp to it.

You might also explain that the word moisture (“small amounts of water in the air or on a surface”) is related to the word moist.

ELPS 1.A.ii

Step 2 and first Teacher Note on p. 328

 ELL Note

You might have the students touch a clean cloth or sponge that is moist and one that is soaking wet.

 ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of contact is contacto.

2 Play “Moist or Soaking Wet?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Moist or Soaking Wet?” Explain that you will describe something; then partners will decide whether it is moist or soaking wet and explain why.

Begin by reading the following description aloud:

Q The damp soil of a houseplant: moist or soaking wet? Why? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

moist

PROMPT 1: I think it is [moist/soaking wet] because . . .

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I think it is [moist/soaking wet] because . . .”

Q Your hair right after you get out of the swimming pool: moist or soaking wet? Why? [Point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Q A sponge that is a little wet: moist or soaking wet? Why? [Point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Point to the word moist and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE CONTACT

3 Introduce and Define Contact

Show pages 8–9 again and review that hurricanes begin “over tropical ocean waters.” Then read the following sentence from the second paragraph on page 8 aloud, emphasizing the word contact: “First, the atmosphere gathers heat energy through contact with ocean waters that are above 80 degrees Fahrenheit to a depth of about two hundred feet.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is contact. Explain that when you come in contact with something, you touch it. Point to the ocean in the photograph on page 9, and explain that the atmosphere and ocean waters contact, or touch, each other.

Display word card 86 (🌐 WA2) and have the students say the word contact.

4 Discuss Coming in Contact with Something

Remind the students that when you come in contact with something, you touch it.

Ask:

Q When have you come in contact with something very hot? What did you do?

Click 1 on word card 86 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “I came in contact with something very hot when [I was helping my grandma cook]. I . . .”

Then ask:

Q When have you come in contact with something slippery? What did you do? [Click 2 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I came in contact with something slippery when [I was at the beach]. I . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Have the students use their hands to make contact with the rug.

Ask:

Q What did you feel when you made contact with the rug? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “When I made contact with the rug . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

5 Discuss Another Meaning of Contact

Review that words can have more than one meaning. Explain that the word contact has two different meanings. Review that when you come in contact with something, you touch it; then tell the students that contact can also mean “communicate or get in touch with someone.”

Explain that when you contact someone, you might text or call the person on the phone, write a letter or an email, or talk to the person face-to-face.

ELL Note

Using a photograph or other visual image as you discuss a word’s meaning is especially helpful to English Language Learners, who may struggle with a verbal explanation.

Ask:

Q How might you contact someone who lives far away? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “I might contact someone who lives far away by . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Who is someone famous you would like to contact? How might you contact that person? [Pause; click 5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: “I would like to contact [the president]. I might contact him by . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word contact and review the pronunciation and meanings of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE TYPICAL

6 Introduce and Define Typical

Show pages 10–11 of Hurricanes and explain that this part of the book describes what a hurricane is like at different stages of the storm. Read the second paragraph on page 11 aloud, emphasizing the word typical when you come to it.

Tell the students that typical is the next word they will learn today, and explain that if something is typical, it is like others of its type. It is a good example of its kind. Explain that a hurricane that produces “six inches to over a foot of rain across a region,” is typical, or a good example, of the amount of rain a hurricane usually produces.

Display word card 87 (WA3) and have the students say the word typical.

7 Discuss Typical Things

Review that something that is typical is like others of its type. It is a good example of its kind. Give a few examples of typical things.

You might say:

“A typical school, or a school that is like most other schools, has teachers, students, classrooms, and a library. A typical summer in our part of the country is hot and dry. That is what summers here are usually like. During a typical Saturday, or a Saturday like most other Saturdays, I go for a long hike and then have dinner with my family.”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of typical is típico/a.

Ask:

Q What is a typical Saturday like for you? [Click 1 on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “On a typical Saturday . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss:

Q What is a typical school morning like for you? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “On a typical school morning . . .”

Point to the word typical and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Further Discuss Contacting People

Remind the students that contact can mean “communicate or get in touch with someone.” Ask:

Q How would you contact me if you had to go home during lunch? Why?

PROMPT: “If I had to go home during lunch, I would contact you by [calling you from the office] because . . .”

Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking. Use the same procedure to discuss the following question.

Q If you and your sister were both at home, how would you contact her? Why?

PROMPT: “If my sister and I were both at home, I would contact her by [going to her room] because . . .”

Day 2

Review Moist, Contact, and Typical

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words moist, contact, and typical from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in the discussions
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Reviewed

moist

Moist means “damp or slightly wet.”

contact

When you come in contact with something, you touch it. Contact also means “communicate or get in touch with someone.”

typical

If something is typical, it is like others of its type. It is a good example of its kind.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

- Q If you were writing a story about a day at the beach, which of these words might you use? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

moistcontacttypical

PROMPT 1: If I were writing a story about a day at the beach, I might use the word _____ because . . .

WA4

PROMPT 1: “If I were writing a story about a day at the beach, I might use the word [typical] because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Which Word Am I?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Which Word Am I?” Direct the students’ attention to the daily review cards (WA4). Review that you will describe one of the words; then partners will discuss which word you are describing and explain why they think so. Then you will ask a few pairs to share their thinking with the class.

Begin by reading the following description aloud:

- I’m how you would describe the ground after a light sprinkle of rain.

Give the students a few moments to think about the clue. Then ask:

Q Which word am I? Why do you think that? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I think the word is [moist] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following clues:

- I’m what you do when you send a note to your cousin. (contact)
- I’m how you would describe a tree that has a trunk, branches, and leaves. (typical)
- I’m what a pen does to paper when you are writing. (contact)
- I’m how you would describe a building that has doors and windows. (typical)
- I’m how you would describe your shirt when you get a few drops of water on it. (moist)

Day 3

Introduce Calamity, Mobile, and Wobbly

Materials

- Hurricanes
- Word card 88 (WA5)
- Word card 89 (WA6)
- “Sentence from Hurricanes” chart (WA7)
- Word card 90 (WA8)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words calamity, mobile, and wobbly
- Review synonyms
- Review using context to determine word meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in the discussions
- Use prompts to extend a conversation

Words Taught

calamity

A calamity is a “terrible disaster.”

mobile (p. 16)

Mobile means “able to move or be moved from place to place.”

wobbly (p. 19)

If something is wobbly, it moves unsteadily from side to side.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of calamity is calamidad.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words calamity and disaster to it.

ELL Note

You might explain that a disaster is an “event that causes a lot of damage or suffering.”

INTRODUCE AND USE CALAMITY

1 Introduce and Define Calamity and Review Synonyms

Show pages 12–13 of Hurricanes. Explain that this part of the book describes a hurricane that struck the city of Galveston, Texas, in 1900; then read pages 12–13 aloud.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is calamity. Explain that a calamity is a “terrible disaster” and that calamity and disaster are synonyms. Point to the photographs on pages 12–13 and explain that the Galveston hurricane was a calamity, or terrible disaster, because so many people were killed and so many homes were destroyed.

Display word card 88 ( WA5) and have the students say the word calamity.

2 Do the Activity “Is It a Calamity?”

Review that a calamity is a “terrible disaster,” and explain that we use the word calamity to talk about situations in which there is a great deal of destruction or loss of life. Tell the students that you will describe a situation; then partners will discuss whether the situation is or is not a calamity and explain why they think so. Tell the students to be ready to share their partners’ thinking with the class.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- An earthquake strikes. It causes cans to fall off shelves in a few supermarkets.

Ask:

Q Is this situation a calamity? Why? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

calamity

PROMPT 1: This situation [is/is not] a calamity because . . .

1 2

WA5

PROMPT 1: “This situation [is/is not] a calamity because . . .”

After partners have talked, click 2 on word card 88 (WA5) to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their partners’ thinking with the class:

PROMPT 2: “[Cilia] said that this situation [is/is not] a calamity because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- A fire sweeps through a town. Nearly every building is damaged or destroyed, and hundreds of residents are left without shelter.

Point to the word calamity and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

ELL Note

Explain that a resident is a “person who lives in a particular place.”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of mobile is móvil.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the antonym of mobile is immobile and that immobile means “not able to move.”

INTRODUCE AND USE MOBILE

3 Introduce and Define Mobile

Show pages 16–17 of Hurricanes. Explain that scientists rate hurricanes and put them into one of five categories, depending on how strong their winds are. Explain that a category 1 hurricane is the weakest, and that a category 5 hurricane is the strongest and does the most damage. Read the section called “Category 2” aloud, emphasizing the word mobile when you come to it.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is mobile. Explain that mobile means “able to move or be moved from place to place.” Explain that a mobile home is a home, sometimes on wheels, that can be moved from place to place. Explain that a category 2 hurricane might cause a mobile home to blow over because mobile homes may not be as sturdy as other types of homes.

Display word card 89 (🌐 WA6) and have the students say the word mobile.

4 Play “Mobile or Not Mobile?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Mobile or Not Mobile?” Explain that you will name an object; then partners will discuss whether or not the object is mobile—able to move or be moved from place to place—and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading aloud the following:

- A bicycle

Ask:

Q Is a bicycle mobile or not mobile? Why? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[A bicycle] is [mobile/not mobile] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following objects:

- An oak tree
- A boat
- A mountain

Point to the word mobile and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE WOBBLY

5 Introduce and Define Wobbly and Review Using Context to Determine Word Meanings

Show pages 18–19 of Hurricanes and remind the students that the more tightly packed a hurricane is, the stronger its winds become. Read the following sentence from the first paragraph on page 19 aloud, emphasizing the word wobbly: “When skaters spin with outstretched arms, the spin is slow and skaters may be wobbly and unsteady.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is wobbly. Display the “Sentences from Hurricanes” chart (WA7) and explain that this is the sentence you just read. Point to the word wobbly and underline it. Remind the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word like wobbly by rereading the sentence that includes the word to look for clues. Explain that as you read the sentence again, you want the students to think about what the word wobbly might mean and which words in the sentence are clues to its meaning.

Read the sentence aloud twice. Ask:

Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word wobbly might mean? [Point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Sentence from Hurricanes

When skaters spin with outstretched arms, the spin is slow and skaters may be wobbly and unsteady.

PROMPT 1: I think wobbly means _____.

PROMPT 2: The word _____ is a clue to the meaning of wobbly because . . .

WA7

PROMPT 1: “I think wobbly means [‘unsteady’].”

Q Which word in the sentence is a clue to the meaning of wobbly? [Point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The word [unsteady] is a clue to the meaning of wobbly because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Circle the context clues on the chart as the students identify them.

If necessary, explain that if something is wobbly, it moves unsteadily from side to side. Point out that the word “unsteady” is a clue to the meaning of wobbly.

Display word card 90 (🗨️ WA8) and have the students say the word wobbly.

6 Act Out and Discuss Wobbly

Tell the students that sometimes a chair or table is wobbly, or moves unsteadily from side to side. Ask the students to watch you as you act out pretending to sit in a wobbly chair. Then ask:

Q What did you see me do when I pretended to sit in the wobbly chair?

Click 1 on word card 90 (WA8) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “When you pretended to sit in the wobbly chair, you . . .”

Ask a volunteer to act out walking on a tightrope in a wobbly way. Then ask:

 Q What did you see [Rafael] do when he pretended to walk on a tightrope in a wobbly way? [Click 2 on WA8 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “When [Rafael] pretended to walk on a tightrope in a wobbly way, he . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word wobbly and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSION

Explore the Prefix im- and the Word Immobile

Write the word mobile where everyone can see it, and review that mobile means “able to move or be moved from place to place.” Add the prefix im- to the word mobile and explain that im- is a prefix that means “not.” Explain that when im- is added to the word mobile, it makes the new word immobile, which means “not able to move or be moved from place to place.” Explain that mobile and immobile are antonyms.

Have the students discuss the meanings of other words that use the prefix im-, such as immature, impatient, impolite, impossible, and imperfect.

Review Calamity, Mobile, and Wobbly

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words calamity, mobile, and wobbly from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in the discussions

Words Reviewed

calamity

A calamity is a “terrible disaster.”

mobile

Mobile means “able to move or be moved from place to place.”

wobbly

If something is wobbly, it moves unsteadily from side to side.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Which of yesterday’s words do you think was interesting or fun to talk about? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA9) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA9)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [calamity] was [interesting/fun] to talk about because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Discuss “Would You?” Questions

Tell the students that you will ask questions that include one of yesterday’s words and a word they learned earlier in the year.

Point to the word calamity and ask:

 Q Would you call it a calamity if the grocery store discontinued selling your favorite cereal? Why? [Pause; click 2 on WA9 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] call it a calamity if the grocery store discontinued selling my favorite cereal because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following questions:

[mobile]

 Q Would you want your mom to buy a battered car that was no longer mobile? Why? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I [would/would not] want my mom to buy a battered car that was no longer mobile because . . .”

[wobbly]

 Q Would you inform your friend if a chair at your house had a wobbly leg? Why? [Pause; click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “I [would/would not] inform my friend if a chair at my house had a wobbly leg because . . .”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word discontinue earlier and that discontinue means “not continue something, or stop doing, using, or making something.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word battered earlier, and that when something is battered, it is worn down and damaged from age and use.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word inform earlier and that inform means “give or tell information.”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in the discussions

Words Reviewed

bundle

Bundle means “wrap or tie things together.”

dab

Dab means “touch something lightly and gently, usually with something soft.”

desert/deserter

Desert means “abandon, or leave someone or something that should not be left behind.” A deserter is a “person who deserts.”

heave

Heave means “pull, throw, or lift with a lot of effort.”

reverie

A reverie is a “pleasant daydream.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “What’s the Missing Word?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “What’s the Missing Word?” Remind the students that you will read a sentence that has a word missing. Partners must decide which of the vocabulary words is the missing word and explain why they think so.

Display the ongoing review activity (🗉 WA11) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first sentence. Point to the sentence and read it aloud.
 - Sentence 1: Cory found a kitten that someone had _____, so he gave it some milk and took it to a shelter.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA10)
- Ongoing review activity (WA11)

Teacher Note

Each sentence on the ongoing review activity (WA11) has a corresponding number: the first sentence is ❶; the second sentence is ❷; the third sentence is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the sentence.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the sentence with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q What's the missing word? Why do you think so? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: "I think [deserted] is the missing word because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place.

bundle	dab	desert/deserter	heave	reverie

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following sentences:

- Sentence 2: When Jovie spilled a bit of ketchup on the carpet, she _____ at it with a cloth so there would not be a stain. (dabbed)
- Sentence 3: Malik helped his uncle _____ the big couch through the door. (heave)
- Sentence 4: Sienna was lost in a beautiful _____ in which she was enjoying a tranquil vacation in Hawaii. (reverie)
- Sentence 5: Before Carter put his letters away in a desk drawer, he _____ them so that they would stay together. (bundled)

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word tranquil earlier and that tranquil means "calm or peaceful."

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing synonyms (review)
- Recognizing shades of meaning (review)
- Using a dictionary, glossary, and thesaurus (review)
- Recognizing antonyms (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the book.
- Students review synonyms and antonyms.
- Students review shades of meaning.
- Students use a thesaurus to find synonyms.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students work responsibly during group work.
- Students include everyone in and contribute to the group work.

1 DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 1, review the more strategy practice activity “Use a Print Thesaurus” on page 350. Collect enough thesauruses for partners to share during the activity.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, preview pages 28–29 of Global Warming. (You did not read these pages during the Making Meaning lesson.) You will read aloud from these pages to introduce the words reuse, efficient, and inefficient.
- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 3, review the more strategy practice activity “Play ‘Antonym Match’” on page 358.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 191 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 4” answer sheet (IA1); see page 195 of the Assessment Resource Book. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.
- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 5, make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1); see page 198 of the Assessment Resource Book. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the following materials: “Week 16 Word Cards” (BLM2) and “Week 16 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Currently, Vast, and Convert

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words currently, vast, and convert
- Review synonyms
- Review shades of meaning
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in and contribute to the group work

Words Taught

currently (p. 9)

Currently means “now or at the present time.”

vast (p. 9)

Vast means “very large in number or area.”

convert (p. 10)

Convert means “change from one form or use into another.”

Materials

- Global Warming
- Word card 91 (WA1)
- Word card 92 (WA2)
- Word card 93 (WA3)

INTRODUCE AND USE CURRENTLY

1 Introduce and Define Currently

Briefly review Global Warming.

Show pages 8–9 and review that this part of the book describes why the climate is changing. Read the first sentence on page 9 aloud, emphasizing the word current.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is currently, a form of the word current. Explain that currently means “now or at the present time.” Explain that currently, or at the present time, Earth is warming. Review that according to a 2007 report, humans are responsible for the warming.

Display word card 91 (WA1) and have the students say the word currently.

2 Discuss Things That Are Happening Currently

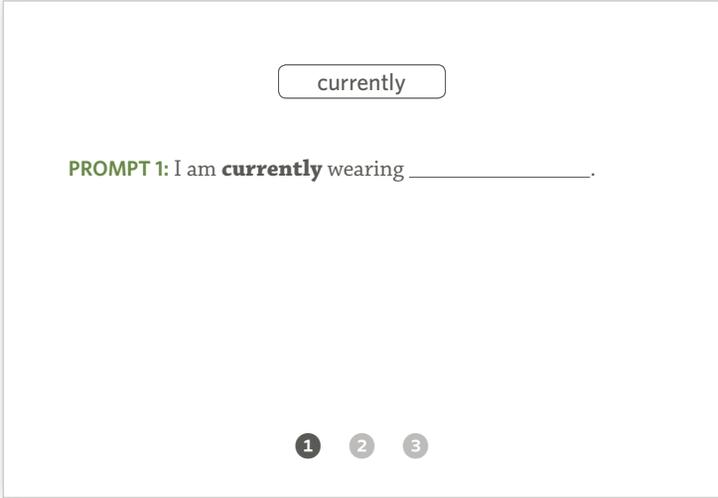

Tell the students that partners will discuss things that are happening currently, or right now. Give a few examples of things that are happening currently.

You might say:

“We are currently, or right now, in school. Currently, or at the present time, it is winter. I am currently holding a book.”

Ask:

-  Q What are you currently wearing? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I am currently wearing [a T-shirt, jeans, and tennis shoes].”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Repeat the procedure to discuss the remaining questions.

-  Q What is the weather currently like? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The weather is currently [cloudy and cold].”

-  Q What kind of book are you currently reading? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I am currently reading a [fantasy] book because . . .”

Point to the word currently and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE VAST

3 Introduce and Define Vast and Review Synonyms and Shades of Meaning

Show pages 8–9 again. Review that the author of Global Warming tells readers that humans are responsible for much of the current global warming. Read the following sentences from the first paragraph on page 9 aloud, emphasizing the word vast: “We cut down huge numbers of trees, drive hundreds of millions of cars and trucks, and burn vast amounts of coal and oil. All these activities contribute to a huge increase in greenhouse gases.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is vast. Explain that vast means “very large in number or area.” Point to the cars in the photograph on page 8 and explain that we use vast, or very large, amounts of coal and oil to fuel the vast number of cars, trucks, and other machines we manufacture.

Remind the students that something that is vast is not just large, it is very large, and that we use the word vast to describe things that are “very large in number or area.”

Display word card 92 (WA2) and have the students say the word vast.

4 Play “Does That Make Sense?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Does That Make Sense?” Explain that you will read a scenario that includes the word vast. Partners will then discuss whether or not the word vast makes sense in the scenario and explain why they think so.

Begin the game by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Thomas has built two model airplanes. He told his dad, “We need to build a special shelf to hold my vast collection of planes.”

Ask:

Q Does the word vast make sense in the scenario? Why do you think that? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “The word vast [does/does not] make sense because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- Ms. Clay plans to sail a boat across the Pacific Ocean. She tells a television reporter, “The voyage will take many weeks because the ocean is vast.”

Point to the word vast and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE CONVERT

5 Introduce and Define Convert

Show pages 10–11 of Global Warming. Remind the students that this part of the book describes how carbon dioxide, a greenhouse gas, is being released into Earth’s atmosphere in large amounts due to our use of machines and factories.

Read the last sentence on page 10 and the first sentence on page 11 aloud, emphasizing the word convert: “Trees, like other green plants, convert carbon dioxide into oxygen. But trees and forests are cut down in huge numbers.”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of vast is vasto/a.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words vast and large to it.

If you started a “Just the Right Word” chart, add the word vast along with its definition, “very large in number or area.”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, signal for their attention. Reread the scenario and explain that the word vast does not make sense because Thomas has built only two model airplanes, which is not a vast, or very large, number of planes. Then read the next scenario and discuss it as a class rather than in pairs.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of convert is convertir.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is convert, and explain that convert means “change from one form or use into another.” Explain that trees absorb carbon dioxide and convert, or change, it into oxygen. But because people are cutting down trees in large numbers, there are fewer trees to do the important work of converting, or changing, carbon dioxide into oxygen.

Display word card 93 ( WA3) and have the students say the word convert.

6 Discuss Converting Things

Tell the students that partners will discuss how they might convert something, or change it from one form or use into another.

First discuss as a class:

Q What might you do to convert water into ice?

Click 1 on word card 93 (WA3) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “To convert [water into ice], I might . . .”

Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss one or both of the following questions:

-  Q What might you do to convert a paper plate into a mask? [Pause; point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.
- Q What might you do to convert a backyard into a water park? [Pause; point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Point to the word convert and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Use a Print Thesaurus

If you started a synonym chart, post the chart where everyone can see it. Alternatively, you might write vocabulary words for which the students have discussed synonyms (for example, delectable, stun, devour, tranquil, contented, uneasy, peculiar, and vast) where everyone can see them. Distribute a thesaurus to each pair of students. Tell the students that today they will have the chance to discuss and practice using a reference book called a thesaurus. Tell partners to look through their thesauruses and talk about what a thesaurus is and when they might use it. Give partners a few minutes to explore and discuss their thesauruses. Then discuss as a class:

Q What is a thesaurus?

Materials

- Student thesauruses, collected ahead

Q When might you use a thesaurus? In what ways might a thesaurus be helpful?

If necessary, explain that a thesaurus is a “book of synonyms, or words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.” Point out that you might use a thesaurus when you are writing to help you find just the right word or to avoid using the same word over and over again.

Have partners open their thesauruses to the first two-page spread of words. Point out that the words are listed alphabetically and that the guide words at the top of each page are the first and last words on the page. Explain that guide words help you find the word you are looking for. Also point out that for each word, the thesaurus provides the word’s part of speech (whether the word is a noun, verb, adjective, or other part of speech) and its synonyms.

Direct the students’ attention to the synonym chart and review that these are sets of synonyms the students have discussed this year. Explain that partners will choose one word from the synonym chart, look it up in the thesaurus, and share the additional synonyms they find with the class.

Give partners a minute or two to choose a word, find it in the thesaurus, and discuss its synonyms. When most pairs have finished talking, discuss the words and their synonyms as a class by asking:

Q What word did you look up? What synonyms did you find for the word?

Follow up by asking:

Q Which of these synonyms are already on our synonym chart? Which synonyms should we add to the chart?

Add the synonyms the students suggest to the chart.

Teacher Note

You might point out that at the beginning of most thesauruses there is helpful information about how to use the thesaurus.

If the students’ thesauruses include other features, such as antonyms or related words, point these out as well.

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you might have the students look up vocabulary words that are not on the synonym chart and add those words and their synonyms to the chart.

Teacher Note

Circulate as the students look up the words. If the students are having trouble finding a word, call for their attention and show the students how to use the guide words to locate a word.

Teacher Note

You might explain that when using a thesaurus, it is a good idea for the students to also look up the synonyms they are finding in a dictionary for more information about the words’ meanings.

Day 2

Review Currently, Vast, and Convert

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words currently, vast, and convert from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in and contribute to the group work

Words Reviewed

currently

Currently means “now or at the present time.”

vast

Vast means “very large in number or area.”

convert

Convert means “change from one form or use into another.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Of the subjects that we are currently studying, which do you enjoy the most? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA4) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA4

PROMPT 1: “Of the subjects that we are currently studying, I enjoy [science] the most because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following questions:

Q Would a daring person explore a vast jungle alone? Why?

Click 2 to reveal the prompt.

PROMPT 2: “A daring person [would/would not] explore a vast jungle alone because . . .”

Q What might you need to convert a field full of weeds into a park?

Click 3 to reveal the prompt.

PROMPT 3: “To convert a field full of weeds into a park, I might need . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Game “I’m Thinking of a Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “I’m Thinking of a Word.” Review that you will think aloud about one of yesterday’s vocabulary words; then partners will discuss which word they think it is and explain why they think that. Begin by reading the following clue aloud, slowly and clearly:

- I’m thinking of a word you might use to describe a very large collection of books.

Ask:

Q Which word am I thinking of? Why do you think that? [Click 4 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “[Mr. Masterson] is thinking of the word [vast] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to continue playing the game, using the following clues:

- I’m thinking of a word that tells what you do when you change a basement in a home into a family game room. (convert)
- I’m thinking of a word that you might use to describe an enormous desert. (vast)
- I’m thinking of a word that you might use when you tell someone where you are right now. (currently)

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word daring earlier and that daring means “bold and willing to take risks.”

Day 3

Introduce Reuse, Efficient, and Inefficient

Materials

- Global Warming
- Word card 94 (WA5)
- Word card 95 (WA6)
- Word card 96 (WA7)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of reuse is reusar.

Teacher Note

You might point to the prefix re- in reuse and explain that re- is a prefix that means “again.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words reuse, efficient, and inefficient
- Review antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Taught

reuse (p. 28)

Reuse means “use again.”

efficient (p. 29)

If someone or something is efficient, the person or thing works well and does not waste time or energy.

inefficient

If someone or something is inefficient, the person or thing does not work well and wastes time or energy.

INTRODUCE AND USE REUSE

1 Introduce and Define Reuse

Show pages 28–29 of Global Warming and explain that this part of the book describes some ways that people can help slow global warming. Read the second bullet on page 28 aloud, emphasizing the word reusable.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is reuse, a form of the word reusable, and explain that reuse means “use again.” Explain that reusing shopping bags and cups—using them again—can help lower the amount of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere by reducing the number of bags and cups that factories must produce.

Display word card 94 ( WA5) and have the students say the word reuse.

2 Discuss Things We Have Reused

Explain that many things can be reused, and give a few examples of things that you have reused.

You might say:

“When I had my baby, my sister gave me the baby clothes that her little girl had outgrown. I reused the clothes, or used them again, with my baby. When I buy shoes, I reuse the shoebox to store photographs. When I buy something that comes in a plastic bag, I reuse the bag. I put trash in it or use it to wrap food for the freezer.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is something that you have reused? How did you reuse it? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

reuse

PROMPT 1: I reused _____ by . . .

WA5

PROMPT 1: “I reused [a yogurt container] by . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word reuse and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE EFFICIENT

3 Introduce and Define Efficient

Show pages 28–29 of Global Warming again and explain that there are many things that families already do to help slow climate change. Then read the second bullet on page 29 aloud, emphasizing the word efficient.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is efficient. Explain that if someone or something is efficient, the person or thing works well and does not waste time or energy. Explain that fluorescent lightbulbs are efficient—they work well without wasting a lot of energy.

Display word card 95 (WA6) and have the students say the word efficient.

4 Discuss Efficient Things and People

Review that things can be efficient—they can work well and not waste time or energy. Give one or two examples of things in the classroom that are efficient.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by providing additional examples of things that can be reused, such as bottles and jars, refillable pencils, books, and things outgrown by older children, such as sports equipment and clothing. You might also ask alternative questions, such as “When have you seen someone at home reuse something?” and “How might you reuse an empty shoe box?”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of efficient is eficiente.

You might say:

"Our pencil sharpener is efficient. It sharpens pencils quickly and sharpens them to a sharp point. The telephone is an efficient way for people to speak to each other. Instead of walking to the office to ask the principal a question, I can just call her on the phone and speak with her right away."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What other things in our classroom are efficient? Why do you say that? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "[The computer] is efficient because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that people can also be efficient. Give one or two examples of people who are efficient.

You might say:

"Our custodian is efficient. He works hard to make sure that our school is very clean at the beginning of each day. The librarian is efficient. She does her job well and she can find any book in the library more quickly than anyone else at school."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Who is someone you think is efficient? Why? [Pause; point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "[The school cook] is efficient because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word efficient and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE INEFFICIENT

5 Introduce and Define Inefficient and Review Antonyms

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is inefficient. Display word card 96 (WA7) and have the students say the word inefficient.

 ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of inefficient is ineficiente.

Explain that efficient and inefficient are antonyms, or “words with opposite meanings.” Then discuss as a class:

Q If something that is efficient works well, and efficient and inefficient are antonyms, how do you think something that is inefficient works?

Click 1 on word card 96 (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “I think something that is inefficient [does not work well].”

If necessary, explain that if someone or something is inefficient, the person or thing does not work well and wastes time or energy.

6 Play “Efficient or Inefficient?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Efficient or Inefficient?” Explain that you will describe a person or an object; then partners will decide whether what you described is efficient or inefficient and explain why they think so. Begin by reading the following description aloud:

- Marta puts a piece of bread in the toaster. Less than one minute later, a perfect piece of toast pops up.

Q Is the toaster efficient or inefficient? Why do you think that? [Click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “[The toaster] is [efficient/inefficient] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss one or more of the following:

- Every time that Farmer Daryl goes out to the field, he forgets one of his tools and has to go back to the shed to get it.
- Chelsea’s shopping cart has an unsteady wheel. It takes a lot of effort to keep the cart moving in the right direction.
- Walter the taxi driver knows the easiest, fastest way to get to any place in the city.

Point to the word inefficient and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

You might point to the prefix in- in inefficient and explain that in- is a prefix that means “not.”

If you started an antonym chart, add the words efficient and inefficient to it.

Materials

- “Antonym Match” chart (WA8)

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Play “Antonym Match”

Display the “Antonym Match” chart (WA8).

PROMPT: _____ is the antonym of _____.

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Antonym Match.” Point to the words in column 1 and explain that these are vocabulary words that the students have learned. Point to the words in column 2 and explain that these are antonyms of the words in column 1. Explain that partners will match each vocabulary word to its antonym.

Point to the word advantage, pronounce it, and have the students pronounce it. Then point to the words in column 2 and ask:

Q Which word in column 2 is an antonym of advantage? Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “[Disadvantage] is an antonym of [advantage].”

After partners have talked, have a volunteer draw a line from the word advantage to the word disadvantage.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining words. When you get to the final two words, have the students discuss them together by asking:

Q Which word in column 2 is an antonym of sociable, and which word is an antonym of thoughtless? Turn to your partner.

EXTENSION

Explore the Prefix re- and the Suffix -able and Discuss the Word Reusable

Write the words use and reuse where everyone can see them, and read each word. Explain that the word reuse is formed by adding the prefix re-, which means “again,” to the beginning of the word use. Review that reuse means “use again.”

Write the word reusable next to the word reuse and read the word. Explain that the word reusable is formed by adding the suffix -able, which means “capable of” to the end of the word reuse. Explain that reusable means “capable of being used again.”

Tell the students that we use the word reusable to describe things that are able to be used again. Give examples of some things that are reusable (for example, canvas bags, water bottles, cloth napkins, or jam jars). Then ask the students to name things that are reusable and explain how they might reuse them.

Teacher Note

You might point out that when you add -able to the word reuse, you drop the e to spell reusable.

Review Reuse, Efficient, and Inefficient

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words reuse, efficient, and inefficient from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in and contribute to the group work

Words Reviewed

reuse

Reuse means “use again.”

efficient

If someone or something is efficient, the person or thing works well and does not waste time or energy.

inefficient

If someone or something is inefficient, the person or thing does not work well and wastes time or energy.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA9)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the “Week 16 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) for each student

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🗂️ WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q If you were writing a report about ways our school might help slow global warming, which of these words might you use? Why?

WA9

PROMPT 1: “If I were writing a report about ways our school might help slow global warming, I might use the word [reuse] because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Review the Game “Which Word Goes With?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Which Word Goes With?” Explain that you will write a word that they know where everyone can see it. Then the students are to think about which of yesterday’s words goes with the word you wrote.

Remind the students that the word you write might go with more than one of the vocabulary words. Tell the students that partners may not always agree and that is fine. Review that what is important is that they explain their thinking.

Teacher Note

For a fully written-out example of this activity, see Week 1, Day 4, Step 2.

Write the word car where everyone can see it, and read the word aloud. Then direct the students' attention to the daily review cards (WA9) and ask:

Q Which of these words do you think goes with car? Why do you think that? [Click 2 on WA9 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I think [reuse] goes with car because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Write the word firefighter where everyone can see it, and read the word aloud. Direct the students' attention to the daily review cards (WA9) and ask:

Q Which of these words do you think goes with firefighter? Why do you think that? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "I think [reuse] goes with firefighter because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

EXTENSION

Explore the Prefix in-

Remind the students that a prefix is a "letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word." Explain that the word inefficient begins with the prefix in-, which means "not." Explain that adding in- to the word efficient, which describes a person or thing that works well and does not waste time or energy, makes the new word inefficient, which describes a person or thing that does not work well and wastes time or energy.

Have the students discuss the meanings of other words that use the prefix in-, such as incomplete, incurable, inescapable, inexpensive, and insane.

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble making associations, give examples of associations you might make and why. For example, say "I think efficient goes with car because cars are an efficient way to get around. They get you to where you want to go quickly. I think inefficient goes with car, too, because cars use a lot of fuel and contribute to global warming. I think reuse can also go with car, because people can buy cars that other people have owned and reuse them."

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble making associations, give examples of associations you might make, or ask questions such as "How might the word reuse go with firefighter?" "What might a firefighter be able to reuse?" "How might the word efficient go with firefighter?" "What might a firefighter do efficiently, or without wasting time or energy?" and "How might the word inefficient go with firefighter?" "What might a firefighter do inefficiently, or in a way that wastes time or energy?"

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 15 and 16, you might distribute a copy of the "Week 16 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3) to each student.

Discourteous means “not courteous, or disrespectful or rude.”

hunch

Hunch means “bend your body into an arch or hump.” A hunch is a “feeling, not based on facts, that something will happen or is true.”

suit

Something that suits you is right for you or meets your needs.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “What Might You Say or Do?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Might You Say or Do?” Review that you will describe a situation; then partners will use the vocabulary words to talk about what they might say or do in that situation.

Begin by reading the following situation aloud:

- Your friend says that she wants to convert her new pants into shorts.

Then ask:

Q What might you say or do if your friend says that she wants to convert her new pants into shorts? Why? [Click 1 on WA10 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students’ explanations show that they understand the vocabulary words’ meanings?
- Can they use the words to explain their thinking?
- Are they using the words they are learning in their writing?

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 191 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word’s meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word’s meaning, provide further practice by having the students create a picture card of the word with a definition in their own words on the back of the card. Explain that the picture card should illustrate what the word means. You might model the process by drawing a picture that illustrates the meaning of one of this week’s review words.

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

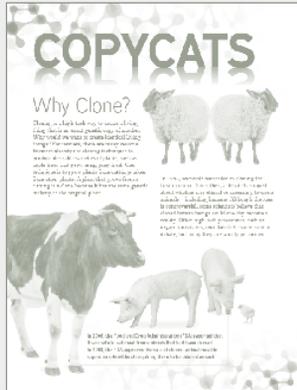

Before continuing with the week 17 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students’ understanding of words taught in Weeks 13–16 using the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 4” answer sheet (IA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see “Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment” on page 192 of the Assessment Resource Book.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate her understanding of words taught in Weeks 13–16 using the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see “Completing the Student Self-assessment” on page 196 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing antonyms (review)
- Using context to determine word meanings (review)
- Using the suffix -er to determine word meanings (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the articles.
- Students review antonyms.
- Students review using context and the suffix -er to determine word meanings.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students work responsibly during group work.
- Students include everyone in and contribute to the group work.
- Students explain their thinking.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 3, review the more strategy practice activity “Play ‘Use the Clues’” on page 381.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 17 Word Cards” (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Ethical, Unethical, and Desirable

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words ethical, unethical, and desirable
- Review antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Taught

ethical (p. 388)

Ethical means “right according to a society’s beliefs.” When people think something is ethical, they believe it is the right thing to do.

unethical

Unethical means “wrong according to a society’s beliefs.” When people think something is unethical, they believe it is the wrong thing to do.

desirable (p. 389)

Desirable means “worth having or wishing for.”

INTRODUCE AND USE ETHICAL

1 Introduce and Define Ethical

Briefly review “Copycats: Why Clone?”

Remind the students that the article discusses cloning, or creating one living thing that is an exact copy of another. Read the following sentences from the second paragraph of the article on page 388 aloud, emphasizing the word ethical: “In 1996, scientists succeeded in cloning the first mammal. Since then, a debate has raged about whether it is ethical or necessary to clone animals—including humans.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is ethical and explain that ethical means “right according to a society’s beliefs.” Explain that a society is a group of people who live in the same country and share the same laws and customs. Explain that when people in a society think something is ethical, they believe it is the right thing to do.

Point out that people in American society have differing opinions about whether or not cloning is ethical, or right.

Display word cards 97–98 (🗂️ WA1) and click to reveal word card 97. Have the students say the word ethical.

Materials

- “Copycats: Why Clone?” (see page 388)
- Word cards 97–98 (WA1)
- Word card 99 (WA2)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of ethical is ético/a.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, you might review some of the pros and cons of cloning and ask questions such as “Do you think that cloning [plants/animals/people] is ethical? Why?” “Do you think that cloning is ethical if it helps to save people’s lives? Why?” and “Do you think that cloning is ethical if it is used to create a ‘super human’? Why?”

Teacher Note

You might point to the prefix un- in unethical and explain that un- is a prefix that means “not.”

If you started an antonym chart, add the words ethical and unethical to it.

Discuss as a class:

Q Do you think that cloning is ethical? Why or why not?

Click 1 on word cards 97–98 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: I [do/do not] think that cloning is ethical because . . .

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I [do/do not] think that cloning is ethical because . . .”

INTRODUCE AND USE UNETHICAL

2 Introduce and Define Unethical and Review Antonyms

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is unethical. Reveal word card 98 on word cards 97–98 (WA1) and have the students say the word unethical.

Explain that unethical and ethical are antonyms, or “words with opposite meanings.” Then discuss as a class:

Q If ethical means “right according to a society’s beliefs” and ethical and unethical are antonyms, what do you think unethical means?

Click 2 to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I think unethical means [‘wrong according to a society’s beliefs’].”

If necessary, explain that unethical means “wrong according to a society’s beliefs.” Explain that when people think something is unethical, they believe it is the wrong thing to do.

3 Discuss Whether Tulip’s Behavior Is Ethical or Unethical

Explain that we often use the words ethical and unethical to describe a person’s conduct or behavior. If a person behaves in a way that most people believe is right or good, we say that the person’s behavior is ethical. If a person behaves in a way that most people believe is wrong or bad, we say that the person’s behavior is unethical.

Tell the students that you will describe something our friend Tulip does; then partners will discuss whether Tulip’s behavior is ethical or unethical and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Tulip finds a five-dollar bill on the playground. She puts the bill into her pocket and does not tell anyone that she found it.

Ask:

Q Is Tulip’s behavior ethical or unethical? Why? [Click 3 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “Tulip’s behavior is [ethical/unethical] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Repeat the procedure to discuss the remaining scenarios:

- During a math test, Tulip notices that a girl at her table is copying answers from another student’s paper. Tulip does not want the girl to get into trouble, so she does not tell the teacher what she sees.
- Tulip is paying for her lunch in the cafeteria. She notices that the cashier has not charged her for the apple on her tray. Tulip tells the cashier about the mistake and pays the correct amount.

Point to the words ethical and unethical and review the pronunciations and meanings of the words.

INTRODUCE AND USE DESIRABLE

4 Introduce and Define Desirable

Remind the students that some farmers support cloning animals because they hope that it will help them breed better livestock. Read “Building a Better Breed” on the second page of the article aloud, emphasizing the word desirable in the second sentence.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is desirable, and explain that desirable means “worth having or wishing for.” Explain that when farmers breed animals, they want the offspring to have desirable traits like thick wool and high-quality meat—traits that make their animals more desirable, or more worth having.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of desirable is deseable.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the word desirable is related to the word desire, which means “want, wish for, or long for something.”

Display word card 99 (🗨️ WA2) and have the students say the word desirable.

5 Discuss Desirable Things

Remind the students that desirable means “worth having or wishing for.”

Ask:

 Q Which of these animals do you think is more desirable, or worth having, as a pet: a cat or a dog? Why? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think a [cat/dog] is more desirable as a pet because . . .”

 Q If you could have any job you wanted when you grew up, what job would be most desirable? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I think [being a police officer] would be the most desirable job because . . .”

Point to the word desirable and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSION

Discuss Other Words with the Prefix un-

Write the word unethical where everyone can see it. Point to the prefix un- in unethical and explain that un- is a prefix that means “not.” Explain that adding the prefix un- to the beginning of the word ethical makes the new word unethical, which means “not ethical, or wrong according to a society’s beliefs.” Review that ethical and unethical are antonyms.

Have the students use what they know about the prefix un- to discuss the meanings of these words: unbundled, uncomfortable, unconcerned, undesirable, and undignified.

Invite the students to listen and watch for other words that use the prefix un-, and discuss the words the students find.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the meanings of these vocabulary words earlier: bundle (“wrap or tie things together”), desirable (“worth having or wishing for”), and dignified (“confident, calm, and in control”).

Review Ethical, Unethical, and Desirable

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words ethical, unethical, and desirable from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in the group work

Words Reviewed

ethical

Ethical means “right according to a society’s beliefs.” When people think something is ethical, they believe it is the right thing to do.

unethical

Unethical means “wrong according to a society’s beliefs.” When people think something is unethical, they believe it is the wrong thing to do.

desirable

Desirable means “worth having or wishing for.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🔊 WA3) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Does That Make Sense?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Does That Make Sense?” Explain that you will read a scenario that includes one of yesterday’s vocabulary words. Partners will decide whether or not the word makes sense in the scenario and explain why they think so.

Point to the word ethical on the daily review cards (WA3), and explain that the first scenario includes the word ethical.

Then read the following scenario aloud twice:

- The Centerville city council wants to build a zoo in the town park. Mr. Torres is against the zoo project. He thinks it is ethical to keep wild animals penned up in zoos.

Ask:

Q Does the word ethical make sense in the scenario? Why do you think that?
[Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The word [ethical] [does/does not] make sense because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

[unethical]

- Margo’s soccer teammates plan to trip their opponents on purpose in their next game. Margo refuses to do it because she thinks tripping a player on purpose is unethical.

[desirable]

- Mr. Lee is watching a TV show about life in a big city. When it is over, he says, “Living in a big city would be desirable for me, because I hate noise, traffic, and crowds.”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, signal for their attention. Reread the scenario aloud, and explain that ethical does not make sense. If Mr. Torres thinks it is ethical, or right, to keep animals in zoos, then he will be for the zoo project, rather than against it. Then read the scenario that uses the word unethical, and have the students discuss it in pairs.

Introduce Regulate, Influence, and Consume/Consumer

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words regulate, influence, and consume/consumer
- Review using context to determine word meanings
- Review the suffix -er
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Taught

regulate (p. 390)

Regulate means “control or manage, usually through rules or laws.”

influence (p. 390)

Influence means “affect the way someone develops, behaves, or thinks.”

consume/consumer (p. 391)

Consume means “buy and use products and services.” A consumer is a “person who consumes.”

INTRODUCE AND USE REGULATE

1 Introduce and Define Regulate and Review Using Context to Determine Word Meanings

Briefly review “The Debate on Banning Junk Food Ads.” Remind the students that on average children and teenagers see between 13 and 16 food commercials on TV each day. Then read “What’s Junk?” on page 390 aloud, emphasizing the word regulate.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is regulate. Display the “Sentence from ‘The Debate on Banning Junk Food Ads’” chart (WA4) and explain that this is one of the sentences you just read. Point to the word regulate and underline it. Remind the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word, like regulate, by rereading the sentence that includes the word to look for clues.

Explain that as you reread the sentence that includes the word regulate, you want the students to think about what regulate might mean and which words in the sentence are clues to its meaning.

Materials

- “The Debate on Banning Junk Food Ads” (see page 390)
- “Sentence from ‘The Debate on Banning Junk Food Ads’” chart (WA4)
- Word card 100 (WA5)
- Word card 101 (WA6)
- Word card 102 (WA7)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of regulate is regular.

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you might write the sentence from “The Debate on Banning Junk Food Ads” where everyone can see it and underline the word regulate.

Teacher Note

If the students do not immediately determine the meaning of regulate from the context, give them the definition, rather than have them guess.

Teacher Note

You might explain that regulate, control, and manage are synonyms. If you started a synonym chart, add regulate and its synonyms to it.

You might also explain that a writer sometimes provides the definition of a word immediately after the word to make the word's meaning clear to readers. For more practice with context clues, see the more strategy practice activity "Play 'Use the Clues'" on page 381.

Read the sentence aloud twice, slowly and clearly. Then point to the word regulate, and discuss as a class:

Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word regulate might mean?

Point to prompt 1 and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA4

Sentence from "The Debate on Banning Junk Food Ads"

Many people argue that one way to encourage people—especially children—to choose more nutritious foods is to regulate, or control, the messages they receive about food from advertising.

PROMPT 1: I think regulate might mean . . .

PROMPT 2: The words _____ are a clue to the meaning because . . .

PROMPT 1: "I think regulate might mean . . ."

If necessary, explain that regulate means "control or manage."

Then ask:

Q What clue in the sentence helps us figure out that regulate means "control or manage"?

Point to prompt 2 on the chart (WA4) and have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Circle the context clues on the chart as the students identify them.

PROMPT 2: "The words ['or control'] are a clue to the meaning because . . ."

If necessary, tell the students that the words "or control" are a clue to the meaning of regulate. Explain that some people want the government to regulate, or control, junk food ads on TV to help people choose more nutritious foods.

Display word card 100 (WA5) and have the students say the word regulate.

2 Discuss Things That Might Be Regulated

Explain that something that is regulated is controlled or managed, usually through rules or laws set up by the government or a person with authority or power. For example, as the article tells us, some people want the United States government to regulate junk food ads. A city government regulates traffic in the city by putting up signs and signals that control how fast people can drive and when they must stop or slow down. Our school librarian regulates, or controls or manages, the movement of books in and out of our library by setting rules for how books are checked in and checked out.

Tell the students that you will describe a situation; then partners will discuss whether or not the situation should be regulated, or controlled or managed, and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Mrs. Kim's children watch 4 or 5 hours of TV every school night. Often they stay up late watching TV. Recently Mrs. Kim's children have been falling asleep in class, and they have not been turning in their homework.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

- Q Do you think Mrs. Kim should regulate the amount of TV her children watch? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

- Q What might Mrs. Kim do to regulate the amount of TV her children watch?

Click 2 on word card 100 (WA5) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “To regulate the amount of TV her children watch, Mrs. Kim might . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- A severe drought is causing a water shortage in the town of Dryville. If people do not conserve water, the water supply will run out.

 Q Do you think that the town council of Dryville should regulate the amount of water residents can use? Why? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I [do/do not] think that the town council should regulate the use of water because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by discussing as a class:

Q What might the Dryville town council do to regulate the use of water?

Click 4 to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 4: “They might regulate the use of water by . . .”

Point to the word regulate and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE INFLUENCE

3 Introduce and Define Influence

Review that some countries, including England, ban junk food ads during children’s TV shows. Then read the first paragraph of “Good Habits Start Young” on page 390 aloud, emphasizing the word influenced.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is influence, and explain that influence means “affect the way someone develops, behaves, or thinks.”

Explain that junk food ads influence, or affect, the way many children think about junk food. Children are especially influenced, or affected, by ads in which a favorite cartoon character or superhero tells them to buy junk food. Often after children see one of these ads, they ask their parents to buy the junk food.

Display word card 101 (C WA6) and have the students say the word influence.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of influence is influenciar.

4 Discuss People Who Are Positive Influences

Explain that all of us have people in our lives who have influenced us, or affected the way we think or behave. Explain that we say that a person who has influenced us in positive, or good, ways is a “positive influence” in our lives. A person who is a positive influence often influences others by serving as an example of a good person or by giving advice about how to live a good life.

Give a couple of examples of people who have been positive influences in your life.

You might say:

“When I was growing up, my sister was a positive influence in my life. I looked up to her and tried to be honest and kind like she was. She encouraged me to work hard in school and gave me a lot of good advice. My friend Jasmin is a positive influence in my life these days. She encourages me to try new things and introduces me to interesting new activities, like playing golf.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Who is a positive influence in your life? How does he or she influence you in positive ways? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[My mom] is a positive influence. She influences me by . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word influence and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE CONSUME AND CONSUMER

5 Introduce and Define Consume and Consumer and Review the Suffix -er

Remind the students that junk food ads influence the way children think about junk food and that some people think the ads should be regulated. Review that other people, however, believe the ads should not be regulated.

Read the last paragraph of the article aloud, emphasizing the word consumer's.

Tell the students that the last words they will learn today are consume and consumer. Explain that consume means “buy and use products and services.” Explain that a consumer is a “person who consumes.”

ELPS 2.C.iv
Steps 5–7

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of consume is consumir.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they discussed the suffix -er earlier when they learned the words moocher (“a person who tries to get something without paying or working for it”) and deserter (“a person who deserts”). If you started a chart of -er words, add the word consumer to it.

Explain that food is one of the products that consumers consume, or buy and use. Point out that some people believe that it is their right as consumers of food to have as much information about the food as possible. These people believe that if the government regulates junk food ads, then consumers will not have all the information they need to make their own choices about buying this kind of food.

Display word card 102 (🗨️ WA7) and have the students say the words consume and consumer.

Point to the suffix -er in the word consumer, and review that -er is a suffix that means a “person who.” Explain that when -er is added to the end of the word consume, it makes the new word consumer, which means a “person who consumes, or a person who buys and uses products and services.”

6 Discuss Consume and Consumer

Tell the students that all of us are consumers. Explain that we consume, or buy and use products and services, every day.

Explain that, in addition to foods, consumers consume products such as clothing, computers, pencils and pens, cars, bikes, and toys. Remind the students that consumers also buy and use services, and explain that a service is something you pay someone to do or provide for you. For example, as consumers we pay for services such as getting our hair cut, having pizza or other food delivered to our houses, or receiving treatment from a doctor.

Ask:

Q What is a product or service that you have consumed, or bought and used, recently? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “A [product/service] that I have consumed recently is . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

7 Discuss Being a Smart Consumer

Tell the students that companies try to influence us as consumers through advertising—they try to affect the way we think about their products and services and get us to buy them. Explain that sometimes advertisers don’t tell consumers the whole story; they tell us only what they hope will convince us to buy their products. For that reason, we have to be smart consumers when we are deciding which products to buy. For example, we need to think carefully about what we want before we buy anything. We also need to think about how much we can spend. Explain that a smart consumer might ask someone with more experience for advice before buying a product, or he might try a product out before spending his money on it.

Discuss as a class:

Q If you were going to buy a new bicycle, what might you do to be a smart consumer? What might you need to do or think about before you bought the bicycle?

Click 2 on word card 102 (WA7) to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “To be a smart consumer, I might . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss:

Q If you were going to buy a new kite, what might you do to be a smart consumer?

Point to the words consume and consumer and review the pronunciation and meaning of the words.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Play “Use the Clues”

Display the “Use the Clues” chart (🗨️ WA8).

Use the Clues

Vanden was _____ before the doctor’s appointment.
His palms were sweaty and his stomach was upset.

“I don’t want to go!” _____ Vanden. His sobs could be heard from one end of the house to the other as his mother hurried him toward the door.

PROMPT: I think the missing word is _____ because . . .

WA8

Explain that partners will play the game “Use the Clues,” in which they use clues to figure out a word that is missing from a sentence. Direct the students’ attention to the sentences on the chart. Review that as you read the sentences aloud, you want them to think about what the missing word might be and what words in the sentences are clues to the missing word. Remind them that more than one word might make sense as the missing word and that the word does not have to be a vocabulary word.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, think aloud about things you might do to be a smart consumer. For example, say “To be a smart consumer, I might check to see how much the bike costs, I might ride the bike to see if I liked it, and I might ride other bikes so that I could compare them to each other.” Then discuss the next question as a class.

Materials

- “Use the Clues” chart (WA8)

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you might write the “Use the Clues” sentences where everyone can see them.

More Strategy Practice

Teacher Note

Listen as partners share. If the students suggest words that are not supported by the context, call for their attention. Provide a word and point out the context clues.

Teacher Note

Although nervous or scared are logical responses, the students may reasonably argue that upset, sick, or another word is also supported by the clues in the sentence. What is important is that the students explain their thinking.

Teacher Note

Possible responses for the second example include screamed, yelled, shouted, cried, and exclaimed.

Read the first sentence aloud twice, slowly and clearly, saying “blank” for the missing word.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What’s the missing word? What words are clues to the missing word?
[Pause; point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I think the missing word is [nervous] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few pairs share their ideas with the class.

If necessary, explain that the missing word might be nervous or scared and that the words “his palms were sweaty” and “his stomach was upset” are clues that Vanden was nervous or scared.

Use the same procedure to discuss the second example on the chart.

Day 4

Review Regulate, Influence, and Consume/Consumer

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA9)
- “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA10)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words regulate, influence, and consume/consumer from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Reviewed

regulate

Regulate means “control or manage, usually through rules or laws.”

influence

Influence means “affect the way someone develops, behaves, or thinks.”

consume/consumer

Consume means “buy and use products and services.” A consumer is a “person who consumes.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🗉 WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Do you think that parents should regulate their children's bedtimes? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA9) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Ask:

 Q Do you think that your friends influence you? Why? [Click 2 on WA9 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I think that my friends [do/do not] influence me because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss:

 Q As a consumer, are you influenced by what your friends buy? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "As a consumer, I [am/am not] influenced by what my friends buy because . . ."

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Remind the students that you will tell the beginning of a story that includes one of yesterday’s vocabulary words. Then students will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (🗨️ WA10) and show story 1 and its accompanying prompt. Tell the students that story 1 uses the word regulate. Then read story 1 aloud, slowly and clearly.

- Story 1: “We are wasting too much paper,” Mr. Paulson told his students. “To stop the waste, I plan to regulate our use of paper by . . .”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q How might you finish the story? What might Mr. Paulson tell his students about how he plans to regulate their use of paper? [Pause; point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

- Story 3: Claire’s father looked around her bedroom. “Wow!” he said to Claire. “From now on I’m going to call you ‘Claire the Consumer’ because . . .”

Q How might you finish the story? What might Claire’s father say to explain why he will call her “Claire the Consumer”? [Pause; point to prompt 3.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “From now on I’m going to call you “Claire the Consumer” because . . .”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Ongoing Review

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Reviewed

clank

When something clanks, it makes a short, loud sound like metal being hit.

desirable

Desirable means “worth having or wishing for.”

hunger

Hunger is a “strong desire or want.”

reuse

Reuse means “use again.”

rustle

Rustle means “make a soft brushing sound.” Things like paper, leaves, and stiff cloth rustle.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA11) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA11)
- Ongoing review activity (WA12)

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA12) has a corresponding number: the first story is 1; the second story is 2; the third story is 3; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the story with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word clamber earlier and that clamber means “climb something that is difficult to climb, using your hands and feet.”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Find Another Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Find Another Word.” Remind the students that you will show several stories with one or more words underlined. You will read each story aloud, and partners will decide which of the vocabulary words could replace the underlined part of the story.

Display the ongoing review activity (WA12) and begin playing the game:

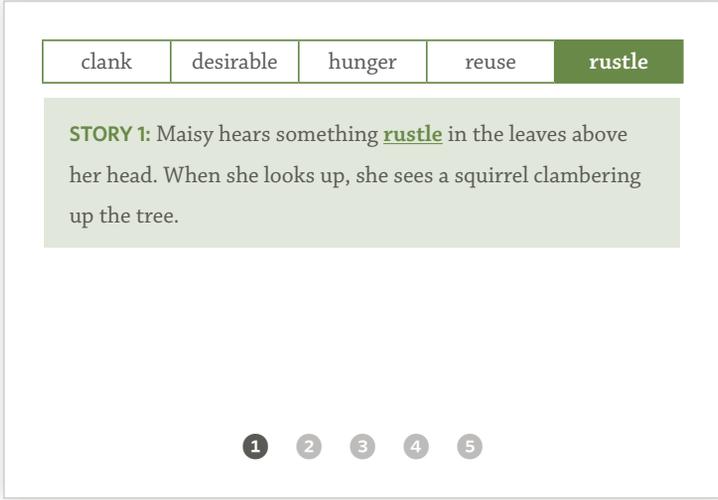

1. Click 1 to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined word.
 - Story 1: Maisy hears something make a soft brushing sound in the leaves above her head. When she looks up, she sees a squirrel clambering up the tree.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story and the underlined word. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

 Q Which vocabulary word could replace the underlined words? Why? [Click 1 again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [rustle] could replace make a soft brushing sound because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking 1 a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place.

WA12

4. Click 1 to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following stories:

- Story 2: Sean goes shopping for school supplies. He makes sure to buy a lunch bag that he will be able to use again. (reuse)
- Story 3: Kate is not sure that her parents will let her get a new bike, but she decides to ask anyway. In her opinion, a new bike is worth having. (desirable)
- Story 4: Kingston was startled when he heard a loud sound like metal was being hit behind him. He was relieved to see that it was just his little sister hitting two pans together. (clank)
- Story 5: Rosa loves to run. She has a strong desire to run a marathon when she is older. (hunger)

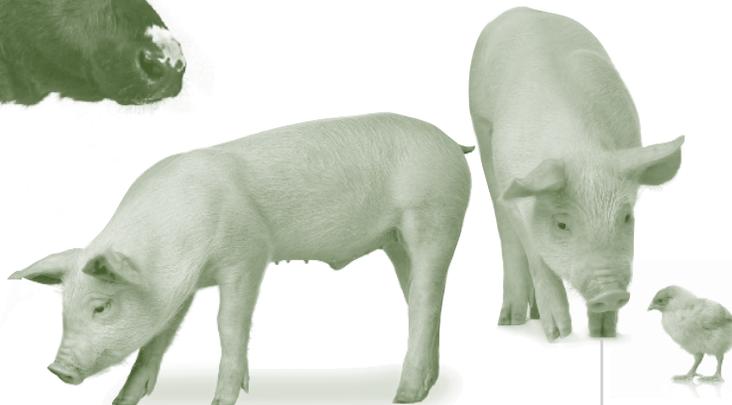

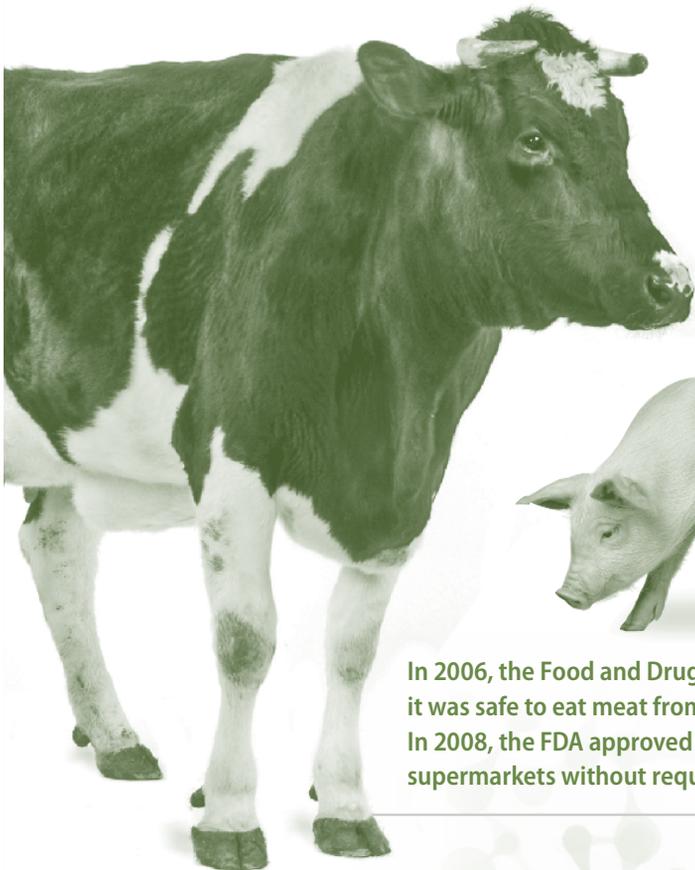

COPYCATS

Why Clone?

Cloning is a high-tech way to create a living thing that is an exact genetic copy of another. Why would we want to create identical living things? For farmers, there are many reasons. Farmers already use cloning techniques to produce desirable varieties of plants, such as apple trees that grow crisp, juicy fruit. One technique is to grow plants from cuttings taken from other plants. A plant that grows from a cutting is a clone because it has the same genetic makeup as the original plant.

In 1996, scientists succeeded in cloning the first mammal. Since then, a debate has raged about whether it is ethical or necessary to clone animals—including humans. Although the idea is controversial, some scientists believe that cloned human beings could one day become a reality. Other high-tech procedures, such as organ transplants, once faced the same kind of debate, but today they are widely performed.

In 2006, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) reported that it was safe to eat meat from animals that had been cloned. In 2008, the FDA approved the sale of cloned-animal meat in supermarkets without requiring them to be labeled as such.

PROS

Building a Better Breed

Since the first mammal was cloned, scientists have cloned many other creatures, including cows, cats, and fruit flies. Traditionally, farmers have paired a male animal with a female and hoped that they would produce offspring with desirable traits, such as animals that have thick wool or high-quality meat. Today, farmers are starting to use cloning as a surer way to get that same result.

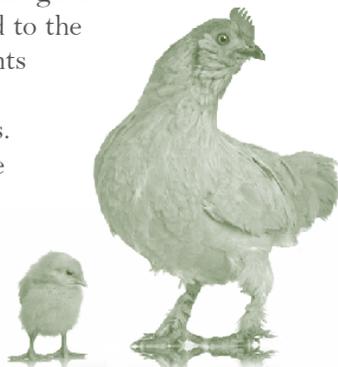

Protection from Extinction

Cloning might also be a way to protect endangered species from extinction. In 2005, scientists created clones of the gray wolf, a species once hunted to near extinction. Today, thanks to a U.S. protection law, gray wolves are thriving in several states, including Minnesota and Wisconsin. But if gray wolves ever become endangered again, scientists now know how to clone them so they won't become extinct.

Human Health

There are many potential advantages of cloning human beings. It might give infertile couples a chance to have children. Additionally, people who are likely to have a child with a genetic disorder might use cloning to have a better chance at producing a healthy child. Cloning could also be used to create healthy organs for people who are sick and need a transplant.

Cloning might help us understand how human genes work. This could lead to the discovery of treatments for genetic disorders such as cystic fibrosis. Discoveries like these have the potential to make many people's lives easier. These discoveries might even save lives.

CONS

Cloning for the Wrong Reasons

Where do we draw the line between the right reasons and the wrong reasons for using cloning? If human cloning is allowed in a few specific cases, people might begin to use it in other ways. For example, cloning might be used to create children who have specialized talents—such as amazing mathematical or athletic abilities—much like animals might be cloned for specific desirable traits. From there, cloning could lead to the creation of groups of people for specific purposes, such as fighting in wars. Many people argue that it is wrong to experiment with human life in this way.

Health Risks

Studying human cloning has big complications. Real human cells must be used, so if a particular experiment does not work out, the result could be a flawed copy of a human being—and that person would never have a normal life.

So far, scientists have found it difficult to produce healthy clones of mammals. For example, studies done in Japan have shown that cloned mice have poor health and die early. About a third of cloned cows have died young, and many of them were too large. Many cloned animals appear healthy at a young age but die suddenly and mysteriously. We should expect the same problems in human clones.

Even if scientists were able to produce human clones that were physically healthy, other important parts of human development might be affected. For example, a person's mood, intelligence, or sense of individuality might not develop normally.

Legal Roadblocks

In many countries it is against the law to clone a human being because of the many ethical and safety concerns. Congress is currently considering passing a law to ban human cloning in the United States.

"Junk food" is a slang term for food with little nutritional value. It includes food that is high in fat, sugar, or salt (or all three). Junk food makes up a large portion of food we see advertised on TV.

THE DEBATE ON

BANNING

JUNK FOOD ADS

Advertising Works

Food companies spend billions of dollars on TV advertising each year. The reason is simple: Advertising works. It's especially effective with children. A 2013 study found that the average American child sees about 13 food commercials a day, or 4,700 a year. Teens see more than 16 a day, or 5,900 a year. The study found that these kids see only about one ad per week for healthy foods such as fruits, vegetables, and bottled water. Most of the food ads they see are for junk food.

What's Junk?

Junk food may taste good, but it's low in nutritional value. For example, a sugary donut doesn't have as many nutrients as an apple. Many people argue that one way to encourage people—especially children—to choose more nutritious foods is to regulate, or control, the messages they receive about food from advertising. Others argue that regulating advertising will simply create more problems.

PROS

Good Habits Start Young

Some countries already regulate TV advertising for junk food. The people who support such regulations say that TV advertising encourages bad eating habits among young people because young people are more easily influenced than adults by advertising. In 2007, the United Kingdom started banning junk food advertising during children's TV shows. In 2011, the U.S. government proposed voluntary guidelines for food ads targeting children and teenagers. The guidelines state that foods advertised to children must include healthful ingredients and be limited in the amounts of sugar, saturated fat, trans fat, and salt they contain. The nation's largest food companies responded that the guidelines were too strict and proposed more lenient guidelines for ads.

A child who develops unhealthy habits is also likely to keep on making unhealthy choices as an adult. So it is preferable to control the messages that young people receive. This gives them a better chance at having a healthy future.

Good health is a big concern for many people today. Worldwide, hundreds of millions of people have serious problems related to an unhealthy diet, including diabetes and heart disease. A common problem in the United States is obesity: In a 2011–2012 survey, the Center for Disease Control found that about 80 million adults and about 12.5 million children were obese. Limiting junk food ads may be one way to help people make choices that will prevent obesity and other health problems.

The United Kingdom bans junk food ads during children's TV shows and on children's channels.

CONS

Giving Food a Bad Name

There are some big problems with creating rules about junk food advertising. For example, how do we decide exactly what is junk food and what is not? In the United Kingdom, foods such as olive oil, honey, and cheese have been banned from advertising during certain hours because they are labeled “junk food.” These foods have nutritional value, but they are also high in fat, salt, or sugar. Calling these foods “junk food” makes it more difficult for people to understand what makes up a healthy, balanced diet.

“In the United Kingdom, foods such as olive oil, honey, and cheese are labeled as junk food.”

To make things even more complicated, some fast food companies' ads now emphasize more nutritious choices—for example, providing fruit and milk with children's meals. Some promote health and fitness, too. If all fast food ads were banned from children's TV, these healthy messages would be as well.

Some parents feel that they have the right to decide what is best for their children and that regulating TV ads takes away that right. It is up to the parent to say yes or no when a child asks for something he or she has seen advertised on TV. What the parent says helps the child learn about how advertising affects the people who see it.

Regulating TV ads takes away some of the information parents and children have access to. They need that information in order to make their own buying decisions. Making these choices is the consumer's right, not the right of the government.

Word-learning Strategies

- Using Latin roots to determine word meanings (review)
- Recognizing idioms (review)
- Using the prefix pre- to determine word meanings (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from the articles.
- Students use the Latin root act to determine word meanings.
- Students review idioms and the prefix pre-.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 3, review the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Other Words with the Prefix pre-” on page 406.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 199 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 18 Word Cards” (BLM2) and “Week 18 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Interact, Academic, and “Get on Board”

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words interact and academic and the idiom “get on board”
- Discuss the Latin root act
- Review idioms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

interact (p. 414)

Interact means “talk or work with people.”

academic (p. 415)

Academic means “having to do with school, studying, and learning.”

get on board (p. 415)

“Get on board” means “accept or go along with something.”

INTRODUCE AND USE INTERACT

1 Introduce and Define Interact and Introduce the Latin Root act

Briefly review “All-girls and All-boys Schools: Better for Kids.”

Then read the introduction on page 414 aloud, emphasizing the word interact in the first sentence.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is interact, and explain that interact means “talk or work with people.” Explain that outside of school, boys and girls often interact, or talk or work with one another. But in all-girls and all-boys schools, boys and girls do not interact because they are not in school together.

Display word card 103 (🌐 WA1) and have the students say the word interact.

Point to the root act in the word interact and explain that act is a root. Review that a root is a “word or part of a word that is used to make other words.” Remind the students that many roots come to English from other languages. Explain that act comes from Latin, which was the language spoken by the people of ancient Rome. Tell the students that in Latin act means “do.” Explain that when you interact with a person, you do things—like talk or work—with the person.

Student/Teacher Narrative

Step 1 and Teacher Note on p. 395

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of interact is interactuar.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that earlier they discussed the Latin roots mem (“mind”) and memor (“to remember”) when they learned the word memento (“something given or kept as a reminder of a person, place, or experience”), and the Latin root mot (“move”) when they learned the word motionless (“without motion, still, or not moving”).

2 Discuss People with Whom We Interact

Point out that we all interact, or talk or work with, many different people during the day. Give a few examples of people you have interacted with today, and describe how you interacted with them.

You might say:

"This morning I interacted with my wife and children before I left for work. I talked with each of them during breakfast and I helped my son pack his lunch. On the way to work, I interacted with the crossing guard at the end of my street by waving and saying hello. This morning I've interacted with many of you by talking or joking with you and helping you with your work."

Ask:

Q Who have you interacted with today? How did you interact with those people? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

interact

PROMPT 1: I interacted with _____ by _____.

1 2

WA1

PROMPT 1: "I interacted with [Megan] by [talking to her and playing basketball with her before school]."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that we often interact with people we know differently from how we would interact with strangers. For example, when you interact with family members, you feel very comfortable. You can talk and joke easily with them because you know them well. But when you interact with a stranger, you might feel shy and have little to say, or you might be careful about what you say.

Discuss as a class:

Q How might you interact differently with an adult than with a friend your own age? Why?

Click 2 on word card 103 (WA1) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “When I interact with an adult, I [might not joke around like I do with a friend my own age] because . . .”

Point to the word interact and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE ACADEMIC

3 Introduce and Define Academic

Review that one method people use to measure the success of all-boys and all-girls classrooms is to compare the test scores of the students in them with the scores of students in coeducational classes (classes with boys and girls).

Read “Positive Proof in Test Results” on page 415 aloud, emphasizing the word academic in the first sentence.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is academic. Explain that academic means “having to do with school, studying, and learning.”

Explain that researchers of all-boys and all-girls schools saw an improvement in the students’ academic results on tests that measure how much the students learned.

Display word card 104 (WA2) and have the students say the word academic.

4 Discuss Academic Subjects

Explain that academic subjects, or subjects that we study in school, include reading, writing, math, science, and social studies.

Ask:

Q What is your favorite academic subject? Why? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “My favorite academic subject is [math] because . . .”

Q Do you think being in an all-boys or all-girls class [would help/helps] you to do better in your academic work? Why?

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of academic is académico/a.

Click 2 on word card 104 (WA2) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I [do/do not] think being in an all-girls or all-boys class [would help/helps] me to do better in my academic work because . . .”

Point to the word academic and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE “GET ON BOARD”

5 Introduce and Define “Get on Board” and Review Idioms

Review that all-girls and all-boys schools are becoming more popular throughout the United States. Read “An Increasingly Popular Option” on page 415 aloud, emphasizing the words “getting on board” in the last sentence.

Explain that “get on board” means “accept or go along with something.” Explain that more and more people are getting on board with, or accepting or going along with, the idea that all-boys and all-girls schools are a way to improve students’ academic test scores and confidence.

Display word card 105 (WA3) and have the students say “get on board.”

Point to the words “get on board” and explain that “get on board” is an idiom. Review that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.” Explain that “get on board” is a phrase we often use to talk about getting onto a bus or train to go somewhere. Explain that when we say school districts, parents, and students are “getting on board” with all-girls and all-boys schools, we do not mean they are taking a train or bus somewhere. Instead, we mean that they are joining others in accepting or going along with these types of schools.

6 Discuss “Get on Board”

Explain that people “get on board” with an idea or activity, or accept or go along with it, because they think it is a good idea or because it sounds like a fun or interesting activity. Tell the students that you will describe an activity or idea; then partners will discuss whether or not they would get on board with it and explain why.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- The music teacher in our school wants to put on a play. He is looking for students who are interested in singing, dancing, and acting.

Teacher Note

For a list of common idioms, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Idioms” list in the General Resources section.

Teacher Note

If you started an idiom chart, add “get on board” to it.

Ask:

Q Would you get on board with being in the school play? Why? [Click 1 on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I [would/would not] get on board with being in the school play because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- The principal wants to add an hour to the school day so that students can complete their homework assignments at school and get extra help if they need it.

Q Would you get on board with the principal’s idea? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] get on board with the principal’s idea because . . .”

Point to the idiom “get on board” on the word cards (WA3) and review the pronunciation and meaning of the idiom.

EXTENSION

Explore the Prefix inter-

Write the word interact where everyone can see it, and underline the prefix inter-. Review that a prefix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word.” Explain that the prefix inter- means “between or among.” Explain that when the prefix inter- is added to the beginning of the word act it makes the new word interact, which means “talk or work with people.”

Explain that knowing that the prefix inter- means “between or among” can help the students figure out the meanings of other words that use the prefix. For example, an interstate highway is a highway that runs between, or connects, two or more states. An international conference is a conference that takes place between or among people from many nations.

Have the students discuss the meanings of other words that use the prefix inter-, such as interchangeable, intergalactic, intergenerational, interplanetary, and interpersonal.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word international earlier, and that international means “having to do with more than one country.”

Day 2

Review Interact, Academic, and "Get on Board"

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words interact and academic and the idiom "get on board" from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Reviewed

interact

Interact means "talk or work with people."

academic

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “What Might You Say or Do?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Might You Say or Do?” Review that you will describe a situation; then partners will use the vocabulary words to discuss what they might say or do in that situation.

Begin by reading the following situation aloud:

- It is your first day at a new school. You interact with your new classmates.

Ask:

Q What might you say or do when you interact with your new classmates? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “When I interact with my new classmates, I might . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining situations:

- You decide you want to do better in all your academic subjects.

Q What might you say or do if you want to do better in your academic subjects? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “If I want to do better in my academic subjects, I might . . .”

- A group of friends asks if you’ll get on board with their idea of establishing a gardening club.

Q What might you say or do if your friends asked you to get on board with their idea of establishing a gardening club? [Click 4 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “If my friends asked me to get on board with their idea of establishing a gardening club, I might . . .”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word establish earlier and that establish means “begin, create, or set up.”

Day 3

Introduce Dependent, Device, and Preteen

Materials

- “Do Kids Really Need Cell Phones?” (see page 416)
- Word card 106 (WA5)
- Word card 107 (WA6)
- Word card 108 (WA7)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of dependent is dependiente.

Teacher Note

You might explain that dependent is related to the word depend, which means “rely on or need.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words dependent, device, and preteen
- Review the prefix pre-
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way

Words Taught

dependent (p. 417)

Dependent means “relying on or needing someone or something for help or support.”

device (p. 417)

A device is a “tool, machine, or piece of equipment that does a particular job.”

preteen (p. 417)

A preteen is a “boy or girl before he or she becomes a teenager.” A preteen is between the ages of 8 and 12.

INTRODUCE AND USE DEPENDENT

1 Introduce and Define Dependent

Briefly review “Do Kids Really Need Cell Phones?”

Remind the students that the article argues that there are benefits to allowing children to have cell phones. Read the first paragraph of the section titled “Cell Phones Promote Familiarity with Technology” on page 417 aloud, emphasizing the word dependent in the first sentence.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is dependent. Explain that dependent means “relying on or needing someone or something for help or support.”

Explain that one argument for allowing children to have cell phones is that giving children experience with cell phones now will help them in their jobs as adults, because in the future, people will be more dependent on, or will rely on or need, cell phones to do their jobs.

Display word card 106 ( WA5) and have the students say the word dependent.

2 Discuss Things and People We Are Dependent On

Review that according to the article, people in the future will be dependent on, or need, cell phones to do their jobs, and explain that even now many people are dependent on cell phones for their work. For example, people who work in sales need cell phones to stay in touch with customers and call their offices when they are traveling.

Give a few more examples of things that people are dependent on to do their jobs.

You might say:

"I'm dependent on my lesson plans and my computer to do my job. A farmer is dependent on his tractor to plant and tend his crops. An airplane pilot is dependent on her gauges to make sure she is flying at the right altitude."

Ask:

Q What are you dependent on to get your classwork done? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

dependent

PROMPT 1: To get my classwork done, I am dependent on . . .

1 2

WA5

PROMPT 1: "To get my classwork done, I am dependent on . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that we are dependent on people as well as things, and give a few examples of people you are dependent on.

You might say:

"I am dependent on our parent volunteers. I rely on them to create your homework packets and to be reading buddies. I am dependent on my doctor. When I am sick, I rely on her to give me the correct medicine or advice so that I can get better."

Discuss as a class:

Q In what ways are children dependent on their parents? In what ways do children rely on or need their parents?

Click 2 on word card 106 (WA5) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “Children are dependent on their parents to [feed them and give them a place to live].”

Point to the word dependent and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE DEVICE

3 Introduce and Define Device

Review that cell phones are just one type of technology that people are becoming dependent on to do their jobs. Reread the first two sentences from the section titled “Cell Phones Promote Familiarity with Technology” aloud, emphasizing the word devices.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is device. Explain that a device is a “tool, machine, or piece of equipment that does a particular job.” Explain that a cell phone is a device, or piece of equipment, that allows people to talk to one another, connect to the Internet, send text messages, and take pictures.

Display word card 107 (WA6) and have the students say the word device.

4 Discuss Devices the Students Use

Remind the students that some devices, such as cell phones, are used to help people communicate, complete tasks, or do jobs. Explain that other devices, such as TVs and video-game players, are used for entertainment.

Give a few examples of devices you or someone you know uses, and explain how each device is used.

You might say:

“My dad has a device that automatically sorts his coins. My friend Lena has a device that she uses to adjust the seat on her bike. Our custodian Mr. Phelps uses a device he calls ‘the waxer’ to wax and polish the floors. My favorite device is my blender. I use my blender to make smoothies for breakfast each morning.”

Tell the students that you will give them a few moments to look around the classroom for devices—or tools, machines, or other pieces of equipment—they might use during the day. Then they will discuss what they noticed.

Give the students a few moments to look around for devices. Then discuss as a class:

Q What devices do we have in the classroom? What do the devices do?

Click 1 on word card 107 (WA6) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “One device we have is [a document camera]. It is a device that . . .”

Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What device at home do you consider especially useful or important? Why? [Pause; click 2 on WA6 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “[The smoke detector] is an especially [useful/important] device because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word device and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE PRETEEN

5 Introduce and Define Preteen and Review the Prefix pre-

Review that the number of children who have cell phones is increasing every day. Read the first sentence from the section titled “An Unstoppable Trend” on page 417 aloud, emphasizing the word preteens.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is preteen, and explain that a preteen is a “boy or girl before he or she becomes a teenager.” Explain that a preteen is between the ages of 8 and 12. Point out to the students that they are preteens.

Display word card 108 (WA7) and have the students say the word preteen.

Point to the prefix pre- in preteen on the chart, and review that pre- is a prefix that means “before.” Explain that when the prefix pre- is added to the beginning of the word teen, which means a “teenager,” it makes the new word preteen, which means “before a teenager, or a boy or girl before he or she becomes a teenager.”

6 Discuss the Privileges of Being a Preteen

Explain that now that the students are preteens, or boys and girls between the ages of 8 and 12, they have more privileges than when they were 5, 6, or 7 years old. For example, as preteens they can probably stay up later than they used to.

Teacher Note

Students might mention devices such as an overhead projector or document camera, interactive whiteboard, pencil sharpener, three-hole punch, stapler, microscope, loudspeaker, tape dispenser, fan, calculator, telephone, printer, or computer.

Teacher Note

Remind the students that earlier they learned another word that uses the prefix pre-: prejudice (an “unfair opinion of someone based on the person’s race, religion, or other characteristic”). If you started a chart of pre- words, add preteen to it.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What are other privileges you have as a preteen that you did not have when you were younger? [Pause; click ❶ on WA7 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “As a preteen, I am allowed to . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Explain that in a few years the students will no longer be preteens. They will be teenagers, or boys and girls who are 13 years old or older.

Discuss as a class:

Q Do you think being a teenager will be more fun than being a preteen? Why?

Click ❷ on word card 108 (WA7) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I [do/do not] think being a teenager will be more fun than being a preteen, because . . .”

Point to the word preteen and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Other Words with the Prefix pre-

Write the word preteen where everyone can see it. Point to the letters pre and review that the prefix pre- means “before.” Review that adding pre- to the word teen makes the new word preteen, which means a “boy or girl before he or she becomes a teenager.”

Remind the students that one part of the article “Do Kids Really Need Cell Phones?” suggests things parents can do to control their children’s cell phone usage. Tell the students that as you read a sentence from that part of the article aloud, you want them to listen for a word that begins with the prefix pre-. Then read the following sentence from “Cell Phone Use Is Easy to Limit” on page 417 aloud twice: “Parents can also opt for a prepaid plan so that their children can’t go over spending limits but can still call their parents if they need to.”

Discuss as a class:

- Q What word did you hear that begins with the prefix pre-?
- Q Based on what you know about the prefix pre- and the word paid, what do you think the word prepaid means? What would a prepaid phone plan be?

If necessary, explain that prepaid means “paid for before it is needed or used.” Explain that parents who choose a prepaid phone plan pay for a certain number of minutes of phone use before the minutes are used. Children using the phone can only use the number of minutes that have been paid for ahead of time. After the minutes are used, only calls to and from certain numbers can be dialed or received.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Further Explore the Prefix pre-

Review that pre- is a prefix and that a prefix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the beginning of a word to make a new word.” Remind the students that the prefix pre- means “before” and that when pre- is added to the word teen, it makes the word preteen, which means a “boy or girl before he or she becomes a teenager.”

Write the word pretest where everyone can see it. Discuss as a group:

- Q Based on what you know about the prefix pre- and the word test, what do you think the word pretest means? Why would someone take a pretest?

If necessary, explain that a pretest is a “test taken before the final test.” Explain that teachers sometimes give students pretests to find out what students already know before they begin studying a new subject. Looking at students’ pretests can help teachers understand what they need to teach about a subject or topic. For example, if a student’s pretest shows that she already knows how to multiply two-digit numbers correctly but needs help multiplying three-digit numbers, the teacher will know that she needs to teach three-digit multiplication.

Use the same procedure to discuss the word preview.

Teacher Note

If you started a “Words with the Prefix pre-” chart, add prepaid to it. Invite the students to think of other words that use the prefix pre-, and add them to the chart. If the students struggle to think of words, stimulate their thinking by asking questions such as “What word means ‘mix beforehand’? ‘record before’? ‘cook beforehand’?” (premix, prerecord, precook). Other pre- words you might discuss are pretest, preshrink, and presoak.

Teacher Note

Before doing this activity, we recommend that you do the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Other Words with the Prefix pre-” on the previous page.

Day 4

Review Dependent, Device, and Preteen

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the "Week 18 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words dependent, device, and preteen from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others

Words Reviewed

dependent

Dependent means "relying on or needing someone or something for help or support."

device

A device is a "tool, machine, or piece of equipment that does a particular job."

preteen

A preteen is a "boy or girl before he or she becomes a teenager." A preteen is between the ages of 8 and 12.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q In what way is a pet dependent on its owner? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

dependent device preteen

PROMPT 1: A pet is dependent on its owner

WA8

PROMPT 1: “A pet is dependent on its owner [to feed it and take it to the animal hospital if it’s sick].”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss:

Q Do you think a computer is a necessary device for a preteen to have? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [do/do not] think a computer is a necessary device for a preteen to have because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Create a Sentence”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Create a Sentence.” Review that partners will work together to create sentences that use the vocabulary words.

Point to the word dependent and review that dependent means “relying on or needing someone or something for help or support.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you use the word dependent in a sentence? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their sentences with the class.

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“I am dependent on my friends because I need people to have fun with”]? Why?

Repeat the procedure to have partners work together to create sentences that use the words device and preteen.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “Who or what are you dependent on?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “I am dependent on my friends because . . .” or “I am dependent on my computer because . . .”

Teacher Note

For the word device, support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is a device you wish you had? Why?” and “What is a device you would like to invent? Why?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter.

For the word preteen, support struggling students by asking questions such as “What do you [like/dislike] about being a preteen?” and “What is something your parents let you do because you are a preteen?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 17 and 18, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 18 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- Ongoing review activity (WA10)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others

Words Reviewed

efficient

If someone or something is efficient, the person or thing works well and does not waste time or energy.

ethical

Ethical means “right according to a society’s beliefs.” When people think something is ethical, they believe it is the right thing to do.

inefficient

If someone or something is inefficient, the person or thing does not work well and wastes time or energy.

selfless

Selfless means “unselfish, or without thought for yourself.” When you are selfless, you are more concerned about others than about yourself.

unethical

Unethical means “wrong according to a society’s beliefs.” When people think something is unethical, they believe it is the wrong thing to do.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Describe the Character”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Describe the Character.” Review that you will show several stories; then partners will discuss which vocabulary word best describes the main character in the story and explain why they think so.

Display the ongoing review activity (🎧 WA10) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Explain that the main character of the story is Wally; then point to the story and read it aloud:
 - Story 1: Wally works for a recycling company called “We’ll Recycle Your Junk.” Instead of taking the trash he collects to the recycling center, he dumps it into the town lake.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story and the underlined word. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word best describes Wally? Why? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “The word [unethical] best describes Wally because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place.

efficient	ethical	inefficient	selfless	unethical

WA10

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Story 2: Each evening, Sue makes her lunch and sets her clothes for the next day on her dresser. Each morning, she is able to get ready for school and head out the door very quickly. (efficient)
- Story 3: All of Solomon’s friends are going to watch a baseball game, but Solomon decides to stay home to care for his sick sister. (selfless)
- Story 4: Just as her spelling test is about to start, Lucy begins to search in her backpack for her pencil. Everything in Lucy’s backpack is helter-skelter, so it takes her a very long time to find the pencil. (inefficient)

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA10) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, call for their attention, reread the story, and think aloud about which word best describes Wally. For example, say “I think the word unethical best describes Wally, because if something is unethical it is the wrong thing to do. Wally is dumping garbage into a lake, and that is wrong, or unethical.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word helter-skelter earlier and that if things are helter-skelter, they are lying about in a disorganized, confusing, or careless way.

- Story 5: Eamon went to the store to buy a bottle of orange juice. When he was ready to pay for the juice, the clerk was not at the counter. Eamon left the money for the juice on the counter with a note that said, "This money is for a bottle of orange juice. Yours truly, Eamon." (ethical)

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

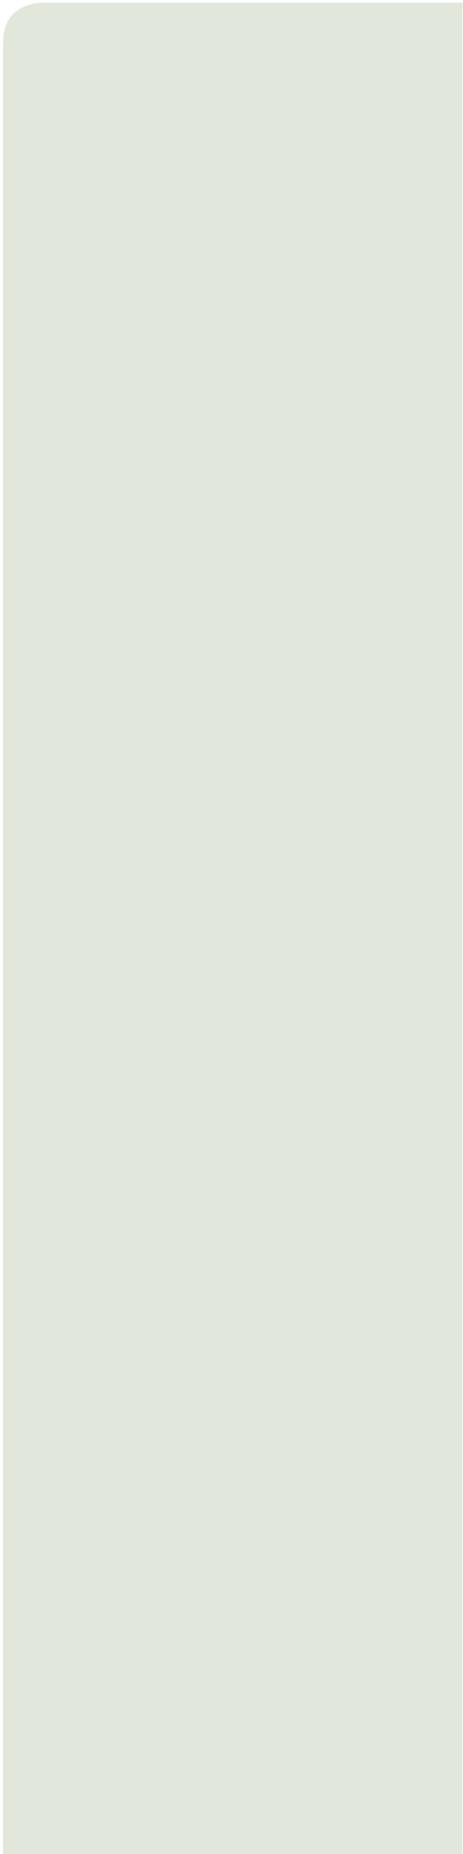

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Can the students identify the vocabulary words?
- Do their explanations show that they understand the words' meanings?
- Are they using the words accurately in writing and in conversations outside of the vocabulary lessons?

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 199 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice through an activity modeled on "Does That Make Sense?" (see Week 1, Day 5, Step 2).

All-girls and All-boys Schools Better for Kids

Out in the world, males and females live, work, and interact with one another. But at many schools, the classrooms are filled with just boys or just girls. Life isn't separated into male and female sides, so why should schools be?

Together or Apart?

Because male and female students think, learn, and behave differently from one another, it makes sense that they would do better at schools that understand these differences. Research has shown that students at all-boys or all-girls schools are more confident and more willing to try new things, and that they might even perform better academically than students at coeducational schools.

Different Brains, Different Gains

You might not realize it, but your brain develops differently from the brain of a classmate of the opposite sex. For example, the area of a girl's brain that understands language is one of the first areas to develop. In a boy's brain, other areas develop first, such as the part that makes sense of math. Because of differences like these, males and females learn various subjects in different ways.

An all-boys or all-girls school can focus its instruction to meet the needs of either male or female students, not both at the same time. This helps students make faster, stronger progress. For example, one Michigan study compared graduates of all-boys and all-girls high schools with graduates of coeducational

In 1972, a new law came into effect stating that all U.S. public schools should be coeducational. However, the law was changed in 2006 to allow all-boys and all-girls public schools.

high schools. The researchers found that male students in all-boys schools scored better in reading and writing than male graduates of coeducational schools. Likewise, female students in all-girls schools scored better in science and reading than their female peers in coed schools.

Positive Proof in Test Results

In 2008, researchers in Florida found that students in all-boys and all-girls classrooms made greater academic gains: 55 percent of boys in coed classrooms scored proficient (at or above a passing level), while 85 percent in all-boys classrooms scored proficient. Girls also saw gains: 59 percent of girls in coed classrooms scored proficient, while 75 percent in all-girls classrooms scored proficient.

In England, researchers at Cambridge University did a four-year study on the different ways that boys and girls learn. The researchers found that all-boys and all-girls classrooms were remarkably effective at boosting boys' performance, particularly in English and foreign languages, as well as improving girls' performance in math and science.

Building Confidence

Supporters of all-boys and all-girls classrooms argue that the students are less distracted in those environments. This makes it easier for all students to focus on their lessons.

Students who feel shy around people of the opposite sex could benefit the most from all-boys or all-girls schools. Without the pressure of worrying about how they might look to members of the opposite sex, they can feel free to be themselves. For example, they might explore subjects they wouldn't normally explore and join clubs or sports teams. Shy students are likely to feel more comfortable in an all-boys or all-girls class, so they're more likely to feel enthusiastic about speaking up in class, asking questions, and participating in class discussions.

Many people argue that an all-boys or all-girls education could make it more difficult for young people to learn how to relate to members of the opposite sex. It's true that we live in a world where males and females live and work with one another and are not segregated as in all-boys or all-girls schools. But many graduates of these schools say that they feel confident not only about their academic abilities, but also about their personalities. And this confidence can give graduates a head start in building friendships with the opposite sex.

An Increasingly Popular Option

All-boys and all-girls classes and schools are gaining favor across the United States. In 2002, only a dozen or so public schools in the United States offered this option. In 2012, there were around 500 all-girls and all-boys schools. School districts, parents, and students are increasingly getting on board with all-boys and all-girls education as a great way to boost students' scores and confidence.

Shy students may feel happier about participating in an all-boys or all-girls class. Taking part in classroom discussions helps them get more out of the lesson.

Do Kids Really Need Cell Phones?

There are nearly seven billion cell phones in use worldwide—and the trend has caught on among eight- to twelve-year-olds. With bright colors and catchy ringtones, cell phones are hard for young people to resist.

But why does a person as young as eight years old need a cell phone? He or she is likely to come up with a list of reasons, including “All my friends have them.” However, for very young kids, there are many benefits to having cell phones beyond the obvious “cool” factor.

Cell Phones Are a Lifeline

In an emergency, a cell phone can be indispensable. Cell phones allow children to dial 911 or call their parents if there is an accident or emergency. Also, cell phones allow children to stay in contact with family. Children, parents, and other caregivers are often in different places throughout the day, and things often don’t go as expected. For example, if soccer practice ends early or a parent is stuck in traffic, a cell phone can let everyone know how plans have changed.

As the lives of families become more and more hectic, the number of students who are alone after school is increasing. Today, the number of children in the United States with mothers in the labor force is around 70 percent. This means that many students are at home alone after school. It is more important than ever to have a way of keeping in touch with family—and a way of getting help in an emergency.

Cell phones can help the day run smoothly by keeping family members in touch with one another.

Cell Phone Use Is Easy to Limit

Many people worry that cell phones put young children in danger. Bullies or even criminals might use the phones to contact children, and the Internet access on many cell phones puts children even more at risk. There is also the chance that children would run up high cell phone charges.

However, many cell phones now have parental controls. For example, it's possible to place limits on who can call and be called with some phones, and parents can limit or block Internet access on phones. Most cell phones have a Global Positioning System (GPS) so that parents can find their child easily using another cell phone or a website.

Parents can also opt for a prepaid plan so that their children can't go over spending limits but can still call their parents if they need to. Features like these make it possible for children to get the benefits of cell phone use without the risks.

Cell Phones Promote Familiarity with Technology

Today, many jobs are dependent on cell phones and similar devices. Mobile devices such as cell phones have become just as important as the computer has been in the last 20 years. One way to ensure that young people are familiar with this technology is to allow them to use cell phones now.

Students can use a cell phone for more than just text messaging and talking. For example, cell phones can be helpful when doing schoolwork. On most cell phones, students can check the Internet for definitions and spellings of tricky words, take photos and make short videos for school projects, and listen to audiobooks. Carrying out a variety of tasks using cell phones can help boost young people's confidence around technology—and, in turn, help them feel confident when they grow up and begin working.

Workplaces around the world are becoming more and more reliant on technology.

Cell Phones Teach Responsibility

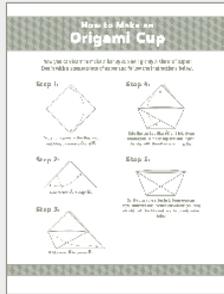

Owning a tool such as a cell phone can be a great way for children to learn responsibility. Because cell phones are valuable and can be used in different ways, children must learn to use them wisely—for example, making sure they don't lose them, keeping them charged, and using them only when they are not in school. These things help young people learn to treat personal possessions with care. Learning responsibility in this way helps children to respect other people's belongings, too.

An Unstoppable Trend

Researchers say that about 56 percent of American preteens have cell phones. If young children don't already own cell phones, it's likely that they will in the future. The best way for young people to benefit from this technology when they grow older is to learn to use it responsibly today.

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the functional texts.
- Students review words with multiple meanings.
- Students review synonyms and idioms.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students include everyone in and contribute to group work.
- Students build on one another's thinking during small group discussions.
- Students explain their thinking.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, collect a map of the United States. You will use the map to discuss the word indicate.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print "Week 19 Word Cards" (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Procedure, Sequence, and Indicate

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words procedure, sequence, and indicate
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking
- Use discussion prompts in small group discussions

Words Taught

procedure

A procedure is a “way to do something, or method of doing it, especially by a series of steps.”

sequence

A sequence is a “series of events or objects in a particular order.”

indicate (p. 438)

Indicate means “point out or show.” Indicate also means “be a sign of.”

INTRODUCE AND USE PROCEDURE

1 Introduce and Define Procedure

Briefly review “How to Make an Origami Cup.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is procedure. Explain that a procedure is a “way to do something, or method of doing it, especially by a series of steps.”

Show “How to Make an Origami Cup.” Explain that these instructions tell you the procedure, or the way to make, an origami cup in a series of steps. Tell the students that if you follow the procedure step-by-step, you will be able to make the cup.

Display word card 109 (WA1) and have the students say the word procedure.

2 Discuss Procedures

Explain that you have certain procedures, or ways to do things, that you and the students follow in your classroom. Point out that these procedures keep your classroom running smoothly. Give an example of a classroom procedure.

Materials

- “How to Make an Origami Cup” (see page 437)
- “Ashton Hammerheads Schedule for September 2015” (see page 438)
- Word card 109 (WA1)
- Word card 110 (WA2)
- Word card 111 (WA3)
- A map of the United States, collected ahead
- (Optional) Making Meaning Student Response Book

Teacher Note

You might have the students bring their Making Meaning Student Response Books to the rug to refer to as you discuss the functional texts used in today’s lesson.

You might say:

"We have a procedure, or way, for starting our day. First, I check attendance and a volunteer puts the attendance slip outside the door. Next, I call everyone to the rug for our morning meeting. We begin the meeting by going through the daily schedule, which is written on the board. Then, I answer any questions you have about what we will be learning or doing."

Explain that the school also has procedures. Discuss as a class:

Q What is our school's procedure for evacuating the building during a fire drill?

Click 1 on word card 109 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA1

PROMPT 1: "Our procedure for evacuating the building during a fire drill is . . ."

Follow up by discussing as a class:

Q Why do you think we have a procedure for evacuating the building in case of a fire? What might happen if we did not have a procedure?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: "We have a procedure for evacuating the building because . . ." or "If we did not have a procedure for evacuating the building . . ."

3 Do the Activity "Imagine That!"

Tell the students that partners will do the activity "Imagine That!" Have the students visualize the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- Space aliens have landed in our town. You have been selected by the Society for Clean Teeth to teach the aliens a procedure for brushing their teeth.

Q What step-by-step procedure for brushing teeth will you teach the aliens?
[Click 3 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “The step-by-step procedure I will teach the aliens is . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- You did a great job for the Society for Clean Teeth. Now the Pedestrian Safety Committee wants you to teach the aliens a step-by-step procedure for crossing the street safely.

Point to the word procedure and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE SEQUENCE

4 Introduce and Define Sequence

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is sequence, and explain that a sequence is a “series of events or objects in a particular order.”

Show “How to Make an Origami Cup” again. Point out that the instructions include a sequence, or series, of steps. Explain that the first step in the sequence is step 1. The second step in the sequence is step 2.

Display word card 110 (🌐 WA2) and have the students say the word sequence; then discuss as a class:

Q Which step in the sequence is the last step?

Click 1 on word card 110 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “[Step 5] is the last step in the sequence.”

Follow up by discussing as a class:

Q What might happen if you do not follow the steps in the sequence as you are making the cup?

Click 2 to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “If you do not follow the steps in the sequence, . . .”

5 Discuss Sequence

Explain that books, TV shows, movies, and people’s lives are all made up of sequences, or series of events, with one event following another.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of sequence is secuencia.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is the first thing you did or that happened to you today? What did you do or what happened after that? Then what did you do or what happened?”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, give an example of something you do that has a sequence of steps, or ask questions such as “What are some things you do in sequence in the morning to get ready for school?” “What are some things you do in sequence when you are doing schoolwork or playing a game?” and “What is something you make by following a sequence of steps?”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of indicate is indicar.

Ask:

Q What is the sequence of events that has made up your day so far?
[Click 3 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “The sequence of events that has made up my day is . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Tell the students that a sequence is often important when you are carrying out a procedure. Remind them that if we do not follow the sequence of steps for making the origami cup, the cup will not look the way it should or it will not hold water.

Discuss as a class:

Q What is something you do every day that has a sequence of steps? Why do you do the steps in sequence?

Click 4 to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 4: “I use a sequence of steps to [get ready for school] because . . .”

Follow up by asking each volunteer:

Q What sequence do you follow when you [get ready for school]?

Click 5 to reveal the next prompt and have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 5: “The sequence I follow when I [get ready for school] is . . .”

Point to the word sequence and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE INDICATE

6 Introduce and Define Indicate

Show “Ashton Hammerheads Schedule for September 2015” and review that the schedule provides information such as when the Hammerheads will be playing, what teams they will be playing against, and what time each game begins.

Read the following sentence from the legend aloud, emphasizing the word indicated: “All games begin at 6:00 p.m. unless otherwise indicated.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is indicate, and explain that indicate means “point out or show.”

Explain that the sentence “All games begin at 6:00 p.m. unless otherwise indicated” means that every game begins at 6:00 p.m. unless another time is indicated, or shown. Show the schedule again, and point out that no time is indicated, or shown, for September 1, so that day's game will start at 6:00 p.m. Point out that a time is indicated, or shown, for September 2, so that day's game will start at a different time—12:30 p.m.

Display word card 111 (C WA3) and have the students say the word indicate.

7 Act Out and Discuss Indicating

Tell the students that you are going to ask a volunteer to indicate, or point out or show, where your state is on the map of the United States. Ask the students to watch carefully. Then have a volunteer indicate where the state is on the map.

Discuss as a class:

Q What did you see [Caitlin] do when she indicated where our state is?

Click 1 on word card 111 (WA3) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: "When [Caitlin] indicated where our state is, she . . ."

Then ask:

Q If your backpack looks like other backpacks in our class, what might you do to indicate, or show, that your backpack belongs to you? [Click 2 on WA3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "To indicate that my backpack belongs to me, I might . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

8 Discuss Another Meaning of Indicate

Remind the students that words can have more than one meaning. Point to the word indicate on the word card (WA3), and review that indicate means "point out or show." Explain that indicate has another meaning; indicate can also mean "be a sign of." For example, a high fever indicates, or is a sign, that someone is sick. Dark clouds indicate, or are a sign, that a storm is coming. Smoke indicates, or is a sign, that something is on fire.

Ask:

Q What might a ringing bell indicate? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "A ringing bell might indicate . . ."

Technology Tip

You might display a web-based map of the United States. To find a web-based map, search online using the keywords "United States map."

Step 7

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following question:

Q What might tears on a person's face indicate? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “Tears might indicate that . . .”

Point to the word indicate and review the pronunciation and meanings of the word.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Discuss the Students' Bedtime Procedures

Remind the students that a procedure is a “way to do something, or method of doing it, especially by a series of steps.” Review that they discussed the following procedures:

- Evacuating the school building during a fire drill
- Brushing teeth
- Crossing the street safely

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is your procedure, or what steps do you take, to get ready for bed? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “My procedure to get ready for bed is . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the group.

EXTENSION

Explore the Suffix -tion

Write the word indication where everyone can see it. Point to the suffix -tion and explain that -tion is a suffix that means the “act, state, or result of doing something.” Explain that when you add -tion to a verb, you turn the verb into a noun. When -tion is added to the verb indicate, it makes the noun indication, which means “something that indicates, or is a sign of.”

Remind the students that earlier they learned the words regulate and interact. Review the words' meanings; then write the words regulation and interaction where everyone can see them. Discuss the way each word

Teacher Note

You might write the students' procedures where everyone can see them. Additionally, you might number the steps in the procedures and point out that the steps are a sequence, or a “series of events or objects in a particular order.”

is made and what it means. (A regulation is a “rule or law that controls or manages how people behave or what they can do.” An interaction is an “activity in which people talk or work with one another.”)

Ask the students for other examples of words that use the suffix -tion, and discuss them, or have the students discuss words you provide (for example, demonstration, education, and reaction). During the next few days, have the students watch and listen for other words with the suffix -tion, and discuss each one.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the suffix -sion also means the “act, state, or result of doing something” and is used in words such as decision, collision, explosion, and confusion.

Review Procedure, Sequence, and Indicate

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words procedure, sequence, and indicate from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in the group work
- Use discussion prompts in small group discussions

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

Words Reviewed

procedure

A procedure is a “way to do something, or method of doing it, especially by a series of steps.”

Step 2 and Teacher Notes on page 428

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, think aloud about associations you might make and why. For example, say "I think procedure goes with recipe, because a recipe is a procedure, or way to prepare something to eat. I think sequence goes with recipe, too, because the steps of a recipe are listed in sequence. I think indicate can go with recipe also, because the measurements in a recipe indicate, or show, how much of each ingredient to use." Then discuss the word number as a class, rather than in pairs.

Teacher Note

If the students have trouble making associations, think aloud about associations you might make or ask questions such as "How might the word procedure go with number? When might a procedure be numbered? Where might you see a procedure organized by numbered steps?" "How might the word sequence go with number? Where might you see a sequence of numbers?" and "How might the word indicate go with number? What do the numbers on a [thermometer/clock] indicate?"

PROMPT 1: "I might use the word [procedure] when I'm talking with [my little brother]. I might say . . ."

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS2 Do the Activity "Which Word Goes With?"

Tell the students that partners will do the activity "Which Word Goes With?" Review that you will write a word where everyone can see it, and partners will discuss which of yesterday's vocabulary words goes with the word. Then you will ask some pairs to share their thinking with the class.

Write the word recipe where everyone can see it and read the word aloud. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Which of yesterday's words do you think goes with recipe? Why do you think that? [Pause; click 2 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I think [procedure] goes with recipe because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Then write the word number where everyone can see it and read the word aloud.

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Which of yesterday's words do you think goes with number? Why do you think that? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "I think [procedure] goes with number because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Introduce Supreme, Hair-raising, and Priority

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words supreme and priority and the idiom hair-raising
- Review synonyms
- Review idioms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Include everyone in and contribute to the group work

Words Taught

supreme

Supreme means the “best or the highest in quality, power, or rank.”

hair-raising

Hair-raising means “exciting, thrilling, or terrifying.”

priority (p. 439)

A priority is “something that is more important or more urgent than other things.”

INTRODUCE AND USE SUPREME

1 Introduce and Define Supreme

Briefly review “Frontier Fun Park.”

Remind the students that in addition to giving ticket prices, the price list tells about Pine Mountain, the park’s roller coaster. Read the description of Pine Mountain, beginning with the following sentence: “At 460 feet, Pine Mountain is the nation’s highest roller coaster!”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is supreme. Explain that supreme means the “best or the highest in quality, power, or rank.”

Explain that the owners of the amusement park believe that Pine Mountain is the supreme, or best, roller coaster in the nation. They think it is supreme, or highest in quality, because it is the highest roller coaster in the country and the “greatest, most thrilling roller coaster ever.”

Display word card 112 (🗉 WA5) and have the students say the word supreme.

Materials

- “Frontier Fun Park” (see page 439)
- Word card 112 (WA5)
- Word card 113 (WA6)
- Word card 114 (WA7)

Teacher Note

You might explain that the words supreme, best, and greatest are synonyms. If you started a synonym chart, add the word supreme and its synonyms to it.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of supreme is supremo/a.

2 Imagine Creating Supreme Products

Remind the students that we use the word supreme to describe something that is the best of its kind or the highest in quality, power, or rank. For example, we call the highest, most powerful court in the United States the Supreme Court. Kings, emperors, or other rulers with great power are sometimes called “supreme rulers.”

Explain that businesses sometimes use the word supreme to describe a product because they want customers to think the product is the best of its kind or the highest in quality. For example, a restaurant that makes hamburgers might call their best hamburger the “Supreme Burger” or the “Burger Supreme.”

Have the students imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- You work in a sandwich shop. The owner asks you to create a new sandwich called the “Supreme Sandwich.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What ingredients might you use to create the Supreme Sandwich? Why would those ingredients make the sandwich supreme? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

supreme

PROMPT 1: The ingredients in the Supreme Sandwich might be _____. The ingredients would make the sandwich supreme because . . .

1 2

WA5

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word preteen earlier, and that a preteen is a “boy or girl before he or she becomes a teenager.” A preteen is between the ages of 8 and 12.

PROMPT 1: “The ingredients in the Supreme Sandwich might be [chicken, cheese, and tomatoes]. The ingredients would make the sandwich supreme because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- You are an expert who knows what preteens think is fun and exciting. The owners of a summer camp ask you to design the best summer camp for preteens ever. It will be called “Camp Supreme.”

Q What will Camp Supreme look like? What kind of activities will the campers do there? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Camp Supreme . . .”

Point to the word supreme and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE HAIR-RAISING

3 Introduce and Define Hair-raising and Review Synonyms and Idioms

Show “Frontier Fun Park” again, and review that the Pine Mountain roller coaster is described as the “most thrilling roller coaster ever.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is hair-raising. Explain that hair-raising means “exciting, thrilling, or terrifying” and that hair-raising, exciting, thrilling, and terrifying are synonyms. Explain that the owners of Pine Mountain think that riding their roller coaster is a hair-raising, or thrilling, experience.

Display word card 113 (🗨️ WA6) and have the students say the word hair-raising.

Point to the word hair-raising and explain that hair-raising is an idiom. Remind the students that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.” Explain that when we say a roller coaster ride is hair-raising, we do not mean that your hair actually stands on end from fear or excitement when you ride it. Instead, we mean that the ride is so exciting or thrilling that your skin tingles, and it feels like your hair is standing on end. Explain that scary movies and stories are sometimes described as hair-raising because they can be thrilling or terrifying.

4 Discuss a Hair-raising Experience

Tell the students about a time when you or someone you know had a hair-raising experience.

You might say:

“When I was young, I was chased by a stray dog. It was a hair-raising experience because I was terrified that the dog was going to bite me. A friend told me that when she parachuted out of an airplane, it was a hair-raising experience because it was so exciting. She said it was thrilling to fall and float through the air.”

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add hair-raising and its synonyms to it.

Teacher Note

You might explain that sometimes the hair on your arms or legs might actually stand up straight when you are excited or scared, causing your skin to tingle and sometimes causing goose bumps.

Teacher Note

If you started an idiom chart, add hair-raising to it.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is the most exciting or thrilling thing you have ever done?” “What is the scariest thing that has ever happened to you?” and “When have you seen a movie or read a book that was hair-raising?” If the students cannot think of a hair-raising experience, ask alternative questions such as “What is something that might happen to you that would be hair-raising?” or “Who do you know who has had a hair-raising experience?”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of priority is prioridad.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you had a hair-raising experience? What made it hair-raising? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I had a hair-raising experience when I [went skiing for the first time]. It was hair-raising because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word hair-raising and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE PRIORITY

5 Introduce and Define Priority

Direct the students’ attention to the disclaimer at the bottom of “Frontier Fun Park” and explain that this part of the text gives information about park safety. Read the following sentence aloud, emphasizing the word priority: “The safety of our guests is Frontier Fun Park’s highest priority.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is priority. Explain that a priority is “something that is more important or more urgent than other things.” Explain that the owners of the amusement park want guests to know that their safety is the park’s highest priority. Safety is more important than anything else.

Reveal word card 114 ( WA7) and have the students say the word priority; then discuss as a class:

Q Why do you think safety is the park’s highest priority, or more important than anything else?

Click 1 on word card 114 to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “I think safety is the park’s highest priority because . . .”

6 Discuss Tulip’s Priorities

Tell the students that you will describe two things that Tulip needs to do; then partners will discuss which one should be Tulip’s priority and explain why they think that.

Begin by reading the following situation aloud:

- Tulip gets home late from school and finds a note from her mom. The note says, “Please study for your math test and clean your room before I get home.” Tulip realizes she has time to do only one thing before her mother gets home.

Ask:

Q Which of these should be Tulip's priority: studying for her math test or cleaning her room? Why? [Click 2 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "[Studying for her math test] should be Tulip's priority because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following situation:

- Tulip tells her friend Iris that she will help her with her homework after school. Then she remembers that she told her little brother Angelo she would play with him after school.

Q Which of these should be Tulip's priority: helping her friend Iris with her homework or playing with her little brother Angelo? Why? [Point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

Point to the word priority and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Review Supreme, Hair-raising, and Priority

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words supreme and priority and the idiom hair-raising from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Contribute to the group work
- Explain their thinking

Words Reviewed

supreme

Supreme means the "best or the highest in quality, power, or rank."

hair-raising

Hair-raising means "exciting, thrilling, or terrifying."

priority

A priority is "something that is more important or more urgent than other things."

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

-  Q Which of these words might you use if you were writing a story about the most frightening creature in the world? How might you use the word? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [supreme]. I might write . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “What Do You Think About?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Do You Think About?” Point to the words on the daily review cards (WA8) and explain that you want the students to notice what they think about, or what they visualize, when they hear each of the words.

Have the students close their eyes. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q What do you think about when you hear the word supreme? Why? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “When I hear the word supreme, I think about [a king] because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining words.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by thinking aloud about what you picture in your mind when you hear the word or by asking questions such as “What [foods/activities] do you think are supreme?” “What kind of experience would be hair-raising?” and “What might your first priority be if you want to do well in school?”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Explain their thinking

Words Reviewed

consume/consumer

Consume means “buy and use products and services.” A consumer is a “person who consumes.”

device

A device is a “tool, machine, or piece of equipment that does a particular job.”

influence

Influence means “affect the way someone develops, behaves, or thinks.”

regulate

Regulate means “control or manage, usually through rules or laws.”

vast

Vast means “very large in number or area.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Find Another Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Find Another Word.” Remind them that you will show several stories with one or more words underlined. You will read each story aloud, and partners will decide which of the vocabulary words could replace the underlined part of the story.

Display the ongoing review activity (WA10) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined word.
 - Story 1: One day, Greg found a strange little machine on the floor of his shop.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- Ongoing review activity (WA10)

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA10) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the story with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story and the underlined word. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word could replace the underlined word? Why? [Click 1 again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [device] could replace machine because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking 1 a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place.

- Story 3: Sylvia is going camping this summer. She plans to buy and use a can of chili, some dinner rolls, a jug of water, and ingredients for s'mores. (consume)
- Story 4: The mayor of Arborton has decided to convert the very large empty space in the middle of town into a community park. The park will have a lake, playground, farmers' market, and baseball field. (vast)
- Story 5: Hugh wants to affect the behavior of his little brother in a positive way. He shows him how to be selfless by volunteering with him at the local food bank. (influence)

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word convert earlier and that convert means “change from one form or use into another.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word selfless earlier and that selfless means “unselfish, or without thought for yourself.” Review that when you are selfless, you are more concerned about others than about yourself.

How to Make an Origami Cup

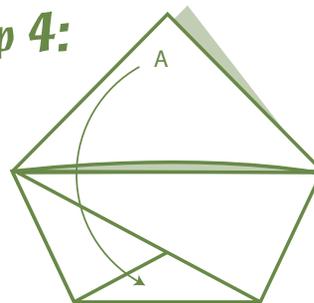

Now you can learn to make a handy cup using only a sheet of paper!
Begin with a square piece of paper and follow the instructions below.

Step 1:

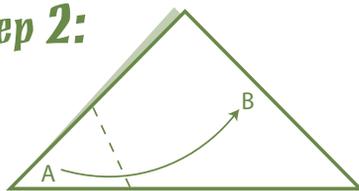

Fold your square on the diagonal, matching up corners A and B.

Step 4:

Take the top flap (A) and fold down toward you. Turn the cup over and repeat the step with the other remaining flap.

Step 2:

Fold corner A to edge B.

Step 5:

Gently push the sides in to form your cup.
If you followed the instructions above, your cup should look like this and be able to hold water.
Enjoy!

Step 3:

Fold corner A to corner B.

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing synonyms (review)
- Using the suffix -less to determine word meanings (review)
- Using a dictionary, glossary, and thesaurus (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the book.
- Students review synonyms.
- Students review the suffix -less.
- Students use an online thesaurus to find synonyms.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way during group work.

1 DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 3, review the more strategy practice activity “Use an Online Thesaurus” on page 454. If necessary, plan time for your students to use computers or tablets in the school library or media center.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 200 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 5” answer sheet (IA1); see page 204 of the Assessment Resource Book. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.
- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 5, make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1); see page 207 of the Assessment Resource Book. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the following materials: “Week 20 Word Cards” (BLM2) and “Week 20 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Resolve, Compel, and Comply

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words resolve, compel, and comply
- Review synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Taught

resolve (p. 3)

Resolve means “find an answer or solution to a problem.”

compel

Compel means “force.”

comply

Comply means “do what you are asked to do or what a law or rule requires you to do.”

INTRODUCE AND USE RESOLVE

1 Introduce and Define Resolve

Briefly review Survival and Loss: Native American Boarding Schools.

Show pages 2–3 of the book and review that as the number of European settlers increased, the settlers began to compete with Native Americans for land. Read the following sentence from the second paragraph of page 3 aloud, emphasizing the word resolve: “In 1836, the U.S. government tried to resolve its ‘Indian problem’ by giving the eastern Native American tribes two years to move westward from their homelands.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is resolve and explain that resolve means “find an answer or solution to a problem.”

Explain that the U.S. government had a problem: settlers wanted land that Native Americans were living on. The government tried to resolve the problem, or find an answer or solution, by requiring that eastern Native American tribes give up their land and move west.

Display word card 115 (🌐 WA1) and have the students say the word resolve.

Materials

- Survival and Loss
- Word card 115 (WA1)
- Word card 116 (WA2)
- Word card 117 (WA3)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of resolve is resolver.

2 Discuss Ways the Students Might Resolve a Problem

Explain that people resolve, or find answers or solutions to, problems every day, and give an example of a problem you or someone you know resolved.

You might say:

“When I got to school this morning, I realized I had left my house key at home. I resolved the problem by calling my son and asking him to bring me the key. The other day, my son wanted to go for a bike ride with a friend, but he didn’t have his bike because it was at the bike shop being repaired. He resolved the problem by borrowing his brother’s bike.”

Discuss as a class:

Q What is a problem you have resolved recently? How did you resolve the problem?

Click 1 on word card 115 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thoughts with the class.

resolve

PROMPT 1: I had a problem when _____.
I resolved the problem by . . .

1 2

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I had a problem when [my shoelace broke]. I resolved the problem by . . .”

Tell the students that you will describe a problem and partners will discuss how they might resolve it.

Begin by reading the following problem aloud:

- You are locked out of your house.

Ask:

Q How might you resolve the problem? [Click 2 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I might resolve the problem by . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following problem:

- When you get home from school, you find that your cat is stuck in a tree.

Point to the word resolve and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE COMPEL

3 Introduce and Define Compel and Review Synonyms

Show pages 2–3 again, and review that the U.S. government gave eastern Native American tribes two years to move westward. Read the following sentence from the second paragraph of page 3 aloud: “If these tribes didn’t move within the two-year period, they would be forced to leave.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is compel. Explain that compel means “force” and that the words compel and force are synonyms. Explain that the government told the Native Americans that if they did not move westward within two years, they would be compelled, or forced, to leave.

Display word card 116 (🗨️ WA2) and have the students say the word compel.

4 Discuss Compel

Explain that we usually use the word compel to talk about situations in which people are forced to do things they do not want to do. For example, if you are sick, you might feel compelled, or forced, to go to the doctor even though you do not want to. If you are very hungry but the cafeteria is not serving anything you like to eat, you might feel compelled, or forced, to eat something you do not want to eat. If a hurricane is heading toward the town where you live, you might feel compelled to leave your home to be safe.

Discuss as a class:

Q What else might compel you to leave your home to be safe?

Click 1 on word card 116 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “A [fire or flood] might compel me to leave my home.”

Explain that in most communities recycling bottles, cans, and other trash is voluntary. That means that people do not have to recycle if they do not want to.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words compel and force to it.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of compel is compeler.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of comply is cumplir.

Ask:

Q Do you think the government should compel people to recycle? Why?
[Click 2 on WA2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [do/do not] think the government should compel people to recycle because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word compel and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE COMPLY

5 Introduce and Define Comply

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is comply, and explain that comply means “do what you are asked to do or what a law or rule requires you to do.”

Show pages 2–3 again, and read the following sentence from the second paragraph of page 3 aloud: “While many tribes had little choice but to go, some tribes fought against removal.”

Explain that when the government told the tribes they must move westward, many tribes complied, or did what they were required to do. But other tribes did not comply—they did not do what the government told them to do. Those tribes fought against being removed from their land.

Display word card 117 ( WA3) and have the students say the word comply.

6 Discuss Times When the Students Comply

Tell the students that we comply with many rules and requests at school, and give a few examples.

You might say:

“When our PE teacher Mrs. King asks you to put away basketballs and other equipment after class, you comply, or do what you are asked to do, by putting the equipment where it belongs. When the principal announces that we will have indoor recess, we comply by staying in the classroom. When I ask you to gather on the rug for a vocabulary lesson, you comply by coming to the rug.”

Discuss as a class:

Q In what other ways do you comply at school?

Click 1 on word card 117 (WA3) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “We comply by [cleaning up our table area when you ask us to].”

Point out that the students also comply with the rules and requests of their parents at home.

Ask:

Q In what ways do you comply with your parents? [Click 2 on WA3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I comply with my parents by [doing my chores when they ask me to].”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word comply and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Review Resolve, Compel, and Comply

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words resolve, compel, and comply from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Reviewed

resolve

Resolve means “find an answer or solution to a problem.”

compel

Compel means “force.”

comply

Comply means “do what you are asked to do or what a law or rule requires you to do.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

Ask:

Q Which of yesterday's words do you think was interesting or fun to talk about? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA4

resolve compel comply

PROMPT 1: I think the word _____ was [interesting/fun] to talk about because . . .

PROMPT 1: "I think the word [comply] was [interesting/fun] to talk about because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Think More About the Words

Tell the students that you will describe a situation, and partners will use yesterday's vocabulary words to discuss it. Explain that partners may not always agree about a situation and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Read the following scenario aloud twice:

- Mrs. Gilbert has a problem. Her children are not eating enough fruits and vegetables. To resolve the problem, Mrs. Gilbert compels her children to eat at least one fruit and one vegetable at dinner. Until they do, they cannot leave the table.

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Do you think compelling the children to eat at least one fruit and one vegetable before they can leave the table is a good way for Mrs. Gilbert to resolve the problem? Why? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I [do/do not] think compelling the children to eat at least one fruit and one vegetable before they can leave the table is a good way to resolve the problem because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- Mrs. Gilbert has another problem. Her children do not keep their bedroom tidy. She has asked the children several times to clean up their room, but they do not comply.

Q What might Mrs. Gilbert do to get the children to comply with her request to clean up their room? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “To get the children to comply with her request, Mrs. Gilbert might . . .”

Introduce Squander, Clash, and Defenseless

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words squander, clash, and defenseless
- Review synonyms
- Review the suffix -less
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Taught

squander

Squander means “carelessly waste something such as money, time, or opportunities.”

clash

Clash means “fight or argue.”

defenseless (p. 13)

Defenseless means “without defense, helpless, or unprotected.”

INTRODUCE AND USE SQUANDER

1 Introduce and Define Squander

Show pages 4–5 of Survival and Loss, and review that settlers passed through Native American hunting grounds as they moved west to find gold. Read the following sentences from the second paragraph of “The Reservations” aloud: “Unlike Native Americans, the settlers were not

Materials

- Survival and Loss
- Word card 118 (WA5)
- Word card 119 (WA6)
- Word card 120 (WA7)

Teacher Note

You might explain that a resource is “something that is valuable or useful to people.”

respectful of the land. They cut down many trees and hunted too many animals.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is squander. Explain that squander means “carelessly waste something such as money, time, or opportunities.”

Explain that when the settlers cut down many trees and hunted too many animals, they were squandering, or carelessly wasting, resources that were important to Native Americans. Explain that when the Native Americans saw that the settlers were squandering trees and animals that were a source of food, they fought with the settlers.

Display word card 118 (🗨️ WA5) and have the students say the word squander.

2 Play “Is Tulip Squandering?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Is Tulip Squandering?” Explain that you will describe something that Tulip is doing; then partners will discuss whether or not she is squandering something and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Tulip wants to be an artist, so she takes an art class. When her instructor tells her what she might do to be a better painter, Tulip ignores the suggestions.

Ask:

🗨️ Q Do you think Tulip is squandering the opportunity to become a better painter? Why? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA5

squander

PROMPT 1: I [do/do not] think Tulip is squandering the opportunity to become a better painter because . . .

PROMPT 1: “I [do/do not] think Tulip is squandering the opportunity to become a better painter because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Tulip is eating dinner. She takes a few bites and then feeds the rest of her meal to her dog.

Q Do you think Tulip is squandering her food? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [do/do not] think Tulip is squandering her food because . . .”

- Each week Tulip’s parents give her five dollars as an allowance. Tulip usually spends the money on things she needs, like pencils and healthy snacks.

Q Do you think Tulip is squandering her allowance? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I [do/do not] think Tulip is squandering her allowance because . . .”

Point to the word squander and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE CLASH

3 Introduce and Define Clash and Review Synonyms

Show pages 4–5 of Survival and Loss again. Review that the U.S. government passed a law that required Native Americans to live on areas of land known as reservations. Read the following sentence from page 5 aloud: “In some cases, the U.S. government had promised the same land to more than one tribe, and fights broke out between the tribes as they competed for water, game, and land.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is clash. Explain that clash means “fight or argue” and that the words clash, fight, and argue are synonyms. Explain that because many tribes lived on the same land, they clashed, or fought with one another, over the land and the water and animals that were on it.

Display word card 119 (🗨️ WA6) and have the students say the word clash.

4 Discuss Times the Students Have Clashed with Others

Explain that individuals sometimes clash, or fight or argue, with one another. Give one or two examples of times when you have clashed with someone.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words clash, fight, and argue to it.

You might say:

“My sister and I used to clash, or argue, over who would sit in the front seat of the car. We would also clash about whose turn it was to take out the garbage.”

Ask:

Q When have you clashed with someone? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[My brother] and I clashed when . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following question:

Q What might you do to avoid clashing with someone who has made you angry? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “To avoid clashing with someone who has made me angry, I might . . .”

Point to the word clash and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE DEFENSELESS

5 Introduce and Define Defenseless and Review the Suffix -less

Show pages 12–13 of the book. Remind the students that Captain Richard Henry Pratt wanted to “Americanize” Native American children by educating them in boarding schools, so Pratt built a boarding school in Pennsylvania in 1879. Then read page 13 aloud, emphasizing the word defenseless in the second paragraph.

Tell the students that defenseless is the last word they will learn today, and explain that defenseless means “helpless or unprotected.”

Explain that Captain Pratt persuaded Spotted Tail to send his children to the boarding school by telling him that his people were defenseless, or helpless or unprotected, because they could not read and write in English. Pratt argued that if Native Americans learned to speak, read, and write English, they would be able to defend themselves against unfair treatment by European Americans. They would no longer be defenseless.

Display word card 120 (WA7) and have the students say the word defenseless.

Point to the suffix -less in defenseless and review that -less is a suffix that means “without.” Explain that adding the suffix -less to the word defense makes the new word defenseless, which means “without defense, helpless, or unprotected.”

6 Play “Defenseless or Not Defenseless?”

Remind the students that a person or animal that is defenseless is helpless or unprotected. Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Defenseless or Not Defenseless?” Explain that you will describe a situation; then partners will decide whether or not the person or animal in the situation is defenseless and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- A hunter spots a deer a few yards away. The deer raises its ears and sniffs the air.

Ask:

Q Is the deer defenseless, or helpless, against the hunter? Why? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “The deer [is/is not] defenseless against the hunter because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining scenarios:

- A hungry fox creeps up on a baby chick asleep in its nest. The chick’s mother is nowhere in sight.

Q Is the baby chick defenseless against the fox? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The baby chick [is/is not] defenseless against the fox because . . .”

- A bully is teasing a little boy on the playground. A teacher and other students are standing nearby.

Q Is the little boy defenseless against the bully? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “The little boy [is/is not] defenseless against the bully because . . .”

Point to the word defenseless and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that earlier they learned these words that use the suffix -less: selfless (“unselfish, or without thought for yourself”), thoughtless (“without thought for the feelings or needs of others”), and motionless (“without motion, still, or not moving”). If you started a chart of -less words, add the word defenseless to it.

Materials

- Computers or tablets with Internet access for each pair of students

Teacher Note

For an activity on using a print thesaurus, see the more strategy practice activity “Use a Print Thesaurus” (see Week 16, Day 1).

Technology Tip

To find an appropriate online thesaurus, search online using the keywords “children’s thesaurus” or “online thesaurus for students.”

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you might have the students look up vocabulary words that are not on the synonym chart and add those words and their synonyms to the chart.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Use an Online Thesaurus

Post the synonym chart where everyone can see it. Alternatively, you might write the vocabulary words for which the students have discussed synonyms where everyone can see them (for example, hair-raising, compel, and clash).

Have partners sit together. Ask the students to navigate to the thesaurus you selected. Direct their attention to the Search box. Ask them to type a familiar word, such as afraid or small into the box and click the Search button or icon. Then discuss:

Q What information is provided for the word [afraid]?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. As necessary, point out these key features:

- The word’s part of speech (whether the word is a noun, verb, adjective, or other part of speech)
- The word’s synonyms
- The word’s antonyms
- Definitions of the word

Then briefly discuss:

Q In what ways is this online thesaurus [different from/the same as] a print (book) thesaurus?

Q Which type of thesaurus do you prefer? Why?

Direct the students’ attention to the synonym chart. Tell the students that partners will choose one of the words on the chart and use the online thesaurus to find synonyms for it. Explain that after partners search for the word they will share additional synonyms they found with the class.

Give partners a minute or two to choose a word, look it up in the online thesaurus, and discuss its synonyms. When most pairs have finished talking, signal for the students’ attention. Then discuss the words and their synonyms as a class by asking:

Q What word did you look up? What synonyms did you find for the word?

Follow up by asking:

Q Which of these synonyms are already on our synonym chart? Which synonyms should we add to the chart?

Add the synonyms the students suggest to the chart.

Review Squander, Clash, and Defenseless

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words squander, clash, and defenseless from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Reviewed

squander

Squander means “carelessly waste something such as money, time, or opportunities.”

clash

Clash means “fight or argue.”

defenseless

Defenseless means “without defense, helpless, or unprotected.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🔊 WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Would an efficient person be likely to squander time? Why? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

squander clash defenseless

PROMPT 1: An efficient person [would/would not] be likely to squander time because . . .

WA8

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA9)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the “Week 20 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) for each student

Teacher Note

You might review that if someone or something is efficient, the person or thing works well and does not waste time or energy.

PROMPT 1: “An efficient person [would/would not] be likely to squander time because . . .”

Teacher Note

You might review that discourteous means “not courteous, or disrespectful or rude.”

Teacher Note

You might review that solitary means “living or being alone.”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following questions:

Q Would an angry customer be likely to clash with a discourteous store clerk? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “An angry customer [would/would not] be likely to clash with a discourteous store clerk because . . .”

Q Would a solitary seal be defenseless against a group of sharks? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “A solitary seal [would/would not] be defenseless against a group of sharks because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Review that you will tell the beginning of a story that includes one of the vocabulary words. Then the students will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA9) and show the first story and its accompanying prompt. Tell the students that the first story uses the word squander. Then read story 1 aloud, slowly and clearly.

- Story 1: Alicia’s mother told her it was time for bed. “Can I stay up another hour?” Alicia asked. “I need to do my homework.” “No, Alicia, you cannot stay up,” answered her mother. “You shouldn’t have squandered so much time this evening by . . .”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you finish the story? What might Alicia have been doing to squander time? [Pause; point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Tell Me a Story

Alicia’s mother told her it was time for bed. “Can I stay up another hour?” Alicia asked. “I need to do my homework.” “No, Alicia, you cannot stay up,” answered her mother. “You should not have squandered so much time this evening by . . .”

PROMPT 1: “You should not have squandered so much time this evening by . . .”

WA9

PROMPT 1: “You should not have squandered so much time this evening by . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining stories:

- Story 2: Rory and Tory are twins. Most of the time they get along, but there are some days when they clash over things like . . .

Q How might you finish the story? What things might Rory and Tory clash over? [Pause; point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “There are some days when they clash over things like . . .”

- Story 3: While her mother dozed in the sun, a bear cub searched for berries. When her belly was full, she looked around and realized she had wandered far from her mother. She was alone in the forest, defenseless against . . .

Q How might you finish the story? What might the bear cub be defenseless against? [Pause; point to prompt 3.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “She was alone in the forest, defenseless against . . .”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 19 and 20, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 20 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

Ongoing Review

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Work in a responsible way during group work

Words Reviewed

dependent

Dependent means “relying on or needing someone or something for help or support.”

exert

When you exert yourself, you work hard to do something.

indicate

Indicate means “point out or show.” Indicate also means “be a sign of.”

prejudice

Prejudice is an “unfair opinion of someone based on the person’s race, religion, or other characteristic.”

priority

A priority is “something that is more important or more urgent than other things.”

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA10)
- Ongoing review activity (WA11)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 5” answer sheet (IA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record” sheet (SR1)
- “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR1)
- (Optional) Class set of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1)

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗂️ WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “What’s the Missing Word?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “What’s the Missing Word?” Remind them that you will read a sentence that has a word missing. Partners must decide which of the vocabulary words is the missing word and explain why they think so.

Display the ongoing review activity (🗂️ WA11) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first sentence. Point to the sentence and read it aloud.

- Sentence 1: Mr. Winters has a _____ against teenagers; he thinks all teenagers are immature and should not be allowed to drive.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q What’s the missing word? Why do you think so? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I think [prejudice] is the missing word because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place.

dependent	exert	indicate	prejudice	priority
-----------	-------	----------	-----------	----------

SENTENCE 1: Mr. Winters has a prejudice against teenagers; he thinks all teenagers are immature and should not be allowed to drive.

❶ ❷ ❸ ❹ ❺

WA11

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Teacher Note

Each sentence on the ongoing review activity (WA11) has a corresponding number: the first sentence is ❶; the second sentence is ❷; the third sentence is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the sentence.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the sentence with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following sentences:

- Sentence 2: Marveion and Trang _____ themselves when they worked together to heave open the stuck door. (exerted)
- Sentence 3: Rashon makes the classroom lights dim to _____ that it is time for the students to start getting quiet. (indicate)
- Sentence 4: Missy is extremely hungry when she gets home from school, so her first _____ is to make herself a snack. (priority)
- Sentence 5: Most plants are _____ on soil, water, and sunlight to survive. (dependent)

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Can the students identify the word that completes each sentence?
- Do their explanations show that they understand the vocabulary words' meanings?
- Are they using the words they are learning in their writing and conversations outside of the vocabulary lessons?

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 200 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by inviting the students to tell or write stories in which they use the word.

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Before continuing with the week 21 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students' understanding of words taught in Weeks 17–20 by using the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 5" answer sheet (IA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment" on page 201 of the Assessment Resource Book.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate his understanding of words taught in Weeks 17–20 using the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Student Self-assessment" on page 205 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Teacher Note

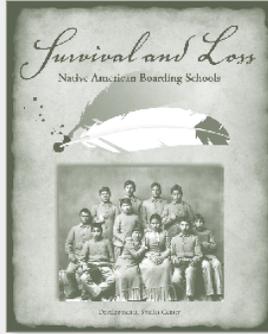

You might remind the students that they learned the word heave earlier and that heave means "pull, throw, or lift with a lot of effort."

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word dim earlier and that dim means "somewhat dark or not bright or clear."

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing synonyms (review)
- Using the suffix -less to determine word meanings (review)
- Recognizing antonyms (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the book.
- Students review synonyms.
- Students review the suffix -less.
- Students review antonyms.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students develop the skill of giving reasons for their opinions.
- Students make decisions and solve problems respectfully.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 1, review the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -less” on page 467.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 21 Word Cards” (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Befuddled, Heartless, and Quality

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words befuddled, heartless, and quality
- Review synonyms
- Review the suffix -less
- Review antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Taught

befuddled

Befuddled means “completely confused.”

heartless

Heartless means “without heart (kindness or compassion), unkind, or cruel.”

quality (p. 16)

A quality is a “special characteristic, or feature, of a person’s personality or character.” Friendliness and honesty are examples of qualities a person might have.

INTRODUCE AND USE BEFUDDLED

1 Introduce and Define Befuddled and Review Synonyms

Briefly review Survival and Loss: Native American Boarding Schools.

Show pages 14–15 of the book. Review that Captain Pratt persuaded the Sioux chief Spotted Tail to send his tribe’s children to Carlisle Indian Industrial School. Read “The Journey” on page 14 aloud.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is befuddled. Explain that befuddled means “completely confused” and that the words befuddled and confused are synonyms.

Explain that the children were befuddled, or completely confused, about where they were going and why they had to leave their families and homes. They were also befuddled, or confused, by the crowds of people that stared at them curiously whenever they stopped.

Display word card 121 (🗉 WA1) and have the students say the word befuddled.

Materials

- Survival and Loss
- Word card 121 (WA1)
- Word card 122 (WA2)
- Word card 123 (WA3)

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words befuddled and confused to it.

2 Discuss Being Befuddled

Explain that new or strange situations can befuddle people. Give examples of times when you or someone you know was befuddled.

You might say:

"My husband got a new computer last week, and the directions for setting it up befuddled, or completely confused, him. He finally had to call the computer company for help. Recently, I was driving in an unfamiliar city, and I took a wrong turn. I was befuddled. I didn't know where I was. I finally stopped at a gas station and got directions. When I was your age, some math problems befuddled me. I would become confused and had trouble solving them."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you been befuddled? Why were you befuddled? [Pause; click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "When have you been befuddled, or confused, by something someone said to you or asked you to do?" "When have you been befuddled by something at school?" and "When have you been befuddled by instructions or directions you were following?"

WA1

befuddled

PROMPT 1: I was befuddled by _____. I was befuddled because . . .

PROMPT 1: "I was befuddled by [a question on our social studies quiz the other day]. I was befuddled because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word befuddled and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE USE HEARTLESS

3 Introduce and Define Heartless and Review Synonyms and the Suffix -less

Show pages 14–15 of the book again. Review that when the children arrived at the boarding school, the process of forcibly educating them to live like European Americans began immediately. Read “‘Before’ and ‘After’” on page 14 aloud.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is heartless. Explain that heartless means “unkind or cruel” and that the words heartless, unkind, and cruel are synonyms.

Explain that the treatment the Native American children received at Carlisle was heartless, or unkind and cruel. Review that the children were stripped of their traditional clothing and beaded necklaces and that the clothing was burned. They were scrubbed in hot baths and given uncomfortable clothing and shoes to wear. The boys’ hair was cut, which caused the boys to wail, or cry. Explain that all of these are examples of the heartless, or cruel, way the children were treated.

Display word card 122 (🗨️ WA2) and have the students say the word heartless.

Point to the suffix -less in heartless, and review that -less is a suffix that means “without.” Point to the word heart and explain that people consider the heart to be the part of the body that feels emotions such as kindness or compassion. Explain that adding the suffix -less to the word heart makes the new word heartless, which means “without heart, or without kindness or compassion.” Point out that heartless behavior is unkind or cruel.

4 Review Antonyms and Discuss Heartless and Kind

Tell the students that the antonym, or opposite, of the word heartless is the word kind.

Explain that you will describe a situation involving our friend Tulip. Partners will first discuss what Tulip might do or say in the situation if she were heartless. Then they will discuss what she might do or say if she were kind.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- Tulip’s friend is upset because she lost a necklace she got for her birthday.

Ask:

Q If Tulip were heartless, what might she do or say? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “If Tulip were heartless, she might . . .”

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words heartless, unkind, and cruel to it.

Teacher Note

If you started a “Words with the Suffix -less” chart, add the word heartless to it.

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Then ask:

Q If Tulip were kind, what might she do or say? [Click 2 to reveal prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If Tulip were kind, she might . . .”

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- A stray dog follows Tulip home.

Point to the word heartless and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE QUALITY

5 Introduce and Define Quality

Show pages 16–17 of the book. Review that Native American children were forbidden to speak their native languages or use their Native American names at school. Explain that names are very important to Native Americans and that without their names, the children no longer felt like themselves. Then read “What’s in a Name?” on page 16 aloud, emphasizing the word qualities.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is quality. Explain that a quality is a “special characteristic, or feature, of a person’s personality or character.”

Explain that friendliness is an example of a quality, or feature, that we might admire in a person’s personality or character. Honesty is another quality that we might admire in people.

Explain that Native American names sometimes honor a quality, or feature of a person’s personality. For example, a Cherokee who possessed the quality of faithfulness (loyalty) might be named Hantaywee, which means “faithful.”

Display word card 123 (WA3) and have the students say the word quality.

6 Discuss Qualities People Admire

Explain that we sometimes refer to qualities we admire or like in people, such as friendliness and honesty, as “positive qualities.” Explain that other positive qualities are loyalty, sense of humor, kindness, compassion, gentleness, generosity, courage, and wisdom.

Tell the students that the people we choose as friends often have qualities we like or admire. Give some examples of qualities you look for in a friend.

Teacher Note

You might list positive qualities where everyone can see them.

You might say:

“One quality I look for in my friends is kindness. I want my friends to be people who treat other people with kindness rather than cruelty. I also think a good sense of humor is an important quality in a friend, because I really enjoy laughing and being around funny people.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is a quality you look for in a friend? Why? [Pause; Click 1 on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “A quality I look for in a friend is [courage] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Then ask:

Q What is a positive quality you think you possess (have)? [Click 2 to reveal prompt 2.] Why do you think that? Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “A positive quality I think I possess is [a sense of humor], because . . .”

Point to the word quality and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -less

Write the word heartless where everyone can see it. Point to the suffix -less in the word heartless and review that the word part -less is a suffix. Review that a suffix is a “letter or group of letters that is added to the end of the word to make a new word.”

Remind the students that the suffix -less means “without” or “having no.” Review that adding the suffix -less to the word heart makes the new word heartless, which means “without heart, or without kindness or compassion.” Review that heartless behavior is unkind or cruel.

Write the word shoeless where everyone can see it, and explain that this is another word that uses the suffix -less. Point to the word shoeless and discuss as a class:

Q Based on what you know about the word shoe and the suffix -less, what do you think the word shoeless means?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that shoeless means “without shoes, or barefoot.” Use the same procedure to discuss the words penniless, shapeless, useless, and weightless.

Teacher Note

If you started a “Words with the Suffix -less” chart, add the words shoeless, penniless, shapeless, useless, and weightless to it.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Give Your Best Friend a New Name

Review that Native Americans are sometimes given names that honor or recognize positive qualities. They are also given names that honor things they can do or have done. For example, the Cherokee name Ayita means “first to dance.”

Tell the students that you want them to think of a name they might give to their best friend that honors a positive quality or something the friend can do or has done. Give a few examples of names that you might give to friends.

You might say:

“I would give my friend Eric the name ‘Eric the Friendly’ because he is one of the friendliest people I know. My sister Kelly is my best friend. I would give Kelly the name ‘Caring Kelly’ because she is a very caring person. She cares about her family and about the other people in her life.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is a name you would give to your best friend that would honor one of his or her positive qualities? Why? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I would give my friend the name [Gary the Brave] because one of his positive qualities is [bravery].”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Tell the students that all names have meanings and that the study of names is called “onomastics.” If they are interested in learning about the meaning of their own or others’ names, you might have them search online using the keywords “name meanings.”

Review Befuddled, Heartless, and Quality

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words befuddled, heartless, and quality from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Reviewed

befuddled

Befuddled means “completely confused.”

heartless

Heartless means “without heart (kindness or compassion), unkind, or cruel.”

quality

A quality is a “special characteristic, or feature, of a person’s personality or character.” Friendliness and honesty are examples of qualities a person might have.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

-  Q Which of yesterday’s words do you think was especially fun or interesting to talk about? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [befuddled] was especially [fun/interesting] to talk about because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Discuss “Would You?” Questions

Tell the students that you will ask questions that include one of yesterday’s words and a word they learned earlier in the year.

Point to the word befuddled and ask:

 Q If you went home and everything in your bedroom was helter-skelter, would you be befuddled? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If everything in my bedroom was helter-skelter, I [would/would not] be befuddled because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following questions:

[heartless]

 Q If a friend deserted you on a hike, would you think that was heartless? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “If a friend deserted me on a hike, I [would/would not] think it was heartless because . . .”

[quality]

 Q If your partner for a science project possessed qualities that you liked, would you protest? Why? [Click 4 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “If my partner for a science project possessed qualities that I liked, I [would/would not] protest because . . .”

Teacher Note

You might tell the students that they learned the word helter-skelter earlier and that if things are helter-skelter, they are lying about in a disorganized, confusing, or careless way.

Teacher Note

You might review that desert means “abandon, or leave someone or something that should not be left behind.”

Teacher Note

You might tell the students that they learned the word protest earlier and the protest means “complain about something or object to something you feel is wrong or unfair.”

Introduce Deliberately, Drastic, and Injustice

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words deliberately, drastic, and injustice
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Taught

deliberately (p. 17)

Deliberately means “intentionally or on purpose.”

drastic (p. 24)

Drastic means “harsh, extreme, or very severe.”

injustice (p. 26)

An injustice is a “situation in which people are treated very unfairly.”

INTRODUCE AND USE DELIBERATELY

1 Introduce and Define Deliberately

Show pages 16–17 of Survival and Loss.

Review that many restrictions were placed on Native American children in boarding schools, but that some students found ways to fight back.

Read the following sentences from the first paragraph of “Keeping Culture Alive” on page 17 aloud, emphasizing the word deliberately:

“Many refused to respond to their teachers. If a teacher asked a question, a student might stare into space, blank faced and silent. Some students would deliberately do their work very slowly.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is deliberately and explain that deliberately means “intentionally or on purpose.”

Explain that some of the children rebelled against their teachers by deliberately, or intentionally, doing their work slowly.

Display word card 124 (WA5) and have the students say the word deliberately.

2 Discuss Things the Students Have Done Deliberately

Tell the students that when something is done deliberately, it is done with a plan and a result in mind. Give a few examples of things you do deliberately in the classroom or elsewhere.

Materials

- Survival and Loss
- Word card 124 (WA5)
- Word card 125 (WA6)
- Word card 126 (WA7)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of deliberately is deliberadamente.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the words deliberately and intentionally are synonyms and add them to the synonym chart.

You might say:

"I deliberately, or intentionally, arranged the desks in our classroom this way so that we would have a place to meet as a group on the rug. I deliberately schedule our independent reading time after math so that students who finish their math work early can begin reading right away. At home last night, I deliberately put my briefcase next to the front door so that I would not forget it this morning."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you deliberately done something? Why did you do it deliberately? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA5

deliberately

PROMPT 1: I deliberately _____ because . . .

PROMPT 1: "I deliberately [put my homework in my backpack] because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word deliberately and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE DRASTIC

3 Introduce and Define Drastic

Show pages 24–25 of the book. Review that by the 1930s most Native American boarding schools were closed, because the U.S. government determined that the children should not be taken away from their families to be educated. Read the first paragraph of page 24 aloud, emphasizing the word drastic.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is drastic. Explain that drastic means "harsh, extreme, or very severe."

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of drastic is drástico/a.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the words drastic, harsh, extreme, and severe are synonyms and add the words to the synonym chart.

Explain that the boarding schools used drastic, or harsh or very severe, measures to change Native American children and stop them from living the life they had known before school. Review that the children were forbidden to wear their native clothing or speak their native languages. They were not allowed to eat traditional foods. Even their names were changed. The schools' drastic efforts to give the children a European-style education damaged many of them forever by destroying their connection to their traditional way of life.

Display word card 125 (🗉 WA6) and have the students say the word drastic.

4 Discuss Drastic Actions

Remind the students that drastic means “harsh, extreme, or very severe,” and explain that something that is drastic is beyond what is normally or usually done. Give a few examples of drastic things you or someone you know has done.

You might say:

“My cousin takes drastic, or extreme, steps to make sure his car stays looking new. He gets it washed and waxed every week, and he won’t park it under a tree or next to another car in a parking lot to make sure it doesn’t get scratched. A friend of mine takes drastic steps to make sure she is never cold. She always wears heavy sweaters and socks—even when it’s warm out—and turns up the heat in her house so high that no one else can stand it.”

Have the students imagine the following scenario:

- A museum director wants to prevent people from touching the art, so she places a guard next to each painting.

Ask:

Q Do you think the museum director’s action is drastic? Why? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I [do/do not] think the museum director’s action is drastic because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Then ask:

Q What might the museum director do that would be less drastic? More drastic?

Click 2 on word card 125 (WA6) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “A [less/more] drastic action might be . . .”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word compel earlier and that compel means “force.”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of injustice is injusticia.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word inform earlier and that inform means “give or tell information.”

Teacher Note

You might explain that the word injustice is an antonym of the word justice, which means “fair treatment or behavior.”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- There have been a few skateboarding accidents at the park, so the city council compels people to stop riding skateboards, in-line skates, bicycles, and scooters in the park.

Point to the word drastic and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE INJUSTICE

5 Introduce and Define Injustice

Show pages 26–27 of Survival and Loss. Review that a few Native Americans were able to use what they learned in the boarding schools to help them work for the rights of all Native Americans.

Read the following sentences from “Hope for the Future” on page 26 aloud, emphasizing the word injustice: “They knew enough about the European American world to be able to reason with the government and to inform all Americans about the damage that had been done to Native American culture. It was the first step in bringing to light centuries of injustice and the first step toward healing the wounds.”

Tell the students that injustice is the last word they will learn today, and explain that an injustice is a “situation in which people are treated very unfairly.” Explain that Native Americans who worked for the rights of their people informed other Americans of the injustices, or unfair treatment, that Native Americans faced.

Display word card 126 (🌐 WA7) and have the students say the word injustice.

6 Discuss Native American Injustices

Tell the students that you will read an example from Survival and Loss of an injustice, or very unfair situation, faced by Native Americans; then partners will discuss why they think the situation is an injustice.

Begin by reading the following example aloud:

- “When the United States was formed in 1776, Native Americans were not included as citizens.”

Ask:

Q Why was not including the Native Americans as citizens an injustice? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Not including the Native Americans as citizens was an injustice because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Then ask:

Q What could have been done to treat the Native Americans more fairly?

Click 2 on word card 126 (WA7) to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “To treat the Native Americans more fairly . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining examples:

- “Present-day Oklahoma was set aside as Native American territory. However, this land was different from the land the eastern tribes were used to. The crops they had grown in the East didn’t grow on the new land, there were few wild animals to hunt, and the plants and geography were unfamiliar.”
- “The (Native American) children were taken away from their families and the lives they knew and sent to boarding schools.”

Point to the word injustice and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Review Deliberately, Drastic, and Injustice

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review the words deliberately, drastic, and injustice from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Reach agreement before making decisions

Words Reviewed

deliberately

Deliberately means “intentionally or on purpose.”

drastic

Drastic means “harsh, extreme, or very severe.”

injustice

An injustice is a “situation in which people are treated very unfairly.”

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Which of yesterday's words might you use in a conversation with your family or friends? How might you use the word?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA8) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

1 2 3 4

PROMPT 1: "I might use the word [drastic] when I talk with [my mom]. I might say . . ."

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity "Imagine That!"

Tell the students that partners will do the activity "Imagine That!" Review that you will describe a situation that includes one of yesterday's vocabulary words. Then partners will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to answer a question about the situation.

Have the students imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- You are leaving your house to go to school, and you deliberately leave the front door open.

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

 Q Why might you deliberately leave the front door open? [Pause; click 2 on WA8 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I might deliberately leave the front door open because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining scenarios:

- Your dad tells you it's time to go to bed. You throw yourself on the floor, grab his leg, and scream, "I don't want to go to bed! I'll die if I have to go to bed!"

Q Is your response drastic? Why? [Pause; click ❸ to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: "My response [is/is not] drastic because . . ."

- You go to a movie with your friends. The ticket seller won't sell you a ticket because you must be 17 years old to see the movie without your parents.

Q Is this an injustice? Why? [Pause; click ❹ to reveal the next prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: "This [is/is not] an injustice because . . ."

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Ongoing Review

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Reach agreement before making decisions

Words Reviewed

befuddled

Befuddled means "completely confused."

deliberately

Deliberately means "intentionally or on purpose."

hair-raising

Hair-raising means "exciting, thrilling, or terrifying."

resolve

Resolve means "find an answer or solution to a problem."

squander

Squander means "carelessly waste something such as money, time, or opportunities."

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (🗉 WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “What Might You Say or Do?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Might You Say or Do?” Remind the students that you will describe a situation; then partners will use the vocabulary words to talk about what they might say or do in that situation.

Begin by reading the following situation aloud:

- Your friend tells you how to get to his house. You are befuddled by his directions.

Then ask:

-  Q What might you say or do if you are befuddled by your friend’s directions? [Click 1 on WA9 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing words with multiple meanings (review)
- Using the suffix -er to determine word meanings (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the story.
- Students review words with multiple meanings.
- Students review the suffix -er.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students develop the skill of giving reasons for their opinions.
- Students discuss their opinions respectfully.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 3, review the more strategy practice activity “Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -er” on page 496.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.

- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the following materials: “Week 22 Word Cards” (BLM2) and “Week 22 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Dwelling, Deteriorate, and Vivid

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words dwelling, deteriorate, and vivid
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Taught

dwelling (p. 10)

A dwelling is a “place where someone lives, such as a house or an apartment.”

deteriorate

Deteriorate means “become worse.”

vivid (p. 24)

Vivid means “sharp and clear.” Vivid also means “bright and strong.”

INTRODUCE AND USE DWELLING

1 Introduce and Define Dwelling

Briefly review A River Ran Wild.

Remind the students that the book tells the history of the Nashua River in Massachusetts. Show pages 10–11 and review that many, many years ago Native Americans settled in the Nashua River Valley. Read the first two sentences on page 10 aloud, emphasizing the word *dwelling*s.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is dwelling. Explain that a dwelling is a “place where someone lives, such as a house or an apartment.”

Show the illustration on page 11 and point out the Native American dwellings. Explain that these dwellings are made out of leaves and branches.

Display word card 127 (🔊 WA1) and have the students say the word dwelling.

2 Discuss Types of Dwellings

Tell the students that there are many different types of dwellings. Explain that igloos, huts, teepees, apartments, houses, and cabins are examples of dwellings.

Materials

- A River Ran Wild
- Word card 127 (WA1)
- Word card 128 (WA2)
- Word card 129 (WA3)

Ask:

Q If you could build your own dwelling, what type of dwelling would you build? Why? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA1

dwelling

PROMPT 1: If I could build my own dwelling, I would build _____ because . . .

1 2

PROMPT 1: “If I could build my own dwelling, I would build [a log cabin] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking each volunteer:

Q Where would you build your dwelling? Why?

Click 2 on word card 127 (WA1) to reveal the prompt. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking.

PROMPT 2: “I would build my dwelling [by the ocean] because . . .”

Point to the word dwelling and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE DETERIORATE

3 Introduce and Define Deteriorate

Show pages 22–23 of the book and review that in the 1800s people built paper mills and other factories along the Nashua River. Read page 22 aloud.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is deteriorate, and explain that deteriorate means “become worse.” Explain that as time passed, and factories dumped more and more waste into the water, the health of the river deteriorated, or became worse.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of deteriorate is deteriorar.

Display word card 128 (🔊 WA2) and have the students say the word deteriorate.

Tell the students that you will reread the last paragraph on page 22 aloud. Ask them to listen for evidence that the health of the river had deteriorated. Then reread the paragraph aloud.

Discuss as a class:

Q What evidence did you hear that the health of the river had deteriorated, or become worse?

Click 1 on word card 128 (WA2) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “[‘No fish lived in the river’] is evidence that the health of the river had deteriorated.”

If necessary, explain that evidence that the health of the river had deteriorated is that “no fish lived in the river,” “no birds stopped on their migration,” and the water was dark and dirty.

4 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Imagine That!” Explain that you will read a scenario that includes the word deteriorate. Then partners will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to answer a question.

Have the students imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- When you bought your new bicycle, it was in great condition, but now the condition of the bicycle is deteriorating.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q In what ways might the bicycle change as its condition deteriorates? [Pause; click 2 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “As the condition of the bicycle deteriorates, it might . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- You are on a picnic on a bright, sunny day. Suddenly, the weather begins to deteriorate.

Q In what ways might the weather change as it deteriorates? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “As the weather deteriorates, it might . . .”

Point to the word deteriorate and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of vivid is vívido/a.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What dreams have you had that felt like they were real?” “When have you awakened from a dream and thought, ‘I’m glad that was just a dream!’” and “When have you awakened from a dream and wished that you could close your eyes and restart the dream where it left off?”

INTRODUCE AND USE VIVID

5 Introduce and Define Vivid

Show pages 24–25 of A River Ran Wild and remind the students that pollution from factories was slowly killing the Nashua River. Read the first paragraph on page 24 aloud, emphasizing the word vivid.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is vivid, and explain that vivid means “sharp and clear.” Explain that Oweana’s dream is so vivid, or sharp and clear, that he remembers every detail of it when he wakes up.

Display word card 129 ( WA3) and have the students say the word vivid.

6 Discuss Vivid Dreams

Explain that occasionally all of us have vivid dreams, or dreams that are very sharp and clear and seem almost real. Explain that we often remember a vivid dream when we wake up. Give one or two examples of vivid dreams you have had.

You might say:

“I sometimes have vivid dreams about places I’ve visited. In the dreams, I can clearly see the sights I saw when I visited. I can even hear the sounds and see the people I met. I sometimes have vivid dreams about my mother. I see her just as I remember her. When I wake up, it’s as if I have spent time with her. I can remember our conversations from the dreams.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is a vivid dream you have had? [Pause; click  on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I had a vivid dream about . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

7 Discuss Another Meaning of Vivid

Remind the students that words can have more than one meaning. Explain that in addition to meaning “sharp and clear,” vivid can also mean “bright and strong.” Explain that we often use this second meaning of vivid to describe colors that are bright and strong. For example, a vivid blue sky is a sky that is bright blue in color.

Ask the students to take a few moments to look quietly for vivid colors that are around the room or outside the window. Then ask:

Q What do you see that has vivid colors? What are the vivid colors? [Click  to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “[David’s shirt] has vivid colors. The vivid colors are [red and yellow].”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word vivid and review the pronunciation and meanings of the word.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Draw and Discuss Dwellings

Remind the students that a dwelling is a “place where someone lives, such as a house or an apartment.” Review that the students discussed dwellings that they might build.

Ask:

Q What is a dwelling that you or your partner discussed building?

After the students have shared, ask them to draw a picture of a dwelling that they might build. Explain that the picture can be based on one of the dwellings that they have discussed, or a different dwelling. Have the students share their pictures in pairs. Encourage them to use the following prompt as they talk to one another:

PROMPT: “My dwelling . . .”

Ask one or two volunteers to share their drawings and what they talked about with the class.

EXTENSION

Discuss Vivid Verbs and Adjectives

Write the following sentences where everyone can see them:

Jon ate a sandwich.

Jon devoured a sandwich.

The boat looked tiny in the vast ocean.

The boat looked tiny in the big ocean.

Alice walked through the park.

Alice strolled through the park.

Tell the students that one way that good writers make their writing more interesting and fun to read is by replacing overused verbs like think and clean with vivid verbs like contemplate and scour. Good writers also replace overused adjectives like loud, wet, and tall with vivid adjectives like thunderous, moist, and towering. Review that vivid means “sharp and clear.” Explain that vivid verbs are “action words that are strong, clear, and specific,” and that vivid adjectives are “descriptive words that are strong, clear, and specific.” Point out that vivid verbs and adjectives paint word pictures that help readers visualize what is happening in a text.

Direct the students’ attention to the first pair of sentences, and read the sentences aloud. If necessary, review that the students learned the word devour earlier, and that devour means “eat something quickly and hungrily.” Point to the words ate and devoured in the sentences, and discuss as a class:

Q Which of these verbs is a vivid verb: ate or devoured? Why do you think that?

PROMPT: “[Devoured] is a vivid verb because . . .”

If necessary, explain that devoured is a vivid verb because it helps readers picture exactly how Jon ate the sandwich—quickly and hungrily.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining sentences. If necessary, review the meanings of vast (“very large in number or area”) and stroll (“walk in a slow, relaxed way”).

Review Dwelling, Deteriorate, and Vivid

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words dwelling, deteriorate, and vivid from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Reviewed

dwelling

A dwelling is a “place where someone lives, such as a house or an apartment.”

deteriorate

vivid

Vivid means “sharp and clear.” Vivid also means “bright and strong.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which of yesterday’s words do you think was interesting or fun to talk about? Why? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Think More About the Words

Tell the students that you will describe a situation, and then partners will use vocabulary words to discuss it.

Read the following scenario aloud twice:

- Your neighbor's dwelling is deteriorating.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What might cause the dwelling to deteriorate? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “[Not taking care of the dwelling] might cause it to deteriorate.”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking the volunteers:

Q What might the dwelling look like after it has deteriorated?

Click 3 on the daily review cards (WA4) to reveal the next prompt. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking.

PROMPT 3: “After the dwelling has deteriorated, it might . . .”

Then discuss the following scenario:

- Your little brother tells you a vivid story.

 Q What might the vivid story be about? [Pause; click 4 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “The vivid story might be about . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking the volunteers:

Q What might you say to your brother after he tells you the vivid story?

Click 5 to reveal the next prompt. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 5: “After my brother tells me the vivid story, I might say . . .”

EXTENSION

Explore Domain-specific Words: Industrial Revolution

Show pages 18–19 of A River Ran Wild and review that in the early 1800s, “an industrial revolution came to the Nashua’s banks and waters.” Explain that “Industrial Revolution” is the term historians use to describe the period from about 1760 to 1840 when a series of remarkable inventions changed the world and the way people live and work. Remind the students that in the book they learned that new machines were invented for making cloth and paper. Factories were built, and factory workers used the new machines to produce clothing and paper goods that were once made by hand.

Explain that other inventions of the Industrial Revolution changed the way people traveled and communicated. For example, in 1776 a Scottish inventor named James Watt invented a more efficient steam engine. In time, steam engines were used to power steamboats and trains, and people and goods were able to travel faster and farther than ever before. Explain that later, American inventor Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone, which changed the way people communicate to this day.

Discuss as a class:

Q Why do you think the telephone was such an important invention? How do you think the invention of the telephone changed the way people lived?

If necessary, explain that before the invention of the telephone people communicated mainly by writing letters, which sometimes took weeks or even months to arrive at their destinations. Explain that the telephone enabled people to communicate instantly and over long distances. People were able to keep in closer touch with family members and friends who lived far away, and they could receive news from around the country and the world almost as quickly as it happened.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word efficient earlier and that if someone or something is efficient, the person or thing works well and does not waste time or energy.

Teacher Note

You might discuss other inventions of the Industrial Revolution that changed people’s lives, such as the sewing machine (Elias Howe, 1846), the internal-combustion engine (Étienne Lenoir, 1858), and the phonograph (Thomas Edison, 1877).

Day 3

Introduce Wide-eyed, Restore, and Supporter

Materials

- A River Ran Wild
- Word card 130 (WA5)
- Word card 131 (WA6)
- Word card 132 (WA7)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words wide-eyed, restore, and supporter
- Review the suffix -er
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Taught

wide-eyed (p. 24)

Wide-eyed means “with the eyes wide open, especially because you are amazed or surprised.”

restore (p. 26)

Restore means “bring something back to its original condition.”

supporter

A supporter is “someone who supports, or helps or favors, a particular person, group, or plan.”

INTRODUCE AND USE WIDE-EYED

1 Introduce and Define Wide-eyed

Show pages 24–25 of A River Ran Wild, and review that Oweana has a vivid dream about the river. Read the first sentence on page 24 aloud, emphasizing the word wide-eyed.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is wide-eyed, and explain that wide-eyed means “with the eyes wide open, especially because you are amazed or surprised.”

Explain that Oweana’s dream seemed so real and made such a powerful impression on him that he woke up wide-eyed, or with his eyes wide open in surprise or amazement. Demonstrate the way someone looks when he is wide-eyed from surprise or amazement.

Display word card 130 (WA5) and have the students say the word wide-eyed.

2 Discuss Being Wide-eyed

Give one or two examples of times when you or someone you know was wide-eyed with surprise or amazement, and act out the way you or the person looked.

You might say:

"I was wide-eyed with surprise the other morning when I saw a family of raccoons run across my yard—I could not believe what I was seeing. This morning Adrian was wide-eyed when I invited her to share her poem with the class. She didn't expect that."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you been wide-eyed with amazement or surprise? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

wide-eyed

PROMPT 1: I was wide-eyed with [amazement/surprise] when . . .

1

WA5

PROMPT 1: "I was wide-eyed with [amazement/surprise] when . . ."

Point to the word wide-eyed and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE RESTORE

3 Introduce and Define Restore

Show pages 26–27 of the book and review that Oweana and Marion have the same dream about the Nashua River, and together they decide that something needs to be done. Read the first two sentences on page 26 aloud, emphasizing the word restore.

Teacher Note

If the students cannot think of times they were wide-eyed, ask "What might happen [in the classroom/at home] that would cause you to be wide-eyed?" or "When have you seen another person who was wide-eyed with amazement or surprise?"

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of restore is restaurar.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word pollute earlier and that pollute means “poison the air, water, or soil.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word deteriorate earlier and that deteriorate means “become worse.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is restore, and explain that restore means “bring something back to its original condition.” Explain that Marion asks the people living along the river to help restore the river, or bring it back to the way it was before it became polluted.

Display word card 131 (🗨️ WA6) and have the students say the word restore.

4 Imagine Restoring Things

Have the students imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- You move into a house that is next to a park. In the park, there is an old, deteriorating tree house.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What might you do to restore the old, deteriorating tree house? Why? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “To restore the old, deteriorating tree house, I might [replace the old boards and paint the new boards] because . . .”

After the students have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- You have been lying in bed, coughing, sneezing, and blowing your nose for a week.

Q What might you or your parents do to help restore your health? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “To restore my health, [I/my parents] might . . .”

Point to the word restore and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE SUPPORTER

5 Introduce and Define Supporter and Review the Suffix -er

Show pages 26–27 of the book again, and review that Marion was determined to see that the Nashua River was restored. Read the second paragraph on page 26 aloud.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is supporter, and explain that a supporter is a “person who supports, or helps or favors, a particular person, group, or plan.”

Explain that Marion talked to people about the polluted river, and many of them became supporters of Marion’s effort to clean up the Nashua River. Marion’s supporters helped her by signing petitions, sending letters, protesting, and persuading paper mill and factory owners to stop polluting.

Display word card 132 (🗨️ WA7) and have the students say the word supporter.

Point to the suffix -er in supporter and review that -er is a suffix that means a “person who.” Explain that when you add the suffix -er to the word support, which means “help or favor,” you make the word supporter, which means a “person who supports, or helps or favors, a particular person, group, or plan.”

6 Discuss Being a Supporter

Ask:

Q If a friend wanted to start an after-school homework club, would you be a supporter? Why? [Click ❶ on WA7 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I [would/would not] be a supporter because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Follow up by asking each volunteer:

Q What might you do to show you are a supporter of your friend’s homework club?

Click ❷ on word card 132 (WA7) to reveal the next prompt. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “To show I’m a supporter, I might . . .”

Review that people, as well as plans and ideas, can have supporters. Point out that during a presidential election each candidate for president has supporters, or people who support the candidate and work to see that he or she is elected. Sports teams also have supporters, or people who favor or support the teams.

Ask:

Q Who do you know who is a supporter of a sports team? What does the person do that shows that he or she is a supporter? [Click ❸ to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “[My mom] is a supporter of [my softball team]. She shows she is a supporter by . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word supporter and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

If you started a “Words with the Suffix -er” chart, add the word supporter to it.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Discuss Other Words with the Suffix -er

Write the word supporter where everyone can see it. Review that the suffix -er means a “person who” and that a supporter is a “person who supports, or helps or favors, a particular person, group, or plan.”

Tell the students that you will read a sentence from A River Ran Wild and explain that you want them to listen for a word that ends with the suffix -er. Then read the following sentence from page 12 aloud, slowly and clearly: “The Nashua had lived for generations by the clear, clean, flowing river when one day a pale-skinned trader came with a boatload full of treasures.”

Discuss as a class:

Q What word did you hear that ends with the suffix -er?

Q What do you think the word trader means?

If necessary, explain that a trader is a “person who trades or sells goods.”

Use the same procedure to discuss the word settlers (“people who settle, or move to and make homes, in a place”) in the following sentence from page 14: “The settlers worked together to clear land by cutting down the forests, which they thought were full of danger—wilderness that they would conquer.”

Review Wide-eyed, Restore, and Supporter

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words wide-eyed, restore, and supporter from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Respectfully consider the opinions of others

Words Reviewed

wide-eyed

Wide-eyed means “with the eyes wide open, especially because you are amazed or surprised.”

restore

Restore means “bring something back to its original condition.”

supporter

A supporter is “someone who supports, or helps or favors, a particular person, group, or plan.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

- (Optional) Copy of the “Week 22 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) for each student

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [wide-eyed] when I talk with [my grandmother]. I might say . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Review that you will tell the beginning of a story that includes one of the vocabulary words. Then the students will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell Me a Story” chart (🗨️ WA9) and show the first story and its accompanying prompt. Tell the students that the first story uses the word wide-eyed. Then read story 1 aloud, slowly and clearly.

- Story 1: The burglar turned around, wide-eyed with surprise because . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q How might you finish the story? Why might the burglar turn around, wide-eyed with surprise? [Pause; point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: The burglar turned around, wide-eyed with surprise because . . .

WA9

PROMPT 1: “The burglar turned around, wide-eyed with surprise because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining stories:

- Story 2: Jenna woke up in a good mood, but at school her mood deteriorated. When she got home, Jenna restored her good mood by . . .

 Q How might you finish the story? What might Jenna have done to restore her good mood? [Pause; point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Jenna restored her good mood by . . .”

- Story 3: Andrew is excited that his mom is running a marathon. Andrew shows that he is a supporter by . . .

Teacher Note

You might review that deteriorate means “become worse.”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you finish the story? What might Andrew do to show that he is a supporter? [Pause; point to prompt 3.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “Andrew shows that he is a supporter by . . .”

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 21 and 22, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 22 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

Ongoing Review

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Respectfully consider the opinions of others

Words Reviewed

comply

Comply means “do what you are asked to do or what a law or rule requires you to do.”

get on board

“Get on board” means “accept or go along with something.”

heartless

Heartless means “without heart (kindness or compassion), unkind, or cruel.”

sequence

A sequence is a “series of events or objects in a particular order.”

supreme

Supreme means the “best or the highest in quality, power, or rank.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA10)
- Ongoing review activity (WA11)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Find Another Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Find Another Word.” Remind them that you will show several stories with one or more words underlined. You will read each story aloud; then partners will decide which of the vocabulary words could replace the underlined part of the story and explain why they think that.

Display the ongoing review activity (🎧 WA11) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined word.
 - Story 1: Miles’s parents buy the more expensive couch because the salesperson says that it is the very best one.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story and the underlined word. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word could replace the underlined words? Why? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [supreme] could replace the very best one because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place.

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA11) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the story with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following stories:

- Story 2: Hailey decides to go along with her cousin's idea to take a dance class. (get on board)
- Story 3: My dog is well trained. When I give a command, he does what I tell him to do. (complies)
- Story 4: Teri did the steps out of order, so she could not solve the problem. (sequence)
- Story 5: It is cruel to hurt an animal on purpose. (heartless)

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Can the students identify the vocabulary words that replace the underlined words?
- Do their explanations show that they understand the words' meanings?
- Are they using context clues, prefixes and suffixes, and other word-learning strategies to figure out words in their independent reading?

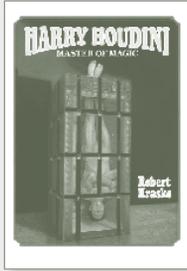

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 208 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by inviting the students to each create a picture card of the word with a definition in her own words on the back of the card.

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing idioms (review)
- Recognizing synonyms (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the story.
- Students review idioms.
- Students review synonyms.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students relate the value of respect to their behavior.
- Students develop the skills of giving reasons for their opinions and discussing their opinions respectfully.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print "Week 23 Word Cards" (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Day 1

Introduce “On Pins and Needles,” Preposterous, and Breathtaking

Materials

- Harry Houdini: Master of Magic
- Word card 133 (WA1)
- Word card 134 (WA2)
- Word card 135 (WA3)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words preposterous and breathtaking and the idiom “on pins and needles”
- Review idioms
- Review synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Taught

on pins and needles

“On pins and needles” means “very nervous or uneasy.”

preposterous

Preposterous means “ridiculous, or very silly or foolish.”

breathtaking

Breathtaking means “extremely impressive, exciting, or surprising.”

INTRODUCE AND USE “ON PINS AND NEEDLES”

1 Introduce and Define “On Pins and Needles” and Review Idioms

Show pages 6–7 of Harry Houdini: Master of Magic, and remind the students that earlier they heard the first chapter of the book, called “The Great Houdini.” Review that the chapter begins by telling about a performance in London in which Houdini escaped from a locked safe.

Turn to page 8 and review that after Houdini was locked in the safe, a screen was placed in front of the safe, and the audience waited for Houdini to reappear. Read pages 8–9 aloud, beginning with “A half hour passed,” and ending with “He needs help!”

Tell the students that the audience was on pins and needles as they waited for Houdini to emerge from the safe and that “on pins and needles” is an idiom that they will discuss first. Explain that “on pins and needles” means “very nervous or uneasy.”

Explain that you can tell that the audience was on pins and needles, or uneasy, because they were yelling “Open the door!” and “He’s dead and can’t get out!” Point out that one woman even screamed and fainted.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word uneasy earlier and that uneasy means “nervous, worried, or anxious.”

Display word card 133 (🗨️ WA1) and have the students say “on pins and needles.”

Remind the students that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.” Explain that when we say we are on pins and needles, we do not mean that we are sitting on a seat covered with pins and needles. Instead, we mean that we are nervous or uneasy about something—as nervous or uneasy as we would be if we were actually sitting on pins and needles.

Teacher Note

If you started an idiom chart, add the phrase “on pins and needles” to it.

2 Discuss Being on Pins and Needles

Review that “on pins and needles” means “very nervous or uneasy,” and give one or two examples of times when you have been on pins and needles.

You might say:

“When my dog was sick, I was on pins and needles while I waited to find out what was wrong. I was nervous that it might be something serious. I was on pins and needles while I was watching a movie last night. It was a movie with lots of action and suspense, and I was uneasy because I didn’t know what was going to happen next.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you been on pins and needles? Why were you on pins and needles? [Pause; click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

on pins and needles

PROMPT 1: I was on pins and needles when _____ because . . .

WA1

PROMPT 1: “I was on pins and needles when [I was waiting to find out if I got a part in the school play] because . . .”

Point to the phrase “on pins and needles” and review the pronunciation and meaning of the idiom.

INTRODUCE AND USE PREPOSTEROUS

3 Introduce and Define Preposterous

Open Harry Houdini to page 8 again, and review that the audience was on pins and needles waiting for Houdini to escape from the safe. Read the last two paragraphs on page 8 and the first two paragraphs on page 9 aloud, beginning with: “How can he possibly get out?” a woman asked,” and ending with: “‘Believe me,’ the man said turning away. ‘It’s true!’”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is preposterous, and explain that preposterous means “ridiculous, or very silly or foolish.” Tell the students that preposterous, ridiculous, and silly are synonyms.

Explain that the woman did not believe the man’s explanation, because she thought the idea of Houdini changing into a spirit was preposterous, or ridiculous.

Display word card 134 (🗉 WA2) and have the students say the word preposterous.

4 Discuss Preposterous Things Tulip Might Say

Tell the students that you will describe a situation that Tulip is in; then partners will discuss a preposterous, or ridiculous, silly, or foolish, excuse or reason Tulip might give to explain the situation. Then partners will discuss an excuse or reason she might give that would not be preposterous.

Begin by reading the following description aloud:

- Tulip comes home late from school. Her mother asks, “Tulip, why are you late?”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What preposterous explanation might Tulip give her mother to explain why she is late? [Pause; click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “A preposterous explanation Tulip might give is . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What explanation might Tulip give that is not preposterous? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “An explanation Tulip might give that is not preposterous is . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the words preposterous, ridiculous, and silly to it.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something Tulip might say that is too silly to be believed?” and “What is something that would probably never happen to Tulip on the way home from school?”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following description:

- Tulip is spending the night at her friend Violet's house. During the night, they hear a scratching sound on the roof. Violet asks, "What's making that noise?"

Point to the word preposterous and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE BREATH TAKING

5 Introduce and Define Breathtaking

Return to pages 8–9 of Harry Houdini, and review that the audience could not understand how Houdini might be able to get out of the locked safe. Remind the students that many members of the audience thought that he might be dead.

Read aloud from page 9, beginning with: "At that moment, Houdini stepped from behind the screen," and ending with: "Houdini smiled and bowed to the cheering people."

Explain that when Houdini appeared, the audience was very impressed and extremely surprised—the audience thought Houdini's performance was breathtaking. Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is brehtaking, and explain that brehtaking means "extremely impressive, exciting, or surprising."

Display word card 135 (🔊 WA3) and have the students say the word brehtaking.

6 Discuss Things That Are Breathtaking

Review that when something is breathtaking, it is extremely impressive, exciting, or surprising. Give a few examples of things that you have seen or done that are breathtaking.

You might say:

"When I hiked to the top of a mountain in Lake Tahoe, the view was breathtaking. I was very impressed by the beautiful wilderness around me. I went whitewater rafting a few years ago, and the experience was breathtaking—it was very exciting! The other night there was a deer in my backyard. It was breathtaking because I did not expect to see the lovely animal in my yard."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you experienced or seen something that was breathtaking? Why was it breathtaking? [Pause; click 🔊 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

You might explain that something impressive has a strong effect on your mind. You notice and remember it.

You might also explain that something that is breathtaking is so impressive, exciting, or surprising that it seems to take your breath away.

PROMPT 1: “[Seeing my baby sister for the first time] was breathtaking because . . .”

Point to the word breathtaking and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Draw and Discuss a Preposterous Animal

Remind the students that preposterous means “ridiculous, or very silly or foolish.” Tell the students that they will imagine a preposterous animal, and then they will draw the preposterous animal. Explain that after the students have finished their drawings, partners will discuss them together.

Have the students close their eyes. Then ask:

Q What does your preposterous animal look like?

After a few moments, have the students open their eyes. Have the students use the following prompt to share their thinking in pairs.

PROMPT: “My preposterous animal . . .”

Ask the students to draw a picture of a preposterous animal. Explain that the picture can be based on the animals that they have discussed or a different animal. Have the students share their pictures in pairs. Encourage them to use the prompt as they talk to one another.

Ask one or two volunteers to share their drawings and what they talked about with the group.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What size might a preposterous, or ridiculous, animal be?” “What might a preposterous animal’s [nose/ears/hands/feet] look like?” and “What color might a preposterous animal be?”

Review “On Pins and Needles,” Preposterous, and Breathtaking

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words preposterous and breathtaking and the idiom “on pins and needles” from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Reviewed

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Does That Make Sense?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Does That Make Sense?” You will read a scenario that includes one of yesterday’s vocabulary words. Partners will decide whether or not the word makes sense in the scenario and explain why they think so.

Point to the idiom “on pins and needles” on the daily review cards (WA4) and explain that the first scenario includes the idiom “on pins and needles.”

Then read the following scenario aloud twice:

- Pablo was on pins and needles while he waited for his turn to give his report.

Ask:

Q Does the idiom “on pins and needles” make sense in the scenario? Why do you think that? [Click  to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The [word/idiom] [‘on pins and needles’] [does/does not] make sense in the scenario because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

[preposterous]

- Jennie told her mother that if she eats too many blueberries, her skin will turn blue. Her mother said, “Jennie, that is the most preposterous thing I have ever heard.”

[breathtaking]

- Isaiah opened his lunch sack to find the same thing he eats for lunch almost every day: a peanut butter sandwich, baby carrots, and a bottle of water. He said, “This lunch is breathtaking!”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, call for their attention. Reread the scenario aloud, and explain that “on pins and needles” does make sense because it is likely that Pablo felt very nervous before giving his report. Then read the next scenario.

EXTENSION

An Interesting Fact About Preposterous

Explain that preposterous comes from the Latin prae meaning “before” and posterous meaning “coming behind.” Literally, the word preposterous means “before-behind.” Explain that when someone does something first that should be done later, it is preposterous, or contrary to the way we think it should be done. Tell the students that the phrase “topsy-turvy” and the idiom “put the cart before the horse” have similar meanings.

Introduce Master, Mystify, and Momentous

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words master, mystify, and momentous
- Review synonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Taught

master (p. 10)

If you master a skill, you become very good at it.

mystify

Mystify means “confuse, bewilder, or puzzle.”

momentous

Momentous means “very important or meaningful.”

Materials

- Harry Houdini
- Word card 136 (WA5)
- Word card 137 (WA6)
- Word card 138 (WA7)

INTRODUCE AND USE MASTER

1 Introduce and Define Master

Open the book Harry Houdini to page 10, and review that Harry Houdini was a great magician and escape artist. Read the following sentences from page 10 aloud, emphasizing the word master: “Some people thought he was born with magical powers. But this was not true. He became a master magician only after long years of hard work.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is master, and explain that if you master a skill, you become very good at it. Explain that Houdini practiced hard for many years to master, or become very good at, performing magic tricks.

Display word card 136 (WA5) and have the students say the word master.

2 Discuss Mastering a Skill

Explain that by practicing a skill such as drawing, singing, riding a bike, or flying a kite, a person can master the skill, or become very good at it. Give a few examples of skills you have mastered or are trying to master.

You might say:

“After knitting for many years, I have finally mastered, or become very good at, making slippers. I am trying to master playing the guitar. Right now, I am just learning how to play and am trying to master all of the chords.”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by giving examples of skills or subjects the students might have mastered or be trying to master (for example, dribbling a basketball, playing an instrument, or playing a video game).

Teacher Note

If you started a synonym chart, add the word mystify and its synonyms to it.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is a skill you have mastered or are trying to master? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA5

PROMPT 1: “A skill [I have mastered/I am trying to master] is . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking each volunteer:

Q What [did you do/are you doing] to master [doing a backflip off the diving board]?

Click 2 on word card 136 (WA5) to reveal the next prompt. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “To master [doing a backflip off the diving board], I . . .”

Point to the word master and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE MYSTIFY

3 Introduce and Define Mystify and Review Synonyms

Open the book to page 11, and review that Ehrich (Houdini’s real name was Ehrich Weiss) started practicing tricks and escapes when he was nine years old. Then read the first part of the first full paragraph on page 11 aloud, starting with “He also practiced rope escapes,” and stopping after “How had he escaped?”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is mystify, and explain that mystify means “confuse, bewilder, or puzzle.” Explain that mystify, confuse, bewilder, and puzzle are synonyms.

Explain that when Ehrich escaped from the ropes, his friends were mystified, or bewildered or puzzled, about how he was able to do it.

Display word card 137 (🔊 WA6) and have the students say the word mystify.

4 Discuss Being Mystified

Remind the students that when you are mystified, you are confused or puzzled by something. Give a few examples of times when you have been mystified.

You might say:

"I was mystified when I read an article about cloning. I was confused about how scientists can create two animals that are exactly alike. I was watching a mystery on TV, and I could not figure out who had committed the crime. I was completely mystified, or puzzled."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q When have you been mystified? Why were you mystified? [Pause; click 1 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "I was mystified when [I went outside and saw that my bicycle was gone from the yard] because . . ."

After the students have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word mystify and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE MOMENTOUS

5 Introduce and Define Momentous

Open the book to page 15. Review that when Ehrich was sixteen years old, he found a book about the life of Robert-Houdin, a famous magician. Then read the following sentence on page 15 aloud: "It was a moment that changed his life."

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is momentous, and explain that momentous means "very important or meaningful."

Explain that finding the book about Robert-Houdin was momentous, or very important or meaningful, for Ehrich, because after reading the book, he realized that he wanted to become a magician.

Display word card 138 (🔊 WA7) and have the students say the word momentous.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "When have you been mystified, or confused, about how to do something?" "When have you been mystified, or bewildered, about something that someone did or said to you?" and "When have you been reading a book or watching a TV show or movie and been mystified, or puzzled, by what was happening?"

6 Discuss Momentous Events

Explain that when we say an event is momentous, we mean that it is so important or meaningful that it changes our lives in some way. Give one or two examples of momentous events that have happened to you or someone you know.

You might say:

“When I was your age, my family moved from the country to a big city. That was a momentous event, because it changed my life. I had to go to a new school and make new friends. For my daughter, taking gymnastic classes turned out to be momentous. Gymnastics has become the most important thing in her life. She wants to be an Olympic gymnast some day.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What has been a momentous event in your life? Why was it momentous?
[Pause; click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[Getting a new kitten] was a momentous event in my life because . . .”

After the students have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word momentous and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something that has happened to you that has changed your life in some way?” “What is something that happened to you that you will never forget because it made you very happy?” “When have you worked really hard to get or earn something?” and “What is something momentous that has happened to your family?”

If the students continue to struggle, name a few events that might be momentous for them (for example, moving, getting a pet, getting a sibling, being in a play or on a sports team, or doing something for the first time without help).

Review Master, Mystify, and Momentous

If the students struggle to make associations, call for their attention and think aloud about what comes into your mind when you hear the word master. For example, say “When I hear the word master, I think about tennis, because that is a sport I would like to master one day. I also think about my son Alex, because he has mastered skateboarding.”

If the students continue to struggle, support them by asking questions such as “What is a skill you have mastered?” and “Who do you know who has mastered a skill?”

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by thinking aloud about what you picture in your mind when you hear the word or by asking questions such as [mystify] “How do you feel when you are mystified?” “What might you say or do if you are mystified?” and “What kinds of things mystify you?” [momentous] “What is a momentous decision you have made?” and “What might be a momentous occasion in your future?”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following questions:

 Q If you were mystified by a math problem, what might you do to try to solve it? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If I were mystified by a math problem, I might try to solve it by . . .”

 Q If you were making a momentous decision, whom would you ask for advice? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “If I were making a momentous decision, I would ask [my friend Eric] for advice because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “What Do You Think About?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Do You Think About?” Point to the words on the daily review cards (WA8) and explain that you want the students to notice what they think about, or what they visualize, when they hear each of the words.

Have the students close their eyes. Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q *What do you think about when you hear the word master? Why?* [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “When I hear the word [master], I think of [chess] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining words.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Reviewed

academic

Academic means “having to do with school, studying, and learning.”

compel

Compel means “force.”

interact

Interact means “talk or work with people.”

quality

A quality is a “special characteristic, or feature, of a person’s personality or character.” Friendliness and honesty are examples of qualities a person might have.

restore

Restore means “bring something back to its original condition.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “What’s the Missing Word?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “What’s the Missing Word?” Remind them that you will read a sentence that has a word missing. Partners must decide which of the vocabulary words is the missing word and explain why they think so.

Display the ongoing review activity (WA10) and begin playing the game:

1. Click 1 to reveal the first sentence. Point to the sentence and read it aloud.
 - Sentence 1: Ani is excited to begin volunteering at the animal shelter, where she will _____ with other people who care about animals.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- Ongoing review activity (WA10)

Teacher Note

Each sentence on the ongoing review activity (WA10) has a corresponding number: the first sentence is 1; the second sentence is 2; the third sentence is 3; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the sentence.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the sentence with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

2. Give the students a few moments to think about the sentence. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q What's the missing word? Why do you think so? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: "I think [interact] is the missing word because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place.

academic	compel	interact	quality	restore
----------	--------	-----------------	---------	---------

SENTENCE 1: Ani is excited to begin volunteering at the animal shelter, where she will interact with other people who care about animals.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word thoughtful earlier, and that thoughtful means "full of thought for the feelings or needs of others."

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word influence earlier, and that influence means "affect the way someone develops, behaves, or thinks."

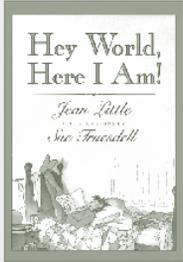

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following sentences:

- Sentence 2: When Deshawn came down with a cold, his doctor said plenty of rest would help _____ his health. (restore)
- Sentence 3: Many people think that thoughtfulness is an important _____ for a friend to have. (quality)
- Sentence 4: Of all the _____ subjects, social studies is my favorite. (academic)
- Sentence 5: Brianna's father _____ her to stop playing video games because he thinks they are a bad influence on her. (compelled)

Word-learning Strategies

- Recognizing idioms (review)
- Recognizing words with multiple meanings (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the story.
- Students review idioms.
- Students review words with multiple meanings.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students take responsibility for their learning and behavior.
- Students develop the skills of supporting one another's independent work and giving feedback in a caring way.
- Students have a class meeting to discuss working independently.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 3, review the more strategy practice activity “Illustrate Idioms” on page 533.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 209 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 6” answer sheet (IA1); see page 213 of the Assessment Resource Book. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.
- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 5, make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1); see page 216 of the Assessment Resource Book. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the following materials: “Week 24 Word Cards” (BLM2) and “Week 24 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Dilapidated, Cantankerous, and Disposition

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words dilapidated, cantankerous, and disposition
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Take responsibility for themselves

Words Taught

dilapidated

Dilapidated means “old, broken, and in very bad condition.”

cantankerous

Cantankerous means “grouchy or disagreeable.”

disposition

Someone’s disposition is his or her usual mood, or the way he or she usually acts or behaves.

INTRODUCE AND USE DILAPIDATED

1 Introduce and Define Dilapidated

Review the story “Mrs. Buell” from Hey World, Here I Am!

Remind the students that at the beginning of the story the narrator describes Buells, the corner store where she buys candy and comic books, and an encounter she has with the owner, Mrs. Buell.

Open the book to page 42, and read the first two sentences of the story aloud.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is dilapidated, and explain that dilapidated means “old, broken, and in very bad condition.” Point out that the narrator describes the store as old, run-down, and not very clean; it is dilapidated.

Display word card 139 (WA1) and have the students say the word dilapidated.

2 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Imagine That!” Explain that you will describe a situation that includes the word dilapidated. Then partners will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to answer a question about the situation.

Materials

- “Mrs. Buell” from Hey World, Here I Am!
- Word card 139 (WA1)
- Word card 140 (WA2)
- Word card 141 (WA3)

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word deteriorate earlier and that deteriorate means “become worse.”

Explain that something that is dilapidated has deteriorated. It was once new and in good condition, but over time it has become old or has been broken and is in very bad condition.

Give one or two examples of dilapidated things that you have seen.

You might say:

“There is an abandoned building downtown that has become dilapidated. The dilapidated building has broken windows and missing doors, and the sign has fallen off. I have a dilapidated copy of my favorite book at home. It has a worn cover, torn pages, and faded pictures.”

Have the students close their eyes and imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- You are driving through the country. You see a dilapidated barn in a field.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What does the dilapidated barn look like? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

dilapidated

PROMPT 1: The dilapidated _____ . . .

1

WA1

PROMPT 1: “The dilapidated [barn] . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining scenarios:

- You are looking through a trunk in your attic. You find a dilapidated photo album.
- You are walking to school. You see a dilapidated car parked on the side of the street.

Point to the word dilapidated and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE CANTANKEROUS

3 Introduce and Define Cantankerous

Open to page 42 again, and review that Mrs. Buell is the owner of the corner store. Read the first three sentences of the second paragraph aloud.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is cantankerous, and explain that cantankerous means “grouchy or disagreeable.” Explain that because Mrs. Buell never smiles or asks how her customers are doing, people think she is cantankerous, or grouchy.

Display word card 140 (🗨️ WA2) and have the students say the word cantankerous.

4 Play “Is Tulip’s Family Cantankerous?”

Remind the students that cantankerous people are grouchy, grumpy, or cranky. Explain that animals can also be cantankerous. For example, a wild bear might be cantankerous when it is looking for food or protecting its cub. A cat might be cantankerous when it is sick and does not want to be bothered.

Tell the students that you will describe a person or pet in Tulip’s family; then partners will discuss whether the person or pet is cantankerous or not cantankerous and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following description aloud:

- Tulip’s Great Aunt Fern grunts at people instead of saying hello, and she yells at anyone who tries to help her.

Ask:

Q Do you think Great Aunt Fern is cantankerous? Why? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[Great Aunt Fern] [is/is not] cantankerous because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining descriptions:

- Tulip’s Uncle Elmer is very sociable. He always jokes and laughs with Tulip and her friends.
- Tulip’s dog Daisy is very old and does not like to be petted. Whenever a person comes near her, she growls and backs away.

Point to the word cantankerous and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

You might review that sociable means “friendly or liking to be with others.”

INTRODUCE AND USE DISPOSITION

5 Introduce and Define Disposition

Open to page 43 of Hey World, Here I Am! Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is disposition. Explain that someone's disposition is his or her usual mood, or the way he or she usually acts or behaves.

Display word card 141 (🌐 WA3) and have the students say the word disposition.

Explain that Mrs. Buell has a cantankerous disposition—she is usually grouchy and mean—but on one occasion her disposition changes. Explain that as you read about that occasion, you want the students to listen for the way that Mrs. Buell's disposition changes. Then read page 43 aloud, stopping after the following sentence: “And I wasn't looking straight at her.”

Discuss as a class:

Q How does Mrs. Buell's disposition change? Why do you say that?

Click 1 on word card 141 (WA3) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “Mrs. Buell's disposition changes [when/because] . . .”

Explain that Mrs. Buell's disposition, or the way she usually acts and behaves, changes when the narrator falls down and gets hurt. The usually grouchy Mrs. Buell becomes caring and kind. She picks up the narrator, sits her down, and gently cleans and bandages her scraped knee.

6 Discuss Various Dispositions

Remind the students that someone's disposition is his or her usual mood, or the way he or she usually acts or behaves. Explain that if someone is usually happy and good-natured, we say that person has a happy or cheerful disposition. If someone is usually mean and does not like to be around people, we say the person has a cantankerous or unfriendly disposition. If someone is shy, we say the person has a quiet or bashful disposition.

Tell the students that you will read a description of a person or animal. Partners will discuss what word they would use to describe the disposition of the person or animal and explain why they chose that word.

Read the following description aloud twice:

- Selma is always happy. She makes everyone around her laugh and smile, and she tries to see the good in everyone.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of disposition is disposición.

Ask:

Q What word would you use to describe Selma's disposition? Why? [Click 2 on WA3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "I would use the word [happy] to describe Selma's disposition, because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following descriptions:

- Cal always feels uneasy about trying new things. He is afraid to go to new places and will not go near animals because he does not want to be bitten.
- Gertrude is a cat that loves people. She rubs against people's legs, sits in their laps, and licks their hands.

Discuss as a class:

Q What words would you use to describe your own disposition? Why?

Click 3 to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 3: "I would use the words [friendly and helpful] to describe my disposition because . . ."

Point to the word disposition and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, think aloud about words you would use to describe Selma's disposition. For example, say "I would use the word happy, cheerful, or friendly to describe Selma's disposition, because she is always happy and because she makes the people around her happy, too." Then read the next description.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "What word would you use to describe someone who is uneasy about trying new things? Why?" and "Do you think Cal has a [nervous/anxious/worried] disposition? Why?"

Review Dilapidated, Cantankerous, and Disposition

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words dilapidated, cantankerous, and disposition from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Take responsibility for themselves

Words Reviewed

dilapidated

Dilapidated means "old, broken, and in very bad condition."

cantankerous

Cantankerous means "grouchy or disagreeable."

disposition

Someone's disposition is his or her usual mood, or the way he or she usually acts or behaves.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

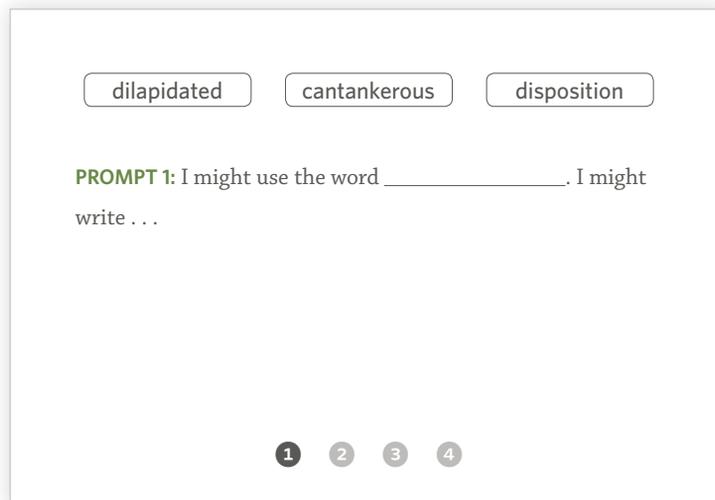

Display the daily review cards (🗨️ WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q Which of yesterday’s words might you use if you were writing a story about a grouchy old man? How might you use the word? [Pause; click ❶ on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

If the word cantankerous is the students’ only response, ask “How might you use the word [disposition/dilapidated] in a story about a grouchy old man?”

WA4

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [cantankerous]. I might write . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “What Might You Say or Do?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Might You Say or Do?” Explain that you will describe a few situations; then partners will discuss what they might say or do in each situation and explain why.

Begin by reading the following situation aloud:

- Your little brother wants to give you a gift. He hands you a dilapidated toy fire truck.

Ask:

-  Q What might you say or do if your little brother gave you a dilapidated toy fire truck as a gift? Why? [Click ❷ to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If my little brother gave me a dilapidated toy fire truck, I might [give it back to him] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining situations:

- You are walking home from school, and a cantankerous dog is blocking the sidewalk ahead of you.

Q What might you say or do if a cantankerous dog were blocking the sidewalk? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “If a cantankerous dog were blocking the sidewalk, I might [cross the street] because . . .”

- You are in a play. You are playing a character that has a nervous disposition.

Q What might you say or do to show that your character had a nervous disposition? Why? [Click 4 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “To show that my character had a nervous disposition, I might [pretend to bite my nails] because . . .”

Introduce “Lose Your Nerve,” Trickle, and Vexed

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words trickle and vexed and the idiom “lose your nerve”
- Review idioms
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Take responsibility for themselves

Words Taught

lose your nerve (p. 44)

“Lose your nerve” means “lose the courage or confidence to do something.”

trickle (p. 44)

A trickle is a “small amount.” Trickle also means “move or flow in small groups or amounts.”

vexed

Vexed means “irritated or annoyed.”

Materials

- “Mrs. Buell” from Hey World, Here I Am!
- Word card 142 (WA5)
- Word card 143 (WA6)
- Word card 144 (WA7)

INTRODUCE AND USE “LOSE YOUR NERVE”

1 Introduce and Define “Lose Your Nerve” and Review Idioms

Open to page 43 of “Mrs. Buell” from Hey World, Here I Am! Review that Mrs. Buell briefly becomes gentle and nice, but her cantankerous disposition quickly returns. Read the paragraph that starts at the bottom of page 43 and continues on the top of page 44 aloud, emphasizing the words “lost my nerve.”

Tell the students that they will start their vocabulary lesson today by discussing the idiom “lose your nerve.” Explain that “lose your nerve” means “lose the courage or confidence to do something.” Explain that the narrator wants to thank Mrs. Buell for helping her and buy some candy, but she loses her nerve, or loses her courage or confidence, and leaves the store without doing either.

Display word card 142 (🗨️ WA5) and have the students say “lose your nerve.”

Remind the students that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean.” Explain that when we say people “lose their nerve,” we do not mean that they actually lose a nerve in their bodies. Instead, we mean that they lose the courage or confidence to do something.

2 Discuss “Lose Your Nerve”

Review that when people intend to do things, but lose the courage or confidence to do them, we say they lose their nerve. Explain that most people lose their nerve at one time or another, and give a few examples of times when you have lost your nerve.

You might say:

“I was going to learn how to drive a motorcycle, but I lost my nerve. I was afraid the motorcycle would tip over. Last weekend I went to the lake to go swimming, but when I felt how cold the water was, I lost my nerve and didn’t go in.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q When have you lost your nerve? Why did you lose your nerve? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

If you started an idiom chart, add the phrase “lose your nerve” to it.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When have you wanted to try something new, but lost your nerve?” and “When have you wanted to talk to someone about something, but lost your nerve?”

lose your nerve

PROMPT 1: I wanted to _____, but I lost my nerve because . . .

PROMPT 1: “I wanted to [learn how to skateboard], but I lost my nerve because . . .”

Point to the phrase “lose your nerve” and review the pronunciation and meaning of the idiom.

INTRODUCE AND USE TRICKLE

3 Introduce and Define Trickle

Open the book to page 44. Review that the children in the neighborhood do not pay much attention to Mrs. Buell or think about her much. Then read the third full paragraph on page 44 aloud, beginning with “She never took days off.” Emphasize the word trickle.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn is trickle and explain that a trickle is a “small amount.” Explain that Mrs. Buell does not make much money in her store because she mainly sells stuff to kids. She earns only a trickle, or small amount, of change each day.

Display word card 143 (🗉 WA6) and have the students say the word trickle.

4 Discuss Trickle

Explain that we can use the word trickle to talk about a small amount of many different things. For example, we might squirt a trickle, or small amount, of mustard on a sandwich. We might notice a trickle of ketchup on someone’s chin. We might see a trickle of paint on the floor.

Discuss as a class:

Q When might you use a trickle of glue?

Click 1 on word card 143 (WA6) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: “You might use a trickle of glue when [you are gluing something little that doesn’t need much glue].”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following question:

Q Would you wear a raincoat if the weather forecast said we could expect a trickle of rain? Why or why not?

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] wear a raincoat if the forecast said we could expect a trickle of rain because . . .”

5 Discuss Another Meaning of Trickle

Remind the students that words can have more than one meaning, and explain that trickle can also mean “move or flow in small groups or amounts.” Explain that when something trickles, it moves little by little. For example, if you are collecting food for a charity and people are not very willing to donate, donations might trickle in, or arrive in small amounts.

Discuss as a class:

Q What do we mean when we say people are trickling out of a building?

Click 3 to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 3: “When people are trickling out of a building, we mean [only one or two people are coming out of the building at a time].”

Explain that the word trickle is often used to talk about liquids that flow or move slowly. For example, blood might trickle from a scrape, water might trickle out of a leaking faucet, or the last drops of milk might trickle out of a milk carton.

Ask:

Q What other liquids might trickle? When might they trickle? [Click 4 on WA6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “[Ketchup] might trickle [out of a bottle] when . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word trickle and review the pronunciation and meanings of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE VEXED

6 Introduce and Define Vexed

Open to page 45 of “Mrs. Buell.” Review that one day the narrator walks into Buells and sees a man and a woman she does not know. Read pages 45–46 aloud, beginning with “I think I must have made a sound then” on page 45, and ending with “If you don’t want anything, beat it,” she told me” on page 46. Use a sharp, irritated tone when reading what the daughter says.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is vexed, and explain that vexed means “irritated or annoyed.” Explain that Mrs. Buell’s daughter is vexed, or irritated or annoyed, because she has to clean out her mother’s store and because Harry did not lock the door.

Display word card 144 (🔊 WA7) and have the students say the word vexed.

7 Discuss Being Vexed

Explain that all of us are vexed, or irritated or annoyed, from time to time, and give examples of times when you have been vexed.

You might say:

“I was vexed when my dog chewed a hole in my favorite blanket. I was really annoyed with him. I was vexed when I arrived at the store and found out that it had closed early.”

Ask:

Q When have you been vexed? Why were you vexed? [Click 🔊 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I was vexed when [my model airplane broke] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word vexed and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Illustrate Idioms

Post the idioms chart where everyone can see it. Alternatively, write the following idioms where everyone can see them:

Blow off steam

Get on board

Hair-raising

On pins and needles

Lose your nerve

Materials

- Drawing paper and crayons or markers

Teacher Note

You might have students continue the activity by investigating the meaning of and illustrating other idioms such as “lend a hand,” “bend over backwards,” “bite off more than you can chew,” “chip on his shoulder,” and “crack someone up.”

Day 4

Review “Lose Your Nerve,” Trickle, and Vexed

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the “Week 24 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) for each student

Direct the students’ attention to the idioms and remind them that they learned these idioms earlier. Review that an idiom is an “expression or phrase that means something different from what it appears to mean,” and review the meaning of each idiom.

Give each student a sheet of paper. Have each student choose one of the idioms and illustrate either what it appears to mean or what it actually means.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words trickle and vexed and the idiom “lose your nerve” from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Take responsibility for themselves

Words Reviewed

lose your nerve

“Lose your nerve” means “lose the courage or confidence to do something.”

trickle

A trickle is a “small amount.” Trickle also means “move or flow in small groups or amounts.”

vexed

Vexed means “irritated or annoyed.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which of yesterday’s words might you use when you are talking with your friends or family? How might you use the word? [Click 1 on WA8 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

lose your nerve

trickle

vexed

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____ when I'm talking with _____. I might say . . .

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [vexed] when I’m talking with [my annoying cousin]. I might say . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Which Word Goes With?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Which Word Goes With?” Review that you will write a word where everyone can see it; then partners will discuss which of yesterday’s vocabulary words goes with the word you write. Then you will ask some pairs to share their thinking with the class.

Write the words hot sauce where everyone can see them, and read them aloud. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q Which of yesterday’s words do you think goes with hot sauce? Why do you think that? [Pause; click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I think [‘lose your nerve’] goes with hot sauce because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Write the word audience where everyone can see it, and read the word aloud.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q Which of yesterday’s words do you think goes with audience? Why do you think that? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, think aloud about associations you might make and why. For example, say “I think ‘lose your nerve’ goes with hot sauce, because you might think you want to taste it, but then you lose your nerve at the last second. I think trickle goes with hot sauce, too, because you can trickle hot sauce on your food. I think vexed can go with hot sauce also, because if you put too much hot sauce on your food, you might be vexed.” Then discuss the word audience as a class, rather than in pairs.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to make associations, think aloud about associations you might make, or ask questions such as “What places might you see an audience trickle into or out of? Why might an audience trickle out of a show?” “How might ‘lose your nerve’ go with audience? When might someone lose her nerve in front of an audience?” and “How might the word vexed go with audience? Why might an audience become vexed during a movie? If you were in an audience, what might someone do to vex you?”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 23 and 24, you might distribute a copy of the "Week 24 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3) to each student.

Day 5

Ongoing Review

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA9)
- Ongoing review activity (WA10)
- "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1)
- Class set of the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 6" answer sheet (IA1)
- Class set of the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record" sheet (SR1)
- "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record" sheet (CR1)
- (Optional) Class set of the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1)

PROMPT 3: "I think [trickle] goes with audience because . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Remember that there are no right or wrong responses. What is important is that the students explain the thinking behind their associations and demonstrate an understanding of the word's meaning.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Take responsibility for themselves

Words Reviewed

defenseless

Defenseless means "without defense, helpless, or unprotected."

drastic

Drastic means "harsh, extreme, or very severe."

dwelling

A dwelling is a "place where someone lives, such as a house or an apartment."

preteen

A preteen is a "boy or girl before he or she becomes a teenager." A preteen is between the ages of 8 and 12.

procedure

A procedure is a "way to do something, or method of doing it, especially by a series of steps."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA9) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Finish the Story”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Finish the Story.” Remind them that you will tell them a story, leaving off the last word; partners will then decide which vocabulary word will make the best ending for the story and explain why they think so.

Display the ongoing review activity (🎧 WA10) and begin playing the game:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud twice, slowly and clearly.
 - Story 1: Emma’s father is teaching her how to bake a pie. Emma carefully watches how her father measures and mixes the ingredients so that she can learn the _____.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which of these words makes the best ending for the story? Why do you think that? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I think [procedure] is the best ending because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two pairs use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion of the story by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the sentence with the correct word in place. Then reread the story with the word procedure at the end.

defenseless	drastic	dwelling	preteen	procedure

WA10

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA10) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the story with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word envious earlier and that if you are envious, you feel jealous of someone because that person has something you would like to have.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following stories:

- Story 2: Ryan is envious of his older sister. Now that she is 13, she gets to stay up later and go to the movies with her friends. He cannot wait until he is no longer a _____. (preteen)
- Story 3: Kenya is startled when she hears a whistling sound coming from her window. She screams and yells for her father. Her father says, "Kenya, it's just the wind. Your reaction is a bit _____." (drastic)
- Story 4: Victor gets a new bunny. He sets up the bunny's cage with everything it will need, so that it has the perfect _____. (dwelling)
- Story 5: While Myrna is watching tadpoles in the lake, her brother catches a fish. When he pulls the fish out of the water, Myrna feels a bit sad because now the fish is _____. (defenseless)

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students able to choose the best word to finish each story?
- Are they able to use the words to explain their thinking?
- Are they using the words spontaneously and accurately in conversations outside of the vocabulary lessons?

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 209 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by having the students play "Which Word Am I?" (see Week 2, Day 5, Step 2).

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Before continuing with the week 25 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students' understanding of words taught in Weeks 21–24 using the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 6" answer sheet (IA1) on page 213 of the Assessment Resource Book. For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment" on page 210 of the Assessment Resource Book.

(continues)

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate his understanding of words taught in Weeks 21-24 using the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see “Completing the Student Self-assessment” on page 214 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Week 25

ABOUT WEEK 25

In the week of the Making Meaning program that corresponds with this week's vocabulary lessons, the students read self-selected texts rather than hearing a read-aloud. For that reason, no new vocabulary words are introduced. We suggest that the students spend this week discussing interesting words they discover in their own reading or hear in conversation in the world around them through an activity called "Share a Word."

Whiteboard Activity

- WA1

Reproducible

- Week 25 family letter (BLM1)

OVERVIEW

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use words of their choosing from their student-selected texts and the world around them.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students relate the values of respect and responsibility to their behavior.
- Students develop the skills of giving reasons for their opinions and discussing their opinions respectfully.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, select two interesting words to discuss with the students. Choose one word that you have read recently and one word that you have heard used in conversation, on TV, at the movies, or elsewhere. You will use these words to introduce the students to this week's activity, "Share a Word" (see Day 1, Step 1 on page 542).
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, prepare a chart titled "Share a Word." You will use this chart to display the words that you and the students share with the class.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.

Day 1

Introduce the Activity “Share a Word”

Materials

- “Directions for ‘Share a Word’” chart (WA1)
- “Share a Word” chart, prepared ahead, and a marker
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

Teacher Note

You might explain that the interesting word should not be a word the students have learned in the vocabulary lessons this year.

Teacher Note

If a student chooses a slang word to discuss, such as “cool” or “wicked,” tell the students that the word is an example of slang and explain that slang is “fun or playful words or phrases that people use in everyday conversations with friends or family.” Discuss the slang word as you would any other word. You might tell the students that a slang word is often a familiar word that has been given a new meaning. Discuss the familiar and slang meanings of words such as “cool,” “wicked,” “awesome,” or “sweet.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn about this week’s “Share a Word” activity
- Listen as you model sharing interesting words
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

ABOUT THIS WEEK’S VOCABULARY LESSONS

This week the students discuss interesting words they read or hear through an activity called “Share a Word.” On Day 1, you will introduce the students to the activity and model the activity for them. On Days 2-5, the students will share with the class the interesting words they have read or heard.

INTRODUCE AND MODEL THE ACTIVITY

1 Introduce the Activity “Share a Word”

Tell the students that they will be doing something different during the vocabulary lessons this week; they will do an activity called “Share a Word.” Explain that each student will find an interesting word to share with the class. The word might be one that the students come across during their reading, or it might be a word they hear someone say during the week. Explain that they might also choose to share an idiom.

Ask:

Q When or where might you hear someone use an interesting word during the week?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that the students might hear an interesting word anywhere they might be—for example, in school, at home, or at the grocery store. They might hear an interesting word when they are having a conversation with a classmate, friend, or family member, or they might hear an interesting word on TV or on the radio.

Display the “Directions for ‘Share a Word’” chart (WA1) and tell the students that the chart tells what you would like them to do to share their interesting word. Read the directions on the chart aloud.

Directions for “Share a Word”

Find an interesting word and tell your classmates:

- What the word is
- Where you read or heard it
- What it means
- Why you think it is interesting

Tell the students that if they read the word, they might bring the book in which they read it to class and share the part of the book that includes the word. Tell the students that they might use a print or online dictionary to find the meaning of the word.

2 Model Sharing Words

Direct the students’ attention to the “Share a Word” chart and explain that as the students share words this week, you will list the words on the chart. Explain that you will begin the list by sharing a few interesting words that you found—one that you read and one that you heard. Then share the words.

You might say:

“I was reading a news story about a popular vacation town and came across the word meander. Meander means ‘walk in a relaxed way, without a particular goal or destination.’ The word caught my attention because it was being used to describe the way visitors to the town might walk down the street, and I thought it was a vivid, descriptive verb.

My husband told me about a neighbor who sped out of his driveway so quickly that the tires of his car screeched. When something screeches, it makes a loud, high-pitched sound. I like the word screech because it is an example of onomatopoeia—it sounds like the noise it is describing.”

Write the words you shared on the “Share a Word” chart.

Tell the students that starting today, you would like them to be on the lookout for interesting words to share with the class. Explain that you will ask volunteers to share words tomorrow, and that students who are not ready to share tomorrow can share later in the week.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk with their families about the interesting words they discover this week.

Materials

- Student-selected texts
- “Directions for ‘Share a Word’” chart from Day 1 (WA1)
- “Share a Word” chart, prepared ahead, and a marker

In this lesson, the students:

- Share an interesting word with their classmates
- Discuss interesting words as a class
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

HAVE VOLUNTEERS SHARE A WORD

1 Review and Do the Activity

Remind the students that this week they are sharing interesting words that they read or hear. Direct the students’ attention to the “Directions for ‘Share a Word’” chart (WA1) and review the directions with the students. Then have a volunteer share an interesting word with the class. If necessary, support the volunteer in discussing the word by asking questions such as:

- Q What is the word that you read or heard?
- Q Where did you [read/hear] the word [bamboozle]?
- Q What does the word [bamboozle] mean?
- Q Why do you think the word [bamboozle] is interesting?

After the volunteer has shared her thinking with the class, facilitate a whole-class discussion about the word by asking questions such as:

- Q What did you learn from [Felicia] about the word [bamboozle]?
- Q Who else thinks [bamboozle] is an interesting word? Why?
- Q What questions or comments do you have for [Felicia] about the word [bamboozle]?
- Q Has anyone heard or used the word [bamboozle] themselves? Tell us about it.
- Q How might you use the word [bamboozle] in your writing or as you talk with your family or friends?

After the students have discussed the interesting word, write the word on the “Share a Word” chart.

Follow the same procedure to have other volunteers share their words with the class.

2 Continue the Activity During the Week

On Days 2–5 of this week, follow the procedures in Step 1 to have volunteers share words, and have the students discuss the words as a class.

EXTENSIONS

Pick a Favorite Word from the “Share a Word” Chart

At the end of the week, ask the students to choose a favorite word from the “Share a Word” chart. Ask:

Q Which word on the “Share a Word” chart do you like the best? Why? Turn to your partner.

PROMPT: “I like the word [chartreuse] the best because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Add to the “Share a Word” Chart During the Coming Weeks

Post the “Share a Word” chart where everyone can see it. Encourage the students to continue to look and listen for interesting words in their reading and in the world at large during the coming weeks. Have the students share and discuss their new words with their classmates and add new words to the chart. Encourage the students to use these interesting words in their writing and in conversations.

Word-learning Strategy

- Recognizing antonyms (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the story.
- Students review antonyms.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students relate the value of respect to their behavior.
- Students develop the skills of giving reasons for their opinions, discussing their opinions respectfully, and expressing their true opinions.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 217 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the following materials: "Week 26 Word Cards" (BLM2) and "Week 26 Crossword Puzzle" (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Day 1

Introduce Significant, Insignificant, and Intrigue

Materials

- “Zoo” (see pages 564–565)
- Word cards 145–146 (WA1)
- Word card 147 (WA2)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words significant, insignificant, and intrigue
- Review antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Taught

significant

Significant means “very important or noticeable.” Something significant matters a lot to you.

insignificant

Insignificant means “not very important or not noticeable.” Something insignificant does not matter a lot to you.

intrigue

Intrigue means “fascinate or stir up curiosity or interest.”

INTRODUCE AND USE SIGNIFICANT

1 Introduce and Define Significant

Briefly review the short story “Zoo.”

Review that children look forward each year to the arrival of Professor Hugo’s Interplanetary Zoo. Then read the first paragraph on page 564 aloud.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is significant, and explain that significant means “very important or noticeable.”

Explain that something significant matters a lot to you. Point out that August 23 is a significant, or very important, date to the children because it is the day Professor Hugo’s zoo comes to town.

Display word cards 145–146 (WA1) and click to reveal word card 145. Have the students say the word significant.

Discuss as a class:

Q What is a day or date that is significant, or very important, to you? Why?

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of significant is significativo/a.

Click 1 on word cards 145–146 (WA1) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA1

significant146

PROMPT 1: _____ is a significant day because . . .

1 2 3 4 5 6 7

PROMPT 1: “[Next Friday] is a significant day because . . .”

2 Discuss Significant People and Changes

Remind the students that significant means “very important.”

Ask:

 Q Who are some significant people in your life? Why are they significant?
[Click 2 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “[My mom and dad] are significant people in my life because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Review that significant can also mean “noticeable.” Explain that when we say there has been a significant change in something, we mean there has been a noticeable or very obvious change.

Give one or two examples of significant changes that you have seen.

You might say:

“When my nephew dyed his hair blue, it made a significant change in his appearance. I noticed that immediately. When they built a brand-new gymnasium at our school, it was a significant change to the school.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What might be a significant, or noticeable, change we could make to our classroom? [Pause; click 3 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “A significant change to our classroom might be [painting all the walls bright blue].”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

INTRODUCE AND USE INSIGNIFICANT

3 Introduce and Define Insignificant and Review Antonyms

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is insignificant. Reveal word card 146 on word cards 145–146 (WA1) and have the students say the word insignificant.

Explain that significant and insignificant are antonyms, or “words with opposite meanings.” Then discuss as a class:

Q If significant means “very important or noticeable” and significant and insignificant are antonyms, what do you think insignificant means?

Click 4 on word cards 145–146 (WA1) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 4: “I think insignificant means [‘not very important or not noticeable’].”

If necessary, explain that insignificant means “not very important or not noticeable.” Explain that something insignificant does not matter a lot to you.

4 Play “Significant or Insignificant?”

Remind the students that something significant matters a lot to you because it is very important, while something insignificant does not matter a lot to you because it is not very important.

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Significant or Insignificant?” Explain that you will describe a situation the students might face. Partners will discuss whether the situation would be significant, or very important, to them, or insignificant, or not very important, and explain why. Remind the students that partners may not always agree, and that is fine. What is important is that they explain their thinking.

Begin by reading the following situation aloud:

- You get mud all over your favorite sneakers.

Ask:

Q Would getting mud all over your favorite sneakers be significant or insignificant to you? Why? [Click 5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart, add the words significant and insignificant to it.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of insignificant is insignificante.

Teacher Note

You might point to the letters in in insignificant and explain that in- is a prefix that means “not.” Point out that adding the prefix in- to the beginning of the word significant makes the new word insignificant, which means “not significant, or not very important or not noticeable.”

PROMPT 5: “Getting mud all over my favorite sneakers would be [significant/insignificant] to me because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following situations:

- You find out that your best friend was not truthful with you about something.

Q Would finding out that your best friend was not truthful with you be significant or insignificant? Why? [Click 6 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 6: “Finding out that my best friend was not truthful with me would be [significant/insignificant] because . . .”

- Your parents decide you cannot watch TV on school nights.

Q Would not being allowed to watch TV on school nights be significant or insignificant to you? Why? [Click 7 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 7: “Not being allowed to watch TV on school nights would be [significant/insignificant] to me because . . .”

Point to the words significant and insignificant and review the pronunciation and meaning of the words.

INTRODUCE AND USE INTRIGUE

5 Introduce and Define Intrigue

Review that every year crowds of people come to see the peculiar creatures in Professor Hugo’s Interplanetary Zoo. Read the second paragraph on page 564 aloud.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is intrigue, and explain that intrigue means “fascinate or stir up curiosity or interest.” Explain that Professor Hugo’s zoo intrigues, or fascinates, the people of Earth. Point out that people are so intrigued by, or curious about, the creatures on the ship that they wait in long lines and pay money to see them.

Display word card 147 (🌐 WA2) and have the students say the word intrigue.

6 Discuss Intrigue

Remind the students that something that intrigues them fascinates them or stirs up their curiosity or interest. Give the students some examples of things that intrigue you or someone you know.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word peculiar earlier and that peculiar means “strange or odd.”

Teacher Note

You might explain that intrigue and fascinate are synonyms and add the words to the synonym chart.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of intrigue is intrigar.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something you have seen or heard about on TV that really interests you?” “What is something you would like to learn more about?” and “What is something you are curious about?”

You might say:

“Dolphins intrigue me because I think the way they communicate is very interesting. Venus flytraps also intrigue me because I think carnivorous plants are fascinating. My son is intrigued by outer space, especially the possibility that there might be life on other planets. He reads a lot about space, and he spends hours looking through his telescope at the stars and planets.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is something that intrigues you? Why does it intrigue you? [Pause; click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[Gila monsters] [intrigue/intrigues] me because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word intrigue and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Day 2

Review Significant, Insignificant, and Intrigue

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA3)
- “Tell Me a Story” chart (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words significant, insignificant, and intrigue from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Reviewed

significant

Significant means “very important or noticeable.” Something significant matters a lot to you.

insignificant

Insignificant means “not very important or not noticeable.” Something insignificant does not matter a lot to you.

intrigue

Intrigue means “fascinate or stir up curiosity or interest.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🔊 WA3) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Would a week of gray, rainy weather have a significant effect on your mood? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA3) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “If I had an insignificant stain on my shirt, I [would/would not] change my shirt because . . .”

Q What do you do when something intrigues you? Why?

PROMPT 3: “When something intrigues me, I [try to find out more about it] because . . .”

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Tell Me a Story”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Tell Me a Story.” Remind the students that you will tell the beginning of a story that includes one of the vocabulary words. Then the students will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to make up an ending for the story.

Display the “Tell a Story” chart (🗨️ WA4) and show the first story and its accompanying prompt. Tell the students that story 1 uses the word significant. Then read story 1 aloud, slowly and clearly.

- Story 1: A scientist named Lora Lookabout disappeared while exploring a rain forest. When she was found a year later, there was a significant change in her appearance. The significant change was . . .

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you finish the story? What significant change might there be in the explorer’s appearance? [Pause; point to prompt 1.] Turn to your partner.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining stories:

- Story 2: Ten-year-old Joaquin is easily upset. He becomes upset over insignificant things like . . .

Q How might you finish the story? What insignificant things might upset Joaquin? [Pause; point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “Joaquin becomes upset over insignificant things like . . .”

- Story 3: “I like reading about animals that are big or dangerous,” said Nora. “I’m especially intrigued by . . .”

Q How might you finish the story? What big or dangerous animals might especially intrigue Nora? [Pause; point to prompt 3.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I’m especially intrigued by . . .”

Introduce Cluster, Grotesque, and Throng

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words cluster, grotesque, and throng
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Taught

cluster (p. 564)

Cluster means “stand or grow close together.”

grotesque

Grotesque means “ugly or strange in a way that is unpleasant or frightening.”

throng

A throng is a “large crowd of people.”

INTRODUCE AND USE CLUSTER

1 Introduce and Define Cluster

Remind the students that crowds of children and adults come to see the peculiar creatures in Professor Hugo’s zoo. Then read the following sentence from the third paragraph on page 564 aloud, emphasizing the word clustered: “The citizens of Earth clustered around as Professor Hugo’s crew quickly collected the waiting dollars, and soon the good Professor himself made an appearance, wearing his many-colored rainbow cape and top hat.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is cluster, and explain that cluster means “stand or grow close together.” Explain that people cluster, or stand close together, around the crew so that they can be among the first to pay their dollars and see the creatures up close.

Display word card 148 (🌐 WA5) and have the students say the word cluster.

2 Discuss When People Cluster

Review that when people cluster, they stand close together. Remind the students that in the story, people cluster around the crew because they are eager to pay their money and see the creatures. Point out that in school, students sometimes cluster around a teacher because they are curious to hear what the teacher is saying or see what she is doing.

Materials

- “Zoo” (see pages 564–565)
- Word card 148 (WA5)
- Word card 149 (WA6)
- Word card 150 (WA7)

Teacher Note

You might explain that the word cluster can also be a noun, and that cluster can also mean a “bunch or group.”

ELL Note

You might invite a group of volunteers to cluster around you and then have the students discuss what they notice.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “When might you see people cluster [in the hallways at school/in the cafeteria/on the playground/at a movie theater/on a sidewalk or street corner/at a zoo or park]?”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of grotesque is grotesco/a.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

-  Q What is another time or place you might see people cluster, or stand close together? [Pause; click 1 on WA5 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA5

cluster

PROMPT 1: People might cluster _____.

1 2

PROMPT 1: “People might cluster [at a bus stop while they are waiting to get on the bus].”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Remind the students that cluster also means “grow close together,” and explain that grapes cluster, or grow close together, on a vine.

Discuss as a class:

- Q If you saw flowers clustered on a bush, what would that look like?

Click 2 on word card 148 (WA5) to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “Flowers clustered on a bush would look like . . .”

Point to the word cluster and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE GROTESQUE

3 Introduce and Define Grotesque

Review that the professor brought the horse-spider people of Kaan in his interplanetary zoo. Then read the fifth paragraph on page 564 aloud, beginning with “And the crowds slowly filed by . . .”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is grotesque. Explain that grotesque means “ugly or strange in a way that is unpleasant or frightening.”

Explain that to the people of Earth, these creatures that look like horses but run up walls like spiders are grotesque, or ugly or strange in a way that is unpleasant and frightening. They are both horrified and intrigued by these grotesque creatures.

Display word card 149 (🗉 WA6) and have the students say the word grotesque.

4 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Remind the students that something grotesque is ugly or strange in a way that is unpleasant or frightening, and explain that science-fiction stories, like “Zoo,” sometimes have grotesque creatures, like the horse-spider people of Kaan.

Ask the students to imagine that they are each writing a science-fiction story about a grotesque creature from outer space. Have them close their eyes and picture in their minds what their grotesque creatures might look like. Help them form mental pictures by asking the following questions, pausing between the questions to give them time to think:

- Q What size is your grotesque creature?
- Q What do the creature’s eyes look like? Mouth? Nose? Teeth?
- Q What does its body look like?
- Q How does your grotesque creature move?

Have the students open their eyes. Click ① on word card 149 (WA6) to reveal the prompt. Then say “Turn to your partner” and have partners use the prompt to take turns describing their grotesque creatures.

PROMPT 1: “My grotesque creature . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word grotesque and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE THRONG

5 Introduce and Define Throng

Remind the students that the crowd pays money to see the horse-spider people of Kaan. Then read the following sentence from page 564 aloud: “All day long it went like that, until ten thousand people had filed by the barred cages set into the side of the spaceship.”

Teacher Note

You might explain that throng and crowd are synonyms and add the words to the synonym chart.

Teacher Note

You might explain that the word throng can also be a verb and that, when we say people throng to a place, we mean that large numbers of people go to the place; for example, during the holidays people throng to shopping malls.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is throng, and explain that a throng is a “large crowd of people.” Review that by the end of the day, a throng, or large crowd, of ten thousand people had seen the horse-spider people.

Display word card 150 (🗨️ WA7) and have the students say the word throng.

6 Discuss Throngs of People

Review that a throng is a “large crowd of people”; then give a few examples of times when you have seen or been in a throng of people.

You might say:

“When I was at the beach, a throng of people was waiting in line to rent umbrellas. Whenever I visit the aquarium, there is always a throng of people in front of the otter exhibit. On TV, you see throngs of people at baseball games and other sporting events.”

Ask:

Q When have you seen or been in a throng of people? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I saw a throng of people . . .” or “I was in a throng of people when . . .”

Point to the word throng and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Review Cluster, Grotesque, and Throng

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words cluster, grotesque, and throng from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Discuss their opinions respectfully
- Discuss the importance of expressing their true opinions

Words Reviewed

cluster

Cluster means “stand or grow close together.”

grotesque

Grotesque means “ugly or strange in a way that is unpleasant or frightening.”

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA8)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) Copy of the “Week 26 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) for each student

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word mystify earlier that mystify means “confuse, bewilder, or puzzle.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word clamor earlier and that clamor means “demand or ask for something loudly.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the idiom “on pins and needles” earlier and that “on pins and needles” means “very nervous or uneasy.”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 25 and 26, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 26 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [grotesque] was especially [interesting/fun] to talk about because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Think More About the Words

Tell the students that you will ask questions that include yesterday’s vocabulary words and words they learned earlier.

Ask:

Q Would you be mystified if you woke up one morning and there was a crowd of people clustered around your bed? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I [would/would not] be mystified if I woke up and there was a crowd of people clustered around my bed because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following questions:

Q What might a throng of people gathered outside a building be clamoring for? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “A throng of people gathered outside a building might be clamoring for . . .”

Q Would you be on pins and needles if you saw a grotesque shadow on your bedroom wall? [Click 4 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “I [would/would not] be on pins and needles if I saw a grotesque shadow on my bedroom wall because . . .”

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Discuss their opinions respectfully
- Discuss the importance of expressing their true opinions

Words Reviewed

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students' choices show that they understand the words' meanings?
- Do they use the vocabulary words to explain their thinking?
- Are they using the words spontaneously and accurately in conversations outside of the vocabulary lessons?

Record your observations on the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 217 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by having the students play “Find Another Word” (see Week 2, Day 2, Step 2).

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word compel earlier and that compel means “force.”

Story

Zoo

by Edward D. Hoch

The children were always good during the month of August, especially when it began to get near the twenty-third. It was on this day that Professor Hugo's Interplanetary Zoo settled down for its annual six-hour visit to the Chicago area.

Before daybreak the crowds would form, long lines of children and adults both, each one clutching his or her dollar, and waiting with wonderment to see what race of strange creatures the Professor had brought this year.

In the past they had sometimes been treated to three-legged creatures from Venus, or tall, thin men from Mars, or even snake-like horrors from somewhere more distant. This year, as the great round ship settled slowly to earth in the huge tri-city parking area just outside of Chicago, they watched with awe as the sides slowly slid up to reveal the familiar barred cages. In them were some wild breed of nightmare—small, horse-like animals that moved with quick, jerking motions and constantly chattered in a high-pitched tongue. The citizens of Earth clustered around as Professor Hugo's crew quickly collected the waiting dollars, and soon the good Professor himself made an appearance, wearing his many-colored rainbow cape and top hat. "Peoples of Earth," he called into his microphone.

The crowd's noise died down as he continued. "Peoples of Earth, this year you see a real treat for your single dollar—the little-known horse-spider people of Kaan—brought to you across a million miles of space at great expense. Gather around, study them, listen to them, tell your friends about them. But hurry! My ship can remain here only six hours!"

And the crowds slowly filed by, at once horrified and fascinated by these strange creatures that looked like horses but ran up the walls of their cages like spiders. "This is certainly worth a dollar," one man remarked, hurrying away. "I'm going home to get the wife."

All day long it went like that, until ten thousand people had filed by the barred cages set into the side of the spaceship. Then, as the six-hour limit ran out, Professor Hugo once more took microphone in hand. "We must go now, but we will return next year on this date. And if you enjoyed our zoo this year, phone your friends in other cities about it. We will land in New York tomorrow, and next week on to London, Paris, Rome, Hong Kong, and Tokyo. Then on to other worlds!”

He waved farewell to them, and as the ship rose from the ground the Earth peoples agreed that this had been the very best Zoo yet. . . .

Some two months and three planets later, the silver ship of Professor Hugo settled at last onto the familiar jagged rocks of Kaan, and the queer horse-spider creatures filed quickly out of their cages. Professor Hugo was there to say a few parting words, and then they scurried away in a hundred different directions, seeking their homes among the rocks.

In one, the she-creature was happy to see the return of her mate and offspring. She babbled a greeting in the strange tongue and hurried to embrace them. “It was a long time you were gone! Was it good?”

And the he-creature nodded. “The little one enjoyed it especially. We visited eight worlds and saw many things.”

The little one ran up the wall of the cave. “On the place called Earth it was the best. The creatures there wear garments over their skins, and they walk on two legs.”

“But isn’t it dangerous?” asked the she-creature.

“No,” her mate answered. “There are bars to protect us from them. We remain right in the ship. Next time you must come with us. It is well worth the nineteen commocs it costs.”

And the little one nodded. “It was the very best Zoo ever. . . .”

Word-learning Strategies

- Using context to determine word meanings (review)
- Recognizing words with multiple meanings (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the story.
- Students review using context to determine word meanings.
- Students review words with multiple meanings.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students relate the values of respect and responsibility to their behavior.
- Students develop the skills of giving reasons for their opinions, discussing their opinions respectfully, and expressing their true opinions.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 1, review the more strategy practice activity “Play ‘Use the Clues’” on page 573.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 27 Word Cards” (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words plummet, knowledgeable, and lurch
- Review using context to determine word meanings
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Express their true opinions
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Taught

plummet (p. 587)

Plummet means “fall suddenly and very quickly from a high place.” Plummet also means “decrease suddenly by a large amount.”

knowledgeable

If you are knowledgeable about something, you know a lot about it.

lurch (p. 587)

Lurch means “lean or roll suddenly forward or to one side.”

INTRODUCE AND USE PLUMMET

1 Introduce Plummet and Review Using Context to Determine Word Meanings

Briefly review “12 seconds from death.”

Review that at the beginning of the story, Richard Maynard is in a plane getting ready to skydive for the first time. Then read the second paragraph of the story aloud, emphasizing the word plummet: “Richard Maynard was making his first jump. He had paid a substantial fee to plummet from 3,600m (12,000ft), strapped to Mike Smith, a skilled parachute instructor.”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is plummet. Display the “Sentences from ‘12 seconds from death’” chart (WA1) and explain that these are the sentences you just read. Point to the word plummet and underline it. Remind the students that they can sometimes figure out the meaning of an unfamiliar word like plummet by reading the sentence that includes the word, or the sentences that come before or after it, to look for clues. Explain that as you read the sentences again, you want the students to think about what the word plummet might mean and which words in the sentences are clues to its meaning.

Read the sentences aloud twice. Ask:

Q Based on what you just heard, what do you think the word plummet might mean? [Point to prompt 1 on WA1.] Turn to your partner.

WA1

Sentences from “12 seconds from death”

Richard Maynard was making his first jump. He had paid a substantial fee to plummet from 3,600m (12,000ft), strapped to Mike Smith, a skilled parachute instructor.

PROMPT 1: I think plummet means _____.

PROMPT 2: The words _____ and _____ are clues that tell you that plummet means _____.

PROMPT 1: “I think plummet means [‘fall’].”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Then ask:

Q Which words in the sentences are clues to the meaning of plummet? [Point to prompt 2.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The words [‘jump’] and [‘from 3,600m’] are clues that tell you that plummet means [‘fall’].”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. If necessary, explain that plummet means “fall suddenly and very quickly from a high place.” Explain that when people skydive, they jump out of planes and then plummet, or fall suddenly and very quickly, until they open their parachutes to slow their descent. Point out that the words jump, from 3,600m, and parachute are clues to the meaning of plummet.

Display word card 151 (🗉 WA2) and have the students say the word plummet.

2 Discuss Things That Plummet

Review that plummet means “fall suddenly and very quickly from a high place.” Give one or two examples of things that plummet.

You might say:

“During an avalanche, snow and ice plummet, or fall suddenly and very quickly, down the side of a mountain. During wars, planes that are shot down plummet into the ground or ocean.”

Teacher Note

If the students do not immediately determine the meaning of plummet from the context, give them the definition, rather than have them guess.

Teacher Note

You might underline the context clues. For more practice with using context to determine word meanings, see the more strategy practice activity “Play ‘Use the Clues’” on page 573.

Teacher Note

You might explain that plummet and fall are synonyms. If you started a synonym chart, add the words plummet and fall to it.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What is something that might plummet from the sky? Why might it plummet? [Pause; click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[A bird] might plummet from the sky when . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3 Introduce Another Meaning of Plummet

Review that words can have more than one meaning, and explain that plummet has another meaning. It can also mean “decrease suddenly by a large amount.” Explain that if the cost of an airplane ticket decreased in a week from $400 to $100, we would say the cost of the ticket plummeted. If the number of people attending baseball games dropped in a week from 50,000 to 5,000 people, we would say attendance at the games plummeted.

4 Play “Is It Plummeting?”

Remind the students that plummet can mean “fall suddenly and very quickly from a high place” or “decrease suddenly by a large amount.” Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Is It Plummeting?” Explain that you will describe a situation; then partners will decide whether or not the person or thing in the situation is plummeting and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- A mountain climber loses her footing and tumbles hundreds of feet down the mountain.

Ask:

Q Is the mountain climber plummeting? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The [mountain climber] [is/is not] plummeting because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Repeat the procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- A feather drifts slowly out of a bird’s nest onto the ground.
- The temperature goes from 60 degrees to 10 degrees in a few hours.
- The price of a slice of pizza drops from $1.50 to $1.45 over the weekend.

Point to the word plummet and review the pronunciation and meanings of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE KNOWLEDGEABLE

5 Introduce and Define Knowledgeable

Remind the students that when Richard Maynard made his first parachute jump, he did not jump alone. Then reread the following sentence from the second paragraph of the story aloud: “He had paid a substantial fee to plummet from 3,600m (12,000ft), strapped to Mike Smith, a skilled parachute instructor.”

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is knowledgeable. Explain that if you are knowledgeable about something, you know a lot about it. Explain that Mike Smith is knowledgeable about skydiving—he knows a lot about it. That is why Richard Maynard paid Mike Smith to jump with him.

Display word card 152 (🗉 WA3) and have the students say the word knowledgeable.

6 Discuss Things the Students Are Knowledgeable About

Remind the students that if you are knowledgeable about something, you know a lot about it. For example doctors are knowledgeable, or know a lot, about the human body and how it works. Auto mechanics are knowledgeable about the way cars work and how to fix them.

Ask:

Q What is a topic or subject that you are knowledgeable about? [Click ❶ on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I am knowledgeable about [mummies].”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Follow up by asking each volunteer:

Q How did you become knowledgeable about [mummies]?

Click ❷ on word card 152 (WA3) to reveal the next prompt. Have the volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “I became knowledgeable about [mummies] by . . .”

Discuss as a class:

Q What is a subject or topic you would like to become more knowledgeable about? Why?

Click ❸ to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

You might point out that the words know and knowledge are part of the word knowledgeable.

PROMPT 3: “I would like to become more knowledgeable about [the ocean] because . . .”

Point to the word knowledgeable and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE LURCH

7 Introduce and Define Lurch

Review that when O’Brien saw that Smith and Maynard’s parachute did not open, he dove quickly through the air to catch the plummeting pair and release their parachute. Read the following sentences from the sixth paragraph of the story aloud, emphasizing the word lurch: “But diving at the same speed was extremely difficult. O’Brien would be within arm’s length of the falling men and then lurch out of reach.”

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is lurch, and explain that lurch means “lean or roll suddenly forward or to one side.” Explain that when O’Brien was close enough to Smith and Maynard to open their parachute, his body would lurch, or roll suddenly forward or to one side, making the men suddenly out of reach.

Display word card 153 ( WA4) and have the students say the word lurch.

8 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Imagine That!” Remind them that you will describe a scene and ask them to picture the scene in their minds. Then partners will use the word lurch to talk about what they pictured.

Have the students close their eyes and imagine the following scenario:

- You are on an amusement-park ride. The ride turns and twists and causes you to lurch from side to side.

Then use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

 Q What does it look or feel like to lurch from side to side on the amusement-park ride? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click  on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “Lurching from side to side [looks/feels] like . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Invite a volunteer to act out the way lurching from side to side on a ride might look.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenario:

- You are riding in a car. The car stops suddenly, causing you to lurch forward.

Q What does it look or feel like to lurch forward when the car stops suddenly? [Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.]

PROMPT 2: “Lurching forward [looks/feels] like . . .”

Point to the word lurch and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE STRATEGY PRACTICE

Play “Use the Clues”

Display the “Use the Clues” chart (🗨️ WA5).

Use the Clues

As the wrecking ball struck the windows, the glass _____ into tiny pieces and then fell to the ground like rain.

After many hours, the demolition was finally _____, and the construction crew began to sort through the rubble and haul it away.

PROMPT: I think the missing word is _____ because . . .

WA5

Explain that partners will play the game “Use the Clues,” in which they use clues to figure out a word that is missing from a sentence. Direct the students’ attention to the sentences on the chart. Review that as you read the sentences aloud, you want them to think about what the missing word might be and what words in the sentences are clues to the missing word. Remind them that more than one word might make sense as the missing word and that the word does not have to be a vocabulary word.

Read the first sentence aloud twice, slowly and clearly, saying “blank” for the missing word.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What’s the missing word? What words are clues to the missing word? [Pause; point to the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Materials

- “Use the Clues” chart (WA5)

Teacher Note

Alternatively, you might write the “Use the Clues” sentences where everyone can see them.

Teacher Note

Listen as partners share. If the students suggest words that are not supported by the context, call for their attention. Provide a word and point out the context clues. Then have the students discuss the second example in pairs.

Teacher Note

Although broke and shattered are logical responses, the students may reasonably argue that burst, exploded, or another word is also supported by the clues in the sentence.

Teacher Note

Possible responses include done, finished, completed, and through.

PROMPT: “I think the missing word is [broke] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

If necessary, explain that the missing word might be broke or shattered and that the words struck the window and tiny pieces are clues that the window was destroyed.

Use the same procedure to discuss the second sentence.

Day 2

Review Plummet, Knowledgeable, and Lurch

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA6)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words plummet, knowledgeable, and lurch from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Express their true opinions
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Reviewed

plummet

Plummet means “fall suddenly and very quickly from a high place.” Plummet also means “decrease suddenly by a large amount.”

knowledgeable

If you are knowledgeable about something, you know a lot about it.

lurch

Lurch means “lean or roll suddenly forward or to one side.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (🗉 WA6) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Which of yesterday's words might you use in a story about two friends who build their own spaceship? How might you use the words?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA6) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

WA6

plummet knowledgeable lurch

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____. I might write . . .

PROMPT 1: "I might use the word [knowledgeable]. I might write . . ."

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity "Create a Sentence"

Tell the students that partners will do the activity "Create a Sentence." Review that partners will work together to create sentences that use the vocabulary words.

Point to the word plummet and review that plummet has two meanings. Plummet means "fall suddenly and very quickly from a high place" and "decrease suddenly by a large amount."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

 Q How might you use the word plummet in a sentence? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

After partners have talked, have a few pairs share their sentences with the class.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as "When might you see something plummet from the sky?" and "What might cause a person's math grade to plummet?" If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as "The kite plummeted from the sky when . . ." or "Attendance at school plummeted when . . ."

Teacher Note

For the word knowledgeable, support struggling students by asking questions such as “What is something you are knowledgeable about?” and “How might someone become knowledgeable about a topic?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “I am knowledgeable about . . .” or “Jay became knowledgeable about plants by . . .”

For the word lurch, support struggling students by asking questions such as “What might cause a car to lurch?” and “When have you lurched to avoid something?” If they continue to struggle, provide a sentence starter such as “A car might lurch when . . .” or “I lurched forward when . . .”

Follow up by asking:

Q Does it make sense to say [“The kite plummeted from the sky when the wind suddenly stopped blowing”]? Why?

Use the same procedure to have partners work together to create sentences that use knowledgeable and lurch.

Day 3

Introduce Impact, Billow, and Engrossed

Materials

- “12 seconds from death” (see pages 587–589)
- Word card 154 (WA7)
- Word card 155 (WA8)
- Word card 156 (WA9)

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words impact, billow, and engrossed
- Review words with multiple meanings
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Express their true opinions
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Taught

impact (p. 588)

Impact means a “violent collision or the forceful striking of one thing against another.” Impact also means the “effect that something has on a person or thing.”

billow (p. 589)

Billow means “swell out or puff up.”

engrossed

Engrossed means “so interested in something that you do not notice anything else.”

INTRODUCE AND USE IMPACT

1 Introduce and Define Impact

Show the illustration called “How it all happened” on page 588. Point to the illustration and remind the students that it shows the sequence of the events in the story. Review that Ronnie O’Brien saw Richard Maynard and Mike Smith spinning out of control and tried to help them. Then read the following caption from the illustration aloud, emphasizing the word impact: “2,500–1,500m (7,000–5,000ft) O’Brien catches up with tandem divers but slips underneath them (25 seconds to impact).”

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is impact. Explain that impact means a “violent collision or the forceful striking of one thing against another.” Explain that “25 seconds to impact” means that O’Brien had only 25 seconds to reach Maynard and Smith before impact, or before the moment when Maynard and Smith would violently collide with the ground.

Display word card 154 (🌐 WA7) and have the students say the word impact.

2 Discuss the Effects of an Impact

Explain that an impact, or violent collision, often causes a loud noise or damage. For example, in a car accident the impact of one car hitting another causes a loud smashing noise and results in dented fenders and other damage. The impact of a baseball bat striking a ball causes a loud cracking sound.

Ask:

Q If you ran into a tree with your bike, what sounds might you hear at the moment of impact? [Click 1 on WA7 to reveal the first prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

impact

PROMPT 1: At the moment of impact, I might hear . . .

1 2 3 4 5

WA7

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word sequence earlier, and that a sequence is a “series of events or objects in a particular order.”

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of impact is impacto.

PROMPT 1: “At the moment of impact, I might hear . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class. Then discuss as a class:

Q What damage might the impact cause?

Click 2 on word card 154 (WA7) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “The impact might cause . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following question:

Q How might the impact feel?

Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.

PROMPT 3: “The impact might feel . . .”

3 Discuss Another Meaning of Impact

Remind the students that words can have more than one meaning and that the meanings are often very different. Explain that impact has another meaning. Impact can also mean the “effect that something has on a person or thing.”

Explain that something that has an impact on you changes the way you feel, think, or behave. For example, seeing a sad movie might have an impact on, or an effect on, the way you feel, changing your happy mood to a sad mood. Seeing a TV show about global warming might have an impact on the way you think, causing you to want to do something to fight global warming. Discovering that exposure to the sun can lead to skin cancer might have an impact on your behavior, causing you to use sunscreen regularly.

Ask:

Q What might be the impact, or effect, of eating too much candy? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “The impact of eating too much candy might be . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following question:

Q If you have a problem, what might be the impact of talking about the problem with a friend? [Click 5 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: “The impact of talking about the problem might be . . .”

Point to the word impact and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Teacher Note

Support struggling students by asking questions such as “What impact might eating too much candy have on your teeth? The way your body feels? Your energy level? Your weight?”

INTRODUCE AND USE BILLOW

4 Introduce and Define Billow

Review that O'Brien finally caught up with Maynard and Smith and released Smith's parachute. Read the following sentence from the eighth paragraph of the story aloud, emphasizing the word billowed: "With barely 12 seconds before they hit the ground, O'Brien found the handle, and the large main chute billowed out above them."

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is billow, and explain that billow means "swell out or puff up." Point to the parachutes in the illustration on page 588. Explain that when the parachute was released, it billowed, or swelled out or puffed up with air, above Maynard and Smith.

Display word card 155 ( WA8) and have the students say the word billow.

5 Act Out Billowing Our Cheeks

Tell the students that sometimes people billow their cheeks, or puff them up with air, when they are holding their breath or blowing out candles on a birthday cake. Explain that you want partners to take turns acting out billowing their cheeks as if to blow out candles on a cake. Explain that afterwards you will ask a volunteer to show the class what it looks like to billow your cheeks.

Give partners a few moments to act out billowing their cheeks. Then have a volunteer act out billowing his cheeks for the class.

Discuss as a class:

Q What did you see [Jordan] doing when he billowed his cheeks?

Click 1 on word card 155 (WA8) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 1: "When [Jordan] billowed his cheeks, he . . ."

6 Do the Activity "Imagine That!"

Tell the students that partners will do the activity "Imagine That!" Remind the students that a parachute billows, or swells out or puffs up, in the wind, and tell them that other things also billow in the wind. Tell the students that you will ask them to imagine something that is billowing. Then partners will discuss what they imagined.

Have the students close their eyes and imagine the following as you read it aloud:

- A flag billowing in the wind

ELL Note

Acting out words or seeing words acted out is especially beneficial to English Language Learners, who may struggle to understand verbal definitions.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the question, think aloud about other things that might billow in the wind (for example, sheets, windsocks, and kites).

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What does a flag billowing in the wind look like? Sound like? [Pause.]
Open your eyes. [Click 2 on WA8 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “A flag billowing in the wind might [look/sound] like . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following description:

- Clothes billowing on a clothesline

Q What do clothes billowing on a clothesline look like? Sound like?
[Pause.] Open your eyes. [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “Clothes billowing on a clothesline might [look/sound] like . . .”

Discuss as a class:

Q What else might billow in the wind?

Click 4 to reveal the next prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 4: “[Sails on a boat] might billow in the wind.”

Point to the word billow and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE ENGROSSED

7 Introduce and Define Engrossed

Review that O’Brien was able to release Maynard and Smith’s parachute, and all three of the skydivers landed safely. Read the last paragraph of the story aloud.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is engrossed, and explain that engrossed means “so interested in something that you do not notice anything else.” Explain that Maynard was so engrossed, or interested, in the excitement of his jump that he did not realize that anything had gone wrong.

Display word card 156 (WA9) and have the students say the word engrossed.

8 Discuss Being Engrossed

Review that when you are engrossed in something, you are very, very interested in it—so interested that you do not notice anything else. Explain that when a person is engrossed in something, it can be difficult to get her attention, or it might seem like the person is ignoring you. Give examples of times when you or someone you know has been engrossed.

You might say:

"Last night I was so engrossed in reading your creative writing assignments that I forgot to eat dinner. This morning my husband was engrossed in an article in the newspaper. When I asked him if he wanted more coffee, he did not answer me."

Explain that we sometimes get engrossed in activities that we especially enjoy. Ask:

Q What is an activity that you get engrossed in? What happens when you get engrossed in the activity? [Click 1 on WA9 to reveal the prompt.]
Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: "I get engrossed in [playing video games]. When I am engrossed in [my game], I . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Point to the word engrossed and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

MORE ELL SUPPORT

Act Out and Discuss Being Engrossed in Something

Remind the students that they learned the word engrossed earlier and that engrossed means "so interested in something that you do not notice anything else." Review that in "12 seconds from death," Maynard was so engrossed in the excitement of his jump that he did not realize what had gone wrong.

Have a volunteer act out being engrossed in writing a story. Act out trying to get his attention by calling his name or tapping him on the shoulder. Then ask:

Q What did [Jackson] do to show that he was engrossed in his writing?

Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the group.

PROMPT: "To show that he was engrossed in his writing, [Jackson] . . ."

Have two volunteers act out being engrossed in conversation with each other. Act out trying to get their attention by calling their names. Then ask:

Q What did [Mia and Erin] do to show that they were engrossed in their conversation?

Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the group.

PROMPT: “To show that they were engrossed in their conversation, [Mia and Erin] . . .”

Day 4

Review Impact, Billow, and Engrossed

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA10)
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words impact, billow, and engrossed from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Express their true opinions
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Reviewed

impact

Impact means a “violent collision or the forceful striking of one thing against another.” Impact also means the “effect that something has on a person or thing.”

billow

Billow means “swell out or puff up.”

engrossed

Engrossed means “so interested in something that you do not notice anything else.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA10) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which of yesterday's words might you use in your writing? How might you use the word? [Click 1 on WA10 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

impactbillowengrossed

PROMPT 1: I might use the word _____. I might write . . .

PROMPT 1: "I might use the word [billow]. I might write . . ."

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play "Does That Make Sense?"

Tell the students that partners will play the game "Does That Make Sense?" Explain that you will read a scenario that includes one of yesterday's words. Partners will then decide whether or not the word makes sense in the scenario and explain why they think so.

Point to the word impact and explain that the first scenario includes the word impact.

Then read the following scenario aloud twice:

- The scientist did an experiment to find out whether adding salt to the soil would have an impact on a plant's growth.

Ask:

Q Does the word impact make sense in the scenario? Why do you think that? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: "The word [impact] [does/does not] make sense in the scenario because . . ."

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, call for their attention. Reread the scenario aloud, and explain that impact does make sense. Explain that impact means "effect" and that the scientist wanted to see if adding salt to the soil would have a noticeable effect on the growth of plants. Then read the scenario that uses the word billow and discuss it in pairs.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1).

Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

Day 5

Ongoing Review

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA11)
- Ongoing review activity (WA12)

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

[billow]

- When Jen opened the window, the curtains billowed in the breeze.

[engrossed]

- Caleb was so engrossed in his book that he talked to anyone who walked by.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Express their true opinions
- Give reasons for their opinions
- Discuss their opinions respectfully

Words Reviewed

engrossed

Engrossed means "so interested in something that you do not notice anything else."

knowledgeable

If you are knowledgeable about something, you know a lot about it.

on pins and needles

"On pins and needles" means "very nervous or uneasy."

vexed

Vexed means "irritated or annoyed."

wide-eyed

Wide-eyed means "with the eyes wide open, especially because you are amazed or surprised."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA11) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “Describe the Character”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Describe the Character.” Review that you will show the students a story; then partners will discuss which vocabulary word or idiom best describes the main character in the story and explain why they think so.

Display the ongoing review activity (🎧 WA12) and begin the activity:

1. Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Explain that the main character of the story is Elliott; then point to the story and read it aloud.
 - Story 1: At the amusement park, Elliott is waiting in line to ride the hair-raising “Tornado Twirler.” As he watches the ride spin and twist around, he starts feeling nervous about going on the ride. The longer he waits in the line, the more nervous he becomes.
2. Give the students a few moments to think about the story and the underlined word. Then point to the five word choices and ask:

Q Which word or idiom best describes Elliott? Why? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “[On pins and needles] best describes Elliott because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3. Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word.

4. Click ❶ to clear the screen.

Teacher Note

Each story on the ongoing review activity (WA12) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

You might review that hair-raising means “exciting, thrilling, or terrifying.”

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, call for their attention, reread the scenario, and think aloud about which word or idiom best describes Elliott. (For example, say “I think ‘on pins and needles’ best describes Elliott, because when someone is on pins and needles, the person is nervous or anxious. Elliott is on pins and needles while he waits for his turn on the scary ride.”) Then read the next scenario.

Story

12 seconds from death

by Paul Dowswell

An icy blast roared through the Skyvan transport plane as the rear door opened to the bright blue sky. On an April morning in 1991, above the flat fields of Cambridgeshire, England, three skydivers were about to make a parachute jump they would never forget.

Richard Maynard was making his first jump. He had paid a substantial fee to plummet from 3,600m (12,000ft), strapped to Mike Smith, a skilled parachute instructor. Expecting this experience (known as a “tandem jump”) to be the thrill of a lifetime, Maynard had also commissioned instructor Ronnie O’Brien to videotape him.

O’Brien leaped backwards from the plane to film Maynard and Smith’s exit. The pair plunged down after him, speeding up to 290kmph (180mph) in the first 15 seconds. They soon overtook O’Brien, and Smith released a small drogue parachute to slow them down to a speed where it would be safe to open his main parachute, without it giving them a back-breaking jolt. But here disaster struck. As the chute flew from its container, the cord holding it became entangled around Smith’s neck. It pulled tight, strangling him, and he quickly lost consciousness.

Watching from 90m (300ft) above, O’Brien saw the two men spinning out of control, and when the drogue parachute failed to open he knew something had gone terribly wrong. Both men were just 45 seconds from the ground. If O’Brien could not help them, they both faced certain death.

O’Brien changed from the usual spread-eagled posture of a skydiver, and swooped down through the air toward the plummeting pair, with his legs pressed tightly together and arms by his side. He had to judge his descent very carefully. If he overshot, he would have little chance of saving the two men, but this veteran of 2,000 jumps knew what he was doing.

Positioning himself right in front of them, he quickly realized what had happened, and tried to grab hold of Smith so he could release his main parachute. But diving at the same speed was extremely difficult. O’Brien would be within arm’s length of the falling men and then lurch out of reach. Then suddenly, he fell way below them.

12 seconds from death

How it all happened

3,600m (12,000ft)
O'Brien jumps from aircraft, followed immediately by Maynard and Smith.

3,000m (10,000ft)
Smith deploys drogue chute which becomes tangled around his neck.

2,300m (7,500ft)
Smith loses consciousness. O'Brien dives down to help.

2,500–1,500m (7,000–5,000ft)
O'Brien catches up with tandem divers but slips underneath them (25 seconds to impact).

...but slips beneath the other two.

900m (3,000ft)
O'Brien catches up again.

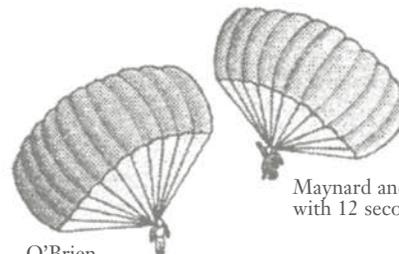

700m (2,500ft)
Parachute released (12 seconds to impact).
Smith recovers.

...to release their parachute.

650m (2,250ft)
O'Brien deploys own parachute.

Maynard and Smith land with 12 seconds to spare.

12 seconds from death

Time was fast running out. The ground was a mere 20 seconds away and O'Brien knew he had only one more chance to save their lives. He spread his arms and legs out to slow his descent, and this time managed to connect with the pair. Whirling around and around, O'Brien searched frantically for the handle that would release Smith's parachute.

With barely 12 seconds before they hit the ground, O'Brien found the handle, and the large main chute billowed out above them. Slowed by the chute, Smith and Maynard shot away as O'Brien continued to plunge down. He released his own parachute when he was safely out of the way, a few seconds before he himself would have hit the ground.

By the time the tandem pair had landed, Smith had recovered consciousness, but collapsed almost immediately. Only then did Maynard realize something had gone wrong. Caught up in the excitement of the jump, with adrenaline coursing through his body and the wind roaring in his ears, he had had no idea that anything out of the ordinary had happened.

Word-learning Strategy

- Recognizing antonyms (review)

Vocabulary Focus

- Students learn and use six words from or about the articles.
- Students review antonyms.
- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students relate the value of respect to their behavior.
- Students develop the skills of discussing opinions respectfully and giving and receiving feedback.

① DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a list of values where everyone can see it (for example, fairness, helpfulness, honesty, respect, and responsibility). (See Step 6 on page 596.)
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (cclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.

- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 218 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 7” answer sheet (IA1); see page 222 of the Assessment Resource Book. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.
- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 5, make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1); see page 225 of the Assessment Resource Book. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the following materials: “Week 28 Word Cards” (BLM2) and “Week 28 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3). These materials can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

Introduce Argue, Peer, and Values

Day 1

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words argue, peer, and values
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Taught

argue (p. 608)

Argue means “give reasons for or against something.”

peer (p. 608)

When someone is your peer, that person is the same age as you.

values (p. 609)

Values are a “person’s beliefs about what is right and wrong or about what is important in life.”

Materials

INTRODUCE AND USE ARGUE

1 Introduce and Define Argue

Briefly review the article “The Pros and Cons of Year-round Schools.”

Remind the students that some people are for year-round schools and others are against them. Read the following sentence from the second paragraph of the section titled “Less Summer ‘Brain Drain’ and More Time to Learn,” emphasizing the word argue: “Because year-round schools keep the learning process going throughout the year, some people argue that students will learn more in a year-round school.”

Tell the students that argue is the first word they will learn today, and explain that argue, as it is used here, means “give reasons for or against something.” (It does not mean “disagree with someone, usually by talking in an angry way.”) Explain that some people argue, or give as a reason for favoring year-round school, that students will learn more.

Display word card 157 (WA1) and have the students say the word argue.

2 Play “Would You Argue For or Against It?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Would You Argue For or Against It?” Explain that you will describe something; then partners will discuss whether they would argue for or against it and explain why.

Begin by reading the following description aloud:

- Starting school one hour later each morning

Ask:

Q Would you argue for or against starting school one hour later each morning? Why? [Click 1 on WA1 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA1

argue

PROMPT 1: I would argue [for/against] _____ because . . .

PROMPT 1: “I would argue [for/against] [starting school one hour later each morning] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following descriptions:

- Compelling fifth-graders to volunteer in the community
- Allowing children who are 10 years old or older to vote for President of the United States

Point to the word argue and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE PEER

3 Introduce and Define Peer

Read the last sentence of the section titled “Less Summer ‘Brain Drain’ and More Time to Learn,” emphasizing the word peers.

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is peer. Explain that when someone is your peer, that person is the same age as you.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word compel earlier and that compel means “force.”

Teacher Note

You might explain that a peer can also be a person with the same job or ability.

Explain that one researcher says that there is very little difference between the performance of students in year-round schools and the performance of their peers—students who are the same age—in traditional schools.

Display word card 158 (C WA2) and have the students say the word peer.

4 Discuss the Students' Peers

Review that when someone is your peer, that person is the same age as you.

Ask:

Q What do your peers enjoy doing for fun? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “My peers enjoy . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss one or both of the following questions:

Q Why might people enjoy spending time with others who are their peers? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “People might enjoy spending time with others who are their peers because . . .”

Q Who do you enjoy spending time with who is not your peer? Why do you enjoy spending time with that person? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “One person who I enjoy spending time with who is not my peer is [my grandpa]. I enjoy spending time with him because . . .”

Point to the word peer and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

INTRODUCE AND USE VALUES

5 Introduce and Define Values

Review that some people are against year-round school because they believe that students need a long summer break. Read the following sentences from the section titled “No Much-needed Summer Break” aloud, emphasizing the word values: “One expert, Dr. Peter Scales, says, “The biggest plus of camp is that camps help young people discover and explore their talents, interests, and values. Most schools don’t satisfy all these needs. Kids who have had these kinds of [camp] experiences end up being healthier and have [fewer] problems. . . .”

Teacher Note

The list of values might include caring, cooperation, fairness, friendship, hard work, helpfulness, honesty, justice, kindness, knowledge, loyalty, love of family, respect for others, responsibility, thriftiness, self-respect, and tolerance.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is values, and explain that values are a “person’s beliefs about what is right and wrong or about what is important in life.”

Explain that a long summer break provides children with enough time to go to summer camps, and that one expert believes that summer camps help children better understand their values. At camp they have time and opportunity to explore or discover what they believe about what is right and wrong or about what is important in life.

Display word card 159 (🗨️ WA3) and have the students say the word values.

6 Discuss Values

Direct the students’ attention to the list of values and explain that these are values, or beliefs about what is important in life, that many people share.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Which of these values is especially important to you? Why? [Pause; click ❶ on WA3 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think [helpfulness] is an especially important value because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Discuss as a class:

Q What other values are important to you? Why?

Click ❷ on word card 159 (WA3) to reveal the next prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “[Loyalty] is an important value to me because . . .”

Point to the word values and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

Review Argue, Peer, and Values

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words argue, peer, and values from Day 1
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Reviewed

argue

Argue means “give reasons for or against something.”

peer

When someone is your peer, that person is the same age as you.

values

Values are a “person’s beliefs about what is right and wrong or about what is important in life.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA4) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Ask:

Q Which of yesterday’s words might you use to convince your parents to let you join an after-school drama club? How might you use the word? [Click 1 on WA4 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

Materials

- Daily review cards (WA4)

PROMPT 1: “I might use the word [argue] to convince my parents to let me join an after-school drama club. I might say . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Do the Activity “What Might You Say or Do?”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “What Might You Say or Do?” Remind the students that you will describe a situation; then partners will use the vocabulary words to talk about what they might say or do in that situation.

Begin by reading the following situation aloud:

- You are excited to have your birthday party at a bowling alley, but your friend argues for having it at a park.

Ask:

 Q What might you say or do if your friend argues for having your birthday party at a park? Why? [Click 2 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “If my friend argues for having my birthday party at a park, I might [change my mind and have it at a park] because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following situations:

- Your family moves to a new neighborhood. You discover that many of your neighbors are your peers.

 Q What might you say or do if many of your new neighbors are your peers? Why? [Click 3 on WA4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “If many of my new neighbors are my peers, I might [introduce myself to them] because . . .”

- Your mom asks you to help teach your little sister the values of honesty and kindness.

 Q What might you say or do to help teach your little sister the values of honesty and kindness? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “To help teach my little sister the values of honesty and kindness, I might . . .”

Introduce Positive, Negative, and Commit

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn and use the words positive, negative, and commit
- Review antonyms
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Taught

positive (p. 611)

When you feel positive about a situation, you feel good about it. You are hopeful and confident.

negative

When you feel negative about a situation, you feel bad about it. You are not hopeful and confident.

commit (p. 613)

When you commit to something, you promise to do it and do not change your mind.

INTRODUCE AND USE POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE

1 Introduce and Define Positive

Briefly review the article “Year-round School: I’m for It.”

Review that the author of this article argues for year-round schools. Read the third paragraph aloud, emphasizing the word positively.

Tell the students that the first word they will learn today is positive, and explain that when you feel positive about a situation, you feel good about it. You are hopeful and confident. Explain that the students in this study have positive feelings about year-round schools after experiencing them for one year—they feel good about year-round schools.

Display word cards 160–161 (🌐 WA5) and click to reveal word card 160. Have the students say the word positive.

2 Introduce and Define Negative and Review Antonyms

Tell the students that the next word they will learn today is negative. Reveal word card 161 on word cards 160–161 (WA5) and have the students say the word negative.

Materials

- “Year-round School: I’m for It” (see page 610)
- “Year-round School: I’m Against It” (see page 612)
- Word cards 160–161 (WA5)
- Word card 162 (WA6)

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of positive is positivo/a.

Explain that positive and negative are antonyms, or “words with opposite meanings.” Then discuss as a class:

Q If positive means “feeling good about a situation,” and positive and negative are antonyms, what do you think negative means?

Click 1 on word cards 160–161 (WA5) to reveal the first prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

WA5

Teacher Note

If you started an antonym chart, add the words positive and negative to it.

ELL Note

The Spanish cognate of negative is negativo/a.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the idiom “lose your nerve” earlier and that “lose your nerve” means “lose the courage or confidence to do something.”

PROMPT 1: “I think negative means [‘feeling bad about a situation’].”

If necessary, explain that when you feel negative about a situation, you feel bad about it. You are not hopeful and confident.

Ask:

 Q Soon you will be sixth-graders. Do you feel positive or negative about that? Why? [Click 2 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “I feel [positive/negative] about being a sixth-grader because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

3 Play “Positive or Negative?”

Tell the students that partners will play a game called “Positive or Negative?” Explain that you will read a scenario; then partners will discuss whether the person in the scenario is feeling positive or negative and explain why they think so.

Begin by reading the following scenario aloud:

- At the entrance to the skate park, Bryson begins to think of the possibility that he might get hurt or get teased by the other skaters. He loses his nerve and heads back home.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss one or both of the following:

Q Is Bryson feeling positive or negative? Why do you think that? [Pause; click 3 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I think [Bryson] is feeling [positive/negative] because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

- Alana grins as she steps off of the bus on the first day of school. She has a hunch that this is going to be a great year.
- Caden goes to an amusement park and discovers that he is one inch too short to go on the most popular ride. He is very upset and thinks that it is an injustice that he is not allowed to ride the roller coaster.

Point to the words positive and negative and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

INTRODUCE AND USE COMMIT

4 Introduce and Define Commit

Briefly review the article “Year-round School: I’m Against It.”

Remind the students that the author of this article argues against year-round school. Then read the fifth paragraph aloud, emphasizing the word commit.

Tell the students that the last word they will learn today is commit. Explain that when you commit to something, you promise to do it and you do not change your mind. Explain that students with traditional school schedules can commit, or promise, to work for two months in the summer because they have a long break from school.

Display word card 162 (WA6) and have the students say the word commit.

5 Do the Activity “Would You Commit to It?”

Remind the students that when they commit to something, they promise to do it and do not change their minds. Tell the students that partners will do an activity called “Would You Commit to It?” Explain that you will read a description of something, and then partners will discuss whether they would commit to it and explain why.

Begin by reading the following description aloud:

- Reading for one hour each day

Ask:

Q Would you commit to reading for one hour each day? Why? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I [would/would not] commit to [reading for one hour each day] because . . .”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word hunch earlier and that a hunch is a “feeling, not based on facts, that something will happen or is true.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word injustice earlier and that an injustice is a “situation in which people are treated very unfairly.”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss one or both of the following descriptions:

- Volunteering in the school office every morning before school
- Walking your neighbor's dog for one week while she is on vacation

Ask:

Q When have you committed to doing something for yourself or for another person?

Click 2 on word card 162 (WA6) to reveal the prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: "I committed to . . ."

Point to the word commit and review the pronunciation and meaning of the word.

EXTENSION

Explore the Suffix -ment

Write the word commitment where everyone can see it. Point to the suffix -ment and explain that -ment is a suffix that means the "act, state, or result of doing something." Explain that when the suffix -ment is added to a verb, it turns the verb into a noun. When -ment is added to the verb commit, it makes the noun commitment, which means a "promise to do something." Explain that when you commit, or promise, to do something, you make a commitment.

Remind the students that earlier they learned the word argue. Review the word's meaning; then write the word argument where everyone can see it. Discuss the base word, the suffix, and the meaning of the word argument. (An argument is a "reason for or against something.")

Ask the students for other words that use the suffix -ment and discuss them, or have the students discuss words you provide (for example, advertisement, disappointment, and embarrassment). During the next few days, have the students watch and listen for words with the suffix -ment, and discuss each one.

Teacher Note

If you did the extension activity "Explore the Suffix -tion" in Week 19, Day 1, you might point out that the suffix -ment has about the same meaning as the suffix -tion.

Review Positive, Negative, and Commit

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and practice using the words positive, negative, and commit from Day 3
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Reviewed

positive

When you feel positive about a situation, you feel good about it. You are hopeful and confident.

negative

When you feel negative about a situation, you feel bad about it. You are not hopeful and confident.

commit

When you commit to something, you promise to do it and do not change your mind.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the daily review cards (WA7) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

Discuss as a class:

Q Which of yesterday's words do you think was especially interesting or fun to talk about? Why?

Click 1 on the daily review cards (WA7) to reveal the first prompt. Have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

 Play “Does That Make Sense?”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Does That Make Sense?” Review that you will read a scenario that includes one of the vocabulary words. Partners will then decide whether the word makes sense in the scenario and explain why they think so.

Point to the word positive on the daily review cards (WA7) and explain that the first scenario includes the word positive. Read the following scenario aloud:

- Pearl’s dad converted the basement to an office. Although Pearl really wanted the basement to become a game room, she feels positive about it and looks forward to doing her homework in the new office.

Ask:

 Q Does the word positive make sense in this scenario? Why do you think that? [Click 2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 2: “The word [positive] [does/does not] make sense because . . .”

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

[negative]

- Marlon feels negative about most situations. He always looks on the bright side of things.

[commit]

- Jesse committed to helping her grandmother with chores once a week. Every Saturday, Jesse walks to her grandmother’s house and helps her clean.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word convert earlier and that convert means “change from one form or use into another.”

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week’s words with their families.

Teacher Note

To provide students with additional review of words taught during Weeks 27 and 28, you might distribute a copy of the “Week 28 Crossword Puzzle” (BLM3) to each student.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Give reasons for their opinions

Words Reviewedbrehtaking

Breathtaking means “extremely impressive, exciting, or surprising.”

lose your nerve

“Lose your nerve” means “lose the courage or confidence to do something.”

preposterous

Preposterous means “ridiculous, or very silly or foolish.”

If something is typical, it is like others of its type. It is a good example of its kind.

wobbly

If something is wobbly, it moves unsteadily from side to side.

REVIEW THE WORDS1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the ongoing review cards (WA8) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS2 Do the Activity “Imagine That!”

Tell the students that partners will do the activity “Imagine That!” Remind the students that you will describe a situation that includes one of the review words. Then partners will use their imaginations and what they know about the word to answer a question about the situation.

Have the students close their eyes and imagine the following scenario as you read it aloud:

- You are walking through a forest and notice a clearing. You step into the clearing and see something breathtaking.

Materials

- Ongoing review cards (WA8)
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 7” answer sheet (IA1)
- Class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record” sheet (SR1)
- “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR1)
- (Optional) Class set of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1)

PROMPT 5: “A typical school lunch in the United States . . .”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word contact earlier and that contact means “communicate or get in touch with someone.”

Assessment Notes

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students' explanations show that they understand the vocabulary words' meanings?
- Are they using the words accurately in writing and in conversations outside of the vocabulary lessons?

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 218 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by inviting the students to each create a picture card of the word with a definition in her own words on the back of the card.

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Before continuing with the week 29 lesson, take this opportunity to assess individual students' understanding of words taught in Weeks 25–28 using the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 7" answer sheet (IA1) on page 222 of the Assessment Resource Book. For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment" on page 219 of the Assessment Resource Book.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate his understanding of words taught in Weeks 25–28 using the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Student Self-assessment" on page 223 of the Assessment Resource Book.

The Pros and Cons of Year-round Schools

While most schools follow a traditional school calendar with a two- to three-month summer break, some schools—year-round schools—follow a different calendar and don't have a traditional summer break. In the 2006–2007 school year, there were about three thousand year-round schools in the United States educating nearly two million students. Are year-round schools better for kids? Before we examine the pros and cons of the matter, let's answer another question: What is a year-round school?

What Is a Year-round School?

Like a traditional school calendar, a year-round school calendar has about 180 days of school in a year. The difference is that year-round schools stretch out those 180 days over all twelve months of the year. Instead of the traditional two- to three-month summer vacation, year-round schools have several short breaks. The most common year-round schedule is the 45–15 plan, in which students go to school for 45 days and then get a 15-day break. They follow this pattern throughout the year.

Students who go to a year-round school avoid summer “brain drain.”

Let's look at some of the arguments in favor of year-round schools.

Less Summer “Brain Drain” and More Time to Learn

Research shows that over the summer students forget some of what they learned during the school year. In one study, researchers at the University of Missouri and Tennessee State University found that test scores were, on average, at least one month lower when students returned to school in the fall than when they left in the spring. Students who go to a year-round school avoid this summer “brain drain.”

Do students learn more by going to school year-round? Researchers disagree on the answer to this question. Because year-round schools keep the learning process going throughout the year, some people argue that students will learn more in a year-round school. In a 2009 report on year-round school calendars and traditional school calendars, researcher Jennifer Rule wrote, “In summary, it is reasonable to conclude that students attending year-round schools were likely to perform as well if not better than their peers in traditional 9-month programs. . . .”

Schools Save Money

Year-round schooling can save money. Schools on a year-round schedule can “multitrack” students so that while some of them are in school, others are on break. This means schools can enroll up to 33 percent more students. This multitrack system reduces the need for building new schools due to overcrowding. For example, Florida’s Marion County school system estimates saving more than twelve million dollars in construction costs because the district switched to multitrack year-round schooling.

More Flexibility for Families

The traditional summer break can be a burden on a family’s time and finances. Most parents cannot take time off from work for two or three months to be with their kids, and child care is expensive. The shorter, more frequent breaks in year-round schools give working parents more flexibility in deciding when to take time off and how to provide child care.

Now let’s look at some of the arguments against year-round schools.

No Proven Gains in Academic Achievement

An important argument for year-round schools is that attending school year-round will likely lead to gains in academic achievement. In fact, although many studies have been done on the impact of year-round schools and traditional schools on student achievement, the results are inconclusive. Some studies show gains; others do not. For example, a study released in 2013 showed that there was little evidence of increased achievement by students in year-round schools.

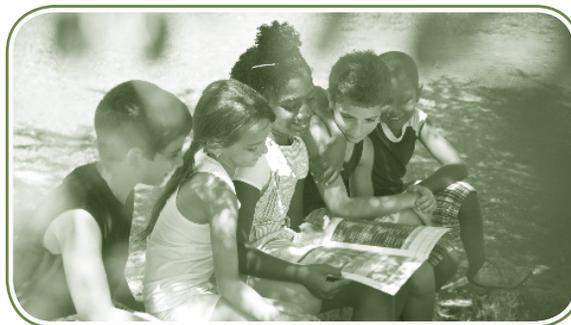

No Much-needed Summer Break

The longer summer vacation of a traditional school calendar gives students lots of time to unwind, connect with friends, and be with their families. It provides older students with opportunities to find summer work and earn money for college. It gives younger children time to attend summer camps—time that students who attend year-round schools do not have. One expert, Dr. Peter Scales, says, “The biggest plus of camp is that camps help young people discover and explore their talents, interests, and values. Most schools don’t satisfy all these needs. Kids who have had these kinds of [camp] experiences end up being healthier and have [fewer] problems. . . .”

“Year-round” Equals “Expensive”

Some school districts have found that switching to year-round schooling has cost them more money. Year-round schools have to provide air-conditioning and other utilities all year long, and there is more maintenance to do because buildings are being used more. In her first year as superintendent of Tempe Union High School District in Tempe, Arizona, Shirley Miles won praise for eliminating the high school’s year-round calendar and its added costs.

Are year-round schools a good idea? There are strong arguments to be made on both sides of the question. What do you think?

Summer break gives kids time to reconnect with friends.

YEAR-ROUND SCHOOL I'm for It

By Chance T., Imperial, NE

Summer is awesome, but after a couple of months, it's time for school again. You walk into class that first day back and hear, "Pop quiz! Let's see what you know." It's always difficult to start a new school year after a long summer break, but if you go to a year-round school, that first day back is a lot easier. I believe all kids should go to year-round schools.

One argument against year-round schooling is that you and your family can't take long trips over summer vacation. True, you might not get to take a three-week trip, but who does? Typically, a family vacation is a week or two. If you go to a year-round school, you can take three, or even four, short trips during the year—one during each break. You can see more places that way.

A study showed that after completing a year of year-round school, 79 percent of students were in favor of the year-round calendar.

I know the idea of going to school year-round sounds pretty awful to some of you, but kids who go to year-round schools seem to like it. Elisabeth Palmer and Amy Bemis, authors of Year-Round Education, have done research on year-round schools. They said, “The results indicated that after one year of experiencing a 60–15 calendar [60 days of school followed by 15 days of vacation], students felt more positively about year-round education.”

Palmer and Bemis found that 53 percent of students in the study “favored year-round education during the summer before implementation, while 79 percent favored it at the end of the first year.” That means that after the kids in the study tried a year-round school schedule for a year, more of them were for it!

Another argument against year-round schooling is that there are fewer days of learning because there are so many breaks. Just when you’re getting excited about learning something, it’s time for a break. But if you look closely, you will see that actual learning time is the same in a year-round school, and after each break, the students are refreshed and more ready to listen and learn.

Also, students in year-round schools don’t have to relearn what they forgot over the summer. Donald Beggs, a former assistant professor at Southern Illinois University, and Albert Hieronymus, a former professor at the University of Iowa, researched summer learning and found that there were consistent losses in math and language skills during the traditional summer break.

I feel that year-round schooling would benefit all students. Kids would have more vacations and would learn more because they wouldn’t have to relearn the information they had forgotten after long summer breaks.

Year-round schooling can provide families with more opportunities to spend time together throughout the year.

Year-round School I'm Against It

By Anonymous, Temecula, CA

During the summer, most kids are out of school and enjoying time at home or on a family trip. But some kids go to school all summer long—and it's not because they have to go to summer school. It's because their school is on a year-round schedule. When my friends in year-round schools tell me they can't spend time with me during my summer break because they're in school, I'm sad and disappointed.

In the 2011–2012 school year, more than three thousand schools in the United States followed a year-round schedule. According to a 2010 survey conducted by Wake County Public School System in North Carolina, about 45 percent of parents said that schools should be on a year-round schedule, and about 49 percent said that they should not. Year-round schooling has its pros and cons. I'm against year-round schools for several reasons.

First, family vacations are usually planned for the summer break. Typically, this is a time to see relatives, relax, spend time as a family, and have fun. Year-round school schedules limit the time families have for summer vacations. Kids in year-round schools also don't have time to go to summer camp. At camp, kids get to be outdoors, make new friends, and learn nature facts. If schools everywhere were on a year-round schedule, summer camps might cease to exist.

Year-round schooling limits the time kids have for family summer vacations and summer camp.

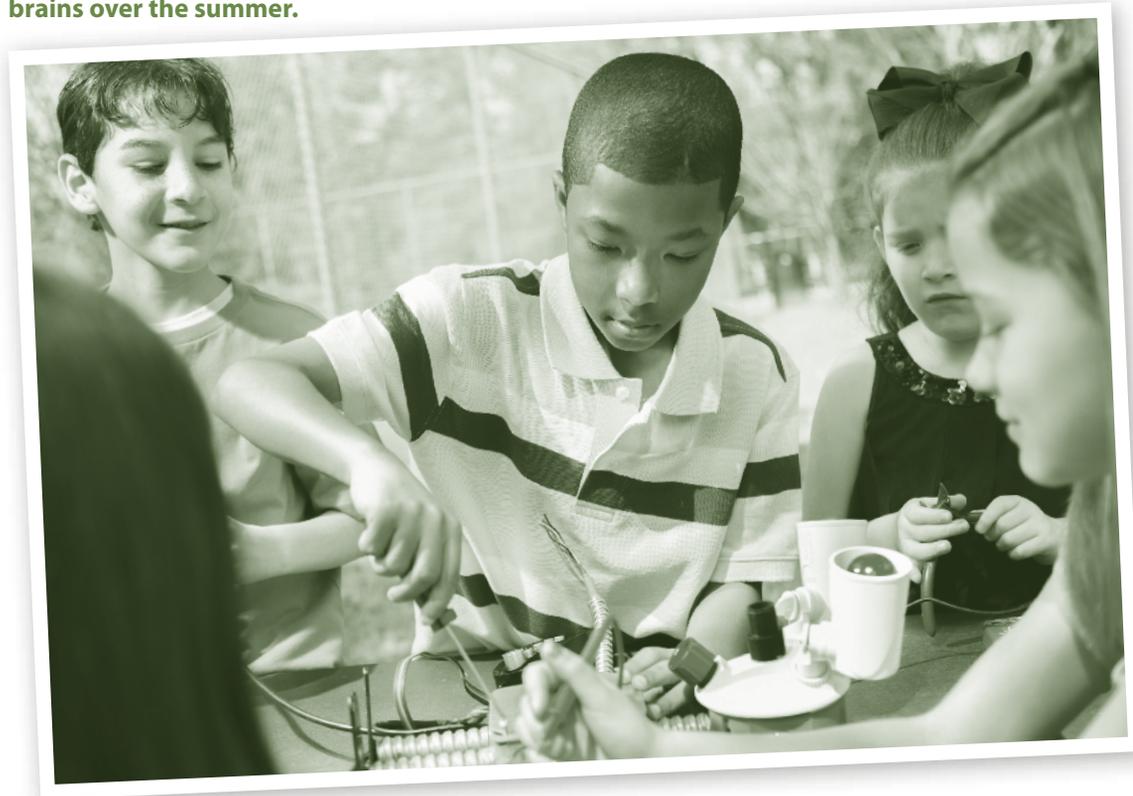

The school year is filled with tests, quizzes, homework, and studying. After all that hard work, students deserve a summer break to relax and refresh. There are some who argue that kids forget things they have learned during a long summer break. I think they're wrong because kids still use their brains during the summer. A 2011 study by the RAND Corporation showed that students who went to a summer camp or participated in another type of educational summer program not only had fun but also kept information in their heads. If kids are concerned about forgetting what they've learned over the summer, they can ask their teachers for summer homework packets so they will be ready for next year.

Year-round school also makes it harder for students to get summer jobs. Students going to schools with traditional schedules can commit to two-month summer jobs and earn money for college. Students in year-round schools don't have the time to fill summer job openings.

Summer is to be enjoyed, not spent in classrooms. Should we change to a year-round school calendar that shortens summer vacation? The answer, I think, is that we should not.

There are many activities that engage kids' brains over the summer.

Week 29

ABOUT WEEK 29

In the week of the Making Meaning program that corresponds with this week's vocabulary lessons, the students read self-selected texts, rather than hearing a read-aloud. For that reason, no new vocabulary words are introduced. We suggest that the students spend this week reviewing words they learned in Weeks 26–28 through an activity called “Four Words and a Story,” in which the students write stories that include four of the words.

RESOURCES

Extension

- “Use Other Words in Stories”

Online Resources

Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to find your online resources for this week.

Reproducibles

- Week 29 family letter (BLM1)
- “‘Four Words and a Story’ Word Sets” (BLM2)
- “‘Four Words and a Story’ Preselected Word Sets” (BLM3)

OVERVIEW

Vocabulary Focus

- Students review words from Weeks 26–28.
- Students write a story using four of the words reviewed.
- Students share their stories with the class.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students act in fair and caring ways.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.

🕒 DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, identify 16 words (four sets of four words) from Weeks 26–28 that you want the students to review and that can be used together in a cohesive story. Print or make a copy of “‘Four Words and a Story’ Word Sets” (BLM2) and write the words you selected on it. Alternatively, you might prefer to use “‘Four Words and a Story’ Preselected Word Sets” (BLM3).
- ✓ Prepare enough copies of the word sets, by copying and cutting out the word-set slips, so that each pair of students will have one set of four words.
- ✓ Set aside a paper bag to use in the activity.

Day 1

Do the Activity “Four Words and a Story”

Materials

- One set of four words for each pair, prepared ahead
- A paper bag
- Copy of this week’s family letter (BLM1) for each student

Teacher Note

If time permits, you may want to review all 16 of the words that the students will use this week and discuss as a class what the students know or remember about each word.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and use words learned earlier
- Write a story using four review words
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

ABOUT THIS WEEK’S VOCABULARY LESSONS

This week the students review words from Weeks 26–28 through an activity called “Four Words and a Story,” in which the students write a story that includes four of the words. On Day 1, you will introduce the students to the activity, review words and meanings, and support the students as they plan and write their stories. On Days 2–5, the students will share and discuss their stories with the class.

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Introduce the Activity “Four Words and a Story”

Place the word-set slips that you prepared earlier into the paper bag.

Have partners sit together. Explain that today the students will review some of the words they have learned in previous weeks by doing an activity called “Four Words and a Story.”

Show the paper bag to the students. Tell them that in it are slips of paper, and that each one lists four vocabulary words. Explain that each pair will draw one slip from the bag and read the words that are written on it. Partners will first talk about what they know about the words; then each student will write a story that uses all four words. Explain that partners will share their stories with each other and with the class later in the week.

2 Choose Words and Review Their Meanings

Have each pair draw one slip from the paper bag. When all the students have finished reading the words on their slips, ask:

Q What do you know about the words on your slip? Turn to your partner.

Give partners a few minutes to discuss what they know about each word. Tell the students that if they cannot remember the meaning of a word, they can ask you or another pair about the meaning. When most pairs have finished, ask:

Q What questions do you have about the words on your slip?

Discuss any questions that the students have about their words.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

3 Plan and Write a Story

Remind the students that each of them will write a story that uses all four words on the slip. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What story might you write using the words? [Pause.] Turn to your partner.

Give partners a few minutes to discuss story ideas. Circulate as partners share. If the students are having trouble generating ideas, signal for their attention. Ask a volunteer pair to share their story ideas with the class and discuss how they came up with the ideas. If the students continue to struggle, suggest that they pick one of the words, think about a story they might write using that one word, and then think about how they might use each of the other words in the story. You might use one of the word sets to model the strategy.

Give the students time to write their stories. If the students finish writing early, have them quietly share their stories with their partners. Encourage them to use comments from their partners to revise their stories.

Tell the students that starting tomorrow, you will ask volunteers to share their stories with the class. Explain that students who are not ready to share tomorrow can share their stories later in the week.

EXTENSION

Use Other Words in Stories

Invite the students to select another set of four words—or more—that they have learned earlier in the year to use in another story. You might display or print sets of word cards from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) and review the meanings of the words with the students. Before they begin writing, have the students discuss with their partners why they chose the words that they did and what they know about these words. After the students have completed writing their stories, partners can read their stories to each other or share them with the class and discuss the ways they used the vocabulary words in their stories.

ELPS 5.B.i
Step 3

Teacher Note

If the students need more time for writing, they might finish their stories during their writing period. They can then share the stories during the week at vocabulary time.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk with their families about the words they use in their stories this week.

In this lesson, the students:

- Share their stories with the class
- Speak clearly
- Ask one another questions about their writing
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own
- Act in fair and caring ways

SHARE STORIES1 Discuss Speaking Clearly and Listening Respectfully

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that this week they are writing and sharing stories using four words that they learned earlier.

Before asking volunteers to share their stories, have a discussion about how the students will act—both as they share their stories and as they listen. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as the following:

- Q Why is it important to speak in a loud, clear voice when you're sharing your story with the class?
- Q If you can't hear the author, how can you politely let him or her know?
- Q How will you let the author know that you're interested in his or her writing? Why is it important to express interest in other people's writing?

Encourage the students to be attentive and considerate audience members. Tell them that you will check in with them later to see how they did.

2 Share Stories and Discuss Them as a Class

Have volunteers share their stories with the class. After each reading, discuss the story by asking questions such as the following:

- Q What vocabulary words did you hear [Petra] use in the story?
- Q What was interesting about the way [Petra] used the word [grotesque]?
- Q What questions or comments do you have for [Petra] about her story?
- Q What did you like about [Petra's] story?

3 Reflect on Being a Respectful Audience

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as the following:

- Q How did we do today as an audience? What might we want to work on as we continue to share stories?
- Q If you shared a story today, how did you feel? What did members of the audience do that made you feel [relaxed/nervous/proud]?

4 Continue the Activity During the Week

On Days 3–5 of this week, repeat the procedures in Steps 2 and 3 to have additional volunteers share their stories with the class.

Week 30

YEAR-END REVIEW

ABOUT WEEK 30

In the week of the Making Meaning program that corresponds with this week's vocabulary lessons, the students read self-selected texts, rather than hearing a read-aloud. For that reason, no new words are introduced this week. We suggest that the students spend the week reviewing some of the words they have learned during the year. The review will provide the students with the additional practice they need to make the words they have learned this year a permanent part of their vocabulary. The week will also prepare the students for Word Check 8, an end-of-year vocabulary assessment that focuses on the words reviewed this week.

The students review a set of words each day this week through an activity that varies from day to day. The table on the next page lists the words reviewed and identifies the weeks in which the words were originally taught.

OVERVIEW

Words Reviewed

Day 1 (Weeks 1-5)	Day 2 (Weeks 6-11)	Day 3 (Weeks 12-16)	Day 4 (Weeks 17-22)	Day 5 (Weeks 23-28)
clamor	contented	calamity	befuddled	engrossed cuisine	envious	conspicuous	comply	knowledgeable dissatisfied	loll	desert/deserter	deliberately	lose your nerve lurk	meager	fanciful	dependent	positive lush	rustle	moist	hair-raising	preposterous
reassure	soothe	resilient	priority	throng resist	stun		unethical	vexed
tattered	thunderous		vivid

Vocabulary Focus

- Students review words learned earlier.
- Students build their speaking and listening skills.

Social Development Focus

- Students act in fair and caring ways.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, write each of the following review words on an index card (you might also use strips of paper): clamor, cuisine, dissatisfied, lurk, lush, reassure, resist, and tattered. Put the cards into a paper bag.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a copy of the “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 226 of the Assessment Resource Book. Make a copy of the sheet for each day that you choose to use the Class Vocabulary Assessment Note.

(continues)

- ✓ Prior to Day 4, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this week’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student. Prior to Day 5, make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 8” answer sheet (IA1); see page 230 of the Assessment Resource Book. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.
- ✓ (Optional) Prior to Day 5, make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1); see page 233 of the Assessment Resource Book. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.
- ✓ (Optional) Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print “Week 30 Word Cards” (BLM2). These cards can be used to provide your students with more opportunities to review the words.

In this activity, the students:

- Review and practice using words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewedclamor

Clamor means “demand or ask for something loudly.”

cuisine

A cuisine is a “style of cooking.”

dissatisfied

Dissatisfied means “not satisfied or happy with the way things are.” When you are dissatisfied, you want something more or something different.

lurk

Lurk means “stay hidden, ready to spring out and attack.”

lush

Lush means “having lots of green, healthy plants.”

reassure

When you reassure someone, you make the person feel less worried. You calm the person and give the person courage or confidence.

resist

Resist means “refuse to give in to someone or something.”

tattered

Tattered means “torn and ragged.”

REVIEW THE WORDS1 Introduce the Activity

Tell the students that this week they will review and practice using words they have learned throughout the year. Remind them that thinking and talking about the words they have learned helps them remember the words.

Explain that today partners will do an activity called “It’s in the Bag.” Display the day 1 review cards (WA1); then show the paper bag. Tell the students that the bag contains index cards, and that one of today’s review words is written on each card. Explain that each pair of students will draw a card from the bag. Partners will first talk about what they remember about the word on the card and then write what they remember on a sheet of paper. Later partners will share what they wrote about their words with the class.

Materials

- Day 1 review cards (WA1)
- A paper bag containing review words, prepared ahead
- A sheet of paper for each pair of students
- “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

You might choose to review additional words from Weeks 1-5. Write the words that you select on index cards and add them to the paper bag.

Give examples of what the students might write about a word.

You might say:

"If you remember what your word means, you can write that. You can use the word in a sentence that shows what the word means. You might also write about what you remember about acting out the word or talking about it in class. For example, if your word is clamber, you might write about how you acted out clambering when we first talked about the word or why someone might clamber. If you have used the word outside of the vocabulary lessons or have heard someone use the word, you can write about that as well."

Tell the students that if they do not remember what their word means or anything else about the word, they can talk with you or another pair about the word.

 Have each pair of students draw one word card from the paper bag. Ask the students to say the word but not discuss the meaning.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Write and Share What Partners Remember

 Give each pair a sheet of paper. Then give the students several minutes to discuss and write about their word.

When most pairs have finished writing, have one or two pairs share what they remember about their words with the class. After a pair has shared, ask questions such as the following:

- Q What did you hear [Caroline and Reynaldo] say they remember about the word [clamor]?
- Q What questions do you want to ask [Caroline and Reynaldo] about what they wrote about [clamor]?
- Q What is something you remember and want to share about the word [clamor]?

ELL Note

Before asking the students to write about a word in pairs, you might write about a word as a class. Select a word, ask the students what they remember about it, and write a few of their ideas where everyone can see them. Then have pairs work on their own words.

Give the students additional time to discuss and write about their word.

CLASS VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students' responses indicate that they understand the words' meanings?
- Are they able to use the words to explain their thinking?
- Are they using the words they have learned this year in their writing and in conversations outside of the vocabulary lessons?

Record your observations on the "Class Vocabulary Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 226 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, incorporate the word into one or more of the other activities used to review words this week.

Teacher Note

You might use this Class Vocabulary Assessment Note each day this week to evaluate your students' understanding of the words being reviewed.

I'm Thinking of a Word

Day 2

In this activity, the students:

- Review and practice using words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act in fair and caring ways

Words Reviewed

contented

Contented means "satisfied and happy."

envious

If you are envious, you feel jealous of someone because that person has something you would like to have.

loll

Loll means "sit or stand in a relaxed or lazy way."

meager

Meager means "very small in amount or hardly enough."

rustle

Rustle means "make a soft, brushing sound." Things like paper, leaves, and stiff cloth rustle.

Materials

- Day 2 review cards (WA2)

soothe

Soothe means “make someone or something calmer or less upset.”

stun

Stun means “make unconscious or unable to think clearly.” Stun also means “shock or greatly surprise.”

thunderous

Thunderous means “making a loud, rumbling noise like thunder.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the day 2 review cards (🌐 WA2) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “I’m Thinking of a Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “I’m Thinking of a Word.” Review that you will think aloud about one of the review words; then partners will discuss which word they think it is and explain why they think that. Begin by reading the following clue aloud, slowly and clearly:

- I’m thinking of a word that tells what a paper bag does when it is opened.

Ask:

- 🗨️ Q What word am I thinking of? Why do you think that? [Click 1 on WA2 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

🌐 ELL Note

If choosing from among eight words is challenging for the students, you might have them choose between two words you provide. For example, you might say “I’m thinking of a word that tells what a paper bag does when it is opened. Am I thinking of the word stun or the word rustle? Why?”

WA2

contented	envious	loll
meager	rustle	soothe
stun	thunderous

PROMPT 1: _____ is thinking of the word _____ because . . .

PROMPT 1: “[Mrs. Wagner] is thinking of the word [rustle] because . . .”

After partners have talked, click 2 on the day 2 review cards (WA2) to reveal the prompt. Have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

PROMPT 2: “You are thinking of the word [rustle] because . . .”

Use the same procedure to continue playing the game, using the following clues:

- I’m thinking of a word that tells how you might feel if someone on your team gets to play a lot longer than you do in a soccer match. (envious)
- I’m thinking of a word that is a synonym of the words shock and surprise. (stun)
- I’m thinking of a word that you might use to describe the sound of a train that is passing by very close to you. (thunderous)
- I’m thinking of a word that describes how you might sit on your couch after a long, hard, tiring day. (loll)
- I’m thinking of a word that is a synonym of the words satisfied and happy. (contented)
- I’m thinking of a word that a very hungry person might use to describe a lunch of three grapes and a single cheese stick. (meager)
- I’m thinking of a word that tells what you might try to do for a friend who is upset. (soothe)

Find Another Word

Day 3

In this activity, the students:

- Review and practice using words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

calamity

conspicuous

Conspicuous means “obvious or noticeable.” Something that is conspicuous stands out and can be seen easily.

desert/deserter

Desert means “abandon, or leave someone or something that should not be left behind.” A deserter is a “person who deserts.”

Materials

- Day 3 review cards (WA3)
- Day 3 review activity (WA4)

fanciful

Fanciful means “imaginary, or not real.”

moist

Moist means “damp or slightly wet.”

resilient

Resilient means “able to recover from or adjust to misfortune or change.”

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the day 3 review cards (🗂️ WA3) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Find Another Word”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Find Another Word.” Remind the students that you will show them a story that has one or more words underlined. You will read the story aloud; then partners will decide which of the vocabulary words could replace the underlined part of the story and explain why they think so.

Display the day 3 review activity (🗂️ WA4) and begin playing the game:

- Click ❶ to reveal the first story. Point to the story and read it aloud, emphasizing the underlined word.
 - Story 1: After scouring her whole house to find her favorite ring, Mackenzie is surprised to see it in a very obvious place. The ring is on her bedside table.
- Give the students a few moments to think about the story and the underlined words. Then point to the six word choices and ask:

Q Which vocabulary word could replace the underlined words? Why? [Click ❶ again to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 1: “I think the word [conspicuous] could replace very obvious because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

- Conclude the discussion by clicking ❶ a third time to highlight the correct vocabulary word and reveal the story with the correct word in place.

Teacher Note

Each story on the day 3 review activity (WA4) has a corresponding number: the first story is ❶; the second story is ❷; the third story is ❸; and so on. To play the game, click the corresponding number four times:

- The first click reveals the story.
- The second click reveals the prompt.
- The third click highlights the correct answer and reveals the story with the answer in place.
- The fourth click clears the screen.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word scour earlier and that scour means “search an area very carefully in order to find something.”

calamity	conspicuous	desert/deserter fanciful	moist	resilient

STORY 1: After scouring her whole house to find her favorite ring, Mackenzie is surprised to see it in a conspicuous place. The ring is on her bedside table.

4. Click 1 to clear the screen.

Use the same procedure to discuss the remaining stories:

- Story 2: Martin's parents were relieved that he was able to adjust after the change from elementary to middle school. (resilient)
- Story 3: The grass in Dina's backyard is slightly wet, so she lays down a blanket before she sits. (moist)
- Story 4: The citizens of Northville worked hard to restore their community after the tornado, which many called a terrible disaster. (calamity)
- Story 5: Although Christopher's story was completely made up, everyone believed him because he used such vivid language. (fanciful)
- Story 6: The man had no money to feed his dog, so sadly he left behind the dog when he moved to a new town. (deserted)

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word restore earlier and that restore means "bring back to its original condition."

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word vivid earlier and that vivid means "sharp and clear."

Day 4

Does That Make Sense?

Materials

- Day 4 review cards (WA5)
- Copy of this week's family letter (BLM1) for each student

In this activity, the students:

- Review and practice using words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Act in fair and caring ways

Words Reviewed

befuddled

Befuddled means "completely confused."

comply

Comply means "do what you are asked to do or what a law or rule requires you to do."

deliberately

Deliberately means "intentionally or on purpose."

dependent

Dependent means "relying on or needing someone or something for help or support."

hair-raising

Hair-raising means "exciting, thrilling, or terrifying."

priority

A priority is "something that is more important or more urgent than other things."

unethical

Unethical means "wrong according to society's beliefs." When people think something is unethical, they believe it is the wrong thing to do.

vivid

Vivid means "sharp and clear." Vivid also means "bright and strong."

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the day 4 review cards (WA5) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play "Does That Make Sense?"

Tell the students that partners will play the game "Does That Make Sense?" Remind the students that you will read a scenario that includes one of the review words. Partners will then decide whether the word makes sense in the scenario and explain why they think so.

Point to the word befuddled on the day 4 review cards (WA5), and explain that the first scenario includes the word befuddled.

Then read the following scenario aloud twice:

- Corbin takes a bite of his peanut butter and jelly sandwich. He is befuddled when the sandwich tastes exactly like he thinks it should.

Ask:

Q Does the word befuddled make sense in the scenario? Why do you think that? [Click 1 on WA5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA5

befuddled	comply	deliberately dependent	hair-raising	priority
unethical	vivid

PROMPT 1: The word _____ [does/does not] make sense because . . .

Teacher Note

If the students struggle to answer the questions, signal for their attention. Reread the scenario aloud, and explain that befuddled does not make sense. If Corbin is befuddled by the taste of the sandwich, he is confused by it—the sandwich does not taste like he thinks it should.

PROMPT 1: “The word [befuddled] [does/does not] make sense because . . .”

After partners have talked, have a few volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to discuss the following scenarios:

[comply]

- Zariah complies with her softball coach’s request that she practice more often. She spends every Saturday morning practicing her batting.

[deliberately]

- RJ is carrying a tray of food to his table. He trips and deliberately spills all of his food on the floor.

[dependent]

- Jenessa wants to be more dependent on her parents. She asks if she can ride her bike to school instead of getting dropped off each morning.

[hair-raising]

- Andy goes waterskiing with his family for the first time, and he is surprised about how fast the boat pulls him. It is the most exciting, hair-raising thing he has ever done.

Teacher Note

Send home with each student a copy of this week's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to talk about this week's words with their families.

[priority]

- Penny's homework is a priority. She does not do it until after she talks to her best friend on the phone, writes in her journal, walks her dog, and watches a TV show.

[unethical]

- Nadav is upset because he saw his friend cheat on a spelling test and he thinks that cheating is unethical.

[vivid]

- Reina's favorite shirt has become faded. She has washed it so many times that the colors are now vivid.

Day 5

Make a Choice

Materials

- Day 5 review cards (WA6)
- Class set of the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 8" answer sheet (IA1)
- Class set of the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record" sheet (SR1)
- "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record" sheet (CR1)
- (Optional) Class set of the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1)

In this activity, the students:

- Review and practice using words learned earlier
- Build their speaking and listening skills
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

Words Reviewed

engrossed

Engrossed means "so interested in something that you do not notice anything else."

knowledgeable

If you are knowledgeable about something, you know a lot about it.

lose your nerve

"Lose your nerve" means "lose the courage or confidence to do something."

positive

REVIEW THE WORDS

1 Briefly Review the Words

Display the day 5 review cards (🌐 WA6) and review the pronunciation and meaning of each word.

PRACTICE USING THE WORDS

2 Play “Make a Choice”

Tell the students that partners will play the game “Make a Choice.” Point to the word engrossed on the day 5 review cards (WA6) and explain that partners will play the first round of the game with the word engrossed. Then ask:

 Q Which of these boys is engrossed in his homework: a boy who runs to his friends when they call his name or a boy who does not look up when his friends call his name? Why? [Click 1 on WA6 to reveal the first prompt.] Turn to your partner.

WA6

engrossed knowledgeable lose your nerve positive preposterous throng vexed

PROMPT 1: I think a boy who _____ when his friends call his name is engrossed in his homework because . . .

1 2 3 4 5 6 7

PROMPT 1: “I think a boy who [does not look up] when his friends call his name is engrossed in his homework because . . .”

After partners have talked, have one or two volunteers use the prompt to share their thinking with the class.

Use the same procedure to continue playing the game using the following questions:

[knowledgeable]

 Q Which of these people is knowledgeable about the French language: someone who has mastered speaking French or someone who is just beginning to learn how to speak French? Why? [Click 2 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

ELL Note

Rather than having the students choose between two scenarios, you might have them discuss each one individually by first asking, “Is a boy who runs to his friends when they call his name engrossed in his homework? Why?” and then asking, “Is a boy who does not look up when his friends call his name engrossed in his homework? Why?”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word master earlier and that if you master a skill, you become very good at it.

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the word supporter earlier and that a supporter is “someone who supports, or helps or favors, a particular person, group, or plan.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the words disposition and cantankerous earlier. Review that someone’s disposition is his or her usual mood, or the way he or she usually acts or behaves, and that cantankerous means “grouchy or disagreeable.”

Teacher Note

You might remind the students that they learned the words restore and deteriorate earlier. Review that restore means “bring something back to its original condition” and that deteriorate means “become worse.”

PROMPT 2: “I think someone who [has mastered] speaking French is knowledgeable because . . .”

[lose your nerve]

Q Which of these might cause someone to lose her nerve before giving a speech: knowing that there are many supporters in the audience or knowing that there are no supporters in the audience? Why? [Click 3 to reveal the next prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 3: “I think knowing that there are [no] supporters would cause someone to lose her nerve before giving a speech because . . .”

[positive]

Q Which of these people is positive: someone who has a happy disposition even when things do not go as planned or someone who has a cantankerous disposition when things do not go as planned? Why? [Click 4 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 4: “I think someone who has a [happy] disposition when things do not go as planned is positive because . . .”

[preposterous]

Q Which of these is a preposterous thing to do: walk in a snowstorm while wearing sandals, or walk in a snowstorm while wearing boots? Why? [Click 5 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 5: “I think it is preposterous to walk in a snowstorm while wearing [sandals] because . . .”

[throng]

Q Which of these is a throng of students: all of the students rushing out of their classrooms on the last day of school or a few students waiting for their parents in the school office? Why? [Click 6 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 6: “I think [all of the students rushing out of their classrooms on the last day of school] is a throng of students because . . .”

[vexed]

Q Which of these people is more likely to be vexed: a person whose favorite painting has been restored or someone whose favorite painting has deteriorated? Why? [Click 7 to reveal the prompt.] Turn to your partner.

PROMPT 7: “I think someone whose favorite painting [has deteriorated] is more likely to be vexed because . . .”

Assessment Notes

INDIVIDUAL VOCABULARY ASSESSMENT NOTE

The final Individual Vocabulary Assessment of the year focuses on a representative group of words selected from Weeks 1–28 of the vocabulary lessons. (These words are reviewed through a series of activities in Week 30.) To assess individual students' understanding of the words, use the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 8" answer sheet (IA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment" on page 227 of the Assessment Resource Book. We recommend that you pair this assessment with the Student Self-assessment described below.

STUDENT SELF-ASSESSMENT NOTE

In addition to or in place of the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, you might have each student evaluate his understanding of a group of words you select from Weeks 1–28 using the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1). For instructions on administering this assessment, see "Completing the Student Self-assessment" on page 231 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Introduction

English language arts/literacy and mathematics standards outline what students are expected to know and be able to do at the end of each grade. With the adoption of such standards come end-of-year summative assessments aligned with the standards.

The goal of the Reading Assessment Preparation Guide is to prepare students for the reading comprehension portion of standards-based assessments. This guide introduces the students to the types of passages and test items they will encounter in these end-of-year assessments. The instruction in the guide supports the students in two important ways. First, it guides the students in using the self-monitoring procedures and reading comprehension and “fix-up” strategies they have learned during the year to make sense of passages. Second, it provides the students with a process they can use to read, understand, and respond to various types of test items. With guidance from you, the students work together on the passages and test items, building the confidence they need to perform well on the assessment.

The unit in this guide uses the same pedagogy and four-day lesson structure as other units in the Making Meaning[®] program. Support materials—including student handouts, interactive whiteboard activities, assessment record sheets, and supplemental assessment passages and questions—can be accessed on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). For more information about the CCC Learning Hub, see “Using the Technology Features” in the Introduction of the Teacher’s Manual.

Teaching the Unit

How the Unit Is Organized

The Reading Assessment Preparation Guide includes four days of instruction. With guidance and support, the students read three passages during the instructional week and respond to test items that correspond to the passages. The reading levels of the passages are within the grade 5 text-complexity band. The items represent the variety of formats the students will encounter on a standards-based assessment, including both selected-response items (multiple-choice) and constructed-response items (written responses of varying length). The items align with a range of reading, writing, and language standards. Extension activities on Days 2, 3, and 4 provide additional test items for further practice. If the students require more instruction or practice, supplemental passages and items can be found on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). All of the instructional and supplemental passages are provided in the “Passages, Question Sets, and Answer Keys” section of this guide, beginning on page 31. Included with each passage are the test items associated with the passage, an answer key, and the skills each item addresses. For information about using the passages and test items at various times during the year, see “Using the Instructional and Supplemental Passages and Test Items Throughout the Year” on page viii.

During the lessons, the students work as a class, in pairs, and individually to read and comprehend passages and analyze and answer questions about the passages. Through this process, the students develop a class set of “tips” for answering questions that they can apply to assessment items of all types.

DAY 1: READ-ALoud/STRATEGY LESSON

The students are introduced to the end-of-year reading assessment. They reflect on their growth as readers during the year and review the self-monitoring procedures and comprehension and “fix-up” strategies they have learned and practiced to make sense of texts. You read aloud the first part of the passage “The Erie Canal,” self-monitoring and thinking aloud about the strategies you are using to make sense of and remember the text. In pairs and as a class, the students discuss what they noticed you doing during your reading of the passage. The students then read the rest of the passage and discuss the strategies they use to make sense of the text.

DAY 2: STRATEGY LESSON

The students read “The Erie Canal” independently and discuss the strategies they use to make sense of the text. As a class, they then analyze and respond to three test items in varying formats, developing a systematic process for responding to assessment items that you capture in a chart titled “Tips for Answering Questions”:

- Read the directions carefully so that you know how to mark your answers.
- Read the question carefully—more than once if necessary.
- Ask yourself: What information is the question asking for? What are the important words?
- Reread the part of the passage that helps you answer the question.

DAY 3: GUIDED STRATEGY PRACTICE

Independently, the students read the second passage of the week, “An Engineering Marvel.” They monitor their comprehension and discuss the reading comprehension and “fix-up” strategies they use to make sense of the text. They then work with partners to analyze and respond to four test items, using the tips for answering questions they developed on Day 2. As on Day 2, the test items represent a variety of formats and address a range of reading and language skills.

DAY 4: GUIDED STRATEGY PRACTICE

The students hear, read, and discuss the third passage of the week, the song “Low Bridge, Everybody Down.” As a class and with modeling support from you, the students then respond to a final test item that requires them to write a paragraph, using information from all three of the week’s passages. The students then reflect on what they have learned during the week.

Planning and Teaching the Lessons

We recommend that you teach this unit a week or two before your end-of-year assessment is administered. This will ensure that the contents of the unit are fresh in the students’ minds while still providing you with the additional time you may need to reteach a lesson or provide additional practice. (For a suggestion for how to include the unit in your instruction for the year, see “Sample Calendar for Grade 5” in the Introduction of the Teacher’s Manual.)

To prepare to teach the lessons, begin by reading the unit’s introductory pages. The Resources list specifies the texts, extension activities, and assessments for the unit, while the Online Resources list indicates all of the materials that are available digitally on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). The Overview table provides a general outline of the unit.

Next, read the comprehension and social development focuses in the Week Overview. The Do Ahead section alerts you to special requirements for the week and any preparations you should make ahead of time. Preview the lessons and note how the instruction supports the unit’s comprehension and social development focuses from lesson to lesson.

Using the Instructional and Supplemental Passages and Test Items Throughout the Year

In addition to the passages and the associated test items used for instruction during the week, you will find three supplemental sets of practice passages and test items on the CCC Learning Hub. All of the available sets are listed in the table below, along with their passage types and BLM (blackline master) numbers. The shaded rows are supplemental sets.

Grade 5 Passages and Test Items Sets

Passage and Associated Test Items	Passage Type	BLM #
"The Erie Canal"	Informational	1
"Questions: 'The Erie Canal' "		2
"An Engineering Marvel"	Informational	3
"Questions: 'An Engineering Marvel' "		4
"Low Bridge, Everybody Down"	Literary	5
"Where Is Costa Rica?"	Informational	6
"Questions: 'Where Is Costa Rica?' "		7
"A Ride in the Clouds"	Literary	8
"Questions: 'A Ride in the Clouds' "		9
"An Adventure to Remember"	Literary	10
"Questions: 'An Adventure to Remember' "		11

Both the instructional and supplemental passages and test items can be used throughout the year in a variety of ways.

FALL

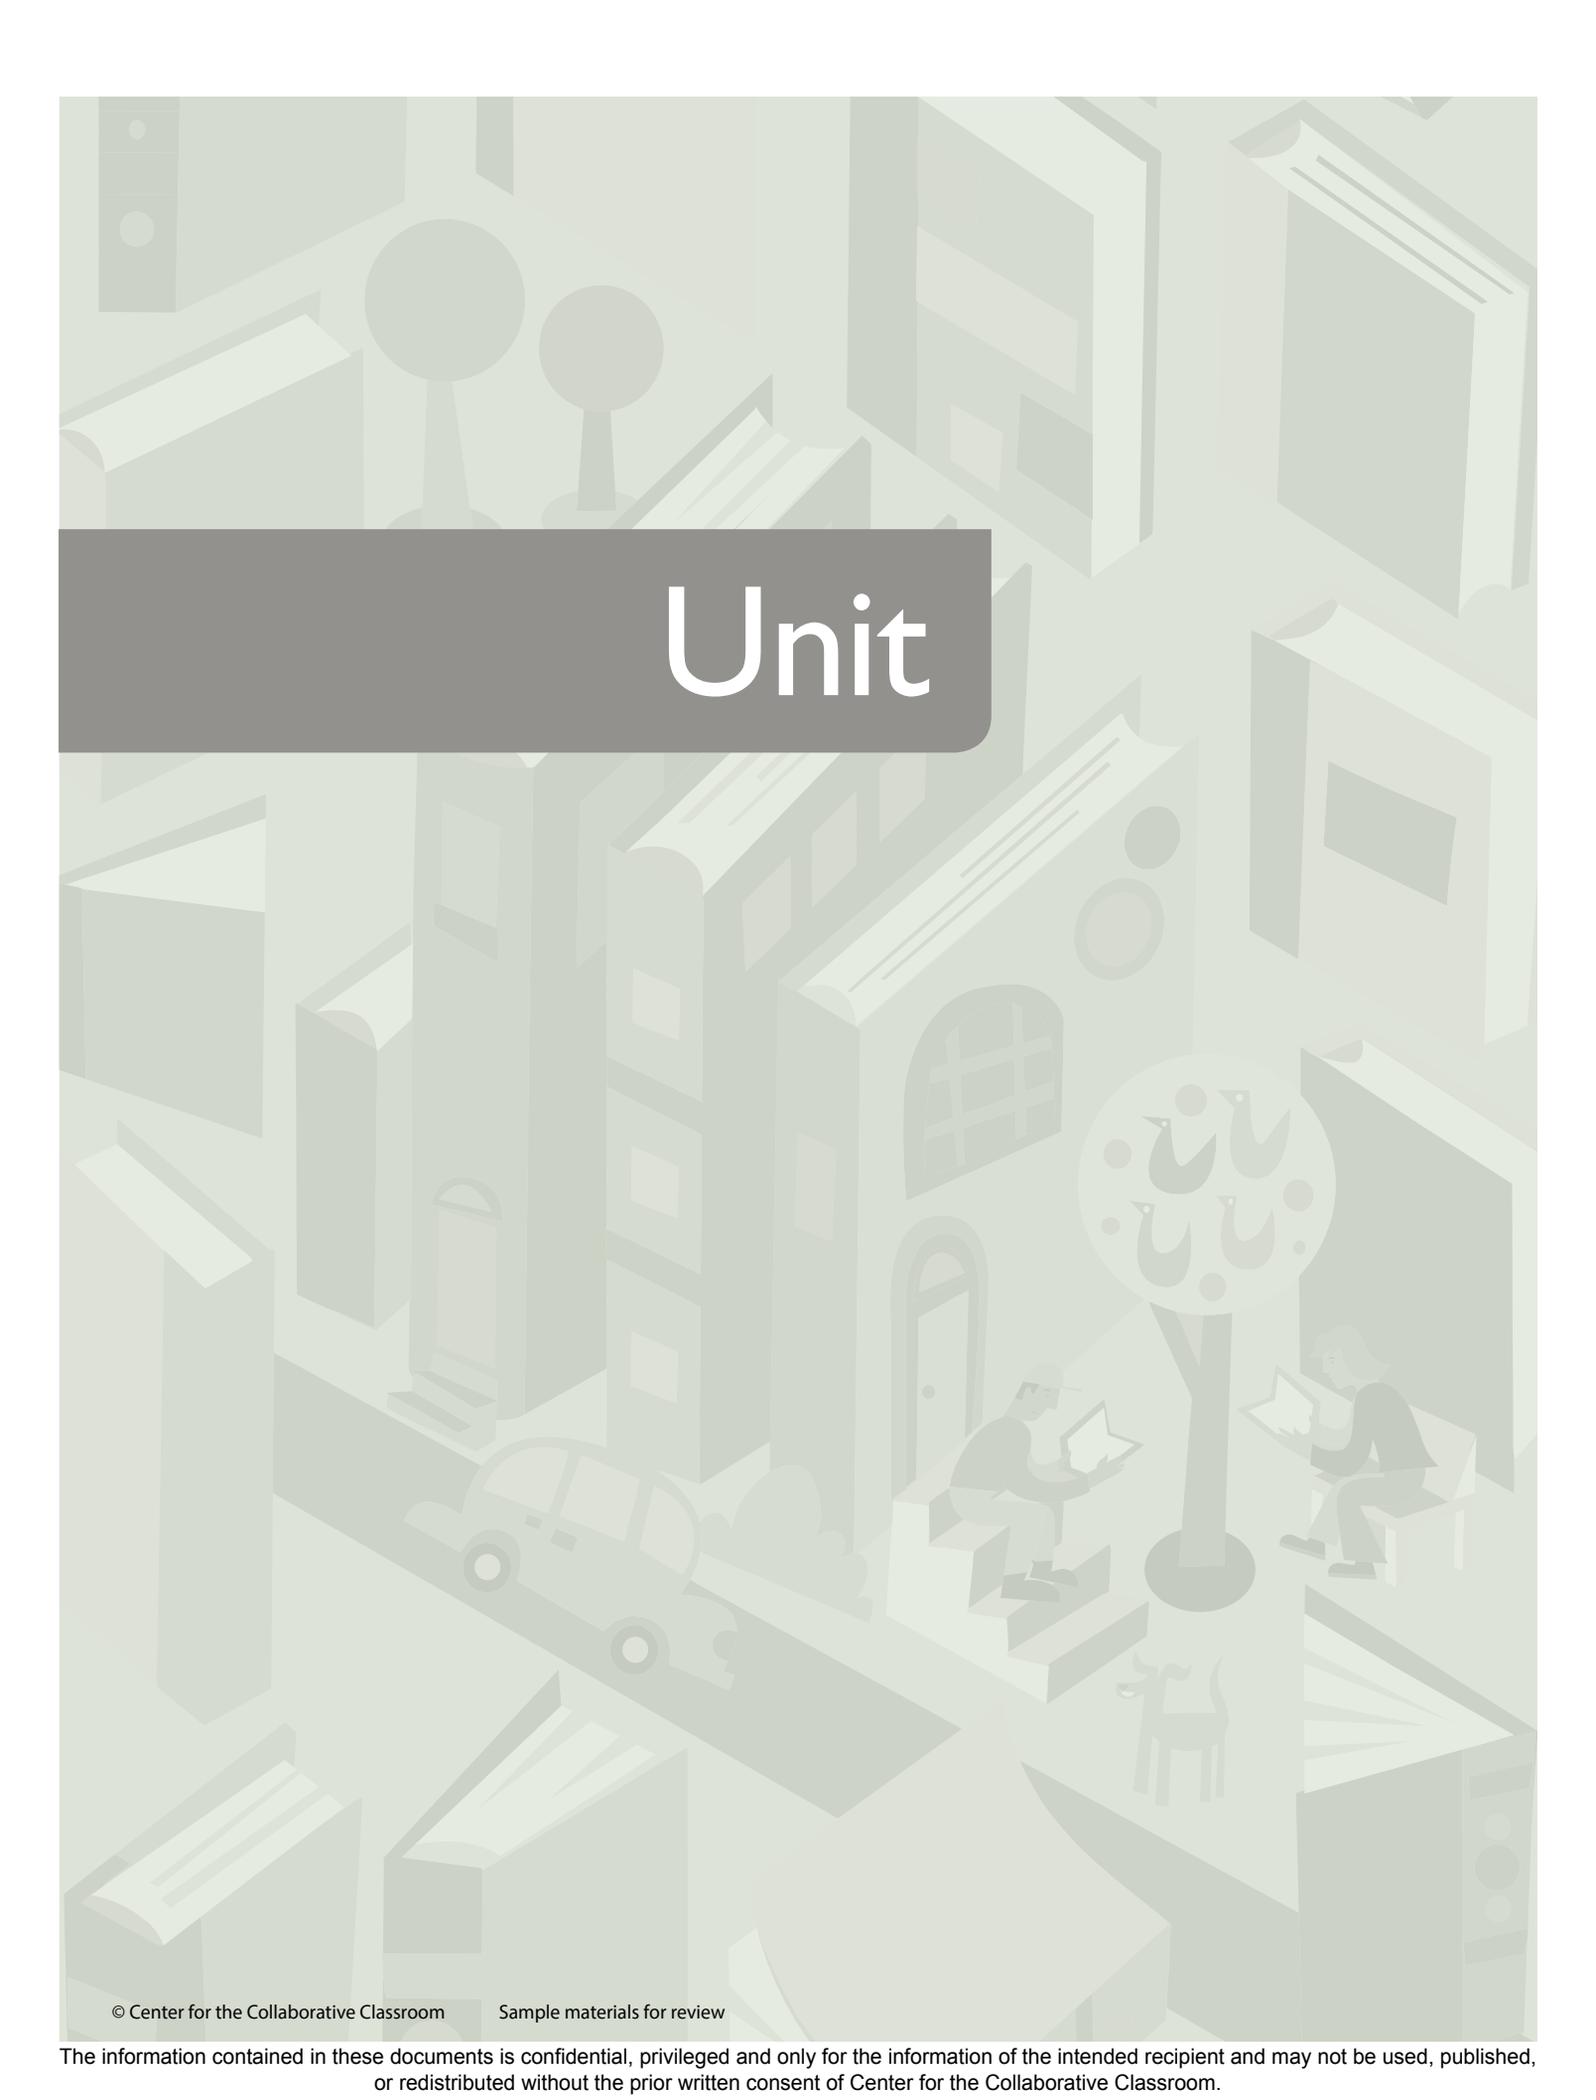

You might use the passages "The Erie Canal," "An Engineering Marvel," and/or "Low Bridge, Everybody Down" and associated test items at the start of the school year as an informal baseline assessment of the students' reading comprehension and their comfort and facility with test-like passages and items. You can then use what you observe to help you plan instruction. You might use the supplemental passages periodically during the year for further evaluation or practice.

WINTER

If your school or district decides to administer an interim standards-based assessment, you might teach the unit in this guide as preparation for that assessment. (The modeling you do on Day 1 will need to reflect the strategies that have been taught.) You can then use the supplemental passages and test items to teach the lessons in this guide prior to the end-of-year assessment.

SPRING

After teaching the unit in this guide as preparation for the end-of-year assessment, you might assign one or more of the supplemental passages and their associated test items as seatwork or homework for the students, either as further practice or to use as an informal individual assessment of each student's progress on standards-type assessment items.

In the foreground, a paved area shows a car on the left and a dog on the right. Two students are sitting on a bench in the middle ground, reading books. A tree with a circular canopy featuring bird silhouettes stands near the students. The overall style is clean and modern.

Unit

Answering Questions in Response to Text

During this one-week unit, the students prepare for the reading comprehension portion of a standards-based end-of-year summative assessment. The students reflect on their growth as readers during the year and apply what they have learned about monitoring their comprehension and using comprehension and “fix-up” strategies to make sense of three practice passages. They work together as a class and in pairs to analyze and respond to various types of questions associated with the passages, including selected-response items (multiple-choice) and constructed-response items (written responses of varying length). Out of that process, they develop a set of “tips” for successfully answering assessment questions. Socially, the students focus on taking responsibility for their learning, sharing their thinking, and using prompts to build on one another’s thinking.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.
- Students use prompts to build on one another's thinking.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during the unit.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make sure the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” and “Thinking About My Reading” charts are posted where everyone can see them. Keep the charts visible throughout the week.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the student handouts for the unit (see “Reproducibles” on page 2). Make a class set of copies of each required handout listed (BLM1–BLM5) and any supplemental handouts you plan to use.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, prepare to model using strategies to make sense of the passage “The Erie Canal” (see Step 4). For more information and examples of modeling, review IDR Mini-lesson 2, “Self-monitoring and Using ‘Fix-up’ Strategies” (found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual).
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, prepare a class set of folders for the students to use to organize their materials during the week.
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, prepare a sheet of chart paper with the title “Tips for Answering Questions” (see Step 8).
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1) on page 92.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2) on page 93.

Day 1

Read-aloud/Strategy Lesson

Materials

- “The Erie Canal” chart (WA1)
- Copy of “The Erie Canal” (BLM1) for each student
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- A folder for each student

Teacher Note

We recommend that you teach this unit a week or two before your end-of-year reading assessment.

In this lesson, the students:

- Work with new partners
- Reflect on how they have grown as readers
- Review the strategies they have learned to make sense of text
- Hear, read, and discuss a passage
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking
- Work in a responsible way

ABOUT PREPARING FOR A STANDARDS-BASED END-OF-YEAR ASSESSMENT

This week, with guidance and support from you, the students prepare for the reading comprehension portion of a standards-based end-of-year assessment. As a class and in pairs, the students hear, read, and discuss passages and answer reading comprehension questions about the passages. After preparing your students for the assessment in a classroom environment, we recommend that you provide them with further practice in a computerized testing environment.

1 Pair Students and Introduce the End-of-year Assessment

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other’s names. Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you.

Tell the students that at the end of the school year, all the students in their grade will complete a reading and writing assessment. Explain that the assessment is an opportunity for the students to show how they are growing as readers and writers and that the assessment provides information that is important for them, as well as for their families, teachers, and principal. Explain that during part of the assessment, the students will read passages and answer questions about the passages. Tell the students that during the next few days, they will work together to prepare for the reading portion of the assessment by hearing, reading, and discussing some practice passages and questions.

2 Review What Good Readers Do to Make Sense of Text

Point out that during the year, the students have learned what good readers do to make sense of text, and they have worked hard to become stronger readers themselves. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q In what ways have you grown as a reader this year? In what ways are you a stronger reader now than you were at the beginning of the year? [pause]
Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and review that good readers use various strategies to make sense of what they are reading. Ask:

Q What have you learned about the strategies good readers use?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart and review that another thing that good readers do is stop and ask themselves questions as they read to make sure they understand what they are reading. Remind the students that they learned “fix-up” strategies they can use when they do not understand what they have read. Ask:

Q What do good readers do when they realize they do not understand something they have read?

If necessary, review that good readers reread something they have not understood slowly and carefully. If that does not fix the problem, they read ahead and look for information that clears up their confusion. Explain that this week the students will use these strategies to help them make sense of the practice passages they read.

3 Introduce “The Erie Canal”

Tell the students that this week they will hear and read passages about the Erie Canal. Tell the students that the Erie Canal is a canal, or waterway, that was built across part of the state of New York between 1817 and 1825. Tell the students that the Erie Canal played an important role in American history. Display the “The Erie Canal” chart (WA1), and distribute a copy of the passage (BLM1) to each student. Point out that, unlike most passages, this passage shows the number of each paragraph. Explain that the numbers are provided to make it easier for you to point out and discuss particular paragraphs.

Teacher Note

The grade 5 reading comprehension strategies are:

- using text features
- questioning
- recognizing story elements
- making inferences
- visualizing
- analyzing how texts are organized
- determining important ideas and supporting details
- summarizing
- forming opinions and making judgments

Teacher Note

The “Thinking About My Reading” prompts are:

- What is happening in my book?
- Do I understand what I am reading?
- Do I know what most of the words mean?
- Is this book interesting and fun to read?

Teacher Note

The “fix-up” strategies are:

- Go back and reread slowly and carefully. Look for clues in the text.
- Read ahead to look for more clues or information.
- Use a reading comprehension strategy.
- Ask for help.

Point to the title of the passage and ask:

Q What do you think you know about the Erie Canal?

Q What do you wonder about the Erie Canal?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

4 Read Aloud and Model Self-monitoring and Using Strategies

Explain that you will read the first four paragraphs of the passage aloud and that you would like the students to follow along on their copies. Tell them that you will stop after each paragraph and think aloud about what you just read. Ask the students to listen carefully and notice what you are doing to check your understanding and fix comprehension problems as you read.

Read the first four paragraphs aloud slowly and clearly, stopping as described below to model monitoring your comprehension and using strategies to make sense of the passage.

Stop after:

Paragraph 1: “The completion of the Erie Canal in 1825 changed all that.”

You might say:

“I’ll ask myself: ‘Did I understand what I just read?’ I know that the opening paragraph of a passage is important because it often tells what the passage is mainly about. I think this passage is going to be about how the Erie Canal made it easier and less expensive to ship goods from the Northwest Territory to the East Coast, but I’ll reread the paragraph just to make sure. [Reread the paragraph aloud.] I was right. The last two sentences say, ‘Transporting goods across the mountains was difficult and costly and took many weeks. The completion of the Erie Canal in 1825 changed all that.’”

Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading.

Stop after:

Paragraph 2: “From there, the goods could easily be floated east on the Erie Canal.”

You might say:

“Again, I’ll ask myself: ‘Did I understand what I just read?’ Yes, I did. This paragraph tells about how the Erie Canal allowed traders and travelers to journey from Lake Erie in Buffalo to the Hudson River in Albany and then to New York City on the Hudson River. [Point to the map.] I know that using text features like maps is a strategy good readers use to make sense of nonfiction texts. It’s smart to look carefully at maps, photographs, or other features because they help you understand what you’re reading. This map is helpful because it shows the key cities mentioned in the paragraph—Buffalo, Albany, and New York City—and it shows the route of the Erie Canal, which is what the paragraph is about.”

Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading.

Stop after:

Paragraph 3: “The Midwest soon became the food-growing center for the entire nation.”

You might say:

“I understand that this paragraph is mainly about how the Erie Canal made it cheaper to ship goods from the Midwest to New York City and to Europe. As I read, I used another strategy good readers use to think more deeply about their reading—I made an inference. I used clues to help me infer that some farmers in the Midwest and business owners in New York City must have gotten rich by shipping goods on the Erie Canal. It said in the paragraph that ‘Farms in the Midwest prospered’ and ‘New York City quickly became the business capital of the nation and a gateway between the Midwest and Europe.’”

Reread the last sentence before the stop and continue reading.

Stop after:

Paragraph 4: “By 1880, that number had grown to 4.6 million tons of cargo!”

You might say:

“I understood this paragraph. The first sentence tells what the paragraph is mainly about—goods traveled west, as well as east, on the canal. In addition to making inferences to think more deeply about a text, good readers also ask themselves questions as they read. In the paragraph, it says that goods such as tools, machines, and textiles were shipped west on the canal. What I’m wondering is, ‘What other kinds of goods were shipped on the canal?’ I wonder if goods like furniture and toys were shipped to the Midwest to meet the needs of growing families. Maybe I’ll learn more about this as I read further.”

5 Discuss What the Students Noticed

Facilitate a discussion of what the students noticed you doing to make sense of the passage by asking questions like those that follow. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts they have learned to build on one another’s thinking.

- Q What did you notice me doing to make sense of the paragraphs I read?
- Q What comprehension strategies did I use? How did they help me understand or remember what I read?
- Q What did I do when I did not understand something I read?

Teacher Note

The discussion prompts are:

- “I agree with _____ because...”
- “I disagree with _____ because...”
- “In addition to what _____ said, I think...”

Students might say:

"I noticed that you stopped at the end of each paragraph to check if you understood what you read. That's something good readers do."

"In addition to what [Trevon] said, I noticed that you reread the first paragraph to be sure that you understood it. That's smart because the first paragraph often tells what a passage is mainly about."

"I noticed that you thought about the main ideas in other paragraphs, too. Thinking about what a paragraph is mainly about is a good strategy."

"I agree with [Trevon and Teresa]. I also noticed that you used comprehension strategies. You used text features, made an inference, and wondered about what you were reading."

If necessary, explain that you read each paragraph slowly and carefully. After reading a paragraph, you asked yourself if you understood what you read, and you reread to clear up any confusion. You thought about the important ideas in each paragraph, or what each paragraph is mainly about, and you used reading comprehension strategies such as using text features, making inferences, and wondering and questioning to help you understand and remember what you read.

6 Have the Students Read the Rest of the Passage

Explain that you would like the students to read the last three paragraphs of the passage quietly to themselves. Direct their attention to the "Thinking About My Reading" and "Reading Comprehension Strategies" charts, and remind them to stop at the end of each paragraph to monitor their comprehension and use comprehension strategies to help them make sense of what they read. Also remind them to use the "fix-up" strategies of rereading and reading ahead if they do not understand something in the passage. Ask the students to look up when they are done reading.

When most students have finished, ask:

- Q What did you learn about the Erie Canal in the last three paragraphs of the passage?
- Q What strategies did you use to make sense of what you read?
- Q If you were confused, what did you do to clear up your confusion?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

Tell the students that tomorrow they will have an opportunity to read the passage again and work with their partners to answer questions about it. Distribute a folder to each student and explain that this is where the students will keep passages and other materials for the week. Have the students put their copies of “The Erie Canal” inside their folders and keep the folders in their desks.

7 Reflect on Working Responsibly

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you do to work responsibly today?

Teacher Note

Save the “The Erie Canal” chart (WA1) to use during the week.

Strategy Lesson

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Reread and discuss a passage
- Discuss various question formats
- Answer questions about the passage as a class
- Refer to the passage to support their thinking
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Review and Reread “The Erie Canal”

Have the students get their folders and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Remind the students that during the end-of-year assessment they will read passages and answer questions about the passages. Review that yesterday the students began to prepare for the assessment by reviewing the strategies good readers use to make sense of text. They also listened as you read and thought about the first part of a passage and used the strategies themselves to make sense of the rest of the passage. Explain that today the students will reread the passage and work together to answer questions about it.

Display the “The Erie Canal” chart (WA1), and remind the students that this is the passage they heard and read yesterday. Ask:

 Q What do you remember about the passage? Turn to your partner.

Without discussing as a class, tell the students that you would like them to quietly reread their copies of the passage (BLM1) to help them prepare to answer questions about it. Direct their attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” and “Reading Comprehension Strategies” charts, and remind them to monitor their comprehension and use the comprehension strategies to help them make sense of what they read. Also remind them to use the “fix-up” strategies of rereading and reading ahead if they do not understand something in the passage. Ask the students to look up when they are done reading.

Materials

- “The Erie Canal” chart (WA1) from Day 1
- “Questions 1–3: ‘The Erie Canal’” chart (WA2)
- Copy of “Questions: ‘The Erie Canal’” (BLM2) for each student
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- “Tips for Answering Questions” chart, prepared ahead, and a marker

When most students have finished, ask:

Q What part of the passage, if any, did you have trouble understanding?

Q What did you do to help you make sense of that part?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

2 Discuss Question 1

Distribute a copy of “Questions: ‘The Erie Canal’” (BLM2) to each student. Tell the students that these are the questions about the passage that they will answer. Display question 1 on the “Questions 1–3: ‘The Erie Canal’” chart (WA2).

Questions 1–3: “The Erie Canal”

WA2

Question 1

Read the question. Circle the letter of the correct answer.

What is the main point the author makes in paragraph 1?

- A. In the early 1800s, more people lived on the East Coast than in the Northwest Territory.
- B. Life in the Northwest Territory was different from life on the East Coast.
- C. Trade between the East Coast and the Northwest Territory was difficult in the early 1800s.
- D. Few people crossed the Appalachian Mountains before the Erie Canal was built.

Teacher Note

To avoid overwhelming the students with testing jargon, we refer to each assessment “item type” (multiple-choice, fill-in-the-blank, short answer, essay, and other formats) as a “question” even though in some cases the item type is not literally a question.

You might explain that this type of question is called a “multiple-choice question” because it requires you to choose an answer from among multiple, or several, possible answers.

Explain that question 1 is an example of one type of question the students may see on the end-of-year assessment. Point to the directions that precede the question (“Read the question. Circle the letter of the correct answer.”) and explain that an assessment question usually includes directions that tell you how to mark or record your answer. Tell the students that it is important to read directions like this carefully so that they mark their answers properly. Have the students read the directions quietly to themselves. Then ask:

Q According to the directions, how will you mark your answer to question 1?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. If necessary, point out that the students will circle the letter of the correct answer.

Point to the question on the chart (“What is the main point the author makes in paragraph 1?”), and explain that it is important to read the question slowly and carefully and think about what it is asking. Explain that if the students are not sure that they understand a question, they should read it again.

Ask the students to listen carefully as you read the question aloud twice. Then read and reread the question. Ask:

- Q What information is the question asking for?
- Q What are the important words in the question? What words are important for finding the answer?

Students might say:

"The question is asking what the main point of paragraph 1 is."

"I agree with what [Sheila] said. In addition, I think main point probably means what the paragraph is mainly about."

"I agree with [Sheila and Lydia]. I think main point and paragraph 1 are the important words in the question."

As the students share their ideas, circle the important words they identify on the chart. If necessary, explain that main point and paragraph 1 are the important words in the question. Explain that the main point of a paragraph is the most important idea or information in the paragraph. It is the one idea or piece of information that the author considers most important for us to understand and remember. Explain that to answer the question, the students need to identify the most important thing the author is telling us in the first paragraph.

3 Answer Question 1

Ask the students to read the answer choices on their copies of question 1 quietly to themselves. Display the "The Erie Canal" chart, and tell the students that as you read paragraph 1 aloud you want them to think about which answer choice tells the main point of the paragraph. Then read paragraph 1 aloud. Ask:

- Q Which answer choice states the main point of the paragraph? Why do you think that?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking. If necessary, explain that answer choice C tells the main point of the paragraph. Explain that the important idea the author wants us to understand and remember is that trade between the East Coast and the Northwest Territory was difficult in the 1800s. That is why a canal connecting the two parts of the country was built. Point out that the other answer choices are details about the Northwest Territory and the East Coast; they are not what the passage is mainly about.

Circle letter C for question 1 on the "Questions 1–3: 'The Erie Canal'" chart and have the students circle letter C on their copies of the questions.

Tell the students that authors sometimes state the main point of a paragraph in a sentence within the paragraph. Point out that the second-to-last sentence in paragraph 1 tells the main point of the paragraph, and read the sentence aloud: "Transporting goods across the mountains was difficult and costly and took many weeks." Tell the students that if they are asked a question on the end-of-year assessment about the main point or main idea of a paragraph, a strategy they can use to find the main point is to reread the paragraph and look for a sentence that tells what the paragraph is mainly about.

4 Discuss Question 2

Display question 2 on the “Questions 1–3: ‘The Erie Canal’” chart, and have the students turn to question 2 on their copies of the questions. Explain that question 2 is an example of another type of question the students may see on an end-of-year assessment.

WA2

Question 2

In paragraph 5, the author states that “Life along the canal changed as the canal’s popularity grew.” On the lines below, list three examples of evidence from the text that support this statement.

Example 1:

Example 2:

Example 3:

Remind the students that it is important to read a question and any directions that come with it slowly and carefully. Ask the students to listen as you read question 2 and the directions for recording the answer. Then read the question and directions aloud twice.

Point to the question and ask:

- Q What information is this question asking for?
- Q What are the important words in the question? Which words are important for finding the answer?

Students might say:

"The question is asking us to find evidence in paragraph 5 that supports the statement 'Life along the canal changed as the canal's popularity grew.'"

"I think life along the canal changed as the canal's popularity grew are important words."

"I agree with [Bertrum]. In addition, I think three examples of evidence are important words."

As volunteers share their thinking about important words, circle the words in the question on the chart. If necessary, explain that life along the canal changed as the canal's popularity grew and three examples of evidence are important words.

Point to the directions ("On the lines below . . .") and ask:

Q According to the directions, how will you record your answer to question 2?

Have one or two volunteers share their thinking.

5 Answer Question 2

Display the "The Erie Canal" chart and tell the students that to answer question 2, you would like them to read paragraph 5 on their copies of the passage quietly to themselves. Explain that as they are reading, they are to underline at least three examples they find of evidence that supports the statement "Life along the canal changed as the canal's popularity grew." (You might mention that there are more than three examples.) Explain that when everyone has had a chance to underline examples, volunteers will share their examples with the class, and then the students will fill in their answer sheets.

Have the students read paragraph 5 and underline examples. When most students are finished, display the "Questions 1–3: 'The Erie Canal'" chart. Ask:

Q What is one example of how life along the canal changed as the canal's popularity grew?

Q Do others agree that ["towns popped up along the canal route"] is an example of evidence?

As volunteers share their thinking and the students reach agreement about three examples, record the examples on the chart. Have the students record the examples on their copies of question 2.

6 Discuss Question 3

Display question 3 on the "Questions 1–3: 'The Erie Canal'" chart and have the students turn to question 3 on their copies of the questions. Explain that this is another type of question they might see on an end-of-year assessment.

Teacher Note

Examples include:

- "... towns popped up along the canal route."
- "... some of them grew into cities and shipping centers."
- "Small villages grew into major cities in just a few years."
- "Factories and mills also sprang up along the canal."
- "Syracuse had become a leading salt exporter."
- "Rochester . . . biggest flour-milling cities."
- "The two endpoints . . . astounding growth."

Question 3

In the last paragraph of the passage, the author writes, "It is safe to say that the Erie Canal changed the course of American history." Underline at least two details in the paragraph that support this statement.

Aside from the economic impact, the canal had other benefits, too. As people traveled and conducted business, ties developed between different parts of the United States. This helped to make the growing nation strong and unified. Immigrants from Europe traveled west on the canal to start new lives. It is safe to say that the Erie Canal changed the course of American history.

Remind the students that an important first step in answering any assessment question is to read the question—and any directions for marking or recording the answer—slowly and carefully and think about what the question and directions are asking them to do. Ask the students to read question 3 quietly to themselves. Remind them that if they do not understand the question or directions, they should read the question or directions again.

When most students have finished, ask:

- Q What information is the question asking for?
- Q What are the important words in the question? What words are important for finding the answer?
- Q According to the directions, how will you record your answer to question 3?

Students might say:

"In the last paragraph, the author writes, It is safe to say that the Erie Canal changed the course of American history. We have to find at least two details in the paragraph that support what the author writes."

"I agree with [Julie]. I think the important words are the Erie Canal changed the course of American history and at least two details in the paragraph that support this statement."

"The directions say that we have to underline the details in the paragraph."

As the students share their ideas, circle the important words they identify in the question on the chart. If necessary, explain that the Erie Canal changed the course of American history and at least two details in the paragraph that support this statement are important words. Explain that, according to the directions, the students are to mark their answers by underlining the details.

7 Answer Question 3

Display paragraph 7 on the “The Erie Canal” chart. Then ask the students to quietly read paragraph 7 on their copies of the passage and underline at least two details that support the statement “It is safe to say that the Erie Canal changed the course of American history.”

When most students are finished, ask:

- Q What is one detail that supports the statement “It is safe to say that the Erie Canal changed the course of American history”?
- Q Do others agree that [“ties developed between different parts of the United States”] is a detail that supports the statement?

As volunteers share their thinking and the students reach agreement, underline the examples on the chart. If they have not already done so, have the students underline the examples on their copies of question 3.

8 Introduce the “Tips for Answering Questions” Chart

Remind the students that today they looked at three examples of assessment questions. Ask and discuss:

- Q What did we learn about answering assessment questions?

Students might say:

“We learned that there are different types of questions.”

“I agree with [Lana]. We also found out that we need to read the directions carefully so that we’ll know how to answer each question. Sometimes you circle a letter. Sometimes you write an answer or underline sentences in the passage.”

“In addition to what [Lana and Lorenzo] said, I learned that you have to read a question a couple of times and make sure you understand it. There are important words in each question that you need to pay attention to.”

“Also, rereading the passage is really important—even if you think you know the answer.”

As volunteers share their thinking, record their ideas on the “Tips for Answering Questions” chart. Be ready to paraphrase their responses so that your chart is similar to the example in the diagram on the next page.

Teacher Note

Details include:

- “As people traveled and conducted business, ties developed between different parts of the United States.”
- “This helped to make the growing nation strong and unified.”
- “Immigrants from Europe traveled west on the canal to start new lives.”

Tips for Answering Questions

Read the directions carefully so that you know how to mark your answers.

Read the question carefully—more than once if necessary.

Ask yourself: What information is the question asking for? What are the important words?

Reread the part that helps you answer the question.

Teacher Note

If you would like to discuss additional “The Erie Canal” practice questions with the students, see the extension “Discuss Practice Questions 4 and 5” below.

Teacher Note

The correct answer to part A of question 4 is D. The correct answer to part B is “Syracuse had become a leading salt exporter. Salt from Syracuse was shipped to towns and cities across the nation.” A sample correct answer to question 5 might be “Goods from the Midwest were first sent to Buffalo, New York. From Buffalo, the goods floated east on boats on the Erie Canal to Albany, New York. From Albany, the goods were transported to New York City on the Hudson River.”

Tell the students that the questions they discussed today are just a few examples of the kinds of questions they might be asked on the end-of-year assessment. Explain that tomorrow they will have a chance to hear and read another passage and work with their partners to answer questions about it. Have the students put their materials inside their folders. Tell the students that you will post the “Tips for Answering Questions” chart where everyone can see it and that they can use the tips throughout the week to help them answer questions.

EXTENSION

Discuss Practice Questions 4 and 5

Follow the procedures you used on Day 2 (see Steps 2–7) to have the students discuss and answer questions 4 and 5 on their copies of “Questions: ‘The Erie Canal’” (BLM2). Remind the students to use the information on the “Tips for Answering Questions” chart to help them find the correct answers. Then use the “Questions 4–5: ‘The Erie Canal’” chart (WA3) to discuss the students’ responses as a class.

In this lesson, the students:

- Read and discuss a passage
- Self-monitor and use comprehension and “fix-up” strategies to make sense of the passage
- Answer questions about the passage in pairs
- Refer to the passage to support their thinking
- Work in a responsible way

1 Review and Discuss Working with Partners

Have the students get their folders and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Remind the students that they are preparing for an end-of-year assessment, and review that yesterday they read a passage about the Erie Canal and worked as a class to answer questions about the passage. Explain that today the students will read another passage about the Erie Canal and work with their partners to answer questions about it.

Briefly discuss:

Q What do you want to keep in mind as you work with your partner today?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

2 Introduce the Passage and Have the Students Read Independently

Display the “An Engineering Marvel” chart (WA4) and distribute a copy of the passage (BLM3) to each student. Read the title aloud. Explain that today’s passage tells about the building of the Erie Canal.

Tell the students that you would like them to read the passage quietly to themselves. Direct their attention to the “Thinking About My Reading” chart. Tell them that as they read, you want them to stop occasionally and ask themselves if they understand what they are reading. If they do not understand something they have read, they are to put a check mark next to that part of the passage and use a “fix-up” strategy to try to fix the problem. Review that “fix-up” strategies include rereading slowly and carefully and reading ahead to find additional information. Direct the students’ attention to the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and remind them that they can also use the comprehension strategies they have learned to help them make sense of the passage.

Materials

- “An Engineering Marvel” chart (WA4)
- Copy of “An Engineering Marvel” (BLM3) for each student
- “Questions 1–4: ‘An Engineering Marvel’” chart (WA5)
- Copy of “Questions: ‘An Engineering Marvel’” (BLM4) for each student
- “Thinking About My Reading” chart
- “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

You might explain that a marvel is “something wonderful or astonishing” and that the designing and building of the 363-mile-long Erie Canal was considered an astonishing accomplishment in its time (1817-1825).

Tell the students that you will check in with them later to see how they did with reading and understanding the passage. Then have the students quietly read the passage.

Circulate as the students are reading. Confer briefly with the students about what they are doing to monitor their comprehension and fix comprehension problems.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students monitoring their comprehension?
- Are they using “fix-up” strategies to address comprehension problems?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1) on page 92. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are monitoring their comprehension and using “fix-up” strategies, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are monitoring their comprehension and using “fix-up” strategies, model reading a part of the passage, thinking aloud about what you are doing to monitor your comprehension and address comprehension problems (see Day 1, Step 4). You might also consider teaching or reviewing IDR Mini-lesson 2, “Self-monitoring and Using ‘Fix-up’ Strategies” (found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual).

3 Discuss Self-monitoring and “Fix-up” Strategies

When the students have finished reading, briefly discuss the passage. Ask:

Q What is something you learned about the building of the Erie Canal?

Then facilitate a discussion about how they did with monitoring their comprehension and fixing problems. Ask:

Q What part of the passage, if any, did you have trouble understanding?

Q What did you do to help you make sense of that part?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. If the students had difficulty comprehending any part of the passage, read that part aloud and discuss it with the students.

4 Discuss Question 1 in Pairs

Review that the students will work with their partners to answer questions about the passage. Distribute a copy of “Questions: ‘An Engineering Marvel’” (BLM4) to each student. Display question 1 on the “Questions 1–4: ‘An Engineering Marvel’” chart (WA5).

Questions 1-4: "An Engineering Marvel"

Question 1

Which two statements are main points the author makes in "An Engineering Marvel"? Circle the letters of the correct answers.

- A. Building the canal was a very difficult project.
- B. When completed, the canal brought about huge economic growth.
- C. The water level in the canal had to rise more than 500 feet.
- D. Governor Clinton performed a "Wedding of the Waters."

Tell the students that question 1 is the first question about the passage they will answer with their partners. Direct the students' attention to the "Tips for Answering Questions" chart, and tell the students that you want partners to use these tips to answer question 1. Briefly review the tips. Explain that when partners agree on a correct answer, each is to mark the answer on his or her copy of the questions. Have partners work together to answer question 1.

Circulate as pairs work, offering support as needed.

When most students have finished, discuss the following questions:

- Q What answers did you and your partner agree on for question 1?
- Q How did you mark your answers?
- Q What did you and your partner do to figure out the answers?
- Q Who agrees with [Cindy and Michael] that [A and B] are the correct answers?
- Q Who marked different answers? Why did you choose those answers?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking.

5 Follow the Same Procedure to Answer Questions 2-4

Follow the same procedure to have partners answer questions 2, 3, and 4. Continue to circulate as pairs discuss each question and offer support as needed.

Teacher Note

For example, if the students are struggling to understand what the question is asking, you might explain that main points are important words in the question and review that the main points of a passage are the most important ideas or information in the passage. They are the ideas or information that the author wants us to understand and remember. You might ask, "Which two of the four answer choices are ideas about the building of the canal that are important to understand and remember?" (You might also point out that authors sometimes begin a paragraph with a sentence that states a main point. Students might reread the opening sentences of the paragraphs, looking for main points.)

Teacher Note

The correct answers to question 1 are A and B.

Teacher Note

If the students are struggling to answer question 2, point out that DeWitt Clinton are important words in the question, and have them skim the passage to find the paragraphs that mention DeWitt Clinton (paragraphs 2, 8, and 9). Then ask, “What details in the paragraphs support the statement that DeWitt Clinton played an important role in the building of the canal?”

Teacher Note

Correct answers to question 2 include:

- “But the mayor of New York City at the time, DeWitt Clinton, had a strong vision.”
- “He believed the canal would make New York City the business capital of the country.”
- “Nevertheless, he convinced the state of New York to spend the money to build the canal.”
- “Work was started in 1817, the year Clinton was elected governor of New York.”

Teacher Note

If the students are struggling with question 3, have them reread the question and circle the important words (two examples, challenges, and builders). If necessary, explain that the question is asking them to find two examples of the challenges, or difficulties, the builders of the canal faced. You might have the students skim the passage for the words challenges and build to help them find examples. If the students continue to struggle, you might direct them to the paragraphs that deal with the challenges (3, 5, and 6).

Question 2

On the lines below, write details from the passage that support the statement “DeWitt Clinton played an important role in the building of the Erie Canal.”

When most students have finished, discuss the following questions:

- Q What details did you and your partner agree on to answer question 2?
- Q How did you mark your answers?
- Q What did you and your partner do to figure out the answers?
- Q Who agrees with [Aaliyah and Brandon] that [“Nevertheless, he convinced the state of New York to spend the money to build the canal”] and [“Work was started in 1817, the year Clinton was elected governor of New York”] are details that support the statement about DeWitt Clinton?
- Q Who wrote different answers? Why did you write those answers?

Question 3

On the lines below, write two examples of challenges faced by the builders of the Erie Canal.

Example 1:

Example 2:

When most students have finished, discuss the following questions:

- Q What answers did you and your partner agree on for question 3?

- Q How did you mark your answers?
- Q What did you and your partner do to figure out the answers?
- Q Who agrees with [Jordyn and Matteo] that ["Elevation rose by more than 500 feet along the route of the canal"] and ["In some places, bridges had to be built across the canal"] are correct answers?
- Q Who came up with different answers? Why did you mark those answers?

Question 4

Part A

Read the paragraph from the passage below. Then answer the question that follows.

There was an immediate explosion of commerce, just as Clinton had predicted. No longer did people speak of "Clinton's Folly." In just nine years, the canal tolls brought in more money than it had cost to build the canal. Within fifteen years, New York City became the busiest port in the United States. It handled more freight than Boston, Baltimore, and New Orleans combined. As a result of the canal, New York City became one of the most important ports in the world.

What does the word commerce mean in the paragraph? Fill in the circle of the correct answer.

- job skills
- methods of travel
- canal construction
- trade and business

Part B

Underline the details in the paragraph that helped you figure out what commerce means.

When most students have finished, discuss the following questions:

- Q What answers did you and your partner agree on for question 4?
- Q How did you record your answers?
- Q What did you and your partner do to figure out the answers?
- Q Who agrees with [Camilla and Xavier] that ["trade and business"] and ["As a result of the canal, New York City became one of the most important ports in the world"] are correct answers?
- Q Who chose different answers? Why did you choose those answers?

WA5

TEKS 3.B.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5
(Question 4)

Teacher Note

Examples of correct answers to question 3 include:

- Wilderness had to be cleared.
- The canal had to be built without the use of modern machines.
- The people who designed the canal were not professional engineers.
- Elevation rose by more than 500 feet along the route of the canal.
- In some places, bridges had to be built across the canal.

Teacher Note

If the students are struggling to answer question 4, explain that they are to figure out the meaning of the word commerce using details in the paragraph. Tell the students that the paragraph tells how commerce increased because of the canal, and ask them to reread the paragraph and think about what commerce is. If necessary, point out that words like more money, busiest port, and more freight are clues to the meaning of commerce.

Teacher Note

The correct answer to part A of question 4 is "trade and business." The correct answers to part B include:

- "In just nine years, the canal tolls brought in more money than it had cost to build the canal."
- "Within fifteen years, New York City became the busiest port in the United States. It handled more freight than Boston, Baltimore, and New Orleans combined."
- "As a result of the canal, New York City became one of the most important ports in the world."

Teacher Note

If you would like to discuss additional “An Engineering Marvel” practice questions with the students, see the extension “Discuss Practice Questions 5 and 6” below.

Teacher Note

The correct answer to part A of question 5 is C. The correct answer to part B is B. A correct answer to question 6 might include the following information: The builders made locks by blocking parts of the canal with two gates. When a boat entered a lock, the gate closed behind the boat. Water was then pumped into the lock until it reached the same elevation as the water beyond the second gate. When the next gate was opened, the boat was at a higher elevation on the canal.

Tell the students that tomorrow they will read and discuss one more passage about the Erie Canal and then answer a question about all the passages they have read this week. Have the students put their materials inside their folders.

6 Reflect on Partner Work

Briefly discuss:

- Q What did you do to take responsibility as you worked with your partner today?
- Q What did your partner do to take responsibility?

EXTENSION

Discuss Practice Questions 5 and 6

Follow the procedure you used on Day 3 (see Step 5) to have partners discuss and answer questions 5 and 6 on their copies of “Questions: ‘An Engineering Marvel’” (BLM4). Remind the students to use the information on the “Tips for Answering Questions” chart to help them find the correct answers. Then use the “Questions 5–6: ‘An Engineering Marvel’” chart (WA6) to discuss the students’ responses as a class.

Day 4

Guided Strategy Practice

Materials

- “Low Bridge, Everybody Down” chart (WA7)
- Copy of “Low Bridge, Everybody Down” (BLM5) for each student
- “Question 7: ‘An Engineering Marvel’” chart (WA8)
- “Tips for Answering Questions” chart from Day 2
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

In this lesson, the students:

- Read and discuss a passage
- Self-monitor and use comprehension and “fix-up” strategies to make sense of the passage
- Add sentences to a paragraph about this week’s passages
- Refer to the passages to support their thinking
- Reflect on what they have learned about preparing for an end-of-year assessment
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

1 Briefly Review the Week

Have the students get their folders and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Remind the students that they have been preparing for the end-of-year assessment. Review that this week they have read two passages about the Erie Canal and answered questions about the passages. Explain that today the students will read another passage about the Erie Canal and will work with you and their partners to answer a final question about all of the passages they have read this week.

2 Introduce the Passage and Have the Students Read It

Display the “Low Bridge, Everybody Down” chart (📄 WA7), and distribute a copy of the passage (BLM5) to each student. Read the title aloud. Explain that today’s passage is a folk song written more than 100 years ago that tells about life on the Erie Canal.

Briefly explain the structure of the song by pointing to the first verse and the chorus on the chart and telling the students that after each verse of the song comes the chorus, which is in bold type on the chart. Explain that the chorus is then repeated after each verse.

Ask the students to listen carefully as you read the first verse and the chorus. Then read the first verse and the chorus aloud.

Tell the students that you would like them to read the rest of the song quietly to themselves. Explain that you want them to stop occasionally and ask themselves if they understand what they are reading. If they do not understand something, they are to put a check mark next to that part of the passage and then use a “fix-up” strategy to try to fix the problem. Remind them that they can also use the reading comprehension strategies they have learned to help them make sense of the passage.

Tell the students that when they have finished, you will briefly discuss the song. Then have the students quietly read the rest of the song.

When the students have finished reading, briefly discuss the song. Ask:

- Q What did you learn about life on the Erie Canal from this song?
- Q What part of the song, if any, did you have trouble understanding?
- Q What did you do to help you make sense of that part?

3 Read and Discuss Question 7

Display the “Question 7: ‘An Engineering Marvel’” chart (📄 WA8), and ask the students to look at question 7 on their copies of the questions (BLM4). Explain that this is the question they will discuss today.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Tips for Answering Questions” chart, and remind the students that it is important to read a question and any directions that come with it carefully and to think about what

Teacher Note

You might explain that a folk song is a “song handed down from generation to generation by the people of a country or region.”

Teacher Note

Recordings of “Low Bridge, Everybody Down” are available online. To find a recording, search online, using the song’s title or “Erie Canal Song” as keywords.

Teacher Note

Questions 5 and 6 are supplemental practice questions for “An Engineering Marvel.” If you did not do the extension activity on Day 3, you might assign the questions as seatwork for the students to do individually or in pairs.

4 Model Writing the First Sentence of the Paragraph

Ask the students to watch and listen as you model writing the first sentence of the paragraph. Then write an opening sentence that states the main idea of the paragraph and uses the language of the question, thinking aloud as you plan and write.

You might say:

"A well-written paragraph starts with an opening sentence that tells what the paragraph is about. We know from the question that this paragraph is going to tell how boats moved people and cargo on the Erie Canal, so I will use the language of the question to help me write my opening sentence. I know from the passages that moving people and cargo on the boats was hard work, so I'll write: Moving people and cargo on boats on the Erie Canal was hard work."

Ask:

Q What did you notice me doing as I wrote the first sentence of the paragraph?

Students might say:

"I noticed that you wrote an opening sentence that tells what the paragraph will be about."

"In addition to what [Chris] said, I noticed that you used the words from the question to write the sentence."

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

5 Have the Students Add to the Paragraph

Tell the students that you want them to write a paragraph on their copies of question 7 by first copying the sentence you wrote as their opening sentence and then adding four or five sentences of their own that explain how boats moved people and cargo on the Erie Canal. Explain that you are asking them to add four or five sentences because when they write paragraphs on the end-of-year assessment that ask for details or evidence, it is a good idea to provide several examples.

Tell the students that to find details for their paragraphs they should read quickly through the three passages and underline sentences that tell how boats moved people and cargo on the canal. Then give the students several minutes to read, underline, and write their paragraphs. As the students work, walk around the room and observe, assisting as needed.

Teacher Note

You might explain that some details about moving people and cargo on the Erie Canal are found in more than one of the passages and that the students can include these overlapping details in their paragraphs.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to write several sentences about how boats moved people and cargo on the Erie Canal?
- Do the sentences include details from all three passages?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2) on page 93. Use the following suggestions to support the students:

- If all or most students are writing several sentences and the sentences include details from the passages, proceed with the lesson.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are writing several sentences or the sentences do not include details from the passages, model reading the passages, underlining details, and adding a couple of sentences to the paragraph. Have the students copy those sentences. Then have them skim the passages and add a few sentences of their own.

Teacher Note

Details that students might include in their paragraphs include:

- Boats could not use their own power to move along the canal.
- Teams of mules and horses pulled boats along towpaths.
- The canal was 40 feet wide and 4 feet deep.
- Locks were used to allow boats to rise with the elevation of the land.
- The canal had 83 locks, including the Lockport Flight of Five, which climbed 60 feet.
- Bridges had to be built above the canal for roads that the canal crossed.
- Because some bridges were low, people on boats called out “Low bridge, everybody down!” to warn travelers.
- The canal was very busy.
- Thousands of people were needed to maintain the canal.

6 Use the Students’ Ideas to Add to the Paragraph and Model Writing a Closing Sentence

When the students have finished writing, discuss the following questions:

- Q What is one sentence you added to the paragraph about how boats moved people and cargo on the Erie Canal?
- Q Where is that information in the passages?
- Q Who else added a sentence that tells that [boats could not use their own power to move along the canal]?

Use the students’ ideas to add several sentences to the paragraph on the chart. Then model writing a closing sentence.

You might say:

“A well-written paragraph ends with a strong closing sentence that wraps up the paragraph and lets the reader know that the paragraph has come to an end. From the passages, we’ve learned that the Erie Canal was very busy and that it took a lot of people and animals to keep the boats moving. So I’ll write: There were many boats traveling on the canal, and it took a lot of people and animals to keep the boats moving.”

Question 7: “An Engineering Marvel”Question 7

On the lines below, write a paragraph in which you explain how boats moved people and cargo on the Erie Canal. Use details from “The Erie Canal,” “An Engineering Marvel,” and “Low Bridge, Everybody Down” in your paragraph.

Moving people and cargo on boats on the Erie Canal was hard work. The canal was 40 feet wide and only 4 feet deep. Boats could not use their own power to travel along the canal. They had to be pulled by teams of mules and horses that walked along towpaths. To allow boats to go up and down in elevation, 83 canal locks had to be built, including the Lockport Flight of Five, which climbed 60 feet. Bridges also had to be built above the canal in some places for roads that crossed the canal. Some of the bridges were low. People on a boat shouted “Low bridge, everybody down!” to warn travelers of a low bridge. There were many boats traveling on the canal, and it took a lot of people and animals to keep the boats moving.

Read the paragraph aloud. Then point to the directions for question 7 and ask:

Q How did we do with following the directions of the question? Why do you say that?

7 Reflect on Preparing for the Assessment

Remind the students that this week they prepared for an end-of-year reading assessment by reading and discussing passages together and answering questions. Ask:

Q What have you learned this week that will help you do well on the end-of-year assessment?

Q Do you feel prepared for the assessment? Why do you feel [prepared/unprepared]?

EXTENSIONSProvide Additional Practice with Supplemental Passages and Questions

Additional practice passages and questions are available on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). You might assign one or more of the passages and sets of questions as seatwork to be completed independently or in pairs or as homework. When the students have finished the assignment, discuss their responses to the questions, using questions like those you asked on Day 3 (see Step 5). The passages and questions can also be used for further class instruction if needed. For other uses of the passages and questions, see “Using the Instructional and Supplemental Passages and Test Items Throughout the Year” on page viii.

Help the Students Prepare for Assessment Day

Providing the students with strategies for making sense of passages and tips for answering questions is a critical step in getting them ready for an end-of-year assessment, but it is also important to help the students prepare physically and emotionally. In the days before the assessment, let the students know what to expect on the day of the assessment. Your school or district guidelines for administering the assessment will provide you with information about the location of the assessment, how the assessment will be administered, and the amount of time the students will have to complete the assessment. You might also share information about rules concerning talking during the assessment, breaks or rest periods, and what to do when the students are finished.

Tell the students that it is important for them to be well rested and feeling their best on the day of the assessment so that they can do their best work. Ask:

- Q What might you do to make sure you are well rested and feeling your best for the assessment?
- Q Why is it important to be responsible for taking care of yourself so you're ready for the assessment?

Students might say:

“I can go to bed early the night before the assessment so that I won't be sleepy that day.”

“I can set an alarm clock so I have enough time to get ready that morning.”

“I can eat a good breakfast so that I won't be hungry and grouchy.”

“If I take care of myself, then I'll feel good during the assessment.”

“In addition to what [Terrance] said, if we feel good when we do the assessment, that will help us do our best work.”

If necessary, emphasize the importance of getting a good night's sleep and eating a good breakfast on the day of the assessment. Encourage the students to be responsible and take care of themselves in these ways in preparation for the assessment.

Passages, Question Sets, and Answer Keys

Passage 1

The Erie Canal

Paragraph 1

In the early 1800s, most people in the United States lived along the East Coast. However, the population was growing steadily in an area around the Great Lakes. The region was originally called the Northwest Territory, but it later became known as the Midwest. This region was rich with farmland and natural resources, such as timber and minerals. America was growing fast. People who lived on the East Coast needed wheat, wood, and other products from the Northwest Territory, but the Appalachian Mountains stood between this region and the East Coast. There were no trains or cars at that time. Transporting goods across the mountains was difficult and costly and took many weeks. The completion of the Erie Canal in 1825 changed all that.

Paragraph 2

The Erie Canal stretched across New York State, connecting Lake Erie in Buffalo with the Hudson River in Albany. Traders and travelers could then use the Hudson River to complete the journey east to New York City. Once the canal was built, goods from the Midwest no longer had to be transported by land across the mountains. Instead, traders could send goods to Buffalo. From there, the goods could easily be floated east on the Erie Canal.

The Erie Canal (continued)

Paragraph 3 Before the canal was built, shipping one ton of wheat from Buffalo to New York City cost about one hundred dollars. With the canal, that cost was cut to five dollars, and it took just six days instead of three weeks. The economic impact was huge. New York City quickly became the business capital of the nation and a gateway between the Midwest and Europe, which was also hungry for natural resources. Farms in the Midwest prospered. The Midwest soon became the food-growing center for the entire nation.

Paragraph 4 Goods traveled west on the Erie Canal, too. As more and more people moved west, the need for goods manufactured in the East grew. Factory-made items such as tools, machines, and textiles were shipped from New York to fast-growing western communities. Every year, traffic and trade along the canal increased. In 1862, more than 3 million tons of cargo was carried east and west on the Erie Canal. By 1880, that number had grown to 4.6 million tons of cargo!

Paragraph 5 Life along the canal changed as the canal's popularity grew. People who used the canal for travel and shipping needed food and places to stay, so towns popped up along the canal route. In time, some of them grew into cities and shipping centers. Small villages grew into major cities in just a few years. Factories and mills also sprang up along the canal. By 1850, several cities were producing textiles. Syracuse had become a leading salt exporter. Salt from Syracuse was shipped to towns and cities across the nation. In 1815, Rochester had only 331 people, but by 1830, it had grown to a population of more than 9,000 and had become one of the country's biggest flour-milling cities. The two endpoints of the canal, Buffalo and New York City, experienced astounding growth.

Paragraph 6

Moving so many goods required thousands of boats, along with crews to operate them. Companies typically operated the passenger boats, but cargo boats were often owned by families. Boats were pulled by teams of mules that walked beside the canal on special roads called towpaths. In 1845, there were about 4,000 boats being run by about 25,000 men, women, and children. Thousands more people were needed to maintain the canal. With all of this activity, life along the canal was lively and sometimes rowdy.

Paragraph 7

Aside from the economic impact, the canal had other benefits, too. As people traveled and conducted business, ties developed between different parts of the United States. This helped to make the growing nation strong and unified. Immigrants from Europe traveled west on the canal to start new lives. It is safe to say that the Erie Canal changed the course of American history.

Passage 2

An Engineering Marvel

Paragraph 1 The Erie Canal brought about huge growth in American commerce and travel by providing a waterway that connected the East Coast to the Midwest. The canal stretched an incredible 363 miles across the state of New York, from Albany on the Hudson River to Buffalo on Lake Erie.

Paragraph 2 Building the Erie Canal was a gigantic and difficult project. Many people did not believe it could be done. But the mayor of New York City at the time, DeWitt Clinton, had a strong vision. He believed the canal would make New York City the business capital of the country. Not everyone agreed with Clinton. Some people called the canal “Clinton’s Folly” or “Clinton’s Ditch.” Nevertheless, he convinced the state of New York to spend the money to build the canal. Work was started in 1817, the year Clinton was elected governor of New York.

Paragraph 3 It is no wonder people doubted that the canal could be built. First the wilderness had to be cleared. When a tree needed to be removed, a rope was thrown over the top of the tree. The rope was then tied to a simple machine, which one man could crank until the tree fell over. Another machine—powered by a team of horses, oxen, or mules—removed the tree stump. Then came the task of constructing the canal—without the aid of modern machinery. The people who designed it were not even professional engineers. Yet they figured out a way to make it work.

Paragraph 4 The canal was 40 feet wide and just 4 feet deep. Boats could not use their own power. They had to be pulled along the canal by horses or mules that walked along a towpath on one side of the canal. It was slow going, but it was still faster than traveling by land across the Appalachian Mountains to get to the Great Lakes.

Paragraph 5

One of the major building challenges was the change in elevation. From the Hudson River to Lake Erie, the land rose more than 500 feet. The water level—and the boats—needed to rise, too. Making the water in a canal rise to a higher elevation is done with canal locks. To make a lock, a portion of the canal is blocked off by two gates. A boat enters the lock, and the gate closes behind it. Then water is pumped into the lock until it reaches the same level as the water beyond the second gate. When the second gate is opened, the boat is at a higher elevation on the canal. The original Erie Canal had eighty-three locks to pass through. The locks were made of stone, concrete, and wood.

Paragraph 6

Sometimes the canal had to be built where a road was already in place. When that happened, a bridge was built above the canal. Some bridges were so low that people on the boats had to duck their heads. They would call out a warning: “Low bridge, everybody down!” This warning became the title of a famous song about the Erie Canal.

(continues)

Paragraph 7 The most difficult stretch of the canal was the 60-foot climb at the Niagara Escarpment. This was accommodated by building a series of five locks, called the Lockport Flight of Five. There were five locks going up and five locks coming down.

Paragraph 8 After the final portion of the canal was completed, it opened in 1825 with a grand celebration. Governor Clinton traveled by boat along the entire length of the Erie Canal, from Buffalo to Albany, and then down the Hudson River to New York City. He carried two casks of water with him from Lake Erie. Upon reaching New York City, he poured the lake water into the Atlantic Ocean in a ceremony called the “Wedding of the Waters.”

Paragraph 9 There was an immediate explosion of commerce, just as Clinton had predicted. No longer did people speak of “Clinton’s Folly.” In just nine years, the canal tolls brought in more money than it had cost to build the canal. Within fifteen years, New York City became the busiest port in the United States. It handled more freight than Boston, Baltimore, and New Orleans combined. As a result of the canal, New York City became one of the most important ports in the world. Also because of the canal, many Americans moved west to settle new territories.

Paragraph 10 People around the world viewed the Erie Canal as a marvel of engineering and imagination. It helped to establish an identity for the young country and was celebrated in stories and songs. It not only connected people and places, but it also helped to spread ideas. The Erie Canal became part of the American identity.

On the lines below, write a paragraph in which you explain how boats moved people and cargo on the Erie Canal. Use details from “The Erie Canal,” “An Engineering Marvel,” and “Low Bridge, Everybody Down” in your paragraph.

Possible answer: Moving people and cargo on boats on the Erie Canal was hard work. The canal was 40 feet wide and only 4 feet deep. Boats could not use their own power to travel along the canal. They had to be pulled by teams of mules and horses that walked along towpaths. To allow boats to go up and down in elevation, 83 canal locks had to be built, including the Lockport Flight of Five, which climbed 60 feet. Bridges also had to be built above the canal in some places for roads that crossed the canal. Some of the bridges were low. People on a boat shouted “Low bridge, everybody down!” to warn travelers of a low bridge. There were many boats traveling on the canal, and it took a lot of people and animals to keep the boats moving.

Where Is Costa Rica?

Costa Rica, which means “rich coast” in Spanish, is located in Central America. In terms of area, Costa Rica is 19,730 square miles, or about the size of the state of West Virginia. It is bordered to the north by Nicaragua and to the south by Panama. Costa Rica has extensive coastlines on the west along the Pacific Ocean and on the east along the Caribbean Sea. Parts of Costa Rica are covered by mountains, including several active volcanoes. Other parts of the country are flat. Costa Rica’s beautiful rain forests, which cover about one-third of the country, draw biologists and ecotourists from around the world. These visitors can see a rich variety of plant and animal life in the dense rain forests.

A Ride in the Clouds

Have you ever wondered what a bird feels like as it soars through the clouds and glides through the trees? I happen to know that it feels amazing! When I was in Costa Rica with my mom, stepdad, and stepbrother, I got to ride on big wire cables, called zip lines, through and above the rain forest.

To get to the platform where we would ride our first zip line, we hiked up a mountain trail for two hours. I got tired, but seeing the wildlife kept me going. We spotted monkeys in the trees above us, as well as strange-looking bugs and several animal tracks along the trail. We found mountain lion tracks in the mud near a stream. My favorite sighting, however, was a pair of sloths sleeping in a clump of trees. They blended into the trees so well that I would not have spotted them without binoculars.

As we neared the zip line platform, my stepdad turned to me and said, “Do you want to go first, Brayden?” The truth is, I did not want to go first. My stepbrother Eric seemed to sense my discomfort. He is much bolder than I am. That is one of the things I like best about him.

“I think it is better if I go first,” said Eric. “I’ve done this before, so Brayden can watch and see how it works.”

“Sounds good to me,” I answered, trying not to sound relieved. Eric gave me a private smile as he stepped up to get fitted with his harness and helmet by our guides, Alberto and Gabriella.

“Actually, I’ll be going first,” said Alberto. “Eric can go after me. Before we get started, let’s go over the safety instructions and get everybody into their gear.”

I looked over the edge of the platform and suddenly felt dizzy. I did not realize how high up we would be. I was nervous but did not tell anybody. Again, Eric sensed my reluctance. “Trust me, Brayden, you’re really going to love this,” he said reassuringly.

(continues)

When Alberto launched off the platform, he picked up speed within seconds, getting smaller and smaller as he disappeared into the clouds. When Alberto reached the other side, he tapped the cable as a signal for Gabriella to send Eric over. I watched as Eric stepped off the platform and slid gracefully away until he, too, disappeared into the mist.

Then it was my turn. I did not answer my mom when she asked if I was OK. I was still not sure if I should let my feet off the platform, but I took a deep breath. Then, with a gentle nudge from Gabriella, I was off!

I felt the wind in my face as I sailed into a cloud. Then everything grew silent and calm. I relaxed my body into the harness. I suddenly realized that I was flying! As I came out of the cloud, I saw a waterfall cascading into a pool below. It was as if the waterfall had sprung right out of the trees. I felt so happy and free. I imagined that this is what a bird in flight must feel.

By the time I reached the platform on the other side of the zip line, my fear was gone. Eric and I clapped each other on the back. We could hardly wait to do the next zip line. This time I would be ready—and eager—to go first. But before we moved on, we had two more “first flights” to celebrate. We cheered for our parents as they took the journey through the clouds and over the trees to us.

Which of the following best describes the relationship between Brayden and his stepbrother Eric?

- A. They are jealous of each other.
- B. They are just getting to know each other.
- C. They are competitive and try to outdo each other.
- D. They get along well with each other.

Part B

Underline details in the passage that support your answer to part A.

Students might underline any of the following details: “My stepbrother Eric seemed to sense my discomfort. He is much bolder than I am. That is one of the things I like best about him.” “‘I think it is better if I go first,’ said Eric. ‘I’ve done this before, so Brayden can watch and see how it works.’” “Eric gave me a private smile as he stepped up to get fitted with his harness and helmet by our guides, Alberto and Gabriella.” “I was nervous but did not tell anybody. Again, Eric sensed my reluctance. ‘Trust me, Brayden, you’re really going to love this,’ he said reassuringly.” “By the time I reached the platform on the other side of the zip line, my fear was gone. Eric and I clapped each other on the back.”

Question 5

How do Brayden’s feelings change from the beginning of the passage to the end of the passage? Write your answer on the lines below. Use details from the passage to support your answer.

Possible answer: At first, Brayden is afraid of the zip line. His stepdad asks him if he wants to be the first to jump, but Brayden says that “the truth is, I did not want to go first.” He is relieved when his stepbrother Eric says that he will go first. Brayden is still afraid when his turn comes. He says, “I was still not sure if I should let my feet off the platform.” But then he jumps, and he loves it. He says he felt “happy and free” as he zipped through the air. By the time he reaches the other platform, he says, “my fear was gone.” He can’t wait to go again.

An Adventure to Remember

Two years ago in June, we went to Missoula, Montana, to pick up my big sister Lily from her first year in college. Lily had gone on a white-water rafting trip earlier that spring and had a blast! She said one thing people must do when visiting Missoula is go rafting.

Before I knew it, my family and I were piled into the car and on our way to a rafting outfitter. Everyone was excited—except me. I have never liked water sports, and I am not a strong swimmer.

We got to the site where the rafts are launched into the river and met Sam, our rafting guide. Sam was an energetic young guy from Australia. I liked his accent. When I asked Sam how common it was for people to fall out of a raft, he chuckled and replied, “No worries, mate. You’ll be safe with me!”

Sam carefully went over safety tips and showed us how to paddle through the rapids. Then he fitted us all with life vests and helmets.

We started slowly, floating smoothly down the Clark Fork River. As we approached the Alberton Gorge, steep, beautifully colored rocks rose up on either side of us. An eagle soared high overhead. It was as if we had gone back in time, before civilization. There were no houses, no cars or trucks, no people rushing about. It was so peaceful.

The peace and quiet did not last long. As the water started moving faster, our raft began bouncing up and down. Ahead we saw white, foamy water splashing wildly over the rocks. Sam told us to brace ourselves as we headed into the first rapid. We paddled furiously, just like he had shown us earlier. I was sure we would run into the big boulders ahead of us!

When we hit the rapids, the front of our raft rose into the air and came down hard, spraying water over us. We laughed and screamed like kids on a roller coaster ride. Despite all the bouncing, I was still safely in the raft as we cleared the rocks. I decided at that moment that white-water rafting is awesome.

As we approached the next set of rapids, Sam asked me if I wanted to “ride the bull.” I asked him what that meant, and he explained that I would sit on the front of the raft and hang on tight as if I were riding a wild, bucking bull. He warned me that I would get completely drenched. I was up for more excitement and didn’t mind getting soaked. I decided to go for it.

Again, the front of our raft flew up into the air as we hit the white water, but this time, I flew into the air, too. Before I knew it, I was over the side and completely submerged in the churning rapids! Thanks to my life vest, I immediately surfaced. Sam sprang into action. In a flash, he was at the front of the raft. He extended a paddle over the side for me to grab onto and pulled me back in.

“Are you okay, mate?” Sam asked with a huge smile.

As I caught my breath, I nodded and exclaimed, “Yes! I’m great!”

Sam patted me on the back. “That’s the spirit, mate. Like I said, no worries!”

Question 3

How does the narrator’s attitude toward white-water rafting change in the passage? Write your answer on the lines below. Use details from the text to support your answer.

Possible answer: At first, the narrator is nervous about rafting. He says, “Everyone was excited—except me. I have never liked water sports, and I am not a strong swimmer.” Before the rafting begins, the narrator asks the guide how common it is for people to fall out of a raft. That also shows how nervous he is. When the rafting begins and the raft reaches the first rapids, the narrator is sure the raft will hit boulders ahead, but when the raft safely makes it through, the narrator is no longer afraid. He is excited. He says, “I decided at that moment that white-water rafting is awesome.” He is so excited that he “rides the bull” when they reach the next set of rapids.

Question 4

How are the narrators of “A Ride in the Clouds” and “An Adventure to Remember” alike? What do both of these narrators learn? Write your answer on the lines below. Use details from the passages to support your answer.

Possible answer: The narrators are both afraid at the start of their adventures, but both overcome their fears and come to enjoy themselves. In “A Ride in the Clouds,” the narrator, Brayden, is afraid at first to ride the zip line. He says, “I was nervous but did not tell anybody.” When he finally tries zip lining, though, he loves it. He says, “I felt so happy and free.” In “An Adventure to Remember,” the narrator is also scared at the start of his adventure—white-water rafting. He says, “Everyone was excited—except me.” Later, though, the raft makes it safely through the first set of rapids, and the narrator changes his mind about rafting. He says, “I decided at that moment that white-water rafting is awesome.” Both narrators learn that they have the courage to overcome their fears and try new things.

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Are the students monitoring their comprehension?
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Are they using “fix-up” strategies to address comprehension problems?
Other observations:

Suggestions:

- If all or most students are monitoring their comprehension and using “fix-up” strategies, proceed with the lesson and then continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are monitoring their comprehension and using “fix-up” strategies, model reading a part of the passage, thinking aloud about what you are doing to monitor your comprehension and address comprehension problems (see Day 1, Step 4). You might also consider teaching or reviewing IDR Mini-lesson 2, “Self-monitoring and Using ‘Fix-up’ Strategies” (found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual).

Ask yourself:	All or most students	About half of the students	Only a few students
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Are the students able to write several sentences about how boats moved people and cargo on the Erie Canal?
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Do the sentences include details from all three passages?
Other observations:

Suggestions:

- If all or most students are writing several sentences and the sentences include details from the passages, proceed with the lesson.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are writing several sentences or the sentences do not include details from the passages, model reading the passages, underlining details, and adding a couple of sentences to the paragraph. Have the students copy those sentences. Then have them skim the passages and add a few sentences of their own.

Excerpt from Rainforests

by James Harrison

Rainforest resources

Tropical rainforests are home to a huge range of wildlife and plants—more than anywhere else on Earth. Yet rainforests cover only a tiny part of our planet. When rainforests disappear, so do the amazing animals and plants that live in them.

Tropical rainforest plants give us many medicines and drugs, including those used to fight cancer.

Tropical rainforests are sometimes called “the lungs of the planet.” This is because the millions of rainforest trees and plants take in carbon dioxide and give out oxygen, which is the gas we need to breathe. Humans are pumping out too much carbon dioxide from power plants, factories, and cars.

Excerpt from Rainforests by James Harrison. Copyright © 2012 by Kingfisher Publications. Published in 2012 by Kingfisher, an imprint of Macmillan Children’s Books, a division of Macmillan Publishers Limited. Copyright © 2012 by Macmillan Publishers Limited.

Excerpt from Rainforests (continued)

A single rainforest tree is home to dozens of types of ants.

Too much carbon dioxide in Earth's atmosphere leads to global warming, which can change our climate. When people cut down rainforests, that leaves fewer trees to turn the carbon dioxide into oxygen. This makes the problem of global warming worse.

This pretty plant, the rosy periwinkle, is used to make drugs that treat some types of cancer. It grows in the rainforests of Madagascar.

EGYPTIAN BURIAL

TOMBS FOR KINGS

The ancient Egyptians believed in an afterlife and that mummification and burial prepared the dead for this afterlife. The Egyptian kings, or pharaohs, built great pyramids to be their tombs when they died. The most famous pyramids are those at Giza.

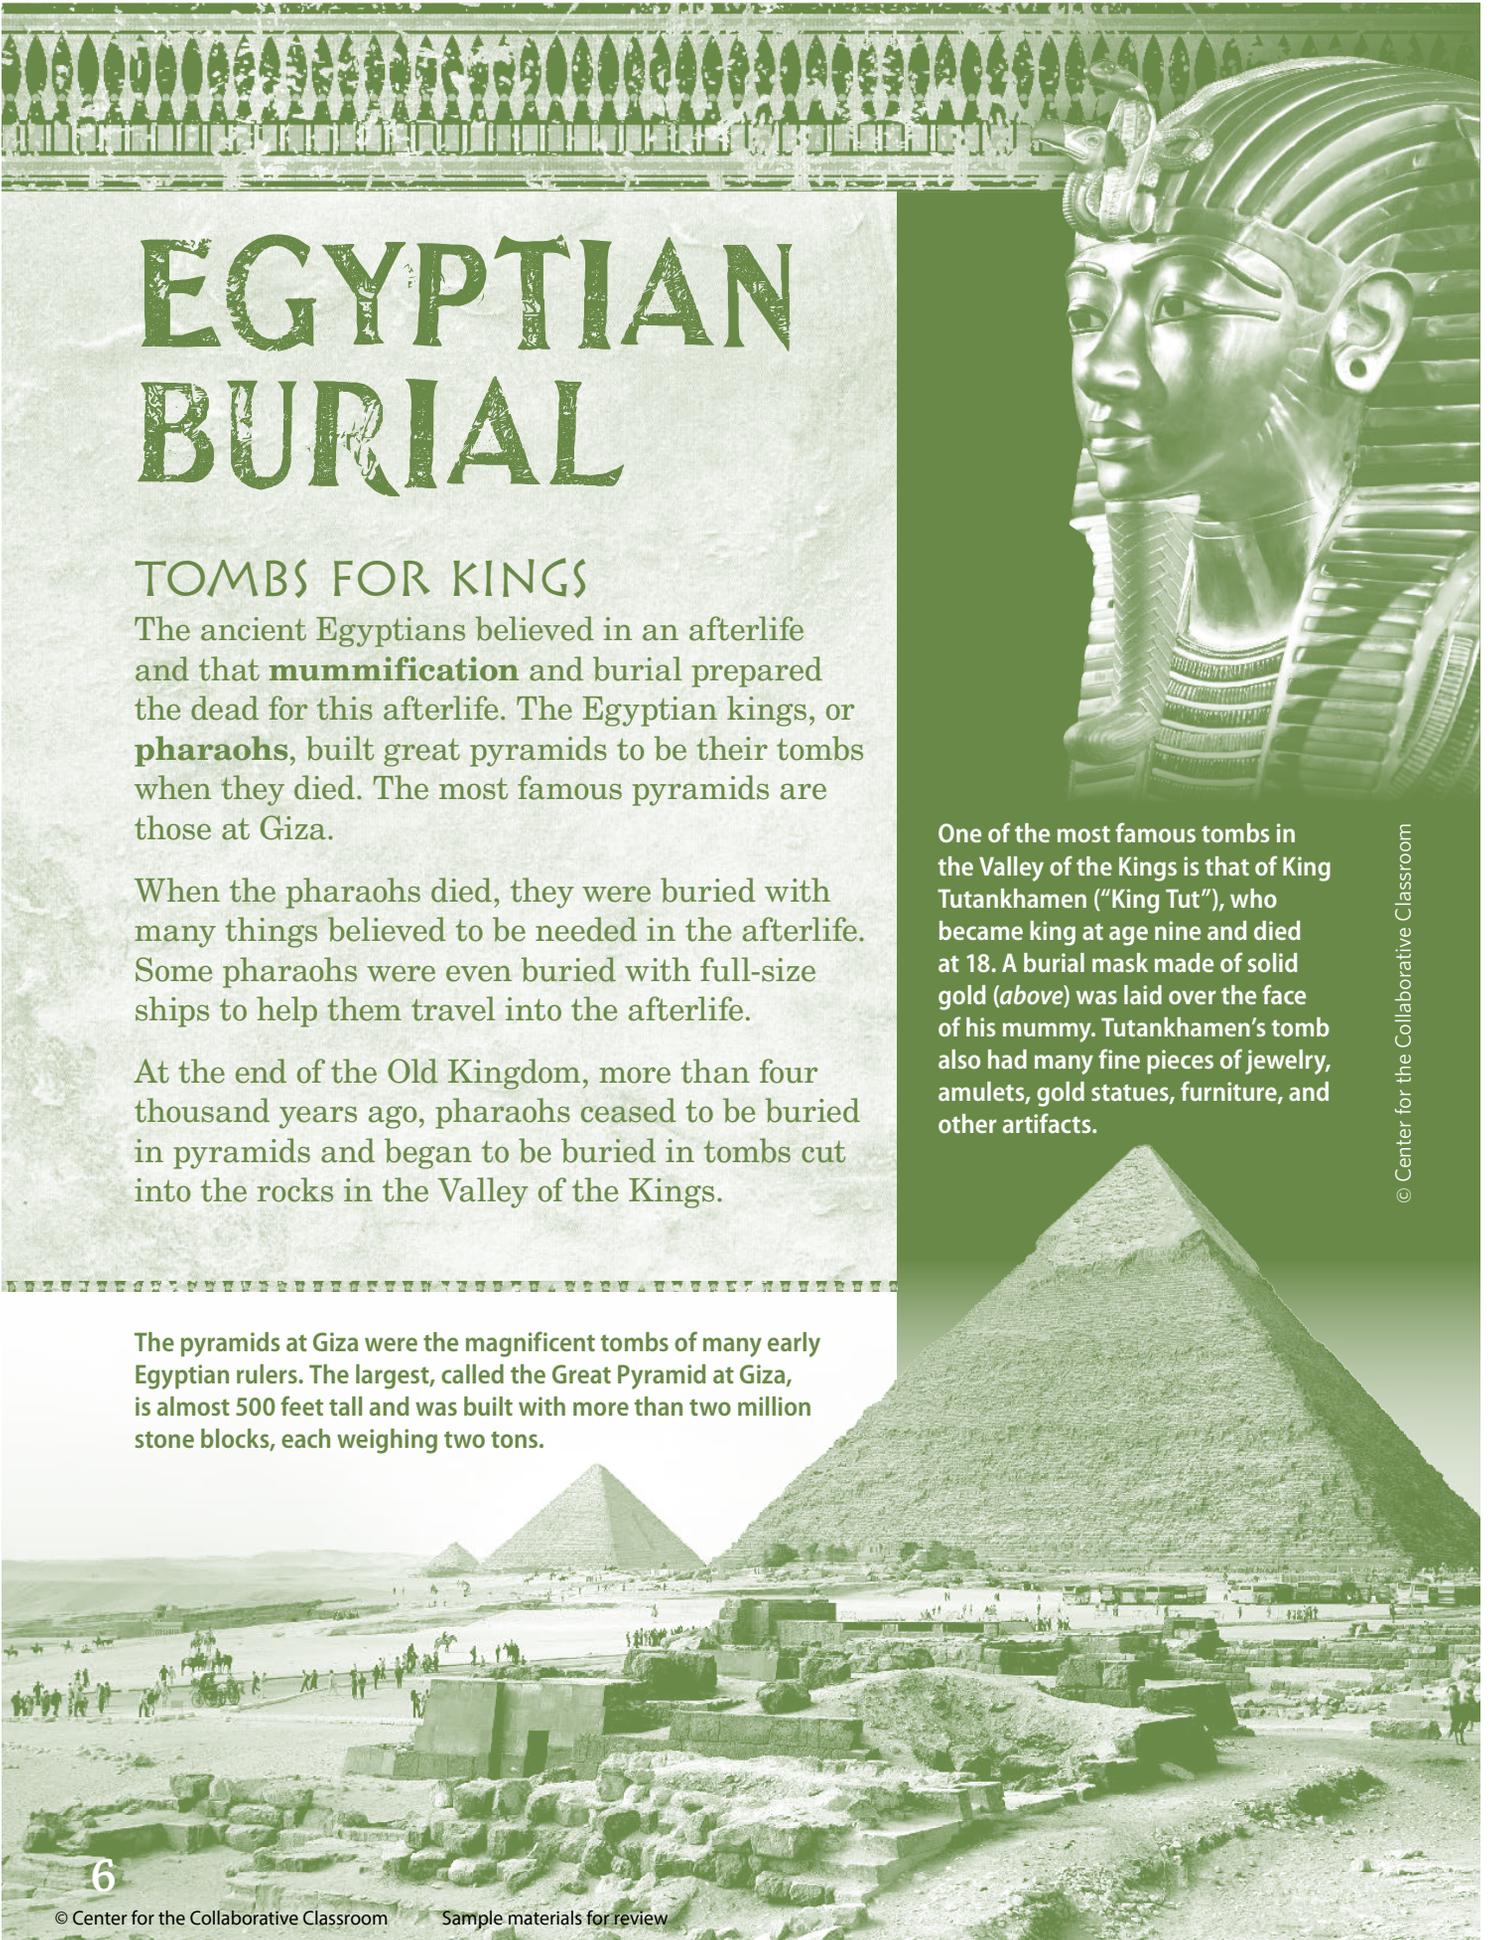

When the pharaohs died, they were buried with many things believed to be needed in the afterlife. Some pharaohs were even buried with full-size ships to help them travel into the afterlife.

At the end of the Old Kingdom, more than four thousand years ago, pharaohs ceased to be buried in pyramids and began to be buried in tombs cut into the rocks in the Valley of the Kings.

The pyramids at Giza were the magnificent tombs of many early Egyptian rulers. The largest, called the Great Pyramid at Giza, is almost 500 feet tall and was built with more than two million stone blocks, each weighing two tons.

One of the most famous tombs in the Valley of the Kings is that of King Tutankhamen ("King Tut"), who became king at age nine and died at 18. A burial mask made of solid gold (above) was laid over the face of his mummy. Tutankhamen's tomb also had many fine pieces of jewelry, amulets, gold statues, furniture, and other artifacts.

MAKING A MUMMY

Mummification was the ancient Egyptian method of preserving the dead.

First, embalmers cleansed and purified the body and removed the vital organs. The intestines, lungs, liver, and stomach were stored in jars and buried with the deceased, while other organs (such as the brain) were simply discarded. Then the body was covered with a mineral powder that drained fluid from it, and it was left on a slanted table to drain.

Amulet

Finally, the embalmed body was wrapped in several layers of bandages. Jewels and amulets for protection in the afterlife were placed between the layers of bandages. The most ornate mummies were those of the kings of Egypt, the pharaohs.

The finished mummy was buried in a sarcophagus, a stone coffin. If the deceased was wealthy enough or was royalty, the sarcophagus was often decorated with a painted image of him.

This is the sarcophagus of Sasobek, who was the vizier (prime minister) of the northern part of Egypt during the reign of Psammetichus I (664–610 BC).

FOLLOW THAT BALL!

SOCCER CATCHING ON IN THE U.S.

Friends and families turn out in the thousands every weekend, spilling out of minivans, sharing snacks at halftime, cheering the players as they chase the black-and-white ball around the field. It's soccer mania out there!

Women are winners:

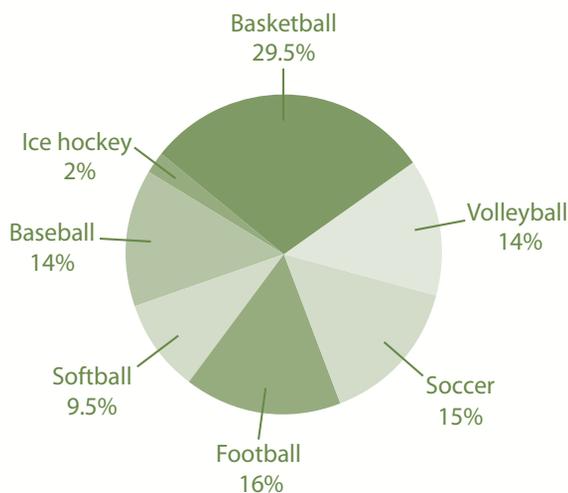

American women have taken to soccer in huge numbers. Their surge in skills and confidence resulted in the U.S. women's team winning the gold medal in the 2012 Olympics.

SOCCER CONTINUES TO GROW AND GROW...

After a shaky start in its first hundred years, soccer in the United States has attracted more and more players each year. In the 12- to 17-year-old age group, one out of seven kids now plays soccer. It's an up-and-coming sport.

It's not only young people who are playing; adults are rushing to play this sport, too. Overall, around 24 million Americans of all ages play soccer. American women, especially, have made the game their own. Close to half of U.S. Youth Soccer's 3 million members are girls. In 2012, the women's U.S. Olympic team won the gold medal.

TOP SEVEN TEAM SPORTS PLAYED BY 12- TO 17-YEAR-OLDS (2014)

Source: National Sporting Goods Association, 2014

Figures show that 12- to 17-year-old kids in the United States play a wide variety of sports.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why has interest and participation in soccer grown more than some other sports? There are many reasons why it has become popular.

- In football, a lineman might play several games in a row without even touching the ball. In a single soccer game, each player can touch the ball between 20 and 30 times—that's great for skill building.
- Many other sports rely on brute strength. In soccer, physical size doesn't matter as much. A player's ability has more to do with skill, stamina, and balance.
- It's a family game. Moms, dads, brothers, and sisters can all play at their own level.
- You don't need a lot of expensive equipment to play soccer.
- If soccer is played in the true spirit of the game, few players get seriously injured.

Soccer enthusiasts love the growing popularity of their favorite game. However, they have one complaint: Soccer gets nowhere near the U.S. media coverage of other sports, even the less popular ones. If major television networks decided to give soccer more airtime, who knows? In a few years, it might top the list of the most-played sports in America.

All Work and No Play

You start school at 8:00 A.M. and the day stretches out in front of you. Your class doesn't break for lunch until 11:30, and your school has removed recess from the daily schedule—so it's math and reading for the next three-and-a-half hours. What's so bad about recess? Isn't it good for students and teachers to take a break?

Trends in School Recess

More Schools Cutting Recess

More and more schools are cutting recess time or getting rid of it altogether. One out of every four elementary schools in the United States has discontinued recess for some or all grades.

Not only that: Many schools are also cutting back the time spent on subjects that are not tested, such as gym, art, and music. The main reason is so that schools can spend more time teaching academic subjects, such as math and reading. Many students are not doing well in these subjects.

And even in schools that still have recess, students get less time for breaks and PE as they move toward grade 6. There are also big differences in the amounts of recess and PE time between city and rural schools.

Why Recess Works

Students enjoy recess. They are fatigued after spending long periods of time concentrating. They see recess as important because it's a time to:

- Have a snack and a drink.
- Exercise and get rid of tension or boredom.
- Interact and catch up with their friends.

Schoolwork is hard, and sitting and concentrating puts a strain on your body and your brain. Taking even a short break from class gives your mind a chance to recharge.

Exercise at recess increases the blood supply to the brain, allowing students to concentrate on their work.

Getting some exercise at recess can also help your body make the chemicals your brain needs to help you store information. Research has shown that the brain needs to have a break every hour-and-a-half to two hours to work at its best.

Also, being able to run around and blow off steam means you're less likely to fidget during class time. When you go back to lessons after recess, you can think much more clearly and concentrate better.

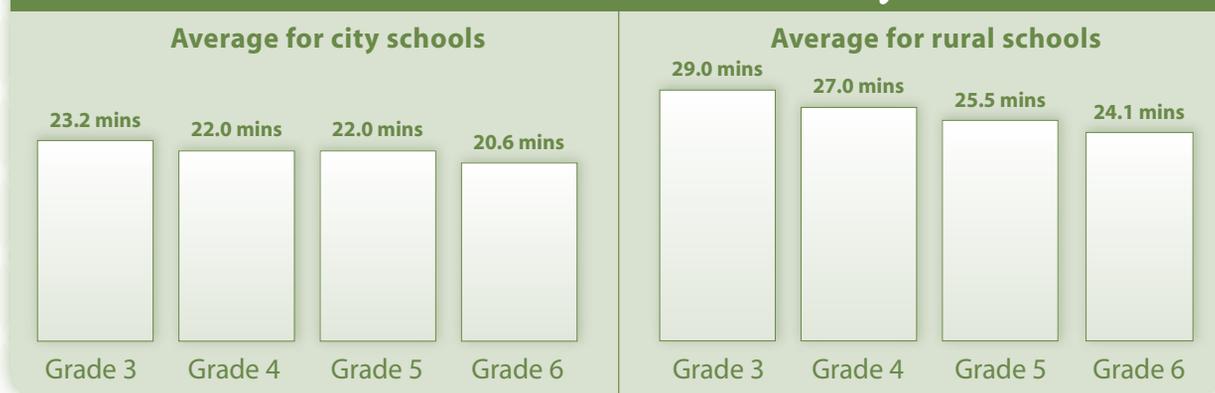

Recess Restrictions

Even when a school has recess, there are often so many rules that it's hard to do more than sit and talk. Schools are worried that if a student has an accident, the school will be blamed.

- Some schools have put up "No Running" signs on playgrounds.
- Tag and ball games have been banned in many schools.
- Play equipment has been removed at some schools.

Experts agree that today, when many children spend their free time in front of the TV or computer screen, the chance to run around at recess—even for a short time—is important. It may be the only exercise a student gets all day.

CHAPTER 1

Everyday Heroines

Life was difficult in Great Britain's American colonies. Women, men, and children worked hard every day just to get by. Women worked sun up to sun down caring for gardens, animals, homes, and their families

These women didn't look like rebels in their long dresses and frilly bonnets. Even on farms women wore fancy underskirts called petticoats. But when the British Parliament started passing unfair laws, colonial women had an important choice to make.

Would they support King George III of Great Britain? Or would they join the fight for a new, independent nation?

Colonial women spun wool, sewed, cooked, cleaned, and looked after children. They also made household basics such as soap and candles.

Who's Who in the Revolutionary War?

	Rebels	British
Major Groups	Patriots Colonists who disagreed with British rule and supported American independence	Loyalists Colonists who supported Great Britain's king
Leadership	George Washington Leader of the Continental army	King George III Ruling king of Great Britain
Armies	Continental Army Soldier group formed to resist British occupation, later French forces fought with the Continental army	British Army Considered the most powerful army in the world at the time
Additional Forces	Minutemen Men who formed military forces to defend homes and towns at a minute's notice	Mercenaries Soldiers from other countries hired to serve with the British army

Women took risks to deliver secret messages and supplies.

Colonial women took action. Thousands took charge of farms and businesses when their husbands went to war. They supplied armies with bullets, food, clothing, and blankets. Women crossed enemy lines with secret messages. They held enemy soldiers prisoner in their homes. Thousands of women saw battle. These heroines may have appeared delicate, but they had strength inside and out. They knew that whichever side they chose, their help was needed.

from Big Cats (1)

by Seymour Simon

The lion (Panthera leo) is sometimes called the “King of Beasts.” It certainly looks the part: an adult male lion has a noble head and mane, a powerful jaw and sharp teeth, and what seems to be a dignified manner. It can weigh more than 400 pounds and be 9 to 10 feet long. But, of course, there are no “kings” among animals. The lion is no mightier or braver than any of the other big cats. It is a large and strong hunter that kills prey to get its food and survive.

Adding to the lion’s “majesty,” is its thunderous roar. Both males and females roar. A male lion’s roar can be a way of staking out its territory and warning other lions away. Sometimes a lion will stop eating just to let loose with an earsplitting roar. A loud roar can be heard from a distance of five miles. Low roars are used by a female to call her cubs or to locate other lions. Sometimes whole groups of lions, called prides, roar together. Most of the loud group roaring takes place at night, sometimes as a response to the roars of nearby prides or solitary lions.

Most kinds of big cats are solitary—they live and hunt alone most of the time. But lions are different because they are sociable—they live in groups called “prides.” A pride includes a number of lionesses and their cubs, along with several males. The members of a pride share an area together and are more or less peaceful among themselves. A pride can have as few as three or four individuals or as many as thirty-five or more. Most prides have at least twice as many females as males.

The lionesses are the core of a pride. They are usually related to each other and remain with the pride all their lives. Males stay with a pride from a few months to several years before they leave by themselves or are driven out by a rival male.

The lionesses share all the chores of the pride. They defend the pride area by driving away any strange females. One or more lionesses guard the cubs while the others are off hunting. The females even suckle each other's cubs, so that a cub may feed from three or four different lionesses to get a full meal. If a lioness dies, her cubs will stay with the pride and be fed by other females. Being a member of a pride is a great advantage for a lion's chance of survival.

While most of the other big cats live in dense forests, swamps, or tropical rain forests, lions usually live in wide-open plains. Only a few hundred years ago, lions roamed wild in parts of Asia and southeastern Europe. But today, their range is much smaller, limited to the central and southern parts of Africa and a small game reserve in India called Gir Forest.

Another advantage of living in a pride is that a group of lions hunting on an open plain is much more successful than a lion hunting alone. Several lions can bring down larger animals and kill more animals on a single hunt. In addition, a pride often eats all of a kill and does not need to guard the remains against hyenas or vultures.

Females usually do most of the hunting. Often, several females will stampede a herd and drive the prey into a trap where other females or males are lying in wait. Once a kill has been made, the stronger males and females eat first, while the cubs and weaker adults scramble for the remains. Sometimes males will share the kill first with cubs rather than with adult females. But when food is scarce, fighting for food can be fierce and some cubs may starve.

Almost all the wild cats, big and small, have been relentlessly hunted and trapped by people. Throughout history, thousands upon thousands of tigers and lions have been hunted down in the name of sport. In the 1960s and 1970s, the demand for fur coats made from the skins of spotted cats led to widespread killing of the leopard, cheetah, and jaguar, along with smaller spotted cats such as the snow leopard and clouded leopard. The puma has also been trapped and poisoned for being a killer of livestock.

Though some of the big cats are now protected by laws in many countries, illegal killing still goes on. Of even more concern is that as more and more land is taken from the wild, there is less and less room for the big cats to live.

What can we do to save the big cats? We can support laws to stop the sale and use of wild cat skins around the world. We can help wildlife organizations and encourage governments to set up preserves where big cats will be safe. We can learn to treasure the wildlife on our planet instead of destroying it. The future of the big cats is up to us.

by Natalie Babbitt

It was another heavy morning, already hot and breathless, but in the wood the air was cooler and smelled agreeably damp. Winnie had been no more than two slow minutes walking timidly under the interlacing branches when she wondered why she had never come here before. “Why, it’s nice!” she thought with great surprise.

For the wood was full of light, entirely different from the light she was used to. It was green and amber and alive, quivering in splotches on the padded ground, fanning into sturdy stripes between the tree trunks. There were little flowers she did not recognize, white and palest blue; and endless, tangled vines; and here and there a fallen log, half rotted but soft with patches of sweet green-velvet moss.

And there were creatures everywhere. The air fairly hummed with their daybreak activity: beetles and birds and squirrels and ants, and countless other things unseen, all gentle and self-absorbed and not in the least alarming.

And this goes on for a while until the biggest story happens. A story that will enter quietly into the walls of the cafe and become part of its magic.

For a man whose wife has died drives through Flowers, Kansas, one morning on his way to something new. He is sad. He really isn't sure where he's going.

But passing the Van Gogh Cafe, he sees the possum. He sees the possum and he sees all the hungry animals standing beneath it, eating the scraps of muffins and potatoes.

And the man sees something else there, too, something no one has seen until now. And because of what he sees, he turns his car around and drives back where he belongs, back to his farm, which he turns into a home for stray animals, animals who come to him and take away his loneliness.

Speech Class

(for Joe)

by Jim Daniels

We were outcasts—
you with your stutters,
me with my slurring—
and that was plenty for a friendship.

When we left class to go to the therapist
we hoped they wouldn't laugh—
took turns reminding the teacher:
“Me and Joe have to go to shpeesh clash now,” or “M-m-me and J-Jim ha-have to go to

Mrs. Clark, therapist, was also god, friend, mother.
Once she took us to the zoo on a field trip:
“Aw, ya gonna go look at the monkeys?”
“Maybe they'll teach you how to talk.”
We clenched teeth and went and felt the sun and fed the animals
and we were a family of broken words.

For years we both tried so hard
and I finally learned where to put my tongue and how to make the sounds
and graduated,
but the first time you left class without me
I felt that punch in the gut—
I felt like a deserter
and wanted you
to have my voice.

October Saturday

by Bobbi Katz

All the leaves have turned to cornflakes.
It looks as if some giant's baby brother had tipped the box and scattered them upon our lawn—millions and millions of cornflakes—crunching, crunching under our feet.
When the wind blows,
they rattle against each other,
nervously chattering.

We rake them into piles—
Dad and I.
Piles and piles of cornflakes!
A breakfast for a whole family of giants!
We do not talk much as we rake—a word here—
a word there.
The leaves are never silent.

Inside the house my mother is packing short sleeved shirts and faded bathing suits—rubber clogs and flippers—in a box marked SUMMER.

Eraser and School Clock

by Gary Soto

My eraser
Is pink
And car-shaped.
It skids across
My math test,
Which is a mess of numbers,
All wrong, like
When I unscrewed
The back of my watch
And the workings
Fell out.
The teacher frowned
When she saw
The watch,
Its poor heart
Torn out. Now
I'm working
On my math,
And I think,
I think, I think
I know. I look
Up at the school clock
With its hammerlike tick.
I could tear
Open its back,
And perhaps
The springs and gears

Of my eraser.

My eight fingers

Poem

back yard

by Valerie Worth

Sun in the back yard
Grows lazy,

Dozing on the porch steps
All morning,

Getting up and nosing
About corners,

Gazing into an empty
Flowerpot,

Later easing over the grass
For a nap,

Unless
Someone hangs out the wash—

Which changes
Everything to a rush and a clap

Of wet
Cloth, and fresh wind

And sun
Wide awake in the white sheets.

For the most part, they were like so many white men he had known before. They would never understand a black boy who wanted a library card, a black boy who wanted to read books even they didn't read.

Only one man seemed different from the others. Jim Falk kept to himself, and the other men ignored him, as they ignored Richard. Several times, Richard had been sent to the library to check out books for him.

One day, when the other men were out to lunch, and Jim was eating alone at his desk, Richard approached him.

"I need your help," Richard said.

"Are you in some kind of trouble?" Jim asked with a suspicious look.

"I want to read books. I want to use the library, but I can't get a card," Richard said, hoping Jim would not laugh in his face.

"What do you want to read?" Jim asked cautiously. "Novels, plays, history?"

Richard felt confused. His mind was racing so fast, he couldn't think of a single book.

Jim said nothing, but reached into his desk and brought up a worn, white card. He handed it to Richard.

"How will you use it?" Jim asked.

"I'll write a note," Richard said, "like the ones you wrote when I got books for you."

"All right," Jim said nervously. "But don't tell anyone else. I don't want to get into trouble."

from Hurricanes by Seymour Simon

Hurricanes are the only weather disasters that have been given their own names, such as Andrew, Camille, Floyd, Fran, Hugo, Irene, Katrina, Opal, and Rita. In some ways all hurricanes are alike. But like people, each hurricane has its own story.

All hurricanes form in the same way. They begin life in the warm, moist atmosphere over tropical ocean waters. First, the atmosphere gathers heat energy through contact with ocean waters that are above 80 degrees Fahrenheit to a depth of about two hundred feet. Next, moisture evaporating from the warm waters enters the atmosphere and begins to power the infant hurricane.

The growing hurricane forms bands of clouds and winds near the ocean surface that spiral air inward. The air is heated by warm ocean water, creating strong winds and forcing them to rise higher. This increases the power of the hurricane and leads to stormy conditions over huge areas. Hurricanes can easily last more than a week and may strike Caribbean islands days before whirling north and west into the United States.

from Global Warming

by Seymour Simon

For thousands of years, the balance of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere had not changed much. But now we burn huge amounts of coal, oil, and natural gas to generate energy. Every year, billions of tons of carbon dioxide pour out from the exhausts of cars, trains, trucks, airplanes, buses, and ships and from the chimneys of factories. There is 30 percent more carbon dioxide in the air than there was 150 years ago.

Trees, like other green plants, convert carbon dioxide into oxygen. But trees and forests are cut down in huge numbers. When wood burns or decays, even more carbon dioxide is released. Carbon dioxide enters into the atmosphere much faster than the remaining forests and oceans can absorb it.

The release of other greenhouse gases adds to the speed at which the world's climate is changing. Methane is released by millions and millions of cattle and other farm animals. Nitrous oxide comes from chemicals used in soil fertilizers, as well as from automobiles.

Large areas of tropical rainforest are destroyed every day. This is partly because companies cut down trees to sell as timber. The hardwood is used to make furniture and paper. Other companies clear areas of forest so that cattle can graze there, and then they sell the meat as beef around the world. Some companies destroy areas of the rainforest so they can dig out valuable minerals lying under the ground.

Today there are roads running through many rainforests. Giant trucks carry logs, minerals, and farm animals along the roads. People build towns for the workers who come to live there. Companies build dams and pipelines that may pollute the land and the water. Many local tribes are forced to leave.

Tropical rainforests are home to a huge range of wildlife and plants—more than anywhere else on Earth. Yet rainforests cover only a tiny part of our planet. When rainforests disappear, so do the amazing animals and plants that live in them.

Tropical rainforests are sometimes called “the lungs of the planet.” This is because the millions of rainforest trees and plants take in carbon dioxide and give out oxygen, which is the gas we need to breathe. Humans are pumping out too much carbon dioxide from power plants, factories, and cars.

Too much carbon dioxide in Earth’s atmosphere leads to global warming, which can change our climate. When people cut down rainforests, that leaves fewer trees to turn the carbon dioxide into oxygen. This makes the problem of global warming worse.

As you read this book, tropical rainforests are shrinking. Every second, a piece of rainforest the size of a soccer field is destroyed or damaged. The future of the world's rainforests is very uncertain.

Rainforests are cut down for timber and to make large farms to grow crops and raise cattle. Companies that mine minerals and build new roads, towns, and pipelines all destroy areas of rainforest.

Today there are many campaigns to protect rainforests. One program creates reserves or parks where no one can build or clear trees to make large farms. Everyone can help rainforests by buying fair trade bananas, coffee, and cocoa, as well as wood and paper sold by companies that do not destroy the forests.

Why Clone?

Cloning is a high-tech way to create a living thing that is an exact genetic copy of another. Why would we want to create identical living things? For farmers, there are many reasons. Farmers already use cloning techniques to produce desirable varieties of plants, such as apple trees that grow crisp, juicy fruit. One technique is to grow plants from cuttings taken from other plants. A plant that grows from a cutting is a clone because it has the same genetic makeup as the original plant.

In 1996, scientists succeeded in cloning the first mammal. Since then, a debate has raged about whether it is ethical or necessary to clone animals—including humans. Although the idea is controversial, some scientists believe that cloned human beings could one day become a reality. Other high-tech procedures, such as organ transplants, once faced the same kind of debate, but today they are widely performed.

In 2006, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) reported that it was safe to eat meat from animals that had been cloned. In 2008, the FDA approved the sale of cloned-animal meat in supermarkets without requiring them to be labeled as such.

PROS

Building a Better Breed

Since the first mammal was cloned, scientists have cloned many other creatures, including cows, cats, and fruit flies. Traditionally, farmers have paired a male animal with a female and hoped that they would produce offspring with desirable traits, such as animals that have thick wool or high-quality meat. Today, farmers are starting to use cloning as a surer way to get that same result.

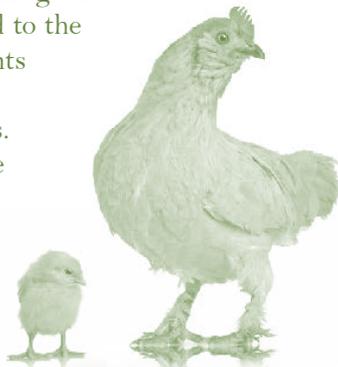

Protection from Extinction

Cloning might also be a way to protect endangered species from extinction. In 2005, scientists created clones of the gray wolf, a species once hunted to near extinction. Today, thanks to a U.S. protection law, gray wolves are thriving in several states, including Minnesota and Wisconsin. But if gray wolves ever become endangered again, scientists now know how to clone them so they won't become extinct.

Human Health

There are many potential advantages of cloning human beings. It might give infertile couples a chance to have children. Additionally, people who are likely to have a child with a genetic disorder might use cloning to have a better chance at producing a healthy child. Cloning could also be used to create healthy organs for people who are sick and need a transplant.

Cloning might help us understand how human genes work. This could lead to the discovery of treatments for genetic disorders such as cystic fibrosis. Discoveries like these have the potential to make many people's lives easier. These discoveries might even save lives.

CONS

Cloning for the Wrong Reasons

Where do we draw the line between the right reasons and the wrong reasons for using cloning? If human cloning is allowed in a few specific cases, people might begin to use it in other ways. For example, cloning might be used to create children who have specialized talents—such as amazing mathematical or athletic abilities—much like animals might be cloned for specific desirable traits. From there, cloning could lead to the creation of groups of people for specific purposes, such as fighting in wars. Many people argue that it is wrong to experiment with human life in this way.

Health Risks

Studying human cloning has big complications. Real human cells must be used, so if a particular experiment does not work out, the result could be a flawed copy of a human being—and that person would never have a normal life.

So far, scientists have found it difficult to produce healthy clones of mammals. For example, studies done in Japan have shown that cloned mice have poor health and die early. About a third of cloned cows have died young, and many of them were too large. Many cloned animals appear healthy at a young age but die suddenly and mysteriously. We should expect the same problems in human clones.

Even if scientists were able to produce human clones that were physically healthy, other important parts of human development might be affected. For example, a person's mood, intelligence, or sense of individuality might not develop normally.

Legal Roadblocks

In many countries it is against the law to clone a human being because of the many ethical and safety concerns. Congress is currently considering passing a law to ban human cloning in the United States.

"Junk food" is a slang term for food with little nutritional value. It includes food that is high in fat, sugar, or salt (or all three). Junk food makes up a large portion of food we see advertised on TV.

THE DEBATE ON

BANNING

Advertising Works

Food companies spend billions of dollars on TV advertising each year. The reason is simple: Advertising works. It's especially effective with children. A 2013 study found that the average American child sees about 13 food commercials a day, or 4,700 a year. Teens see more than 16 a day, or 5,900 a year. The study found that these kids see only about one ad per week for healthy foods such as fruits, vegetables, and bottled water. Most of the food ads they see are for junk food.

What's Junk?

Junk food may taste good, but it's low in nutritional value. For example, a sugary donut doesn't have as many nutrients as an apple. Many people argue that one way to encourage people—especially children—to choose more nutritious foods is to regulate, or control, the messages they receive about food from advertising. Others argue that regulating advertising will simply create more problems.

PROS

Good Habits Start Young

Some countries already regulate TV advertising for junk food. The people who support such regulations say that TV advertising encourages bad eating habits among young people because young people are more easily influenced than adults by advertising. In 2007, the United Kingdom started banning junk food advertising during children's TV shows. In 2011, the U.S. government proposed voluntary guidelines for food ads targeting children and teenagers. The guidelines state that foods advertised to children must include healthful ingredients and be limited in the amounts of sugar, saturated fat, trans fat, and salt they contain. The nation's largest food companies responded that the guidelines were too strict and proposed more lenient guidelines for ads.

A child who develops unhealthy habits is also likely to keep on making unhealthy choices as an adult. So it is preferable to control the messages that young people receive. This gives them a better chance at having a healthy future.

Good health is a big concern for many people today. Worldwide, hundreds of millions of people have serious problems related to an unhealthy diet, including diabetes and heart disease. A common problem in the United States is obesity: In a 2011–2012 survey, the Center for Disease Control found that about 80 million adults and about 12.5 million children were obese. Limiting junk food ads may be one way to help people make choices that will prevent obesity and other health problems.

The United Kingdom bans junk food ads during children's TV shows and on children's channels.

CONS

Giving Food a Bad Name

There are some big problems with creating rules about junk food advertising. For example, how do we decide exactly what is junk food and what is not? In the United Kingdom, foods such as olive oil, honey, and cheese have been banned from advertising during certain hours because they are labeled “junk food.” These foods have nutritional value, but they are also high in fat, salt, or sugar. Calling these foods “junk food” makes it more difficult for people to understand what makes up a healthy, balanced diet.

“In the United Kingdom, foods such as olive oil, honey, and cheese are labeled as junk food.”

To make things even more complicated, some fast food companies' ads now emphasize more nutritious choices—for example, providing fruit and milk with children's meals. Some promote health and fitness, too. If all fast food ads were banned from children's TV, these healthy messages would be as well.

Some parents feel that they have the right to decide what is best for their children and that regulating TV ads takes away that right. It is up to the parent to say yes or no when a child asks for something he or she has seen advertised on TV. What the parent says helps the child learn about how advertising affects the people who see it.

Regulating TV ads takes away some of the information parents and children have access to. They need that information in order to make their own buying decisions. Making these choices is the consumer's right, not the right of the government.

All-girls and All-boys Schools Better for Kids

Out in the world, males and females live, work, and interact with one another. But at many schools, the classrooms are filled with just boys or just girls. Life isn't separated into male and female sides, so why should schools be?

Together or Apart?

Because male and female students think, learn, and behave differently from one another, it makes sense that they would do better at schools that understand these differences. Research has shown that students at all-boys or all-girls schools are more confident and more willing to try new things, and that they might even perform better academically than students at coeducational schools.

Different Brains, Different Gains

You might not realize it, but your brain develops differently from the brain of a classmate of the opposite sex. For example, the area of a girl's brain that understands language is one of the first areas to develop. In a boy's brain, other areas develop first, such as the part that makes sense of math. Because of differences like these, males and females learn various subjects in different ways.

An all-boys or all-girls school can focus its instruction to meet the needs of either male or female students, not both at the same time. This helps students make faster, stronger progress. For example, one Michigan study compared graduates of all-boys and all-girls high schools with graduates of coeducational

In 1972, a new law came into effect stating that all U.S. public schools should be coeducational. However, the law was changed in 2006 to allow all-boys and all-girls public schools.

high schools. The researchers found that male students in all-boys schools scored better in reading and writing than male graduates of coeducational schools. Likewise, female students in all-girls schools scored better in science and reading than their female peers in coed schools.

Positive Proof in Test Results

In 2008, researchers in Florida found that students in all-boys and all-girls classrooms made greater academic gains: 55 percent of boys in coed classrooms scored proficient (at or above a passing level), while 85 percent in all-boys classrooms scored proficient. Girls also saw gains: 59 percent of girls in coed classrooms scored proficient, while 75 percent in all-girls classrooms scored proficient.

In England, researchers at Cambridge University did a four-year study on the different ways that boys and girls learn. The researchers found that all-boys and all-girls classrooms were remarkably effective at boosting boys' performance, particularly in English and foreign languages, as well as improving girls' performance in math and science.

Building Confidence

Supporters of all-boys and all-girls classrooms argue that the students are less distracted in those environments. This makes it easier for all students to focus on their lessons.

Students who feel shy around people of the opposite sex could benefit the most from all-boys or all-girls schools. Without the pressure of worrying about how they might look to members of the opposite sex, they can feel free to be themselves. For example, they might explore subjects they wouldn't normally explore and join clubs or sports teams. Shy students are likely to feel more comfortable in an all-boys or all-girls class, so they're more likely to feel enthusiastic about speaking up in class, asking questions, and participating in class discussions.

Many people argue that an all-boys or all-girls education could make it more difficult for young people to learn how to relate to members of the opposite sex. It's true that we live in a world where males and females live and work with one another and are not segregated as in all-boys or all-girls schools. But many graduates of these schools say that they feel confident not only about their academic abilities, but also about their personalities. And this confidence can give graduates a head start in building friendships with the opposite sex.

An Increasingly Popular Option

All-boys and all-girls classes and schools are gaining favor across the United States. In 2002, only a dozen or so public schools in the United States offered this option. In 2012, there were around 500 all-girls and all-boys schools. School districts, parents, and students are increasingly getting on board with all-boys and all-girls education as a great way to boost students' scores and confidence.

Shy students may feel happier about participating in an all-boys or all-girls class. Taking part in classroom discussions helps them get more out of the lesson.

Do Kids Really Need Cell Phones?

There are nearly seven billion cell phones in use worldwide—and the trend has caught on among eight- to twelve-year-olds. With bright colors and catchy ringtones, cell phones are hard for young people to resist.

But why does a person as young as eight years old need a cell phone? He or she is likely to come up with a list of reasons, including “All my friends have them.” However, for very young kids, there are many benefits to having cell phones beyond the obvious “cool” factor.

Cell Phones Are a Lifeline

In an emergency, a cell phone can be indispensable. Cell phones allow children to dial 911 or call their parents if there is an accident or emergency. Also, cell phones allow children to stay in contact with family. Children, parents, and other caregivers are often in different places throughout the day, and things often don’t go as expected. For example, if soccer practice ends early or a parent is stuck in traffic, a cell phone can let everyone know how plans have changed.

As the lives of families become more and more hectic, the number of students who are alone after school is increasing. Today, the number of children in the United States with mothers in the labor force is around 70 percent. This means that many students are at home alone after school. It is more important than ever to have a way of keeping in touch with family—and a way of getting help in an emergency.

Cell phones can help the day run smoothly by keeping family members in touch with one another.

Cell Phone Use Is Easy to Limit

Many people worry that cell phones put young children in danger. Bullies or even criminals might use the phones to contact children, and the Internet access on many cell phones puts children even more at risk. There is also the chance that children would run up high cell phone charges.

However, many cell phones now have parental controls. For example, it's possible to place limits on who can call and be called with some phones, and parents can limit or block Internet access on phones. Most cell phones have a Global Positioning System (GPS) so that parents can find their child easily using another cell phone or a website.

Parents can also opt for a prepaid plan so that their children can't go over spending limits but can still call their parents if they need to. Features like these make it possible for children to get the benefits of cell phone use without the risks.

Cell Phones Promote Familiarity with Technology

Today, many jobs are dependent on cell phones and similar devices. Mobile devices such as cell phones have become just as important as the computer has been in the last 20 years. One way to ensure that young people are familiar with this technology is to allow them to use cell phones now.

Students can use a cell phone for more than just text messaging and talking. For example, cell phones can be helpful when doing schoolwork. On most cell phones, students can check the Internet for definitions and spellings of tricky words, take photos and make short videos for school projects, and listen to audiobooks. Carrying out a variety of tasks using cell phones can help boost young people's confidence around technology—and, in turn, help them feel confident when they grow up and begin working.

Workplaces around the world are becoming more and more reliant on technology.

Cell Phones Teach Responsibility

Owning a tool such as a cell phone can be a great way for children to learn responsibility. Because cell phones are valuable and can be used in different ways, children must learn to use them wisely—for example, making sure they don't lose them, keeping them charged, and using them only when they are not in school. These things help young people learn to treat personal possessions with care. Learning responsibility in this way helps children to respect other people's belongings, too.

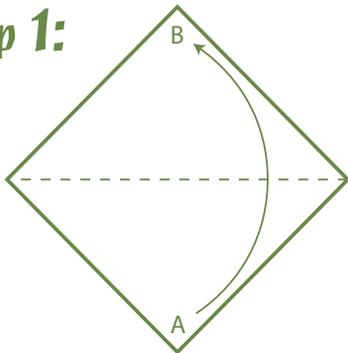

An Unstoppable Trend

Researchers say that about 56 percent of American preteens have cell phones. If young children don't already own cell phones, it's likely that they will in the future. The best way for young people to benefit from this technology when they grow older is to learn to use it responsibly today.

How to Make an Origami Cup

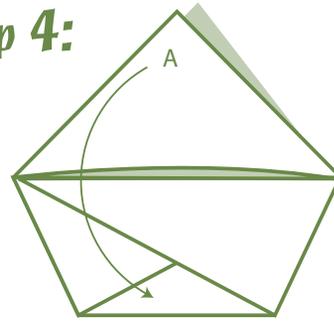

Now you can learn to make a handy cup using only a sheet of paper!
Begin with a square piece of paper and follow the instructions below.

Step 1:

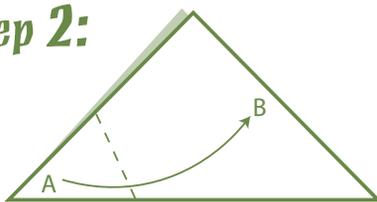

Fold your square on the diagonal, matching up corners A and B.

Step 4:

Take the top flap (flap A) and fold down toward you. Turn the cup over and repeat the step with the other remaining flap.

Step 2:

Fold corner A to edge B.

Step 5:

Gently push the sides in to form your cup.
If you followed the instructions above, your cup should look like this and be able to hold water.
Enjoy!

Step 3:

Fold corner A to corner B.

1. Broken Promises

THE TRAIL OF TEARS

In the 1800s, European settlers flooded into the United States. As they began building new lives for themselves—mining for gold and building towns, farms, canals, and railroads—they took over more and more land.

In 1836, the U.S. government tried to resolve its “Indian problem” by giving the eastern Native American tribes two years to move westward from their homelands. If these tribes didn’t move within the two-year period, they would be forced to leave. While many tribes had little choice but to go, some tribes fought against removal.

For example, only 2,000 of the 18,000 Native Americans in the area known today as Georgia had moved by the end of the two years. In 1838, government soldiers force-marched the Cherokee and other tribes from Georgia all the way to present-day Oklahoma. During the long, difficult journey of more than 1,000 miles, about 4,000 people became ill and died. This journey became known as the Trail of Tears.

Present-day Oklahoma was set aside as Native American territory. However, this land was different from the land the eastern tribes were used to. The crops they had grown in the East didn't grow on the new land, there were few wild animals to hunt, and the plants and geography were unfamiliar. The Native Americans had no way to rebuild the life they had built for themselves in the East. Even as the tribes struggled to survive in Oklahoma, much of the land they had been given was taken back by the U.S. government as the population of white settlers grew.

THE RESERVATIONS

The plains (or western) tribes were also struggling to survive. When gold was discovered in California in 1849, a flood of white settlers began traveling west hoping to make their fortunes, passing through Native American hunting grounds on the way. Tensions began to build as the two peoples crossed paths.

Unlike Native Americans, the settlers were not respectful of the land. They cut down many trees and hunted too many animals. There were so many violent confrontations between Native Americans and settlers that the U.S. government became worried that there might be a full-scale war.

2. Lost Land, Lost Independence ተብዕዖብዕዖ

WARDS OF THE STATE

In 1871, all Native American tribes lost their right to sign treaties when the U.S. government declared that it no longer recognized the tribes as nations, but instead thought of Native Americans as “wards of the state.” A ward of the state is a person who cannot take responsibility for himself or herself, such as a young child.

U.S. troops and government agents took control of the reservations. The agents distributed rations of food and secondhand clothes. The Native Americans were treated as if they could not care for themselves, and on the reservations, this became true. The Native Americans were forced to depend on the government because they no longer had the resources they needed to make a living. They were a long way from the land they knew.

The reservations were on land that none of the settlers wanted. Many of the tribes had never learned to farm in the European American way, and the poor-quality soil on the reservations made it impossible to learn. So many bison had been killed to make way for the building of the railroad that there were not enough bison to hunt. The tribes could not feed themselves or their families.

Now the United States had a different kind of “Indian problem.” Native Americans were no longer self-sufficient. If they were not able to provide for themselves on the reservations, their children would not learn how to provide for themselves, either.

Native Americans fought hard to combat the sudden flood of settlers into their homelands.

In 1851, in an attempt to keep the Native Americans out of the settlers' way, the U.S. Congress introduced the Indian Appropriation Act. The act said the Lakota, Cheyenne, Arapaho, Crow, and other western tribes would live on areas of land known as reservations until they stopped attacking the settlers. Each tribe was given a specific piece of land. The U.S. government agreed that the tribes would receive a yearly payment for as long as they lived on the reservations, but soon the U.S. government reduced the number of years for payment. In some cases, the U.S. government had promised the same land to more than one tribe, and fights broke out between the tribes as they competed for water, game, and land. As more and more settlers moved westward in search of gold and land, the government also made the reservations smaller.

4. Boarding School Life

THE JOURNEY

In October 1879, 82 boys and girls began their journey from South Dakota to Carlisle Indian Industrial School. When they boarded the train, they were told that they were “going to school.” They didn’t know why they were taken from their homes, how far they would travel, or whether they would see their families again. One boy, named Ota Kte, thought that they were going to be killed. However, believing that he was doing something brave for his tribe, Ota Kte boarded the train with the others.

The long, noisy train ride was the first of many strange experiences for the children. Whenever the train stopped in a city, crowds of people stared at them, curious to see the “wild” children. The children huddled inside, frightened and confused.

“BEFORE” AND “AFTER”

When the hungry, exhausted children arrived at Carlisle, Captain Pratt’s program began immediately. First, the children were photographed. Next, they were stripped of their traditional clothing, including the special beaded necklaces their parents had given them to mark an important journey or change in their lives. Everything was placed in a pile and burned. The children were then scrubbed in hot baths and given uniforms to wear. The children were used to wearing loose clothing and soft moccasins on their feet, so the stiff collars, belts, and boots made them feel trapped and anxious. They felt as if they were locked in cages.

Captain Pratt also thought that the boys’ long hair made them look like savages and had it cut short. Traditionally, the only time Native Americans cut their hair was during times of mourning. The children wailed as it was cut.

Finally, with their new clothes and short hair, the children were photographed again.

NEW NAMES

At the school, the children were immersed in English. Immersion is a way of teaching foreign languages in which teachers and students use only the foreign language. The children were forbidden to speak their native languages at any time. They had no way to express their feelings of homesickness and confusion because they didn’t know the English words for their thoughts and feelings. If Native American Pratt wanted to show “before” and “after” photographs to people so that he could prove that he had “civilized” the children.

4. Boarding School Life

What's in a Name?

Native American names are given to honor what a person has done or what qualities he or she has. For example, the Cherokee name Ayita means “first to dance” and the Sioux name Hantaywee means “faithful.” Ota Kte, meaning “plenty kill,” had been given his name to honor his father’s skills as a warrior.

children spoke their native languages at school, they were made to wash their own mouths with soap.

As part of their English language immersion, the children chose English names for themselves from a list on a chalkboard. The names belonged to U.S. presidents and other important people, but the scribbles on the chalkboard meant nothing to the children. With new names and appearances, the children no longer felt like themselves.

UNFAMILIAR ROUTINES

At mealtimes, the children had to march like soldiers to long dining tables. They waited for a bell to ring before sitting down to eat. The children had never sat at tables or used knives, forks, and napkins before. Most had never eaten such foods as flour or sugar.

The children became sick because of their new diet and because they were living in such close quarters. Diseases then spread quickly in the crowded, drafty dormitories. The children had no immunity against illnesses such as measles, mumps, and influenza. In the first year, 6 boys died and 15 children were sent home ill.

As bad as the days were, the nights were worse. As one Sioux woman, Zitkala-Sa, later wrote, “Not a soul came to comfort me. I was only one of many little animals driven by a herder.” The dormitories were very strange to the children. At home, there was no furniture, and families slept together in round tepees and lodges, but at Carlisle, beds were arranged in long rows, and the children were forbidden to speak to one another.

6. Boarding Schools in Question

A GOOD INVESTMENT?

The Carlisle school opened in 1879. Initially, the U.S. government saw Carlisle as a great success. Other boarding schools for Native American children began to open. By 1902, there were 25 boarding schools in 15 states, and very few Native American students were left attending day schools on the reservations. Almost 10,000 children were enrolled in boarding schools.

However, despite the $45 million spent between 1880 and 1900 to “educate” about 20,000 Native American children in the ways of European American society, very few students actually graduated from the schools. For example, only 8 percent of the students who attended Carlisle ever graduated. Many students ran away, and many of those who remained were not educated—or Americanized—in the way supporters of the schools had hoped. Some people in the U.S. government began to question how well the schools really worked.

THE MERIAM REPORT

In 1928, the U.S. government could see that many of its Native American policies had failed. A researcher named Lewis Meriam was sent to prepare a report about the conditions on Native American reservations and in boarding schools. Meriam led a team of experts, including scientists, historians, teachers, and lawyers. They found that in all areas of life, Native Americans were suffering—especially children in boarding schools. Just a few of the findings in Meriam’s report, called “The Problem of Indian Administration,” were:

- Health conditions in boarding schools were terrible.
- A diet lacking in nutrients was causing children to become ill.
- Schools considered work such as farming and cleaning to be more important than classroom education.
- Schools followed rigid routines that stopped children from being creative.
- Lessons should include Native American subjects to help students feel more comfortable in unfamiliar classrooms.

CLOSED FOR GOOD

At the time of the Meriam Report, almost 80 percent of Native American school-aged children were in boarding schools. The report was embarrassing for the U.S. government because it showed that children should not be taken away from their homes to be educated.

ISSUES IN QUESTION

The strict routines and teaching style of boarding schools had done little to help Native American students learn. This photograph shows students during a mathematics class at Carlisle.

Meriam and his team concluded that Native American children should instead attend day schools or public schools that would keep them connected to their families and communities. By the 1930s, most of the boarding schools, including Carlisle, had been closed for good.

At the start of the new century, an industrial revolution came to the Nashua's banks and waters. Many new machines were invented. Some spun thread from wool and cotton. Others wove the thread into cloth. Some machines turned wood to pulp, and others made the pulp into paper. Leftover pulp and dye and fiber was dumped into the Nashua River, whose swiftly flowing current washed away the waste.

These were times of much excitement, times of “progress” and “invention.” Factories along the Nashua River made new things of new materials. Telephones and radios and other things were made of plastics. Chemicals and plastic waste were also dumped into the river. Soon the Nashua’s fish and wildlife grew sick from this pollution.

The paper mills continued to pollute the Nashua’s waters. Every day for many decades pulp was dumped into the Nashua, and as the pulp clogged up the river, it began to run more slowly.

As the pulp decomposed, bad smells welled up from the river. People who lived near the river smelled its stench and stayed far from it. Each day as the mills dyed paper red, green, blue, and yellow, the Nashua ran whatever color the paper was dyed.

Soon no fish lived in the river. No birds stopped on their migration. No one could see pebbles shining up through murky water. The Nashua was dark and dirty. The Nashua was slowly dying.

Summary

of A River Ran Wild

A River Ran Wild by Lynne Cherry tells the story of the Nashua River, a river that ran wild through forests filled with animals. A group of native people settled near the river and named it Nash-a-way, which means River with the Pebbled Bottom. These people lived in peace until white settlers arrived and began taking more of the land for themselves. The two groups fought and the native people were driven from the land.

Over the years, factories were built that polluted the river, killing the animals and turning the water murky and smelly. After years of neglect, two people decided to do something to save the Nashua River. Their efforts led to the passing of new laws that stopped factories from polluting the river. Slowly the Nashua's current cleaned the river, and once again, a river runs wild.

Summary

of Richard Wright and the Library Card

The book Richard Wright and the Library Card by William Miller tells about an important time in the life of Richard Wright, an African American author. Richard Wright grew up in the American South during segregation. As a child, he loved stories. But his family was poor and did not have much money for books. Because of segregation, Richard could not check books out of the library, either.

When Richard was 17, he left home and got a job in Memphis. His plan was to earn enough money to move north and start a new life. At his new job, Richard became friendly with a white man named Jim Falk. One day Richard asked Jim if he could use his library card to check out books for himself, and Jim agreed. Richard had to pretend the books were for Jim, but he managed to check them out.

Reading the library books changed Richard Wright's life. They opened new worlds of ideas and emotions. Richard knew he would never be the same. For the first time, he truly felt free.

Story

Mrs. Buell

by Jean Little

Section 1

For years and years, for what seems like forever, I've gone to BUELLS when I had a dime to spare. It's a run-down, not very clean corner store. Kids go there mostly, for licorice and bubble gum and jawbreakers and Popsicles and comic books and cones. She only has three flavors and the cones taste stale. Still, she'll sell you one scoop for fifteen cents. It's not a full scoop but it's cheaper than anywhere else. It's the only place I know where a kid can spend one penny.

Mrs. Buell is run-down too, and a grouch. She never smiles or asks you how you are. Little kids are scared to go in there alone. We laugh at them but really, we understand. We felt it too, when we were smaller and had to face her towering behind the counter.

Section 2

She was always the same except that once. I tripped going in, and fell and scraped my knee. It hurt so much that I couldn't move for a second. I was winded too, and I had to gasp for breath. I managed not to cry out but I couldn't keep back the tears.

Mrs. Buell is big but she moved like lightning. She hauled a battered wooden chair out from behind the curtain that hung across the back. Then, without a word, she picked me up and sat me down on it. We were alone in the store but I wasn't afraid. Her hands, scooping me up, had been work-roughened; hard but kind.

She still didn't speak. Instead, she took a bit of rag out of her sweater pocket, bent down and wiped the smear of blood off my knee. The rag looked grayish but her hands were gentle. I think she liked doing it. Then she fetched a Band-Aid and stuck it on.

"Does it still sting?" she asked, speaking at last, in a voice I'd never heard her use before.

Section 3

I shook my head. And she smiled. At least I think she did. It only lasted a fraction of a second. And I wasn't looking straight at her.

At that moment Johnny Tresano came in with one nickel clutched in his fist. He was so intent on the candies he hardly noticed me. He stood and stood, trying to decide.

“Make up your mind or take yourself off,” she growled.

She had gone back behind the counter. I waited for her to look at me again so that I could thank her. But when he left she turned her back and began moving things around on the shelves. I had meant to buy some jujubes but I lost my nerve. After all, everybody knew she hated kids. She was probably sorry now that she’d fixed my knee. I slunk out without once opening my mouth.

Yet, whenever I looked down and saw the Band-Aid, I felt guilty. As soon as one corner came loose, I pulled it off and threw it away. I didn’t go near the store for weeks.

Section 4

She was terribly fat. She got so hot in summer that her hair hung down in wet strings and her clothes looked limp. In winter she wore the same sweater every day, a man’s gray one, too big, with the sleeves pushed up. They kept slipping down and she'd shove them back a million times a day. Yet she never rolled up the cuffs to make them shorter.

She never took days off. She was always there. We didn't like her or hate her. We sort of knew that selling stuff to kids for a trickle of small change wasn't a job anybody would choose—especially in that poky little place with flies in summer and the door being opened all winter, letting in blasts of cold air. Even after that day when she fixed my knee, I didn't once wonder about her life.

Then I stopped at BUELLS one afternoon and she wasn't there. Instead, a man and woman I'd never laid eyes on were behind the counter sorting through stacks of stuff. They were getting some boxes down off a high shelf right then so they didn't hear me come in. I was so amazed I just stood there gawking.

"How Ma stood this cruddy hole I'll never know!" the woman said, backing away from a cloud of dust. "Didn't she ever clean?"

Mrs. Buell (continued)

“Give the subject a rest, Glo,” he answered. “She’s dead. She won’t bother you any longer.”

“I tried, Harry. You know I tried. Over and over, I told her she could move in with us. God knows I could have used a bit of cash and her help looking after those kids.”

I think I must have made a sound then. Anyway, she whirled around and saw me.

“This place is closed,” she snapped. “Harry, I thought I told you to lock the door. What did you want?”

I didn’t want anything from her. But I still could not believe Mrs. Buell wasn’t there. I stared around.

“I said we’re shut. If you don’t want anything, beat it,” she told me.

Section 6

The minute I got home I phoned Emily. She said her mother had just read it in the paper.

“She had a daughter!” Emily said, her voice echoing my own sense of shock. “She died of a heart attack. Kate, her whole name was Katharine Ann Buell.”

Mrs. Buell (continued)

“Katharine,” I said slowly. My name is really Katharine although only Dad calls me by it. “I can’t believe it somehow.”

“No,” Emily said. “She was always just Mrs. Buell.”

I told her about Glo and Harry. After we hung up though, I tried to imagine Mrs. Buell as a child. Instead, I saw her bending down putting that Band-Aid on my knee. Her hair had been thin on top, I remembered, and she’d had dandruff. She had tried not to hurt me. Glo’s voice, talking about her, had been so cold. Had she had anyone who loved her? It seemed unlikely. Why hadn’t I smiled back?

But, to be honest, something else bothered me even more. Her going had left a hole in my life. Because of it I knew, for the first time, that nothing was safe—not even the everyday, taken-for-granted background of my being. Like Mrs. Buell, pushing up her sweater sleeves and giving me my change.

of “Mrs. Buell”

In the story “Mrs. Buell” by Jean Little, a girl named Kate tells about Mrs. Buell, a grouchy woman who owns a store in Kate’s neighborhood. One day Kate trips and falls in the store, and Mrs. Buell picks her up and puts a Band-Aid on her knee. Kate is surprised to find out that Mrs. Buell has a nice side. She doesn’t think about Mrs. Buell much after that until she goes into the store one day and discovers that Mrs. Buell has died. Kate learns that the old woman had a daughter and a whole other life that Kate knew nothing about. Kate realizes that she never tried to get to know Mrs. Buell. She also realizes that “nothing was safe” in her life. Even the everyday things that she takes for granted can suddenly disappear.

I would recommend this story because it made me think about my own life and how I sometimes overlook people. In the story, Kate doesn’t pay much attention to Mrs. Buell, and she is sorry about that when Mrs. Buell dies. That made me think about how I need to pay more attention to people in my life and show them that I care about them.

of A Picture Book of Jesse Owens

A Picture Book of Jesse Owens by David A. Adler tells the life story of one of the greatest track-and-field stars who ever lived. Jesse Owens grew up in a poor family and was often sick when he was a boy. By junior high school, though, he had developed into a strong athlete. In high school and college, he set records in many track events, including the 220-yard dash and the high jump. In 1936, Jesse became a hero around the world when he won four gold medals at the Olympics in Berlin, Germany. After the Olympics, he made speeches and wrote books about his life and issues facing the black community. He died in 1980.

I would recommend this book. It shows how Jesse Owens overcame poverty and prejudice to become a hero. I especially liked the part where he proved to Hitler at the Olympics that African Americans, Jews, and other minorities are not inferior.

Zoo

by Edward D. Hoch

The children were always good during the month of August, especially when it began to get near the twenty-third. It was on this day that Professor Hugo's Interplanetary Zoo settled down for its annual six-hour visit to the Chicago area.

Before daybreak the crowds would form, long lines of children and adults both, each one clutching his or her dollar, and waiting with wonderment to see what race of strange creatures the Professor had brought this year.

In the past they had sometimes been treated to three-legged creatures from Venus, or tall, thin men from Mars, or even snakelike horrors from somewhere more distant. This year, as the great round ship settled slowly to earth in the huge tri-city parking area just outside of Chicago, they watched with awe as the sides slowly slid up to reveal the familiar barred cages. In them were some wild breed of nightmare—small, horselike animals that moved with quick, jerking motions and constantly chattered in a high-pitched tongue. The citizens of Earth clustered around as Professor Hugo's crew quickly collected the waiting dollars, and soon the good Professor himself made an appearance, wearing his many-colored rainbow cape and top hat. "Peoples of Earth," he called into his microphone.

The crowd's noise died down as he continued. "Peoples of Earth, this year you see a real treat for your single dollar—the little-known horse-spider people of Kaan—brought to you across a million miles of space at great expense. Gather around, study them, listen to them, tell your friends about them. But hurry! My ship can remain here only six hours!"

Zoo (continued)

And the crowds slowly filed by, at once horrified and fascinated by these strange creatures that looked like horses but ran up the walls of their cages like spiders. “This is certainly worth a dollar,” one man remarked, hurrying away. “I’m going home to get the wife.”

All day long it went like that, until ten thousand people had filed by the barred cages set into the side of the spaceship. Then, as the six-hour limit ran out, Professor Hugo once more took microphone in hand. “We must go now, but we will return next year on this date. And if you enjoyed our zoo this year, phone your friends in other cities about it. We will land in New York tomorrow, and next week on to London, Paris, Rome, Hong Kong, and Tokyo. Then on to other worlds!”

He waved farewell to them, and as the ship rose from the ground the Earth peoples agreed that this had been the very best Zoo yet. . . .

Some two months and three planets later, the silver ship of Professor Hugo settled at last onto the familiar jagged rocks of Kaan, and the queer horse-spider creatures filed quickly out of their cages. Professor Hugo was there to say a few parting words, and then they scurried away in a hundred different directions, seeking their homes among the rocks.

In one, the she-creature was happy to see the return of her mate and offspring. She babbled a greeting in the strange tongue and hurried to embrace them. “It was a long time you were gone! Was it good?”

And the he-creature nodded. “The little one enjoyed it especially. We visited eight worlds and saw many things.”

Zoo (continued)

The little one ran up the wall of the cave. “On the place called Earth it was the best. The creatures there wear garments over their skins, and they walk on two legs.”

“But isn’t it dangerous?” asked the she-creature.

“No,” her mate answered. “There are bars to protect us from them. We remain right in the ship. Next time you must come with us. It is well worth the nineteen commocs it costs.”

And the little one nodded. “It was the very best Zoo ever. . . .”

12 seconds from death

by Paul Dowswell

An icy blast roared through the Skyvan transport plane as the rear door opened to the bright blue sky. On an April morning in 1991, above the flat fields of Cambridgeshire, England, three skydivers were about to make a parachute jump they would never forget.

Richard Maynard was making his first jump. He had paid a substantial fee to plummet from 3,600m (12,000ft), strapped to Mike Smith, a skilled parachute instructor. Expecting this experience (known as a “tandem jump”) to be the thrill of a lifetime, Maynard had also commissioned instructor Ronnie O’Brien to videotape him.

O’Brien leaped backwards from the plane to film Maynard and Smith’s exit. The pair plunged down after him, speeding up to 290kmph (180mph) in the first 15 seconds. They soon overtook O’Brien, and Smith released a small drogue parachute to slow them down to a speed where it would be safe to open his main parachute, without it giving them a back-breaking jolt. But here disaster struck. As the chute flew from its container, the cord holding it became entangled around Smith’s neck. It pulled tight, strangling him, and he quickly lost consciousness.

Watching from 90m (300ft) above, O’Brien saw the two men spinning out of control, and when the drogue parachute failed to open he knew something had gone terribly wrong. Both men were just 45 seconds from the ground. If O’Brien could not help them, they both faced certain death.

O’Brien changed from the usual spread-eagled posture of a skydiver, and swooped down through the air toward the plummeting pair, with his legs pressed tightly together and arms by his side. He

How it all happened

3,600m (12,000ft)
O'Brien jumps from aircraft, followed immediately by Maynard and Smith.

3,000m (10,000ft)
Smith deploys drogue chute which becomes tangled around his neck.

2,300m (7,500ft)
Smith loses consciousness. O'Brien dives down to help.

2,500–1,500m (7,000–5,000ft)
O'Brien catches up with tandem divers but slips underneath them (25 seconds to impact).

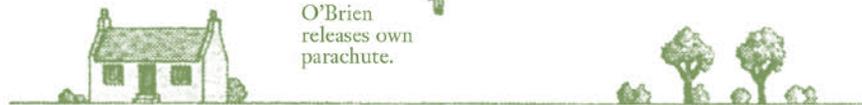

900m (3,000ft)
O'Brien catches up again.

700m (2,500ft)
Parachute released (12 seconds to impact).
Smith recovers.

650m (2,250ft)
O'Brien deploys own parachute.

had to judge his descent very carefully. If he overshot, he would have little chance of saving the two men, but this veteran of 2,000 jumps knew what he was doing.

Positioning himself right in front of them, he quickly realized what had happened, and tried to grab hold of Smith so he could release his main parachute. But diving at the same speed was extremely difficult. O'Brien would be within arm's length of the falling men and then lurch out of reach. Then suddenly, he fell way below them.

Time was fast running out. The ground was a mere 20 seconds away and O'Brien knew he had only one more chance to save their lives. He spread his arms and legs out to slow his descent, and this time managed to connect with the pair. Whirling around and around, O'Brien searched frantically for the handle that would release Smith's parachute.

With barely 12 seconds before they hit the ground, O'Brien found the handle, and the large main chute billowed out above them. Slowed by the chute, Smith and Maynard shot away as O'Brien continued to plunge down. He released his own parachute when he was safely out of the way, a few seconds before he himself would have hit the ground.

By the time the tandem pair had landed, Smith had recovered consciousness, but collapsed almost immediately. Only then did Maynard realize something had gone wrong. Caught up in the excitement of the jump, with adrenaline coursing through his body and the wind roaring in his ears, he had had no idea that anything out of the ordinary had happened.

The Pros and Cons of Year-round Schools

While most schools follow a traditional school calendar with a two- to three-month summer break, some schools—year-round schools—follow a different calendar and don't have a traditional summer break. In the 2006–2007 school year, there were about three thousand year-round schools in the United States educating nearly two million students. Are year-round schools better for kids? Before we examine the pros and cons of the matter, let's answer another question: What is a year-round school?

What Is a Year-round School?

Like a traditional school calendar, a year-round school calendar has about 180 days of school in a year. The difference is that year-round schools stretch out those 180 days over all twelve months of the year. Instead of the traditional two- to three-month summer vacation, year-round schools have several short breaks. The most common year-round schedule is the 45–15 plan, in which students go to school for 45 days and then get a 15-day break. They follow this pattern throughout the year.

Students who go to a year-round school avoid summer “brain drain.”

Let's look at some of the arguments in favor of year-round schools.

Less Summer “Brain Drain” and More Time to Learn

Research shows that over the summer students forget some of what they learned during the school year. In one study, researchers at the University of Missouri and Tennessee State University found that test scores were, on average, at least one month lower when students returned to school in the fall than when they left in the spring. Students who go to a year-round school avoid this summer “brain drain.”

Do students learn more by going to school year-round? Researchers disagree on the answer to this question. Because year-round schools keep the learning process going throughout the year, some people argue that students will learn more in a year-round school. In a 2009 report on year-round school calendars and traditional school calendars, researcher Jennifer Rule wrote, “In summary, it is reasonable to conclude that students attending year-round schools were likely to perform as well if not better than their peers in traditional 9-month programs. . . .”

Schools Save Money

Year-round schooling can save money. Schools on a year-round schedule can “multitrack” students so that while some of them are in school, others are on break. This means schools can enroll up to 33 percent more students. This multitrack system reduces the need for building new schools due to overcrowding. For example, Florida’s Marion County school system estimates saving more than twelve million dollars in construction costs because the district switched to multitrack year-round schooling.

More Flexibility for Families

The traditional summer break can be a burden on a family’s time and finances. Most parents cannot take time off from work for two or three months to be with their kids, and child care is expensive. The shorter, more frequent breaks in year-round schools give working parents more flexibility in deciding when to take time off and how to provide child care.

Now let’s look at some of the arguments against year-round schools.

No Proven Gains in Academic Achievement

An important argument for year-round schools is that attending school year-round will likely lead to gains in academic achievement. In fact, although many studies have been done on the impact of year-round schools and traditional schools on student achievement, the results are inconclusive. Some studies show gains; others do not. For example, a study released in 2013 showed that there was little evidence of increased achievement by students in year-round schools.

No Much-needed Summer Break

The longer summer vacation of a traditional school calendar gives students lots of time to unwind, connect with friends, and be with their families. It provides older students with opportunities to find summer work and earn money for college. It gives younger children time to attend summer camps—time that students who attend year-round schools do not have. One expert, Dr. Peter Scales, says, “The biggest plus of camp is that camps help young people discover and explore their talents, interests, and values. Most schools don’t satisfy all these needs. Kids who have had these kinds of [camp] experiences end up being healthier and have [fewer] problems. . . .”

“Year-round” Equals “Expensive”

Some school districts have found that switching to year-round schooling has cost them more money. Year-round schools have to provide air-conditioning and other utilities all year long, and there is more maintenance to do because buildings are being used more. In her first year as superintendent of Tempe Union High School District in Tempe, Arizona, Shirley Miles won praise for eliminating the high school’s year-round calendar and its added costs.

Are year-round schools a good idea? There are strong arguments to be made on both sides of the question. What do you think?

Summer break gives kids time to reconnect with friends.

YEAR-ROUND SCHOOL I'm for It

By Chance T., Imperial, NE

Summer is awesome, but after a couple of months, it's time for school again. You walk into class that first day back and hear, "Pop quiz! Let's see what you know." It's always difficult to start a new school year after a long summer break, but if you go to a year-round school, that first day back is a lot easier. I believe all kids should go to year-round schools.

One argument against year-round schooling is that you and your family can't take long trips over summer vacation. True, you might not get to take a three-week trip, but who does? Typically, a family vacation is a week or two. If you go to a year-round school, you can take three, or even four, short trips during the year—one during each break. You can see more places that way.

© Center for the Collaborative Classroom

A study showed that after completing a year of year-round school, 79 percent of students were in favor of the year-round calendar.

I know the idea of going to school year-round sounds pretty awful to some of you, but kids who go to year-round schools seem to like it. Elisabeth Palmer and Amy Bemis, authors of Year-Round Education, have done research on year-round schools. They said, “The results indicated that after one year of experiencing a 60–15 calendar [60 days of school followed by 15 days of vacation], students felt more positively about year-round education.”

Palmer and Bemis found that 53 percent of students in the study “favored year-round education during the summer before implementation, while 79 percent favored it at the end of the first year.” That means that after the kids in the study tried a year-round school schedule for a year, more of them were for it!

Another argument against year-round schooling is that there are fewer days of learning because there are so many breaks. Just when you’re getting excited about learning something, it’s time for a break. But if you look closely, you will see that actual learning time is the same in a year-round school, and after each break, the students are refreshed and more ready to listen and learn.

Also, students in year-round schools don’t have to relearn what they forgot over the summer. Donald Beggs, a former assistant professor at Southern Illinois University, and Albert Hieronymus, a former professor at the University of Iowa, researched summer learning and found that there were consistent losses in math and language skills during the traditional summer break.

I feel that year-round schooling would benefit all students. Kids would have more vacations and would learn more because they wouldn’t have to relearn the information they had forgotten after long summer breaks.

Year-round schooling can provide families with more opportunities to spend time together throughout the year.

Year-round School I'm Against It

By Anonymous, Temecula, CA

During the summer, most kids are out of school and enjoying time at home or on a family trip. But some kids go to school all summer long—and it's not because they have to go to summer school. It's because their school is on a year-round schedule. When my friends in year-round schools tell me they can't spend time with me during my summer break because they're in school, I'm sad and disappointed.

In the 2011–2012 school year, more than three thousand schools in the United States followed a year-round schedule. According to a 2010 survey conducted by Wake County Public School System in North Carolina, about 45 percent of parents said that schools should be on a year-round schedule, and about 49 percent said that they should not. Year-round schooling has its pros and cons. I'm against year-round schools for several reasons.

First, family vacations are usually planned for the summer break. Typically, this is a time to see relatives, relax, spend time as a family, and have fun. Year-round school schedules limit the time families have for summer vacations. Kids in year-round schools also don't have time to go to summer camp. At camp, kids get to be outdoors, make new friends, and learn nature facts. If schools everywhere were on a year-round schedule, summer camps might cease to exist.

Year-round schooling limits the time kids have for family summer vacations and summer camp.

The school year is filled with tests, quizzes, homework, and studying. After all that hard work, students deserve a summer break to relax and refresh. There are some who argue that kids forget things they have learned during a long summer break. I think they're wrong because kids still use their brains during the summer. A 2011 study by the RAND Corporation showed that students who went to a summer camp or participated in another type of educational summer program not only had fun but also kept information in their heads. If kids are concerned about forgetting what they've learned over the summer, they can ask their teachers for summer homework packets so they will be ready for next year.

Year-round school also makes it harder for students to get summer jobs. Students going to schools with traditional schedules can commit to two-month summer jobs and earn money for college. Students in year-round schools don't have the time to fill summer job openings.

Summer is to be enjoyed, not spent in classrooms. Should we change to a year-round school calendar that shortens summer vacation? The answer, I think, is that we should not.

There are many activities that engage kids' brains over the summer.

of The Legend of Sleepy Hollow

by Jennifer B. (age 12)

In The Legend of Sleepy Hollow by Washington Irving, Ichabod Crane has just arrived to Sleepy Hollow and has met a lot of people. Those people have told Ichabod the legend of Sleepy Hollow.

This legend is about a headless horseman who goes around cutting other people's heads in search of his own. This legend scared Ichabod every time it was told. Ichabod Crane had fallen in love with Katrina, a very rich girl, a couple of weeks after he arrived to Sleepy Hollow. One day Ichabod was invited to Katrina's party, and before the party was over a woman started to say the legend of Sleepy Hollow and at the end she said the only way you can escape the headless horseman is by crossing the bridge. That night Ichabod and his horse ran as fast as they could to reach their house. Finally he was up to the bridge that meant that he was near his house. Then something got in his way, it was the headless horseman. Did Ichabod ever escape?

I think that this book was very interesting because it was a legend about a headless horseman that lost his head in a war and since then has been looking for it by cutting other people's heads off. I recommend this book to people who like scary legends that took place a long time ago.

This story reminds me of "Bloody Mary" because they are both scary and they are both legends. What makes this story more scary is that it has been told for more than 100 years and it has been told by people who are already dead.

Thoughts About My Reading Life

Name: _____

What are some of your favorite kinds of books now? Why?

Where is your favorite place to read?

What does the word reading mean to you?

When you don't understand something you are reading, what do you do?

What kinds of books did you read for the first time this year? What topics did you read about for the first time?

Assessment Overview

The assessments that accompany the Making Meaning® Teacher’s Manual and Vocabulary Teaching Guide lessons are designed to help you (1) make informed instructional decisions as you teach the Making Meaning program, and (2) track and evaluate your students’ reading comprehension, social development, and vocabulary knowledge over time. For descriptions of these assessments, see “About Comprehension and Social Skills Assessments” on the next page and “About Vocabulary Assessments” on page xix.

As you teach the lessons in the Teacher’s Manual and the Vocabulary Teaching Guide, an assessment icon (📄) will alert you whenever an assessment is suggested. If you are using the Digital Teacher’s Set, you can tap the assessment icon to open the CCC ClassView™ assessment app.

Everything you need to conduct each assessment, including instructions and forms, can be found in this book or can be accessed through the CCC ClassView app (classview.org). Printable forms are also available on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

You may choose to record your students’ progress using forms copied from this book or printed from the CCC Learning Hub, or you may choose to enter the information electronically using the CCC ClassView app (for more information, see “CCC ClassView App” below).

CCC ClassView App

CCC ClassView is an online application that contains all of the same assessment forms and instructions that are included in this Assessment Resource Book. This tool also enables you to electronically collect, sort, synthesize, and report assessment data for each student. When conducting the assessments, you can enter data directly into the CCC ClassView app and then generate reports on the progress of individual students and the class as a whole.

You can access the CCC ClassView app by tapping the assessment icons or links in the Digital Teacher’s Set, by going directly to the app (classview.org), or by clicking the CCC ClassView button on the grade-level program resources page on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). For more information about this assessment tool, view the “Using the CCC ClassView App” tutorial (AV41).

About Comprehension and Social Skills Assessments

The assessments that accompany the Making Meaning Teacher’s Manual include both formative and summative assessments. These assessments enable you to track and evaluate your students’ progress and needs, unit by unit and across the year.

FORMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Formative assessments help you reflect on your students’ academic and social growth over time, through class observation and individual conferences. Formative assessments in the program include class assessments and IDR conferences.

Class Assessment

Unit 1 • Week 1 • Day 3 The Reading Community		Class Assessment Record • CA1
Ask yourself:	All or most students	About half of the students	Only a few students
• Are the students taking turns sharing ideas?
• Are the students contributing ideas to the class discussion?
Other observations:

4 | Making Meaning® • Grade 5 © Center for the Collaborative Classroom

The Class Assessment is designed to help you assess the performance and needs of the whole class. As you teach the lessons, a Class Assessment Note in the Teacher’s Manual will alert you when an assessment is suggested. These notes occur about once per week, during a time in the lesson when the students are demonstrating their use of the strategies they have learned to make sense of text.

During the class assessment, you have the opportunity to randomly observe students working in pairs or individually (select strong, average, and struggling readers) as you ask yourself questions that focus your observations. Each Class Assessment Note in the Teacher’s Manual has a corresponding “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA) where you can record your observations. The record sheet reiterates the suggestions from the Teacher’s Manual for how to proceed with the instruction based on your observations.

IDR Conferences

Unit 3 Questioning IDR Conference Notes • CN1

Student's name: _____ Date: _____

Text title: _____ Text level: _____ Leveling system: _____

1 Initiate the Conference

Ask: What is your (book) about so far?

- Is the student able to tell what the text is about?

2 Listen to the Student Read Aloud

Does the student:

- Attend to meaning?
- Read fluently?
- Pause and reread if having difficulty?
- Read most words accurately?
- Try to make sense of unfamiliar language?

Ask: What is the part you just read about?

- Is the student able to tell what the passage is about?

3 Discuss the Text

Ask comprehension questions.

- Is the student comprehending the text?

4 Discuss Text Level

Ask: Do you think this (book) is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

- Is the student able to determine whether he or she comprehends the text?
- Is this text at the right level for this student?

IDR conferences provide you with the opportunity to talk with individual students about their reading, identify areas of strength, and note areas in which students need more support. As you teach the lessons, an IDR Conference Note in the Teacher's Manual will alert you when a conference is suggested. Initially, your individual student conferences will focus on getting to know the students as readers and on ensuring that they are reading appropriately leveled texts (for more information, see “Student Reading Goals and Interests Survey” below). As the year progresses, the IDR conferences focus more on assessing the students’ comprehension, supporting their reading growth, and encouraging self-monitoring (for more information, see “Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences” on the next page).

You can document your observations and suggestions that result from each conference on an “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN). We recommend that you document at least one IDR conference per student per unit. The “IDR Conference Class Record” sheet (CR1) is provided for you to record the dates you confer with each student over the course of the year (see page 157).

You will refer to the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets to help you evaluate the students’ comprehension development in the Individual Comprehension Assessment that occurs at the end of Units 2–9. For more information, see “Individual Comprehension Assessment” on page ix.

Unit 2 Using Text Features IDR Conference Notes • CN1

Student's name: _____ Date: _____

Invite each student to talk with you about his or her ideas and feelings about reading, reading habits, and reading interests. You might ask the student questions such as the following and record his or her responses:

Q Tell me about yourself as a reader. What do you like to read?

Q Tell me about your favorite books or authors. What do you like about them?

Q What do you like about the books we have read so far this year?

Q How do you feel about reading?

Q How do you feel when you are asked to read aloud?

Q What do you do best as a reader?

Q What are you interested in reading this year?

Q How do you want to grow as a reader this year?

Other observations: _____

14 | Making Meaning™ • Grade 5 © Center for the Collaborative Classroom

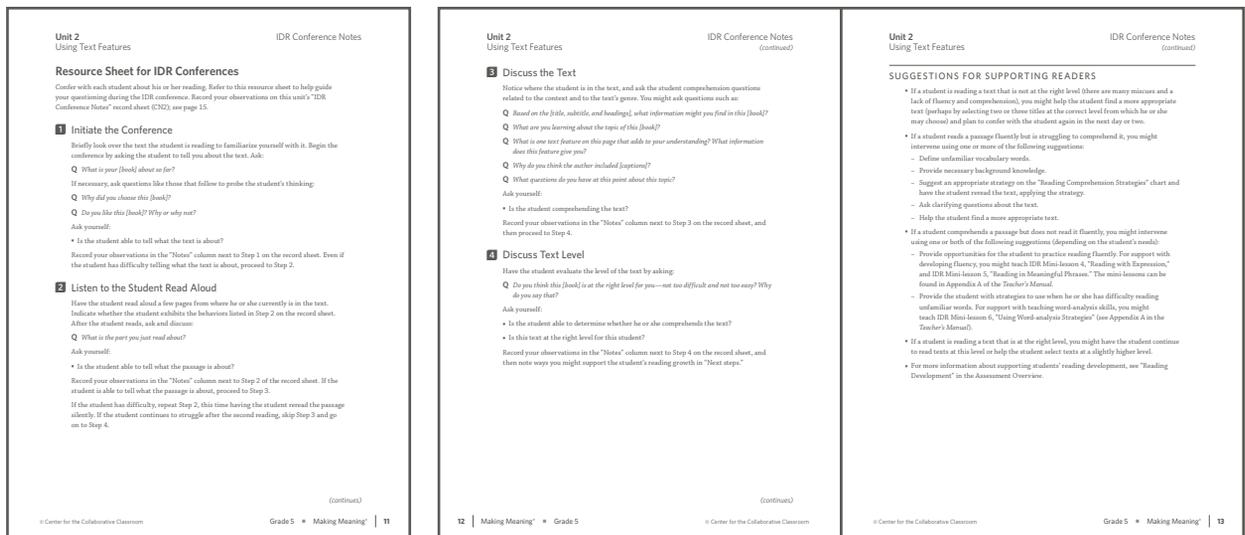

Student Reading Goals and Interests Survey

The questions provided in the first “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet can be used as a beginning-of-year survey of your students’ reading goals and interests. After you have conferred with all of your students, we recommend that you review the students’ responses to the questions and look both for patterns across the class and for individual comments that stand out to you. For example, you might note authors, book series, and genres the students are interested in reading and whether the students enjoy reading. The information you gather can help you plan instruction in the coming months.

After analyzing your students’ responses, you might share with the class what you have learned about them as readers and how you plan to help them build their love of reading over the course of the year. For ideas on how to facilitate a class discussion about the survey, see the extension “Discuss the Students’ Reading Goals and Interests” on page 70 of the Teacher’s Manual.

The questions in the final IDR Conference Note of the year can serve as an end-of-year survey of your students’ perceptions of their growth as readers, a measure of their attitudes toward reading, and a summary of their goals for summer reading. After you have conferred with your students, you might share the information from the end-of-year survey with them, compare it with the information from the beginning-of-year survey, and discuss how the students’ attitudes toward reading have changed.

Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences In Units 2–9, you will use a unit-specific “Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences” to guide you as you confer (see pages 11–13). This resource sheet outlines a process you can use when conferring with your students about their independent reading. It includes questions you can ask to help you probe the students’ thinking about what they are reading and to assess the students’ comprehension of their texts. It also includes suggestions for supporting the students’ reading growth. Each section of the resource sheet has a corresponding section in the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN), where you can record notes and observations as you confer.

SUMMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Summative assessments enable you to evaluate and measure the comprehension and social development of each student. Summative assessments include the Social Skills Assessment and the Individual Comprehension Assessment.

The Social Skills Assessment enables you to assess how well each student is learning and applying the social skills taught in the program and how well each student integrates the values of responsibility, respect, fairness, caring, and helpfulness into his or her behavior. As you teach the lessons, a Social Skills Assessment Note in the Teacher's Manual will alert you when a social skills assessment is suggested. We recommend that you do this assessment three times: at the beginning, middle, and end of the year. The "Social Skills Assessment Record" sheet (SS1) allows you to track how individual students are doing with specific skills during the course of the year (see page 156).

Individual Comprehension Assessment

The Individual Comprehension Assessment is designed to help you assess the strategy use and comprehension development of individual students. It is administered once per unit in Units 2–9. The "Individual Comprehension Assessment" record sheet (IA) consists of two sections—Part A: Strategy Assessment and Part B: IDR Assessment—and reflection questions to help guide your assessment of each student's growth.

Part A: Strategy Assessment The Strategy Assessment section helps you analyze each student's independent strategy work on four activities completed during the unit. The four activities include two student response activities (usually focusing on strategy work with a read-aloud text) and two reading journal activities (asking the students to apply the unit's strategy work to their independent reading). Teacher Notes in the Teacher's Manual identify which activities will be assessed in that unit's Individual Comprehension Assessment. Examples of a student response activity, a journal entry, and an annotated Strategy Assessment rubric are provided for each unit as models to help you score your students' work using the rubric.

Part B: IDR Assessment The IDR Assessment section helps you assess each student's comprehension using a rubric that identifies various behaviors the students exhibit when reading and thinking about texts. During the assessment, you will review the information you have collected on the student's "IDR Conference Notes" record sheets and think about the student's participation during class discussions and IDR. To complete the assessment, you will use the information to determine whether the student shows evidence of actively engaging with and making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time.

Part B: IDR Assessment

The items below assess various behaviors that students exhibit when reading and thinking about texts. A student may exhibit a particular behavior with varying degrees of consistency based on the student's reading development and the complexity of the texts he or she is reading. Analyzing the information in the rubric will help you determine whether a student is able to comprehend what he or she is reading as well as the student's attitude toward reading. The assessment will also help you to identify reading skills in which a struggling student might need additional instruction (for example, fluency practice and word-analysis strategies).

Analyzing the information in the IDR Assessment rubric will help you determine whether a student is able to comprehend what he or she is reading and will help you evaluate the student’s attitude toward reading. The assessment will also help you to identify areas in which you can focus your instruction to support the student’s reading growth (for example, fluency practice and word-analysis strategies). For information about supporting your students’ reading growth, see “Reading Development” on page xiii.

Examples of an annotated “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet and an annotated IDR Assessment rubric are provided for each unit as models to help you analyze your students’ reading comprehension using the rubric.

Reflection The reflection section of the IDR Assessment provides questions that help you reflect on the instructional support you provided to the student during the unit, the student’s ability to read and comprehend text, and what you would like to focus on during the next unit’s IDR conferences. Space is provided for recording observations and suggestions for future instruction.

The information from the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” and “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets constitutes a record of each student’s development over the unit. If you wish to use the Individual Comprehension Assessment as a basis for assigning a grade, the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet includes instructions for calculating an overall unit score. We recommend that progress in the Making Meaning program be determined by an increase in scores over time, rather than by each unit’s score. The assumption is that each student is growing into a strong reader at his or her own pace.

You can use the “Individual Comprehension Assessment Student Record” sheet (SR2) to create a cumulative record of each student’s scores on the assessment during the year. Space is provided on the record sheet for you to write comments about the student’s performance and suggestions for additional support. You can use the “Individual Comprehension Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR2) to record and track your students’ progress as a class.

To learn more about using the Individual Comprehension Assessment, view “Using the Individual Comprehension Assessment” (AV31).

Student Reading Level Summary

In addition to the Individual Comprehension Assessment, you may wish to use other informal and formal tools to assess your students’ comprehension of text (for example, running records and benchmark assessments). Regardless of which assessment tool(s) you use, it is important to monitor and record the students’ progress across the year. The “Student Reading Level Summary” record sheet (SR1) can be used to record individual students’ reading assessment data. You might wish to use the information recorded to discuss your students’ reading growth with their families, to inform your instruction, and to help support individual students in their growth as readers.

Overview of Grade 5 Assessments

The table below provides an overview of the comprehension and social skills assessments in grade 5 of the Making Meaning program. The squares indicate the units in which a particular assessment can be found.

Individual Assessment Folders

We recommend that you create a folder for each student in which to store the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” and “IDR Conference Notes” record sheets. You may also want to make copies of each student’s assessed student response activities and reading journal entries and file these in the student’s assessment folder. Periodically, you can use the materials in the folder to discuss the student’s progress with the student, as well as with parents and other adults in the school. The folders can travel to the next grade with the students.

Reading Development

Young students learn to read by being read to, by acquiring letter–sound and sight–word knowledge, and by exploring text—lots of text. They love to reread their favorite books and engage in rhyming activities, and it is through these and other activities that they begin to understand that print carries meaning. Young students read books in a variety of ways, such as by retelling familiar stories in their own words and by telling stories as they refer to the pictures. As the students’ knowledge of letter–sound correspondence develops and they grow a sight–word base, they begin to read the words on the page. With much practice, their reading starts to become more automatic. They focus less on decoding individual words and more on the meaning of the text.

The “Stages of Reading Development” chart starting on the next page shows the stages through which students commonly progress on their way to becoming independent and critical readers. Note that because reading development is a continuum, students may display behaviors from multiple stages at any given time as they encounter new and more complex texts. For each stage, the chart gives approximate Guided Reading Levels and lists behaviors students may display at each stage of development. The chart also lists ways you can support students at each stage.

Some of the characteristics identified in the chart appear at multiple stages (for example, “understands that print carries a message,” “reads with expression,” and “recognizes letters and letter–sound relationships”). This ongoing development of skills is to be expected as students begin to make connections between the spoken and written word and the many nuances of the English language.

You might use the information in the “Stages of Reading Development” chart in conjunction with the information you gather from the Individual Comprehension Assessment to discuss your students’ reading growth with their families, to inform your instruction, and to help support individual students as they become independent readers. Keep in mind that each student will progress through these stages at his or her own pace.

Stage 2

Emergent Reader

Approximate Guided Reading Levels

- A-B

Characteristics

- Relies on the pictures to gather information about a story's meaning
- Understands that print carries a message
- Understands directionality and other familiar concepts of print
- Tracks words on the page by pointing to words as he or she develops one-to-one matching
- Is developing a larger sight-word vocabulary
- Recognizes letters and attends to letter-sound relationships
- Shows familiarity with rhyming and beginning sounds

Support

- Read and reread books from a variety of genres.
- Read books that are predictable and have repetition, and encourage the student to join in with you.
- Read rhyming books.
- Point to each word as you read books aloud to the student.
- Talk about stories and pictures in the stories.
- Ask the student questions about stories before, during, and after reading.
- Reinforce concepts of print (e.g., word boundaries, directionality, and one-to-one correspondence between the written and spoken word).
- Work on phonics and phonological awareness.
- Help the student segment spoken words into individual sounds and blend the sounds into whole words.
- Expand vocabulary by talking about words.
- Provide the student with time every day to read self-selected texts independently or with peers.
- Encourage the student to write every day (independently or through dictation).
- Encourage parents or other family members to read aloud to the student every day.

Stage 3

Early Reader

Approximate Guided Reading Levels

- B-J/K

Characteristics

- May still rely on pictures to gather information about a story's meaning
- Points to words only when a problem is encountered
- Is continuing to develop his or her sight-word vocabulary
- Is beginning to notice errors and attempts to correct them
- Is beginning to use more than one strategy to problem-solve unknown words (e.g., decoding, using context clues and/or picture clues, rereading)
- Is beginning to attend to punctuation and use expression while reading familiar texts
- Is beginning to self-monitor reading (e.g., asking questions to check for understanding during reading, predicting what will happen, summarizing what was read)

Support

- Read and reread books from a variety of genres.
- Ask the student questions about stories before, during, and after reading.
- Talk about stories and pictures in the stories.
- Work on phonics and phonological awareness.
- Listen to the student read books that he or she can read successfully.
- Encourage the student to read familiar texts with expression.
- Help the student locate words that he or she knows.
- Expand vocabulary by talking about words before reading the text.
- Provide the student with time every day to read self-selected texts independently or with peers.
- Encourage the student to write every day (independently or through dictation).
- Encourage parents or other family members to read aloud to the student every day.

Stage 4	Transitional Reader
	Approximate Guided Reading Levels
	Characteristics
	Support

- J/K–M/N

Characteristics

- Relies less on pictures to gather information about a story’s meaning and more on the text
- Uses more than one strategy to problem-solve unknown words (e.g., decoding, analyzing word parts, using context clues and/or picture clues, rereading)
- Consistently notices and then self-corrects errors
- Is continuing to expand vocabulary, which allows him or her to focus more on meaning
- Attends to punctuation and reads familiar text with phrasing and expression
- Begins to engage in silent reading
- Consistently self-monitors reading (e.g., asking questions to check for understanding during reading, predicting what will happen, summarizing what was read)

Support

- Encourage the student to choose books that he or she can read successfully.
- Encourage the student to read silently for longer periods of time.
- Engage the student in conversations about what he or she has read.
- Work with the student on deciphering longer words by analyzing word parts.
- Work on developing fluency.
- Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
- Provide the student with time every day to read self-selected texts independently.
- Encourage the student to write every day.
- Encourage parents or other family members to read aloud to the student every day and engage in discussion as they read.

Stages of Reading Development (continued)

Fluent/Independent Reader

Approximate Guided Reading Levels

- M/N-V/W

Characteristics

- Selects a variety of “just-right” texts for varying purposes
- Uses multiple strategies to problem-solve unknown words quickly
- Self-corrects all significant errors quickly (e.g., using strategies such as decoding, analyzing word parts, using context clues and/or picture clues, rereading)
- Reads a variety of genres such as fiction, nonfiction, fantasy, mystery, poetry, etc.
- Reads orally with expression and at an appropriate rate
- Reads silently most of the time
- Consistently self-monitors reading (e.g., asking questions to check for understanding during reading, predicting what will happen, summarizing what was read)

Support

- Make sure the student has access to a wide variety of reading materials that he or she can read successfully and that will challenge him or her to think critically.
- Engage the student in conversation about what he or she has read.
- Ask the student questions that encourage him or her to analyze the text or generate questions about the text.
- Read the first few chapters of a book with the student; discuss characters, plot, and setting.
- Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
- Provide the student with time every day to read self-selected texts independently.
- Encourage the student to write about what he or she has read.

Stage 5

About Vocabulary Assessments

The assessments that accompany the Vocabulary Teaching Guide lessons help you evaluate your students’ knowledge of the words they are learning and track your students’ progress throughout the year. In grade 5, both formative and summative assessments are included.

FORMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Formative assessments help you reflect on your students’ vocabulary growth through class observation and support you in differentiating instruction, as necessary.

Class Vocabulary Assessment

Week 2 Vocabulary		Class Vocabulary Assessment Record = CA1
Observe the students and ask yourself:	All or most students	About half of the students	Only a few students
• Are the students able to make the correct choices when determining which word best fits the clue?

tattered
towering
• Do their explanations show that they understand the words' meanings?
• Do they enjoy learning and talking about new words?
Other observations:
Suggestions Use the following suggestions to support struggling students: • If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model. • If about half of the students are understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by inviting the students to tell or write stories in which they use the word.

The Class Vocabulary Assessment is designed to help you evaluate the performance and needs of the whole class. This assessment occurs every two weeks, beginning in Week 2, during the ongoing review activity. A Class Vocabulary Assessment Note in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide will alert you when an assessment is suggested. During the assessment, you will have the opportunity to observe the students and ask yourself questions about their understanding of the words, as well as note their use of words outside of vocabulary time and their enthusiasm for learning words. Each Class Vocabulary Assessment Note has a corresponding “Class Vocabulary Assessment Record” sheet (CA) on which you can record your observations. The record sheet includes the questions from the assessment note and provides suggestions for students who are struggling with words.

SUMMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Summative assessments enable you to evaluate and score each student’s knowledge of the words taught during the vocabulary lessons.

Individual Vocabulary Assessment

The Individual Vocabulary Assessment is designed to help you assess individual students’ knowledge of the words. This assessment occurs after weeks 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, and 30 and focuses on words taught during the previous four weeks (except for the week 30 assessment, which is a year-end assessment focusing on a range of words from across the year). An Individual Vocabulary Assessment Note in the Vocabulary Teaching Guide will alert you when the assessment is suggested.

The Individual Vocabulary Assessment is a multiple-choice assessment that uses activity formats such as “Which Word Am I?” and “I’m Thinking of a Word” that are familiar to the students from the weekly lessons.

Each assessment includes a teacher instruction sheet and an answer key. The students record their answers on the corresponding “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check” answer sheet (IA). We recommend that you discuss each item with the students after they have completed the assessment. Suggested follow-up questions that require the students to explain their thinking are provided on each instruction sheet. The instruction sheet also includes suggestions for scoring and assigning grades to the assessment.

You can use the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record” sheet (SR1) to create a cumulative record of each student’s scores on the assessment throughout the year. Space is provided on the record sheet for you to write comments about the student’s performance and suggestions for additional support. You can use the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record” (CR1) sheet to record and track your students’ progress as a class.

To learn more about using the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, view “Using the Individual Vocabulary Assessment” (AV51).

Student Self-assessment

Week 4
Vocabulary

Student Self-assessment = SAI

Which Words Do I Know?

Word	yes	maybe	no

© Center for the Collaborative Classroom Making Meaning | 171

The Student Self-assessment empowers the students to become partners in their own assessment by giving them the opportunity to evaluate their understanding of the words they are learning. The assessment can also be used to identify which words the students need to practice and review further. We recommend that the Student Self-assessment be administered in place of or in addition to the Individual Vocabulary Assessment, with the students assessing their knowledge of a set of words you select. A Student Self-assessment Note during Ongoing Review will alert you when the assessment is recommended.

The Student Self-assessment includes a “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA), on which the students record whether they know what a word means (“yes”), whether they think they know what a word means (“maybe”), or whether they do not know what a word means or cannot remember (“no”). The assessment also includes instructions for preparing and conducting the assessment, as well as suggestions for how to use the results to help students identify which words they are struggling with and to support the students in reviewing those words.

Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences

Confer with each student about his or her reading. Refer to this resource sheet to help guide your questioning during the IDR conference. Record your observations on this unit’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN2); see page 15.

1 Initiate the Conference

Briefly look over the text the student is reading to familiarize yourself with it. Begin the conference by asking the student to tell you about the text. Ask:

Q What is your [book] about so far?

If necessary, ask questions like those that follow to probe the student’s thinking:

Q Why did you choose this [book]?

Q Do you like this [book]? Why or why not?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the text is about?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 1 on the record sheet. Even if the student has difficulty telling what the text is about, proceed to Step 2.

2 Listen to the Student Read Aloud

Have the student read aloud a few pages from where he or she currently is in the text. Indicate whether the student exhibits the behaviors listed in Step 2 on the record sheet. After the student reads, ask and discuss:

Q What is the part you just read about?

TEKS 4.A.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 2

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the passage is about?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 2 of the record sheet. If the student is able to tell what the passage is about, proceed to Step 3.

If the student has difficulty, repeat Step 2, this time having the student reread the passage silently. If the student continues to struggle after the second reading, skip Step 3 and go on to Step 4.

(continues)

3 Discuss the Text

Notice where the student is in the text, and ask the student comprehension questions related to the context and to the text’s genre. You might ask questions such as:

- Q Based on the [title, subtitle, and headings], what information might you find in this [book]?
- Q What are you learning about the topic of this [book]?
- Q What is one text feature on this page that adds to your understanding? What information does this feature give you?
- Q Why do you think the author included [captions]?
- Q What questions do you have at this point about this topic?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student comprehending the text?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 3 on the record sheet, and then proceed to Step 4.

4 Discuss Text Level

Have the student evaluate the level of the text by asking:

- Q Do you think this [book] is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to determine whether he or she comprehends the text?
- Is this text at the right level for this student?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 4 on the record sheet, and then note ways you might support the student’s reading growth in “Next steps.”

(continues)

SUGGESTIONS FOR SUPPORTING READERS

- If a student is reading a text that is not at the right level (there are many miscues and a lack of fluency and comprehension), you might help the student find a more appropriate text (perhaps by selecting two or three titles at the correct level from which he or she may choose) and plan to confer with the student again in the next day or two.
- If a student reads a passage fluently but is struggling to comprehend it, you might intervene using one or more of the following suggestions:
 - Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
 - Provide necessary background knowledge.
 - Suggest an appropriate strategy on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and have the student reread the text, applying the strategy.
 - Ask clarifying questions about the text.
 - Help the student find a more appropriate text.
- If a student comprehends a passage but does not read it fluently, you might intervene using one or both of the following suggestions (depending on the student’s needs):
 - Provide opportunities for the student to practice reading fluently. For support with developing fluency, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, “Reading with Expression,” and IDR Mini-lesson 5, “Reading in Meaningful Phrases.” The mini-lessons can be found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual.
 - Provide the student with strategies to use when he or she has difficulty reading unfamiliar words. For support with teaching word-analysis skills, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 6, “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (see Appendix A in the Teacher’s Manual).
- If a student is reading a text that is at the right level, you might have the student continue to read texts at this level or help the student select texts at a slightly higher level.
- For more information about supporting students’ reading development, see “Reading Development” in the Assessment Overview.

Unit 2

Using Text Features

Student's name: _____ Date: _____

Invite each student to talk with you about his or her ideas and feelings about reading, reading habits, and reading interests. You might ask the student questions such as the following and record his or her responses:

Q Tell me about yourself as a reader. What do you like to read?

Q Tell me about your favorite books or authors. What do you like about them?

Q What do you like about the books we have read so far this year?

Q How do you feel about reading?

Q How do you feel when you are asked to read aloud?

Q What do you do best as a reader?

Q What are you interested in reading this year?

Q How do you want to grow as a reader this year?

Next steps:

Completing the Individual Comprehension Assessment

Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess the students' comprehension of texts read independently and their use of comprehension strategies. The Individual Comprehension Assessment consists of two parts. The strategy assessment (Part A) helps you assess whether a student is able to use a strategy when prompted to in a lesson. The IDR assessment (Part B) helps you assess a student's overall comprehension of self-selected texts read during IDR.

Be aware that a student may or may not use any particular strategy to make sense of his or her independent reading. The goal over time is for the students to be able to use appropriate strategies as needed to help them make sense of the texts they read independently.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from pages 22–24. If you would like to record your assessment data electronically, go to classview.org to learn how you can access the Making Meaning assessments using the CCC ClassView app.
- ✓ Collect the students' Student Response Books. In Part A of the assessment, you will review and consider the following student work:

Student response activities

- “Think, Pair, Write About Text Features” on page 3
- “My Statements About Recess in U.S. Schools” on page 12

Reading journal entries

- Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, what you learned in the part of the text you read today, one text feature you found, and what the text feature helped you learn.
 - Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, what you learned in the part of the text you read aloud today, any text features you noticed, and how the text features helped you better understand what you read.
- ✓ Locate the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN2) you completed for each student during this unit. In Part B, you will use the record sheet, along with any other observations you have made of the student during Making Meaning lessons and IDR, to assess the student's overall comprehension during IDR conferences.
 - ✓ Review Parts A and B on the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) to help you prepare to score each student's Student Response Book work and evaluate his or her reading comprehension.

(continues)

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

For each student:

1. Part A: Read the student response activities and the reading journal entries from the unit. For each piece of work, consider whether evidence of the unit’s instruction is demonstrated almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. In the Part A rubric, circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each piece of student work.
2. Part B: Review the student’s most recent “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and think about the student’s participation during class discussions and IDR. Consider whether the conference notes and your other observations show evidence that the student is actively engaging with and is making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. Circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each item in the Part B rubric.
3. Calculate the scores for Part A and Part B, add the scores together, and then divide the sum by 2 to determine the overall unit score. Note that if you follow this formula, the overall unit score will reflect the student’s average performance across categories based on this rubric’s 4-point scale. Also note that the overall unit score will be based equally on the student’s strategy work (Part A) and on the IDR assessment (Part B). You might wish to weight the scores differently, assign a percentage, or adapt the rubric scores to align with your school’s or district’s grading system.
4. Answer the reflection questions at the end of the assessment.
5. Attach the completed assessment to the student’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and file them in an individual assessment folder for the student. You might also want to include copies of the student’s work in the folder.

Reading Journal

Name: Matt Date: 9/17

I am reading the book Naturally Wild Musicians by Peter Christie. This book tells about the sounds animals make. It also tells why the animals make the sounds. The text feature I used in this book was the table of contents. I read it to find out what information is in the book. I didn't really learn anything from the table of contents because the titles were things like "Broadcasting" and "Ultrasound." Those titles did not help me understand what those chapters could be about.

Commentary: Matt's Student Response Book work and journal entries indicate that that he is able to use text features to learn information about a topic almost all of the time. He was able to glean information from the graph, writing true statements about recess in rural and city schools. While he was not able to discern information from the table of contents in the book Naturally Wild Musicians, he knew that it was a feature he could use to find out what information can be found in a book.

Commentary: Analysis of Matt’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet along with observations made during IDR and class discussions indicate that the student is able to understand text much of the time. He is attempting to use text features (table of contents, pictures, captions) to help him learn about the information in a text. He was able to give a general description of his book (it’s about sounds animals make) but was unable to provide more detail about why animals make particular sounds after reading the passage. This book was challenging for Matt due to some complex vocabulary and an inability to determine the meaning of the words from context or by analyzing word parts.

Ask yourself:	All or most students	About half of the students	Only a few students
▪ Do the students understand the text?
▪ Are they underlining sentences that address the questions?
▪ Other observations:

Suggestions:

- If all or most students are underlining passages that address the questions and show evidence that they understand the text, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Week 2.
- If about half of the students are underlining passages that address the questions and show evidence that they understand the text, continue on to Week 2 and plan to monitor the students who are having difficulty during independent reading. You might have a student read a short passage from his book aloud to you and think of a question he could ask at that point in the reading. Then have the student continue reading for a while and check in with him to see if his question was discussed.
- If only a few students are underlining passages that address the questions and show evidence that they understand the text, you might do the extension “Read About Tigers and Discuss Questions” on page 131 before continuing on to Week 2. Another option is to repeat this week’s lessons using an alternative book; visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 5 Alternative Texts” list.

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Are the students using their questions to guide their thinking about the text?
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Are they referring to the text as they discuss their questions?
Other observations:

Suggestions:

- If all or most students are using their questions to guide their thinking and referring to the text to discuss their questions, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Day 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are using their questions to guide their thinking and referring to the text to discuss their questions, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Days 1, 2, and 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 5 Alternative Texts” list.

Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences

Confer with each student about his or her reading. Refer to this resource sheet to help guide your questioning during the IDR conference. Record your observations on this unit's "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 31.

1 Initiate the Conference

Briefly look over the text the student is reading to familiarize yourself with it. Begin the conference by asking the student to tell you about the text. Ask:

Q What is your [book] about so far?

If necessary, ask questions like those that follow to probe the student's thinking:

Q Why did you choose this [book]?

Q Do you like this [book]? Why or why not?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the text is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 1 on the record sheet. Even if the student has difficulty telling what the text is about, proceed to Step 2.

2 Listen to the Student Read Aloud

Have the student read aloud a few pages from where he or she currently is in the text. Indicate whether the student exhibits the behaviors listed in Step 2 on the record sheet. After the student reads, ask and discuss:

Q What is the part you just read about?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the passage is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 2 on the record sheet. If the student is able to tell what the passage is about, proceed to Step 3.

If the student has difficulty, repeat Step 2, this time having the student reread the passage silently. If the student continues to struggle after the second reading, skip Step 3 and go on to Step 4.

3 Discuss the Text

Notice where the student is in the text and ask the student comprehension questions related to the context and to the text’s genre. You might ask questions such as:

- Q Based on the [title, subtitle, and headings], what information might you find in this book?
- Q What are you learning about the topic of this [book]?
- Q What is one text feature on this page that adds to your understanding? What information does this feature give you?
- Q What questions did you ask yourself before reading the book?
- Q What questions do you have at this point about this topic?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student comprehending the text?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 3 on the record sheet, and then proceed to Step 4.

4 Discuss Text Level

Have the student evaluate the level of the text by asking:

- Q Do you think this [book] is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to determine whether he or she comprehends the text?
- Is this text at the right level for this student?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 4 on the record sheet, and then note ways you might support the student’s reading growth in “Next steps.”

SUGGESTIONS FOR SUPPORTING READERS

- If a student is reading a text that is not at the right level (there are many miscues and a lack of fluency and comprehension), you might help the student find a more appropriate text (perhaps by selecting two or three titles at the correct level from which he or she may choose) and plan to confer with the student again in the next day or two.
- If a student reads a passage fluently but is struggling to comprehend it, you might intervene by using one or more of the following suggestions:
 - Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
 - Provide necessary background knowledge.
 - Suggest an appropriate strategy on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and have the student reread the text, applying the strategy.
 - Ask clarifying questions about the text.
 - Help the student find a more appropriate text.
- If a student comprehends a passage but does not read it fluently, you might intervene by using one or both of the following suggestions (depending on the student’s needs):
 - Provide opportunities for the student to practice reading fluently. For support with developing fluency, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, “Reading with Expression,” and IDR Mini-lesson 5, “Reading in Meaningful Phrases.” The mini-lessons can be found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual.
 - Provide the student with strategies to use when he or she has difficulty reading unfamiliar words. For support with teaching word-analysis skills, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 6, “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (see Appendix A in the Teacher’s Manual).
- If a student is reading a text that is at the right level, you might have the student continue to read texts at this level or help the student select texts at a slightly higher level.
- For more information about supporting students’ reading development, see “Reading Development” in the Assessment Overview.

Next steps:

Completing the Individual Comprehension Assessment

Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess the students' comprehension of texts read independently and their use of comprehension strategies. The Individual Comprehension Assessment consists of two parts. The strategy assessment (Part A) helps you assess whether a student is able to use a strategy when prompted to in a lesson. The IDR assessment (Part B) helps you assess a student's overall comprehension of self-selected texts read during IDR.

Be aware that a student may or may not use any particular strategy to make sense of his or her independent reading. The goal over time is for the students to be able to use appropriate strategies as needed to help them make sense of the texts they read independently.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from pages 38–40.
- ✓ Collect the students' Student Response Books. In Part A of the assessment, you will review and consider the following student work:

Student response activities

- “Excerpt from Big Cats (1)” on pages 17–18
- “Stop and Ask Questions About Big Cats” on page 19

Reading journal entries

- Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, a question you had about the topic, and what you learned about the topic.
 - Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, one question you wrote on a self-stick note, and what you found out about that question in your reading. If the reading didn't discuss your question, write about something else you learned.
- ✓ Locate the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) you completed for each student during this unit. In Part B, you will use the record sheet(s), along with any other observations you have made of the student during Making Meaning lessons and IDR, to assess the student's overall comprehension during IDR conferences.
 - ✓ Review Parts A and B on the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) to help you prepare to score each student's Student Response Book work and evaluate his or her reading comprehension.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

For each student:

1. Part A: Read the student response activities and the reading journal entries from the unit. For each piece of work, consider whether evidence of the unit’s instruction is demonstrated almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. In the Part A rubric, circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each piece of student work.
2. Part B: Review the student’s most recent “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and think about the student’s participation during class discussions and IDR. Consider whether the conference notes and your other observations show evidence that the student is actively engaging with and is making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. Circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each item in the Part B rubric.
3. Calculate the scores for Part A and Part B, add the scores together, and then divide the sum by 2 to determine the overall unit score. Note that if you follow this formula, the overall unit score will reflect the student’s average performance across categories based on this rubric’s 4-point scale. Also note that the overall unit score will be based equally on the student’s strategy work (Part A) and on the IDR assessment (Part B). You might wish to weight the scores differently, assign a percentage, or adapt the rubric scores to align with your school’s or district’s grading system.
4. Answer the reflection questions at the end of the assessment.
5. Attach the completed assessment to the student’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and file them in an individual assessment folder for the student. You might also want to include copies of the student’s work in the folder.

Reading journal entry 1

Reading Journal

Name: Victoria Date: 5/13

I am reading The Great Wall by Christopher Maynard. This book tells about the history of China and why they built the Great Wall. A question I had is why did the Chinese build the Great Wall? I learned that the Chinese used walls to protect their towns and homes for a long time. Then they used the same idea to build a wall to keep the Mongols from attacking China.

She was able to write questions that were pertinent to the reading at each stop of a text read aloud. Victoria's journal entry includes a sentence that explains what the book is about (the history of China and why they built the Great Wall). She also wrote a question she had about the text before reading it (why did the Chinese build the Great Wall?) and then explained what she learned from reading the text (*they . . . Commentary: Analysis of Victoria’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet along with observations made during IDR and class discussions indicate that she is able to understand text almost all of the time. She is using strategies such as rereading and asking herself questions when she doesn’t understand what she read (wondered what a steppe was and reread). She was able to tell about her book and answer comprehension questions about it. This book is at the right level for Victoria, but her interest is waning because the book didn’t begin by describing the Great Wall. She was encouraged to continue reading the book and asking herself questions to figure out why the historical information about China is important in understanding why the Great Wall was built.

- If about half of the students are able to use evidence from the text to make predictions and support their thinking, continue on to Day 4 and plan to monitor students who are having difficulty during independent reading. You might have a student read a short passage from his story aloud to you and then have him make a prediction about what might happen next and tell you what in the story makes him think so.
- If only a few students are able to use evidence from the text to make predictions and support their thinking, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating Day 3 of this week using an alternative book before continuing on to Day 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 5 Alternative Texts” list.

Suggestions:

- If all or most students are using their questions to talk about their independent reading, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Week 3.
- If about half of the students are using their questions to talk about their independent reading, continue on to Week 3 and plan to monitor students who are having difficulty during independent reading. You might have a student read a short passage from her story aloud to you and think of a question she could ask at that point in the reading. Then have the student continue reading for a while, and check in with her to see if her question was discussed.
- If only a few students are using their questions to talk about their independent reading, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating this week’s instruction using a familiar story or an alternative book before continuing on to Week 3. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 5 Alternative Texts” list.

Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences

Confer with each student about his or her reading. Refer to this resource sheet to help guide your questioning during the IDR conference. Record your observations on this unit’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 49.

1 Initiate the Conference

Briefly look over the text the student is reading to familiarize yourself with it. Begin the conference by asking the student to tell you about the text. Ask:

Q What is your [book] about so far?

If necessary, ask questions like those that follow to probe the student’s thinking:

Q Why did you choose this [book]?

Q Do you like this [book]? Why or why not?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the text is about?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 1 on the record sheet. Even if the student has difficulty telling what the text is about, proceed to Step 2.

2 Listen to the Student Read Aloud

Have the student read aloud a few pages from where he or she currently is in the text. Indicate whether the student exhibits the behaviors listed in Step 2 on the record sheet. After the student reads, ask and discuss:

Q What is the part you just read about?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the passage is about?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 2 on the record sheet. If the student is able to tell what the passage is about, proceed to Step 3.

If the student has difficulty, repeat Step 2, this time having the student reread the passage silently. If the student continues to struggle after the second reading, skip Step 3 and go on to Step 4.

(continues)

3 Discuss the Text

Notice where the student is in the text and ask the student comprehension questions related to the context and to the text’s genre. You might ask questions such as:

- Q Who is one of the main characters in your novel?
- Q What are you finding out about that character?
- Q What conflict or danger does that character face? How do you think the character is going to [solve that conflict/deal with that danger]?
- Q What is the plot of your novel?
- Q What is the setting of your novel? How do you know that?
- Q What have you found interesting or surprising about this novel so far?
- Q What is a question you have about the novel? How do you think that question might be answered as you keep reading?
- Q What do you think might happen next?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student comprehending the text?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 3 on the record sheet, and then proceed to Step 4.

4 Discuss Text Level

Have the student evaluate the level of the text by asking:

- Q Do you think this [book] is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to determine whether he or she comprehends the text?
- Is this text at the right level for this student?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 4 on the record sheet, and then note ways you might support the student’s reading growth in “Next steps.”

SUGGESTIONS FOR SUPPORTING READERS

- If a student is reading a text that is not at the right level (there are many miscues and a lack of fluency and comprehension), you might help the student find a more appropriate text (perhaps by selecting two or three titles at the correct level from which he or she may choose) and plan to confer with the student again in the next day or two.
- If a student reads a passage fluently but is struggling to comprehend it, you might intervene using one or more of the following suggestions:
 - Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
 - Provide necessary background knowledge.
 - Suggest an appropriate strategy on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and have the student reread the text, applying the strategy.
 - Ask clarifying questions about the text.
 - Help the student find a more appropriate text.
- If a student comprehends a passage but does not read it fluently, you might intervene using one or both of the following suggestions (depending on the student’s needs):
 - Provide opportunities for the student to practice reading fluently. For support with developing fluency, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, “Reading with Expression,” and IDR Mini-lesson 5, “Reading in Meaningful Phrases.” The mini-lessons can be found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual.
 - Provide the student with strategies to use when he or she has difficulty reading unfamiliar words. For support with teaching word-analysis skills, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 6, “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (see Appendix A in the Teacher’s Manual).
- If a student is reading a text that is at the right level, you might have the student continue to read texts at this level or help the student select texts at a slightly higher level.
- For more information about supporting students’ reading development, see “Reading Development” in the Assessment Overview.

Next steps:

Completing the Individual Comprehension Assessment

Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess the students' comprehension of texts read independently and their use of comprehension strategies. The Individual Comprehension Assessment consists of two parts. The strategy assessment (Part A) helps you assess whether a student is able to use a strategy when prompted to in a lesson. The IDR assessment (Part B) helps you assess a student's overall comprehension of self-selected texts read during IDR.

Be aware that a student may or may not use any particular strategy to make sense of his or her independent reading. The goal over time is for the students to be able to use appropriate strategies as needed to help them make sense of the texts they read independently.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from pages 56–58.
- ✓ Collect the students' Student Response Books. In Part A of the assessment, you will review and consider the following student work:

Student response activities

- “Stop and Ask Questions About Tuck Everlasting (3)” on page 24
- “Story Elements” on page 26

Reading journal entries

- Prompt: Write a journal entry about the novel you are reading. Please include the title and the author's name, what the story is about, and what you learned about a conflict or problem or a change in a character. If you didn't learn about a conflict or problem or character change, write something else you learned about a character.
 - Prompt: Write a journal entry about the novel you are reading. Please include the title and the author's name, what the story is about, and a theme you noticed in the novel. If you didn't notice a theme, write about something you learned about a character, the setting, the plot, or a conflict in the novel.
- ✓ Locate the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) you completed for each student during this unit. In Part B, you will use the record sheet(s), along with any other observations you have made of the student during Making Meaning lessons and IDR, to assess the student's overall comprehension during IDR conferences.
 - ✓ Review Parts A and B on the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) to help you prepare to score each student's Student Response Book work and evaluate his or her reading comprehension.

(continues)

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

For each student:

1. Part A: Read the student response activities and the reading journal entries from the unit. For each piece of work, consider whether evidence of the unit’s instruction is demonstrated almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. In the Part A rubric, circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each piece of student work.
2. Part B: Review the student’s most recent “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and think about the student’s participation during class discussions and IDR. Consider whether the conference notes and your other observations show evidence that the student is actively engaging with and is making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. Circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each item in the Part B rubric.
3. Calculate the scores for Part A and Part B, add the scores together, and then divide the sum by 2 to determine the overall unit score. Note that if you follow this formula, the overall unit score will reflect the student’s average performance across categories based on this rubric’s 4-point scale. Also note that the overall unit score will be based equally on the student’s strategy work (Part A) and on the IDR assessment (Part B). You might wish to weight the scores differently, assign a percentage, or adapt the rubric scores to align with your school’s or district’s grading system.
4. Answer the reflection questions at the end of the assessment.
5. Attach the completed assessment to the student’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and file them in an individual assessment folder for the student. You might also want to include copies of the student’s work in the folder.

Examples of Scored Student Work for Part A: Strategy Assessment

Student response activity: "Story Elements"

Story Elements Name: Darin

Book title: Harriet the Spy
Author: Louise Fitzhugh
Main characters: Harriet, Sport, Ole Golly, the Cook,
Janie, Rachel, Marion, Pinky
Setting: New York City

Plot: Harriet watches people and writes down everything she sees in a notebook. One day she loses her notebook and her friends find it and read it.

Problem or conflict: Harriet writes truthful but mean things in her notebook about people. When her friends read it, they get angry with her.

Climax: I think that the climax is when Harriet's notebook is taken away and she starts playing mean pranks on the kids in the Spy Catcher Club.

Theme: I think one theme in the book is that spying on people can get you into trouble.

Reading journal entry 1

Reading Journal

Name: Darin Date: 12/4

The book I am reading is Harriet the Spy by Louise Fitzhugh. It's about a girl named Harriet who keeps a secret notebook. She writes all kinds of good and bad things about everyone she knows in it. One problem that Harriet has is that her friends at school find the notebook and read it. They are really mad after reading what Harriet wrote about them. Now Harriet has to

Commentary: Darin’s Student Response Book work and journal entries indicate that he is able to use questioning to help him better understand a text almost all of the time. He was able to write about the story elements (character, setting, plot, conflict or problem, climax, and theme) in a book read independently. Darin’s journal entry includes multiple sentences that explain what the novel is about. He was also able to write about a conflict or problem that arose for the main character of his book, Harriet.

He is going back to reread parts of the text when he doesn’t understand what he read, and he asks questions about words he can’t figure out the meaning of (atomic bomb). Darin also figured out how to read an unfamiliar word (alongside) by breaking it into smaller words. He was able to tell about his book and answer comprehension questions about it. This book is at the right level for Darin. There is some challenging vocabulary in the book, but he uses word-analysis strategies and context clues to figure out the meanings of the new words he encounters.

The items below assess various behaviors that students exhibit when reading and thinking about texts. A student may exhibit a particular behavior with varying degrees of consistency based on the student’s reading development and the complexity of the texts he or she is reading. Analyzing the information in the rubric will help you determine whether a student is able to comprehend what he or she is reading as well as the student’s attitude toward reading. The assessment will also help you to identify reading skills in which a struggling student might need additional instruction (for example, fluency practice and word-analysis strategies).

3 Discuss the Text

Notice where the student is in the text and ask the student comprehension questions related to the context and to the text’s genre. You might ask questions such as:

- Q Who is one of the main characters in your [story]? What are you finding out about that character?
- Q What is the [plot/setting] of your [story]?
- Q What is a question you have about this [poem]?
- Q What did you see in your mind as you read the [poem]? What sounds did you imagine? What feelings did you imagine as part of your mental picture?
- Q What did you infer, or figure out, about [Gladys] from this part of the [story]? What clues helped you make that inference?
- Q How does the narrator (the person telling the poem or story) feel about [soccer matches]? What [lines/sentences] support your inference that [she loves soccer matches]?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student comprehending the text?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 3 on the record sheet, and then proceed to Step 4.

4 Discuss Text Level

Have the student evaluate the level of the text by asking:

- Q Do you think this [book] is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

Ask yourself:

 - Provide opportunities for the student to practice reading fluently. For support with developing fluency, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, “Reading with Expression,” and IDR Mini-lesson 5, “Reading in Meaningful Phrases.” The mini-lessons can be found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual.
 - Provide the student with strategies to use when he or she has difficulty reading unfamiliar words. For support with teaching word-analysis skills, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 6, “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (see Appendix A in the Teacher’s Manual).
- If a student is reading a text that is at the right level, you might have the student continue to read texts at this level or help the student select texts at a slightly higher level.
- For more information about supporting students’ reading development, see “Reading Development” in the Assessment Overview.

Completing the Individual Comprehension Assessment

Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess the students' comprehension of texts read independently and their use of comprehension strategies. The Individual Comprehension Assessment consists of two parts. The strategy assessment (Part A) helps you assess whether a student is able to use a strategy when prompted to in a lesson. The IDR assessment (Part B) helps you assess a student's overall comprehension of self-selected texts read during IDR.

Be aware that a student may or may not use any particular strategy to make sense of his or her independent reading. The goal over time is for the students to be able to use appropriate strategies as needed to help them make sense of the texts they read independently.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from pages 72–74.
- ✓ Collect the students' Student Response Books. In Part A of the assessment, you will review and consider the following student work:

Student response activities

- “Excerpt from The Van Gogh Cafe” on page 28
- “Double-entry Journal About ‘October Saturday’” on page 33

Reading journal entries

- Prompt: Write a journal entry about the story you are reading. Include the title and the author's name, what the story is about, one thing you know based on the part you read today, whether that is stated directly or indirectly in the text, and, if indirectly, what clue or clues helped you infer it.
 - Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, one thing you know based on the part you read today, whether that is stated directly or indirectly in the text, and, if indirectly, what clue or clues helped you infer it.
- ✓ Locate the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) you completed for each student during this unit. In Part B, you will use the record sheet(s), along with any other observations you have made of the student during Making Meaning lessons and IDR, to assess the student's overall comprehension during IDR conferences.
 - ✓ Review Parts A and B on the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) to help you prepare to score each student's Student Response Book work and evaluate his or her reading comprehension.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

For each student:

1. Part A: Read the student response activities and the reading journal entries from the unit. For each piece of work, consider whether evidence of the unit’s instruction is demonstrated almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. In the Part A rubric, circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each piece of student work.
2. Part B: Review the student’s most recent “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and think about the student’s participation during class discussions and IDR. Consider whether the conference notes and your other observations show evidence that the student is actively engaging with and is making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. Circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each item in the Part B rubric.
3. Calculate the scores for Part A and Part B, add the scores together, and then divide the sum by 2 to determine the overall unit score. Note that if you follow this formula, the overall unit score will reflect the student’s average performance across categories based on this rubric’s 4-point scale. Also note that the overall unit score will be based equally on the student’s strategy work (Part A) and on the IDR assessment (Part B). You might wish to weight the scores differently, assign a percentage, or adapt the rubric scores to align with your school’s or district’s grading system.
4. Answer the reflection questions at the end of the assessment.
5. Attach the completed assessment to the student’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and file them in an individual assessment folder for the student. You might also want to include copies of the student’s work in the folder.

	1. "millions and millions of cornflakes—crunching, crunching under our feet. When the wind blows, they rattle against each other, nervously chattering."	The wind makes the leaves rub together, and it sounds like the leaves are talking.
	2. "rubber clogs and flippers—in a box marked SUMMER."	The mom is packing away the summer clothes because summer is over.

Reading journal entry 1

Reading Journal

Name: Elisia Date: 12/17

I am reading the book Arthur, For the Very First Time by Patricia MacLachlan. So far the book is about a boy named Arthur who is sent to live with his aunt and uncle for the summer. One thing I know from the part I read today is that Arthur is excited to stay with his aunt and uncle. I think that because he is excited when his uncle asks him what he wants to talk about. The book also says that he answers his uncle happily: "Moles!" he cried happily." I also think he's excited because he doesn't get upset when his parents leave.

Commentary: Elisia's Student Response Book work and journal entries indicate that she is able to make inferences in poetry and fiction texts almost all of the time. She was able to identify a line in the poem "October Saturday" from which she made an inference. She also was able to explain the inference she made. She explained what she learned in the part of the fiction book she read (Arthur is excited to spend the summer with his aunt and uncle) and gave evidence from the text to support what she learned (he answers his uncle happily and he doesn't get upset when his parents leave).

Commentary: Analysis of Elisia’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet along with observations made during IDR and class discussions indicate that she is able to understand text almost all of the time. She is reading fluently and with expression. She asked questions when she wasn’t sure about unfamiliar words (French phrases). She was able to tell what happened in the part of the book she read aloud and to make an inference about the main character, Arthur (that he is a curious person). In addition, she gave examples from the book that support her inference (he always asks questions and he writes everything he sees and thinks in a journal). Although Elisia is enjoying the story, she would benefit from reading a more challenging text.

The items below assess various behaviors that students exhibit when reading and thinking about texts. A student may exhibit a particular behavior with varying degrees of consistency based on the student’s reading development and the complexity of the texts he or she is reading. Analyzing the information in the rubric will help you determine whether a student is able to comprehend what he or she is reading as well as the student’s attitude toward reading. The assessment will also help you to identify reading skills in which a struggling student might need additional instruction (for example, fluency practice and word-analysis strategies).

Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences

Confer with each student about his or her reading. Refer to this resource sheet to help guide your questioning during the IDR conference. Record your observations on this unit's "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 83.

1 Initiate the Conference

Briefly look over the text the student is reading to familiarize yourself with it. Begin the conference by asking the student to tell you about the text. Ask:

Q What is your [book] about so far?

If necessary, ask questions like those that follow to probe the student's thinking:

Q Why did you choose this [book]?

Q Do you like this [book]? Why or why not?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the text is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 1 on the record sheet. Even if the student has difficulty telling what the text is about, proceed to Step 2.

2 Listen to the Student Read Aloud

Have the student read aloud a few pages from where he or she currently is in the text. Indicate whether the student exhibits the behaviors listed in Step 2 on the record sheet. After the student reads, ask and discuss:

Q What is the part you just read about?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the passage is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 2 on the record sheet. If the student is able to tell what the passage is about, proceed to Step 3.

If the student has difficulty, repeat Step 2, this time having the student reread the passage silently. If the student continues to struggle after the second reading, skip Step 3 and go on to Step 4.

(continues)

3 Discuss the Text

Notice where the student is in the text and ask the student comprehension questions related to the context and to the text's genre. You might ask questions such as:

- Q Who is one of the main characters in your [story]? What are you finding out about that character?
- Q What is the [plot/setting] of your [story]?
- Q What is a question you have about this [poem]?
- Q What did you see in your mind as you read the [poem]? What sounds did you imagine? What feelings did you imagine as part of your mental picture?
- Q Why does [Nick decide to invent a new word]? What [lines/sentences] support your inference that [he does it because he gets excited about how words enter the English language]?
- Q What did you infer, or figure out, about [earthquakes] from this part of the [book]? What clues helped you make that inference?
- Q Why do you think the author says that [zoos are helping to save many animal species]? What clues support that statement?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student comprehending the text?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 3 on the record sheet, and then proceed to Step 4.

4 Discuss Text Level

Have the student evaluate the level of the text by asking:

- Q Do you think this [book] is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to determine whether he or she comprehends the text?
- Is this text at the right level for this student?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 4 on the record sheet, and then note ways you might support the student's reading growth in “Next steps.”

SUGGESTIONS FOR SUPPORTING READERS

- If a student is reading a text that is not at the right level (there are many miscues and a lack of fluency and comprehension), you might help the student find a more appropriate text (perhaps by selecting two or three titles at the correct level from which he or she may choose) and plan to confer with the student again in the next day or two.
- If a student reads a passage fluently but is struggling to comprehend it, you might intervene using one or more of the following suggestions:
 - Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
 - Provide necessary background knowledge.
 - Suggest an appropriate strategy on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and have the student reread the text, applying the strategy.
 - Ask clarifying questions about the text.
 - Help the student find a more appropriate text.
- If a student comprehends a passage but does not read it fluently, you might intervene using one or both of the following suggestions (depending on the student’s needs):
 - Provide opportunities for the student to practice reading fluently. For support with developing fluency, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, “Reading with Expression,” and IDR Mini-lesson 5, “Reading in Meaningful Phrases.” The mini-lessons can be found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual.
 - Provide the student with strategies to use when he or she has difficulty reading unfamiliar words. For support with teaching word-analysis skills, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 6, “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (see Appendix A in the Teacher’s Manual).
- If a student is reading a text that is at the right level, you might have the student continue to read texts at this level or help the student select texts at a slightly higher level.
- For more information about supporting students’ reading development, see “Reading Development” in the Assessment Overview.

Completing the Individual Comprehension Assessment

Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess the students' comprehension of texts read independently and their use of comprehension strategies. The Individual Comprehension Assessment consists of two parts. The strategy assessment (Part A) helps you assess whether a student is able to use a strategy when prompted to in a lesson. The IDR assessment (Part B) helps you assess a student's overall comprehension of self-selected texts read during IDR.

Be aware that a student may or may not use any particular strategy to make sense of his or her independent reading. The goal over time is for the students to be able to use appropriate strategies as needed to help them make sense of the texts they read independently.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from pages 90–92.
- ✓ Collect the students' Student Response Books. In Part A of the assessment, you will review and consider the following student work:

Student response activities

- “Double-entry Journal About Richard Wright and the Library Card” on page 39
- “Double-entry Journal About Global Warming” on page 43

Reading journal entries

- Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name; what the text is about; one inference you made and whether the inference is about a cause, an effect, or something else; and the clue or clues that helped you make the inference.
 - Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, one thing you know based on the part you read today, whether that is stated directly or indirectly in the text, and, if indirectly, what clue or clues helped you infer it. Also include any causes or effects you noticed.
- ✓ Locate the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) you completed for each student during this unit. In Part B, you will use the record sheet(s), along with any other observations you have made of the student during Making Meaning lessons and IDR, to assess the student's overall comprehension during IDR conferences.
 - ✓ Review Parts A and B on the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) to help you prepare to score each student's Student Response Book work and evaluate his or her reading comprehension.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

For each student:

1. Part A: Read the student response activities and the reading journal entries from the unit. For each piece of work, consider whether evidence of the unit’s instruction is demonstrated almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. In the Part A rubric, circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each piece of student work.
2. Part B: Review the student’s most recent “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and think about the student’s participation during class discussions and IDR. Consider whether the conference notes and your other observations show evidence that the student is actively engaging with and is making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. Circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each item in the Part B rubric.
3. Calculate the scores for Part A and Part B, add the scores together, and then divide the sum by 2 to determine the overall unit score. Note that if you follow this formula, the overall unit score will reflect the student’s average performance across categories based on this rubric’s 4-point scale. Also note that the overall unit score will be based equally on the student’s strategy work (Part A) and on the IDR assessment (Part B). You might wish to weight the scores differently, assign a percentage, or adapt the rubric scores to align with your school’s or district’s grading system.
4. Answer the reflection questions at the end of the assessment.
5. Attach the completed assessment to the student’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and file them in an individual assessment folder for the student. You might also want to include copies of the student’s work in the folder.

I am reading the book Souder by William H. Armstrong. It's about a family who is struggling to find food during the fall and winter when they can't make money sharecropping. One night the dad leaves the house for a long time without taking their hunting dog. The next morning there is sausage and ham to eat. This is very special for the family. While the mom cooks the ham and sausage, she hums. The book says that she hums whenever she's worried. I inferred that she is humming because she is worried about how the dad got the food. I think that he got it in a dishonest way. I think that because the family doesn't have enough money to buy the food and the dad didn't get the food from hunting.

Commentary: Tadaaki's Student Response Book work and journal entries indicate that he is able to make inferences in texts heard read aloud and texts read independently almost all of the time. He was able to identify at least one part of an excerpt where he made an inference and then write about what he inferred. In his journal entry, he wrote about an inference he made about what is causing the mother to hum (she is worried about how the father got the food) and infers that the father got the food in a dishonest way. He also includes evidence from the story that supports his inference (the family doesn't have money to buy this kind of food, and he didn't get the food from hunting).

Commentary: Analysis of Tadaaki’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet and observations made during IDR and class discussions indicate that he is able to understand text almost all of the time. He is reading fluently with accuracy and is picking books that are just right for him. The dialogue in this book includes some dialect that is unfamiliar to Tadaaki (for example, “I reckon” and “pay no mind”) but he is still able to understand the plot of the book. When discussing the book, he was able to articulate questions he had about what he had read so far in the text.

Part B: IDR Assessment

The items below assess various behaviors that students exhibit when reading and thinking about texts. A student may exhibit a particular behavior with varying degrees of consistency based on the student’s reading development and the complexity of the texts he or she is reading. Analyzing the information in the rubric will help you determine whether a student is able to comprehend what he or she is reading as well as the student’s attitude toward reading. The assessment will also help you to identify reading skills in which a struggling student might need additional instruction (for example, fluency practice and word-analysis strategies).

Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences

Confer with each student about his or her reading. Refer to this resource sheet to help guide your questioning during the IDR conference. Record your observations on this unit's "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 103.

1 Initiate the Conference

Briefly look over the text the student is reading to familiarize yourself with it. Begin the conference by asking the student to tell you about the text. Ask:

Q What is your [book] about so far?

If necessary, ask questions like those that follow to probe the student's thinking:

Q Why did you choose this [book]?

Q Do you like this [book]? Why or why not?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the text is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 1 on the record sheet. Even if the student has difficulty telling what the text is about, proceed to Step 2.

2 Listen to the Student Read Aloud

Have the student read aloud a few pages from where he or she currently is in the text. Indicate whether the student exhibits the behaviors listed in Step 2 on the record sheet. After the student reads, ask and discuss:

Q What is the part you just read about?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the passage is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 2 on the record sheet. If the student is able to tell what the passage is about, proceed to Step 3.

If the student has difficulty, repeat Step 2, this time having the student reread the passage silently. If the student continues to struggle after the second reading, skip Step 3 and go on to Step 4.

(continues)

3 Discuss the Text

Notice where the student is in the text and ask the student comprehension questions related to the context and to the text’s genre. You might ask questions such as:

- Q What have you learned about [mountain climbing] so far?
- Q What questions do you have, or what do you wonder about [Mt. Fuji/this set of instructions]?
- Q How does this [caption] help you make sense of the text?
- Q What did you visualize, or see in your mind, as you read about [the Inca Empire]? How did visualizing help you make sense of the text?
- Q What did you infer, or figure out, about [life in the colonies] from this part of the [book]? What clues helped you make that inference?
- Q Did the author of this [article] convince you that [animal testing is wrong]? Why or why not?
- Q What makes this [TV channel guide] easy to use and understand?
- Q How is this [chapter] organized to help readers learn information?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student comprehending the text?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 3 on the record sheet, and then proceed to Step 4.

4 Discuss Text Level

Have the student evaluate the level of the text by asking:

- Q Do you think this [book] is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to determine whether he or she comprehends the text?
- Is this text at the right level for this student?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 4 on the record sheet, and then note ways you might support the student’s reading growth in “Next steps.”

(continues)

SUGGESTIONS FOR SUPPORTING READERS

- If a student is reading a text that is not at the right level (there are many miscues and a lack of fluency and comprehension), you might help the student find a more appropriate text (perhaps by selecting two or three titles at the correct level from which he or she may choose) and plan to confer with the student again in the next day or two.
- If a student reads a passage fluently but is struggling to comprehend it, you might intervene using one or more of the following suggestions:
 - Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
 - Provide necessary background knowledge.
 - Suggest an appropriate strategy on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and have the student reread the text, applying the strategy.
 - Ask clarifying questions about the text.
 - Help the student find a more appropriate text.
- If a student comprehends a passage but does not read it fluently, you might intervene using one or both of the following suggestions (depending on the student’s needs):
 - Provide opportunities for the student to practice reading fluently. For support with developing fluency, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, “Reading with Expression,” and IDR Mini-lesson 5, “Reading in Meaningful Phrases.” The mini-lessons can be found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual.
 - Provide the student with strategies to use when he or she has difficulty reading unfamiliar words. For support with teaching word-analysis skills, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 6, “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (see Appendix A in the Teacher’s Manual).
- If a student is reading a text that is at the right level, you might have the student continue to read texts at this level or help the student select texts at a slightly higher level.
- For more information about supporting students’ reading development, see “Reading Development” in the Assessment Overview.

Next steps:

Completing the Individual Comprehension Assessment

Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess the students' comprehension of texts read independently and their use of comprehension strategies. The Individual Comprehension Assessment consists of two parts. The strategy assessment (Part A) helps you assess whether a student is able to use a strategy when prompted to in a lesson. The IDR assessment (Part B) helps you assess a student's overall comprehension of self-selected texts read during IDR.

Be aware that a student may or may not use any particular strategy to make sense of his or her independent reading. The goal over time is for the students to be able to use appropriate strategies as needed to help them make sense of the texts they read independently.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from pages 110–112.
- ✓ Collect the students' Student Response Books. In Part A of the assessment, you will review and consider the following student work:

Student response activities

- “Do Kids Really Need Cell Phones?” on pages 52–53
- “Double-entry Journal About Survival and Loss” on page 70

Reading journal entries

- Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the kind of text you are reading (functional or expository nonfiction), what the text is about or the purpose of the text, and what you notice about how the text is organized or how text features are used to help readers learn information.
 - Prompt: Write a journal entry about the section you are reading. Include the title of the section and what the part you read today is about. Also include whether you notice a sequence of events and, if so, the time frame in which the sequence of events is happening; whether you notice a cause/effect relationship and, if so, what is the cause and is what the effect; or whether you notice a compare/contrast relationship and, if so, what is being compared.
- ✓ Locate the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) you completed for each student during this unit. In Part B, you will use the record sheet(s), along with any other observations you have made of the student during Making Meaning lessons and IDR, to assess the student's overall comprehension during IDR conferences.
 - ✓ Review Parts A and B on the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) to help you prepare to score each student's Student Response Book work and evaluate his or her reading comprehension.

(continues)

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

For each student:

1. Part A: Read the student response activities and the reading journal entries from the unit. For each piece of work, consider whether evidence of the unit’s instruction is demonstrated almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. In the Part A rubric, circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each piece of student work.
2. Part B: Review the student’s most recent “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and think about the student’s participation during class discussions and IDR. Consider whether the conference notes and your other observations show evidence that the student is actively engaging with and is making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. Circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each item in the Part B rubric.
3. Calculate the scores for Part A and Part B, add the scores together, and then divide the sum by 2 to determine the overall unit score. Note that if you follow this formula, the overall unit score will reflect the student’s average performance across categories based on this rubric’s 4-point scale. Also note that the overall unit score will be based equally on the student’s strategy work (Part A) and on the IDR assessment (Part B). You might wish to weight the scores differently, assign a percentage, or adapt the rubric scores to align with your school’s or district’s grading system.
4. Answer the reflection questions at the end of the assessment.
5. Attach the completed assessment to the student’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and file them in an individual assessment folder for the student. You might also want to include copies of the student’s work in the folder.

The scientists are called “Wildlife Detectives.” The book is organized into chapters, and each chapter has something called a “Wild File.” The Wild File gives more information about lots of different topics like how species become endangered and what happens when evidence is taken to the evidence crime lab.

Commentary: Analysis of Natalie’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet and observations made during IDR and class discussions indicate that she comprehends text almost all of the time. She read ahead in her text to try to make sense of an unfamiliar word (bugling) and found out that bugling is the sound that an elk makes. She uses text features such as photographs and captions to better understand the text, but she is not identifying the cause/effect relationships in the text. She is able to explain what the text is about (“a group of people in Oregon who try to find people who commit crimes against animals”), but she did not mention that it is mostly about a specific case in Yellowstone National Park. She was able to explain what she learned from the section of the text she read aloud (“an elk named Charger that was killed in Yellowstone National Park”). This book is at an appropriate level for Natalie. She should think about where the author uses text structures (sequence, compare/contrast, cause/effect) to give more information about the topic.

Part B: IDR Assessment

The items below assess various behaviors that students exhibit when reading and thinking about texts. A student may exhibit a particular behavior with varying degrees of consistency based on the student’s reading development and the complexity of the texts he or she is reading. Analyzing the information in the rubric will help you determine whether a student is able to comprehend what he or she is reading as well as the student’s attitude toward reading. The assessment will also help you to identify reading skills in which a struggling student might need additional instruction (for example, fluency practice and word-analysis strategies).

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Are they able to identify supporting details?
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Is there evidence that they can distinguish between important ideas and supporting details in the excerpt?
Other observations:

Suggestions:

- If all or most students are able to identify and distinguish between important ideas and supporting details, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Week 2.
- If about half of the students are able to identify and distinguish between important ideas and supporting details, continue on to Week 2 and plan to closely observe students who are having difficulty identifying and distinguishing between the two. Many students will need repeated experiences to learn this complex skill.
- If only a few students are able to identify and distinguish between important ideas and supporting details, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating this week’s lessons using an alternative book before continuing on to Week 2. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 5 Alternative Texts” list.

- If about half of the students or only a few students are identifying important ideas and referring to the text to support their thinking, continue on to the guided summarizing lesson on Day 4, but plan to model writing the entire summary with the class. Then plan to give the class additional instruction by repeating this week’s lessons using an alternative book before continuing on to Week 3. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (teach.devstu.org) to view the “Grade 5 Alternative Texts” list.

Determining Important Ideas and Summarizing

Ask yourself:	All or most students	About half of the students	Only a few students
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Are the students able to identify important ideas in each section?
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Can they summarize the information in a few sentences?
Other observations:

Suggestions:

- If all or most students are able to identify important ideas in each section and summarize the information in a few sentences, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Week 4.
- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to identify important ideas in each section and summarize the information in a few sentences, bring the class together and summarize the remaining sections of the excerpt together, as you did in Steps 2 and 3 of today’s lesson. Then plan to repeat the week using an alternative book before continuing on to Week 4. Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to view the “Grade 5 Alternative Texts” list.

Ask yourself:	All or most students	About half of the students	Only a few students
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Do the students' summaries successfully communicate what their texts are about?
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Is there evidence in the partners' feedback that they understand something about the texts being summarized?
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Are the students revising or adding to their summaries based on the feedback?
Other observations:

Suggestions:

- If all or most students are writing summaries that successfully communicate what their texts are about, proceed with the lesson and continue on to Unit 9.
- If about half of the students are writing summaries that successfully communicate what their texts are about, collect the unsuccessful summaries, read them, and give feedback to the students. Have the students write second drafts based on your feedback. Then continue on to Unit 9.
- If only a few students are writing summaries that successfully communicate what their texts are about, do the extension "Analyze the Students' Summaries" on page 563 of the Teacher's Manual. If you have already done the extension once with the students' summaries of "Mrs. Buell," do it again using photocopies of the students' summaries from Week 4. Make sure to copy their summaries without their names. After analyzing the summaries in the extension activity, have the students select another short text to summarize, and give the class additional instruction by repeating this week's lessons before continuing on to Unit 9.

Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences

Confer with each student about his or her reading. Refer to this resource sheet to help guide your questioning during the IDR conference. Record your observations on this unit's "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 121.

1 Initiate the Conference

Briefly look over the text the student is reading to familiarize yourself with it. Begin the conference by asking the student to tell you about the text. Ask:

Q What is your [book] about so far?

If necessary, ask questions like those that follow to probe the student's thinking:

Q Why did you choose this [book]?

Q Do you like this [book]? Why or why not?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the text is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 1 on the record sheet. Even if the student has difficulty telling what the text is about, proceed to Step 2.

2 Listen to the Student Read Aloud

Have the student read aloud a few pages from where he or she currently is in the text. Indicate whether the student exhibits the behaviors listed in Step 2 on the record sheet. After the student reads, ask and discuss:

Q What is the part you just read about?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the passage is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 2 on the record sheet. If the student is able to tell what the passage is about, proceed to Step 3.

If the student has difficulty, repeat Step 2, this time having the student reread the passage silently. If the student continues to struggle after the second reading, skip Step 3 and go on to Step 4.

(continues)

3 Discuss the Text

Notice where the student is in the text and ask the student comprehension questions related to the context and to the text’s genre. You might ask questions such as:

- Q What have you learned about [the Japanese internment camps] so far?
- Q What questions do you have, or what do you wonder about [the history of hip-hop]?
- Q How does this [caption] help you make sense of the text?
- Q What did you visualize, or see in your mind, as you read about [life in the desert]? How did visualizing help you make sense of the text?
- Q What did you infer, or figure out, about [Eleanor Roosevelt] from this part of the [book]? What clues helped you make that inference?
- Q How is this [chapter] organized to help readers learn information?
- Q What is an important idea in this part of the story? Why do you think that information is important?
- Q What is a supporting detail in this part of the story? What important idea does it support, or give more information about?
- Q If you were to tell someone in a few sentences what this [story] is about, what would you say?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student comprehending the text?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 3 on the record sheet, and then proceed to Step 4.

4 Discuss Text Level

Have the student evaluate the level of the text by asking:

- Q Do you think this [book] is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to determine whether he or she comprehends the text?
- Is this text at the right level for this student?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 4 on the record sheet, and then note ways you might support the student’s reading growth in “Next steps.”

SUGGESTIONS FOR SUPPORTING READERS

- If a student is reading a text that is not at the right level (there are many miscues and a lack of fluency and comprehension), you might help the student find a more appropriate text (perhaps by selecting two or three titles at the correct level from which he or she may choose) and plan to confer with the student again in the next day or two.
- If a student reads a passage fluently but is struggling to comprehend it, you might intervene using one or more of the following suggestions:
 - Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
 - Provide necessary background knowledge.
 - Suggest an appropriate strategy on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and have the student reread the text, applying the strategy.
 - Ask clarifying questions about the text.
 - Help the student find a more appropriate text.
- If a student comprehends a passage but does not read it fluently, you might intervene using one or both of the following suggestions (depending on the student’s needs):
 - Provide opportunities for the student to practice reading fluently. For support with developing fluency, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, “Reading with Expression,” and IDR Mini-lesson 5, “Reading in Meaningful Phrases.” The mini-lessons can be found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual.
 - Provide the student with strategies to use when he or she has difficulty reading unfamiliar words. For support with teaching word-analysis skills, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 6, “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (see Appendix A in the Teacher’s Manual).
- If a student is reading a text that is at the right level, you might have the student continue to read texts at this level or help the student select texts at a slightly higher level.
- For more information about supporting students’ reading development, see “Reading Development” in the Assessment Overview.

NOTES

Next steps:

Completing the Individual Comprehension Assessment

Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess the students' comprehension of texts read independently and their use of comprehension strategies. The Individual Comprehension Assessment consists of two parts. The strategy assessment (Part A) helps you assess whether a student is able to use a strategy when prompted to in a lesson. The IDR assessment (Part B) helps you assess a student's overall comprehension of self-selected texts read during IDR.

Be aware that a student may or may not use any particular strategy to make sense of his or her independent reading. The goal over time is for the students to be able to use appropriate strategies as needed to help them make sense of the texts they read independently.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from pages 128–130.
- ✓ Collect the students' Student Response Books. In Part A of the assessment, you will review and consider the following student work:

Student response activities

- “Mrs. Buell” (Section 6) on page 81
- “Summary of _____” on page 82

Reading journal entries

- Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, an important idea you marked in your reading and why you think it is important, and a supporting detail you marked and why you think it is a supporting detail.
 - Prompt: Write a journal entry about the text you are reading. Include the title and the author's name and a summary of the part of the text you read today.
- ✓ Locate the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) you completed for each student during this unit. In Part B, you will use the record sheet(s), along with any other observations you have made of the student during Making Meaning lessons and IDR, to assess the student's overall comprehension during IDR conferences.
 - ✓ Review Parts A and B on the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) to help you prepare to score each student's Student Response Book work and evaluate his or her reading comprehension.

(continues)

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

For each student:

1. Part A: Read the student response activities and the reading journal entries from the unit. For each piece of work, consider whether evidence of the unit’s instruction is demonstrated almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. In the Part A rubric, circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each piece of student work.
2. Part B: Review the student’s most recent “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and think about the student’s participation during class discussions and IDR. Consider whether the conference notes and your other observations show evidence that the student is actively engaging with and is making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. Circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each item in the Part B rubric.
3. Calculate the scores for Part A and Part B, add the scores together, and then divide the sum by 2 to determine the overall unit score. Note that if you follow this formula, the overall unit score will reflect the student’s average performance across categories based on this rubric’s 4-point scale. Also note that the overall unit score will be based equally on the student’s strategy work (Part A) and on the IDR assessment (Part B). You might wish to weight the scores differently, assign a percentage, or adapt the rubric scores to align with your school’s or district’s grading system.
4. Answer the reflection questions at the end of the assessment.
5. Attach the completed assessment to the student’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and file them in an individual assessment folder for the student. You might also want to include copies of the student’s work in the folder.

Examples of Scored Student Work for Part A: Strategy Assessment

Student response activity: "Summary of _____"

Summary of _____ Name: Gavin
"Save the Polar Bear—Today Especially"

The article "Save the Polar Bear—Today Especially" by Bryan Walsh tells about scientists' concerns about the polar bear population in the Arctic. Because the sea ice is melting, the polar bears have to swim farther and longer to reach their prey. It is hard to know for sure how many polar bears are alive in the wild because it is hard to find and count them. Some scientists are counting polar bears using satellite images from space.

The numbers of some groups of polar bears are increasing. There is evidence that polar bears are changing what they eat. Instead of eating seals, they are eating snow geese, caribou, and berries. Still, the total number of polar bears is decreasing.

Polar bears are not the only animals in danger due to global warming. Many reptiles and amphibians could also be at risk of becoming extinct. People are working hard to help save polar bears.

Reading Journal

Name: Gavin Date: 4/1

The book I am reading is The Devil's Arithmetic by Jane Yolen. It's about a girl named Hannah who goes to her relatives' house for Seder dinner. She doesn't like going. An important idea I marked is when Hannah's mother says that Passover is about remembering and Hannah says that she is tired of remembering. I think it's important because it explains Hannah's religion and why Hannah doesn't want to go to Seder dinner.

I think a supporting detail is when the author says, "Hannah rolled her eyes up and slipped farther down in the seat." I think that this detail gives more information about Hannah. When she rolls her eyes, it shows that she doesn't want to hear the stories about her family's past again.

Commentary: Gavin's Student Response Book work and journal entries indicate that he is able to identify important ideas and supporting details and to summarize texts he hears read aloud and texts he reads independently. He was able to find an article he was interested in reading, identify the important ideas in the article, and use the important ideas to write a cohesive summary about the article. He was also able to identify an important idea in a book read independently (Hannah is tired of hearing stories about her family's past) and a supporting detail that provided more information about that idea ("Hannah rolled her eyes up and slipped farther down in the seat").

Commentary: Analysis of Gavin's "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet, along with observations made during IDR and class discussions, indicates that he comprehends text almost all of the time. He read ahead in the text to try to make sense of an unfamiliar word (yarmulke) and determined that it must be a kind of hat. He is able to explain what the text is about (a girl named Hannah who has to go to her father's parents' house for Seder dinner and doesn't want to go). He was able to infer what he learned about the character Hannah in the part he read aloud (Hannah prefers being around her other set of grandparents) and provided evidence from the text to support his thinking ("She calls her other grandpa 'sweet, gentle, silly Grandpa Dan' "). This book is at an appropriate level for Gavin and is also challenging due to the content. He would benefit from learning some background information about the Holocaust and WWII to help his understanding of the story.

- If about half of the students or only a few students are able to communicate about their books and support their recommendations with examples from the text, you might give the class additional instruction by repeating this week’s lessons before continuing on to Unit 10. You might model writing a review using another book the students are familiar with. Additionally, you might want to collect the students’ book reviews, give feedback on them, and have the students write second drafts based on your feedback.

Resource Sheet for IDR Conferences

Confer with each student about his or her reading. Refer to this resource sheet to help guide your questioning during the IDR conference. Record your observations on this unit's "IDR Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 139.

1 Initiate the Conference

Briefly look over the text the student is reading to familiarize yourself with it. Begin the conference by asking the student to tell you about the text. Ask:

Q What is your [book] about so far?

If necessary, ask questions like those that follow to probe the student's thinking:

Q Why did you choose this [book]?

Q Do you like this [book]? Why or why not?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the text is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 1 on the record sheet. Even if the student has difficulty telling what the text is about, proceed to Step 2.

2 Listen to the Student Read Aloud

Have the student read aloud a few pages from where he or she currently is in the text. Indicate whether the student exhibits the behaviors listed in Step 2 on the record sheet. After the student reads, ask and discuss:

Q What is the part you just read about?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to tell what the passage is about?

Record your observations in the "Notes" column next to Step 2 on the record sheet. If the student is able to tell what the passage is about, proceed to Step 3.

If the student has difficulty, repeat Step 2, this time having the student reread the passage silently. If the student continues to struggle after the second reading, skip Step 3 and go on to Step 4.

(continues)

3 Discuss the Text

Notice where the student is in the text and ask the student comprehension questions related to the context and to the text’s genre. You might ask questions such as:

- Q What have you learned about [the Japanese internment camps] so far?
- Q What questions do you have, or what do you wonder, about [the history of hip-hop]?
- Q How does this [caption] help you make sense of the text?
- Q What did you visualize, or see in your mind, as you read about [life in the desert]? How did visualizing help you make sense of the text?
- Q What did you infer, or figure out, about [Eleanor Roosevelt] from this part of the [book]? What clues helped you make that inference?
- Q How is this [chapter] organized to help readers learn information?
- Q If you were to tell someone in a few sentences what this [story] is about, what would you say?
- Q What is your opinion about the [essay]? What evidence in the [essay] supports your opinion?
- Q Would you recommend this [book] to someone else? Why?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student comprehending the text?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 3 on the record sheet, and then proceed to Step 4.

4 Discuss Text Level

Have the student evaluate the level of the text by asking:

- Q Do you think this [book] is at the right level for you—not too difficult and not too easy? Why do you say that?

Ask yourself:

- Is the student able to determine whether he or she comprehends the text?
- Is this text at the right level for this student?

Record your observations in the “Notes” column next to Step 4 on the record sheet, and then note ways you might support the student’s reading growth in “Next steps.”

SUGGESTIONS FOR SUPPORTING READERS

- If a student is reading a text that is not at the right level (there are many miscues and a lack of fluency and comprehension), you might help the student find a more appropriate text (perhaps by selecting two or three titles at the correct level from which he or she may choose) and plan to confer with the student again in the next day or two.
- If a student reads a passage fluently but is struggling to comprehend it, you might intervene using one or more of the following suggestions:
 - Define unfamiliar vocabulary words.
 - Provide necessary background knowledge.
 - Suggest an appropriate strategy on the “Reading Comprehension Strategies” chart and have the student reread the text, applying the strategy.
 - Ask clarifying questions about the text.
 - Help the student find a more appropriate text.
- If a student comprehends a passage but does not read it fluently, you might intervene using one or both of the following suggestions (depending on the student’s needs):
 - Provide opportunities for the student to practice reading fluently. For support with developing fluency, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 4, “Reading with Expression,” and IDR Mini-lesson 5, “Reading in Meaningful Phrases.” The mini-lessons can be found in Appendix A of the Teacher’s Manual.
 - Provide the student with strategies to use when he or she has difficulty reading unfamiliar words. For support with teaching word-analysis skills, you might teach IDR Mini-lesson 6, “Using Word-analysis Strategies” (see Appendix A in the Teacher’s Manual).
- If a student is reading a text that is at the right level, you might have the student continue to read texts at this level or help the student select texts at a slightly higher level.
- For more information about supporting students’ reading development, see “Reading Development” in the Assessment Overview.

NOTES

Next steps:

Completing the Individual Comprehension Assessment

Before continuing on to the next unit, take this opportunity to assess the students' comprehension of texts read independently and their use of comprehension strategies. The Individual Comprehension Assessment consists of two parts. The strategy assessment (Part A) helps you assess whether a student is able to use a strategy when prompted to in a lesson. The IDR assessment (Part B) helps you assess a student's overall comprehension of self-selected texts read during IDR.

Be aware that a student may or may not use any particular strategy to make sense of his or her independent reading. The goal over time is for the students to be able to use appropriate strategies as needed to help them make sense of the texts they read independently.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from pages 146–148.
- ✓ Collect the students' Student Response Books. In Part A of the assessment, you will review and consider the following student work:

Student response activities

- “Double-entry Journal: My Opinions About _____ (2)” on page 100
- “Review of _____” on page 104

Reading journal entries

- Prompt: Write a journal entry. Please include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, your opinion of the text based on what you have read so far, and evidence from the text that supports your opinion.
 - Prompt: Write a journal entry. Please include the title and the author's name, what the text is about, a summary of the important ideas in the part you read today, your opinion of the text based on what you have read so far, and evidence from the text that supports your opinion.
- ✓ Locate the “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) you completed for each student during this unit. In Part B, you will use the record sheet(s), along with any other observations you have made of the student during Making Meaning lessons and IDR, to assess the student's overall comprehension during IDR conferences.
 - ✓ Review Parts A and B on the “Individual Comprehension Assessment” record sheet (IA1) to help you prepare to score each student's Student Response Book work and evaluate his or her reading comprehension.

(continues)

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

For each student:

1. Part A: Read the student response activities and the reading journal entries from the unit. For each piece of work, consider whether evidence of the unit’s instruction is demonstrated almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. In the Part A rubric, circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each piece of student work.
2. Part B: Review the student’s most recent “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and think about the student’s participation during class discussions and IDR. Consider whether the conference notes and your other observations show evidence that the student is actively engaging with and is making sense of text almost all of the time, much of the time, some of the time, or almost none of the time. Circle 4, 3, 2, or 1 to indicate your assessment of each item in the Part B rubric.
3. Calculate the scores for Part A and Part B, add the scores together, and then divide the sum by 2 to determine the overall unit score. Note that if you follow this formula, the overall unit score will reflect the student’s average performance across categories based on this rubric’s 4-point scale. Also note that the overall unit score will be based equally on the student’s strategy work (Part A) and on the IDR assessment (Part B). You might wish to weight the scores differently, assign a percentage, or adapt the rubric scores to align with your school’s or district’s grading system.
4. Answer the reflection questions at the end of the assessment.
5. Attach the completed assessment to the student’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet(s) and file them in an individual assessment folder for the student. You might also want to include copies of the student’s work in the folder.

Reading Journal

Name: Sophie Date: 5/15

The book I am reading is Women's Right to Vote by Elaine Landau. This book is about a woman named Elizabeth Cady Stanton who helped start the women's rights movement. I think that Elizabeth Cady Stanton was brave to stand up for women's rights. The reason I think she is brave is because she didn't take the ninth resolution off of her list of eighteen injustices she thought women lived with. The ninth resolution said that women should be able to vote. Her husband and her friends thought she should take it off the list, but "she refused to budge" even though she knew a lot of people would be against it.

Commentary: Sophie's Student Response Book work and journal entries indicate that she is able to express her opinions about texts read independently and provide evidence from the text to support her opinions. When reading a fiction story, she recorded three opinions she had about the story as she read (the author uses words that make the story interesting to read, the story is suspenseful, and the author is trying to give the reader a message). She provided evidence from the text to support each opinion. When reading an expository nonfiction book, she was also able to express an opinion, this time about a person in the book, Elizabeth Stanton (Elizabeth Cady Stanton was brave to stand up for women's rights). Again, Sophie provided evidence from the text to support her opinion (Her husband and her friends thought she should take it [the ninth resolution] off the list, but 'she refused to budge' even though she knew a lot of people would be against it).

Commentary: Analysis of Sophie’s “IDR Conference Notes” record sheet and observations made during IDR and class discussions indicate that she comprehends text almost all of the time. She was able to explain what the text is about so far (“how Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lucretia Mott, and Susan B. Anthony worked hard to start and then spread the women’s rights movement across the country”). Sophie relied heavily on the text features in the book to help her better understand the topic. When she realized that she didn’t understand the meaning of a word, she stopped and noticed that the word was in bold type. She found the word in the glossary (petition) and read the definition. She also referred to the pictures and read the captions as she read each page. She summarized the part of the book that she read aloud, highlighting the important ideas from the text. This book is at an appropriate level for Sophie. She might be interested in reading more books from the series.

Part B: IDR Assessment

The items below assess various behaviors that students exhibit when reading and thinking about texts. A student may exhibit a particular behavior with varying degrees of consistency based on the student’s reading development and the complexity of the texts he or she is reading. Analyzing the information in the rubric will help you determine whether a student is able to comprehend what he or she is reading as well as the student’s attitude toward reading. The assessment will also help you to identify reading skills in which a struggling student might need additional instruction (for example, fluency practice and word-analysis strategies).

Invite each student to talk with you about his or her ideas and feelings about reading, reading habits, and reading interests. You might ask the student questions such as the following and record his or her responses:

Q What do you like to read?

Q Tell me about your favorite books or authors. What do you like about them?

Q What did you like best about the books we read this year?

Q How do you feel about reading?

Q How do you feel when you are asked to read aloud?

Q What do you do best as a reader?

Q What are you interested in reading this summer?

Q How do you think you have grown as a reader this year?

Assessing Student Reading Level

Assessing individual students' reading levels throughout the year is critical for providing students with appropriate texts for independent reading and for grouping students for small-group instruction. The "Student Reading Level Summary" record sheet can be used to record individual students' reading assessment data that you have obtained using informal or formal assessments of your choice.

USING THE STUDENT READING LEVEL SUMMARY

- ✓ Make a class set of "Student Reading Level Summary" record sheets (SR1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 155. If you would like to record your assessment data electronically, go to classview.org to learn how you can access the record sheet using the CCC ClassView app.
- ✓ Collect any reading assessment data that you have obtained for each student (e.g., observation notes, running records, or record sheets from formal assessments).
- ✓ For each student, record the data you have collected about his or her reading behavior in the appropriate boxes on the "Student Reading Level Summary" record sheet (SR1). We recommend entering the data in whatever way will be most helpful to you when analyzing the student's progress and instructional needs. In the "Comments" sections, you might enter notes about the text used for each assessment (e.g., whether it is fiction or nonfiction, how many lines of text are on a page, or how much support is provided by the illustrations), observations about the student's reading behavior, and notes about future instruction for the student.
- ✓ If you choose to enter this data directly into the CCC ClassView app, the information will appear in each student's Student Profile. From there, the data can be shared digitally with parents, colleagues, and administrators.

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students are understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by inviting the students to tell or write stories in which they use the word.

Suggestions

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word’s meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word’s meaning, provide further practice by having each student create a picture card of the word with a definition in his or her own words on the back of the card. Explain that the picture card should illustrate what the word means. You might model the process by drawing a picture that illustrates the meaning of one of this week’s review words.

Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 1

Before continuing with the week 5 lesson, use the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 1 to assess each student’s understanding of words taught in Weeks 1–4.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 1” answer sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 168. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.
- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record” sheets (SR1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 236. Use this sheet to record each student’s scores from Word Check 1–8 over the course of the year.
- ✓ Make a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 237. Use this sheet to record the scores of all of the students in the class across the year.
- ✓ If the students are not familiar with the assessment’s multiple-choice format, you might make a copy of the answer sheet (IA1) and display it where everyone can see it. While conducting the assessment, you might point to each vocabulary word as you pronounce it. You might discuss the first few clues as a class and model circling the answers. This copy of the answer sheet is also useful for discussing the activity after the students have completed it.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 1” answer sheet (IA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students they will think more about the words they have been learning by playing the game “Which Word Am I?” Explain that you will give a clue about one of the words and the students will circle the word that fits the clue.
3. Explain that the first clue is about one of these words, which are written next to the number 1 on the answer sheet: cuisine, pandemonium, or moocher.
4. Read clue number 1 aloud twice. (See “Which Word Am I?” on page 167.)
5. Have the students circle the word that fits the clue.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining clues.

DISCUSSING AND SCORING THE ASSESSMENT

1. To fully assess the students' understanding of the words, it is important to discuss the activity with them after they have completed it. Discuss each question with the class or with individual students. Have them explain the thinking behind their responses by asking questions such as:
 - Q Why did you say the word [pandemonium] is what you might see when a fire breaks out in an apartment building?
 - Q What do you know about the word [cuisine/moocher]?
2. Collect the answer sheet (IA1) from each student. If you wish to score the assessment, we suggest you award one point for each correct answer for a possible total score of 8 points for each word check. You might then assign a letter grade based on a scale or rubric you develop or by percentage correct.
3. Record each student's individual score on the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record" sheet (SR1) in the "Word Check 1" section. You might also record any comments on that student's performance, such as noting words that seem challenging for the student, and noting, if necessary, any suggestions for providing additional support.
4. If you wish to track your students' progress, as a class, for Word Checks 1–8, you might add each student's scores to the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record" sheet (CR1).

Which Word Am I?

1. I'm what you might see when a fire breaks out in an apartment building.
Q Which word am I: memento, pandemonium, or moocher? (pandemonium)
2. I'm what you do when you go for a long bike ride to get rid of built-up anger.
Q Which word am I: lurk, clamor, or "blow off steam"? ("blow off steam")
3. I might include foods like fresh fish, fruits, and rice.
Q Which word am I: cuisine, stamina, or surge? (cuisine)
4. I'm how a poster might look if it has been hanging on an outside wall for months.
Q Which word am I: tattered, towering, or delectable? (tattered)
5. I'm what you need in order to work all day under a hot sun.
Q Which word am I: surge, stamina, or restriction? (stamina)
6. I'm how you describe a business that has offices in many different countries.
Q Which word am I: international, dim, or dissatisfied? (international)
7. I'm what you do when your best friend is upset about losing his favorite jacket.
Q Which word am I: clamber, reassure, or pollute? (reassure)
8. I'm how you describe a host who is happy to offer you foods that will nourish you.
Q Which word am I: lush, dissatisfied, or hospitable? (hospitable)

Name: _____ Date: _____

Word Check 1: Which Word Am I?

Listen to the clue. Then circle the word that fits the clue.

1.	memento	pandemonium	moocher
2.	lurk	clamor	“blow off steam”
3.	cuisine	stamina	surge
4.	tattered	towering	delectable
5.	surge	stamina	restriction
6.	international	dim	dissatisfied
7.	clamber	reassure	pollute
8.	lush	dissatisfied	hospitable

Completing the Student Self-assessment

Before continuing with the week 5 lesson, use the Student Self-assessment to give the students an opportunity to reflect on how well they know the words they are learning, and to give you the chance to identify words in need of further review and practice.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Identify the words to be assessed. We recommend that you select eight words from the previous four weeks of vocabulary instruction (except for the week 30 assessment, which is a year-end assessment focusing on a range of words from across the year). We suggest that you choose at least one word from each week and include words that were challenging for the students to learn, as well as words that were especially interesting or fun for the students to use and discuss.
- ✓ Make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 171. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students that today they will have an opportunity to think about how well they know the words they have been learning. Point to the list of words you have chosen and explain that these are some vocabulary words they have talked about in the past several weeks. Explain that you will read each word aloud and give the students a few moments to think about the word. Then they will put a check mark in the column that tells how well they know the word.
3. Explain that if they are sure they know what the word means, they will put a check mark in the “yes” column, meaning “Yes, I know this word!” If they think they know what the word means but are not sure, they will put a check mark in the “maybe” column, meaning “Maybe I know this word. I’m not sure.” If they do not know what the word means or cannot remember, they will put a check mark in the “no” column, meaning “No, I don’t know this word.”
4. Tell the students that the purpose of the activity is to help them figure out which words they know well and which words they need to review and practice. Explain that it is fine if the students are not sure about a word or do not know what it means.
5. Point to the first word you have chosen, read it aloud, and give the students a few moments to think about the word. Then have them put a check mark in the column that describes how well they know the word.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining words.

USING THE ASSESSMENT RESULTS

Here are some suggestions for ways you might use the results of the assessment:

- Ask the students to circle any words they are not sure they know or do not know on their own response sheets. Then have them discuss with their partners what they might do to review and practice those words. If the students have difficulty thinking of ideas, suggest a few of your own. For example, the students might use printable word cards to review the words by themselves or with partners, or they might take the word cards home and practice the words with family members. The students might also write stories using the words, draw pictures about the words, or act out the words with their partners.
- Briefly review the meaning of each word by having the students tell what they know about the word. If several students are not sure or do not know what a word means, write that word where everyone can see it. During the next few days, review the word's meaning periodically and look for opportunities to use the word. Encourage the students to use the word in conversations with classmates and others and in their writing.
- Collect the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1) from each student. Identify the words that many students are not sure of or do not know and review them as a class or in groups. For suggestions for reviewing words, see "Retaining the Words" in the Introduction of the Vocabulary Teaching Guide.

- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice through an activity modeled on "Does That Make Sense?" (see Week 1, Day 5, Step 2).

Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 2

Before continuing with the week 9 lesson, use the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 2 to assess each student’s understanding of words taught in Weeks 5–8.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 2” answer sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 177. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.
- ✓ If the students are not familiar with the assessment’s multiple-choice format, you might make a copy of the answer sheet (IA1) and display it where everyone can see it. While conducting the assessment, you might point to each vocabulary word as you pronounce it. You might discuss the first few clues as a class and model circling the answers. This copy of the answer sheet is also useful for discussing the activity after the students have completed it.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 2” answer sheet (IA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students they will think more about the words they have been learning by playing the game “What’s the Missing Word?” Explain that you will read a sentence that has a word missing and they will circle the vocabulary word that can replace the missing word.
3. Explain that one of these words can replace the missing word in the first sentence: resist, establish, or inform.
4. Read sentence number 1 aloud, saying the word “blank” for the missing word. (See “What’s the Missing Word?” on page 176.)
5. Have the students circle the word that can replace the missing word.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining sentences.

DISCUSSING AND SCORING THE ASSESSMENT

1. To fully assess the students' understanding of the words, it is important to discuss the activity with them after they have completed it. Discuss each question with the class or with individual students. Have them explain the thinking behind their responses by asking questions such as:
 - Q Why did you say the word [establish] can replace the missing word? What do you know about the word [establish]?
 - Q What do you know about the word [resist/inform]?
2. Collect the answer sheet (IA1) from each student. If you wish to score the assessment, we suggest you award one point for each correct answer for a possible total score of 8 points for each word check. You might then assign a letter grade based on a scale or rubric you develop or by percentage correct.
3. Record each student's individual score on the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record" sheet (SR1) in the "Word Check 2" section. You might also record any comments on that student's performance, such as noting words that seem challenging for the student, and noting, if necessary, any suggestions for providing additional support.
4. If you wish to track your students' progress, as a class, for Word Checks 1–8, you might add each student's scores to the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record" sheet (CR1).

Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 3

Before continuing with the week 13 lesson, use the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 3 to assess each student’s understanding of words taught in Weeks 9–12.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 3” answer sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 186. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 3” answer sheet (IA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students that they will think more about the words they have been learning by playing the game “I’m Thinking of a Word.” Explain that you will give a clue about one of the words, and they will circle the word that fits the clue.
3. Explain that the first clue is about one of these words, which are written next to the number 1 on the answer sheet: clank, suit, or spectacle.
4. Read clue number 1 aloud twice. (See “I’m Thinking of a Word” on page 185.)
5. Have the students circle the word that fits the clue.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining clues.

DISCUSSING AND SCORING THE ASSESSMENT

1. To fully assess the students’ understanding of the words, it is important to discuss the activity with them after they have completed it. Discuss each question with the class or with individual students. Have them explain the thinking behind their responses by asking questions such as:
 - Q How might you use the word [spectacle] in a sentence? When have you seen a spectacle?
 - Q What do you know about the word [clank/suit]?
2. Collect the answer sheet (IA1) from each student. If you wish to score the assessment, we suggest you award one point for each correct answer for a possible total score of 8 points for each word check. You might then assign a letter grade based on a scale or rubric you develop or by percentage correct.

- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, provide further practice by having the students create a picture card of the word with a definition in their own words on the back of the card. Explain that the picture card should illustrate what the word means. You might model the process by drawing a picture that illustrates the meaning of one of this week's review words.

Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 4

Before continuing with the week 17 lesson, use the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 4 to assess each student’s understanding of words taught in Weeks 13–16.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 4” answer sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 195. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 4” answer sheet (IA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students that they will think more about the words they have been learning by playing the game “Which Word Am I?” Explain that you will give a clue about one of the words and the students will circle the word that fits the clue.
3. Explain that the first clue is about one of these words, which are written next to the number 1 on the answer sheet: thoughtless, thoughtful, and discourteous.
4. Read clue number 1 aloud twice. (See “Which Word Am I?” on page 194.)
5. Have the students circle the word that fits the clue.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining clues.

DISCUSSING AND SCORING THE ASSESSMENT

1. To fully assess the students’ understanding of the words, it is important to discuss the activity with them after they have completed it. Discuss each question with the class or with individual students. Have them explain the thinking behind their responses by asking questions such as:
 - Q Why did you say the word [thoughtful] describes a person who remembers all of her friends’ birthdays?
 - Q What do you know about the word [thoughtless/discourteous]?
2. Collect the answer sheet (IA1) from each student. If you wish to score the assessment, we suggest you award one point for each correct answer for a possible total score of 8 points for each word check. You might then assign a letter grade based on a scale or rubric you develop or by percentage correct.

(continues)

3. Record each student's individual score on the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record" sheet (SR1) in the "Word Check 4" section. You might also record any comments on that student's performance, such as noting words that seem challenging for the student, and noting, if necessary, any suggestions for providing additional support.
4. If you wish to track your students' progress, as a class, for Word Checks 1–8, you might add each student's scores to the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record" sheet (CR1).

Which Word Am I?

1. I'm how you describe a person who remembers all of her friends' birthdays.

Q Which word am I: thoughtful, thoughtless, or discourteous? (thoughtful)

2. I'm what you do when you bring the same bag with you every time you go shopping.

Q Which word am I: desert, convert, or reuse? (reuse)

3. I'm a pleasant daydream you have while you lie in a hammock on a hot summer day.

Q Which word am I: calamity, reverie, or prejudice? (reverie)

4. I'm how you describe an animal that is currently sitting perfectly still.

Q Which word am I: motionless, selfless, or wobbly? (motionless)

5. I'm what you do when you call your grandmother to see how she is doing.

Q Which word am I: hunger, bundle, or contact? (contact)

6. I'm how you describe a story about a friendly talking dragon.

Q Which word am I: fanciful, vast, or resilient? (fanciful)

7. I'm how you describe a teakettle that takes a very long time to boil water.

Q Which word am I: efficient, inefficient, or typical? (inefficient)

8. I'm how you describe a suitcase that has wheels, allowing it to be moved easily.

Q Which word am I: moist, thoughtless, or mobile? (mobile)

Name: _____ Date: _____

Word Check 4: Which Word Am I?

Listen to the clue. Then circle the word that fits the clue.

1.	thoughtful	thoughtless	discourteous
2.	desert	convert	reuse
3.	calamity	reverie	prejudice
4.	motionless	selfless	wobbly
5.	hunger	bundle	contact
6.	fanciful	vast	resilient
7.	efficient	inefficient	typical
8.	moist	thoughtless	mobile

Completing the Student Self-assessment

Before continuing with the week 17 lesson, use the Student Self-assessment to give the students an opportunity to reflect on how well they know the words they are learning, and to give you the chance to identify words in need of further review and practice.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Identify the words to be assessed. We recommend that you select eight words from the previous four weeks of vocabulary instruction (except for the week 30 assessment, which is a year-end assessment focusing on a range of words from across the year). We suggest that you choose at least one word from each week and include words that were challenging for the students to learn, as well as words that were especially interesting or fun for the students to use and discuss.
- ✓ Make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 198. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students that today they will have an opportunity to think about how well they know the words they have been learning. Point to the list of words you have chosen and explain that these are some vocabulary words they have talked about in the past several weeks. Explain that you will read each word aloud and give the students a few moments to think about the word. Then they will put a check mark in the column that tells how well they know the word.
3. Explain that if they are sure they know what the word means, they will put a check mark in the “yes” column, meaning “Yes, I know this word!” If they think they know what the word means but are not sure, they will put a check mark in the “maybe” column, meaning “Maybe I know this word. I’m not sure.” If they do not know what the word means or cannot remember, they will put a check mark in the “no” column, meaning “No, I don’t know this word.”
4. Tell the students that the purpose of the activity is to help them figure out which words they know well and which words they need to review and practice. Explain that it is fine if the students are not sure about a word or do not know what it means.
5. Point to the first word you have chosen, read it aloud, and give the students a few moments to think about the word. Then have them put a check mark in the column that describes how well they know the word.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining words.

USING THE ASSESSMENT RESULTS

Here are some suggestions for ways you might use the results of the assessment:

- Ask the students to circle any words they are not sure they know or do not know on their own response sheets. Then have them discuss with their partners what they might do to review and practice those words. If the students have difficulty thinking of ideas, suggest a few of your own. For example, the students might use printable word cards to review the words by themselves or with partners, or they might take the word cards home and practice the words with family members. The students might also write stories using the words, draw pictures about the words, or act out the words with their partners.
- Briefly review the meaning of each word by having the students tell what they know about the word. If several students are not sure or do not know what a word means, write that word where everyone can see it. During the next few days, review the word's meaning periodically and look for opportunities to use the word. Encourage the students to use the word in conversations with classmates and others and in their writing.
- Collect the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1) from each student. Identify the words that many students are not sure of or do not know and review them as a class or in groups. For suggestions for reviewing words, see "Retaining the Words" in the Introduction of the Vocabulary Teaching Guide.

Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 5

Before continuing with the week 21 lesson, use the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 5 to assess each student’s understanding of words taught in Weeks 17–20.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 5” answer sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 204. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 5” answer sheet (IA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students they will think more about the words they have been learning by playing the game “I’m Thinking of a Word.” Explain that you will give a clue about one of the words and they will circle the word that fits the clue.
3. Explain that the first clue is about one of these words, which are written next to the number 1 on the answer sheet: interact, compel, or resolve.
4. Read clue number 1 aloud twice. (See “I’m Thinking of a Word” on page 203.)
5. Have the students circle the word that fits the clue.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining clues.

DISCUSSING AND SCORING THE ASSESSMENT

1. To fully assess the students’ understanding of the words, it is important to discuss the activity with them after they have completed it. Discuss each question with the class or with individual students. Have them explain the thinking behind their responses by asking questions such as:
 - Q How might you use the word [resolve] in a sentence? When have you seen a spectacle?
 - Q What do you know about the word [interact/compel]?
2. Collect the answer sheet (IA1) from each student. If you wish to score the assessment, we suggest you award one point for each correct answer for a possible total score of 8 points for each word check. You might then assign a letter grade based on a scale or rubric you develop or by percentage correct.

I'm Thinking of a Word

1. I'm thinking of a word that means "find an answer or solution to a problem."
Q Which word am I thinking of: interact, compel, or resolve? (resolve)
2. I'm thinking of a word that tells what you do when you waste time playing video games when you could be learning a new sport.
Q Which word am I thinking of: influence, indicate, or squander? (squander)
3. I'm thinking of a word that describes the series of steps that you take to make a peanut butter and jelly sandwich.
Q Which word am I thinking of: sequence, priority, or device? (sequence)
4. I'm thinking of a word that you might use to describe the best pair of shoes in the store.
Q Which word am I thinking of: defenseless, supreme, or ethical? (supreme)
5. I'm thinking of a word that describes a person who buys and uses a new car.
Q Which word am I thinking of: consumer, preteen, or procedure? (consumer)
6. I'm thinking of a word that tells what you do when you have an argument with a friend.
Q Which word am I thinking of: comply, clash, or regulate? (clash)
7. I'm thinking of a word that you might use to describe a person who gets on board with the idea of taking food from a store without paying for it.
Q Which word am I thinking of: desirable, academic, or unethical? (unethical)
8. I'm thinking of a word that you might use to describe a scary ghost story.

Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 6

Before continuing with the Week 25 lesson, use the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 6 to assess each student’s understanding of words taught in Weeks 21–24.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 6” answer sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 213. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 6” answer sheet (IA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students they will think more about the words they have been learning by playing the game “Which Word Am I?” Explain that you will give a clue about one of the words and they will circle the word that fits the clue.

Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 7

Before continuing with the week 29 lesson, use the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 7 to assess each student’s understanding of words taught in Weeks 26–28.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 7” answer sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 222. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 7” answer sheet (IA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students they will think more about the words they have been learning by playing the game “I’m Thinking of a Word.” Explain that you will give a clue about one of the words and they will circle the word that fits the clue.
3. Explain that the first clue is about one of these words, which are written next to the number 1 on the answer sheet: intrigue, lurch, or argue.
4. Read clue number 1 aloud twice. (See “I’m Thinking of a Word” on page 221.)
5. Have the students circle the word that fits the clue.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining clues.

DISCUSSING AND SCORING THE ASSESSMENT

1. To fully assess the students’ understanding of the words, it is important to discuss the activity with them after they have completed it. Discuss each question with the class or with individual students. Have them explain the thinking behind their responses by asking questions such as:
 - Q How might you use the word [lurch] in a sentence? What do you know about the word [lurch]?
 - Q What do you know about the word [intrigue/argue]?
2. Collect the answer sheet (IA1) from each student. If you wish to score the assessment, we suggest you award one point for each correct answer for a possible total score of 8 points for each word check. You might then assign a letter grade based on a scale or rubric you develop or by percentage correct.

(continues)

3. Record each student's individual score on the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record" sheet (SR1) in the "Word Check 7" section. You might also record any comments on that student's performance, such as noting words that seem challenging for the student, and noting, if necessary, any suggestions for providing additional support.
4. If you wish to track your students' progress, as a class, for Word Checks 1–8, you might add each student's scores to the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record" sheet (CR1).

I'm Thinking of a Word

1. I'm thinking of a word that tells what you do when you move suddenly forward when the bus stops quickly.

Q Which word am I thinking of: intrigue, lurch, or argue? (lurch)

2. I'm thinking of a word that you might use to describe a person who has studied the ocean and knows a lot about it.

Q Which word am I thinking of: knowledgeable, positive, or negative? (knowledgeable)

3. I'm thinking of a word that means a "large crowd of people."

Q Which word am I thinking of: values, throng, or impact? (throng)

4. I'm thinking of a word that you might use to describe an ugly monster in a scary movie.

Q Which word am I thinking of: positive, engrossed, or grotesque? (grotesque)

5. I'm thinking of a word that tells what the sail of a boat does on a windy day.

Q Which word am I thinking of: billow, cluster, or commit? (billow)

6. I'm thinking of a word that describes a person who is the same age as you.

Q Which word am I thinking of: impact, throng, or peer? (peer)

7. I'm thinking of a word that tells what a pinecone does when it falls from the top of a tall tree.

Q Which word am I thinking of: billow, argue, or plummet? (plummet)

8. I'm thinking of a word that you might use to describe a beautiful memento that you got from your favorite aunt when she moved far away.

Q Which word am I thinking of: significant, insignificant, or grotesque? (significant)

Name: _____ Date: _____

Word Check 7: I'm Thinking of a Word

Listen to the clue. Then circle the word that fits the clue.

1.	intrigue	lurch	argue
2.	knowledgeable	positive	negative
3.	values	throng	impact
4.	positive	engrossed	grotesque
5.	billow	cluster	commit
6.	impact	throng	peer
7.	billow	argue	plummet
8.	significant	insignificant	grotesque

Completing the Student Self-assessment

Before continuing with the week 29 lesson, use the Student Self-assessment to give the students an opportunity to reflect on how well they know the words they are learning, and to give you the chance to identify words in need of further review and practice.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Identify the words to be assessed. We recommend that you select eight words from the previous four weeks of vocabulary instruction (except for the week 30 assessment, which is a year-end assessment focusing on a range of words from across the year). We suggest that you choose at least one word from each week and include words that were challenging for the students to learn, as well as words that were especially interesting or fun for the students to use and discuss.
- ✓ Make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (cclearninghub.org) or from page 225. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students that today they will have an opportunity to think about how well they know the words they have been learning. Point to the list of words you have chosen and explain that these are some vocabulary words they have talked about in the past several weeks. Explain that you will read each word aloud and give the students a few moments to think about the word. Then they will put a check mark in the column that tells how well they know the word.
3. Explain that if they are sure they know what the word means, they will put a check mark in the “yes” column, meaning “Yes, I know this word!” If they think they know what the word means but are not sure, they will put a check mark in the “maybe” column, meaning “Maybe I know this word. I’m not sure.” If they do not know what the word means or cannot remember, they will put a check mark in the “no” column, meaning “No, I don’t know this word.”
4. Tell the students that the purpose of the activity is to help them figure out which words they know well and which words they need to review and practice. Explain that it is fine if the students are not sure about a word or do not know what it means.
5. Point to the first word you have chosen, read it aloud, and give the students a few moments to think about the word. Then have them put a check mark in the column that describes how well they know the word.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining words.

(continues)

USING THE ASSESSMENT RESULTS

Here are some suggestions for ways you might use the results of the assessment:

- Ask the students to circle any words they are not sure they know or do not know on their own response sheets. Then have them discuss with their partners what they might do to review and practice those words. If the students have difficulty thinking of ideas, suggest a few of your own. For example, the students might use printable word cards to review the words by themselves or with partners, or they might take the word cards home and practice the words with family members. The students might also write stories using the words, draw pictures about the words, or act out the words with their partners.
- Briefly review the meaning of each word by having the students tell what they know about the word. If several students are not sure or do not know what a word means, write that word where everyone can see it. During the next few days, review the word's meaning periodically and look for opportunities to use the word. Encourage the students to use the word in conversations with classmates and others and in their writing.
- Collect the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1) from each student. Identify the words that many students are not sure of or do not know and review them as a class or in groups. For suggestions for reviewing words, see "Retaining the Words" in the Introduction of the Vocabulary Teaching Guide.

Suggestions

Use the following suggestions to support struggling students:

- If only a few students understand a word's meaning, reteach the word using the vocabulary lesson in which it was first taught as a model.
- If about half of the students understand a word's meaning, incorporate the word into one or more of the other activities used to review words this week.

Completing the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 8

Use the Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 8 to assess each student's understanding of a representative set of words chosen from across the year.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Make a class set of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 8” answer sheets (IA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or from page 230. Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a reference copy for yourself.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Individual Vocabulary Assessment: Word Check 8” answer sheet (IA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students they will think more about some of the words they have learned this year by playing the game “What’s the Missing Word?” Explain that you will read a sentence that has a word missing and they will circle the vocabulary word that can replace the missing word.
3. Explain that one of these words can replace the missing word in the first sentence: contented, dissatisfied, or envious.
4. Read sentence number 1 aloud, saying the word “blank” for the missing word. (See “What’s the Missing Word?” on page 229.)
5. Have the students circle the word that can replace the missing word.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining sentences.

DISCUSSING AND SCORING THE ASSESSMENT

1. To fully assess the students’ understanding of the words, it is important to discuss the activity with them after they have completed it. Discuss each question with the class or with individual students. Have them explain the thinking behind their responses by asking questions such as:
 - Q Why did you say the word [dissatisfied] can replace the missing word? What do you know about the word [dissatisfied]?
 - Q What do you know about the word [contented/envious]?
2. Collect the answer sheet (IA1) from each student. If you wish to score the assessment, we suggest you award one point for each correct answer for a possible total score of 8 points for each word check. You might then assign a letter grade based on a scale or rubric you develop or by percentage correct.

(continues)

3. Record each student's individual score on the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Student Record" sheet (SR1) in the "Word Check 8" section. You might also record any comments on that student's performance, such as noting words that seem challenging for the student, and noting, if necessary, any suggestions for providing additional support and for continued growth during the summer.
4. If you wish to track your students' progress, as a class, for Word Checks 1–8, you might add each student's scores to the "Individual Vocabulary Assessment Class Record" sheet (CR1).

What's the Missing Word?

1. Sanjay quit the basketball team because he was _____ with the unethical behavior of his teammates.

Q What's the missing word: contented, dissatisfied, or envious? (dissatisfied)

2. A throng of people were in the emergency room after the earthquake—it was a _____.

Q What's the missing word: calamity, cuisine, or priority? (calamity)

3. After studying the solar system in school and at home, Lauren feels very _____ about the subject.

Q What's the missing word: dependent, knowledgeable, or befuddled? (knowledgeable)

4. Kyle had to _____ his younger brother after the hair-raising airplane ride.

Q What's the missing word: stun, resist, or soothe? (soothe)

5. The language in Madeline's new book was so vivid that she was _____ in it immediately.

Q What's the missing word: engrossed, tattered, or vexed? (engrossed)

6. Gary was lurking behind the couch to scare his sister, but he _____ when he saw that she was crying.

Q What's the missing word: lost his nerve, rustled, or complied? (lost his nerve)

7. The sound of the horses stampeding was _____—all of the other animals in the area ran to hide.

Q What's the missing word: thunderous, fanciful, or lush? (thunderous)

8. Though the hungry people clamored for food, there was only a _____ amount of bread left.

Q What's the missing word: resilient, meager, or conspicuous? (meager)

1.	contented	dissatisfied	envious
2.	calamity	cuisine	priority
3.	dependent	knowledgeable	befuddled
4.	stun	resist	soothe
5.	engrossed	tattered	vexed
6.	lost his nerve	rustled	complied
7.	thunderous	fanciful	lush
8.	resilient	meager	conspicuous

Completing the Student Self-assessment

Use the final Student Self-assessment to give the students an opportunity to reflect on how well they know the words they have learned this year, and to give you the chance to identify words in need of further review and practice for continued growth during the summer.

PREPARING FOR THE ASSESSMENT

- ✓ Identify the words to be assessed. We recommend that you select eight words from across the year. For a representative set of words, you might choose one or two words from Weeks 1–4, one or two words from Weeks 5–8, etc. If you administered Word Check 8, you might select words not included in that assessment. We suggest that you include words that were challenging for the students to learn, as well as words that were especially interesting or fun for the students to use and discuss.
- ✓ Make a master copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1) from the CCC Learning Hub (cclearninghub.org) or from page 233. Write the words you have chosen to be assessed on the master copy. Then make enough copies for each student to have one.

CONDUCTING THE ASSESSMENT

1. Distribute a copy of the “Student Self-assessment” response sheet (SA1) to each student.
2. Tell the students that today they will have an opportunity to think about how well they know the words they have learned this year. Point to the list of words you have chosen and explain that these are some vocabulary words they have talked about during the year. Explain that you will read each word aloud and give the students a few moments to think about the word. Then they will put a check mark in the column that tells how well they know the word.
3. Explain that if they are sure they know what the word means, they will put a check mark in the “yes” column, meaning “Yes, I know this word!” If they think they know what the word means but are not sure, they will put a check mark in the “maybe” column, meaning “Maybe I know this word. I’m not sure.” If they do not know what the word means or cannot remember, they will put a check mark in the “no” column, meaning “No, I don’t know this word.”
4. Tell the students that the purpose of the activity is to help them figure out which words they know well and which words they need to review and practice. Explain that it is fine if the students are not sure about a word or do not know what it means.
5. Point to the first word you have chosen, read it aloud, and give the students a few moments to think about the word. Then have them put a check mark in the column that describes how well they know the word.
6. Follow the same procedure with the remaining words.

USING THE ASSESSMENT RESULTS

Here are some suggestions for ways you might use the results of the assessment:

- Ask the students to circle any words they are not sure they know or do not know on their own response sheets. Then have them discuss with their partners what they might do to review and practice those words. If the students have difficulty thinking of ideas, suggest a few of your own. For example, the students might use printable word cards to review the words by themselves or with partners, or they might take the word cards home and practice the words with family members. The students might also write stories using the words, draw pictures about the words, or act out the words with their partners.
- Briefly review the meaning of each word by having the students tell what they know about the word. If several students are not sure or do not know what a word means, write that word where everyone can see it. During the next few days, review the word's meaning periodically and look for opportunities to use the word. Encourage the students to use the word in conversations with classmates and others and in their writing.
- Collect the "Student Self-assessment" response sheet (SA1) from each student. Identify the words that many students are not sure of or do not know and review them as a class or in groups. For suggestions for reviewing words, see "Retaining the Words" in the Introduction of the Vocabulary Teaching Guide.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many people were involved in the development of the Being a Writer program, and we are grateful for their time, expertise, suggestions, and encouragement.

Teachers, Principals, and School Districts

First, we wish to thank the members of our Teacher Advisory Board, who piloted the lessons during our development year, giving us expert feedback to help shape the format and content of the program and collaborating with us in numerous invaluable ways:

Albany Unified School District

Ali Gooding
Nancy Johnson
April Stewart
Christiane Zmich

Hayward Unified School District

Andrea Richards
Jill Rosenthal
Melanie Tirrell

Oakland Unified School District

West Contra Costa Unified School District

Jennifer Brock
Betty Buginas
Jeanie Hedeem
Nina Morita
Linda Takimoto

In addition, we wish to thank the teachers, principals, and district leaders who participated in the yearlong field testing of the program in the following school districts:

Albany Unified School District, Albany, California
Elgin Unified School District, Elgin, Illinois
Newark Unified School District, Newark, California
West Contra Costa Unified School District, El Cerrito, California

Special thanks to the many teachers in the following districts for providing advice, feedback, student writing samples, and other significant contributions during the revision of the program, and to the teachers who appear in the professional development videos associated with this program, listed on the following page.

Clark County School District, Las Vegas, Nevada

Introduction

We all dream of sending our elementary school students on to middle and high school with a love of writing; an ability to write clearly, creatively, and purposefully for sustained periods of time; and a familiarity with the crafts and conventions of writing in the major genres. We want them to approach writing with confidence and understand that writing, first and foremost, is communication. In pursuing this dream, we ask ourselves: What are the most important things for students to learn about writing during their elementary school years? What writing experiences are most important for students to have? The Being a Writer™ program is our carefully researched, fully articulated answer to these key questions.

The Being a Writer program is a yearlong writing curriculum for kindergarten through grade 6 and the first program of its kind to bring together the latest research in teaching writing with support for students' social and ethical development. The program marries a writing process approach with guided instruction, providing a clear scope and sequence to ensure that your students learn the important elements of writing at their grade level. This all happens in the context of a caring classroom community—so crucial to motivating and inspiring students to grow as writers, thinkers, and principled people. As members of the community, the students learn and act on the values that govern the community (responsibility, respect, caring, fairness, and helpfulness). They practice the skills and dispositions they need to bring these values to life in their daily interactions.

New to the Second Edition

In this second edition of the Being a Writer program, we have added content, assessments, and technology features designed to support your teaching and your students' writing and social development. These include:

- New Open Day and Writing Throughout the Week activities that supplement instruction at grades K–2
- A fifth day of instruction each week at grades 3–6
- New or revised Opinion Writing units at grades K–5 and a new Argumentative Writing unit at grade 6
- New Writing About Reading supplemental activities in which the students write opinions in response to literature
- New family letters in English and Spanish
- Enhanced lesson support for teaching writing skills and conventions

- An expanded Skill Practice Teaching Guide and Student Skill Practice Book at grades 1–6
- Print and digital teacher’s manuals with links to professional development media and lesson resources
- New and expanded writing assessments
- An online assessment tool, the CCC ClassView™ assessment app, for capturing and synthesizing assessment data
- A Writing Performance Task Preparation Guide that prepares students for standards-based writing performance tasks at grades 3–6
- Online, interactive whiteboard activities
- Additional support for incorporating technology through tips, tutorials, extension activities, and mini-lessons

You will find more information about new content, assessments, and technology features in the pages that follow.

Unique Pedagogy

The program’s unique pedagogy grows out of years of research on writing and child development. It focuses on character education and social and ethical development and supports teachers both as writers and as teachers of writing.

RESEARCH BASED/CLASSROOM TESTED

We have drawn on two decades of research in the areas of writing, motivation and learning theory, and social and ethical development to develop the Being a Writer program. In the 1980s, a major study of various modes of writing instruction showed that a writing process approach combined with clear objectives and opportunities for peer interaction produced an effect 22 times greater in students’ pretest–posttest writing quality than approaches characterized by lecture, teacher-only feedback, and writing assignments imitating patterns or following rules. Interestingly, the study also found that positive feedback (commenting exclusively on what writers had done well, rather than on their shortcomings) produced far greater effects in student writing than did negative feedback (Kelley 2002).

A meta-analysis published in 2007 identified the following as key elements of effective instruction (Graham and Perin 2007):

- Process writing approach
- Collaborative writing tasks
- Study of models
- Writing strategies

- Specific product goals
- Prewriting
- Inquiry activities

Additional work by researchers and leaders in the field, including Atwell, Calkins, Fletcher, and Graves,* supports these findings and also emphasizes the following as ways to improve students' writing practice and attitude:

- Teacher and peer conferences
- Classroom discussion
- Writing for real audiences and purposes
- Student self-assessment
- Regular periods of writing
- Choice of writing topics

The Being a Writer program has been developed in consultation with an advisory board of teachers (of varied backgrounds and experience) who piloted lessons and gave us extensive feedback to assure that the program addresses the needs of all students, is easy to implement, and fits into the language arts block.

DUAL FOCUS: ACADEMIC AND SOCIAL/ETHICAL LEARNING

Child development research tells us that children learn and grow best in environments where their basic psychological needs are met. Children need to feel physically and emotionally safe. They need to feel that they belong. They need to have a sense of themselves as autonomous and capable. Studies indicate that when these basic needs are met at school by helping students experience a sense of community, the students do better academically (as measured over time by grades and test scores), exhibit more pro-social tendencies, and show greater resistance to problem behaviors such as drug use and violence (Durlack et al. 2011).

The Being a Writer program helps you take deliberate steps to create a classroom writing community where your students feel empowered, supported in taking risks, and responsible to themselves and the group. The program weaves cooperative learning, social skill instruction, and discussion of values throughout the writing lessons.

TEACHER SUPPORT

The program is designed to help you hone your skills both as a teacher of writing and as a writer yourself. Detailed, easy-to-follow lesson plans include suggestions for managing the writing process, facilitating discussions, assessing the class, and conferring with individual students. Teacher Notes and references to professional development media throughout the lessons explain the underlying pedagogy of various activities and provide examples of what might happen in the classroom. The weekly Teacher as Writer section helps you cultivate your own writing voice while deepening your appreciation for what the students are asked to do in the program. (For more information, see “Teacher as Writer” on page liii.)

Program at a Glance

The following sections describe the program components, writing development across the grades, and a typical daily lesson.

PROGRAM COMPONENTS

The Being a Writer program includes:

- Teacher’s Manual, two volumes per grade
- About 20–30 children’s trade books per grade to inspire students and model good writing
- Student Writing Handbook, one for each student (at grades 2–6), containing excerpts, practice activities, a spelling word bank, and proofreading notes
- Wipe-off boards and markers, one set for each student (at grades K–1), to use during Guided Writing Practice
- Assessment Resource Book (at grades K–6), containing information and record sheets to assess writing and social skill development for individual students and the class
- Skill Practice Teaching Guide (at grades 1–6), containing mini-lessons to supplement instruction in skills and conventions in the program
- Student Skill Practice Book, one for each student (at grades 1–6), containing additional skill practice activities to be used in conjunction with the lessons in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide
- Writing Performance Task Preparation Guide (at grades 3–6), containing lessons to prepare students for standards-based writing performance tasks
- Digital versions of the Teacher’s Manual, Skill Practice Teaching Guide, Assessment Resource Book, and Writing Performance Task Preparation Guide
- Access to online resources via the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org), such as interactive whiteboard activities, assessment forms, reproducibles, and professional development media
- Access to the CCC ClassView app (classview.org), which allows for electronic recording, sorting, synthesizing, and reporting of assessment data for individual students and the whole class

For more information about the print format of the Teacher’s Manual, see the “Getting Started with Your Print Teacher’s Manual” tutorial (AV81). For more information about the digital format, see the “Getting Started with Your Digital Teacher’s Set” tutorial (AV72).

ALIGNMENT WITH STANDARDS

The Being a Writer program develops students' abilities to draft, research, revise, discuss, proofread, and publish writing in narrative, informative/explanatory, and opinion genres. The program's focus on conversations about literature and the writing process, along with its teaching of social skills such as speaking clearly, listening to others, and asking questions about others' writing also addresses standards for speaking and listening. For more about how the program aligns to specific state standards, see the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

A TYPICAL DAILY LESSON

Lessons are generally divided into three sections: Getting Ready to Write, Writing Time, and Sharing and Reflecting.

- Getting Ready to Write. Most direct instruction happens during this section of the lesson. The students gather to hear and discuss a read-aloud, brainstorm ideas for writing, participate in shared or modeled writing, discuss how they will work together, or “quick-write” (participate in short, whole-class writing exercises in grades 3–6).
- Writing Time. During this period of sustained writing, you have the opportunity to write with the students, observe and assist as needed, and confer with individual students or pairs.
- Sharing and Reflecting. Students share and reflect on their writing and social interactions in this section. They listen to and express their appreciation for one another's writing. They discuss what is working in their partnerships, what problems they are encountering, and what they can do to avoid those problems in the future.

EXTENDING THE INSTRUCTION

In addition to the core lessons, the program features several opportunities to extend instruction:

- Open Days and Writing Throughout the Week. In grades K–2, each week of instruction includes one to two open days. On these days, you might consider teaching a Writing Throughout the Week activity. The activities provide ideas such as expanding on a writing idea from the week’s lessons, offering an additional writing idea related to the week’s read-aloud, or asking the students to engage in a different kind of writing (for example, writing opinions about a text, making lists, or engaging in an interactive writing activity), to supplement the instruction provided in the core lessons. Alternatively, you might use open days to provide your own writing instruction.
- Writing About Reading. These activities provide the students with opportunities to write opinions about and make connections to texts they hear and discuss in the Being a Writer program. Although the activities are optional, they provide a valuable opportunity for your students to practice writing opinions in response to texts, and we encourage you to do them. These activities can be done at the end of a lesson or at another time.

The Writing About Reading activities build in complexity across grades. In grades K–2, the students write personal opinions in response to texts. Starting in grade 1, the students are expected to provide reasons to support their opinions. In grade 3, in addition to writing about personal opinions, the students begin to more closely analyze the texts, backing up inferences with textual references. In grades 4–6, the latter is the primary focus of the Writing About Reading activities.

- Extensions. These activities provide additional learning opportunities that enhance the instruction in the core lessons. Examples of extensions include exploring text features, discussing authors’ use of language, and using technology to learn about an author or to publish work for an audience beyond the classroom. These activities can be done at the end of a lesson or at another time.
- Technology Mini-lessons. These ten mini-lessons encompass such topics as digital citizenship, online safety, word processing, and research skills. See “Technology Mini-lessons” on page xlvi for more information.

Understanding the Program

The Being a Writer program helps students develop as writers and as caring, collaborative people. This dual focus is based on two beliefs: that students’ academic learning flourishes when social learning is integrated into the curriculum and that we are called on as educators to help students develop as whole people—academically, socially, and ethically.

Focus on Writing

Students spend their first few, precious years as writers in our classrooms. As elementary students, they are at the very beginning of their lifelong careers as writers. Learning to write is like learning to master other means of communication. Command of the written word, like command of the piano, oil paints, conversational French, or advanced mathematics, relies less on innate talent than on years of steady practice and encouragement.

MOTIVATION AND CREATIVITY

To get enough sheer practice writing during their elementary school years, students need to really, really want to write. Thus, all instruction in writing process, craft, skills, and conventions in this program grows out of the need to tap into students’ intrinsic desire to express themselves and to be understood.

Throughout the program, read-alouds of exemplary writing stimulate the students’ imaginations and fuel their motivation to write. Reading about professional authors helps students learn that creativity can be gloriously messy and that writers write to satisfy themselves first. In Being a Writer, students have a great deal of choice about what to write—even when writing about assigned topics, they draw on their unique experiences and interests to address those topics. Formal skill instruction is delayed in each unit so that students can focus initially on just getting their ideas onto paper. However, basic writing mechanics and skills are taught early in kindergarten and grade 1. (See “Flexible Approach to Skill Instruction” on page xxiii for suggestions about how to integrate skills instruction with the core lessons.)

THE BEGINNING OF WRITING (K-2)

Early writing develops on a foundation of oral language, drawing, and phonics instruction. In kindergarten, grade 1, and at the beginning of grade 2, we create many opportunities for students to draw and tell their stories and to see writing modeled. The students see you model thinking aloud about what to write and draw; writing letters, words, and sentences; using standard sentence punctuation; and rereading your writing.

As students become familiar with concepts of print, they begin to understand that marks on a page communicate meaning. They start to draw pictures, write symbols, and eventually form letters and sentences to tell their stories.

To help young students begin to communicate in writing as quickly as possible, it is necessary to provide early instruction in basic conventions of writing, such as writing from left to right and inserting spaces between words. In kindergarten and grade 1, the Guided Writing Practice and Shared Writing opportunities impart this instruction.

- Guided Writing Practice. During Guided Writing Practice in the early units of kindergarten and grade 1, you will model writing letters, words, and simple sentences as the students practice writing on individual wipe-off boards. During the practice, sentence starters like “I see _____” generate practice sentences quickly while connecting to the week’s read-aloud text and writing topic. When the students write their own stories, they may use the sentence starters they practiced or begin their stories in any way they choose. This practice ensures that beginning writers get the support they need, while more experienced writers have important skills reinforced.
- Shared Writing. During Shared Writing time, which occurs throughout the year, you elicit the students’ ideas to write a shared story about a topic. As you write, you model thinking aloud about getting ideas, adding details to the story, and using skills and conventions such as capitalizing sentences and proper nouns, punctuating the ends of sentences, and writing complete sentences. The shared writing activities can be adapted as interactive writing activities. Rather than you writing the students’ suggestions, invite student volunteers to come to the board and write individual letters, words, or sentences as they are able. Then have the students return to their seats for independent writing.

We assume that the students are receiving separate phonics instruction alongside this writing program, including instruction about concepts of print (such as learning letter names and recognizing upper- and lowercase letters), phoneme segmentation, sight word recognition, and letter formation. Throughout the primary grades, we suggest that you model writing using letter–sound relationships that the students have learned during phonics instruction.

The program structure at grades K–2 supports students in learning the basic skills they need to communicate in writing. Because this skill instruction is cumulative and builds on prior learning, we designed the units at these grades to be taught sequentially.

WRITING PROCESS, GENRE, AND CRAFT (3–6)

While students informally draft, revise, and publish their writing at grades K–2, it is not until grade 3 that the writing process becomes central to their writing. After being formally introduced to the writing process at the beginning of the year, students in grades 3–6 repeatedly engage in the cycle of prewriting, drafting, revising, proofreading, and publishing as they participate in the genre units.

The genre units, which focus on personal narrative, fictional narrative, expository (or informative) nonfiction, functional (or explanatory) nonfiction, opinion/argumentative writing, and poetry, immerse the students in authentic representative literature by having them hear, read, and discuss good examples of each genre. They learn about elements of a genre as they brainstorm ideas, quick-write, and write multiple drafts. After this immersion and drafting phase, each student selects a draft to develop and revise for publication in the class library. The students spend the later weeks of each genre unit revising, proofreading, publishing, and sharing their pieces from the Author’s Chair.

The genre units at grades 3–6 may be taught in any order, although we recommend that the expository nonfiction unit be taught later in the year due to its greater academic and social demands.

SKILLS AND CONVENTIONS

The first several weeks of the program are an immersion period during which the students are introduced to the lesson structure and cooperative learning skills, and develop their motivation and stamina for writing. This immersion period is about inspiring good ideas and getting those ideas—in whatever form—onto paper. Students’ motivation to learn the conventions of written English (beyond the basic writing skills discussed previously for K–2 students) grows out of their desire to communicate clearly with their readers in their published pieces. Grammar, usage, punctuation, capitalization, and some spelling skills are taught in the program after the students have had ample time to draft their ideas.

FLEXIBLE APPROACH TO SKILL INSTRUCTION

At grades K–2, most skill instruction occurs during the shared or modeled writing portions of the lesson, while at grades 3–6, most skill instruction occurs during the revision and proofreading phases of the writing process.

Additional instruction and practice in skills and conventions, and language skills assessments for grades 1–6 are provided in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide and the accompanying Student Skill Practice Book.

The program allows you to choose one of two possible approaches to teaching the skill lessons in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide. You might choose to teach the 30 lessons in sequence, or you might teach specific skills when they naturally support the writing being done in a particular genre (for example, the need to punctuate speech arises when writing fiction, while learning to use conjunctions is appropriate for connecting ideas in nonfiction). Skill Practice Notes refer you to specific lessons in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide that provide further instruction or practice with a skill. For more information, see the Skill Practice Teaching Guide.

At all grades, we assume that there is a separate spelling program in place to provide students with formal instruction in spelling patterns, inflectional endings, roots, syllabication, and other aspects of spelling.

The Grade 5 Skills and Conventions table on the following page shows where skills and conventions for your grade level are taught directly in the core lessons and suggestions for where they might be practiced. To see analogous information for other grade levels, see Appendix D, “Skills and Conventions Tables.”

THE 6+1 TRAIT® WRITING MODEL AND THE BEING A WRITER PROGRAM

The goals of the Being a Writer program correlate closely to those of the 6+1 Trait Writing model of instruction and assessment developed by Education Northwest. In this widely used framework, student writing is assessed using seven distinct characteristics of writing: ideas, organization, voice, word choice, sentence fluency, conventions, and presentation. The framework provides you and your students with a common language to discuss good writing and rubrics to assess the quality of writing.

While the Being a Writer program provides an assessment framework using our “Descriptors of Successful Writing” to help you and your students understand and assess good writing, you will find numerous parallels between the two approaches. Examples of ways in which Being a Writer supports the 6+1 traits are described in the Support for the 6+1 Trait Model table on page xxvi.

(grade 2, Unit 5) ▪ Students use quotation marks to punctuate dialogue. (grade 3, Fiction) ▪ Students proofread their drafts using the Proofreading Notes section of their Student Writing Handbooks. (grade 4, Expository Nonfiction) ▪ Students use prepositions and prepositional phrases. (grade 5, Fiction) ▪ Students check for noun-pronoun agreement and identify unclear pronoun antecedents in their writing. (grade 6, Fiction)
Presentation (How the Writing Actually Looks on the Page)
DESCRIPTOR OF SUCCESSFUL WRITING	EXAMPLES
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Presentation is not formally addressed as a descriptor of successful writing, but students have numerous opportunities to attend to presentation during the publishing phase of the writing process. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Students contribute to class books that are placed in the classroom library. (kindergarten, Unit 2) ▪ Students create books with titles and illustrated covers about their favorite objects. (grade 1, Unit 5) ▪ Students publish nonfiction books with an illustration, diagram, or other nonfiction text element. (grade 2, Unit 4) ▪ Students explore and integrate features of published books (such as a dedication page, author's note, back cover blurb) and incorporate these into the final versions of their stories. (grade 3, Fiction) ▪ As a class, students title a class book and determine other features to include (such as a dedication page, illustrations). (grade 4, Personal Narrative) ▪ Students explore and integrate text features (such as diagrams, maps, graphs) into their reports. (grade 5, Expository Nonfiction) ▪ Students create comprehensive bibliographies of their research sources and include them in their published informational reports. (grade 6, Expository Nonfiction)

Focus on Social/Ethical Development

Research shows that building a safe and caring classroom community helps students develop a sense of responsibility for their own learning and behavior, as well as empathy and motivation to help others (Schaps 2004). Students who receive support in building their social and emotional skills demonstrate significant gains in academic achievement (Durlack et al. 2011). In the classroom writing community, students work in pairs, in small groups, and as a class to listen to and discuss writing, brainstorm ideas for writing, and share their writing.

BUILDING RELATIONSHIPS

Caring, respectful relationships are the foundation of the writing community and you, as the teacher, play a key role in building a warm relationship with each student as well as in facilitating and strengthening relationships among the students. The program creates deliberate opportunities to build these relationships. Early in the year, the students learn procedures (such as gathering for sharing and using cooperative structures) in which they are responsible to one another. As the year goes on, they regularly plan for, discuss, and solve problems related to their work together. They cultivate empathy by imagining how others might feel, and they explore why it is important to treat others with care and respect. When they feel connected to others and cared for, students learn to relax and take the risks necessary to grow academically, socially, and ethically.

VALUES AND SOCIAL SKILLS

As you help the students build relationships, you also help them understand the values that underlie these relationships. Across every year of the program, broad social goals help the students think about and act on five core values: responsibility, respect, caring, fairness, and helpfulness. The students reflect on what it means to act on these values and how their actions affect the community. Lapses in applying the values are seen as normal learning experiences, rather than failures. In addition to these five core values, the students explore other values that arise in the read-alouds, such as courage, perseverance, gratitude, and compassion.

The social skills that students learn in the program help them to act on these values in a deliberate way. They learn basic social skills (such as listening to others and taking turns) early in the year, laying the foundation for the more sophisticated skills they learn and practice later in the year, when both their academic work and resulting social interactions become more demanding. (For example, learning how to express appreciation for other people's writing early in the year prepares the students to give and receive specific feedback about their writing later in the year.)

The table on facing page gives an overview of some of the social goals of the program, the social skills taught in support of those goals, and the grade levels at which they are taught.

Social skills are taught when developmentally appropriate; a skill that is formally taught in the primary grades will be reviewed and integrated in subsequent grades.

RANDOM PAIRING

We recommend that you pair students randomly at the beginning of each unit and have those partnerships stay together for the entire unit. Working with the same partner over time helps students work through and learn from problems, build successful methods of interaction, and develop their writing skills together. Random pairing sends several positive messages to the students: there is no hidden agenda or reason behind how you pair students (such as achievement level), every student is considered a valuable partner, and everyone is expected to learn to work with everyone else. Random pairing also results in heterogeneous groupings over time, even though some pairs may be homogeneous in some way during any given unit (for example, both partners may be female). The box below suggests some methods for randomly pairing the students.

Some Random Pairing Methods

- Distribute playing cards and have each student pair up with someone who has the same number or suit color.
- Place identical pairs of number or letter cards in a bag. Have each student pull a card out of the bag and find someone who has the same number or letter.
- Cut magazine pictures in half. Give each student a picture half. Have each student pair up with the person who has the other half of the picture.

For more information about pairing English Language Learners (ELLs), see “Considerations for Pairing ELLs” on page lii.

COOPERATIVE STRUCTURES

Cooperative structures are taught and used at every grade level to increase students’ engagement and accountability for participation. These structures help the students learn to work together, develop social skills, and take responsibility for their learning. Students talk about their thinking and hear about the thinking of others. Cooperative structures are suggested for specific questions throughout the lessons and are highlighted with an icon (🗨️). In addition, you can use cooperative structures whenever you feel that not enough students are participating in a discussion, or, conversely, when many students want to talk at the same time.

Students at all grade levels learn “Turn to Your Partner” and “Think, Pair, Share.” In grades 3–6, you might consider introducing “Heads Together” and “Group Brainstorming,” when appropriate.

Cooperative Structures in the Program

- Turn to Your Partner. Partners turn to one another to discuss a question.
- Think, Pair, Share. Each student thinks individually about a question before discussing his or her thoughts with a partner. Pairs then report their thinking to another pair or to the class. This strategy is especially appropriate when the students are asked to respond to complex questions or when they are developing story ideas.
- Heads Together. Groups of four students discuss a question among themselves. Groups might then share their thoughts with the class.
- Group Brainstorming. Groups of four generate as many ideas as they can about a question as a group member records. These lists are then shared with the class.

PAIR CONFERENCES

In grades 2–6 of the Being a Writer program, the students learn to confer in pairs about their writing. They learn that the purpose of a conference is for partners to help each other improve their writing and that a conference entails not only sharing their writing, but discussing it as well. They learn to initiate and conduct conferences, and they practice both the academic and social skills necessary to discuss particular aspects of their writing, as well as how to ask for, give, and receive helpful feedback.

Partners confer at different stages of the writing process. Sometimes they review their drafts together to simply share their writing. At other times, they confer to give each other feedback about how to improve pieces they want to publish. Often the entire class will confer in pairs as you walk around, observe, and support them. In grades 3–6, the students sometimes initiate their own pair conferences as needed during the writing period, either with a regular writing partner or with another available student.

Through conferring, the students practice listening carefully and taking an interest in other people’s thinking and writing. They learn to focus on specific aspects of their partners’ writing, sometimes asking themselves questions like “Am I getting to know this character’s personality?” or “Can I follow what’s happening? Am I confused at any point?” The students learn to give feedback respectfully and to receive it thoughtfully. Before and after each pair conference session, you facilitate discussions to first help the students plan how they will interact and then to discuss what went well, the problems they had and how they might be avoided, and how they acted responsibly. (For more about pair conferences, see “Managing Pair Conferences” on page xliii.)

Teaching the Program

How the Grade 5 Program Is Organized

In the Being a Writer program at grade 5, there are nine units, each varying in length from one to six weeks. Each week has five days of instruction.

UNITS 1 AND 2

We intend for these units to be taught in order at the beginning of the year. Unit 1 builds the classroom writing community while inspiring the students to tap into their intrinsic motivation to write by drafting many pieces in a variety of genres. Unit 2 introduces them to the writing process as each student selects a draft to revise, proofread, and publish. During these first two units, the students learn the processes, procedures, cooperative structures, and social skills they need to successfully participate in the writing community throughout the year.

GENRE UNITS

The genre units focus on personal and fictional narrative, expository (informative) nonfiction, functional nonfiction, opinion writing, and poetry. They may be taught in any order, although we recommend that you teach the expository nonfiction unit later in the year. Each genre unit begins with an immersion period in which the students hear and read many examples of the genre. During this time, the students try their hand at writing drafts in that genre. Midway through most genre units, each student selects one draft to develop, revise, proofread, and publish for the classroom library.

UNIT 9

Unit 9, the last unit, is taught at the end of the year to help the students reflect on their growth as writers and as members of the classroom writing community.

OVERVIEW OF INSTRUCTION

The Being a Writer program comprises 30 weeks of instruction, which allows time for you to:

- Extend or finish units that take longer than expected
- Provide free writing time so students can practice what they have learned
- Confer with students in a way that is more general than is suggested in the units (see “Teacher Conferences” on page xxxviii)
- Teach Writing About Reading activities, Extensions, and/or Technology Mini-lessons (see “Extending the Instruction” on page xx)

- Teach a unit from the Writing Performance Task Preparation Guide
- Teach writing content not introduced in the Being a Writer program

As you plan the instruction for the year, you might want to build in additional time for these activities. (For example, after the opinion writing unit, you might set aside time to teach the opinion writing unit in the Writing Performance Task Preparation Guide.)

Planning and Teaching the Lessons

We offer the following considerations to help you plan and teach the Being a Writer lessons.

UNIT AND WEEK OVERVIEWS

To prepare to teach a unit, begin by reading the unit's introductory pages. The Resources list specifies the physical materials and the supplemental activities for the entire unit, while the Online Resources list indicates all of the materials that are available digitally on the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). The unit's opening page and the Overview table acquaint you with the goals and general outline of the unit; in genre units, the Development Across the Grades table shows you how instruction within that genre builds across grades.

Poems

Writing Focus
• Students have and discuss good writing.
• Students generate ideas for writing.
• Students write freely about things that interest them.
• Students learn about a professional author's writing practice.

Social Development Focus
• Teacher and students build the writing community.
• Students have procedures for Writing Time and for "Turn to Your Partner."
• Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.
• Students work in a responsible way.
• Students express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing.

DO AHEAD

✓ Plan a space in the classroom, such as a rug area, for the class to gather for read-alouds. The students should sit facing you close enough to see the books you will share with them. If a rug area is not available, plan how the students will arrange their chairs so they can sit facing you.

✓ Collect enough lined writing notebooks and packs of small (1 1/2" x 2") self-stick notes so that every student in the class will have one of each. See "Student Books, Notebooks, and Folders" on page xlii.

✓ Consider reading this unit's read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding. Or, do a picture walk and have partners who speak the same primary language talk to each other in that language about what they see in the illustrations. (continues)

TEACHER AS WRITER

"I write to find out what I'm thinking about."
—Edward Abbey

Being a writer yourself can help you in teaching your students to write. In Teacher as Writer, we offer weekly prompts to help you in your own development as a writer, as well as instructive quotes by well-known writers. We encourage you to start a writing notebook. To write in it at least several times a week, and to share your writing regularly with colleagues who write. (See "Building the Adult Writing Community at Your School" on page li for ideas about creating a writers' group at your school.)

In your notebook this week, describe yourself as a writer. Consider:

- What was writing like for you in school?
- What is it like for you now?
- How do you hope to develop as a writer?

PREPARING THE DAILY LESSONS

Each lesson, generally, is divided into three sections: Getting Ready to Write, Writing Time, and Sharing and Reflecting. Each section has its own requirements in terms of student movement and teacher facilitation. Keep these in mind as you plan to teach the lesson. To prepare:

- Read the bulleted lesson purposes that precede the day's instruction and keep them in mind as you read the entire lesson, including any Student Writing Handbook pages, reproducible materials, and whiteboard activities (WA), and anticipate how your students will respond.
- Collect materials and anticipate room arrangement needs.
- View any professional development media (AV) referred to in the lessons.
- Plan any teacher modeling required in the lesson.
- Review suggested discussion questions and decide which ones you will ask. Also review the week's Facilitation Tip and look for opportunities in the lesson to use facilitation techniques.

- Plan how you will pace the lesson to keep it moving. A lesson (including writing time) is designed to take, on average, 35–40 minutes at grades K–2 and 45–60 minutes at grades 3–6.
- Review any optional activities and decide if and when you want to do them with the class. Some require additional materials or preparation.

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT MEDIA

Brief videos created for the second edition of the Being a Writer program help you with effective implementation. The videos, intended for viewing when planning lessons, provide a range of support, including tips for teaching various genres and conferring with the students, demonstrations of teachers modeling specific techniques (such as approximating spelling and punctuating sentences), and examples of students using cooperative structures. For a complete list of professional development media, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

HELPFUL LESSON FEATURES

The lessons include a number of features that help you navigate the instruction and that provide background information and tips. These lesson features are listed below.

Helpful Lesson Features

- Beginning-of-year Considerations. This feature appears in the Overview of each week in Unit 1 in kindergarten and grade 1. It provides information about how you might modify these early lessons based on where your students are developmentally.
- Topic Notes. These notes appear at the beginning of some lessons and provide background information about important aspects of the instruction, including lesson structure, purpose, pedagogy, and approach.
- Teacher Notes. These notes appear in the lesson margins and alert you to such information as the purposes of different activities, materials to be collected or saved, hints for managing the lesson, and ways to support the students.
- ELL Notes. These notes suggest various strategies to support English Language Learners (ELLs) during a lesson.
- Skill Practice Notes. In grades 1–6, these notes refer to specific lessons in each grade's Skill Practice Teaching Guide that provide direct instruction or additional practice with specific skills and conventions. The lessons identified in the notes are relevant to the writing that the students are doing in the core instruction.

(continues)

Helpful Lesson Features (continued)

- Facilitation Tips. These notes suggest techniques you can use to facilitate class discussions (for example, asking open-ended questions, using wait-time, and not paraphrasing or repeating students' responses) in order to increase participation and encourage deeper conversations among your students.
- Cooperative Structure Icons. These icons indicate where in the lesson students work in pairs or small groups and where the cooperative structures "Turn to Your Partner" and "Think, Pair, Share" are used.
- Suggested Vocabulary. This feature identifies words in a read-aloud that you might want to define for your students as you read. We selected vocabulary words based on how crucial they are to understanding the text and on the unlikelihood that students will be able to glean their meaning from the context. Definitions are provided.
- ELL Vocabulary. This feature identifies and defines additional words in a read-aloud that you may want to address with your ELLs.
- "Students might say." This feature gives you ideas of the kinds of responses you might expect from your students. If the students have difficulty answering a question, you can suggest some ideas in the "Students might say" note and then ask them to generate additional ideas.
- "You might say." This feature provides sample language you can draw on when you model writing, revising, and proofreading, incorporating skill instruction as you do so. Providing the students with opportunities to see you model writing while thinking aloud helps them apply the instruction to their own writing.
- Chart Diagrams. These diagrams illustrate charting techniques and examples of text generated by the class or by teacher modeling. (For more information about the charts used in the program, see "Charts" on page xli.)
- Technology Tips. These notes suggest ways you might integrate technology in the writing lessons. In grades 3–6, they also refer to Technology Mini-lessons, which instruct students on topics such as how to navigate safely online and how to conduct online research. (For more information, see "Technology Mini-lessons" on page xlvi.)
- 2D Barcodes. You can scan these 2D barcodes with an app installed on your smartphone or tablet device to gain instant access to professional development and instructional media.
- Teacher Conference Notes. These notes help you confer with individual students during the writing lessons. (See "Teacher Conferences" on the following page.)
- Class Assessment Notes. These notes help you observe and assess the whole class during pair conferences and Writing Time. (See "Assessments" on page xxxix.)
- End-of-unit Considerations. This feature provides information on wrapping up a unit and conducting final unit assessments.

TEACHER CONFERENCES

Early in the year, you will begin conferring with individual students during the writing lessons. The purposes of these conferences are to assess and support individual students in their writing. You can keep an ongoing record of your conferences by documenting your observations and suggestions for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN).

- Conferring During the Units. Your initial conference focuses on just getting to know the students as writers—their skills, motivation, and interests. As the year progresses, you will focus more on particular aspects of writing that you have taught in the lessons. The Teacher Conference Notes suggest questions to guide your thinking as you read a student’s writing and listen to him or her read and talk about it. These questions are followed by suggestions for supporting the student based on what you noticed. The conferences in each unit focus on reinforcing the teaching you have done so far in that unit. During each unit, we encourage you to confer with every student at least once or twice, depending on the length of the unit.
- Additional Conferring. We suggest that, when possible, you conduct additional conferences with individual students during any free writing time, broadening your focus to respond more generally to their writing. Point out and discuss things that you might otherwise skip over during a unit conference, such as misused words (for example, there/their/they’re), missing punctuation, run-on sentences, or a tendency to “tell” rather than “show” (for example, The dog was happy versus The dog wagged his tail and jumped in circles while barking happily). In addition, you can discuss questions like:

- Q What are you writing?
- Q Where did you get the idea for this piece?
- Q What have you learned about good writing that you can use in this piece?
- Q What is one question you want to ask me about your piece?
- Q What do you want help with?

In the conferences, it is helpful to use a tone of genuine interest and curiosity to foster students’ confidence and willingness to learn about writing. You can point out elements of writing you see them experimenting with (“When I read the sentence ‘I crunched the red leaves with my feet,’ I could hear those dry, autumn leaves”) and ask open-ended questions about their writing (“What other words can you include to help your reader imagine what it’s like in this park?” or “What were you thinking about when you changed the words in this sentence?”). When teaching directly, it helps to discuss conventions in terms of how authors communicate with readers (“Let me show you how writers let us know when one character stops speaking and another one begins”), rather than simply following a rule (“All speech must have quotation marks”).

Assessments

The Being a Writer assessments have two main purposes: to help you make informed instructional decisions as you teach the program and to help you track your students' writing and social development over time. The program provides a range of assessments, including both formative and summative assessment tools.

Each assessment has a corresponding record sheet in the Assessment Resource Book. You may choose to record your students' progress using printed copies of the forms from the Assessment Resource Book or through the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). Alternatively, you can use the CCC ClassView app to electronically record, sort, synthesize, and report assessment data for each student and the whole class. For more information, see "CCC ClassView App" on page xlv.

FORMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Formative assessments help you reflect on your students' academic and social growth over time through class observation, individual conferences, and analysis of student writing. Formative assessments in the program comprise the following:

- Class Assessment. Class Assessment Notes within the lessons occur about once per week. They are designed to help you assess the writing and sometimes the social performance of the whole class. During this assessment, we suggest that you walk around and observe students working individually or in pairs (perhaps selecting strong, average, and struggling writers to observe). Ask yourself the questions in the Class Assessment Note and follow up with the suggested interventions, if necessary. You can record your observations on the corresponding "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA).
- Teacher Conferences and Student Goals and Interests Survey. Teacher Conference Notes provide you with specific questions related to the students' writing that you might ask yourself or a student when conferring individually. Many notes also include suggestions for supporting struggling students. You can record your observations from each conference on the corresponding "Conference Notes" record sheet (CN). We encourage you to confer with each student at least twice per unit.

You might use the questions listed in the first Teacher Conference Note in the program as a beginning-of-year survey of your students' goals and interests. The questions in the final Teacher Conference Note of the year can serve as an end-of-year survey of the students' perceptions of their growth as writers, attitudes toward writing, and goals for summer writing.

- Student Self-assessment (Optional). At grades 2–6, this assessment is included in all units in which the students formally publish a piece of writing. The “Student Self-assessment” record sheet (SA) provides questions for the students to think about as they analyze their published pieces for characteristics of good writing. The self-assessment also invites the students to think about what they did well in their writing and what they want to continue to work on.
- Beginning- and End-of-year Writing Samples (Optional). This assessment can be used to determine a baseline for individual students’ writing ability. The students are asked to write in response to a prompt and are encouraged to incorporate what they know about good writing and the writing process into their pieces. You can analyze each student’s writing using the “Beginning-of-year Writing Sample Record” sheet (WS).

You can follow the same procedure to obtain end-of-year writing samples, and then analyze each student’s writing using the “End-of-year Writing Sample Record” sheet (WS). You can then compare the two pieces to evaluate the students’ progress made over the course of the school year.

For more information about the formative assessments in the program, see “Assessments” on page vi of the Assessment Resource Book.

SUMMATIVE ASSESSMENTS

Summative assessments allow you to evaluate and score each student’s writing for units in which the students produce a final or published piece of writing.

- Social Skills Assessment. At grades 1–6, the Social Skills Assessment allows you to note how well each student is learning and applying the social skills taught in the program. In addition to social skills, this assessment allows you to track how well each student integrates the values of responsibility, respect, fairness, caring, and helpfulness into his or her behavior. We recommend that you assess your students’ social development three times per year (at the beginning, middle, and end of the year), using the “Social Skills Assessment Record” sheet (SS).
- Individual Writing Assessment. This end-of-unit assessment is designed to help you assess growth in individual students’ writing. If needed, the “Individual Writing Assessment” record sheet (IA) can be used to help you assign grades.

For more information about the summative assessments in the program, see “Assessments” on page vi of the Assessment Resource Book.

Tips for Managing the Program in Your Classroom

We offer the following suggestions to help you manage the Being a Writer program in your classroom.

ROOM ARRANGEMENT AND MATERIALS

- We recommend a classroom arrangement that allows for quiet individual writing at desks, regular partner work at desks, and whole-class gatherings and discussion. A rug or classroom library area is ideal for whole-class gathering. If this is not possible, think of a way to have the students face and sit close enough to you to hear and see the read-alouds and participate in discussions.
- Plan a place and a chair (sometimes two) to use for Author’s Chair sharing.
- Free up wall space for a word wall (at K–2 only) and for posting paper charts generated in the lessons.
- Gather writing and publishing materials in a central location, and make students responsible for maintaining this area neatly. Materials might include lined and unlined paper, pencils, pens, pads of self-stick notes, highlighters, crayons or markers, construction paper, staplers, and any other desired materials for making books (such as hole punches and string).

CHARTS

In the Being a Writer program, charts are used to model shared writing, show sample writing, list ideas, and display writing tasks. The program features both paper charts and digital whiteboard charts. The latter are referred to in the lessons as whiteboard activity (WA) charts and are accessed via the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org). If your classroom is not equipped with an interactive whiteboard, you can print the whiteboard activity charts and display them using a projection device. The weekly Do Ahead section and daily Materials lists make clear which type of chart will be used for any specific task. In cases where a chart needs to be displayed throughout the week, unit, or year, we recommend using paper charts. (Write large enough so the charts can be read from a distance.) For more information, see the “Using CCC’s Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV73).

STUDENT BOOKS, NOTEBOOKS, AND FOLDERS

- Each student in grades 2–6 is responsible for maintaining a Student Writing Handbook, a Student Skill Practice Book (optional), a writing notebook, and a writing folder for loose papers and works-in-progress. Students in grade 1 use all of the above materials except a Student Writing Handbook. Label the covers of all of these with the students’ names, and encourage the students to be responsible for maintaining these in good shape in their desks. These materials should stay in the classroom during the year, rather than go home with the students.
- Each student in grades 1–6 uses a writing notebook. Because writing notebooks are not included with the program, you will need to provide each student with a writing notebook at the beginning of the year (or have the students bring their own from home). We strongly recommend full-size notebooks (no smaller than a 7" × 9" composition book) with firmly bound pages, sturdy covers, and line spacing appropriate for your grade level. Being a Writer composition books are available for additional purchase on Center for the Collaborative Classroom’s website (collaborativeclassroom.org).
- The writing folders can be file folders or pocket folders, or they can be made out of folded construction paper or card stock.
- In kindergarten, we suggest that you provide writing folders to organize the students’ writing during the week. You might distribute them daily and collect them at the end of each writing period. You may wish to establish another system for managing the flow of student papers. For example, you may ask the students to place their completed work in a box on your desk and to keep works-in-progress in folders stored in their cubbies.

MANAGING WORKFLOW

- Establish procedures to help the students move works-in-progress through the writing process. For example, when a student finishes his or her final version and makes it into a book, the student might place it in a “Publication” basket in the corner of the class library to be read aloud during an upcoming Author’s Chair sharing time.

MANAGING PAIR CONFERENCES

- When the whole class is conferring in pairs, you might have pairs of students spread out around the room so they can more easily focus and hear one another. (Students learn specific procedures for conferring in pairs during the lessons.)
- In grades 3–6, when students initiate their own pair conferences during Writing Time, you might designate an area of the room where they may go to talk, away from other students who are working quietly.

Using the Technology Features

The Being a Writer program incorporates digital technology to enhance your students' learning experience and streamline your preparation, instruction, and assessment processes.

Digital Teacher Resources

The program comprises a suite of digital resources, including the Being a Writer Digital Teacher's Set set as well as access to the CCC Learning Hub and the CCC ClassView app.

DIGITAL TEACHER'S SET

The Being a Writer Digital Teacher's Set includes electronic versions of the Teacher's Manual, Assessment Resource Book, Skill Practice Teaching Guide, and Writing Performance Task Preparation Guide for use on a tablet device or computer. Features of the Digital Teacher's Set include linked cross-references and direct access to the CCC Learning Hub, the CCC ClassView app (see the next page for more information), and professional development media.

CCC LEARNING HUB

The CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) is your source for the following resources:

- Whiteboard activity charts to display or print
- Printable blackline masters, such as family letters and student handouts
- Digital reference copy of the Student Writing Handbook
- Digital reference copy of the Student Skill Practice Book
- A link to the CCC ClassView app, as well as direct links to printable or interactive assessment forms
- Professional development and instructional media

For more information, see the “Using the CCC Learning Hub” tutorial (AV82).

CCC CLASSVIEW APP

The CCC ClassView app is an online application that contains all of the forms and instructions available in the Assessment Resource Book. This tool also enables you to collect, sort, synthesize, and report assessment data for each student electronically. You can access the app by tapping the assessment icon links in the Digital Teacher's Set, visiting the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org), or going directly to the CCC ClassView app (classview.org). For more information about the CCC ClassView app, view the “Using the CCC ClassView App” tutorial (AV80).

Additional Technology Features

Additional lesson features integrate technology into the program in a variety of ways.

TECHNOLOGY TIPS

These notes, located in the margins of the core lessons, suggest ways to incorporate technology into the instruction or list related professional development media that support your use of technology in the classroom.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSIONS

These optional activities identify ways in which you can use technology to extend instruction, when appropriate. For example, students might listen to and discuss an online interview with an author or publish their writing in an online format such as a class blog.

TECHNOLOGY TUTORIALS

These videos help you understand how to effectively implement the program's technology features and how to use widely available technology, such as presentation tools. They include:

- “Getting Started with Your Print Teacher's Manual” (K–6)
- “Getting Started with Your Digital Teacher's Set” (K–6)
- “Using the CCC Learning Hub” (K–6)
- “Using CCC's Whiteboard Activities” (K–6)
- “Using the CCC ClassView App” (K–6)
- “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” (3–6)
- “Using Web-based Teaching Resources” (K–6)
- “Using Presentation Tools” (3–6)
- “Creating a Class Blog” (3–6)
- “Using Social Networking Sites” (3–6)

TECHNOLOGY MINI-LESSONS

These optional lessons, located in Appendix A in grades 3–6, instruct students on a variety of technology subjects. These lessons include:

- “Navigating Safely Online”
- “Maintaining Privacy Online”
- “Showing Respect Online” (grades 4–6 only)
- “Choosing Effective Search Terms”
- “Understanding Search Results”
- “Using Filters to Narrow Results”
- “Evaluating Research Sources”
- “Citing Online Sources” (grades 4–6 only)
- “Creating Documents”
- “Creating Presentations”

Special Considerations

Teaching the Program in Multi-age Classrooms

If you are teaching a multi-age class, we recommend that you choose the level of the program that is appropriate for the majority of your students to use throughout the school year. Since the program provides plenty of time for writing practice and individual conferences, all of your students will be able to develop comfortably as writers even if the lessons are designed for students at a lower or higher grade level.

Supporting English Language Learners (ELLs)

The Being a Writer program helps you implement effective teaching strategies to meet the needs of all students, including ELLs. (For more information, see “How the Being a Writer Program Supports ELLs” on page xlviii.)

While the program is an effective tool in teaching writing to ELLs, it is not intended to stand alone as a comprehensive linguistic development program. It is assumed that additional support in second language acquisition is occurring for ELLs outside of this program.

ABOUT TEACHING WRITING TO ELLs

One myth about teaching ELLs is that good teaching alone will meet their linguistic and academic needs, that they will simply “pick up” the language in the typical classroom context. While “good teaching” (developmental, research-based instructional strategies) certainly benefits ELLs enormously, it is important to target their specific academic and linguistic strengths and needs. The first step is to develop an accurate picture of each student’s English language proficiency level and previous academic experience.

STAGES OF SECOND LANGUAGE ACQUISITION

Learning a new language is a developmental process. The following table outlines the generally accepted stages of acquiring a language and the characteristics of students at each stage. Progress from one stage to the next depends on a wide variety of factors, including cognitive and social development and maturity, previous academic experience, family education and home literacy practices, personality, cultural background, and individual learning styles.

Stages of Second Language Acquisition

Developmental Stages of Language Proficiency (under immersion)	Student Characteristics
Stage 1: Receptive or Preproduction (can last up to 6 months)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Often nonverbal during this period Acquires receptive vocabulary (words and ideas that children “take in” or learn before they begin to produce words verbally) Conveys understanding through drawing, writing, and gesturing Gradually becomes more comfortable in the classroom
Stage 2: Early Production (can last 6 months to 1 year)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Uses one- to two-word answers Verbally labels and categorizes Listens more attentively Writes words and some simple sentences
Stage 3: Speech Emergence (can last 1 to 3 years)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Speaks in phrases, short sentences Sequences stories using words and pictures Writes simple sentences
Stage 4: Intermediate Fluency (can last 3 to 5 years)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Uses increased vocabulary Speaks, reads, and writes more complex sentences Demonstrates higher-order skills, such as analyzing, predicting, debating, etc.
Stage 5: Advanced Fluency (can last 5 to 7 years)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Demonstrates a high level of comprehension Continues to develop academic vocabulary Continues to speak, read, and write increasingly complex sentences

HOW THE BEING A WRITER PROGRAM SUPPORTS ELLs

English Language Development strategies are an inherent part of the program’s design. In addition, the program suggests ways to modify the instruction to enhance support for ELLs. There are a number of effective English Language Development (ELD) instructional strategies integrated throughout the Being a Writer program. These strategies help make the content comprehensible, support students at their individual level of language proficiency, and help students see themselves as valuable members of the classroom community. The table on the next page shows the ELD strategies used in Being a Writer.

English Language Development (ELD) Strategies in the Being a Writer Program

Emphasis on writing as meaningful expression	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Balanced approach to listening, speaking, reading, and writing Teacher questioning Explicit teacher modeling Writing in narrative, expository (informative), and opinion genres Activating prior knowledge Making connections (i.e., text-to-self) Building intrinsic motivation through providing choice
Visual aids and engaging materials	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Rich, meaningful literature Engaging book art Emphasis on writing and illustration Teacher modeling of writing, revising, and proofreading
Explicit vocabulary instruction	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Opportunities to preview and discuss read-alouds before lessons Building academic vocabulary Brainstorming lists of words to use in students' writing
Creating a respectful, safe learning community	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Active, responsible learning High expectations for classroom interactions Explicit classroom procedures and routines Explicit social skills instruction Regular discussions to reflect on classroom values and community
Cooperative learning	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Cooperative structures ("Turn to Your Partner" and "Think, Pair, Share") Ongoing peer partnerships Opportunities to express thinking orally and listen to others' thinking Sharing work and reflecting

ADDITIONAL STRATEGIES FOR SUPPORTING ELLs

In addition to the practices embedded in the Being a Writer lessons, ELL Notes provide specific suggestions for adapting instruction to meet the needs of ELLs. In addition, you can implement a number of general strategies to help ELLs participate more fully in the program. These include:

- Speaking slowly. Beginning English speakers can miss a great deal when the language goes by too quickly. Modifying your rate of speech can make a big difference in helping them to understand you.

- Using visual aids and technology. Photographs, realia (real objects), diagrams, and even quick sketches on the board can help to increase a student’s comprehension. When giving directions, physically modeling the steps and writing them on the board while saying them aloud are effective ways to boost comprehension. Audiovisual resources such as recordings of books read aloud, author interviews, and interactive versions of read-alouds can also be helpful.
- Inviting expression through movement and art. Having students express their thinking through movement and art can be enormously powerful. Drawing, painting, dancing, mimicking, role-playing, acting, singing, and chanting rhymes are effective ways for students to increase comprehension, build vocabulary, and convey understanding. The Total Physical Response (TPR) method, developed by James Asher, helps children build concepts and vocabulary by giving them increasingly complex verbal prompts (stand, sit, jump, etc.) that they act out physically and nonverbally (see Bibliography on page 757).
- Building vocabulary. ELL vocabulary is highlighted for most read-alouds in the program, and we recommend that you introduce this vocabulary (discuss it, act it out, draw it, etc.) and define it during the reading. In addition, you might brainstorm words related to particular read-alouds or themes (see the example below). The students can then illustrate each word and post the illustrations next to the printed words, creating a visual chart to refer to as they write.

Ideas for “First Time” Stories

tooth	broken bone	ocean
kindergarten	sleepover	birthday
baby brother	airplane	friend
apartment	bike	snow

- Preteaching. It is a good idea to preteach concepts with ELLs, when possible. This can mean previewing vocabulary, doing a picture walk of a story, or looking at realia or photographs before a lesson. Preteaching in a student’s primary language can be particularly effective—teachers, instructional aides, parents, or other community members can be enlisted to help. Some of the Being a Writer read-aloud books are available in Spanish. For a list of these titles, visit Center for the Collaborative Classroom’s website (collaborativeclassroom.org).

- Simplifying questions. Open-ended questions are used throughout the Being a Writer program to elicit language and higher-order thinking from students. These questions are often more complex in structure than closed or one-word-answer questions. While all learners, including ELLs, benefit from the opportunity to consider such questions, you might modify complicated questions into simpler ones to increase comprehension and participation by your ELLs. The table below lists some suggestions for simplifying questions.

Suggestions for Simplifying Questions

Suggestion	Original Question	Simplified Question
Use the simple present tense.	What was happening at the beginning of the story?	What happens at the beginning of the story?
Use active rather than passive voice.	How was the window broken in the story?	Who broke the window in the story?
Ask who/what/where/when questions rather than how/why questions.	How are you and your partner working together?	What do you and your partner do to work well together?
Avoid the subjunctive.	If you were going to write about a family member, what might you write?	You will write a story about someone in your family. What will you write?
Provide definitions in the question.	Why is the old woman so reluctant to name the dog?	The old woman is reluctant ; she does not want to name the dog. Why?
Provide context clues as part of the question.	What happens at the beginning of the story?	Peter wakes up and it is snowing. What else happens at the beginning of the story?
Elicit nonverbal responses. (Stages 1-3)	What do you see in this picture that tells about the words?	This picture shows the sentence "I like to paint." Point to the paints. Point to the paintbrushes.
Elicit responses of 1-2 words or short phrases. (Stages 1-3)	What do you think will happen when Peter puts the snowball in his pocket?	Peter puts the snowball in his pocket. Is that a good idea?

- Assessing comprehension. When students are in the preproduction and early production stages of language acquisition, it can be hard to assess exactly what they understand. It is important not to confuse lack of verbal response with lack of understanding. Rather than force ELLs to produce language before they are ready (which can raise anxiety and inhibit their progress), you can assess nonverbal responses while the students are actively engaged by asking yourself questions such as:

- Q Do the student’s drawings and written symbols communicate thinking or show evidence of my teaching (such as completing a frame sentence and illustrating it appropriately, or including a beginning, middle, and end in a story)?
- Q Does the student nod, laugh, or demonstrate engagement through other facial expressions?
- Q Does the student pick up academic and social cues from peers?
- Q Does the student follow classroom signals and routines?
- Q Does the student follow simple directions (such as “Please get out your writing notebooks and pencils”)?
- Q Does the student utter, chant, or sing some familiar words or phrases?

By carefully observing your ELLs and employing some of the strategies suggested here (as well as those in the ELL Notes in the lessons), you will be able to support your students’ development as writers and as caring, collaborative participants in your writing community.

CONSIDERATIONS FOR PAIRING ELLs

A key practice in the Being a Writer program is to have students work in unit-long partnerships. Random pairing is suggested as a way to ensure equity by reinforcing the value of each child in the classroom (see “Random Pairing” on page xxix). However, when considering the needs of ELLs, it may be advantageous to partner these students in a more strategic way. You might pair a beginning English speaker with a fluent English or multilingual speaker. It can be effective if the multilingual partner shares the ELL’s primary language, but we recommend prudence in asking the more fluent English speaker to serve as translator. Another option is to place ELLs in trios with fluent English speakers to allow them more opportunity to hear the language spoken in conversation. In this case, it is important to make sure that all three students are participating and including one another in the work.

Building the Home-School Connection

Keeping families informed about their children’s participation in the Being a Writer program helps family members understand and appreciate how their children are developing as writers and how they can support that development.

FAMILY LETTERS

We provide a letter to send home with the students at the end of each unit, available in both English and Spanish. Each letter describes the unit’s focus, instruction, and social development goals and offers suggestions for encouraging writing development at home. The family letters are included in the Online Resources list for each unit and can be accessed via the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org).

Building the Adult Writing Community at Your School

Being a writer yourself helps you understand the writing process and the joys and struggles that come with writing. Writing regularly informs both your instructional decisions and your interactions with individual students about their writing. We strongly encourage you to become part of an active writing community that will support you in your own development as a writer. Some particularly powerful activities for building a writing community are listed below.

TEACHER AS WRITER

The Teacher as Writer section at the beginning of each week offers writing prompts and instructive quotes by well-known writers to inspire you. The prompts relate to the writing focuses for the students that week.

We suggest that you start a writing notebook and write in it several times a week, both in school during the daily Writing Time and outside of school. Find opportunities to share your writing regularly with a writing partner or group.

STARTING A WRITERS' GROUP AT YOUR SCHOOL

To start a writers' group at your school, find other adults (including teachers, administrators, parents, and other school staff) who are interested in writing regularly and supporting one another in writing. If there is a lot of interest, consider starting more than one writers' group to keep any one group from becoming too large. Schedule meetings at regular intervals (every month, every six weeks, or every other month) to share and discuss writing. Meetings can take place on or off school grounds, and the format can range from formal to informal. Many sources of information about how to start and conduct a writers' group are available online; search for this information using the keywords "starting a writers' group."

Using Being a Writer with Other Programs from Center for the Collaborative Classroom

Center for the Collaborative Classroom has developed other programs that can be used in conjunction with Being a Writer in a language arts curriculum. For more information about any of these programs, visit Center for the Collaborative Classroom's website (collaborativeclassroom.org).

Unit 1

The Writing Community

During this three-week unit, the students begin to see themselves as contributing members of a caring writing community. They hear and discuss examples of good writing and begin to learn about the writing practices of professional authors. They explore prewriting techniques and write freely in their writing notebooks about things that interest them. They learn cooperative structures that they will use throughout the year, as well as discussion prompts to help them listen and connect their comments during class discussions. Finally, they begin conferring with one another about their writing in a caring and responsible way.

Week 1

OVERVIEW

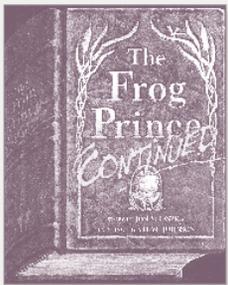

The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs!

by Jon Scieszka, illustrated by Lane Smith
Here is the “true story” of this familiar tale, as told by the wolf.

Scranimals

Poems by Jack Prelutsky, pictures by Peter Sís
Birds, beasts, vegetables, and flowers scramble to create wild fantasy creatures.

The Frog Prince Continued

by Jon Scieszka, illustrated by Steve Johnson
The frog prince wants to be turned back into a frog.

Poems

“Lemonade” and “Backyard Bubbles”

by Rebecca Kai Dotlich (see pages 26–27)
Summer poems make us think of cool drinks and bubble blowing.

Article

“About Jon Scieszka”

excerpted from Author Talk compiled and edited by Leonard S. Marcus (see pages 24–25)
Jon Scieszka answers questions about what he was like as a child and how he gets ideas for writing.

TEACHER AS WRITER

“I write to find out what I’m thinking about.”

— Edward Albee

Being a writer yourself can help you in teaching your students to write. In Teacher as Writer, we offer weekly prompts to help you in your own development as a writer, as well as instructive quotes by well-known writers. We encourage you to start a writing notebook, to write in it at least several times a week, and to share your writing regularly with colleagues who write. (See “Building the Adult Writing Community at Your School” on page liii for ideas about creating a writers’ group at your school.)

In your notebook this week, describe yourself as a writer. Consider:

- What was writing like for you in school?
- What is it like for you now?
- How do you hope to develop as a writer?

Writing Focus

- Students hear and discuss good writing.
- Students generate ideas for writing.
- Students write freely about things that interest them.
- Students learn about a professional author’s writing practice.

Social Development Focus

- Teacher and students build the writing community.
- Students learn procedures for Writing Time and for “Turn to Your Partner.”
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.
- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Plan a space in the classroom, such as a rug area, for the class to gather for read-alouds. The students should sit facing you, close enough to see the books you will share with them. If a rug area is not available, plan how the students will arrange their chairs so they can sit facing you.
- ✓ Collect enough lined writing notebooks and pads of small (1½" × 2") self-stick notes so that every student in the class will have one of each. See “Student Books, Notebooks, and Folders” on page xlii.
- ✓ Consider reading this unit’s read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding. Or, do a picture walk and have partners who speak the same primary language talk to each other in that language about what they see in the illustrations.

(continues)

DO AHEAD (continued)

- ✓ Prior to Day 2, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during Units 1 and 2. For suggestions about assigning partners, see “Random Pairing” on page xxix and “Considerations for Pairing ELLs” on page lii. For more information, view “Cooperative Structures Overview” (AV9).
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, prepare to distribute a Student Writing Handbook to each student.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1) on page 6 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2) on page 7 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ (Optional) Plan a time during the first month of school to obtain a beginning-of-year writing sample from your students. For more information on how to obtain this writing sample, see “Obtaining a Beginning-of-year Writing Sample” on page 2 of the Assessment Resource Book.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Learn the procedure for gathering
- Gather in a responsible way
- Become familiar with their writing notebooks

ABOUT WRITING INSTRUCTION EARLY IN THE YEAR

All growth and learning in the art and craft of writing depend on a solid foundation of abundant, uninhibited writing. To get enough sheer practice with the physical and mental act of writing during their elementary school years, students must tap into their intrinsic motivation to write. Unit 1 helps students develop this motivation by inspiring them to write freely and daily about things that interest them. Engaging read-alouds are used to stimulate creativity and as examples to inspire writing. In this unit, it is more important for the students to write generously, free from concerns about making it right or “good,” than it is for them to write complete, correct pieces.

To support the students’ writing practice in Unit 1, formal skill instruction is delayed until Unit 2. It continues in the “Revision, Proofreading, and Publishing” phase of all the genre units. For the time being, relax your expectations about the students’ spelling and grammatical correctness, and encourage them to just write freely, getting their ideas down on paper.

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Introduce the Writing Community

Introduce the Being a Writer program by explaining that this year the students will be members of a classroom writing community. In the community, they will write about things they are interested in, share and talk about their writing, learn about what professional authors do, and become stronger writers. Ask and briefly discuss as a class:

- Q What are some things you’ve written?
- Q What are some reasons you write, in or out of school?

Students might say:

- “I write when I leave my parents a note about where I’m going.”
- “I have to write a list of things to do for homework every week.”
- “I wrote a long story about a field trip we took in fourth grade.”

Explain that writers constantly read examples of good writing to help them get ideas for their own writing and to give them a sense of the way

Materials

- The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs!
- “Ideas for Retelling Fairy Tales” chart (WA1)
- Writing notebook and a pencil for each student
- Self-stick note for each student

Teacher Note

For more information, view “Setting Up Procedures for the Year” (AV5).

Teacher Note

For more information, view “Building a Community of Writers” (AV1).

Technology Tip

The videos above are two in a series of professional development videos in the Being a Writer program. For more information about the content of the videos and how to view them, see “Professional Development Media” on page xxxvi.

Teacher Note

If you are teaching the Being a Writer program with other programs from Center for the Collaborative Classroom, these notes alert you to connections between them.

If the students have already learned a procedure for gathering for a read-aloud, use the same procedure for gathering to discuss writing. Take this opportunity to remind the students of the procedure and your expectations.

Teacher Note

When more than one question appears next to a Q, ask the first question, discuss it, and follow up with the subsequent questions.

Teacher Note

Sieszka is pronounced "SHEHS-kah."

Teacher Note

The pages of The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! are unnumbered. For easy reference, pencil in page numbers, beginning with the number 1 on the right-hand title page that includes the author's name. (Page 5 begins "Everybody knows the story of the Three Little Pigs. Or at least they think they do.") This system is used throughout the program for all read-alouds with unnumbered pages.

good writing looks and sounds. This year the students will have many opportunities to hear, read, and discuss good writing.

2 Learn and Practice the Procedure for Gathering to Discuss Writing

Explain that the class will gather to hear a read-aloud. Explain that you would like the students to gather and sit facing you, either on a rug or in their seats. Before asking the students to move, state your expectations.

You might say:

"I expect you to move quickly, quietly, and without bumping into one another."

Ask:

Q What do you want to keep in mind to make moving go smoothly?

Have the students move to their places. Ask:

Q What did you do to be responsible as you moved? What might you do differently when we try it again?

If the students have difficulty answering the questions, you might share your own observations.

You might say:

"I noticed you were careful not to bump into anyone on your way to the rug. You came straight to the rug instead of doing something else first. Next time you might try moving more quietly."

If necessary, have the students return to their desks and practice the procedure until they are able to gather in an orderly way. Explain that the students will use the same procedure every time they gather to talk about writing.

Explain that today you will read aloud an example of good writing. Invite the students both to enjoy the story and to think about what it would be like to write such a story.

3 Read The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! Aloud

Show the cover of The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! and read the title and names of the author and illustrator aloud. Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations as you read. Clarify vocabulary as you encounter it in the text by reading the word, briefly defining it, rereading it in context, and continuing (for example, "I was framed"—framed means 'made to look guilty with false evidence'—"I was framed").

Suggested Vocabulary

framed: made to look guilty with false evidence (p. 31)

4 Discuss the Story

Ask and briefly discuss the questions that follow. Be ready to reread from the book to help the students recall what they heard.

- Q Who is telling this story? Why is that surprising?
- Q If you were going to retell a fairy tale, which one would you choose?
- Q Which character would you choose to tell the story? Why?

Students might say:

"I would tell the story of 'Snow White,' and the witch would be telling the story."

"I would retell 'Little Red Riding Hood' from the wolf's point of view."

"I could write a story about a nice little fox and an evil red hen."

Display the "Ideas for Retelling Fairy Tales" chart (WA1). As the students offer ideas, record two or three of them as brief notes on the chart.

Ideas for Retelling Fairy Tales

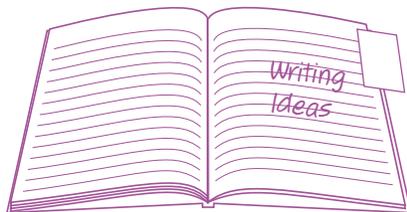

- "Snow White" with the witch telling the story
- "Little Red Riding Hood" from the wolf's point of view
- nice little fox and evil red hen

WA1

WRITING TIME

5 Introduce Writing Notebooks

Distribute a writing notebook, a pencil, and a self-stick note to each student. Explain that this year the students will do all their drafting, or first-time writing, in their notebooks. They will also keep ongoing lists of writing ideas in the backs of their notebooks. Have the students count back ten pages from the backs of their notebooks, mark that page with the self-stick note, and write "Writing Ideas" in big letters on that page. Explain that the students will list all their ideas this year in this section of their notebooks.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering these questions, offer some examples like those in the "Students might say" note.

Technology Tip

Whiteboard activities (WA) are digital charts that are intended to be displayed using an interactive whiteboard. Alternatively, you may print the PDF versions of the whiteboard activities and project them using a projection device. For more information, view the "Using CCC's Whiteboard Activities" tutorial (AV73).

On the first blank page of the writing ideas section, have each student write “Ideas for Retelling Fairy Tales” at the top of the page. Have the students copy ideas they like from the class chart and then add other ideas for fairy tales they could retell. Encourage them to talk to students sitting near them to get ideas.

After a few moments, call for the students’ attention. Have them share a few more ideas, and add these to the chart.

Explain that the students will begin drafting in their notebooks tomorrow and that they may wish to use their ideas from today. Have the students write their names on their notebooks. Explain that you will remind them to bring the notebooks with them when they gather to talk about writing.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Reflect and Adjourn

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you like about writing in your notebook today?

Tell the students how you would like them to return to their seats and have them return. If necessary, have them practice moving to their seats until they are able to move in an orderly way. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you do to be responsible as you moved back to your seat?

If the students have difficulty answering the question, you might share your own observations.

You might say:

“I noticed you returned to your seats quickly and quietly, without bumping into one another.”

Ask the students to put their notebooks in their desks to use again tomorrow.

Teacher Note

You might tell the students that when they are being responsible, they are acting in ways that help them learn, work well with others, and make the classroom a caring and respectful learning community.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story
- Begin working in pairs
- Learn “Turn to Your Partner”
- Learn procedures for the silent writing period
- Write freely about things that interest them

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Pair the Students and Introduce “Turn to Your Partner”

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other’s names (see “Do Ahead” on page 6). Explain that pairs will stay together for Writing Time during the next few weeks.

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that you will often ask partners to turn and talk to each other. The purpose is to give everyone a chance to think more about what they’re learning by talking to another person.

Explain the “Turn to Your Partner” procedure by saying, “Sometimes I will ask a question and say ‘Turn to your partner.’ When you hear this, you will turn to face your partner and talk about the question. When I raise my hand, you will finish what you’re saying, raise your own hand so others can see the signal, and turn back to face me.”

2 Model “Turn to Your Partner”

Have a student act as your partner, and model turning to face each other and introducing yourselves by your full names. Then ask partners to turn to face each other and introduce themselves. After a moment, raise your hand and have them turn back to face you.

Practice again by asking:

Q What are you interested in writing (or) writing about this year? Turn to your partner.

Have partners discuss their thinking. After a moment, signal for their attention. Have a few volunteers briefly share with the class what they discussed.

Explain that you will read a story aloud, stopping during the reading for the students to use “Turn to Your Partner” to discuss a question. State that later in the lesson you will ask them to report how they did.

Materials

- The Frog Prince Continued
- “Ideas for Retelling Fairy Tales” chart (WA1) from Day 1
- Pad of small (1½" × 2") self-stick notes for each student

Teacher Note

If you are teaching other programs from Center for the Collaborative Classroom, the students can work within partnerships already established, or you may assign new partners for the writing lessons.

Teacher Note

The partners you assign today will stay together for Units 1 and 2. Take some time at the beginning of today’s lesson to let them get to know each other by talking informally in a relaxed atmosphere. You might have them report to the class some interesting things they learned about each other.

Teacher Note

To see an example, view “Using ‘Turn to Your Partner’” (AV11).

If your students are already familiar with “Turn to Your Partner,” you do not need to model it here. Instead, take the opportunity to remind the students of your expectations for the procedure.

Teacher Note

A visual signal, such as a raised hand, allows the students to finish what they are saying before turning back to face you. Build accountability by reminding the students to raise their own hands when they turn to face you.

Teacher Note

Some of the read-alouds are intentionally below the average reading level for your grade. Students' writing development normally lags somewhat behind their reading level.

Teacher Note

Notice that you ask the question before saying, "Turn to your partner." This gives everyone a chance to hear and consider the question before starting to move to face their partners.

3 Read The Frog Prince Continued Aloud

Remind the students that they heard The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! yesterday. Explain that you will read another story by Jon Scieszka to help them get ideas for their own writing. Show the cover of The Frog Prince Continued and read the title aloud.

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations as you read.

Stop after:

p. 18 "Here—eat the rest of this apple."

Show the illustration on page 18 and ask:

Q What do you notice about this story so far? Turn to your partner.

Have partners discuss the question. After a moment, signal for their attention. Without sharing as a class, continue reading to the end of the book.

4 Discuss the Story

Briefly discuss the story using the question that follows. Be ready to reread from the story to help the students recall what they heard.

Q *How is this story similar to The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs!? Turn to your partner.*

Have partners discuss the question. Signal for their attention and have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. Display the "Ideas for Retelling Fairy Tales" chart (WA1) and ask:

Q *Yesterday we started listing ideas for retelling fairy tales. What other ideas does The Frog Prince Continued give you?*

Students might say:

"In The Frog Prince Continued, other fairy tales get mentioned, like 'Snow White' and 'Hansel and Gretel.'"

"I could write a story that has details from different fairy tales in it."

As the students report ideas, record them on the chart.

Ideas for Retelling Fairy Tales

- "Snow White" with the witch telling the story
- "Little Red Riding Hood" from the wolf's point of view
- nice little fox and evil red hen
- "The Fox and the Crow" from the crow's point of view
- "Hansel and Gretel" from Gretel's perspective
- "Jack and the Beanstalk" from the giant's point of view

WA1

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you do to be a responsible partner during “Turn to Your Partner”?

Students might say:

“I listened to my partner during ‘Turn to Your Partner.’”

“We talked about the question, and we didn’t talk about anything else.”

“We took turns and listened to each other.”

WRITING TIME

5 Learn Procedures for the Silent Writing Period

Have the students return to their seats. Explain that they will spend the next 5–10 minutes silently writing whatever they choose in their writing notebooks. They may add ideas to their writing ideas section or begin drafting a story at the front of their notebooks. Tell them that you would like them to double-space, or skip every other line, when they write in their notebooks.

Explain that during Writing Time, you would like the class to work in silence, without talking, whispering, or walking around. Tell the students that you will give them a signal when Writing Time is over. Explain that you will be writing along with them and ask that you not be interrupted. Give the students a moment to gather what they need, sharpen pencils, etc. Then have them write at their desks in silence for 5–10 minutes. Join the students in writing, periodically scanning the room.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Ask them to briefly review their writing from today. Then ask:

Q Do you think you might want to continue adding to this piece later?

Explain that if they wish to add to this piece later, they will need to save space in their notebooks to do so. Distribute a pad of self-stick notes to each student and tell them to place notes on the next two or three blank pages to remind them to save those pages to continue their pieces. When they start a new piece of writing, they will skip pages with self-stick notes. If they don’t wish to continue this piece, they do not need to save any pages today.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Reflect on Writing as a Class

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

Q What did you write about today?

Q Was it hard or easy to start writing? Why?

Q What helped you focus on your writing today?

Ask the students to put their notebooks and pads of self-stick notes in their desks to use again tomorrow.

Teacher Note

Double-spacing will give the students the necessary space to revise and edit pieces later on.

Teacher Note

A period of silent writing, during which you also write without interacting with the students, may feel new to you. We strongly encourage you to establish this routine early in the year. Students adapt to it quickly after a few reminders, and they learn to focus inward on their own thoughts during this time. By knowing that they are not to interrupt you or others, they come to rely on their own thinking and decisions as they write. As the writing period gradually lengthens over the coming weeks, you will write quietly for 5–10 minutes and then begin conferring with students.

Teacher Note

Have the students hold onto their pads of self-stick notes to use as needed at the end of each Writing Time to save blank pages for unfinished pieces.

Day 3

Learning About an Author

Materials

- “About Jon Scieszka” (see pages 24–25)
- The Frog Prince Continued from Day 2
- The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! from Day 1
- Chart paper and a marker
- “Writing Time” chart (WA2)

ELL Note

Cooperative structures like “Turn to Your Partner” support the language development of English Language Learners by providing frequent opportunities for them to talk about their thinking and listen to others.

Teacher Note

Save the “Writing Ideas” chart to use throughout the unit.

In general, charts that the students will refer to over time are written on chart paper rather than displayed on the whiteboard. See “Charts” on page xli for more about the use of paper and whiteboard charts.

ELL Note

You might provide the prompt “I found out . . .” to your English Language Learners to help them verbalize their answers to this question.

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn about a professional author’s writing practice
- Practice “Turn to Your Partner”
- Write freely about things that interest them

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they learned “Turn to Your Partner” yesterday. Briefly review the procedure and ask them to be ready to talk in pairs again today.

Explain that you are reading different kinds of texts aloud to help the students get ideas for their writing. Show the covers of The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! and The Frog Prince Continued and remind the students that they heard the books earlier. On a sheet of chart paper labeled “Writing Ideas,” begin by listing retell fairy tales. Explain that you will add other ideas to the chart over the coming weeks.

Remind the students that The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! and The Frog Prince Continued are both by Jon Scieszka. Ask:

Q Based on these two stories, what kind of person do you think Jon Scieszka might be and why? Turn to your partner.

Have partners discuss the question. Signal for their attention and ask a few pairs to share with the class what they discussed.

Students might say:

“His books are funny, so Jon Scieszka might be a funny person.”

“He might be someone who likes to think about things differently from other people.”

2 Read “About Jon Scieszka”

Explain that you will read part of an interview with Jon Scieszka aloud. The interview comes from a book of interviews of famous children’s book authors. Ask the students to listen for interesting things they learn about Jon Scieszka.

Read “About Jon Scieszka” (on pages 24–25) aloud; then ask:

Q What did you find out about Jon Scieszka? Turn to your partner.

Have partners discuss the question. Signal for their attention and ask a few pairs to share their thinking with the class. Be ready to reread to help the students remember what they heard.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats. Explain that they will spend the next 10 minutes silently writing whatever they choose in their writing notebooks. Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA2) and explain what the students can do during this time.

Writing Time

- Write something interesting you learned about Jon Scieszka.
- Add ideas to your writing ideas section.
- Work on the piece you started yesterday.
- Start a new piece of writing at the front of your notebook.

WA2

Have the students write for 10 minutes. Remind them to double-space, or skip every other line, as they write. Emphasize that during Writing Time, you would like the class to work in silence, without talking, whispering, or walking around. Remind the students that you will give them a signal when Writing Time is over. Explain that you will be writing along with them and ask not to be interrupted.

Join the students in writing, periodically scanning the room as you write.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Remind them to use self-stick notes to save blank pages in their notebooks for any unfinished pieces.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Reflect on Writing as a Class

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What did it feel like to write quietly today?
- Q Did you remember to skip lines in your writing today?

Explain that it is important to skip lines so there is space to add or make changes later. Tell the students you will remind them to skip lines as they write.

Ask students to put their notebooks in their desks to use again tomorrow.

Day 4

Getting Ideas from Poetry

Materials

- “The Hippopotamushrooms” and “Oh Sleek Bananaconda” from Scranimals (pages 16 and 31)
- Student Writing Handbook pages 2–3
- “Writing Time” chart (WA3)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

TEKS 1.A.i

Student/Teacher Activity
Step 1 and Step 7

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss poems with invented words
- Invent their own words
- Write freely about things that interest them
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Build the Writing Community

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they are building a caring classroom writing community. Ask:

Q As a member of our writing community, you are responsible for listening to what others say. If you can’t hear, what can you do?

Encourage the students to speak clearly and listen responsibly. Tell them that you will check in with them to see how they are doing.

2 Read Aloud Scranimals Poems

Review that this week the students have heard two stories by Jon Scieszka and have gotten ideas for their own writing from the stories. Explain that poetry is another type of writing that can spark writing ideas. Explain that today and tomorrow you will read poems aloud. Encourage the students to think about whether they might like to try writing poems themselves.

Show the cover of Scranimals and read the title and the names of the author and illustrator aloud. Explain that you will read two poems from the book. Read “The Hippopotamushrooms” (page 16) aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustration and clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

suffer from deficient grace: are not very graceful compensate: make up for it

Tell the students that you will reread the poem and ask them to listen carefully for anything they might have missed the first time. Reread the poem; then ask:

Q What’s funny about this poem?

Read “Oh Sleek Bananaconda” (page 31) aloud twice, clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

sinuous: winding or twisting unappealing: difficult to like

Ask:

Q What words does the author combine to name the animals in these two poems?

Students might say:

“The poems are about made-up creatures.”

“The author combines the words hippopotamus and mushroom to invent an animal called hippopotamushroom.”

“Bananaconda comes from banana and anaconda.”

Select a few more poems from the book and read them aloud to the class.

3 Distribute Student Writing Handbooks and Look at Poems More Closely

Distribute the Student Writing Handbooks, one to each student. Explain that the handbook contains copies of some of the read-alouds, spelling lists, and other kinds of pages to help the students with their writing this year.

Ask the students to open their copies of the handbook to pages 2–3, where the first two poems they heard are reproduced. Ask them to reread the two poems aloud with their partners and talk about the animals in the poems. After several minutes, signal for the students’ attention and ask:

Q What patterns or other interesting things did you notice as you read these poems?

4 Generate Ideas for “Scranimals”

Explain that part of the fun of writing can be playing with words and that authors sometimes invent new words, as Jack Prelutsky does. As a class, brainstorm a few “scranimals” by combining names of animals with names of fruits or vegetables. Record these on a sheet of chart paper. (You might want to start the students off with a few ideas.)

Teacher Note

In this lesson, the students informally explore poems. They are not expected to recognize elements of poetry or to be proficient in writing poems at this point (although some students may be able to do so). They will explore poetry in more depth in a later unit.

Teacher Note

Some possible “scranimals” might be:

- “owlettuce”
- “porcuponion”
- “potatoad”
- “tarantulemon”
- “armadillaberry”

ELL Note

You might invite English Language Learners to invent “scranimals” by blending names of animals and fruits or vegetables in their primary languages.

Teacher Note

Remember, joining the students for a few minutes of silent writing demonstrates that writing is important and that you expect the students to work independently and tap into their own thinking and creativity during this time.

Invite the students to try writing poems or coming up with names of “scranimals” during Writing Time today, if they wish.

WRITING TIME

5 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart ( WA3) and explain what the students can do during this time.

WA3

Writing Time

- Try creating some “scranimals.”
- Work on a piece you started earlier.
- Start a new piece of writing.
- Add ideas to your writing ideas section.

Have the students write silently for 10–15 minutes. Remind them to double-space their writing.

Emphasize that during the silent writing period there should be no talking, whispering, or walking around. Everyone (including you) will be writing silently. You will let the students know when Writing Time is over.

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes, and then walk around the room and observe them.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students writing in silence?
- Are they staying in their seats?

If you notice students having difficulty staying in their seats or writing in silence, call for the class’s attention and remind them of your expectations before having them resume writing. Be aware that some students may need to just sit and think for a while before they start writing. Give them uninterrupted time to do this.

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 6 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Share Writing as a Class

Have the students put their pencils away (but not their notebooks). Have a few volunteers read their writing aloud. Encourage the other students to express their interest and appreciation after each reading. Use questions such as:

- Q What did you like about [Sophie’s] piece?
- Q What question can we ask [Tyler] about what he wrote?

7 Reflect on Interactions

Explain that the students will have frequent opportunities this year to read their writing to other students and to the whole class. Ask questions such as:

- Q If you shared your writing with the class today, how did that feel?
- Q What did you do to listen responsibly to others when they shared their writing?

Students might say:

- “I looked at the person who was sharing.”
- “I didn’t talk while people were reading their writing.”
- “I turned my whole body toward the person reading so she’d know I was really paying attention.”

ELL Note

Questions like these help the students get to know one another, which in turn creates a sense of community that benefits everyone. English Language Learners, in particular, rely on having a supportive environment in which they can take the necessary risks to practice and grow in their use of English.

Getting Ideas from Poetry

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss two poems
- Think about ordinary moments
- Think about words that appeal to the senses
- Write freely about things that interest them
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Prepare to Hear Poetry

Have the students get out their writing notebooks and Student Writing Handbooks and sit at desks with partners together.

Materials

- “Lemonade” (see page 26)
- “Backyard Bubbles” (see page 27)
- Student Writing Handbook pages 4–5
- “Writing Time” chart (WA4)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

Teacher Note

Note that on some days partners will need to be sitting at desks for Getting Ready to Write.

Explain that today you will read aloud two poems by the poet Rebecca Kai Dotlich. Encourage the students to close their eyes as they listen and imagine what is happening in the poems.

2 Read “Lemonade” Aloud

Read the poem “Lemonade” (page 26) aloud twice, slowly and clearly. Ask the students to open their eyes. Ask:

Q What did you imagine as you listened to this poem? Turn to your partner.

Have the students open their Student Writing Handbooks to page 4 and follow along as you read the poem again. Then ask:

Q What words help you imagine what’s happening in this poem?

Students might say:

“The people are drinking sweet lemonade in the summer.”

“The words splashing and sunshine make me imagine pouring the yellow lemonade.”

“The words liquid, lemon, and lips make me imagine tasting the lemonade.”

3 Read “Backyard Bubbles” Aloud

Have the students close their eyes and listen as you read “Backyard Bubbles” (page 27) aloud twice, slowly and clearly. After the second reading, ask the students to open their eyes. Briefly discuss:

Q What did you imagine seeing?

Q What did you imagine feeling on your skin?

Ask the students to open their Student Writing Handbooks to page 5 and follow along as you read the poem again. Ask:

Q What words in this poem help you see or feel what’s happening?

Students might say:

“The words shimmies and waltz make me imagine the bubbles dancing.”

“The words soapy, pearl, blushing, and shimmering all make me imagine how something looks.”

Point out that many poems, like “Lemonade” and “Backyard Bubbles,” describe ordinary moments in life using sensory details, or words that appeal to the five senses (sight, hearing, smell, touch, and taste).

ELL Note

You might provide the prompts “I saw . . .” and “I felt . . .” to your English Language Learners to help them verbalize their answers to these questions.

4 Write a List of Ordinary Moments as a Class

Ask:

Q What ordinary moments in your life could you write about? Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their ideas.

Students might say:

"swimming in a pool"

"drinking ice water on a hot day"

"running with my dog"

"holding a caterpillar in my hand"

Give the students a moment to jot down ideas in the writing ideas section of their writing notebooks. Have them label this list of ideas "Ordinary Moments."

Encourage the students to write about their ordinary moments during Writing Time, if they wish, and invite them to try including sensory details as they write.

WRITING TIME

5 Write Independently

Display the "Writing Time" chart (WA4) and have the students write silently for 10–15 minutes. Remind them to double-space their writing.

Writing Time

- Try writing a poem about an ordinary moment.
- Work on a piece you started earlier.
- Start a new piece of writing.

WA4

Review that during the silent writing period there should be no talking, whispering, or walking around. Everyone (including you) will be silently writing on their own. You will let them know when Writing Time is over.

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then walk around and observe them.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students writing in silence?
- Are they staying in their seats?
- Are they skipping lines in their notebooks?

If necessary, remind the class of your expectations for silent writing during this time. Note which students write easily and which have difficulty getting started. If you notice any student struggling to start writing after 10 minutes, quietly pull him aside and ask questions such as:

Q What are you thinking about right now?

Q What interesting thing has happened in your life that you could write about? What could you write as a first sentence for that idea?

Q What ideas have you written in your writing ideas section? Let's pick one and talk about what you might write.

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA2); see page 7 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Share Writing and Reflect on Interactions

Have the students put their pencils away and have a few volunteers read their writing aloud. Encourage the other students to express their interest and appreciation after each reading. Use questions such as:

Q What did you enjoy about [Katie's] piece?

Q What questions can we ask [Diego] about what he wrote?

Q Why is it important that we show interest and appreciation for one another's writing?

Read a Variety of Genres Aloud

One goal for the first few weeks of this program is to expose the students to a variety of genres through read-alouds. This week they heard poems and funny, retold fairy tales. In Week 2, they will hear realistic fiction drawn from the author’s life. In Week 3, they will hear poems and nonfiction.

Whenever you have time, read additional examples of fiction (such as fantasy, mystery, and science fiction), nonfiction (such as memoir, biography, joke and riddle books, “how-to” books, magazine or newspaper articles, and other expository text), and poetry aloud.

About Jon Scieszka

excerpted from Author Talk, compiled and edited by Leonard S. Marcus

What kind of boy were you?

A nice boy, and I always did good! Actually, I was a stealth kid, the kind of guy who sits in the back of the class and cracks jokes. I would get my friends in trouble by making them laugh while I sat by quietly, trying to look innocent.

Did you like books as a kid?

I loved Dr. Seuss's Green Eggs and Ham, P. D. Eastman's Go, Dog, Go!, and The Carrot Seed by Ruth Krauss and Crockett Johnson. I'd make my mom read them over and over until they were burned into my brain.

Did you enjoy writing?

I was so jazzed by the rhyming in Dr. Seuss's books that I tried to write my own funky little verses. From then on, I always wanted to be a writer. I can remember in fourth and fifth grade looking on the library shelves for the place where books by me would be, in alphabetical order. I always looked in the adult section! There was just one problem: I wasn't sure how to spell Scieszka . . . !

My teachers couldn't even pronounce my last name. During roll, the teacher would say: "Tom Schmidt. Jon . . ." Then there'd be this big pause. For years, I signed my school papers "Jon S." Even now, late at night, I still can't quite get all the letters.

How did you end up writing for children?

I first tried writing grown-up fiction while painting people's apartments to make a living. I then got a job teaching elementary school. That's when I rediscovered kids' books, and kids.

Where do you get your ideas for books?

I used to say, "From a little old lady in Schenectady, who sends me one each week." But the real answer is, from thinking—and from other books. As a kid, I always wondered whether there was a list somewhere of all the books that a person should read. Many of my own books—The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs!, The Stinky Cheese Man (1992), the Time Warp Trio series—are really about other books and stories. I like the idea that one book can point readers to others they might like to read.

What is your advice for children who want to write?

Write! I know that sounds stupid, but that’s really it. It’s good practice to imitate your favorite writers. All writers do that at first. Eventually, if you keep writing, you find your own voice.

Lemonade

by Rebecca Kai Dotlich

We pour its liquid sweetness from a tall glass pitcher, splashing sunshine on frosty squares of ice, lemon light
and slightly tart,
we gulp its gold—
licking our lips with summer.

Poem

Backyard Bubbles

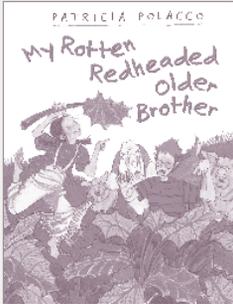

by Rebecca Kai Dotlich

One bubble shimmies from the wand to waltz around the backyard lawn.
One fragile globe of soapy skin—a glimmering of breath within a perfect pearl,
I blow again!
One more bubble
squeezes through,
one blushing bead
of water-blue;
and then another rinsed in pink (shivering with pastel ink) dances on a summer sigh, shimmering
with shades of sky,
s-l-o-w-l-y slides right out of sight;
backyard bubbles
taking flight.

Week 2

OVERVIEW

My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother

by Patricia Polacco

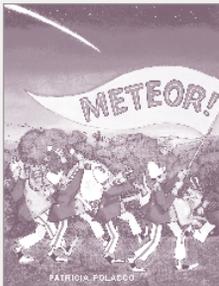

Tricia changes her mind about her brother in this story based on the author's own life.

“About Patricia Polacco”

excerpted from patriciapolacco.com (see page 47)

Patricia Polacco tells about growing up and becoming a writer.

Meteor!

by Patricia Polacco

When a meteor falls into Gramma and Grampa's yard, the whole town gets involved. Based on a true event.

- “Planning a Lesson” (AV33)

TEACHER AS WRITER

“I’m sure a beautiful empty notebook was the reason I wrote my first book. It was begging for filling.”

— Jacqueline Jackson

In your writing notebook, start a section at the back called “Writing Ideas.” Jot down events and ideas from your own life that you might want to write about. Consider:

- What is your earliest memory?
- When did something strange happen to you?
- When did you feel truly content or truly miserable?
- When did you realize something you didn’t know before?

Writing Focus

- Students hear and discuss good writing.
- Students learn how a professional author gets writing ideas from her own life.
- Students explore prewriting techniques.
- Students explore point of view.
- Students write freely about things that interest them.

Social Development Focus

- Teacher and students build the writing community.
- Students learn the procedure for “Think, Pair, Share.”
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3) on page 8 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a class set of the “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) on page 11 of the Assessment Resource Book. This week, you will begin conferring with individual students during Writing Time and documenting your observations and suggestions for each student.

Day 1

Getting Ideas from Our Own Lives

Materials

- My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother
- “Writing Ideas” chart from Week 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA5)
- “Class Assessment” record sheet (CA3)

Teacher Note

To see an example, view “Using ‘Think, Pair, Share’” (AV13).

If your students are already familiar with “Think, Pair, Share,” simply remind them of your expectations.

TEKS 1.A.ii
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 2

Teacher Note

During “Think, Pair, Share,” pause for 10 seconds for the students to think before saying “Turn to your partner.”

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story based on the author’s life
- Generate ideas from their own lives that they can write about
- Learn “Think, Pair, Share”
- Write freely about things that interest them

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that you have been reading different kinds of texts aloud to help the students get ideas for writing. Remind the students that last week they heard Scranimals by Jack Prelutsky and the poems “Lemonade” and “Backyard Bubbles” by Rebecca Kai Dotlich. Direct the students’ attention to the “Writing Ideas” chart and add write poems and scranimals. Explain that you will continue to add other ideas to the chart over the coming weeks.

2 Teach “Think, Pair, Share”

Explain that today the students will learn a cooperative structure called “Think, Pair, Share,” in which they take a moment to think quietly before turning to their partners to talk. Explain that you will ask a question and wait a few moments for them to think. When you say “Turn to your partner,” partners will turn to each other and begin talking. When you signal to them, they will end their conversations and turn their attention back to you.

To have the students practice “Think, Pair, Share,” ask:

Q What is one thing you want to keep in mind today to help your partner conversation go well? [pause] Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the class’s attention and have a few pairs share with the whole class what they discussed.

Encourage the students to try the ideas they discussed as they use “Think, Pair, Share” during today’s lesson.

3 Read My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother Aloud

Remind the students that last week they heard The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! and The Frog Prince Continued and thought about how they could retell fairy tales. Explain that today you will read a different kind of story—one based on the author’s own life.

Show the cover of My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother and read the title and author’s name aloud. Open to the copyright page and read the dedication aloud. Then read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations as you read. Clarify vocabulary as you encounter it in the text by reading the word, briefly defining it, rereading it in context, and continuing (for example, “I said furiously”—furiously means ‘very angrily’—‘I said furiously as I grabbed the first stalk and started chewing it almost down to the leaf’”).

Suggested Vocabulary

furiously: very angrily (p. 13)

consoled: comforted (p. 15) family’s custom: something the family has always done (p. 29)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

he set a record that wasn’t even challenged for the next ten years: he picked more berries than anyone else did for ten more years (p. 8) getting the puckers: (idiom) making a face when something tastes sour (p. 13) ache: hurt (p. 15)

traveling carnival: group of people who bring rides and games from town to town (p. 20; refer to the illustration) merry-go-round: amusement park ride that goes in circles (p. 22; refer to the illustration) dizzy: feeling like things are going around in circles (p. 22) stitches: threads that hold skin together when someone gets hurt (p. 26)

At the end of the story, show the photographs on the front and back endpapers and read some of the captions aloud.

4 Discuss the Story and Generate Writing Ideas

Facilitate a class discussion using the question that follows. Encourage the students to listen responsibly to the discussion by turning to look at the person who is speaking.

You might say:

“[Liam] is going to speak now. Let’s all turn and look at him.”

Q Why might Patricia Polacco have dedicated this book to her brother?

Teacher Note

The Suggested Vocabulary and ELL Vocabulary lists include words that are important for the students to understand in order to comprehend the story. To maintain the flow of the story, these words should be defined during the reading but not discussed. For more information, view “Introducing Vocabulary During a Read-aloud” (AV30).

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, help the students learn that they are talking to one another (not just to you) during class discussions by directing them to turn and look at the person who will speak. Ask speakers to wait until they have the class’s attention before starting to speak. If students are unable to hear the speaker, encourage them to politely ask the speaker to speak up. Repeating these techniques over the next couple of weeks will help the students learn to participate responsibly in class discussions. To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view “Turning and Looking at the Speaker” (AV16).

Teacher Note

If you notice many students having difficulty coming up with ideas, call for their attention and have a few volunteers who have ideas share aloud what they have written. Then have the students go back to thinking and writing.

Teacher Note

The purpose of this unit is to give the students practice writing freely about topics they choose. Read-alouds are intended solely to stimulate creativity; the students may or may not be inspired to write something related to a read-aloud. At this point, they are not expected to know the features of genres or to write in any particular genre.

Explain that authors often write about events or people from their own lives. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q What has happened in your own life that you may be able to write about?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

After a few moments, signal for the class’s attention. Ask the students to open their notebooks to the writing ideas section and to label the next blank page “Ideas from My Own Life.” Have them jot down some of their ideas on this page.

After the students have had a chance to write, call for their attention. Have a few volunteers share what they wrote with the class.

WRITING TIME

5 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats. Explain that they will write silently for 10–15 minutes. Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA5) and explain what the students can do during this time.

Writing Time

- Choose an idea from your writing ideas section and write about it.
- Write about anything else that interests you.

WA5

Remind the students that they do not need to finish one piece of writing before starting a new one. Also review that during the silent writing period there should be no talking, whispering, or walking around. Everyone (including you) will be silently writing on their own. You will let the students know when Writing Time is over.

Have the students write for 10–15 minutes. Join them in writing for 5–10 minutes; then walk around the room and observe them, assisting students as needed. If necessary, remind them to double-space their writing.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students writing in silence?
- Are they staying in their seats?
- Are they skipping lines in their notebooks?

If you notice any student struggling to start writing after 10 minutes, pull her aside quietly and ask questions such as:

- Q What are you thinking about right now?
- Q What interesting thing has happened in your life that you could write about? What could you write as a first sentence for that idea?
- Q What ideas have you written in your writing ideas section? Let's pick one and talk about what you might write.

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA3); see page 8 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Remind them to use their self-stick notes to save blank pages in their notebooks for any unfinished pieces.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Share and Reflect on Writing

Have the students put their pencils away and have a few volunteers share what they wrote today. Ask:

- Q Who wrote about an event from your own life? Tell us about it.
- Q Who added ideas from your own life to the writing ideas section? Tell us about them.
- Q What other things did you write about today?

WRITING ABOUT READING

WRITING ABOUT READING ACTIVITIES

Writing About Reading activities provide the students with opportunities to write opinions about and make connections to texts they discuss in the Being a Writer program. The activities are optional and can be done at the end of the lesson or another time. For more information, see "Writing About Reading" on page xx.

Materials

- My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother
- Copy of “Excerpt from My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother” (BLM2) for each student

Teacher Note

Prior to doing this activity, you will need to visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the “Excerpt from My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother” (BLM2).

Teacher Note

If necessary, explain to the students that an opinion is a strongly held point of view. When we give an opinion, we are telling what we think about something.

Write a Paragraph of Opinion About My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother

Show the cover of My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother and remind the students that they heard this book earlier. Ask:

Q What do you remember about the book My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Then explain that you will reread the part of the story where Tricia’s brother tells her about her accident at the carnival. Distribute the copies of “Excerpt from My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother” (BLM2) and explain that the passage you will read is reproduced there. Ask the students to follow along as you read aloud. Reread aloud pages 25–26. After reading, ask:

Q How does Richie really feel about Tricia? What in the story makes you think that?

Students might say:

“I think Richie actually likes Tricia because he is nice to her after her accident.”

“I think sometimes he likes her and other times he doesn’t like her because she calls him rotten.”

“I think he doesn’t like her because he’s nice to her only when his grandparents are around.”

Explain that each student will write a paragraph about how he thinks Richie really feels about Tricia. Tell the students that readers often have different opinions about the characters and events in a story, and that is fine. What is important is that they support their thinking with facts and details from the story. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing a paragraph about how you think Richie really feels about Tricia.

You might say:

“I think that even though Richie teases Tricia a lot, he actually really loves her. I’ll start by writing: In Patricia Polacco’s book My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother, Richie teases his sister all the time, but he actually loves her a lot. Notice that I stated my opinion and put the title of the book and the author’s name in the opening sentence. Now I need to explain my thinking using facts and details. I’ll write: When Tricia faints after riding the merry-go-round for too long, Richie carries her all the way home, and then he runs for the doctor. He wouldn’t do that unless he liked his sister. Now I need a closing sentence. I’ll write: Richie drives Tricia crazy a lot of the time, but deep down he really cares about her.”

Explain that each student should start her paragraph with an opening sentence that states her opinion and includes the title of the book and the author’s name, a reason for her opinion, a fact or detail from the story to support her reason, and a closing sentence that wraps up her writing. Have the students begin writing about their opinions. If time permits, invite the students to share their opinions with the class.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a story based on the author's life
- Generate ideas from their own lives that they can write about
- Practice "Think, Pair, Share"
- Write freely about things that interest them

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday the students heard My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother, based on the life of the author, Patricia Polacco. Explain that today you will read another story by Patricia Polacco that is based on her life. Encourage the students to think as they listen about whether they might like to write something similar to this story.

2 Read Meteor! Aloud

Show the cover of Meteor! and read the title aloud. Read the dedication on page 2; then read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations as you read. Clarify vocabulary as you read, using the procedure you used on Week 1, Day 1 (see page 8).

Suggested Vocabulary

- wireless: old-fashioned radio (p. 6) meteor: rock from outer space (p. 12) liniment: medicine to rub onto the skin (p. 20) ascent: rise (p. 23) descent: fall (p. 23)
panorama: wide view in all directions (p. 23) headstone: gravestone or grave marker (p. 30)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

- eerie: weird, strange (p. 11)
stakes: poles (p. 12) merchants: people who sell things (p. 16) bystanders and onlookers: people standing nearby (p. 19) dance troupe: group of dancers (p. 27)

Materials

- Meteor!
- "Quick-write" chart (WA6)
- "Writing Time" chart (WA7)

Teacher Note

You might use self-stick notes to mark the places in the book where the suggested vocabulary words appear. Write the meaning of each word on a note to help you define it smoothly without interrupting the reading. For more information about planning lessons, see "Preparing the Daily Lessons" (page xxxv). To learn more, view "Planning a Lesson" (AV33).

Teacher Note

Quick-writes are short exercises that everyone participates in and discusses. They are an opportunity for the students to learn a technique together and to practice overcoming their “inner critic” by writing quickly, continuously, and without planning or deliberation.

3 Discuss the Story and Introduce Quick-writes

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What clues in the book tell us that Patricia Polacco is writing from her own life?

Explain that the students will do a quick-write to help them get ideas for their own writing. Explain that a quick-write is a 5-minute writing exercise that everyone will do together. It gives everyone a chance to practice a particular writing technique.

Display the “Quick-write” chart (WA6) and read the questions on it.

Quick-write

- What is your earliest memory?
- When did something strange happen to you?
- When did you feel happy, sad, or afraid?
- When were you really, really surprised?

WA6

Ask the students to open to the next blank page in their notebooks, pick one question from the list, and write quickly about it for 5 minutes. Students who run out of things to say before the time is up should choose another question and keep writing. Encourage the students to keep their pencils moving and to write whatever comes to mind without thinking too much about it.

After 5 minutes of silent writing, call for the students’ attention. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q What was it like to try to keep your pencil moving for the whole time?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and have one or two students share what they discussed with the class. Explain that the students will have more opportunities to practice writing quickly and continuously during quick-writes. Point out that this kind of writing can be very helpful in getting writing ideas flowing.

WRITING TIME

4 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA7) and have the students write silently for 10–15 minutes.

Writing Time

- Continue the piece you started during the quick-write.
- Work on a piece you started earlier.
- Start a new piece of writing about anything that interests you.

WA7

Remind the students that they do not need to finish one piece of writing before starting a new one. Also review that during the silent writing period, everyone (including you) will be silently writing on their own. You will let them know when Writing Time is over.

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then walk around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. If necessary, remind them to use their self-stick notes to save blank pages in their notebooks for any unfinished pieces they wish to continue the next day.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Share and Reflect on Writing

Have the students put their pencils away. Ask questions such as those that follow, inviting the students to read passages of their writing aloud to the class, if they wish.

- Q Who wrote about your own life today? Tell us about it.
- Q What else did you write about? Tell us about it.

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from drawing their ideas before they write. Encourage them to draw what they want to write about and then talk quietly with you or a partner about their drawings. If necessary, support them by writing down key words or phrases they want to use so that the students can copy these words into their writing.

Facilitation Tip

Continue to prompt the students to turn and look at the person who will speak. (You might say, “Beto is going to speak now. Let’s all turn and look at him.”) During the discussion, scan the class to ensure that the students are looking at the person who is speaking. If necessary, interrupt the discussion to remind them of your expectations.

Day 3

Learning About an Author

Materials

- “About Patricia Polacco” (see page 47)
- Meteor! from Day 2
- My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother from Day 1
- “Writing Ideas” chart from Day 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA8)
- Class set of “Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1)

Teacher Note

If many students have difficulty generating writing ideas from their own lives, you might signal for their attention and generate some ideas together, for example:

- Things that make us mad
- Things we wonder or have questions about
- Things we notice or observe
- Our hobbies and interests
- Places we've visited or would like to visit

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn about a professional author
- Practice “Think, Pair, Share”
- Write freely about things that interest them

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Learn About Patricia Polacco

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Show the covers of My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother and Meteor! Remind the students that they heard these stories by Patricia Polacco, which are based on events in her life, earlier in the week. Direct the students’ attention to the “Writing Ideas” chart and add write stories from your own life.

Explain that you will read aloud some information about Patricia Polacco. Read “About Patricia Polacco” (see page 47) aloud. After reading, discuss:

- Q What did you find out about Patricia Polacco?
- Q What do you think Patricia Polacco means when she says, “How lucky I was to know so many people that were so different and yet so much alike?”

Students might say:

“I found out that Patricia Polacco writes a lot of her stories from her own life.”

“Maybe she felt like people from different cultures are still more alike than different.”

2 “Think, Pair, Share” About Memories

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

- Q In her books, Patricia Polacco writes about her memories. What memory do you have that you might be able to write about? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers report their thinking. Invite the students to jot down any ideas they want to keep thinking about under “Ideas from My Own Life” in the writing ideas section of their notebooks.

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q How did it help you today to take time to think before talking to your partner?
- Q What problems did you have with “Think, Pair, Share” today? How can you avoid these problems next time?

Students might say:

“Taking time to think helped me get the idea in my head before I talked to my partner.”

“We ran out of time before both of us got to talk during ‘Think, Pair, Share.’ ”

“Next time we can make sure to take turns so both of us get to talk.”

“I did all the talking because my partner didn’t say much. Next time I will ask my partner what she thinks.”

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA8) and have the students write silently for 15–20 minutes.

Writing Time

- Write about ideas from your own life or memories.
- Choose an idea from your writing ideas section and write about it.
- Write about anything else that interests you.

WA8

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

Teacher Note

When more than one question appears next to a Q, ask the first question, discuss it, and follow up with the subsequent questions.

Teacher Note

The independent writing period is gradually getting longer. Observe the students carefully and increase the time more slowly, if necessary. The goal is to get the students writing independently for at least 30 minutes per day by the end of Unit 1.

Teacher Note

For more information about conferring with students, see “Teacher Conferences” (page xxxviii). To learn more, view “Setting Up Writing Conferences” (AV7).

Teacher Note

You might use the “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) as a survey of the students’ goals and interests. For more information, see “Student Goals and Interests Survey” on page vii of the Assessment Resource Book.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Over the next two weeks, call individual students to a back table and confer quietly with them for 5–10 minutes each to get a sense of their strengths and weaknesses as writers. Ask each student to show you his writing, read some of it aloud to you, and talk about his ideas and feelings about writing. Ask the student questions such as the following and record his responses.

- Q Where did you get this idea?
- Q What do you like about writing so far this year?
- Q How do you feel about your writing?
- Q How do you feel when you are asked to read your own writing to the class?
- Q What do you do best as a writer?
- Q What kinds of things do you want to write (or write about) in the coming year?
- Q How do you want to improve as a writer this year?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 11 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. If necessary, remind the students to use their self-stick notes to save blank pages in their notebooks for any unfinished pieces they wish to continue the next day.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Share and Reflect on Writing

Have the students put their pencils away. Ask and discuss the questions that follow, inviting the students to read passages of their writing aloud to the class, if they wish.

- Q Who wrote about your own life today? Tell us about it.
- Q What else did you write about? Tell us about it.

EXTENSION

Talk with Older Family Members

Remind the students that in the article “About Patricia Polacco” (see page 47) Patricia Polacco talks about hearing older family members tell stories. She says, “I heard such wonderful stories told.”

Ask:

Q Who in your family might have “wonderful stories” to tell you?

Invite the students to ask their parents, grandparents, or other older family members to tell them stories about the past. Encourage the students to write down the stories to share with the class.

You might also wish to invite students’ older family members to the class to share their stories with all of the students.

Exploring a Prewriting Technique

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore a prewriting technique
- Write freely about things that interest them
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing

Materials

- “Writing Ideas” chart from Day 3
- “Writing Time” chart (WA9)

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Introduce a Prewriting Technique

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that writers often get new ideas for writing from pieces they have written earlier. Today you will show the students a technique that some authors use to help them come up with new ideas.

Ask the students to open their notebooks to their latest pieces of writing and to read the pieces silently. After a moment, ask the students to reread the pieces and to underline one or two sentences they particularly like.

When the students finish, ask a few volunteers to read aloud sentences they underlined and explain what they like about those sentences.

Students might say:

“I like this sentence because I used the word meteoric and I like that word.”

“I underlined this sentence because it tells what I pictured in my mind.”

“I like the way this sentence sounds, so I underlined it.”

2 Quick-write: Writing from a Favorite Sentence

Ask the students to copy one of the sentences they just underlined onto the top of the next blank page in their notebooks. Explain that the students will do a 5-minute quick-write today in which they will begin with the sentences they copied. Remind them to keep their pencils moving and to write whatever comes to mind without planning or thinking too hard about it.

Have the students write silently for 5 minutes. Then call for their attention and have partners turn to each other and share what they wrote. Have a few volunteers read what they wrote to the class. Ask:

- Q Was it hard or easy to start writing from the sentence you wrote at the top of your page? Why?
- Q When your partner read his or her writing to you, how did you show that you were interested?

Explain that starting a new piece with a sentence from an earlier piece is a technique the students can use whenever they feel stuck or when they don't know what to write about. On the "Writing Ideas" chart, add start with a good sentence from another piece.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently

Have the students sit at desks with partners together. Display the "Writing Time" chart (WA9) and ask the students to write silently for 15–20 minutes.

Writing Time

- Continue the piece you started during the quick-write.
- Work on a piece you started earlier.
- Start a new piece of writing.

WA9

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students for 5-10 minutes each. Ask each student to show you her writing, read some of it aloud to you, and talk about her ideas and feelings about writing. Ask the student questions such as the following and record her responses.

- Q Where did you get this idea?
- Q What do you like about writing so far this year?
- Q How do you feel about your writing?
- Q How do you feel when you are asked to read your own writing to the class?
- Q What do you do best as a writer?
- Q What kinds of things do you want to write (or write about) in the coming year?
- Q How do you want to improve as a writer this year?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 11 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Share Writing and Reflect on Interactions

Have a few volunteers share what they wrote. Encourage the class to think about what they can do to express interest and appreciation as their classmates share. Ask questions such as:

- Q Who worked on the piece you started during the quick-write? Tell us about it.
- Q What questions or comments do you have for [Jenner] about the piece he just shared?

- Q Why is it important that we show interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Materials

- The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! from Week 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA10)

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore writing from different points of view
- Write freely about things that interest them
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Discuss Point of View in The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs!

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that last week they heard The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! by John Scieszka. Review that in this retelling, the story is told from the wolf’s point of view. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How does the story change when the wolf tells it?

Students might say:

“Usually the wolf is evil, but when the wolf tells it he seems funny and friendly.”

“You end up thinking maybe the wolf is innocent.”

“The pigs in this version don’t seem smart or nice.”

Explain that the wolf’s point of view shapes the way he describes the events. Point out that when a story we think we know is told from a different point of view, the story often changes.

2 Tell a Familiar Story from a Different Point of View

Remind the students that last week they thought about how fairy tales might change if different characters were to tell them. Explain that when we switch the character who is telling a story, we are changing the story’s point of view. Tell the students that you will reread from The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! Have the students think about how the story would be different if it were told from a pig’s perspective. Read aloud pages 10–19 and then ask:

Q How might this story be different if it were told from a pig’s point of view?

Students might say:

“The pig might say that the wolf was growling.”

“He might say that the wolf never asked him for a cup of sugar.”

“He might say that the wolf is a danger to the neighborhood.”

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing you briefly tell the traditional “Three Little Pigs” story.

Remind the students that one way to come up with writing ideas is to tell a familiar story from a different point of view.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently

Ask the students to get their notebooks and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA10) and ask the students to write silently for 15–20 minutes.

Writing Time

- Tell a familiar story from a different point of view (for example, “Little Red Riding Hood” from the wolf’s point of view).
- Choose a memory or idea from your own life and write about it.
- Write about anything else that interests you.

WA10

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students for 5–10 minutes each. Ask each student to show you his writing, read some of it aloud to you, and talk about his ideas and feelings about writing. Ask the student questions such as the following and record his responses.

- Q Where did you get this idea?
- Q What do you like about writing so far this year?
- Q How do you feel about your writing?
- Q How do you feel when you are asked to read your own writing to the class?
- Q What do you do best as a writer?
- Q What kinds of things do you want to write (or write about) in the coming year?
- Q How do you want to improve as a writer this year?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 11 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Share Writing and Reflect on Interactions

Have a few volunteers share what they wrote. Encourage the class to think about what they can do to express interest and appreciation as their classmates share. Ask questions such as:

Q What questions or comments do you have for [Natasha] about the piece she just shared?

Q Why is it important that we show interest in and appreciation for one another's writing? [pause] Turn to your partner.

About Patricia Polacco

excerpted from patriciapolacco.com

Who Am I?

I was born in Lansing, Michigan, in 1944. Soon after my birth I lived in Williamston, Michigan, and then moved onto my grandparents' farm in Union City, Michigan.

I lived on the farm with my mom and grandparents until 1949. That is when my Babushka (my grandmother) died and we prepared to move away from Michigan. I must say that living on that little farm with them was the most magical time of my life. . . . [T]his place was so magical to me that I have never forgotten it! This was the place where I heard such wonderful stories told . . . this was the place that a real meteor fell into our front yard . . . that very meteorite is now our family headstone in the graveyard here in Union City.

Anyway . . . [i]n 1949 we left the farm to move, first to Coral Gables, Florida. I lived there with my mom and my brother, Richard, for almost 3 years. Then we moved to Oakland, California. . . . What I loved the most about this neighborhood is that all of my neighbors came in as many colors, ideas, and religions as there are people on the planet. How lucky I was to know so many people that were so different and yet so much alike.

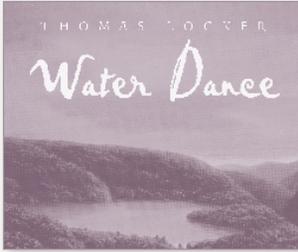

When I was a student in elementary school I wasn't a very good student. I had a terrible time with reading and math. As a matter of fact, I did not learn how to read until I was almost 14 years old. . . . I thought I was dumb. . . . When I was fourteen, it was learned that I have a learning disability. It is called dyslexia. . . . Of course, now that I am an adult, I realize that being learning disabled does not mean DUMB AT ALL! As a matter of fact, I have learned that being learning disabled only means that I cannot learn the way most of you do. . . . [O]nce I learned how to read and caught up with the rest of my fellow students, I did very well.

I have enjoyed a wonderful career of writing books for children. Who could have guessed that little girl that was having such a tough time in school would end up an illustrator and author.

Week 3

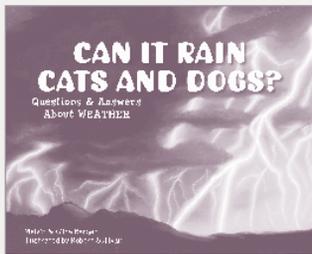

OVERVIEW

Water Dance

by Thomas Locker

Water takes a poetic journey through the world.

Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? Questions & Answers About Weather

by Melvin and Gilda Berger, illustrated by Robert Sullivan

Read answers to more than 80 questions about weather.

Online Resources

Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to find your online resources for this week.

Whiteboard Activities

- WA11–WA15

Assessment Forms

- “Class Assessment Record” sheets (CA4–CA5)
- “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1)
- “Beginning-of-year Writing Sample Record” sheet (WS1)

Reproducible

- Unit 1 family letter (BLM1)

Professional Development Media

- “Predictable Structure of the Writing Lessons” (AV3)
- “Social Reflection” (AV14)

Writing Focus

- Students hear and discuss nonfiction writing.
- Students explore making lists as a prewriting technique.
- Students write freely about things that interest them.
- Partners confer with each other.

Social Development Focus

- Teacher and students build the writing community.
- Students build on one another's thinking during class discussion.
- Students use writing and pair conference time responsibly.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing.

J DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, write these three prompts on a sheet of chart paper (you will post the chart so students can refer to it during Being a Writer lessons and throughout the school day):

"I agree with _____ because . . ."

"I disagree with _____ because . . ."

"In addition to what _____ said, I think . . ."

- ✓ Prior to Day 2, make a copy of the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA4) on page 9 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, collect a variety of examples of non-book writing, such as flyers, brochures, recipes, signs, instructions, advertisements, letters, newspapers, catalogs, magazines, and e-mail messages.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a copy of the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA5) on page 10 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this unit's family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student. (For more information about the family letters, see "Family Letters" on page lii.)

"From things that have happened and from things as they exist and from all things that you know and all those you cannot know, you make something. . ."

— Ernest Hemingway

Making lists can get your creative juices flowing. Make a list of things you know a lot about, for example:

- Owning a dog
- Having a twin
- Book clubs
- Important advice I've received
- Being an early riser
- Photography
- Planning a family vacation

Pick one of the items on your list and write a short draft telling what you know (and what you'd like to know) about that topic.

Day 1

Getting Ideas from Nonfiction

Materials

- Water Dance
- Charted discussion prompts, prepared ahead
- “I Could Be” chart (WA11)

Teacher Note

The discussion prompts are:

- “I agree with _____ because . . .”
- “I disagree with _____ because . . .”
- “In addition to what _____ said, I think . . .”

Teacher Note

If you have already taught your students these discussion prompts, simply review them and encourage their use today.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a narrative text based on factual information
- Learn discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking
- Write sentences from the point of view of a thing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Teach Discussion Prompts

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that you have been reading and discussing various texts to help them get ideas for their own writing.

Point out that in class discussions it is important for the students to listen carefully and contribute their ideas. Direct the students’ attention to the charted discussion prompts and read them aloud. Explain that you would like them to use the prompts when they add to the discussion today and that doing so will help them listen and build on one another’s thinking. Keep the chart posted so the students can refer to it during Being a Writer lessons and throughout the school day.

2 Read Water Dance Aloud

Show the cover of Water Dance and read the title and author’s name aloud. Read the first page (page 3) aloud. Ask the students to listen carefully for anything they might have missed, and then reread page 3. Continue reading slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and clarifying vocabulary as you read, and stopping at the end of page 27.

Suggested Vocabulary

palisades: cliffs (p. 12)

veils: see-through pieces of material worn over the head or face (p. 14)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

overflow: spill over the edges (p. 8) disappear: to go out of sight (p. 14) reappear: to come back into sight (p. 16)

3 Discuss Water Dance

Discuss the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts as they respond. If you notice that the students are not using the prompts, pause during the discussion to ask, “How can you say that using one of the discussion prompts?”

Q Who is I in this story?

Q What’s unusual about the way the author uses I in this book?

Students might say:

“I is the water telling the story.”

“I agree with [Geraldine] because usually I is a person in a story.”

“In addition to what [Linus] said, the water is one thing, but it is also many things—rain, the lake, the waterfall.”

Point out that in Water Dance the author tells the story of Earth’s water cycle from the water’s point of view. Remind the students that authors may choose to write from an unusual point of view, and explain that sometimes they write from the point of view of a thing. Ask:

Q If you wanted to write a story in which I is a thing rather than a person, what could that thing be?

Display the “I Could Be” chart (🗨️ WA11) and record the students’ ideas on the chart as they generate them.

I Could Be

- the wind
- a car
- a tree
- a computer

WA11

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty generating ideas, suggest some like those in the “I Could Be” chart and ask, “What else could you write?”

WRITING TIME

4 Quick-write: Using I to Write as a Thing

Ask partners to choose one of the recorded ideas and together come up with a couple of I sentences they could write from that thing’s point of view. Give partners a few moments to talk; then have a few pairs share their sentences with the class.

Have each student pick another of the recorded ideas and do an individual 5-minute quick-write, writing several I sentences from that thing’s point of view. Explain that if students run out of things to write

Teacher Note

Save the “I Could Be” chart to use on Day 2.

Facilitation Tip

Continue to reinforce the students’ responsibility during class discussions by reminding them to turn and look at the person who will speak, having speakers wait until they have the class’s attention before starting to speak, and asking one another to speak up if they can’t hear. Also remind them to use the discussion prompts to address their comments directly to one another.

Day 2

Materials

- Can It Rain Cats and Dogs?
- “I Could Be” chart (WA11) from Day 1
- “Writing Ideas” chart from Week 2
- Charted discussion prompts from Day 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA12)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4)

from the point of view of that object, they should pick another object and continue writing. Have the students write on the next blank page of their notebooks.

After 5 minutes, call for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers read their sentences aloud. Encourage the students to continue to add to this piece of writing during Writing Time tomorrow, if they wish.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Reflect on Using Prompts

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q How do the discussion prompts help us talk as a class?

Encourage the students to continue to use the prompts in discussions and tell them that you will check in with them periodically.

Getting Ideas from Nonfiction

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a nonfiction text
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another’s thinking
- List nonfiction topics they could write about
- Write freely about things that interest them
- Learn procedures for pair conferences

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that yesterday they heard Water Dance, in which the author uses I to write from the water’s point of view. Display the “I Could Be” chart (WA11) and remind the students that it lists things that they might write about using I. Direct the students’ attention to the “Writing Ideas” chart and add use “I” to tell a story from the point of view of a thing.

Explain that today they will hear how an author deals with the topic of Earth’s water cycle in a very different way.

2 Read Parts of Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? Aloud

Show the cover of Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? and read the title and authors' names aloud. Read the introduction on page 3; then read the chapter headings listed in the table of contents. Explain that you will read today from the section called "Rain, Snow, and Hail."

Read page 22 aloud slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary as you read.

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing the following vocabulary defined:

vanish: disappear (p. 22)

invisible: not seen (p. 22)

Ask and discuss the question that follows and be ready to reread from the text to help the students recall what they heard. Remind them to use the charted prompts to add to the discussion.

Q How is this book written differently from Water Dance?

Students might say:

"The author writes a question, then an answer."

"In addition to what [Tova] said, Water Dance is told like a story or a poem. This book has facts."

"I agree with [Joaquin] because the whole page tells facts about rain, snow, and hail."

Read aloud some of the questions on pages 24–33. As a class, select a few of these questions; then read their answers aloud.

Explain that Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? is part of a series of nonfiction question-and-answer books. Point out that other titles in the series are listed on the back cover of the book, and read a few of the titles aloud.

3 Quick-write: Generating Nonfiction Topics

Ask the students to consider the following question individually for a moment:

Q What nonfiction topic would you like to know more about?

Have the students do a 5-minute quick-write in which they jot down their ideas on a page labeled "Nonfiction Ideas" in the writing ideas section of their notebooks. After the quick-write, have partners share their ideas with each other, and then have several volunteers share their ideas with the class. Encourage the students to continue to add to their nonfiction ideas during Writing Time, if they wish.

Teacher Note

The discussion prompts are:

- "I agree with _____ because . . ."
- "I disagree with _____ because . . ."
- "In addition to what _____ said, I think . . ."

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from drawing their ideas before they write. Encourage them to draw what they want to write about and talk quietly with you or a partner about their drawings. If necessary, write down the key words and phrases the students want to use so they can copy these words into their writing.

Teacher Note

Continue to gradually lengthen the independent writing period. Observe the students carefully and increase the time more slowly if necessary. The goal is 30 minutes of independent writing per day by the end of Unit 1.

WRITING TIME

4 Write Independently

Have partners sit together at desks. Display the “Writing Time” chart ( WA12) and have the students write silently for 20–25 minutes.

Writing Time

- Add to your list of interesting nonfiction topics.
- Continue the / piece you started during yesterday’s quick-write.
- Work on a piece you started earlier.
- Start a new piece of writing.

WA12

Join the students in silent writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students for 5–10 minutes each. Ask each student to show you her writing, read some of it aloud to you, and talk about her ideas and feelings about writing. Ask the student questions such as the following and record her responses.

- Q Where did you get this idea?
- Q What do you like about writing so far this year?
- Q How do you feel about your writing?
- Q How do you feel when you are asked to read your own writing to the class?
- Q What do you do best as a writer?
- Q What kinds of things do you want to write (or write about) in the coming year?
- Q How do you want to improve as a writer this year?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 11 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Introduce Pair Conferences

Explain that the students will meet in pairs this year to confer, which means to share and help each other with their writing. These meetings will be called pair conferences. The students will learn a lot this year about how to work with partners to give and receive helpful feedback about their writing.

Explain that you would like the students to confer with their assigned partners about the writing they did today. Point out that conferring means not just reading their writing to each other, but talking about the writing as well. Encourage partners to express their interest in and appreciation for each other's writing today.

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What can you say or do after your partner reads his or her writing to you to show that you are interested in it and appreciate hearing it?

Students might say:

"I can ask him questions about what he wrote."

"I could tell her what part I liked in her story."

"I can say, 'Thanks, I enjoyed hearing your writing.'"

Give partners several minutes to share and discuss their writing.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students, without interacting with them, as they confer in pairs. Ask yourself:

- Do partners seem able to hear each other?
- Are they reading their writing to each other?
- Are they taking time to talk about the writing?

Note any problems pairs are having that you want to bring up during the reflection discussion.

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA4); see page 9 of the Assessment Resource Book.

When you notice the pair conferences winding down, signal for the students' attention and bring the class back together.

6 Reflect on Pair Conferences

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What went well in your pair conference today?

Teacher Note

In Unit 1, pairs begin conferring by informally sharing their writing with each other during Sharing and Reflecting. They learn procedures for conferring and think about how to interact productively and respectfully. In subsequent units, the students will learn more about how to give and receive specific feedback about their writing.

If your students are already familiar with pair conferring from prior grades, simply review your expectations with them.

ELPS 2.I.iv

Step 5 and first Teacher Note on p. 55

Teacher Note

Consider having pairs spread out so that partners can better hear each other.

Teacher Note

It takes repeated experience for students to learn how to talk about their own behavior and social interactions. By hearing your observations first, the students come to understand over time what responsible behavior entails. For more information about helping the students reflect on social development goals, see "Values and Social Skills" (page xxviii). To learn more, view "Social Reflection" (AV14).

Teacher Note

When more than one question appears next to a Q, ask the first question, discuss it, and follow up with the subsequent questions.

- Q What problems did you have? How will you avoid these problems the next time you confer?
- Q How did your partner express interest in or appreciation for your writing? How did that feel?

Students might say:

"It was fun hearing my partner's writing and reading him mine."

"There wasn't enough time for my partner to finish reading her story. Next time I'll stop sooner."

"My partner told me he thought my poem was funny. That made me feel good."

Explain that the students will have many opportunities this year to confer about their writing.

Day 3

Getting Ideas from Nonfiction

Materials

- Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? from Day 2
- "Writing Ideas" chart from Day 2
- Charted discussion prompts
- "Writing Time" chart (WA13)

In this lesson, the students:

- List questions they can ask about a nonfiction topic
- Write freely about things that interest them
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking
- Use writing and pair conference time responsibly
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Review Can It Rain Cats and Dogs?

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that yesterday they heard parts of Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? Ask:

- Q What do you remember about how the authors communicate the information in this book?

Direct the students' attention to the "Writing Ideas" chart and add nonfiction question-and-answer books to it. If the students are interested, select a few more questions from Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? as a class; then read the answers aloud.

2 Quick-write: Generating Questions About a Nonfiction Topic

Ask the students to review the nonfiction topics they listed yesterday in the writing ideas section of their notebooks and pick one they are especially curious about. Have them open their notebooks to the next blank page and write that topic at the top of the page. Ask them to think quietly for a moment about the following:

Q If you were going to write a question-and-answer book about the topic you chose, what questions might you ask in your book?

Have the students take 5 minutes to jot down their own questions; then have them discuss their topics and questions in pairs. Signal for their attention and give them a few minutes to write down any additional questions that came up while they were talking. Have a few volunteers share their topics and some of their questions with the class.

Encourage the students to add to their lists of questions during Writing Time today, if they wish.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA13) and have the students write silently for 20–25 minutes.

Writing Time

- Write more questions about a nonfiction topic.
- Work on a piece you started earlier.
- Start a new piece of writing.

WA13

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students for 5-10 minutes each. Ask each student to show you his writing, read some of it aloud to you, and talk about his ideas and feelings about writing. Ask the student questions such as the following and record his responses.

- Q Where did you get this idea?
- Q What do you like about writing so far this year?
- Q How do you feel about your writing?
- Q How do you feel when you are asked to read your own writing to the class?
- Q What do you do best as a writer?
- Q What kinds of things do you want to write (or write about) in the coming year?
- Q How do you want to improve as a writer this year?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 11 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Confer in Pairs

Have partners meet for pair conferences. Remind them that partners will both read and discuss their writing with each other. Invite them to listen for at least one thing they like about their partner’s writing and be prepared to share this with the class.

5 Reflect on Pair Conferences

After pairs have conferred, signal for the students’ attention. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What is one thing you liked about your partner’s writing? Why did you like that part?
- Q What is one thing your partner liked about your piece of writing? You may read that part aloud, if you wish.

Getting Ideas from Nonfiction and Pair Conferring

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Discuss examples of non-book writing
- Write freely about things that interest them
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking
- Use writing and pair conference time responsibly
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing

Materials

- Collected pieces of non-book writing
- “Writing Time” chart (WA14)

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Discuss Collected Examples of Writing

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Briefly review that the students have heard different kinds of writing in the past few weeks. Point out that there are many kinds of writing besides books. Show and briefly describe the flyers, brochures, instructions, advertisements, and/or other writing examples you have collected.

Explain that all of these pieces of writing are examples of the kinds of things the students can try writing on their own. Take just a few minutes to discuss questions such as:

- Q If you were going to write an advertisement for your favorite thing, what might you write about?
- Q If you were going to write a brochure for your fantasy vacation, what might you include in it?
- Q If you were going to write instructions for something you know how to do, what might it be?

Encourage the students to work on advertisements, instructions, or other kinds of non-book writing today during Writing Time, if they wish.

WRITING TIME

2 Write Independently

Have partners sit together at desks. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA14) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Write advertisements, flyers, signs, recipes, brochures, or other kinds of non-book writing.
- Work on a piece you started earlier.
- Start a new piece of writing.

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students for 5–10 minutes each. Ask each student to show you her writing, read some of it aloud to you, and talk about her ideas and feelings about writing. Ask the student questions such as the following and record her responses.

- Q Where did you get this idea?
- Q What do you like about writing so far this year?
- Q How do you feel about your writing?
- Q How do you feel when you are asked to read your own writing to the class?
- Q What do you do best as a writer?
- Q What kinds of things do you want to write (or write about) in the coming year?
- Q How do you want to improve as a writer this year?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 11 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

3 Confer in Pairs

Have partners confer. Encourage them to listen again today for at least one thing they like about their partners’ writing to share with the class.

4 Reflect on Pair Conferences

After partners have conferred, signal for their attention. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What is one thing you liked about your partner's writing? Why did you like that part?
- Q What is one thing your partner liked about your piece of writing? You may read that part aloud, if you wish.

Exploring a Prewriting Technique and Pair Conferring

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore making lists as a prewriting technique
- Write freely about things that interest them
- Use discussion prompts to build on one another's thinking
- Ask one another questions about their writing
- Discuss the writing community

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Discuss Using Prompts

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind them that they learned three prompts to help them build on one another's thinking during class discussions. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q How do the discussion prompts help us talk as a class?

Encourage the students to continue to use the prompts today and tell them that you will check in with them periodically.

2 Quick-write: Making Lists

Review that yesterday the students looked at examples of non-book writing. Direct the students' attention to the "Writing Ideas" chart and add non-book writing to it.

Explain that a list is another kind of non-book writing that can be helpful for getting creative ideas flowing. Explain that writers sometimes make lists to help them think about topics and to lead them into longer pieces of writing.

Materials

- Charted discussion prompts
- "Writing Ideas" chart from Day 3
- Collected pieces of non-book writing from Day 4
- "Writing Time" chart (WA15)
- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA5)
- Copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1) for each student

Teacher Note

Encourage the students to continue to use the discussion prompts during whole-class discussions throughout the year to help them listen and connect their ideas to those of their classmates. Regularly remind them to use the prompts until it becomes natural for them to do so.

ELL Note

You might invite English Language Learners to write their lists in their primary languages as well as in English.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty generating ideas, stimulate their thinking by suggesting some of the ideas in the “Students might say” note; then repeat the question.

Explain that one type of list writers sometimes make is a list of things they know a lot about. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to have partners first think about and then discuss:

Q What is something you know a lot about? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and have one or two volunteers share what they discussed with the class.

Students might say:

“I’m an expert at skateboarding.”

“I know how to knit a scarf.”

“I know a lot about being an only child.”

Ask the students to quickly jot down in their notebooks a list of things they know a lot about. After 5 minutes, call for their attention and have a few volunteers share what they wrote.

Explain that during Writing Time today the students may choose one of the items on their lists and write what they know about it, if they wish. They may also work on advertisements, instructions, other kinds of non-book writing, or anything they choose.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently

Have the students get their notebooks and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA15) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Write about something you know.
- Write advertisements, flyers, signs, recipes, brochures, or other kinds of non-book writing.
- Work on a piece you started earlier.
- Start a new piece of writing.

WA15

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students for 5-10 minutes each. Ask each student to show you his writing, read some of it aloud to you, and talk about his ideas and feelings about writing. Ask the student questions such as the following and record his responses.

- Q Where did you get this idea?
- Q What do you like about writing so far this year?
- Q How do you feel about your writing?
- Q How do you feel when you are asked to read your own writing to the class?
- Q What do you do best as a writer?
- Q What kinds of things do you want to write (or write about) in the coming year?
- Q How do you want to improve as a writer this year?

Document your observations for each student on a "Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 11 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Discuss Asking a Question During Pair Conferences

Explain that today partners will ask each other questions about their own writing during pair conferences. Ask each student to take a moment to reread the writing she will share with her partner today. Then ask:

- Q What is one question you'd like to ask your partner about your own piece of writing?

Students might say:

- "I can ask my partner what part he liked best."
- "I can ask my partner to tell me if anything was confusing."
- "I want to ask my partner how she felt when I read her my piece."

Briefly discuss:

- Q What will you and your partner do to act responsibly during pair conference time today?

Tell the students you will check in with them afterward to see how they did. Give them time to confer in pairs.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty generating questions, offer some suggestions like those in the "Students might say" note.

Teacher Note

The end-of-lesson reflection is important to the students' growth as writers and to their social development. We encourage you to allow at least 5 minutes at the end of each period to help the students reflect on their work and interactions. For more information about the structure of the Being a Writer lessons, see "A Typical Daily Lesson" (page xix). To learn more, view "Predictable Structure of the Writing Lessons" (AV3).

Teacher Note

For information on wrapping up this unit and conducting unit assessments, see "End-of-unit Considerations" on page 65.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students, without interacting with them, as they confer in pairs. Ask yourself:

- Do partners seem able to hear each other?
- Are they reading their writing to each other?
- Are they asking each other questions about their own writing?

Note any problems pairs are having that you want to bring up during the reflection discussion.

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA5); see page 10 of the Assessment Resource Book.

When you notice the pair conferences winding down, signal for the students' attention and bring the class back together.

5 Reflect on Pair Conferences and Community

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What question did you ask your partner about your writing today? How did your partner respond?
- Q I noticed that in some pairs, students [forgot to talk about the writing after reading it aloud]. How can we avoid that problem next time? Why is that important?
- Q How do you think we're doing building our writing community? What else can we do?

EXTENSION

Discuss the Students' Writing Goals and Interests

Remind the students that during individual writing conferences over the past few weeks you asked each student questions about his ideas and feelings about writing. Tell the students that you learned a lot about what the class is interested in writing about during the Being a Writer lessons as well as how each student wants to improve as a writer.

You might say:

"Many of you said that you were interested in writing reports this year. We'll spend time learning how to research a topic, take notes, and then organize your notes into a report. Some of you said that you'd like to learn how to use dialogue in your writing, and others said that they would like to practice writing poems. I also learned that a few students are going to try to write longer stories this year."

Explain that you will use this information to make sure that everyone has fun writing this year. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you want to do better as a writer this year?

Q What are you excited to write about this year?

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 1. Partners will stay together in Unit 2.
- Send home with each student a copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1).

Assessments

- (Optional) Prior to moving on to the next unit, you might review the students' responses to the questions on the "Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1) to identify patterns across the members of the class as well as individual comments that stand out to you. After analyzing the students' responses, you might facilitate a class discussion with them about what you learned about them as writers and how you plan to build their love of writing over the course of the year. For ideas on how to facilitate this discussion, see the extension "Discuss the Students' Writing Goals and Interests" on page 64.
- (Optional) If you obtained beginning-of-year writing samples, you might want to reflect on each student's writing using the "Beginning-of-year Writing Sample Record" sheet (WS1) on page 4 of the Assessment Resource Book. For more information on analyzing the writing samples, see "Beginning- and End-of-year Writing Samples" on page ix of the Assessment Resource Book.

Unit 2

The Writing Process

During this two-week unit, the students learn about the writing process by working with pieces of writing from their first drafts through publication. They select drafts to develop and publish. They reread their work critically and revise it, deleting extraneous information and clarifying confusing passages. They replace overused words with more interesting ones and explore strong opening sentences. They learn procedures for proofreading for spelling and conventions using the Word Bank and Proofreading Notes section of their Student Writing Handbooks. They write final versions, publish them as books, and present their books from the Author's Chair. They learn about a professional author's writing process, and they continue to confer about their writing in a caring and responsible way.

TEACHER AS WRITER

“The beautiful part of writing is that you don’t have to get it right the first time, unlike, say, a brain surgeon. You can always do it better, find the exact word, the apt phrase, the leaping simile.”

— Robert Cormier

Select a short draft that you wrote during Unit 1 to revise and develop. Use self-stick notes to mark places you might revise. Consider:

- What places in your draft do you really like? Why do you like them?
- Where could you write more clearly?
- What words could you replace with more interesting ones?
- How could you make your opening sentences stronger?

Revise your draft, either by marking up your first draft or by writing a second draft.

Writing Focus

- Students learn about a professional author’s writing practice.
- Students review their recent drafts, and each selects one to develop and publish.
- Students reread their writing critically and revise it.
- Students look for confusing or extraneous information in their drafts.
- Students generate alternatives for overused words and explore strong opening sentences.
- Students confer with one another and the teacher.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.
- Students help one another improve their writing.

J DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this week’s read-aloud selection with your English Language Learners before you read it to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1) on page 14 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, review the pieces you have written so far this year and select a short passage to use to model deleting extraneous information and clarifying confusing passages. Prepare your sample writing to display. Alternatively, you can use the “Sample First Draft” chart (WA3).
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, make a class set the “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1) on page 17 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2) on page 15 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Day 1

Selecting and Completing Drafts

Materials

- “More About Jon Scieszka” (see page 92)
- The Frog Prince Continued from Unit 1
- The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! from Unit 1
- “Questions About First Drafts” chart (WA1)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

In this unit, the students will work with the same partners they had in Unit 1.

In this lesson, the students:

- Learn about a professional author’s writing process
- Review their recent drafts, and each selects one to develop and publish
- Reread their writing critically
- Complete the first drafts of their selected writing pieces
- Use Writing Time responsibly

ABOUT TEACHING THE WRITING PROCESS

In Unit 2, the students are introduced to the writing process. They select drafts to develop, analyze and revise the drafts, proofread their work, and publish it. They confer about their drafts and consider various ways to improve their writing. The process they learn in this unit will be repeated in each of the genre units, so the students will have multiple opportunities to hone their revision, proofreading, and publishing skills.

If your students are familiar with the writing process from prior years, acknowledge this prior learning and explain that during this unit they will review and learn more about the writing process.

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that over the past weeks they have been hearing various kinds of books and getting many different ideas for writing. Explain that in the coming weeks, each student will develop one piece of writing into a book for the classroom library. Point out that because other people will read their books, they will want to make the books as interesting, clear, and free of errors as any other book in the library. Today they will review all of the drafts they have written so far this year, and each will select one to finish and develop into a book.

Before the students select their drafts, explain that they will learn how Jon Scieszka, a professional author they met in Unit 1, develops a piece of writing into a book.

2 Review What the Class Has Learned About Jon Scieszka

Show the covers of The Frog Prince Continued and The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! and remind the students that they heard these two stories by Jon Scieszka earlier. They also learned a little about the author. Ask:

Q What do you remember about Jon Scieszka?

After a few volunteers have shared, explain that today you will read more from an interview with Jon Scieszka. Point out that Jon Scieszka talks about his writing process, or how he writes, in this part of the interview.

Read the excerpt aloud slowly and clearly (see “More About Jon Scieszka” on page 92). Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

start out in longhand: begin writing by hand

I’m “in the zone”: (idiom) I’m focused and the work seems easy

After reading, use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What did you learn about Jon Scieszka’s writing process? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Q What do you think he means when he says, “Sooner or later I write something worth rewriting”? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and have one or two volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“I learned that Jon Scieszka writes first in longhand, not on the computer.”

“I think he means that he writes down a lot of ideas, but he chooses just one idea to rewrite and make into a book.”

3 Prepare to Review Drafts

Point out that professional authors usually work a long time on a piece of writing to get it ready to be published, or made into a book to be read by others. Authors start with an idea or a first draft. After that, they rewrite, do research, add and take out words and information, and make the piece as interesting and clear as possible. This process is called revision. Explain that, in the coming two weeks, each student will revise a piece of writing to get it ready to publish.

ELL Note

You might provide the prompt “I remember . . .” to your English Language Learners to help them verbalize their answers to this question. For more information about supporting English Language Learners, see “Additional Strategies for Supporting ELLs” on page xlix. To learn more, view “Adapting Lessons for English Language Learners” (AV32).

Explain that you would like the students to carefully reread all the drafts they have written in their notebooks and each select one draft to revise and publish. Encourage the students to select drafts that interest them, that they can imagine making changes to, and that will be fun to develop into books for their classmates to read.

4 Reread Drafts and Select One to Develop

Have the students get their notebooks and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Ask them to reread their drafts and each select one to develop into a book. Then have the students think about what they can add or change to make their drafts more interesting, clear, and complete.

As the students review their drafts, circulate around the room. Encourage the students to select pieces that offer revision possibilities. These include narratives of most kinds. If you notice them selecting pieces with limited potential for revision (for example, a list, pieces they feel are already “perfect,” or very long or very short pieces), gently guide them toward more appropriate choices. Also guide them away from drafts that are not double-spaced. Support the students by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose this piece to revise?
- Q What might you add or change in this piece to make it more interesting?

5 Discuss Completing First Drafts

When the students have finished reviewing their drafts, display the “Questions About First Drafts” chart (WA1). Ask the students to think quietly to themselves about each of the questions. Then read the questions one at a time, pausing after each to give the students time to think. (Do not stop to discuss the questions at this point.)

WA1

Questions About First Drafts

- Does your writing make sense? What parts might you want to check again to make sure they make sense?
- What still needs to be added to your first draft for it to be finished?
- What else might readers want to know about when they are reading your piece?
- Read the last sentence of your piece. Does it feel like an ending? What more can you write to make it feel like an ending?

Have partners turn to face each other to discuss their thinking. After both partners have had a chance to share their writing and thinking, signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share with the class.

Explain that the students will finish their drafts today, making sure they have included everything they want to say at this point. Any student who finishes early may set her draft aside until tomorrow and work on another piece of writing. Encourage the students to work responsibly and independently during Writing Time.

WRITING TIME

6 Complete First Drafts of Selected Pieces

Have the students work silently for 20–30 minutes to finish their first drafts. Join them in silent writing for 5–10 minutes, and then circulate around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students as they work on their drafts. Ask yourself:

- Have the students selected drafts that lend themselves to revision?
- Will most of the students have finished drafts that they can start revising tomorrow?
- If not, how much additional time might they need to finish their first drafts?

If you notice that many students need more time to complete their first drafts, make time for them to do so before you go on to the Day 2 lesson. Any student who has finished may work on another piece of writing.

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 14 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Explain that they will begin to revise their drafts tomorrow.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

7 Reflect on Writing and Taking Responsibility

Help the students reflect on their work today by asking:

- Q What did you do to take responsibility for your own work during Writing Time today?
- Q How does it help to build our community when you do that?

Teacher Note

If necessary, remind students who finish writing their first drafts before Writing Time is over that they can look in the writing ideas section of their notebooks to get ideas for new pieces to write.

Teacher Note

If necessary, remind the students to use the discussion prompts they learned in Unit 1 as they respond. They are:

- “I agree with _____ because . . .”
- “I disagree with _____ because . . .”
- “In addition to what _____ said, I think . . .”

Technology Tip

For more information about using web-based resources, view the “Using Web-based Teaching Resources” tutorial (AV75).

Technology Tip

You might teach the following Technology Mini-lessons to help your students learn how to participate safely in online communities: Mini-lesson 1, “Navigating Safely Online”; Mini-lesson 2, “Maintaining Privacy Online”; and Mini-lesson 3, “Showing Respect Online,” in Appendix A. For more information, see “About Digital Citizenship Lessons” on page 702.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Learn More About Jon Scieszka

If the students are interested in finding out more about Jon Scieszka or his humorous books, have them watch a conversation with him or read another interview with him online. To find a video or print interview with the writer, search online with the author’s name and the keyword “video” or “interview.” After the students watch the video or read the interview, have them discuss what they learned about the author’s life and his thoughts about writing.

Day 2

Analyzing and Revising Drafts

Materials

- Pad of small (1½" x 2") self-stick notes for each student
- “Revising for Extra or Confusing Information” chart (WA2)
- Your sample writing OR “Sample First Draft” chart (WA3)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA4)
- Class set of “Conference Notes” record sheets (CN1)

Teacher Note

Teacher modeling is a regular feature of the Being a Writer program. You can use chart paper or interactive whiteboard charts (whiteboard activities) for your modeling. For more information about whiteboard activities in the Being a Writer program, view the “Using CCC’s Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV73).

In this lesson, the students:

- Reread their drafts critically
- Think about extraneous information or confusing parts in their drafts
- Revise their drafts
- Give their full attention to the person who is speaking

ABOUT TEACHING REVISION

The lessons in this unit are designed to give the students guided practice with rereading and critically analyzing their drafts before they put pencil to paper to revise. In the initial step of the process, you will ask the students specific questions about their drafts, and they will use self-stick notes to mark places where they could possibly revise. They will then watch you model making some revisions to your piece before they start to revise their own drafts.

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Facilitate Guided Rereading of Drafts

Have the students sit at their desks today. Explain that they will think about how they might revise and improve their drafts to make them into more interesting and enjoyable books. Have them open their notebooks to their completed first drafts and quietly reread them. Ask the students to look up when they are finished.

Distribute a pad of self-stick notes to each student. Explain that you will ask the students to look for and think about a couple of specific things in their drafts.

Display the “Revising for Extra or Confusing Information” chart (WA2) and read the prompts aloud, one at a time, giving the students several quiet minutes after each prompt to review their drafts and mark passages with self-stick notes.

Revising for Extra or Confusing Information

- Look for places in your draft where you might be able to delete, or take out, information that doesn't belong. Mark the margin next to each place with a self-stick note and write delete on it.
- Imagine reading your draft for the first time. Look for any places that might be confusing or where what's happening might be unclear. Mark the margin next to each place with a self-stick note and write confusing on it.

WA2

2 Model Revising and Deleting

Without sharing as a class, explain that during Writing Time today the students will look at the places they marked with self-stick notes and revise those places. Ask the students to watch as you model making revisions.

Display your own writing or the “Sample First Draft” chart (WA3) and read it aloud. If you are using your own writing, begin by writing delete in the margin next to extraneous information and confusing in the margin next to potentially confusing places. Then model deleting extraneous information and clarifying potentially confusing places by thinking aloud and revising on the draft.

You might say:

“This part is confusing. So it's clear what ball I mean, I think I will add: that I throw for him when I come home from school. The sentence about my mom being allergic to cats doesn't really go with the story. I think I will delete it. I'm going to delete the sentence about the policeman too, for the same reason.”

Teacher Note

The purpose of the guided rereading is to give the students experience thinking about their drafts and reading them critically before they begin to revise.

Teacher Note

Have pads of self-stick notes available for the students to use during the revision phase of this unit and of each genre unit. If necessary, model attaching a self-stick note to the outer margin of a notebook page so that it marks the text without covering it up.

Teacher Note

Learning to identify confusing and extraneous text can be very challenging for students. The goal in this lesson is to introduce the idea and to continue to build on it throughout the year. You will model revising and deleting in Step 2 of this lesson.

TEKS 11.C.ii

TEKS 11.C.vii

Student/Teacher Narrative
Steps 1 & 2

Sample First Draft

I have a nice dog named Pepper. He loves to lie in the sun. He loves to eat. He loves chasing the green ball, ^{that I throw for him when I come home from school}

Pepper loves most things, but there's one thing that Pepper really hates. He hates getting wet. ~~Cats hate getting wet too, but my mom is allergic to cats so we can't have one.~~ delete

One day I was throwing his green ball for him, and it landed in a bush covered with little pink flowers. Pepper ran right in after it. The flowers smelled like perfume. The bush was swarming with bees.

"Oh, no! Pepper! Bees!" I said.

Pepper had already figured that out. He came running out of the bush, flicking his ears and tail, with the bees in hot pursuit. He ran straight into a nearby pond. Splash!

The bees hovered for a few more minutes and then flew away. Pepper crawled out of the pond, dripping. I guess Pepper hates bees even more than he hates water!

~~A policeman came along and said, "You better put that dog on a leash."~~ confusing

Teacher Note

Save the revised "Sample First Draft" chart (WA3) to use on Day 4.

TEKS 11.C.ii
TEKS 11.C.vii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 3

Explain that the students will follow the same procedure to delete and revise information in their own drafts.

WRITING TIME

3 Revise Drafts

Display the "Writing Time" chart (WA4) and have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 15–20 minutes.

Writing Time

- Review the places you marked with self-stick notes.
- Rewrite places that might be confusing.
- Cross out words or sentences that don't belong.
- If you finish, work on another piece of writing.

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Over the next two weeks, confer for 5-10 minutes with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask the student to tell you about the part he is working on now and to read his draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student's writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Do the ideas connect in a way that makes sense?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to him and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?
- Q What is another way you can say this? Write that down.
- Q What sentence could you add to give your reader more information?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a "Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 17 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Explain that they will continue to revise their drafts tomorrow.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Share Revisions and Reflect on Participation

Have the students put their pencils away and gather with their notebooks to share their writing. Ask one or two volunteers to share revisions that they made today by reading the original passages aloud and then reading the revised passages. Encourage the students to give their full attention to the person who is sharing. Facilitate discussion about each volunteer's revised passage by asking questions such as:

- Q [Jaya], why did you choose to revise that passage?
- Q How do you think [Jaya's] revision improves the piece?
- Q What questions can we ask [Jaya] about her revision?

Help the students reflect on their participation in this discussion by asking:

- Q How did you do with giving your full attention to the person who was sharing? Why is it important that we try to do that every time?

Teacher Note

The students will use their pads of self-stick notes again on Day 4 of this week.

Day 3

Pair Conferencing

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA5)

Teacher Note

This lesson may require an extended class period. To ensure that the lesson moves smoothly, keep discussions focused and brief. (See the Facilitation Tip on page 231 for additional support for pacing class discussions.)

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering this question, suggest some ideas like those in the “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” chart and ask, “What else can you ask your partner?”

In this lesson, the students:

- Ask for and receive feedback about their writing
- Give feedback in a helpful way
- Use pair conference time responsibly

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Prepare for Pair Conferences

Explain that today partners will meet to confer about their drafts. This is an opportunity for each student to get feedback from a reader about the strengths of a piece and how it might be improved.

Explain that, in the writing community, the goal of giving feedback is to help the other person create the best possible piece of writing. It is important that each student share what he likes about his partner’s piece and also offer suggestions and questions to help his partner improve the piece. Ask:

Q What kind of feedback do you think would be helpful to improve a piece of writing? Why?

Q If you have questions about or suggestions for improving the piece, how would you want to communicate them so it helps your partner?

Encourage partners to use a helpful tone when giving each other feedback about their writing.

2 Think About What to Ask Partners During Pair Conferences

Before beginning the pair conferences, ask the students to reread their own drafts and think about what they want to ask their partners about the drafts. After the students have had a chance to read, ask:

Q What would you like to ask your partner today about your own draft?

As the students generate ideas, record them on a sheet of chart paper titled “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” (see diagram on page 81).

Questions for My Partner About My Draft

What part do you like best?

Is anything confusing?

What can I write to make it clearer?

Explain that partners will take turns reading their drafts, including revisions, aloud. Remind the students to use questions on the chart to get specific feedback before going on to the other partner's draft.

Before the students work with their partners, model conferring with a volunteer. Begin by deciding together who will go first. When you discuss your draft, model referring to the "Questions for My Partner About My Draft" chart to get ideas. When you discuss your partner's draft, model giving helpful feedback.

You might say:

"Would you like to read first or would you like me to read first?"

"Is there anything in my draft that you found confusing?"

"I thought the part about seeing the boat tipping over was exciting. I wasn't sure if you were in the boat or watching from the shore. Maybe you can make that part clearer."

3 Confer in Pairs

Give the students ample time to confer in pairs. You might let pairs spread out in the classroom during the conferences so partners can hear each other.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe conferring pairs without interacting with them. Ask yourself:

- Are pairs staying on task, reading and discussing their writing?
- Are they discussing questions from the "Questions for My Partner About My Draft" chart?
- Are partners giving each other specific feedback?
- Are they giving feedback in a helpful way?

Note any difficulties you observe so you can discuss them with the students in Step 4. Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA2); see page 15 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Teacher Note

For more information, view "Managing Pair Conferences" (AV8).

ELPS 2.I.iv
Steps 3 and 4

Facilitation Tip

Continue to prompt the students to turn and look at the person who will speak. (For example, you might say, “Genevieve is going to speak now. Let’s all turn and look at her.”) During the discussion, scan the class to ensure that the students are looking at the person who is speaking. If necessary, interrupt the discussion to remind them of your expectations.

Teacher Note

Save the “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” chart to use in Week 2.

When most pairs have had time to discuss their drafts, signal for the students’ attention.

4 Reflect on Pair Conferences and Feedback Received

Gather the class and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What was helpful about the way your partner talked to you today?
- Q What problems, if any, did you have during pair conferences? What will you do to avoid those problems next time?

Share any problems you noticed and discuss what the students will do to avoid those problems next time. Ask:

- Q What is one thing your partner told you about your piece?

Explain that authors pay close attention to feedback about what is unclear or confusing in their writing. Although authors might not follow every suggestion they receive, the feedback helps them improve their work until it is the best piece of writing possible.

WRITING TIME

5 Revise Drafts Based on Conference Feedback

Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA5) and have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 15–20 minutes.

Writing Time

- Add or change things in your draft based on partner feedback.
- Rewrite places that might be confusing.
- Cross out words or sentences that don’t belong.
- If you finish, work on another piece of writing.

WA5

As the students work, circulate around the room. Support students who are having difficulty incorporating feedback into their drafts by having them join you at a back table and quietly discussing questions such as:

- Q What feedback did your partner give you about your draft? Do you agree or disagree with it? Why?
- Q Your partner said that he [got confused at the end of your story]. What did he say was [confusing] to him? How can you rewrite it [so it’s clear]?

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Briefly Share Revisions

Have a few volunteers each share a revision made today by reading the original passage aloud and then reading the revised passage. Have the volunteers tell the class why they made their revisions and how the changes improve their pieces.

Analyzing and Revising Drafts

Day 4

In this lesson, the students:

- Generate alternatives for overused words
- Reread their drafts critically
- Revise their drafts
- Work independently during Writing Time
- Give their full attention to the person who is speaking

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review

Have the students get their notebooks, pencils, and self-stick notes and sit at desks with partners together. Review that they began to revise their drafts earlier this week. Remind the students that the purpose of revision is to make their pieces of writing as interesting and clear as possible before publishing them. Explain that today you will ask them to think about several more specific ways they might improve their drafts.

2 Generate Interesting Words

Explain that one thing authors do to make their writing better is to replace overused words (uninteresting, everyday words that we use over and over) with other, more interesting words. Title a piece of chart paper “Use More Interesting Words” and write I have a nice neighbor beneath the title. Underline the word nice. Explain that the word nice is an example of an overused word. Ask:

Q What other words could we use to mean nice in this sentence? For example, what words might we use to describe a neighbor who was really, really nice?

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker
- “Revising for Overused Words” chart (WA6)
- Your revised sample writing OR revised “Sample First Draft” chart (WA3) from Day 2
- “Writing Time” chart (WA7)

Teacher Note

This lesson may require an extended period. To ensure that the lesson is well paced and that the modeling in Step 4 goes smoothly, you might prepare the draft you will use and your remarks about revision in advance.

Record the words on the chart as the students report them. Point out that the words the students suggest are not only more interesting and fun, but they also communicate exactly what the writer means.

Students might say:

“friendly”
“pleasant”
“generous”
“funny”
“happy-go-lucky”
“kindhearted”

Point out that in addition to adjectives (or descriptive words) like nice, there are many overused verbs (or action words), such as run, walk, sit, and said, that can be replaced with more interesting words.

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What interesting words can you think of to replace said? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have partners discuss for a few moments. Then signal for the students’ attention and have volunteers report their ideas as you record them on the chart. Alternatives for said include asked, shouted, replied, exclaimed, mumbled, whined, and cried.

Follow the same procedure to have partners brainstorm alternative words for the verbs run and look. Alternatives for run include dash, fly, shoot, speed, trot, sprint, and scamper. Alternatives for look include watch, stare, gaze, observe, spot, study, and scrutinize. Add these to the chart.

3 Facilitate Guided Rereading of Drafts

Display the “Revising for Overused Words” chart (WA6). Using the same procedure you used previously (see Day 2, Step 1 on page 77), take the students through the charted prompts.

WA6

Revising for Overused Words

- Look for the words nice, said, run, and look in your draft. Mark them with self-stick notes.
- Look for other overused words that you might be able to replace with more interesting ones. For each one, mark the margin next to the word with a self-stick note and write replace on the note.

Have one or two volunteers share words they marked with the class. Probe their thinking by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you decide to mark that word?
- Q What word could you substitute for the one you marked?

Skill Practice Note

If the students need more practice using adjectives and verbs, take time to review these skills (see Lesson 12 and Lesson 18 in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide).

Teacher Note

Save the “Use More Interesting Words” chart to use throughout the unit.

For more practice with generating interesting words, see the extensions “Generate Alternatives for Other Overused Words” on page 87 and “Use a Thesaurus” on page 90.

4 Model Revising

Explain that during Writing Time today the students will look at the words they marked with self-stick notes and replace them with more interesting words. Ask the students to watch as you model making revisions.

Display your own writing or the “Sample First Draft” chart (WA3) and read it aloud. If you are using your own writing, begin by identifying overused words and writing replace in the margin next to those places. Then model replacing words like nice, run, and said by crossing them out and writing alternative words above or below them.

You might say:

“I used the word nice to describe Pepper. Nice is an overused word. I’ll replace it with fun, energetic.”

Sample First Draft

replace I have a ^{fun, energetic} ~~nice~~ dog named Pepper. He loves to lie in the sun. He loves to eat. He loves chasing the green ball. ^{that I throw for him when I come home from school}

Pepper loves most things, but there’s one thing that Pepper really hates. He hates getting wet. ~~Cats hate getting wet too, but my mom is allergic to cats so we can’t have one.~~ delete replace “Oh, no! Pepper! Bees!” I ^{screamed} ~~said~~.

Pepper had already figured that out. He ^{shooting} ~~came running~~ replace out of the bush, flicking his ears and tail, with the bees in hot pursuit. He ran straight into a nearby pond. Splash!

The bees hovered for a few more minutes and then flew away. Pepper crawled out of the pond, dripping. I guess Pepper hates bees even more than he hates water!

~~A policeman came along and said, “You better put that dog on a leash.”~~ confusing

WA3

Explain that the students will follow the same procedure to delete and replace overused words in their own drafts. Encourage them to refer to the “Use More Interesting Words” chart as they do so.

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from talking with partners about places they have marked. Provide a place for them to confer quietly during Writing Time.

WRITING TIME

5 Revise Drafts

Display the “Writing Time” chart ( WA7) and have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 15–20 minutes.

WA7

Writing Time

- Review the places you marked with self-stick notes.
- Replace overused words with more interesting ones.
- Remove the self-stick notes when you finish the revision.
- If you finish, look for other places to make the words more interesting, or work on another piece of writing.

Explain that you will confer with students after the first 5–10 minutes of Writing Time, so you expect the students to work independently. Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer for 5–10 minutes with individual students about the piece she is developing for publication. Ask the student to tell you about the part she is working on now and to read her draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student’s writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Do the ideas connect in a way that makes sense?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to her and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?
- Q What is another way you can say this? Write that down.
- Q What sentence could you add to give your reader more information?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 17 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Explain that they will continue to revise their drafts tomorrow.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Share Revisions and Reflect on Participation

Have a few volunteers share one of the revisions they made today by reading their original passages aloud and then reading their revised passages. Encourage the rest of the students to give their full attention to the person who is sharing. Facilitate discussion about each volunteer's revised passage by asking questions such as:

- Q [Robin], why did you choose to revise that passage?
- Q How do you think [Robin's] revision improves the piece?
- Q What questions can we ask [Robin] about her revision?

Help the students reflect on their participation in this discussion by asking questions such as:

- Q Were you able to give your full attention to the person who was sharing his or her writing today?
- Q If you weren't giving your full attention today, what will help you give your full attention the next time we have a class discussion?

Students might say:

"I was distracted today. I think it would help for me to sit closer to the person who's sharing."

"It might help if we don't have our hands on our papers or pencils when people are sharing."

"I want to remember to turn and face the person who's sharing."

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering this question, offer some examples like those in the "Students might say" note.

EXTENSION

Generate Alternatives for Other Overused Words

Using the same procedure you used in today's lesson (see Step 2 on page 83), brainstorm and chart words that can replace other overused words, such as bad and sad. Add them to the "Use More Interesting Words" chart. (Examples of words you might substitute for bad are awful, terrible, appalling, ghastly, and horrific; for sad, examples include depressing, gloomy, miserable, pitiful, and tragic.) For an additional activity, see the extension "Use a Thesaurus" on page 90.

Materials

- The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! from Unit 1
- Meteor! from Unit 1
- Water Dance from Unit 1
- Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? from Unit 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA8)

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore strong opening sentences
- Reread their writing critically
- Finish revising their drafts
- Ask one another questions about their writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Read and Discuss Strong Opening Sentences

Have the students get their notebooks and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Tell the students that today they will focus on the opening sentences (the first few sentences) of their pieces. Explain that authors pay especially close attention to these sentences because good opening sentences get readers interested and make them want to keep reading. Explain that the students will listen to opening sentences from several read-aloud books from earlier in the year. They will think about how each author tries to grab our attention at the very beginning of the book.

Show the cover of The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! and read the title and author’s name aloud. Show and read page 5 aloud twice. Ask:

Q What is Jon Scieszka doing to get us interested in reading this story?

Students might say:

“He’s trying to get us curious about what the ‘true story’ is.”

“In addition to what [Becky] said, when he says ‘I’ll let you in on a little secret,’ it makes it seem like we’re going to find out something no one else knows.”

“In addition to what [Truong] said, the opening sentences make it seem like the book is going to be funny.”

Repeat this procedure using the opening sentences in Meteor! (page 3), Water Dance (page 3), and Can It Rain Cats and Dogs? (page 4). Point out that strong opening sentences often grab the reader’s attention with interesting details (“a star sputtered and flashed and started to fall”) or puzzling statements (“Some people say I am one thing. Others say I am many”). Strong opening sentences often hint at what is coming in the piece (“No—but it can rain frogs and fishes”).

2 Review Opening Sentences in Drafts

Ask the students to reread the first few sentences of their own drafts. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q How might you revise your opening sentences to grab the reader’s attention and make him or her want to keep reading? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

Students might say:

“I think my opening sentence will grab the reader’s attention because the first word is Pow! My partner agrees.”

“I think I’m going to revise my opening sentences because right now my piece starts with ‘Once there was a little boy.’ It’s not very interesting.”

Encourage the students to revise their opening sentences during Writing Time today.

WRITING TIME

3 Revise Drafts

Tell the students that next week they will start writing final versions of their pieces to go into their books. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA8) and have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 15–20 minutes.

Writing Time

- Revise your opening sentences so they grab your reader’s attention.
- Make any other revisions you think are needed to make your piece the most interesting it can be.

WA8

Join the students in writing for 5–10 minutes; then confer with individual students.

Teacher Note

The students will learn more about the characteristics of strong opening sentences in the genre units this year.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer for 5–10 minutes with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask the student to tell you about the part he is working on now and to read his draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student's writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Do the ideas connect in a way that makes sense?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to him and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?
- Q What is another way you can say this? Write that down.
- Q What sentence could you add to give your reader more information?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a "Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 17 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Share Revised Opening Sentences as a Class

Have a few volunteers share opening sentences they revised by reading the original and revised sentences. As the students share, encourage discussion by asking the class questions like those that follow. Be ready to ask the volunteers to reread what they shared, if necessary.

- Q How is [Antonia's] revised opening different from the original?
- Q What do you think about when you hear the revised opening?
- Q What questions can we ask [Antonia] about her revised opening sentences?
- Q What are you learning about revising to make writing better?

EXTENSION

Use a Thesaurus

Distribute a thesaurus to each pair of students. Tell the students that today they will have the chance to discuss and practice using a reference book called a thesaurus. Tell the students that partners will first look

Technology Tip

This activity focuses on using a print thesaurus, but you can modify it to support the students in using an online thesaurus. To find one, search online using the keywords "online thesaurus." After the students have navigated to the thesaurus you selected, have them type a familiar word such as happy or fun into the Search box. Discuss the word entry format and the information provided for the word. Then have partners use the thesaurus to look up words from the "Use More Interesting Words" chart.

through their thesaurus and talk about what a thesaurus is and when they might use one. Then they will share their ideas with the class. Give each pair of students a couple of minutes to explore and discuss their thesaurus, and then discuss as a class:

Q What is a thesaurus?

Q When might you use a thesaurus? In what ways might a thesaurus be helpful?

If necessary, explain that a thesaurus is a “book of synonyms, or words that mean the same thing or almost the same thing.” You might use a thesaurus when you are writing to help you find just the right word or to avoid using the same word over and over again.

Have partners open their thesaurus to the first two-page spread of words. Point out that the words are listed alphabetically and that the guide words at the top of each page are the first and last words on the page. Explain that guide words help you find a word you are looking for. Also point out that for each word, the thesaurus provides the part of speech (for example, noun, verb, or adjective) and synonyms.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Use More Interesting Words” chart, and review that these are synonyms for the words nice, said, run, and look on the board. Explain that partners will choose one of these overused words, look it up in the thesaurus, and share the synonyms they find with the class.

Give partners a minute or two to choose a word, find it in the thesaurus, and discuss its synonyms. When most pairs have finished, discuss the words and their synonyms as a class by asking:

Q What word did you look up? What synonyms did you find for the word?

Follow up by asking:

Q Which of these synonyms are already on our chart? Which synonyms should we add to the chart?

Add the synonyms the students suggest to the chart.

Teacher Note

You might point out that most thesauruses include helpful information at the beginning about how to use the thesaurus. If the particular thesaurus your students are using includes other features, such as antonyms or related words, point these out as well.

Teacher Note

Circulate as the students look up the words. If the students are having trouble finding a word, call for their attention and show them how to use the guide words to locate a word.

Teacher Note

You might explain that, when using a thesaurus, it is a good idea for the students to look up the synonyms they are finding in a dictionary for more information about the words’ meanings and how they are used. Synonyms listed for a word in a thesaurus may have varying shades of meaning and use.

More About Jon Scieszka

excerpted from Author Talk, compiled and edited by Leonard S. Marcus

Do you have a daily work routine?

I can write anywhere—on the subway, on airplanes, or in the park. I always have a pen with me. I’m always ready! I write later drafts on my computer, but I start out in longhand because I can write faster that way.

The main thing is that I try to make myself write every day, no matter what. Sooner or later I write something worth rewriting! I have a notebook full of ideas. When I want to start a book, I come back to that notebook to see if I can get one of those ideas to take off.

Do you revise your work much?

Yes. I was amazed once, going through some old files, to realize how many reams of paper I had gone through before I finished the first Time Warp books. It was kind of scary! I try to polish my work as much as possible before showing it to my editor, because I’ve found that if I involve other people too soon, it confuses me. I lose track of what it was I wanted to say.

What is the best part of being a writer?

Being a writer is fun, but it’s also torture. The hardest part is sitting down to write on a nice summer day. It becomes fun once I get something going, when like an athlete I know I’m “in the zone.” That’s when ideas come, and that feels magical. But the best part of writing is finishing a good piece of writing.

Week 2

OVERVIEW

Writing Focus

- Students confer with one another and the teacher.
- Students learn procedures for proofreading their writing.
- Students write their final versions and publish them as books.
- Students present their books to the class from the Author's Chair.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students act in fair and caring ways.
- Students make decisions and solve problems respectfully.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing.

Online Resources

Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to find your online resources for this week.

Whiteboard Activities

- WA9–WA14

Assessment Forms

- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3)
- “Social Skills Assessment Record” sheet (SS1)
- “Individual Writing Assessment” record sheet (IA1)
- “Student Self-assessment” record sheet (SA1)

Reproducible

- Unit 2 family letter (BLM1)

Professional Development Media

- “Assessing Student Writing” (AV39)
- “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV74)

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3) on page 16 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, collect enough folders (manila, pocket, or any other kind) for each student in the class.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, create a sample handmade book by stapling together several blank pages with a construction-paper cover.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, establish a procedure for the students to follow when they are ready to present their completed books from the Author’s Chair. You might have the students place finished work in a basket; then, during the sharing time, you can call on authors in the order they completed their books to read them aloud to the class. Designate a place in the class library for the students’ published books after the students have shared them from the Author’s Chair and shown them to their families. (See “Tips for Managing the Program in Your Classroom” on page xli for other suggestions about organizing the writing program in your classroom.)
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student’s published piece.
- ✓ (Optional) If computers are available, you might have the students type and print their pieces this week. You can also recruit parent volunteers to help with this task.

TEACHER AS WRITER

“I believe more in the scissors than I do in the pencil.”

— Truman Capote

Carefully reread the draft you revised in Week 1. Consider:

- Are there words or sentences in this draft that seem extraneous—like they do not really belong?
- Are there ideas you can express in fewer words?

Think about what you can delete from your draft or rewrite for concision. Make these revisions, either by marking on your current draft or by writing a new one.

Day 1

Pair Conferencing

Materials

- “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” chart from Week 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA9)
- Supply of loose, lined paper for final versions
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3)

In this lesson, the students:

- Begin writing the final versions of their pieces
- Initiate pair conferences
- Act responsibly while writing and conferring during Writing Time
- Ask for and receive feedback about their writing
- Give feedback in a helpful way

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Discuss Initiating Pair Conferences

Have the students stay at their seats. Explain that this week the students will work on final versions of the pieces they revised last week and make them into books for the class library. Explain that partners will confer about their revised drafts. Remind the students that in earlier lessons, everyone conferred at the same time. This week, however, the students may initiate their own conferences whenever they want feedback about their writing.

Explain that today you will signal about halfway through Writing Time that the students may confer in pairs about their writing, if they wish. If possible, designate a place in the room for pair conferences that is a little apart from where other students are writing. Tell the students that they should ask their assigned partners to confer first. If a student’s partner is busy writing and would rather not stop to confer, the student may ask someone else. Ask questions such as:

- Q How can you respectfully ask someone to confer with you?
- Q If someone asks you to confer and you would rather keep writing, how can you respond to that person respectfully?
- Q What else will you do to be responsible if you confer with a partner today?

Direct the students’ attention to the “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” chart from Week 1 and review the chart. Ask:

- Q What other questions might you want to ask your partner about your draft?

Add any new questions to the chart and encourage the students to use the questions if they choose to confer with a partner today.

WRITING TIME

2 Write Independently and Confer

Display the “Writing Time” chart (🗨️ WA9) and distribute loose, lined paper to each student. Have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Reread your draft.
- Make any other revisions that you think are needed to make your piece the most interesting it can be.
- When you are satisfied with it, start copying it neatly in pencil on lined paper.

WA9

Join the students in silent writing for 5–10 minutes; then walk around and observe, assisting students as needed. About halfway through the writing period, signal that the students may confer in pairs, if they wish.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students as they initiate and participate in pair conferences. Ask yourself:

- Are the students able to find partners and begin conferring with minimal disruption to the class?
- What problems are the students having initiating pair conferences?
- Do conferring pairs seem to stay on task, reading and discussing their writing?
- Do they return promptly to writing at the end of their conferences?
- Is the noise level such that students can continue to write if they wish?

Note any problems that you observe and be ready to bring them up during the reflection discussion. Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3); see page 16 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

Facilitation Tip

Continue to remind the students to turn and look at the person who will speak. Ask speakers to wait until they have the class's attention before starting to speak. Scan the class to ensure that all students are actively listening and participating in the discussion. Notice the effect of using this facilitation technique on the students' engagement in class discussions over time.

Teacher Note

Save the "Questions for My Partner About My Draft" chart to use in the Personal Narrative and Fiction genre units.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

3 Reflect on Pair Conferences

Gather the students to discuss how they did writing and conferring during Writing Time today. Remind them that, in the writing community, the goal of giving feedback is to help the other person create the best possible piece of writing. Ask questions such as:

- Q If you participated in a pair conference today, what questions did you ask your partner about your writing?
- Q What did your partner do or say that helped you?
- Q If you continued to write while pair conferences were going on, were you able to concentrate? Why or why not?
- Q I noticed that [the room got very noisy when people were walking around looking for partners to confer with]. What can we do next time to avoid this problem?

SOCIAL SKILLS ASSESSMENT NOTE

During the final week of this unit, assess the students' social skill development using the "Social Skills Assessment Record" sheet (SS1). Access and print the record sheet from the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) or make a copy from page 176 of the Assessment Resource Book. Note that you will use the same record sheet to document each student's progress when you reassess social skill development in the winter and spring.

Day 2

Proofreading

Materials

- Student Writing Handbooks
- "Writing Time" chart (WA10)
- Supply of loose, lined paper for final versions
- Writing folder for each student

In this lesson, the students:

- Proofread their drafts for spelling
- Become familiar with their word banks and learn how to add words to them
- Act responsibly while writing and conferring during Writing Time
- Act considerately toward others

MORE ABOUT REVISION AND PROOFREADING EARLY IN THE YEAR

Remember that the students are just being introduced to the writing process in this unit. They will repeat the process in every genre unit, so they will have multiple opportunities to practice their revision and proofreading skills and to learn new skills (see “Skills and Conventions” on page xxiii). Do not worry at this point if you notice that students are publishing pieces that could have undergone more revision. The students will improve with repeated practice over time.

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Discuss Proofreading for Spelling

Have the students stay at their seats. Review that this week the students are working on their final versions and making them into books for the class library. Point out that published pieces of writing need to include correct spelling and have as few errors as possible. Today and tomorrow the students will proofread their drafts, or check them for spelling, punctuation, and capitalization errors.

2 Introduce the Word Bank in the Student Writing Handbook

Ask the students to reread their revised drafts (even if they have already begun copying them as final versions) and circle any words for which they are unsure of the spelling. Stop the students after a couple of minutes and ask:

Q What words have you circled so far?

Have a few volunteers report the words they circled. Ask the students to open their Student Writing Handbooks to the Word Bank section. Explain that this section contains an alphabetical list of correctly spelled words that students their age often use in writing.

Ask the students to each look up the first word they circled in their word banks, check the spelling, and correct it in their drafts, if necessary. Ask:

Q If the word does not appear in the word bank, what else might you do to check the spelling?

Students might say:

“I could ask people at my table if they know how to spell it.”

“I could ask my partner about it during a conference.”

“I could ask you.”

“If I know where I read that word in a book, I can go look it up there.”

“I could look it up in a dictionary.”

Point out that each page of the word bank has blank lines where the students can add the new words they learn. After finding the correct spelling of a new word, they will add it to the appropriate page in the word bank (see diagram on page 100). The word will be there for them in the future, if they need it.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty looking up words, take time to review dictionary skills. Write a word on the board, and then look it up together as a class. Repeat with other words, if necessary. For more practice, see the technology extension “Use an Online Dictionary” on page 102.

Teacher Note

If the students have difficulty answering this question, offer some examples like those in the “Students might say” note.

Explain that the word bank is the first place the students should go to check the spelling of a word. Tell them that they will check and correct their spelling before starting or continuing to work on their final versions today.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently and Confer in Pairs

Display the “Writing Time” chart (C WA10) and have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 20–30 minutes. Distribute more loose, lined paper to the students, if needed.

Writing Time

WA10

- Check and correct your draft for spelling.
- Start or continue to write your final version neatly in pencil.

If necessary, remind the students who have already begun writing their final versions to correct any misspellings they may have copied into them. Remind the students that you will signal after 10–15 minutes of silent writing to indicate that they may confer in pairs, if they wish. Briefly discuss:

Q If you choose to confer with a partner today, how will you go about it in a way that is considerate of your classmates?

Encourage the students to act responsibly and considerately during Writing Time.

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece that each is developing for publication. Ask the student to tell you about the part she is working on now and to read her draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student’s writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Do the ideas connect in a way that makes sense?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?
- Does the student recognize misspelled words and correct them?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to her and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?
- Q What is another way you can say this? Write that down.
- Q What sentence could you add to give your reader more information?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 17 of the Assessment Resource Book.

After 10–15 minutes, signal that the students may confer in pairs.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Distribute a writing folder to each student and tell the students that they will keep any loose pages they are working on in their folders. Ask the students to write their names on the front of their folders.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Reflect as a Class

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What words did you check the spelling of today? Which of these words did you find in your word bank? How did you check on words that were not in the word bank?
- Q If you participated in a pair conference, what did you do to be considerate of your classmates? How do you think that helped your classmates today?

Explain that the students will continue to work on their final versions tomorrow.

Technology Tip

To find an appropriate online dictionary, search the Internet using the keywords “children’s dictionary” or “online dictionary for students.”

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Use an Online Dictionary

Write the following words where everyone can see them: sputtered, bleated, tinkering, captivating, soothe, suffices, and undaunted.

Have partners sit together at computers. Have the students navigate to the dictionary you selected. Direct their attention to the Search box. Ask them to type a familiar word such as bridge or rocket into the box and click the Search button or icon. Then discuss:

Q What information is provided for the word [bridge]?

Have volunteers share their thinking. As necessary, point out these key features:

- The division of the word into syllables
- The pronunciation of the word, which may include both a phonetic respelling and an audio pronunciation, accessed through an Audio button or icon
- The word’s part of speech (whether the word is a noun, verb, adjective, or other part of speech)
- The definition(s) of the word
- A sentence or phrase that shows how the word is used

Point out any additional information or features, which may include lists of synonyms or antonyms, the etymology (history) of the word, or links to related words or other information. Then briefly discuss:

Q In what ways is this online dictionary [different from/the same as] a print (book) dictionary?

Q Which type of dictionary do you prefer? Why?

Direct the students’ attention to the words on the board and explain that the words are from Meteor! and Scranimals, which they heard earlier in the year. Tell the students that partners will choose one of the words they want to know about, search for the word in the online dictionary, and share what they learned about the word with the class.

Give pairs a minute or two to choose a word, find it in the dictionary, and read and discuss the word’s entry. When most pairs have finished, discuss each word as a class by asking:

Q Who looked up the word [suffices]? What did you find out about the word?

Q Who else looked up the word [suffices]? What can you add to what [Gretchen and Adam] told us about the word?

Encourage the students to continue to use online or print dictionaries to look up the meanings of words they do not know.

In this lesson, the students:

- Proofread for punctuation and capitalization
- Become familiar with their proofreading notes and start using them
- Act responsibly while writing and conferring during Writing Time
- Discuss problems that arise in pair conferences

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Discuss Proofreading for Punctuation and Capitalization

Have the students stay at their seats. Review that yesterday the students learned how to proofread their drafts for spelling. Remind them that published pieces of writing need to be as free from errors as possible. Today they will learn how to proofread their drafts for punctuation and capitalization.

2 Introduce the Proofreading Notes in the Student Writing Handbook

Explain that the students will reread their revised drafts and check that each sentence begins with a capital letter and ends with a period, question mark, or exclamation point. Also ask them to check whether they have capitalized the first letter of any proper nouns. If necessary, remind students that a proper noun is a “noun that names a specific person, place, thing, or organization.”

Have the students take several minutes to proofread their drafts for punctuation and capitalization (even if they have already begun copying their final versions).

Ask the students to open their Student Writing Handbooks to the Proofreading Notes section as you display the “Proofreading Notes” chart (WA11). Explain that the students will use this section to keep track of the conventions (rules) of writing that they will learn this year. Over time, this section will become a checklist of things to pay attention to when they get ready to publish their drafts.

Write the notes from the diagram on page 104 on the chart, and ask the students to copy these notes onto the first page of the Proofreading Notes section in their handbooks.

Materials

- Student Writing Handbooks
- “Proofreading Notes” chart (WA11)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA12)
- Supply of loose, lined paper for final drafts
- (Optional) Computers for typing and printing final versions

Skill Practice Note

Using beginning and ending punctuation and capitalizing the first letters of proper nouns will be review skills for many of your students. However, if the students need more practice with these skills, take time to review them (see Lesson 1 and Lesson 7 in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide).

Teacher Note

Additional conventions are taught in the genre units of this program (see “Skills and Conventions” on page xxiii). The students will record the conventions they learn in the Proofreading Notes section as they learn them.

Proofreading Notes

Rule	Example	Notes
Capitalize the first letter of sentences.	Once upon a time . . .
Punctuate the end of sentences.	He ran. Did he run? Boy, can he run!
Capitalize the first letter of proper nouns.	Judy, Doctor Santos, Miami, Florida, United States, Thursday, February, Brooklyn Bridge	A proper noun names a specific person, place, thing, or group.

Explain that the students will check and correct their punctuation and capitalization before they work on their final versions today.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently and Confer in Pairs

Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA12) and have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Check and correct your draft for punctuation and capitalization.
- Finish checking and correcting your draft for spelling.
- Continue to write your final version neatly in pencil.

Remind the students who have already begun writing their final versions to correct any punctuation or capitalization errors they may have copied into them.

Tell the students that you will signal after 10–15 minutes of silent writing to indicate that they may confer in pairs. As the students write, confer with individual students.

Technology Tip

If computers are available, you might have some students type their final versions (see “Do Ahead” on page 95).

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece that each is developing for publication. Ask the student to tell you about the part he is working on now and to read his draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student's writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Do the ideas connect in a way that makes sense?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?
- Does the student recognize misspelled words and correct them?
- Does the student proofread his writing using his proofreading notes?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to him and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?
- Q What is another way you can say this? Write that down.
- Q What sentence could you add to give your reader more information?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a "Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 17 of the Assessment Resource Book.

After 10–15 minutes, signal that the students may confer in pairs.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Have them put their loose pages in their folders until tomorrow.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Reflect on Pair Conferences

Remind the students that the goal of conferring is to help one another create the best possible piece of writing. By helping one another, they build the writing community. However, sometimes problems can arise during pair conferences. Ask questions such as:

- Q What kinds of problems have you experienced when finding a partner to confer with? How can we avoid those problems?
- Q What kinds of problems have you experienced [during/at the end of] conferences? How can we avoid those problems?
- Q What can we do to make sure everyone is invited to confer sometimes?

Students might say:

“Sometimes I have to ask five different people before anyone will confer with me. It’s frustrating.”

“It seems like people don’t know what to do after they finish a conference. They hang around and start bothering people.”

“We want to make sure everyone gets invited to confer so no one feels left out of our community. Maybe we can try to ask someone we haven’t asked before.”

At the end of this discussion, summarize the students’ ideas for avoiding or solving problems during pair conferences. Encourage the students to keep these things in mind the next time they confer. Tell them that you will check in with them to see how they are doing.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Use the Whiteboard to Play Web-based Grammar and Punctuation Games

Interactive games are an engaging way for students to review grammar and punctuation skills. Begin by teaching and practicing a skill using a lesson in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide. Then, for additional practice, use the interactive whiteboard to play a web-based game. To find age-appropriate games, search the community area provided by the manufacturer of your interactive whiteboard system or search online using the keywords “[grammar/punctuation] activities.” Introduce each game and play it as a class before inviting pairs of students or individuals to play the game.

Technology Tip

To learn more about using web-based whiteboard activities to support students’ writing, view the “Using Web-based Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV74).

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore features of published books
- Make their final versions into books
- Handle materials responsibly
- Share materials fairly

ABOUT PUBLISHING FOR THE CLASS LIBRARY

In this lesson, the students learn a simple procedure for turning a final version into a book. They will staple together the pages of their final versions, along with any illustrations they have created, using construction-paper covers. The goal at this point is to give the students a way to publish their writing quickly, without investing a great deal of time in a bookmaking project. For suggestions about publishing materials you might provide and other suggestions about managing the program, see “Tips for Managing the Program in Your Classroom” on page xli.

GETTING READY TO WRITE1 Explore Features of Published Books

Have the students stay at their seats. Explain that the students who have finished writing their final versions may create their books today.

Show the sample book you made and pass it around for the students to see. Explain that they may add illustrations on unlined paper, if they wish. They will assemble the completed pages in the proper order with construction-paper covers. They will write the book titles and their names on the covers.

Explain that the students may wish to include additional features that professional authors sometimes include in their books. Use the read-aloud books from Unit 1 to review some of the features the students could include, such as a title page, dedication, author note, and back-cover blurb. Tell the students that these books will be available during Writing Time so they can look at these features more closely.

Materials

- Read-aloud books from Unit 1
- Sample handmade book
- Supply of loose, lined paper for final versions
- Supply of unlined paper for illustrations
- Construction paper for book covers
- Markers, crayons, and other supplies for making illustrations
- Stapler
- “Writing Time” chart (WA13)
- (Optional) Computers for typing and printing final versions

Technology Tip

There are a number of methods for creating beautiful handmade books that you might want to teach your students later this year. Search for ideas online using the keywords “making books with children.”

Teacher Note

If you are teaching the Making Meaning reading comprehension program from Center for the Collaborative Classroom, you might include books from Making Meaning Units 1 and 2 in this discussion.

2 Discuss Handling Materials Responsibly and Sharing Them Fairly

Make sure all the necessary bookmaking materials are in a central location and explain the procedure you would like the students to follow to get and return the materials. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q How will you handle the bookmaking materials responsibly?
- Q You may need to share supplies, like markers or the stapler. If someone is using something you need, what can you do?
- Q If you're using something that someone else needs, what can you do to share it fairly?

Encourage the students to keep these things in mind as they work today. Tell them that you will check in with them later to see how they did.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently and Confer in Pairs

Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA13) and have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Finish your final version.
- Include illustrations and other features, if you wish.
- Assemble your book and staple it together with a cover.
- Write the title and your name on the cover and decorate it.

WA13

Remind the students that you will signal after 10–15 minutes of silent writing to indicate that they may confer in pairs. As the students write, confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece that each is developing for publication. Ask the student to tell you about the part she is working on now and to read her draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student’s writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Do the ideas connect in a way that makes sense?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?
- Does the student recognize misspelled words and correct them?
- Does the student proofread her writing using her proofreading notes?

(continues)

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE (continued)

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to her and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?
- Q What is another way you can say this? Write that down.
- Q What sentence could you add to give your reader more information?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes” record sheet (CN1); see page 17 of the Assessment Resource Book.

After 10–15 minutes, call for the students’ attention and say that in a moment you will signal that they may confer in pairs. Remind them that yesterday they talked about some possible problems that could arise during pair conferences and how they might avoid those problems. Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What do you want to remember today to help avoid problems during pair conference time?

Continue with Writing Time and signal that the students may confer in pairs.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. Have the students return classroom materials to their proper places.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Reflect on Writing Time and Conferencing

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q How did you handle our class materials responsibly today?
- Q What problems did we have with sharing the materials today? How can we avoid those problems tomorrow?
- Q What problems were you able to avoid or solve during pair conference time today?
- Q I noticed today that [people returned to their seats when they finished their conferences]. How did that help our Writing Time go smoothly?

Encourage the students to continue to think of ways to be responsible during Writing Time and pair conference time.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Publish Student Writing Online

There are a number of websites where students can publish their writing online. Publishing online allows family members and friends to easily access and enjoy students' writing. You might make this an option for interested students. Search online for such websites using the keywords "publishing student writing online."

Day 5

Publishing

Materials

- Chart paper and a marker
- "Writing Time" chart (WA14)
- A chair to use for the Author's Chair
- Copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1) for each student

Teacher Note

If the students need additional time to finish their writing, consider doing Steps 3-6 (Author's Chair sharing) on another day.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review and reflect on the writing process
- Finish making their books
- Present their books to the class from the Author's Chair
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing
- Ask one another questions about their writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Reflect on Writing Process and Community

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that over the past several weeks they have learned about how to take a piece of writing through the writing process, from the very first idea to a published book. Ask:

Q What have you learned about how to take a piece of writing from a first draft to a published book?

Title a sheet of chart paper "Writing Process" and write the steps that follow as you remind the students what they did (see the diagram on page 111).

Writing Process

1. Generate ideas.
2. Write drafts.
3. Select one to develop.
4. Analyze and revise it.
5. Proofread it.
6. Write a final version and publish it.

Explain that the students will go through this writing process numerous times this year as they explore different kinds of writing, including fiction, nonfiction, and poetry.

Remind the students that they have been building a writing community in which everyone feels safe, cared for, and supported. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss questions such as:

- Q How will being part of a writing community help us as we go through the writing process? [pause] Turn to your partner.
- Q What part(s) of the writing process do you want to get better at this year? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Signal for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class.

WRITING TIME

2 Write Independently

Have the students return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA14) and have the students work silently on the charted tasks for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Finish your final version.
- Include illustrations and other features, if you wish.
- Assemble your book and staple it together with a cover.
- Write the title and your name on the cover and decorate it.
- If you finish, work on another piece of writing.

WA14

Teacher Note

Post the “Writing Process” chart where everyone can see it.

If necessary, review the procedures for getting materials. As the students write, confer with individuals.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece that each is developing for publication. Ask the student to tell you about the part he is working on now and to read his draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student's writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Do the ideas connect in a way that makes sense?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?
- Does the student recognize misspelled words and correct them?
- Does the student proofread his writing using his proofreading notes?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to him and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?
- Q What is another way you can say this? Write that down.
- Q What sentence could you add to give your reader more information?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a "Conference Notes" record sheet (CN1); see page 17 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over. As the students return classroom materials to their proper places, move the chair you have designated as the Author's Chair to the front of the area where you gather the class.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

3 Introduce Author's Chair Sharing

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that when they publish pieces of writing this year, they will present them to the class from the Author's Chair.

Explain the procedure you would like the students to follow when they are ready to present their books from the Author's Chair (see "Do Ahead" on page 95).

4 Discuss Speaking Clearly and Expressing Interest in Other People's Writing

Before asking a volunteer to share from the Author's Chair today, have a discussion about how the students will act, both as presenting authors

TEKS 1.C.ii
TEKS 1.C.iii
TEKS 1.C.iv
Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 4

and as members of the audience. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q Why is it important to speak in a loud, clear voice when you're sharing your book with the class?
- Q If you're in the audience and you can't hear the author, how can you politely let him or her know?
- Q How will you let the author know that you're interested in his or her writing? Why is it important to express interest in other people's writing?

Encourage the students to be attentive and considerate audience members. Tell them that you will check in with them later to see how they did.

5 Conduct Author's Chair Sharing

Ask for a volunteer who has finished publishing her book to read it aloud from the Author's Chair. Encourage the author to show any illustrations and any additional features she included. At the end of the reading, facilitate a discussion using questions like those that follow. Give the author an opportunity to respond to the class's comments and questions.

- Q What was interesting to you about [Janneke's] book?
- Q What part did you really like? Why?
- Q What parts were [funny/scary/suspenseful/surprising]? Why?
- Q What questions can we ask [Janneke] about her book?

Follow this procedure and have a few more students share from the Author's Chair. Assure the students that they will all have a chance to share their books from the Author's Chair in the next few days.

6 Reflect on Audience Behavior During Author's Chair Sharing

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q How did we do today as an audience? What might we want to work on during the next Author's Chair sharing?
- Q If you shared a book today, how did you feel? What did the members of the audience do that made you feel [relaxed/nervous/proud]?

Explain that the students may take their books home to share with their families. Then they will bring the books back to class to be kept in the class library. Show the students the place in the class library that you have designated for the students' published books. Explain that these books will be available for them to read during independent reading time. Emphasize that the students must handle their classmates' handmade books carefully and return them to the class library when they are done.

TEKS 1.A.iv
TEKS 1.C.iv
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5

Teacher Note

For information about wrapping up this unit and conducting unit assessments, see "End-of-unit Considerations" on page 114.

Teacher Note

Prior to doing this activity, you will need to make a class set of the “Student Self-assessment” record sheet (SA1) on page 19 of the Assessment Resource Book for each student.

Teacher Note

If necessary, you might model filling out the “Student Self-assessment” record sheet using your own writing or the “Sample First Draft” chart (WA3) from earlier in the unit.

EXTENSION

Introduce “Student Self-assessment”

Have the students bring their published writing and pencils, and sit at desks with partners together. Tell the students that when writers complete a piece of writing, they often reread it and think about what they did well and what they might do better in their next piece. Distribute a “Student Self-assessment” record sheet (SA1) to each student. Explain that the sheet lists characteristics of good writing. Tell the students that today they will read their published pieces to see which of the characteristics they included in their writing and which characteristics they need to work on next time.

Refer to the “Student Self-assessment” record sheet. Ask the students to follow along as you read aloud the characteristics in the left column. After reading, explain that the students will read their stories and look for these characteristics in their own writing. Point out that if they see a characteristic in their writing a lot, they will put a check in the box under the words “I did it!” If they see the characteristic some of the time, they will put a check in the box under the words “I did it some of the time.” If they still need to work on including a characteristic in their writing, they will put a check in the box under the words “I’m still working on it.”

Read the reflection questions at the bottom of the record sheet aloud. Ask the students to think about the questions and write their responses in the space provided.

Give the students enough time to analyze their writing and fill out the record sheet. When most students have finished, have partners share with one another what they did well and what they want to continue to work on. Then ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What did you do to make your writing fun and interesting to read?
- Q What is something you want to continue to work on as you write this year?

Collect the record sheets to put in the students’ writing portfolios. At the end of the next unit, you might have each student complete another self-assessment record sheet and compare his responses.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the end of Unit 2. The next unit you teach will be a genre unit. While the genre units may be taught in any order, Personal Narrative or Fiction is a good choice at this point. We recommend that you teach the Expository Nonfiction unit later in the year.
- You will need to reassign partners before you start the next unit.

- Send home with each student the student’s published piece and a copy of this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to share their published pieces with their families. Remind the students to bring the pieces back to class after their families have read them so they can be placed in the class library.
- Save the students’ published writing (or copies of it) to use for reflection and discussion in Unit 9.

Assessments

- Before continuing with the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students’ writing from this unit. See “Completing the Individual Writing Assessment” (IA1) on page 20 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- You might record your students’ progress over the course of the year using the “Individual Writing Assessment Class Record” sheet (CR1) on page 180 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- (Optional) Prior to sending the students’ published writing home to share with their families, you might have each student analyze her writing using the “Student Self-assessment” record sheet (SA1) on page 19 of the Assessment Resource Book. For more information about administering this assessment, see the extension “Introduce ‘Student Self-assessment’ ” on page 114.

Teacher Note

For more information, view “Assessing Student Writing” (AV39).

Genre

Personal Narrative

During this four-week unit, the students explore the genre of personal narrative and write about significant topics and events from their lives. They explore the characteristics of a good personal narrative, including sensory details, consistency in verb tenses, engaging openings, and effective endings. They learn about the writing practices of professional authors as they hear, discuss, and write personal narratives. Socially, they ask one another questions about their writing and give feedback in helpful and respectful ways. They also practice giving their full attention to the person who is speaking and expressing interest in and appreciation for other people's writing.

TEACHER AS WRITER

*“No surprise for the writer, no surprise for the reader.
For me the initial delight is in the surprise of remembering something I didn’t know I knew.”*

— Robert Frost

Think about memorable events from your life that you could write about. List these in your notebook; then select one or two of the most vivid memories to describe in short drafts. Write about what happened, when it happened, who was involved, and what was memorable about each event.

Writing Focus

- Students hear and discuss personal narratives.
- Students learn about a professional author’s writing practice.
- Students generate writing ideas from their own lives.
- Students visualize sensory details.
- Students draft personal narratives, focusing on single, interesting events or topics from their own lives.

Social Development Focus

- Teacher and students build the writing community.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this unit’s read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding. Since this week’s readings do not have illustrations, consider bringing in visual aids (such as a medal, a photograph, or an old baseball glove) to support the students’ comprehension.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during this unit. For suggestions about assigning partners, see “Random Pairing” on page xxix and “Considerations for Pairing ELLs” on page lii. For more information, view “Cooperative Structures Overview” (AV9).
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1) on page 32 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a class set of the “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1) on page 38 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Day 1

Exploring Personal Narrative

Materials

- “Never the Monkey” (Knots in My Yo-yo String, pages 26–28)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA1)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

For more information about personal narrative, view “Exploring Personal Narrative” (AV41).

Teacher Note

The partners you assign today will stay together for the unit. If necessary, take a few minutes at the beginning of today's lesson to let them get to know each other better by talking informally in a relaxed atmosphere.

Teacher Note

If you are teaching other programs from Center for the Collaborative Classroom, the students can work within partnerships already established, or you may assign new partners for the writing lessons.

In this lesson, the students:

- Work with new partners
- Hear and discuss a personal narrative
- Quick-write about special objects
- Write freely about things that interest them

ABOUT PERSONAL NARRATIVE

Personal narratives offer writers the opportunity to think about and write true stories about the meaningful experiences of their lives. Personal narratives describe significant events and explain how those events led to learning or a change of some kind. Character change in a narrative, whether of a fictional character or a real person, often results from learning an important lesson or gaining a new realization about oneself or the world. Personal narratives also include sensory details to make the writing come alive for the reader.

In the study of personal narrative at grade 5, the students identify significant single events or topics from their lives and write about them in detail. They learn to focus on the most important parts of the events they are describing, use sensory details, use verb tenses in a consistent way, and write engaging openings and endings that draw a story's events to a close.

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Pair Students and Discuss Working Together

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other's names (see “Do Ahead” on page 123). Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you.

Explain that today's lesson is the beginning of a four-week unit in which the students will explore a kind of writing called personal narrative. In personal narratives, authors tell stories about true things that have happened to them. Explain that partners will stay together for the unit. Ask:

Q What have you learned about working with a partner that can help your new partnership go well?

Students might say:

"We can ask each other questions and help each other."

"In addition to what [Sean] said, you can work better together if you get to know someone."

"I agree with [Cerule]. You don't have to be best friends—you just have to work together."

Encourage the students to keep these ideas in mind as they begin working with their new partners today.

2 Introduce and Read "Never the Monkey" Aloud

Show the cover of Knots in My Yo-yo String and read the title, subtitle, and author's name aloud. Explain that Knots in My Yo-yo String is made up of numerous short pieces that Jerry Spinelli wrote about growing up in Pennsylvania in the 1950s. Today you will read the piece called "Never the Monkey." In it, Jerry Spinelli writes about something special he owns. The object is special to him because it reminds him of proud and happy moments in his childhood. Invite the students to think about special things they own that they may be able to write about.

Read "Never the Monkey" (pages 26–28) aloud slowly and clearly, clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

cherished memento: favorite object kept to remember a place or event (p. 26)

Hartranft: the name of an elementary school (p. 27)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

medal: prize given for winning a race (p. 26)

50-yard dash: running race 50 yards (150 feet) long (p. 26)

3 Discuss the Reading

Ask and briefly discuss the questions that follow. Be ready to reread passages to help the students recall what they heard. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts to add to the discussion.

Q What events does Jerry Spinelli tell about in this story?

Q Why do you think he might have chosen to tell this story?

Teacher Note

Regularly remind the students to use the discussion prompts they learned when they participate in class discussions. The prompts are:

- "I agree with _____ because . . ."
- "I disagree with _____ because . . ."
- "In addition to what _____ said, I think . . ."

Teacher Note

If necessary, explain that an autobiography is a "kind of personal narrative in which an author writes the story of his or her life."

Teacher Note

To review the procedure for defining vocabulary during the read-aloud, see Unit 1, Week 1, Day 1, Step 3 on page 8. For more information, view "Introducing Vocabulary During a Read-aloud" (AV30).

Teacher Note

Remember to pause for 10 seconds for the students to think before you say “Turn to your partner.” To review the procedure for “Think, Pair, Share,” see Unit 1, Week 2, Day 1 on page 30. To see an example, view “Using ‘Think, Pair, Share’” (AV13).

Teacher Note

Note that on Days 1 and 2 of this week, the students may write personal narratives or anything else they wish. On Day 3, after exposure to a couple of examples of personal narrative, they will all begin writing in this genre.

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from drawing their ideas before they write. Encourage them to draw what they want to write about and then talk quietly with you or their partners about their drawings. If necessary, write out key words and phrases they want to use so they can copy the words into their writing.

Students might say:

“Maybe he chose to tell this story because winning was exciting.”

“In addition to what [David] said, I think he wanted to tell about a time he won a medal because he’s proud of himself.”

“I agree with [Destiny]. The author tells us about the medal at the beginning so we already know he’s going to win.”

4 Quick-write: Special Objects

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q Jerry Spinelli writes about an object that is very special to him—a gold-plated medal. What special object do you have that you could write about? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Scan the class as partners talk. When most pairs have finished discussing the question, signal for the students’ attention. Have the students open their writing notebooks to the next blank page in the writing ideas section, label it “Special Objects,” and list special objects they could write about. After a few moments, call for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class.

Explain that during Writing Time today the students may write about an object that is special to them, as Jerry Spinelli does in “Never the Monkey,” or they may write about anything else that interests them.

WRITING TIME

5 Write Independently

Have the students sit at desks with partners together. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA1) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Write about an object that is special to you.
- Write about anything else that interests you.

WA1

Remind the students to double-space their writing. If necessary, review that during Writing Time there should be no talking, whispering, or walking around.

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students staying in their seats and writing silently?
- Do they write readily about themselves?
- Are they double-spacing their writing?
- Do the students who have difficulty getting started eventually do so?

If you notice many students having difficulty starting to write, call for the class's attention and have partners talk to each other about what they might write. Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class, and then have them resume silent writing. If necessary, remind students to double-space their writing.

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA1); see page 32 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Briefly Share Writing and Reflect

Have partners share with each other what they wrote today. Then ask and briefly discuss questions such as those that follow. Invite the students to read passages of their writing aloud as they share.

- Q Who wrote about something special that you own? Tell us about it.
- Q What other topics did you write about? Tell us about them.

Help the students reflect on their partnerships by asking:

- Q What did you find out about your partner today?

EXTENSION

Discuss the Past Perfect Tense in “Never the Monkey”

Remind the students that in the story “Never the Monkey,” Jerry Spinelli says that he knew how to position himself on the starting line of the 50-yard dash because he had watched many track meets before the day of his own race. Read this sentence from the story aloud: “I knew what to do from the many meets I had attended with my father.”

Point out that Jerry Spinelli uses a special verb tense to show that he had watched those other track meets before he raced in the 50-yard dash. He puts the helping verb had before attended. Explain that when writers want to show that one action in the past happened before another action in the past, they add a form of the helping verb to have to a past tense of the main verb. Tell the students that this verb tense is called the past perfect tense. Explain that perfect, in this sense, means “completed”; the tense shows that one action was completed before another.

Read the following sentence from “Never the Monkey” (page 27) and ask students to identify the verb that is in the past perfect tense: “‘Froggy,’ as he was known to everyone but his teachers, had won the fifty-yard dash the year before as a mere fifth grader.” If necessary, explain that had won is the verb in the past perfect tense: Froggy won a race one year, and then the next year he ran in the 50-yard dash with Jerry. The past perfect tense helps make clear which action happened first.

Write the following sentence where everyone can see it: Jerry _____ other races before he ran in his own race. Explain that a form of the verb watch in the past perfect tense is needed to complete the sentence. Ask:

Q What had Jerry done before he ran in his own race?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking with the class. If necessary, follow up by asking questions such as:

Q How do we know that [“had watched”] is in the past perfect tense?

Skill Practice Note

For more practice with forming and using the perfect verb tenses, see Lesson 13 in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide.

In this lesson, the students:

- Informally explore features of personal narratives
- Hear and discuss a personal narrative
- Quick-write about interesting events
- Write freely about things that interest them

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Start “Notes About Personal Narratives” Chart

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind them that yesterday they heard “Never the Monkey,” a personal narrative by Jerry Spinelli.

Title a sheet of chart paper “Notes About Personal Narratives.” Remind the students that a personal narrative tells a true story from the author’s own life. Add this to the chart. Explain that you will continue to add to the chart as they learn more about what makes personal narratives different from other kinds of writing.

2 Read Part of “Shortstop” Aloud

Explain that you will read part of another personal narrative from Knots in My Yo-yo String called “Shortstop.” In “Shortstop” the author writes about learning an important lesson. Invite the students to think about the important lesson he learns.

Read the first part of “Shortstop” aloud slowly and clearly (pages 29–31: “From ages eleven to sixteen . . . I nodded. And I never forgot.”), clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

shortstop: baseball position that requires especially quick thinking and excellent catching and throwing skills (p. 29) console: comfort (p. 30)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

precious cargo: important things being carried (p. 29)

error: mistake (p. 30)

Materials

- Excerpt from “Shortstop” (Knots in My Yo-yo String, pages 29–31)
- Chart paper and a marker
- “Writing Time” chart (WA2)

Teacher Note

Save the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart to use later this week and throughout the unit.

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, we invite you to focus on two questioning techniques: asking open-ended questions and using wait-time. Notice that most of the questions we suggest are open-ended, inviting many responses. These questions cannot be answered with a single word and often begin with words like what, how, and why. We encourage you to try asking the questions as they are written and noticing how the students respond. Because these questions require thought, we suggest that you use at least 5-10 seconds of wait-time after asking each question before calling on anyone to respond. This gives everyone a chance to think before talking. To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view "Asking Open-ended Questions and Using Wait-time" (AV18).

Teacher Note

The students began their "Ideas from My Own Life" list on Unit 1, Week 2, Day 1, Step 4 (see page 31).

3 Discuss the Reading

Ask and briefly discuss the questions that follow. Be ready to reread from the text to help the students recall what they heard.

Q What event does Jerry Spinelli describe in this story?

Students might say:

"He writes about playing Little League baseball."

"In addition to what [Arturo] said, Jerry learns a lesson when he makes his first error."

"I agree with [Renata]. He learns that he isn't supposed to stand there pounding his glove if he makes an error. He's supposed to keep playing."

Q (Reread the following passage on page 30: "I could hear the ball crunching along the sandy ground. . . the manager was waiting for me.") What do you see in your mind when you hear this passage? Turn to your partner.

Point out that in many personal narratives, including this one, the author tells about interesting events from his life and includes sensory details to help the reader see, hear, smell, taste, and feel what is happening.

4 Quick-write: Interesting Events

Ask the students to think quietly about the questions that follow. Say the questions one at a time, pausing after each question (without discussing it) to give the students time to think.

Q Jerry Spinelli writes about an interesting event that happened to him when he was learning how to play baseball. What are some interesting events you could write about from your own life?

Q Jerry Spinelli says he learned a lesson he never forgot from his manager. When did you learn something that you've never forgotten?

Without discussing the questions, have the students open their notebooks to the page in the writing ideas section labeled "Ideas from My Own Life." Have them review the list and add other interesting events from their own lives that they could write about. Stop the students after 3-4 minutes of silent writing and have partners talk about their thinking; then have them resume writing for a few more minutes.

Signal for the students' attention and ask several volunteers to share their ideas with the class.

Explain that today the students may continue the writing they began during the quick-write, or they may write about anything else that interests them.

WRITING TIME

5 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA2) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Continue the writing you began in the quick-write.
- Write about anything else that interests you.

WA2

Remind the students to double-space their writing. If necessary, review that during the writing period there should be no talking, whispering, or walking around.

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Reflect on Writing

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as those that follow. Invite the students to read passages of their writing aloud as they share.

- Q Who wrote about an interesting event from your life? Tell us about it.
- Q What other topics did you write about today? Tell us about them.

Day 3

Exploring and Drafting Personal Narrative

Materials

- Excerpt from “George Street” (Knots in My Yo-yo String, pages 41–42)
- “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart from Day 2
- Class set of “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheets (CN1)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft personal narratives
- Visualize sensory details

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Review Sensory Details

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind them that yesterday they heard the narrative “Shortstop” by Jerry Spinelli. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you remember about the story “Shortstop”?

Review that Jerry Spinelli uses sensory details in his narrative. Remind the students that sensory details help the reader see, hear, smell, taste, and feel what happens. Direct the students’ attention to the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart and add this to it.

2 Read Aloud from “George Street”

Explain that today you will read part of another personal narrative by Jerry Spinelli called “George Street” in which he describes a street he lived on as a child in the 1950s. Point out that in the 1950s, people sometimes used coal to heat their houses. Trucks delivered the coal, which was stored in large bins (boxes) in people’s basements.

Read the first part of “George Street” aloud slowly and clearly (pages 41–42: “Baseball is still baseball . . . Or if I wasn’t pretending that day, I simply ran outside.”), clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

avalanche: large mass of snow, ice, or earth that suddenly slides down the side of a mountain (p. 41) cellar: basement (p. 41) bombardment: heavy gunfire attack (p. 42)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

racket: loud noise (p. 42)

3 Discuss the Reading

Ask and briefly discuss the questions that follow. Be ready to reread from the text to help the students recall what they heard.

Q What was coal day like at Jerry's house?

Q (Reread the following passage on page 42: "He lifted the hatch and the coal started coming . . . enemy battleship and its sixteen-inch guns.") What words did you hear that helped you see and hear what was happening? Turn to your partner.

Students might say:

"Coal day was noisy and dirty."

"I agree with [Blair]. I heard the word racket."

"In addition to what [Stuart] said, I heard 'black, choking blizzard.' That makes me imagine black dust everywhere."

4 Visualize Sensory Details

Have the students open their notebooks to the interesting events they listed yesterday. Ask them to choose one of those events and to imagine it with their eyes closed as they listen to the questions that follow. Say the questions one at a time, pausing after each question (without discussing it) to give the students time to think.

Q What is the event you are imagining?

Q Where is the event happening? What does it look like around you?

Q What sounds do you hear? What do you smell?

Q What do you see moving? How is it moving?

Ask the students to open their eyes, and have partners talk to each other about what they imagined. After a few moments, signal for their attention and ask:

Q What did your partner tell you about what she imagined?

Have a few volunteers share their partners' thinking with the class.

Explain that today you would like all of the students to try writing a true story about an experience from their own lives. They may continue a piece they started earlier or begin a new one. Direct their attention to the "Notes About Personal Narratives" chart and review the items on it. Encourage the students to keep these things in mind as they begin writing personal narratives today.

Teacher Note

To review the procedure for "Turn to Your Partner," see Unit 1, Week 1, Day 2 (page 11). To see an example, view "Using 'Turn to Your Partner'" (AV11).

Teacher Note

In this lesson, the students are just beginning to explore personal narrative. They are not expected to know or incorporate specific features of the genre into their writing at this point. They will build on their understanding as they explore the genre over the coming weeks.

Teacher Note

The students will write all first drafts of personal narratives, double-spaced, in their notebooks. In Week 3, they will select one of the drafts to develop and publish. Double-spacing now allows space for revision later. The students will write their final versions in Week 4 on loose, lined paper (or on a computer, if available).

Teacher Note

To see an example of a teacher conferring with individual students, view “Conferring About Personal Narrative” (AV40).

WRITING TIME

5 Draft Personal Narratives

Have the students return to their seats and work silently on personal narratives for 20–30 minutes. Remind them to double-space their writing.

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then begin conferring with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Over the next two weeks, confer with individual students about their personal narratives. Ask each student to show you his writing and read some of it aloud to you. Help the student extend his thinking about personal narrative by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose to write about this [event/memory/thing]?
- Q What else do you remember about it that you can add to the narrative?
- Q What words are you using to describe what you [saw/heard/smelled/tasted/felt]?
- Q What other experiences from your own life might you want to write about?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 38 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Share and Reflect on Writing

Ask and discuss the question that follows, inviting the students to read passages of their writing aloud if they wish.

- Q What interesting event from your own life did you write about? Tell us about it.

Explain that the students will continue to write drafts of personal narratives during the coming weeks.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write Opinions About Jerry Spinelli's Ideas Regarding Radio and TV

Show the cover of Knots in My Yo-yo String and remind the students that earlier they heard a story from the book called "George Street." Remind the students that in the story, the author, Jerry Spinelli, explains his ideas regarding radio and TV. Ask:

Q What do you remember about Jerry Spinelli's thoughts on radio and TV?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Then explain that you will reread what Jerry Spinelli wrote about radio and TV. Distribute copies of "Excerpt from 'George Street'" and explain that the passage you will read is reproduced there. Ask the students to follow along as you read aloud. Reread the first full paragraph on page 43 of the book aloud, starting with "For radio was a partnership" and ending with ". . . when the camera is the person."

Q What does Jerry Spinelli think about radio and TV? What in the story makes you think so?

Students might say:

"I think Jerry Spinelli doesn't like TV. He says that it makes you a 'passive dartboard.'"

"I agree with [Rashida] because Jerry Spinelli also says that 'our eyes enslave us' when we watch TV."

"I agree with [Binh and Rashida] because he makes it sound as though kids had better imaginations when they listened to radio and had to create pictures in their own heads."

Explain that the students will each write a paragraph about what they think of Jerry Spinelli's ideas about radio and TV. Tell the students that readers often have different opinions about what is written in a story, and that is fine. What is important is that they understand the author's opinion and explain it accurately. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing a paragraph about what you think of Jerry Spinelli's ideas about radio and TV.

Materials

- Knots in My Yo-yo String from Day 3
- Copy of "Excerpt from 'George Street'" (BLM2) for each student

Teacher Note

Prior to doing this activity, visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the "Excerpt from 'George Street'" (BLM2). Make a copy for each student; set aside a copy for yourself.

You might say:

"I think that some of what Jerry Spinelli says makes good sense, but I don't think television is always bad. I'll start by writing: In Jerry Spinelli's story 'George Street,' the author says that it takes more imagination to listen to the radio than it does to watch TV. I think that is often true, but I still think people can learn a lot while watching some TV programs. Notice that I stated my opinion and put the title of the story and author in the opening sentences. Now I need to explain my thinking using facts and details. I'll write: Jerry Spinelli writes that the radio 'furnished the sounds, and the listener supplied the pictures.' I agree that radio makes us picture things in our own heads, but we have to know what the things look like to be able to picture them. Television can show me things I could never imagine. For instance, when I watch nature programs about African jungles, I see animals and plants I could never picture from just listening to sounds. Now I need a closing sentence. I'll write: Jerry Spinelli complains about television, but I think that sometimes TV can show us things we could never imagine on our own."

Explain that each student should start her paragraph with an opening sentence that states her opinion and includes the title and author of the story, give a reason for her opinion and a fact or detail from the story to support her reason, and provide a closing sentence that wraps up her writing. Have the students return to their seats and write about their opinions. If time permits, invite the students to share their opinions with the class.

Day 4

Exploring and Drafting Personal Narrative

Materials

- Excerpt from "Mrs. Seeton's Whistle" (WA3)
- "Notes About Personal Narratives" chart from Day 3
- Student Writing Handbook page 6

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear and discuss a personal narrative
- Explore sensory details in a passage
- Draft personal narratives
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing
- Ask one another questions about their writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Briefly Review Personal Narrative

Have the students bring their Student Writing Handbooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday they began writing drafts of personal narratives. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What makes personal narrative writing different from other kinds of writing?

If necessary, review the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart to help the students remember what they learned. Add any new ideas they mention.

2 Read Part of “Mrs. Seeton’s Whistle” Aloud

Explain that you will read aloud a part of a personal narrative called “Mrs. Seeton’s Whistle” in which Jerry Spinelli writes about one small memory he has. Ask the students to think about what he does to make this memory feel real to us as readers.

Read aloud the section on pages 53–55 that begins “In the warmer months of the year . . .” and ends with “. . . waiting where I have yet to arrive.” Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

flanking the ice: on either side of the ice (p. 54) castanet: musical instrument that makes a clacking noise (p. 54) relishing: greatly enjoying (p. 54)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

our routes about town changed: our ways of going around town changed (p. 54)

3 Explore Sensory Details

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did you imagine seeing as you listened to this passage?

Q What did you imagine hearing?

Q What other senses did you imagine using?

Ask the students to open to Student Writing Handbook page 6 as you display “Excerpt from ‘Mrs. Seeton’s Whistle’” (© WA3). Ask partners to reread the passage and together underline words that help them imagine using their senses.

After a few moments, ask pairs to share words they underlined with the class. Underline words on the displayed excerpt as the students report them.

Teacher Note

If it is helpful, write the five senses on the board for students to refer to: sight, hearing, smell, taste, and touch.

Some sensory details in this narrative are “clacked it like a castanet,” “the winter on our tongues,” and “heat waves dance above the street.”

Point out that Jerry Spinelli’s memories become real to us because he includes sensory details, or words that help us imagine what is happening, using our senses.

Explain that the students will continue to write personal narratives today, and encourage them to look for places where they can include sensory details. They may continue a personal narrative they started earlier or begin a new one.

WRITING TIME

4 Draft Personal Narratives

Have the students return to their seats and work silently on personal narratives for 20–30 minutes. Join them in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students, having each show and read some of her writing aloud to you. Help the student extend her thinking about personal narrative by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose to write about this [event/memory/thing]?
- Q What else do you remember about it that you can add to the narrative?
- Q What words are you using to describe what you [saw/heard/smelled/tasted/felt]?
- Q What other experiences from your own life might you want to write about?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 38 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Share and Reflect on Writing

Have a few volunteers read their writing aloud. Encourage the other students to express their interest or appreciation after each reading. Ask questions such as:

- Q What did you like about [Marie’s] piece?
- Q What questions can we ask [Jorge] about what he wrote?

Explain that the students will continue to draft personal narratives tomorrow.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review sensory details
- Draft personal narratives
- Express interest in one another’s writing
- Ask one another questions about their writing

Materials

- “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart from Day 4

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Review Sensory Details

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday the students heard “Mrs. Seeton’s Whistle” by Jerry Spinelli. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you remember about the story “Mrs. Seeton’s Whistle”?

Review that Jerry Spinelli uses sensory details in his narrative. Direct the students’ attention to the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart and remind them that including sensory details in a story helps the reader see, hear, smell, taste, or feel what is happening.

Explain that the students will continue to write personal narratives today, and encourage them to look for places where they can include sensory details. They may continue a personal narrative they started earlier or begin a new one.

WRITING TIME

2 Draft Personal Narratives

Have the students return to their seats and work silently on personal narratives for 20–30 minutes. Join them in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

Teacher Note

The intention in this activity is to hear one sentence from every student in the class. This lets the students hear what their classmates are writing and builds their accountability. After they underline their sentences, have them put their pencils away. Have them read their sentences promptly, one after another, without stopping to comment. In the discussion afterward, they are not expected to remember every sentence they heard.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students, having each show and read some of his writing aloud to you. Help the student extend his thinking about personal narrative by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose to write about this [event/memory/thing]?
- Q What else do you remember about it that you can add to the narrative?
- Q What words are you using to describe what you [saw/heard/smelled/tasted/felt]?
- Q What other experiences from your own life might you want to write about?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 38 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

3 Share One Sentence and Reflect

Ask the students to review the writing they did today and have them each underline one sentence they would like to share with the class. Give the students a moment to select their sentences; then go around the room and have each student read her sentence aloud, without comment.

Facilitate a brief discussion using questions such as:

- Q What sentence did you hear that got you interested in someone else’s writing?
- Q What questions do you want to ask a classmate about his or her writing?

Explain that the students will continue to write drafts of personal narratives during the coming weeks.

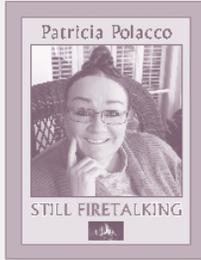

EXTENSION

Read More from Knots in My Yo-yo String

If your students are interested, read and discuss other chapters from Knots in My Yo-yo String. Take time to discuss the way the author's everyday experiences provided ideas for an entire book. Encourage the students to continue to think about interesting events in their own lives that they can write about.

Week 2

OVERVIEW

Still Firetalking

by Patricia Polacco

Patricia Polacco tells her true life story.

Essays

“On Respect” and “On Helping Others” excerpted from Writing from the Heart: Young People Share Their Wisdom, edited by Peggy Veljkovic and Arthur J. Schwartz (see pages 160-162)

Two young people learn important lessons from people they meet.

TEACHER AS WRITER

“Try to be one of the people on whom nothing is lost!”

— Henry James

Select one of the pieces you wrote last week about a memorable event and reread it. Where could you include words and phrases that would help a reader imagine using her senses? See how many senses you can appeal to with the sensory details you add to your piece.

Writing Focus

- Students hear, discuss, and draft personal narratives.
- Students explore sensory details.
- Students informally explore learning (or change) in personal narratives.
- Students confer with one another and the teacher.

Social Development Focus

- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.
- Students make decisions and solve problems respectfully.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2) on page 33 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Day 1

Exploring and Drafting Personal Narrative

Materials

- Still Firetalking
- Meteor! from Unit 1
- My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother from Unit 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA4)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft personal narratives
- Explore writing about things they learned from others
- Quick-write about things they learned from others
- Listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review Week 1

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that they have been exploring personal narratives. Last week, they heard several selections from Knots in My Yo-yo String. This week, they will hear personal narratives by some other writers, and they will continue to write their own drafts. Next week they will select one of their drafts to work on and publish for the class library.

2 Read the First Half of Still Firetalking Aloud

Show the cover of Still Firetalking and read aloud the title and author’s name. Show the covers of Meteor! and My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother and remind the students that they heard these two stories by Patricia Polacco earlier this year. Explain that in Still Firetalking, Patricia Polacco tells about her own life and how she became a writer. The students will hear the first half of the book today and the second half tomorrow.

Read pages 1–15 aloud, showing the photographs, illustrations, and map and clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

restoring ancient icons: taking care of very old works of art (p. 14)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

traveling salesman: person whose job is to travel around selling things (p. 10) scrambles: puts things out of order (p. 13)

3 Briefly Discuss the Reading

Ask and briefly discuss:

- Q What challenges did Patricia face as a child?
- Q What did she learn from others?

4 Quick-write: What Students Have Learned from Others

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

- Q (Reread page 9 aloud.) Patricia tells us that she wrote about something her grandmother taught her how to do. What is something that someone has taught you how to do that you might be able to write about? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have the students open their notebooks to the next blank page and spend a few minutes writing about something they have learned from someone else. Encourage them to describe who taught them the lesson and to explain how the person taught it to them. After a few moments, call for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share what they wrote with the class.

Explain that during Writing Time today the students may continue the piece each started during the quick-write or work on any personal narrative.

WRITING TIME

5 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA4) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Continue the piece you started during the quick-write.
- Write about something else that someone has taught you how to do.
- Work on a personal narrative you started earlier.
- Start a new personal narrative about anything from your own life.

WA4

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

As you did in Week 1, continue to confer with individual students, having each show and read some of her writing aloud to you. Help the student extend her thinking about personal narrative by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose to write about this [event/memory/thing]?
- Q What else do you remember about it that you can add to the narrative?
- Q What words are you using to describe what you [saw/heard/smelled/tasted/felt]?
- Q What other experiences from your own life might you want to write about?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 38 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Briefly Share Writing and Reflect

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as those that follow. Invite the students to read passages of their writing aloud as they share.

- Q Who wrote about something that someone taught you how to do? Tell us about it.
- Q What other topics did you write about? Tell us about it.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft personal narratives
- Explore writing about things they collect
- Share their partners' thinking with the class
- Discuss and solve problems that arise in their work together

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Read the Second Half of Still Firetalking Aloud

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday the students heard the first half of Still Firetalking by Patricia Polacco. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What did we learn about Patricia Polacco from yesterday's reading?

Explain that you will read the second half of the book today. Encourage the students to listen for the way Patricia Polacco got ideas for stories from her own life.

Read pages 16–31 aloud slowly and clearly, showing the photographs and illustrations and clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

geodes: rocks that contain crystals (p. 21; refer to the photograph) manuscripts: an author's draft writing (p. 26) condense: make shorter (p. 26)

2 Discuss the Reading

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What ideas for stories did Patricia get from her own life?

Q What did you learn about the process Patricia goes through to make a book?

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss the following question. Alert the students to be ready to share what their partners said with the class.

Q (Reread page 21 aloud.) Patricia tells us that her mother collected geodes and rocks. What do you collect, or what would you like to collect, and why?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share with the class what their partners said.

Materials

- Still Firetalking
- “Writing Time” chart (WA5)

ELL Note

You might provide the prompt “I learned that she . . .” to your English Language Learners to help them verbalize their answers to this question.

Students might say:

“My partner collects shells and pebbles from the beach.”

“My partner said he wants to collect stickers. He has a few already.”

“My partner says she has a collection of model airplanes.”

Invite the students to continue thinking about something they collect or would like to collect. Have them write about it during Writing Time, if they wish. Explain that you would like everyone to work on a personal narrative today. Encourage the students to try to include sensory details in their writing.

WRITING TIME

3 Write Independently

Have the students get out their notebooks and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA5) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Write about something you collect or would like to collect.
- Work on a personal narrative you started earlier.
- Start a new personal narrative about anything from your own life.

WA5

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students, having each show and read some of his writing aloud to you. Help the student extend his thinking about personal narrative by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose to write about this [event/memory/thing]?
- Q What else do you remember about it that you can add to the narrative?
- Q What words are you using to describe what you [saw/heard/smelled/tasted/felt]?
- Q What other experiences from your own life might you want to write about?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 38 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Share Writing in Pairs

Explain that partners will share with each other what they wrote today. Alert the students to be ready to share something their partners wrote about during the whole-class discussion.

Have partners share; then signal for their attention and ask questions such as:

- Q What did your partner write about today?
- Q Did your partner include any sensory details in his or her writing? Tell us about one.

Have the students reflect on their partner work by asking:

- Q What problems, if any, did you and your partner have working together today? What can you do to avoid those problems next time?

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Learn More About Patricia Polacco

To learn more about Patricia Polacco and her work, have the students watch a video of her speaking about her writing or read an interview with her. To find a video or print interview with the author, search online with her name and the keyword “video” or “interview.” Have the students listen to or view portions of the interview to learn more about how Patricia Polacco gets ideas and creates the illustrations for her stories. You might provide the students with the opportunity to use some of Patricia Polacco’s techniques to create illustrations for their own stories.

Teacher Note

Questions like this help the students develop good working relationships with their partners. When students feel connected to others, they learn to relax and take the risks necessary to grow academically, socially, and ethically. For more information, view “Building a Community of Writers” (AV1).

Technology Tip

For more information about using web-based resources, view the “Using Web-based Teaching Resources” tutorial (AV75).

Day 3

Exploring and Drafting Personal Narrative

Materials

- “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl” (see page 160)
- Student Writing Handbook page 8
- “Writing Time” chart (WA6)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft personal narratives
- Explore learning (or change) in personal narratives
- Quick-write about a lesson they learned

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Read “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl” Aloud

Have the students bring their Student Writing Handbooks, notebooks, and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that the students have been writing drafts of personal narratives and that next week they will select one to develop, revise, and publish for the class.

Explain that today you will read a personal narrative written by a 17 year old named Nick Maney. Read the title of the piece and invite the students to listen to the story and think about what Nick learns from Carl.

Read the essay aloud slowly and clearly (see “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl” on page 160). Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

commuters: people traveling to or from work or school

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

occupant of the seat: person sitting in the seat

Teacher Note

Some sensory details in this narrative are “mechanical hiss,” “dizzying engine-exhaust fumes,” “rocking of the bus,” and “older man in a grey suit, well-worn dress shoes, and a black hat like I always pictured reporters wearing, but without the little press card.”

2 Discuss the Reading

Ask the students to open their Student Writing Handbooks to page 8, where the narrative you just read is reproduced. Ask them to reread the narrative quietly. After several minutes, signal for their attention and ask:

- Q What is the episode that Nick Maney describes?
- Q What sensory details tell you what it is like on this bus?
- Q What does Nick learn from Carl, and what sentences tell you so?

Students might say:

"Nick describes meeting an older man on the bus and talking to him."

"In addition to what [Angela] said, Nick learns that Carl is like him, even though he's an older man. He says 'I would have never thought before that day that I could have anything in common with someone so much older than I, just because of age.'"

3 Quick-write: A Valuable Lesson

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q If you were going to write a personal narrative about something you've learned from someone, what might you write about? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Ask the students to open their notebooks to the next blank page and spend a few minutes writing about something they learned from someone. If the students have difficulty generating ideas, call for their attention and model thinking aloud and writing a few sentences about a time when you learned something.

You might say:

"One day, I learned a lesson at the beach. I left my clothes and towel on the sand and forgot about them. Later, the lifeguard told me that the tide had come in and washed them out to sea!"

After about 5 minutes, signal for their attention and have a few volunteers share what they wrote with the class.

Explain that the students will continue to work on personal narratives today. They may work on the pieces they started during the quick-write or on other personal narratives. Encourage the students to think about what they learned from the episodes they are writing about and to include this information in their narratives.

WRITING TIME

4 Draft Personal Narratives

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the "Writing Time" chart (WA6) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Work on the piece you started during the quick-write.
- Continue a personal narrative you started earlier.
- Start a new personal narrative.
- Include sensory details in your writing.

WA6

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students, having each show and read some of her writing aloud to you. Help the student extend her thinking about personal narrative by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose to write about this [event/memory/thing]?
- Q What else do you remember about it that you can add to the narrative?
- Q What words are you using to describe what you [saw/heard/smelled/tasted/felt]?
- Q What other experiences from your own life might you want to write about?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 38 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Briefly Share Writing and Reflect

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as the ones that follow. Invite the students to read passages of their writing aloud as they share.

- Q Who wrote about a time you learned something? Tell us about it.
- Q What other topics did you write about? Tell us about it.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft personal narratives
- Explore the idea of learning in personal narratives
- Quick-write about compassion and respect
- Express interest in one another's writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Add to “Notes About Personal Narratives” Chart

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they heard “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl” by Nick Maney yesterday. Ask:

Q We talked about how Nick learned something in this story. What did he learn?

Explain that good personal narratives usually include some information about what the writer learns or how he or she changes as a result of what happens. In “On Respect,” Nick changes the way he thinks about other people as a result of meeting Carl on the bus.

Direct the students' attention to the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart and add the writer learns something to it. Explain that you will read another narrative by a young person today. Invite the students to listen for what the writer learns.

2 Read “On Helping Others: Learning a Valuable Lesson” Aloud

Explain that today's personal narrative was written by a 19 year old named Laia Mitchell. She describes an episode in which she “learns a valuable lesson.”

Read the essay aloud slowly and clearly (see “On Helping Others: Learning a Valuable Lesson” on page 162). Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Materials

- “On Helping Others: Learning a Valuable Lesson” (see page 162)
- “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart from Week 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA7)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

Teacher Note

The concept of learning (or change) in personal narratives can be challenging for students. In this unit, the students begin to explore the idea very informally. They are not expected to incorporate this concept consistently into their own personal narratives at this point, although some students may be able to.

Suggested Vocabulary

migrant workers: people who move from farm to farm in order to work renovating: repairing, fixing

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

team of youth: group of young people labor: work

slowing their routine: slowing down their normal work

3 Discuss the Reading

Ask and briefly discuss the questions that follow. Be ready to reread from the text to help the students recall what they heard.

- Q What does Laia write about in this personal narrative?
- Q (Reread the following passage: “I think often of the girl . . . be part of the human family.”) What valuable lesson do you think Laia Mitchell learns?

Students might say:

“I think Laia learns about caring for other people. She says ‘Her family sparked my belief in the necessity of caring, compassionate respect for others.’”

“I agree with [Renaldo]. Laia also says that people who have a lot have a responsibility to share with people who don’t have much.”

4 Quick-write: Compassion and Respect

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

- Q Laia comes to believe in the necessity of “caring, compassionate respect for others.” When was a time you acted in a caring and compassionate way toward another person? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Ask the students to open their notebooks to the next blank page and spend a few minutes writing about a time they acted in a caring and compassionate way toward another person. After about 5 minutes, call for the students’ attention and have a few volunteers share what they wrote with the class.

Explain that the students will continue to work on personal narratives today. They may work on the piece they started during the quick-write or on another personal narrative. Encourage them to think about what they learned or how they changed as a result of the experience they are writing about.

WRITING TIME

5 Draft Personal Narratives

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA7) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Work on the piece you started during the quick-write.
- Write about things you have heard or learned from other people.
- Continue a personal narrative you started earlier.
- Start a new personal narrative.

WA7

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around and observe, assisting students as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students write with engagement about their own lives?
- Do they include sensory details in their writing?
- Do they attempt to include information about what they learned or how they changed in their personal narratives?
- Will all the students have personal narrative drafts that they can start to develop for publication next week?

If necessary, work with individual students to ensure that all students will have drafts that they can develop for publication, beginning on Day 1 of next week.

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2); see page 33 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

TEKS 12.A.i
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5

Teacher Note

To see an example of this technique, view “Sharing One Sentence and Reflecting” (AV42).

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Share One Sentence and Reflect

Ask the students to review the writing they did today and each underline one sentence to share with the class. Give the students a moment to select their sentences; then go around the room and have each student read his sentence aloud, without comment.

After all the students have read their sentences, facilitate a brief discussion by asking questions such as:

- Q What sentence did you hear that got you interested in someone else’s writing?
- Q What questions do you want to ask a classmate about his or her writing?

Day 5

Exploring Personal Narrative and Pair Conferencing

Materials

- “On Helping Others” (WA8)
- Student Writing Handbook page 10
- “Writing Time” chart (WA9)

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore verb tense consistency
- Draft personal narratives
- Practice procedures for pair conferences
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review

Have the students bring their Student Writing Handbooks, notebooks, and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that they heard “On Helping Others” by a 19-year-old author named Laia yesterday. Ask:

- Q We talked about how Laia learned something from the people she met on the farms in Florida. What did she learn?

If necessary, review that in “On Helping Others,” Laia learns that people need to be compassionate and share with one another. Review that a good personal narrative usually includes some information about what the writer learns or how she changes as a result of what happens.

2 Analyze Verb Tense Consistency in “On Helping Others”

Display “On Helping Others” (WA8) and tell the students that the author, Laia, does something that good writers do: she makes sure that the verbs in her story are in the same tense. Explain that keeping verb tenses consistent (the same) helps readers follow the events of the story. Underline the pairs of simple subjects and simple predicates in the first paragraph: plants looked, It was, I was, and lesson came. Point out that Laia keeps the verb tenses in the past tense because all the actions occurred before she wrote her personal narrative. Explain that if she had wanted the story to sound as though it were happening while the reader was reading it, she would have used all present tense verbs: look, is, is, and come. Remind the students that it is important to keep verb tenses consistent to avoid confusing readers about when events took place.

Ask the students to open to Student Writing Handbook page 10 where the personal narrative is reproduced. Have partners work together to underline the pairs of simple subjects and simple predicates in the second paragraph.

After a few minutes, have volunteers share their list of predicates and identify their tense. As they identify the verbs, underline them on the displayed essay. Some students may incorrectly identify words that look like verbs but function as nouns, adjectives, or adverbs. Affirm their attempts by saying, “In other situations, that word does function as a verb. But here it isn’t the action that the subject performs.” Then redirect the students’ attention to the subject and predicate pair in the sentence.

3 Analyze Writing for Consistency in Verb Tense

Have the students reread the writing they did yesterday and underline the subject and predicate pairs in their sentences. After a moment, have partners turn to each other and share the verbs they underlined. Ask:

Q Are the verbs all in the same tense?

Q If not, is there a good reason to shift the verb tense? Will the shift in verb tense confuse readers?

Have students correct any verbs they found that are not in the correct tense.

Skill Practice Note

For more practice with recognizing and correcting shifts in verb tense, see Lesson 15 in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide.

Teacher Note

The pairs of subjects and predicates in the second paragraph of “On Helping Others” are: “family invited,” “we rose,” “we dressed,” “we went,” “They smiled,” “I met,” “who was,” “She and her brother taught,” “they showed,” “they kept,” “they laughed,” “we took,” “I realized,” “I had,” “I learned,” “I met,” “They came,” “life depended,” “family took,” “They understood,” “We were,” “who seemed,” “it was,” “who had,” “I saw,” “who had,” and “They understood.”

Teacher Note

You may want to shorten today's Writing Time slightly to leave more time for the pair conferences in Step 5.

WRITING TIME

4 Draft Personal Narratives

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA9) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Write about things you have heard or learned from others.
- Continue a personal narrative you started earlier.
- Start a new personal narrative.

WA9

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students, having each show and read some of his writing aloud to you. Help the student extend his thinking about personal narrative by asking questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose to write about this [event/memory/thing]?
- Q What else do you remember about it that you can add to the narrative?
- Q What words are you using to describe what you [saw/heard/smelled/tasted/felt]?
- Q What verb tense—for example, past or present tense—are you using in your story?
- Q What other experiences from your own life might you want to write about?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 38 of the Assessment Resource Book. Beginning next week, the focus of the individual student conferences will change. If you have not met with all of your students to discuss the questions above, you may wish to do so before changing the conference focus.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

5 Confer in Pairs About Personal Narrative Drafts

Explain that today each student will read one of her personal narrative drafts to her partner and confer about it. Briefly review the procedure you established for pair conferring (see Unit 1, Week 3, Day 2 on page 52) and remind the students that conferring means not only reading their writing to each other but talking about it as well. Explain that today partners will tell each other one thing they like about the other's draft. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What will you do during the conference to show that you are interested in your partner's draft?

Students might say:

"I'll show I'm interested by asking my partner questions about his draft."

"I'll make sure to keep my hands and body still so that I don't get distracted."

"I'll listen to my partner's whole story without interrupting."

"I will tell her things I liked in her story."

Have partners share their writing. Have the students pay attention to what their partners do to show they are interested in each others' drafts.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Reflect on Pair Conferences

Help partners reflect on their work together by asking questions such as:

- Q What did your partner do to show interest in your draft? How did that feel?
- Q What did your partner say to show you that he was interested? How did that make you feel?
- Q Why is it important that we all get to feel that our partners are interested in our writing?

TEKS 1.A.ii
Student/Teacher Activity
Step 5 (all)

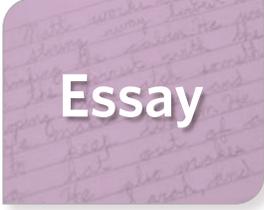

Teacher Note

Consider having pairs spread out so partners can better hear each other. If necessary, signal about halfway through sharing time so partners can switch roles if they have not yet done so.

Facilitation Tip

Notice the open-ended questions that you are asking during this discussion. To study the effect of open-ended questions on students' thinking, experiment by asking a closed question first (Did your partner do or say something to show interest in your draft? Do you think it's important that we all get to feel that our partners are interested in our writing?) and noting the response. Then restate the question as an open-ended question and note the response. Remember to use 5-10 seconds of wait-time after the question before you invite the students to respond.

Essay

On Respect: What I Learned from Carl

by Nick Maney, age 17

from Writing from the Heart: Young People Share Their Wisdom, edited by Peggy Veljkovic and Arthur J. Schwartz

My mind seems always to return to the day that I met Carl. The city bus, with its mechanical hiss and its slightly dizzying engine-exhaust fumes, stopped at the corner of 31st and Centennial Drive to pick up the daily commuters, a group in which I was included. Boarding the bus, I looked, seemingly in vain, for a place to sit, because I hated standing in the aisle and being subjected to the rocking of the bus. At last, I spotted a place to sit near the back. The occupant of the seat next to the one I was going for was an older man in a grey suit, well-worn dress shoes, and a black hat like I always pictured reporters wearing, but without the little press card. Sliding into the seat next to the man, I began to read the book I'd been carrying, which was Jack Kerouac's On the Road. The man in the seat next to me introduced himself by asking if I'd read any other books like the one I was currently holding, books from the same era. When I told him I had, he seemed to become interested, and, to tell the truth, so did I.

He introduced himself as Carl. He told me about how he used to play the trumpet back in the fifties in jazz clubs. He asked if I like jazz, and I told him that I didn't really listen to it, that I liked punk music. Waiting for Carl to tell me that I should listen to "real music" I was shocked when he just smiled and nodded. He said, "you remind me of myself when I was your age. I remember how my parents hated jazz, how they couldn't see how I could listen to 'that awful noise.' I bet your parents say the same thing, don't they?" Now it was my turn to smile, amused with how right he was.

As the bus ferried us from one side of the city to the other, Carl and I talked about a lot of different things. The more we talked, the more amazed I became at how much the two of us really had in common, despite the age difference. Finally, Carl got off at his stop, and mine was soon after. I haven't seen him since then, but the thought of our connection that day rarely leaves my mind.

On Respect: What I Learned from Carl

Carl really made me think about how much we can learn from each other if we just break through the barriers we've got. I mean, I would have never thought before that day that I could have anything in common with someone so much older than I, just because of age. But Carl taught me that no matter what, we're all just people, and that we should make an extra effort to try and get to know our neighbors and people we see every day, regardless of age, or of race, religion, sex, or anything else. If we all took the time to attempt to understand each other, I think that the world would be a much better place that we could share together, as humans.

Essay

On Helping Others: Learning a Valuable Lesson

by Laia Mitchell, age 19

from Writing from the Heart: Young People Share Their Wisdom, edited by Peggy Veljkovic and Arthur J. Schwartz

From my seat in the van, the rows of tomato plants looked like neatly laid pick-up-sticks. It was harvest time near Quincy, Florida, picking season for hundreds of migrant workers. With a team of youth, I was ready to spend a week renovating an old church and community center. Yet after that week of labor, my most valuable lesson came not from my own efforts, but from spending time with the church community.

One kind family invited us to come with them to the tomato fields. Early in the morning we rose, dressed in long sleeves for protection, and went to meet the family. They smiled, slowing their routine to be patient with us. I met their daughter, who was almost my age. She and her brother taught me how to pick the best tomatoes, those of good size and color. In the hot sun, they showed us where they kept water, and laughed with us when we took breaks. I realized how much I had in common with the girl, two young people with hopes and dreams, separated only by space and culture. I learned what it is to understand, to be open to new people and ways of life. That Sunday, I met the girl and her brother again. They came to the church bringing tomatoes and fresh watermelon to share. This family, whose life depended on filling baskets with tomatoes, took precious time to share their profits with us, with me. They understood the joy and goodness of life far better than any of us, teenagers from the city. We were the ones who seemed to have everything, yet it was I who had so much to learn. From their warm and open kindness, I saw the beauty of sharing with others. They, who had little, truly understood the value of giving.

I think often of the girl and her family, where they moved, and how they are living. Her family sparked my belief in the necessity of caring, compassionate respect for others. The migrant people showed me that I, one with so much, have a responsibility to share with those who have little. I went to spend a week giving and ended up receiving so much more. I believe that by giving, with honest respect and cooperation, we can truly be part of the human family.

Week 3

OVERVIEW

Writing Focus

- Students review their drafts, and each selects one to develop, revise, proofread, and publish.
- Students add sensory details to their writing.
- Students maintain the consistency of verb tenses in their writing.
- Students explore strong opening sentences.
- Students explore endings that draw a story's events to a close.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students listen respectfully to the thinking of others and share their own.

Online Resources

Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to find your online resources for this week.

Whiteboard Activities

- WA10–WA18

Assessment Forms

- “Class Assessment Record” sheets (CA3–CA5)
- “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheet (CN2)

Professional Development Media

- “Asking Open-ended Questions and Using Wait-time” (AV18)
- “Using CCC’s Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV73)

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3) on page 34 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, review the pieces you have written so far this year and select a page of personal narrative to use to model how to develop and revise a draft. Prepare your sample writing to display (see “Charts” on page xli for more information). Alternatively, you can use the “Sample Personal Narrative” chart (WA11).
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4) on page 35 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA5) on page 36 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a class set of the “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheet (CN2) on page 39 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ (Optional) If computers are available, you might have some students type and print their drafts or recruit parent volunteers to help the students do so.

TEACHER AS WRITER

“I am always surprised. I go through life perpetually astonished at everything that happens around me.”

— Eugene Ionesco

Select one of the personal narrative drafts you wrote in Week 1 and think about what you learned or how you changed as a result of the event you wrote about. Perhaps you expected something different to happen than what actually did. Perhaps you learned or realized something. Write a second draft of your narrative, including information about what you were like before the event, what you were like after it, and how the experience changed you.

Day 1

Selecting and Completing Drafts

Materials

- “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart from Week 2
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3)

In this lesson, the students:

- Review their drafts, and each selects one to develop and publish
- Reread their writing critically
- Complete the first draft of the selected writing pieces
- Use Writing Time responsibly

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Briefly Review Personal Narrative

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that over the past two weeks the students have been writing drafts of personal narratives. Ask:

Q What have you learned about personal narrative compared to other kinds of writing?

Direct the students’ attention to the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart and review the items on it.

Explain that this week each student will select one of his drafts and begin to develop it for publication. He will revise it to make it clearer and more interesting, proofread it for correctness, and publish it by contributing it to a class book.

2 Prepare to Review Drafts

Explain that today the students will reread all the personal narrative drafts they have written so far and each select one to develop for the class book. Explain that the drafts they select do not have to be complete and should be ones that they can imagine making changes to. Ask:

Q As you’re looking through your drafts, what might you want to look for to help you decide which one to develop?

Students might say:

“I want to look for a draft that I’m really interested in or have some strong feelings about.”

“I will look for drafts that describe situations where I learned something.”

“I want my story to be different from everyone else’s, so I’m going to look for a draft that is unique.”

3 Reread Drafts and Select One to Develop

Have the students return to their seats, reread their drafts, and each select one to develop and publish. Students who select their drafts before time is up can start thinking about what they can change, add to, or improve in the drafts.

As the students review their drafts, circulate around the room and support students by asking them questions such as:

- Q Why did you choose this piece to revise?
- Q What can you imagine adding or changing in this piece to make it more interesting?

If you notice the students selecting pieces with limited potential for revision (for example, pieces they feel are already “perfect,” very long or very short pieces, pieces that are not double-spaced), gently guide them toward a more workable choice.

WRITING TIME

4 Complete First Drafts of Selected Pieces

Have the students work silently for 20–30 minutes to finish their drafts. Encourage them to use verb tenses in a consistent way. Join them in writing for 5–10 minutes, and then circulate around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students as they work on their drafts. Ask yourself:

- Have the students selected drafts that lend themselves to revision?
- Will the students have finished drafts that they can start revising tomorrow?

If you notice that many students need more time to finish their drafts, make time for them to finish before going on to the Day 2 lesson. Students who have finished may work on another piece of writing.

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3); see page 34 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

Facilitation Tip

After asking open-ended questions, remember to use wait-time to give everyone a chance to think before talking. If you often hear from the same few students during class discussions, extend the wait-time to encourage broader participation in the discussion. To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view “Asking Open-ended Questions and Using Wait-time” (AV18).

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Reflect on Writing and Taking Responsibility

Help the students reflect on their work today by asking:

- Q What did you do to take responsibility for your own work during Writing Time today?
- Q How does it help to build our community when you do that?

Explain that the students will begin revising their drafts tomorrow.

Day 2

Analyzing and Revising Drafts

Materials

- Pad of (1½" x 2") small self-stick notes for each student
- “Revising for Sensory Details” chart (WA10)
- Your sample writing OR the “Sample Personal Narrative” chart (WA11)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA12)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4)

Teacher Note

The purpose of the guided rereading is to give the students experience reading their drafts critically before they begin to revise.

Teacher Note

Have pads of self-stick notes available for students to use during the revision phase of each genre unit. If necessary, model attaching a self-stick note to the outer margin of a notebook page so that it marks the text without covering it up.

In this lesson, the students:

- Reread their writing critically
- Mark places in their drafts where they might add sensory details
- Begin revising their drafts
- Use Writing Time responsibly

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Facilitate Guided Rereading of Drafts

Have the students get out their notebooks and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Ask them to open their notebooks to the personal narrative draft they each selected yesterday. Explain that the students will carefully reread their drafts and that you will help them think about ways they can add to, revise, and improve them. Have them quietly reread their drafts and look up when they are finished.

Distribute a pad of self-stick notes to each student. Explain that you will ask the students to look for and think about several specific things in their drafts.

Display the “Revising for Sensory Details” chart (WA10) and read the prompts aloud, one at a time, giving the students several quiet minutes after each prompt to review their drafts and mark passages with self-stick notes.

Revising for Sensory Details

- Find a place in your draft where you describe, or could describe, what something looks like. Put a self-stick note in the margin next to that place and write looks on it.
- Find a place in your draft where you describe, or could describe, what something sounds like. Mark the margin with a self-stick note and write sounds on it.
- Find a place where you describe, or could describe, what something feels like. Put a self-stick note in the margin and write feels on it.
- Find a place in your draft where you describe, or could describe, how things smell or taste. Put a self-stick note in the margin and write smells or tastes on it.

WA10

When most students have finished, call for their attention and ask a few volunteers to read what they marked.

2 Model Developing a Marked Section of the Draft

Explain that during Writing Time today the students will look at the places they marked with self-stick notes and add details to help their readers imagine what is happening. Ask the students to watch as you model adding details to a draft.

Display your own writing or the “Sample Personal Narrative” chart (WA11) and read it aloud. If you are using your own writing, begin by writing looks, sounds, feels, smells, or tastes in the margin next to places where you describe or could describe things using these sensory details. Wonder aloud about sensory details you could add. Model using an arrow (caret) to insert new text.

You might say:

“I want to add a couple of sentences about what the Chatterjees were like after I got to know them. I remember that their kitchen always smelled like spices and that Mrs. Chatterjee always wanted me to taste the wonderful curries she made. I think I’ll add that sensory detail.”

Teacher Note

Teacher modeling is a regular feature of the Being a Writer program. You can use chart paper or interactive whiteboard charts (whiteboard activities) for your modeling. For more information, view the “Using CCC’s Whiteboard Activities” tutorial (AV73).

Student/Teacher Narrative
Step 2

I stood outside the back door and shuffled my feet for a while until the girl noticed me. Finally, we smiled at each other.

That day, I found out that her name was Anya and that her family was from India. She was also ten, and she spoke a beautifully accented English. I learned that she would be in my class at school. We became great friends that year.

smells, tastes I visited the Chatterjees often after that. Their kitchen always smelled of spices, and Mrs. Chatterjee always gave me wonderful curries to taste.
 From Anya and the Chatterjees I learned that people who seem strange or different at first are really a lot like me when I get to know them.

Teacher Note

Save the revised “Sample Personal Narrative” to use on Day 3.

Explain that the students will follow the same procedure to add details to their own drafts today. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What sensory details might you add to your piece to help the reader imagine what’s happening? [pause] Turn to your partner.

WRITING TIME

3 Revise First Drafts

Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA12) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Add sensory details to places you marked to help the reader imagine what’s happening.
- Remove the self-stick notes when you finish adding details.

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around the classroom and observe, assisting students as needed.

TEKS 11.C.i
TEKS 11.C.vi
 Student/Teacher Activity
 Step 3

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students able to add sensory details to their drafts?
- Do they seem engaged in thinking of ways to develop their drafts?

Support any student who is having difficulty by asking her questions such as:

- Q What were you thinking about when you marked this place on your draft?
- Q What words could you add to help the reader imagine what's happening?

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA4); see page 35 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Reflect on Writing and Taking Responsibility

Have the students put their pencils and self-stick notes away and gather with their notebooks to share their writing. Discuss questions such as those that follow and invite students to read from their drafts as they share.

- Q What sensory details did you add to your draft? Read us that part.
- Q What do you imagine when you hear [Manny's] passage?

Help the students reflect on their work today by asking:

- Q What did you do to take responsibility for your own work during Writing Time today?
- Q How does that help to build our community?

Explain that the students will continue to work on their drafts tomorrow.

Materials

- “Revising for Feelings, Thoughts, and Learning” chart (WA13)
- Your revised sample writing OR the revised “Sample Personal Narrative” chart (WA11) from Day 2
- “Writing Time” chart (WA14)

In this lesson, the students:

- Reread their writing critically
- Mark places in their drafts that might show learning or change
- Revise their drafts
- Give their full attention to the person who is speaking
- Ask one another questions about their writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Briefly Review Purpose of Revision

Have the students get out their notebooks, pencils, and self-stick notes and sit at desks with partners together. Ask them to open their notebooks to the personal narratives they are developing. Review that they began to analyze and revise their drafts yesterday. Remind them that the purpose of revision is to make their pieces as interesting and readable as possible before they publish them for their classmates. Explain that today you will ask the students to think about a few more ways they might improve their drafts.

2 Facilitate Guided Rereading of Drafts

Have the students quietly reread their drafts and look up when they are finished. Display the “Revising for Feelings, Thoughts, and Learning” chart (WA13) and read the prompts aloud, one at a time, giving the students several quiet minutes after each prompt to review their drafts and mark passages with self-stick notes.

Revising for Feelings, Thoughts, and Learning

- Find a place in your draft where you describe, or could describe, how you felt or thought about something. Put a self-stick note in the margin next to that place and write feelings or thoughts on it.
- Do you change or learn something as a result of what happens in your story? Find a place where you tell about that, or where you could tell about that. Put a self-stick note in the margin next to that place and write learning/change on it.

WA13

3 Model Developing a Marked Section of the Draft

Explain that during Writing Time today, the students will look at the places they marked with self-stick notes and add to them to tell how they felt, what they thought, or what they learned. Ask the students to watch as you model adding to your draft.

Display your own writing or the “Sample Personal Narrative” chart (WA11) and read it aloud. If you are using your own writing, begin by identifying places where you describe, or could describe, feelings, thoughts, and learning or change, and writing feelings, thoughts, and learning/change in the margin next to those places. Wonder aloud about what information you could add to show how you felt, what you thought, or what you learned. Model using a caret (arrow) to insert new text.

You might say:

“I want to add a detail after ‘I could hear them talking to one another in a language I didn’t understand’ to show more clearly how different I thought the Chatterjees were before I got to know them, so I’ll write: Their language sure sounds strange, I thought. I want to show that I was worried I’d feel embarrassed if the Chatterjees didn’t understand me. So, in the sentence ‘Maybe they would just stare at me’ I’ll add: and I would feel embarrassed.” colored cloths wrapped around their bodies. The dad and the boy wore turbans, and the mom and the girl had gold rings on their fingers and in their noses and ears.

Through the window, I could hear them talking to one another in a language I didn’t understand. Their language sure sounds strange, I thought. thoughts

My mother came into the room and joined me at the window. “Their name is the Chatterjees. Why don’t you go and welcome them to the neighborhood?”

I gulped. Maybe they wouldn’t understand me. Maybe they would just stare at me. and I would feel embarrassed feelings

WA11

Explain that the students will follow the same procedure to add thoughts, feelings, or information about learning or change to their own drafts today. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What information could you add to show how you felt, what you thought, or what you learned? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

Save the revised “Sample Personal Narrative” to use in Week 4, Day 1.

WRITING TIME

4 Revise First Drafts

Display the “Writing Time” chart (🗨️ WA14) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Add thoughts, feelings, and information about learning or change to your draft.
- Add more sensory details.
- Check to be sure your verb tenses are consistent.
- Remove the self-stick notes when you finish revising.
- Add to your story until it is finished.

WA14

As the students work, circulate around the room. Support students who are having difficulty adding to their drafts by having them join you at a back table and quietly discussing questions such as:

- Q What were you thinking about when you marked this place on your draft?
- Q What were you thinking or feeling at this point in this situation? What sentence could you add to help your reader understand that?
- Q What words could you add here to help your reader [see/hear/smell/taste/feel] what’s happening?

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Reflect on Revisions and Participation

Have a few volunteers share by reading an original and a revised passage aloud to the class. Encourage discussion by asking the class questions such as those that follow. Be ready to have the volunteers reread aloud, if necessary.

- Q What did you imagine as you listened to [Raquel’s] revision?
- Q How is [Raquel’s] revision different from her original passage?
- Q What questions can we ask [Raquel] about her revision?

Help the students reflect on their participation in this discussion by asking questions such as:

- Q How did you do today giving your full attention to the people who were sharing their writing?
- Q If you weren’t giving your full attention today, what will help you give your full attention the next time we have a class discussion?

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore strong opening sentences
- Reread their writing critically
- Revise their drafts
- Give their full attention to the person who is speaking

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Analyze Strong Opening Sentences

Have the students get out their notebooks, pencils, and Student Writing Handbooks and sit at desks with partners together. Explain that they will continue to work on their personal narrative drafts today. Before they start working, they will take some time to think about an important feature of all narratives: strong opening sentences.

Explain that the opening sentences of a piece of writing need to grab the reader's attention, making him want to keep reading. Explain that you will read the opening sentences from a personal narrative they heard earlier in the unit. Ask them to think about how the author gets the reader interested with this opening.

Have the students open their Student Writing Handbooks to page 12, where the opening sentences are reproduced. At the same time, display the "Opening Sentences from Three Personal Narratives" chart (WA15). Together read the first passage, from "Never the Monkey," and ask:

- Q What does the author do to get us interested in reading this piece?
- Q What words or phrases help us imagine what's happening?

Students might say:

"He makes it seem like it's something really special, tucked into a gray cotton pouch and inside a green metal box."

"In addition to what [Cam] said, I can really see the medal tucked inside the box and the pouch."

As volunteers respond, underline the words and phrases they mention on the chart.

Ask the students to work in pairs to read the remaining opening sentences and underline words and sentences that they feel are especially effective at making the reader want to keep reading the story.

Materials

- Student Writing Handbook page 12
- "Opening Sentences from Three Personal Narratives" chart (WA15)
- "Writing Time" chart (WA16)
- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA5)

Teacher Note

Words or phrases the students might report include:

- “mechanical hiss,” “slightly dizzying engine-exhaust fumes,” “31st and Centennial Drive,” “daily commuters” (from “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl”)
- “rows of tomato plants looked like neatly laid pick-up-sticks” (from “On Helping Others: Learning a Valuable Lesson”)

After several minutes, signal for the students’ attention. Ask volunteers to report what they talked about for each of the openings, and underline words and phrases they mention on the chart. As they report, ask:

Q How does that [word/phrase/sentence] help you get interested in reading the story?

2 Review Opening Sentences in Drafts

Ask the students to reread the first few sentences of their own personal narratives. Ask and have the students think to themselves about:

Q How might you revise your opening sentences to grab the reader’s attention and make him or her want to keep reading?

Without discussing as a class, explain that the students will revise their opening sentences and then work on completing the writing and revision of their personal narratives today.

WRITING TIME

3 Revise and Complete Drafts

Display the “Writing Time” chart (🗒️ WA16) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Revise your opening sentences so they grab your reader’s attention.
- Make any other revisions or additions so your piece is as complete and as interesting as it can be.

WA16

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around the classroom and observe, assisting students as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students able to revise their opening sentences so they grab the reader’s attention?
- Do they seem engaged in thinking of ways to develop their drafts?

Support any student who is having difficulty by asking him questions such as:

Q What were you thinking about when you wrote this opening sentence?

(continues)

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE (continued)

Q How could you revise this sentence to grab your reader’s attention and make him or her want to keep reading?

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA5); see page 36 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Share Opening Sentences as a Class

Have a few volunteers share the opening sentences of their personal narratives. As students share, encourage discussion by asking the class questions such as the ones that follow. Be ready to ask the volunteers to reread what they shared, if necessary.

Q What words did you hear in [Annie’s] opening sentence(s) that make you want to keep reading?

Q What ideas, if any, does this give you for your own opening sentences?

Analyzing and Revising Drafts

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore endings that draw a story’s events to a close
- Reread their writing critically
- Revise their drafts
- Give their full attention to the person who is speaking

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Analyze Closing Sentences

Have the students get out their notebooks, pencils, and Student Writing Handbooks and sit at desks with partners together. Review that yesterday the students thought about how to make their opening sentences strong. Direct the students’ attention to the “Notes About

Materials

- “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart from Day 1
- Student Writing Handbook page 13
- “Closing Sentences from Three Personal Narratives” chart (WA17)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA18)
- Class set of “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheets (CN2)

Personal Narratives” chart and add strong openings grab readers’ attention and make them want to keep reading. Tell the students that they will continue to work on their personal narrative drafts today. Before they start working, they will take some time to think about an important feature of all narratives: endings that draw a story’s events to a close.

Explain that the closing sentences of a piece of writing need to wrap up the piece. Tell the students that you will read the closing sentences from a personal narrative they heard earlier in the unit. Ask them to think about how the author draws the story’s events to a close.

Have the students open their Student Writing Handbooks to page 13, where the closing sentences are reproduced. At the same time, display the “Closing Sentences from Three Personal Narratives” chart (WA17). Together read the first passage, from “Never the Monkey,” and ask:

Q What does the author do to wrap up this piece?

Q What words or phrases show you that the story has reached an end?

Students might say:

“When the author says ‘But that was yet to come. For the moment . . . I knew only,’ that makes it sound like he’s going to wrap things up.”

“I agree with [Keith]. When the author says ‘I knew only,’ he lets you know that he’s going to say what he learned.”

“In addition to what [Linda] said, the author talks about the medal he was ‘about to receive,’ so he lets you know what happens right after the story ends.”

As volunteers respond, underline the words and phrases they mention on the chart.

Ask the students to work in pairs to read the remaining closing sentences and underline words and sentences that they feel are especially effective at wrapping up the pieces.

After several minutes, signal for the students’ attention. Ask volunteers to report what they talked about for each of the closings, and underline words and phrases they mention on the chart. As they report, ask:

Q How do those words help wrap up the story?

2 Review Closing Sentences in Drafts

Direct the students’ attention to the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart and add endings that draw a story’s events to a close. Ask the students to reread the last few sentences of their own personal narratives. Ask and have the students think to themselves about:

Q How might you revise your closing sentences to wrap up your piece?

Without discussing as a class, explain that the students will revise their closing sentences and then work on completing the writing and revision of their personal narratives today.

Teacher Note

Words or phrases the students might report include:

- “I think that” (from “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl”)
- “I believe that” (from “On Helping Others: Learning a Valuable Lesson”)

WRITING TIME

3 Revise and Complete Drafts

Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA18) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Revise your closing sentences to wrap up your piece in a satisfying way.
- Make any other revisions or additions so your piece is as complete and as interesting as it can be.

WA18

During Writing Time, begin conferring with individual students about the pieces they are developing for publication.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Today and over the next week, confer with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask each student to tell you about the part he is working on now and to read his draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student’s writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Does this student’s piece describe an interesting personal experience?
- Does the student use descriptive sensory details?
- Are the verb tenses consistent throughout the piece?
- Does the piece have a strong opening and a closing that wraps it up?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to him and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheet (CN2); see page 39 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Share Closing Sentences as a Class

Have a few volunteers share the closing sentences of their personal narratives. As students share, encourage discussion by asking the class

Materials

- “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl” from Week 2, Day 3 (see page 160)
- Student Writing Handbook page 8
- “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart questions such as those that follow. Be ready to ask the volunteers to reread what they shared, if necessary.

- Q What words did you hear in [Janae’s] closing sentence(s) that wrapped up the piece for you?
- Q What ideas, if any, does this give you for your own closing sentences?

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write Opinions About “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl”

Remind the students that earlier they heard a story called “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl” by a 17 year old named Nick. Ask:

- Q What do you remember about the story “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl”?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Then explain that you will reread the story. Ask the students to open to Student Writing Handbook page 8 and follow along as you read. Reread the story; then ask:

- Q What do you like about this story?

Direct the students’ attention to the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart and reread the items on it. Ask:

- Q Which of these things does Nick do in “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl”? What in the story makes you say that?

Students might say:

“I like the fact that Nick doesn’t tell you right away who Carl is.”

“He’s telling a true story about a single event that he remembers well.”

“In addition to what [Chris] said, he has an opening that grabs the reader’s attention, and he wraps it up with a strong ending.”

“He uses a lot of sensory details, like mechanical hiss and dizzying engine-exhaust fumes.”

Explain that one way of judging whether “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl” is well written is to consider whether it includes the things that good personal narratives usually include. Explain that people may differ about how well written they think the piece is, and that is fine. The important thing is that they explain their thinking by using facts and details from the story and from the “Notes About Personal Narratives” chart. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing an opinion about “On Respect: What I Learned from Carl.”

You might say:

"I think that overall, Nick's story is a good example of personal narrative. I'll start by writing: Nick Maney's story 'On Respect: What I Learned from Carl' is a strong example of personal narrative. Notice that I stated my opinion and put the name and author in the opening sentences. Now I need to explain my thinking using facts and details. I'll write: Nick tells a true story about a memory. He has a strong opening that pulls me in as a reader by making me wonder who Carl is and why he is important to Nick. He includes an ending that wraps up his piece by summarizing the lesson that he learned. Nick includes lots of sensory details that bring the bus ride to life. Those details strengthen the piece. Now I need a closing sentence. I'll write: Overall, I think this is a strong personal narrative that finds deep meaning in a small incident."

Explain that the students will write their own opinions about Nick's piece. They should start with an opening sentence that states their opinion and includes the name and author of the story, give a reason for their opinion and a fact or detail to support their reason, and provide a closing sentence that wraps up their writing. Have the students return to their seats and write about their opinions. If time permits, invite the students to share their opinions with the class.

Week 4

OVERVIEW

Writing Focus

- Students assess their own writing.
- Students proofread for spelling, grammar, and punctuation.
- Students write their final versions and publish them in a class book.
- Students present their personal narratives to the class from the Author’s Chair.
- Students confer with one another and the teacher.

Social Development Focus

- Students work in a responsible way.
- Students help one another improve their writing.
- Students act in fair and caring ways.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing.

Online Resources

Visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to find your online resources for this week.

Whiteboard Activities

- WA11, WA19–WA25

Assessment Forms

- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA6)
- “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheet (CN2)
- “Individual Writing Assessment” record sheet (IA1)
- “Student Self-assessment” record sheet (SA1)

Reproducible

- Personal Narrative genre unit family letter (BLM1)

Professional Development Media

- “Managing Pair Conferences” (AV8)
- “Using Web-based Teaching Resources” tutorial (AV75)

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, create a chart labeled “Self-assessment Questions” with the following questions written on it:
 - Does my piece describe an interesting personal experience?*
 - Is my meaning clear in every sentence?*
 - Are there sensory details in it?*
 - Are the verb tenses consistent throughout the piece?*
 - Does it include a strong opening?*
 - Does it include a closing that wraps the piece up?*
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA6) on page 37 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, visit the CCC Learning Hub (cclearninghub.org) to access and print this unit’s family letter (BLM1). Make enough copies to send one letter home with each student’s published piece.
- ✓ (Optional) If computers are available, you might teach Technology Mini-lesson 9, “Creating Documents,” in Appendix A to help the students type and print the final versions of their stories. Alternatively, you might recruit parent volunteers to help them do so.

TEACHER AS WRITER

“For him no simple feeling any longer exists. All that he sees, his joys, his pleasures, his suffering, his despair, all instantaneously become objects of observation.”

— Guy de Maupassant

Look at the personal narrative draft you wrote in Week 3, in which you described an event and how it changed you. Close your eyes and try to remember what you thought and felt before, during, and after the event. Look for places in your draft where you can insert information about your thoughts or feelings before, during, and after the event.

Day 1

Self-assessing and Pair Conferencing

Materials

- “Self-assessment Questions” chart, prepared ahead
- Your revised sample writing OR the revised “Sample Personal Narrative” chart (WA11) from Week 3
- “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” chart from Unit 2, Week 1
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA6)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA19)

In this lesson, the students:

- Assess their own writing
- Ask for and receive feedback about their writing
- Give feedback in a helpful way
- Ask one another questions about their writing
- Use pair conference time responsibly

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Prepare to Self-assess

Have the students get their notebooks and pencils and sit at desks with partners together. Explain that partners will meet to confer about their drafts today. Before conferring, each student will ask himself some questions about his own draft and decide what he wants to ask his partner when they meet.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Self-assessment Questions” chart. Explain that you would like the students to ask themselves these questions as they reread their drafts. Read the questions aloud and then display your revised writing from Week 3 or the revised “Sample Personal Narrative” chart (WA11). Model rereading your draft, asking yourself the questions, and thinking aloud about the answers.

2 Self-assess and Think About What to Ask Partners

Have the students reread their own drafts and ask themselves the charted self-assessment questions. After most students have had time to finish, signal for their attention and ask:

Q What questions do you want to ask your partner today about your draft?

As the students report questions, record them on the “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” chart. Remind the students that they started this chart earlier in the year, and review the questions on it. Ask:

Q What other questions on this chart do you want to ask your partner today?

Students might say:

“I want to ask my partner if she can imagine what’s happening.”

“I want to ask my partner if he can tell what I learned from what I wrote.”

“I want to find out whether anything is confusing to my partner.”

Explain that partners will read their drafts aloud to each other, including revisions, and then ask each other questions about their own drafts.

3 Confer in Pairs

Give the students ample time to confer in pairs.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Circulate among pairs and observe without intervening. Ask yourself:

- Are pairs staying on task, reading and discussing their writing?
- Are the students asking each other questions about their own drafts?
- Are partners giving each other specific feedback?
- Are they giving feedback in a helpful way?

Note any difficulties you observe to discuss with the students in Step 4.

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA6); see page 37 of the Assessment Resource Book.

When most pairs have had time to discuss their drafts, signal for the class’s attention.

4 Reflect on Feedback

Gather the class and briefly discuss:

- Q What was helpful about the way your partner talked to you today?
- Q What problems, if any, did you have during pair conferences? What will you do to avoid those problems next time?

Share any problems you noticed and discuss what the students will do to avoid those problems next time. Ask:

- Q What is one thing your partner told you about your piece?

Remind the students that authors pay close attention to feedback about what is unclear or confusing in their writing. Although authors might not follow every suggestion they receive, the feedback helps them improve their work until it is the best piece of writing possible.

Explain that during Writing Time today each student will revise her draft based on her self-assessment and the feedback she received from her partner. Encourage students to finalize their drafts today so they can begin proofreading and publishing them tomorrow.

Teacher Note

Consider having pairs spread out so partners can better hear each other. If necessary, signal about halfway through sharing time so partners can switch roles if they have not yet done so. For more information, view “Managing Pair Conferences” (AV8).

WRITING TIME

5 Revise and Complete Drafts

Have the students return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA19) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Revise your draft based on self-assessment and partner feedback.
- Finish revising your draft.
- If you finish, work on another piece of writing.

WA19

During Writing Time, confer with individual students about the pieces they are publishing.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask each student to tell you about the part he is working on now and to read his draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student’s writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Does this student’s piece describe an interesting personal experience?
- Does the student use descriptive sensory details?
- Are the verb tenses consistent throughout the piece?
- Does the piece have a strong opening and a closing that wraps it up?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to her and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheet (CN2); see page 39 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Reflect on Writing

Help the students reflect on their work today by briefly discussing:

Q Who incorporated feedback from your partner in your revision today? Tell us about it.

Explain that the students will start proofreading their final versions tomorrow.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Publish Student Writing Online

This week the students will publish their personal narratives for the class library. Some students might also be interested in publishing their writing online. There are a number of websites where students can publish their writing online; search for them using the keywords “publishing student writing online.” Publishing online allows family members and friends to easily access and enjoy students’ writing.

Technology Tip

For more about online publishing sites and other Internet resources for students and teachers, view the “Using Web-based Teaching Resources” tutorial (AV75).

Proofreading

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Check for correct use of there/their/they're and its/it's
- Proofread for sentence fragments
- Begin writing their final versions

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Prepare to Proofread First Drafts

Have the students stay at their desks today. Explain that tomorrow the students will begin copying their first drafts into final versions for the class book. Today they will take time to proofread their writing to make sure it is free from errors.

Remind the students that they learned to proofread their drafts using the proofreading notes in their Student Writing Handbooks (see Unit 2, Week 2, Day 3 on page 103). They will use this resource to proofread their personal narratives.

Materials

- “Proofreading Notes” chart (WA20)
- Student Writing Handbooks
- “Personal Narrative with Sentence Fragments” chart (WA21)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA22)
- Supply of loose, lined paper for final versions
- (Optional) Computers for typing and printing final versions

Teacher Note

If you have students who have not yet finished revising their first drafts, plan time for them to finish before they move on to proofreading. Ask all of the students to pay attention as you teach them about proofreading so they will be able to do this step when they are ready.

2 Discuss Proofreading for Commonly Misused Words

Write the words there, their, and they're where everyone can see them. Ask:

Q What do you notice about these words?

If necessary, explain that there, their, and they're are pronounced the same but have different spellings and meanings. Explain that sometimes, writers are not sure which of these words to use in a sentence. Tell the students that to use the words correctly, they need to think about what each word means. Explain that there refers to a location (the word here appears in the word as a clue), their means “belonging to them,” and they're is short for “they are.”

Ask the students to open their Student Writing Handbooks to the Proofreading Notes section as you display the “Proofreading Notes” chart (WA20). Write the notes in the diagram below on the chart and ask the students to copy them into their proofreading notes.

Rule	Example	Notes
there	over there	“here” is the hidden word
their	their house	means “belonging to them”
they're	they're funny	short for “they are”

WA20

Ask the students to see whether they used these words anywhere in their personal narratives and to circle them if they did. Explain that they will have an opportunity during Writing Time to make sure they used the words correctly.

Follow the same procedure to help the students distinguish it's (short for “it is”) from its (“belonging to it”).

3 Discuss Proofreading for Sentence Fragments

Explain that the students will also proofread their drafts today to see if they have any sentence fragments, or incomplete sentences. Point out that incomplete sentences should be changed to form complete sentences.

Display the “Personal Narrative with Sentence Fragments” chart (WA21). Ask the students to watch and listen as you read the first passage aloud. Ask:

Q What did you notice about the way the passage sounded when I read it?

Students might say:

“It doesn’t sound right.”

“In addition to what [Minh] said, some of the sentences sound funny—like something is missing.”

Q What sentence fragments, or incomplete sentences, do you see in the passage?

If necessary, point out that right now the passage does not sound right when read aloud, because it contains several sentence fragments. Model rereading the passage and thinking aloud about how to transform the fragments into complete sentences or combine them with other complete sentences.

You might say:

“‘One Saturday’ is a fragment because it lacks a subject and a predicate. I can fix that mistake by using the word when to combine the fragment with the two sentences that follow it. In the same way, I can fix the fragment ‘Carry in their belongings’ by adding it to the sentence that precedes it. ‘Wrapped around their bodies’ is a fragment too, but I can add it to the sentence that comes before it. To fix the fragment ‘The mom and the girl,’ I can combine it with the sentence after it by eliminating the pronoun They. Finally, I can add the fragment ‘In their noses and ears’ to the same sentence.”

WRITING TIME

4 Proofread and Write Final Drafts

Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA22) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Proofread your draft for correct use of there/their/they’re and it’s/its.
- Check for sentence fragments.
- If you finish proofreading, work on another piece of writing.

WA22

During Writing Time, confer with individual students.

Skill Practice Note

You might explain that a complete sentence contains a subject (the part that tells who or what the sentence is about) and a predicate (the part that tells what the subject does or did). The subject usually includes a noun or pronoun, and the predicate always includes a verb. Explain that many sentence fragments can be identified because they do not have both a subject and a predicate. For more practice using subjects and predicates and recognizing and correcting fragments, see Lesson 1 and Lesson 5 in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask each student to tell you about the part he is working on now and to read his draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student's writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Does this student's piece describe an interesting personal experience?
- Does the student use descriptive sensory details?
- Are the verb tenses consistent throughout the piece?
- Does the piece have a strong opening and a closing that wraps it up?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?
- Does the student recognize and correct the commonly misused words there/their/they're and it's/its?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to him and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?

Document your observations for each student on a "Conference Notes: Focus 2" record sheet (CN2); see page 39 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Reflect on Proofreading

Briefly discuss questions such as:

Q What corrections did you make when you proofread your draft?

Q Who found errors by using your proofreading notes? Tell us about the errors.

In this lesson, the students:

- Proofread for spelling and punctuation
- Listen for run-on sentences as they read their drafts aloud
- Begin writing their final versions

GETTING READY TO WRITE1 Prepare to Proofread First Drafts

Have the students stay at their desks today. Explain that the students will begin copying their first drafts into final versions for the class book. Before this step, they will take time to proofread their writing for a few more things to make sure that it is free from errors.

Remind the students that they learned to proofread their drafts for spelling and punctuation using the word banks and proofreading notes in their Student Writing Handbooks. Explain that they will use these resources today to finish proofreading their personal narratives.

2 Discuss Proofreading for Spelling

Ask the students to begin rereading their drafts (even if they are not finished with them) and ask them to circle any words that they are not sure how to spell. Stop the students after a couple of minutes and ask:

Q What words have you circled so far?

Have a few volunteers report the words they circled. Have the students check their word banks to see if the words they circled are listed. If not, encourage them to check the spelling by another method during Writing Time today and to make sure to add the correctly spelled word to their word banks. The students can check the spelling of a word by asking you or another student, finding the word in a published book, or looking it up in a dictionary or online.

3 Discuss Proofreading for Run-on Sentences

Remind the students that their proofreading notes are a checklist of things to pay attention to when they proofread their drafts. Ask:

Q What is listed in your proofreading notes that you will check for in your draft today?

Materials

- Student Writing Handbooks
- “Personal Narrative with Run-on Sentences” chart (WA23)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA24)
- Supply of loose, lined paper for final versions
- (Optional) Computers for typing and printing final versions

Teacher Note

If you have students who have not yet finished revising their first drafts, plan time for them to finish before they move on to proofreading. Ask all of the students to pay attention as you teach them about proofreading so they will be able to do this step when they are ready.

Point out that, in addition to checking for capital letters at the beginnings of sentences and punctuation at the ends, the students should also look for any run-on sentences. Explain that a run-on sentence is usually made of two or more complete sentences that have been “run together” without a joining word (a conjunction) such as or, and, so, or but. Point out that run-on sentences often look like really long sentences.

Display the “Personal Narrative with Run-on Sentences” chart (C WA23). Ask the students to watch and listen as you read the first passage aloud, pausing only at the comma and the period at the end. Ask:

Q What did you notice about the way the passage sounded when I read it?

Students might say:

“It doesn’t sound right.”

“In addition to what [Reese] said, some of the sentences sound funny—like they go on too long.”

“I noticed a sentence that sounded like it might be two sentences squished together. It was confusing.”

Q What run-on sentences do you notice in the passage?

If necessary, point out that right now the passage does not sound right when it is read aloud because it contains several run-on sentences. Model rereading and revising the passage while thinking aloud about how to split the run-ons into two or more complete sentences, capitalizing the first word in each new sentence and adding a period at the end.

You might say:

“The sentence ‘I gulped maybe they wouldn’t understand me maybe they would just stare at me, and I would feel embarrassed’ sounds really long. I think it might be a run-on. ‘I gulped maybe they wouldn’t understand me’ sounds like the end of one sentence and the beginning of another sentence squished together. I’ll put a period between gulped and maybe, remembering to capitalize the M in Maybe. I’ll put another period between me and the second maybe because that sounds really long, too.”

Follow this same procedure with the second passage on the “Personal Narrative with Run-on Sentences” chart.

Explain that during Writing Time you would like the students to read their drafts aloud to listen for run-on sentences. Encourage the students to split any run-on sentences into two or more complete sentences. Remind them to capitalize the first word of each complete sentence and add a period at the end.

Skill Practice Note

The students will have more opportunities to practice proofreading for spelling, and to practice recognizing run-on sentences, in the other genre units. For more practice producing complete sentences and correcting run-on sentences, see Lesson 1 and Lesson 5 in the Skill Practice Teaching Guide.

WRITING TIME

4 Proofread and Write Final Drafts

Display the “Writing Time” chart (📊 WA24) and have the students work silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Proofread your draft for spelling and punctuation.
- Check for run-on sentences.
- If you finish proofreading, begin copying your final version on loose, lined paper.

WA24

During Writing Time, confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask each student to tell you about the part she is working on now and to read her draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student’s writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Does this student’s piece describe an interesting personal experience?
- Does the student use descriptive sensory details?
- Are the verb tenses consistent throughout the piece?
- Does the piece have a strong opening and a closing that wraps it up?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?
- Does the student recognize and correct the commonly misused words there/their/they’re and it’s/its?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to her and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheet (CN2); see page 39 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

Technology Tip

If computers are available, you might teach Technology Mini-lesson 9, “Creating Documents,” in Appendix A to help the students type and print the final versions of their stories. Alternatively, you might recruit parent volunteers to help them do so.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Reflect on Proofreading

Briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What corrections did you make when you proofread your draft?
- Q What words did you find in your word bank? How did you check on words that were not in the word bank?
- Q Who found errors using your proofreading notes? Tell us about them.

Record Personal Narratives

If you have access to recording equipment, consider having the students create audio or video recordings of their personal narratives. Make the recorded narratives available in the classroom, school library, or online for others to enjoy.

Day 4

Publishing

Materials

- Supply of loose, lined paper for final versions
- Construction and/or drawing paper for class book cover and other features
- Chair to use for the Author's Chair
- (Optional) Read-aloud books from Weeks 1 and 2
- (Optional) Computers for typing and printing final versions

In this lesson, the students:

- Discuss features for their class book
- Write their final versions
- Share their writing from the Author's Chair
- Give their full attention to the person who is speaking
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Plan Features of the Class Book

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that the students will have today and tomorrow to finish the final versions of their personal narratives. Students who are finished will begin sharing their narratives from the Author's Chair today. Remind the students that the pages of all their stories will be bound together as a class book.

As a class, brainstorm and decide on a title for the class book and decide whether any other features—such as a dedication page, back cover blurb, or illustrations—will be included. If helpful, review what these features look like by showing examples in read-aloud books from earlier in the unit. Assign volunteers to work on the cover and any other features when they finish their final versions.

WRITING TIME

2 Finish Final Versions

Ask the students to return to their seats and work on their final versions for 20–30 minutes. Provide the materials needed for creating a cover, illustrations, and any other features the students have agreed upon for the class book. As they work, confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask each student to tell you about the part he is working on now and to read his draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student’s writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Does this student’s piece describe an interesting personal experience?
- Does the student use descriptive sensory details?
- Are the verb tenses consistent throughout the piece?
- Does the piece have a strong opening and a closing that wraps it up?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?
- Does the student recognize and correct the commonly misused words there/their/they’re and it’s/its?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to him and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheet (CN2); see page 39 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

3 Review Sharing Writing from the Author’s Chair

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing the Author’s Chair. Explain that each student will read his personal narrative to the class from the Author’s Chair. Remind the students of the procedure you would like them to follow when they are ready to present their personal narratives from the Author’s Chair. If necessary, review the procedures you established for Author’s Chair sharing in Unit 2, Week 2, Day 5 (see “Do Ahead” on page 95).

4 Review Speaking Clearly and Expressing Interest in One Another’s Writing

Before asking anyone to share from the Author’s Chair today, have a discussion about how the students will act, both as presenting authors and as members of the audience. Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q Why is it important to speak in a loud, clear voice when you’re sharing your narrative with the class?
- Q If you’re in the audience and you can’t hear the author, how can you politely let him or her know?
- Q How will you let the author know that you’re interested in his or her writing? Why is it important to express interest in other people’s writing?

Encourage the students to be attentive audience members. Tell them that you will check in with them later to see how they did.

5 Conduct Author’s Chair Sharing

Ask a student who has completed her personal narrative to read it aloud from the Author’s Chair. At the end of the reading, facilitate a discussion using questions like those that follow, giving the author a chance to respond to the class’s comments and questions.

- Q What was interesting to you about [Jordan’s] personal narrative? Turn to your partner.
- Q What does [Jordan] learn as a result of this experience?
- Q What sensory details did you hear as you listened to her narrative? What did they make you imagine?
- Q (Have the student reread her opening sentences.) How does [Jordan] grab the reader’s attention with her opening sentences?
- Q What questions can we ask [Jordan] about her narrative?

Collect the students’ completed narratives to be sent home to show their families and then bound into the class book.

Follow this procedure to have a few more students share from the Author’s Chair. Explain that they will continue to share tomorrow and that everyone will have an opportunity to share a personal narrative from the Author’s Chair.

Facilitation Tip

Reflect on your experience over the past four weeks with asking open-ended questions and using wait-time. Do these techniques feel comfortable and natural for you? Do you find yourself using them throughout the school day? What effect has repeated use of them had on your students’ thinking and participation in discussions? We encourage you to continue to use and reflect on these techniques throughout the year.

6 Reflect on Audience Behavior During Author's Chair Sharing

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What did we do as an audience today to help Author's Chair sharing to go well? What might we want to work on during the next Author's Chair sharing?
- Q If you shared a narrative today, how did the audience make you feel? What did they do that made you feel [relaxed/nervous/proud]?

Publishing

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Reflect on personal narrative
- Write their final versions
- Share their writing from the Author's Chair
- Give their full attention to the person who is speaking
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Reflect on Personal Narrative

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that over the past four weeks they learned about personal narrative and took their own personal narratives through the writing process, from first drafts to a published book. Ask the following question, referring the students if necessary to the "Notes About Personal Narratives" chart.

- Q What have you learned about writing a good personal narrative?

Students might say:

"I learned that personal narratives tell about something interesting that happened to the author."

"I learned that a good personal narrative has sensory details in it."

"I learned that a good personal narrative uses the same verb tense all the way through unless there's a good reason to switch it."

"I learned that a good personal narrative tells what the author learned or how he changed."

Materials

- "Writing Time" chart (WA25)
- Supply of loose, lined paper for final versions
- Copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1) for each student
- (Optional) "Notes About Personal Narratives" chart
- (Optional) Computers for typing and printing final versions

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss questions such as the following:

- Q What is one way your final personal narrative has turned out better than your first draft? [pause] Turn to your partner.
- Q What is one thing you like about writing personal narrative? [pause] Turn to your partner.
- Q What did you find challenging about writing personal narrative? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Remind the students that writers become better over time the more they practice. Encourage students who feel particularly drawn to personal narrative to continue to write personal narratives during their free time.

Explain that the students will work on finishing the final versions of their personal narratives today. Those who have finished may write whatever they wish during Writing Time. After Writing Time, they will continue to share their narratives from the Author’s Chair.

WRITING TIME

2 Finish Final Versions

Have the students return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA25) and have them write silently for 20–30 minutes. As they work, confer with individual students.

WA25

Writing Time

- Finish your final version.
- If you finish, work on another piece of writing.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask each student to tell you about the part she is working on now and to read her draft aloud. As you listen, ask yourself:

- Does this student’s writing communicate clearly? If not, what is unclear?
- Does this student’s piece describe an interesting personal experience?
- Does the student use descriptive sensory details?
- Are the verb tenses consistent throughout the piece?

(continues)

Teacher Note

If most students have completed their pieces, you might shorten Writing Time to leave more time for Author’s Chair sharing.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE (continued)

- Does the piece have a strong opening and a closing that wraps it up?
- Do the revisions make sense and improve the piece?
- Does the student recognize and correct the commonly misused words there/their/they're and it's/its?

Help the student revise unclear writing by rereading those passages back to her and explaining what is confusing you. Ask questions such as:

Q What do you want your reader to be thinking at this part? How can you write that?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 2” record sheet (CN2); see page 39 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

3 Gather for Author’s Chair Sharing

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing the Author’s Chair. Briefly discuss how they will act, both as presenting authors and as members of the audience. Ask:

Q What will you do to be a respectful member of the audience today?

Encourage the students to be attentive and considerate audience members, and tell them that you will check in with them to see how they did.

4 Conduct Author’s Chair Sharing

Have some of the students read their personal narratives aloud from the Author’s Chair. Facilitate brief discussions about each of the readings, using questions like those that follow and giving the author a chance to respond to the class’s comments and questions.

Q What was interesting to you about [Beto’s] personal narrative?

Q What did you [see/hear/smell/taste/feel] as you listened to his narrative, and what words helped you imagine? Turn to your partner.

Q (Have the student reread his opening sentences.) How does [Beto] grab the reader’s attention with his opening sentences?

Q What questions can we ask [Beto] about his narrative?

Collect the students' personal narratives to be sent home for the students to share with their families and then bound into the class book.

If all the students have not had a chance to share, assure them that they will all share their personal narratives from the Author's Chair in the next few days.

5 Reflect on Audience Behavior During Author's Chair Sharing

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What did we do as an audience today to help Author's Chair sharing go well? What might we want to work on during the next Author's Chair sharing?
- Q If you shared a personal narrative today, how did the audience members make you feel? What did they do that made you feel [relaxed/nervous/proud]?

Explain that after the students have shared their personal narratives from the Author's Chair, they may take the narratives home to share with their families. Then the students will bring the narratives back to class, and you will compile them into a class book. This book will be available for the students to read during independent reading time.

Teacher Note

For information on wrapping up this unit and conducting unit assessments, see "End-of-unit Considerations" on page 201.

EXTENSION

Write Letters Home About Personal Narratives

Provide letter-writing practice for the students by having them write letters home about what they learned about personal narrative writing. Stimulate their thinking by reviewing the "Notes About Personal Narratives" chart and discussing questions such as:

- Q What's special about personal narrative writing?
- Q What steps did you go through to develop and publish your personal narrative?
- Q What is one thing you're proud of about your published personal narrative?

If necessary, review the elements of a letter (date, salutation, body, closing, and signature) by modeling or writing a shared sample letter with the class. Have the students write and proofread their letters; then attach each student's letter to a copy of her own published personal narrative and send it home.

End-of-unit Considerations

Wrap Up the Unit

- This is the last week of the Personal Narrative unit. You will need to reassign partners before you begin the next unit.
- Send home with each student the student's published personal narrative and a copy of this unit's family letter (BLM1). Encourage the students to share their published pieces with their families. Remind the students to bring the pieces back to class after their families have read them so they can be placed in the class library.
- Save the students' published writing (or copies of it) to use for reflection and discussion in Unit 9.

Assessments

- Before continuing with the next unit, take this opportunity to assess individual students' writing from this unit. See "Completing the Individual Writing Assessment" (IA1) on page 42 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- (Optional) Prior to sending the students' published writing home to share with their families, you might have each student analyze his writing using the "Student Self-assessment" record sheet (SA1) on page 41 of the Assessment Resource Book. For more information about administering this assessment, see the extension "Introduce 'Student Self-assessments'" on page 114.

Genre

Fiction

During this six-week unit, the students explore fiction writing and they draft, revise, and publish their own stories. By hearing different kinds of fiction and exploring how authors get ideas and put stories together, the students learn how to integrate elements of character, setting, and plot into their own writing. They explore features of good fiction writing including developing interesting plots, using transitional words and phrases, and creating endings that bring a story's events to a close. They learn important skills and conventions pertinent to fiction writing, such as punctuating dialogue, maintaining consistent verb tenses, and using first- and third-person points of view. They cultivate a relaxed and creative attitude toward their writing and continue to be contributing members of the classroom writing community.

TEACHER AS WRITER

“My writing is full of lives I might have led. A writer imagines what could have happened, not what really happened.”

— Joyce Carol Oates

The work of the fiction writer is to invent new worlds. This week, imagine a life you might have led, and write your “memories” of this fictitious life. Perhaps you were born into a different culture, grew up in a different family, or chose a different profession. How do you imagine that these life experiences have shaped you? As you write, include your feelings and perspectives, and invent details to make that life seem real.

Writing Focus

- Students hear and discuss fiction.
- Students informally explore elements of fiction.
- Students generate and quick-write ideas for fiction.
- Students draft fiction pieces.

Social Development Focus

- Teacher and students build the writing community.
- Students cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Consider reading this unit’s read-aloud selections with your English Language Learners before you read them to the whole class. Stop during the reading to discuss vocabulary and to check for understanding. Or, do a picture walk and have partners who speak the same primary language talk to each other in that language about what they see in the illustrations.
- ✓ Prior to Day 1, decide how you will randomly assign partners to work together during this unit. For suggestions about assigning partners, see “Random Pairing” on page xxix and “Considerations for Pairing ELLs” on page lii. For more information, view “Cooperative Structures Overview” (AV9).
- ✓ Prior to Day 2, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1) on page 54 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 3, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2) on page 55 of the Assessment Resource Book.
- ✓ Prior to Day 5, make a class set of the “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1) on page 67 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Day 1

Exploring Fiction

Materials

- The Wreck of the Zephyr
- Meteor! from Unit 1
- My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother from Unit 1
- The Frog Prince Continued from Unit 1
- The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! from Unit 1
- Chart paper and a marker

Teacher Note

For more information about fiction writing, view “Exploring Fiction” (AV44).

Teacher Note

The partners you assign today will stay together for the unit. If necessary, take a few minutes at the beginning of today’s lesson to let them get to know each other better by talking informally in a relaxed atmosphere.

Teacher Note

If you are teaching other programs from Center for the Collaborative Classroom, the students can work within partnerships already established, or you may assign new partners for the writing lessons.

In this lesson, the students:

- Work with new partners
- Hear and discuss fiction
- Informally explore the elements of fiction
- Write freely about things that interest them

IMMERSION IN AND DRAFTING OF FICTION

In a fiction story, something happens to someone somewhere in time. In this unit, the students build this understanding in stages over a six-week period.

The first half of this unit immerses the students in stories, stimulating their imaginations and developing their dispositions for creativity and experimentation. The students hear, enjoy, and make observations about different examples of fiction. Having heard some examples, they begin drafting fiction and continue to learn about the genre. Skills and conventions are taught later in the unit so that the students can focus first on the big ideas: inventing interesting characters, describing believable settings, and building imaginative plots that make sense.

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Pair Students and Discuss Working Together

Randomly assign partners and make sure they know each other’s names (see “Do Ahead” on page 209). Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you.

Explain that over the next six weeks, partners will work together to explore writing fiction. They will hear and discuss fiction stories and learn how to write engaging stories.

Have partners take a few minutes to talk about some of the things they have written so far this year. Signal for their attention and ask:

Q What did you learn about the writing your partner has done this year?

2 Introduce Fiction

Show the covers of Meteor!, My Rotten Redheaded Older Brother, The Frog Prince Continued, and The True Story of the 3 Little Pigs! Remind the students that they heard these fiction stories at the beginning of the year. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What do you think you know about fiction?

Students might say:

"Fiction is made up. It's make-believe."

"Fiction has characters, and things happen to them."

"Sometimes things happen in fiction that can't happen in real life, like people traveling into the past or future."

"Some fiction stories are based on the author's life."

Record the students' ideas on a sheet of chart paper titled "Notes About Fiction." Post the chart and tell the students that you will continue to add ideas to the chart as they learn more about fiction in the coming weeks.

Point out that fiction writers try to tell stories that capture the interest and imagination of their readers. Explain that by the end of the unit, the students will have learned and practiced different techniques for writing a good fiction story and will have published their own stories for the class library.

3 Read The Wreck of the Zephyr Aloud

Show the cover of The Wreck of the Zephyr and read the title and author's name aloud, pointing out that the author was also the illustrator. Invite the students to think as they listen about what it might be like to write such a story themselves.

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described below. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

ominous: threatening, as if a storm is coming (p. 8) boom: long, swinging bar that holds the bottom edge of a sail on a sailboat (p. 10; see illustration on p. 11) treacherous reef: dangerous grouping of rocks and coral offshore (p. 16)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

cliffs: high areas of land with a sharp drop-off (p. 4) didn't recognize the shoreline: never saw the shoreline before (p. 14) towing: pulling along (p. 14)

Stop after:

p. 14 "There they left the Zephyr."

Ask:

Q What has happened so far in the story? Turn to your partner.

Teacher Note

Save the "Notes About Fiction" chart to use in Day 2 and throughout the unit.

Teacher Note

Your students may be familiar with some of the read-alouds in this program. Encourage them to listen to the read-alouds as writers, noticing what the author is trying to do and thinking about what they could try in their own writing.

Teacher Note

To review the procedure for defining vocabulary during the read-aloud, see Unit 1, Week 1, Day 1, Step 3 (page 8). To see an example, view "Introducing Vocabulary During a Read-aloud" (AV30).

Teacher Note

To review the procedure for "Turn to Your Partner," see Unit 1, Week 1, Day 2 (page 11). To see an example, view "Using 'Turn to Your Partner'" (AV11).

Teacher Note

The discussion prompts are:

- “I agree with _____ because . . .”
- “I disagree with _____ because . . .”
- “In addition to what _____ said, I think . . .”

Teacher Note

Remember to pause for 10 seconds for the students to think before you say “Turn to your partner.” To review the procedure for “Think, Pair, Share,” see Unit 1, Week 2, Day 1 (page 30). To see an example, view “Using ‘Think, Pair, Share’” (AV13).

Teacher Note

Note that on Days 1 and 2 of this week, the students may write fiction or anything else they choose. On Day 3, after exposure to a couple more examples of fiction, all the students will be asked to begin writing in this genre.

ELL Note

English Language Learners may benefit from drawing their ideas before they write. Encourage them to draw what they want to write about and then talk quietly with you or their partners about their drawings. If necessary, write down key words and phrases they want to use so they can copy them into their writing.

Have partners discuss the question; then signal for their attention. Without sharing as a class, reread the last line and continue reading to the end of the story.

4 Discuss the Story

Ask and briefly discuss the questions that follow. Remind the students to use the discussion prompts to help them listen and build on one another’s thinking. Be ready to reread from the text to help the students recall what they heard.

Q What events in this story could happen in real life? What events could happen only in the imagination?

Students might say:

“A boy wants to learn how to sail above the water.”

“In addition to what [Vincent] said, boats can’t fly in real life.”

“I agree with [Lena]. But other things in the story could happen in real life, like the boy getting caught in a storm in his sailboat.”

Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What things could you write about that could happen only in the imagination? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have volunteers share their thinking.

Students might say:

“You could write about discovering a secret world in your backyard.”

“You could write about having superhuman powers, like being able to breathe under water.”

“To write a story about life on another planet, you would need to use your imagination.”

Point out that some fiction could happen in real life and some could happen only in the imagination. Invite the students to think about both kinds of events as they write freely today.

WRITING TIME

5 Write Independently

Have the students get their notebooks and pencils, sit at desks with partners together, and write silently for 20–30 minutes. During this time, they may write about anything they choose. Remind them that they should write double-spaced in their notebooks and that there should be no talking, whispering, or walking around.

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Briefly Share Writing and Reflect

Ask partners to talk briefly about what they wrote today. After a moment, signal for their attention and ask questions such as:

- Q What did your partner write about today?
- Q What did you and your partner do to work well together when you were talking and sharing your writing?

Exploring Fiction

Day 2

In this lesson, the students:

- Cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing
- Hear and discuss fiction
- Informally explore the elements of fiction
- Write freely about things that interest them

THE IMPORTANCE OF ATTITUDE IN WRITING

To get enough practice writing during the elementary school years, it is extremely important that students learn to start writing fairly quickly after they sit down and to write freely, abundantly, and without fear. This requires a relaxed attitude, free from inhibitions, especially during the early drafting stages. In this lesson, the students hear a story about a silly, far-fetched situation. The intent is to inspire their imaginations and help them know that writing can be light-hearted and can be about anything.

Regularly remind the students that they are writing primarily for themselves. Encourage them to be willing to write something that is less than perfect. The important thing is to repeatedly practice getting their ideas on paper.

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Add to “Notes About Fiction” Chart

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday the students began exploring fiction, or invented stories. Remind the students that some fiction could happen in real life and some fiction could happen only in the imagination. Add this to the “Notes About Fiction” chart.

Explain that today they will hear another example of fiction and do more writing.

Materials

- Moira’s Birthday
- “Notes About Fiction” chart from Day 1
- “Messy Situations” chart (WA1)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1)

Teacher Note

Remember that some of the read-alouds in this program are intentionally below the average reading level for your grade. The read-alouds are intended to inspire and provide models for the students' writing, which normally lags somewhat behind their reading levels.

2 Discuss Writing Attitude

Point out that learning to write is like learning any new sport, musical instrument, or skill; you must practice over and over to become good at it. Ask:

Q What can be hard about starting to write or continuing to write for the whole Writing Time?

Students might say:

"It's hard to start writing when I don't know what to write."

"I stop writing if I don't know how to spell something."

Explain that you expect the students' writing to have spelling errors and to be imperfect and incomplete. This is natural for young writers. Assure them that practicing by writing many, many imperfect pieces is more important than writing just a few perfect pieces.

Encourage the students to try to bring a fun, relaxed attitude to their writing today.

3 Read Moira's Birthday Aloud

Show the cover of Moira's Birthday and read the title and the names of the author and illustrator aloud. Invite the students to think as they listen about whether they might like to try writing such a story themselves.

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations.

Briefly discuss:

Q What events in this story could happen in real life? What events would probably happen only in the imagination?

Q *What other stories have you read or heard where things turn into a real mess, as they do in Moira's Birthday?*

Students might say:

"A little girl probably wouldn't invite the entire school to her birthday party."

"In addition to what [Taro] said, no one would deliver one hundred and ninety pizzas with a dump truck."

"But sometimes birthday parties do turn out to be bigger or crazier than we planned."

Ask and briefly discuss:

Q If you were going to write about a messy situation, what might you write about?

Display the “Messy Situations” chart (WA1) and record the students’ ideas on the chart as they generate them.

Messy Situations

- The washing machine explodes and clothes fly everywhere.
- A magic dog whistle can call in every dog in the neighborhood.
- One day at school the kindergartners turn into giants.

WA1

Explain that during Writing Time today the students may write about messy situations or anything else they choose. Encourage them to relax and write as freely and imaginatively as possible.

WRITING TIME

4 Write Independently

Ask the students to return to their seats and write silently for 20–30 minutes. They may write about messy situations or anything else they choose. Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students staying in their seats and writing silently?
- Are they double-spacing their writing?
- Do they seem to be writing with a relaxed and free attitude?

If necessary, remind the students to double-space their writing. If you notice many students having difficulty starting to write, call for the class’s attention and have partners talk to each other about what they might write. Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class; then have the students resume silent writing.

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA1); see page 54 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Reflect on Writing Attitude

Talk briefly as a class about the students' attitudes as they wrote today. Ask questions such as:

Q Were you able to relax and write freely today without getting stuck? If so, what happened? If not, what made you feel stuck? What did you do to try to get unstuck?

Explain that the students will continue to focus on developing a relaxed attitude toward their writing practice.

EXTENSION

Read Other Stories by Robert Munsch

If your students enjoyed hearing Moira's Birthday and seem inspired by Robert Munsch's humorous style of writing, consider reading several more of his stories. To read about how the author got the idea for each book, search on the Internet with the keywords "Robert Munsch" and "ideas for stories." Your students may be interested in hearing some of these explanations or exploring websites related to Robert Munsch's work themselves.

Technology Tip

For information about setting up and maintaining a class blog, view the "Creating a Class Blog" tutorial (AV76).

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Use a Class Blog for Reflection

Create a class blog and invite the students to reflect on their writing attitude as they draft and revise their stories in the coming weeks. Post reflection questions such as those in Step 5 above. After discussing the questions as a class, have interested students post their comments. Review the comments periodically and, with the respondents' permission, discuss comments with the class.

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft fiction
- Informally explore character and plot
- Cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE1 Read the First Half of Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street Aloud

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that the students are hearing examples of fiction and thinking about ideas for fiction stories. Review that yesterday they heard a story in which things turn into a real mess. Add things often turn into a real mess to the “Notes About Fiction” chart.

Explain that today they will hear another story and begin drafting a fiction story.

Show the cover of Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street and read the title and author’s name aloud. Explain that the students will hear the first half of the book today and the second half tomorrow. Ask the students to think as they listen about whether they might want to try writing a similar story.

Read pages 3–15 aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and stopping as described on the next page. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

embarked on a daily promenade: went on a walk every day (p. 4) mousse: pudding-like dessert (p. 6)

 ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

cinnamon Danish: kind of sweet bread (p. 3)

dine on: eat (p. 12)

panting: breathing heavily (p. 12)

Materials

- Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street
- “Notes About Fiction” chart from Day 2
- “Writing Time” chart (WA2)
- “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA2)

Stop after:

p. 15 “Eva added this to her notebook and wondered what could possibly happen next. . . .”

Ask:

Q What is happening to Eva in this story? Turn to your partner.

2 Discuss the Story

Facilitate a brief class discussion using the questions that follow. Be ready to reread from the story to help the students recall what they heard.

Q Which character in the story did you find the most interesting? What was interesting to you about that character?

Q What is Eva’s problem at the beginning of the story? How is the problem solved?

Students might say:

“I thought Alexis Leora was the most interesting. She has a fancy name and she does her ballet exercises on the street.”

“Eva can’t think of anything to write, but her neighbors give her advice.”

“I agree with [Kendra]. One neighbor tells her to watch people carefully, and another one tells her to think of new ways to describe things.”

“In addition to what [Juan and Maddie] said, her neighbor Alexis tells her to ask ‘What if?’ and then make up a story that’s better than what’s happening.”

Explain that today you would like all the students to try writing a fiction story. They may make up a story about a problem that needs to be solved or an interesting character whom unusual things happen to, or they may write any other made-up story. Remind them to double-space their writing and to look at the “Notes About Fiction” chart to help them get more ideas.

WRITING TIME

3 Begin Drafting Fiction Pieces

Have the students get their notebooks and pencils, and sit at desks with partners together. Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA2) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Teacher Note

The students are just beginning to generate ideas for fiction. They are not expected to know or incorporate specific features of the genre into their writing at this point. They will build their understanding as they explore the genre over the coming weeks.

Teacher Note

The students will write all first drafts, double-spaced, in their notebooks. In Week 3, they will select one of the drafts to develop and publish. Double-spacing now allows space for revision later. The students will write their final versions in Week 6 on loose, lined paper (or on computers, if available).

Writing Time

- Make up a story about a messy situation.
- Make up a story about an interesting person you know.
- Continue a fiction story you started earlier.
- Start any new fiction story.

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Are the students staying in their seats and writing silently?
- Are they double-spacing their writing?
- Do they seem to be writing with a relaxed and free attitude?

If necessary, remind the students to double-space their writing. If you notice many students having difficulty starting to write, call for the class's attention and have partners talk to each other about what they might write. Have a few volunteers share their ideas with the class; then have the students resume silent writing.

Record your observations on the "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA2); see page 55 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Reflect on Writing Process and Attitude

Briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q What did you write about today?
- Q (Point to the "Notes About Fiction" chart.) Which notes did you think about as you started writing today?

Help the students reflect on their attitudes toward writing by asking:

- Q How did you feel as you wrote today? If you got stuck, what happened? What do you want to try tomorrow to help you in your writing?

Explain that the students will continue to read and draft fiction for the next couple of weeks. They will eventually select one of their fiction drafts to develop and publish as a book for the class library.

EXTENSION

Write About Interesting People

Point out that Eva starts with interesting people she knows and uses her imagination to have unusual things happen to them. Have the students think quietly about:

Q What interesting people do you know who you could write a story about?

Without discussing the question, have the students open their notebooks to the next blank page of the writing ideas section, label it “Interesting People I Know,” and write a list of interesting people they know outside of school who they could write a story about. Stop them after 3–4 minutes and have partners share and discuss their lists with each other. Then have them resume listing for a few more minutes.

Have the students try writing a fiction story about one of the interesting people on their list.

Day 4

Drafting Fiction

Materials

- Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street from Day 3
- “Notes About Fiction” chart from Day 3
- “Writing Time” chart (WA3)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft fiction
- Quick-write ideas for messy situations to write about
- Cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Read the Second Half of Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street Aloud

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that yesterday the students heard the first half of Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What happened in the first half of the story?

Explain that you will read the second half of the book today. Read pages 16–31 aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations. Clarify vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

gutter: part of a street that is next to the curb (p. 19) gourmet: having fancy tastes in food (p. 21) precarious: dangerous (p. 25)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

soap opera: daily TV program (p. 16) extravagant embrace: big hug (p. 19) flick of the wrist: quick hand motion (p. 20)

spooning: feeding by hand with a spoon (p. 23)

culinary: having to do with cooking (p. 25)

2 Briefly Discuss the Story and Quick-write: Messy Situations

Facilitate a brief class discussion using the question that follows. Be ready to reread from the story to help the students recall what they heard.

Q What unexpected good things come out of the confusion in the story?

Students might say:

"Alexis falls in love with the pizza delivery man."

"Mr. Sims meets an old friend who gives him a great job."

"Mr. Morley, Mrs. Martinez, and Mr. Chang decide to open a restaurant together."

Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q What kinds of messy situations can you think of that might lead to good things? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Without discussing the question, have the students open their notebooks to the next blank page of the writing ideas section, label it "Messy Situations That Lead to Good Things," and write a list of such situations. Stop them after 3–4 minutes and have partners share and discuss their lists with each other. Then have them resume listing for a few more minutes.

Teacher Note

If students have difficulty thinking of messy situations that lead to good things, suggest the following: a boy breaks his arm and makes a new friend in the emergency room, a girl loses her dog and meets new neighbors while looking for him, and a cooking project seems to go wrong but results in a delicious dish.

Explain that during Writing Time the students may make up a story about a messy situation that leads to good things, or they may write any other made-up story. Remind them to double-space their writing and to look at the “Notes About Fiction” chart to help them get more ideas.

WRITING TIME

3 Begin Drafting Fiction Pieces

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA3) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Make up a story about a messy situation that leads to good things.
- Make up a story about an interesting person you know.
- Continue a fiction story you started earlier.
- Start any new fiction story.

WA3

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around the room and observe, assisting students as needed.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Reflect on Writing Process and Attitude

Briefly discuss questions such as:

- Q Were you able to make up a story about a messy situation that leads to good things? Tell us about it.
- Q What other fictional ideas did you write about today?
- Q (Point to the “Notes About Fiction” chart.) Which notes did you think about as you started writing today?

Help the students reflect on their attitudes toward writing by asking:

- Q How did you feel as you wrote today? If you got stuck, what happened? What do you want to try tomorrow to help you in your writing?

Explain that the students will continue to focus on developing a relaxed attitude toward their writing practice and that they will continue to read and draft fiction for the next couple of weeks.

EXTENSION

Conduct Interviews to Find Story Ideas

Some students may be interested in writing stories based on other people's experiences. Have your students ask a family member or friend, "Have you ever heard about a messy situation that led to good things? What happened?" Have the students write stories based on the information they collected. These stories may be fiction or nonfiction.

Drafting Fiction and Pair Conferencing

Day 5

In this lesson, the students:

- Review a story they heard earlier
- Quick-write responses to "What if?" questions
- Draft fiction
- Practice procedures for pair conferences
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Review Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that this week they heard Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street. Review the story by asking the questions that follow. Be ready to reread from the story to help the students recall what they heard.

- Q What happens in the story?
- Q (Reread page 9.) What do you think Alexis Leora means by "you can always stretch the truth" and "You can ask, 'What if?' and make up a better story"?
- Q What happens when Eva starts asking "What if?"

Materials

- Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street from Day 4
- "Notes About Fiction" chart from Day 4
- Chart paper and a marker
- "Writing Time" chart (WA4)
- Class set of "Conference Notes: Focus 1" record sheets (CN1)

Teacher Note

If necessary, remind the students to use the discussion prompts to connect their ideas to those of others.

Students might say:

"Eva doesn't know what to write at the beginning of the story. But she keeps getting ideas, and she writes a wild story about the interesting people in her neighborhood."

"I think Alexis means that Eva can use her imagination to make up a story."

"I agree with [Truong]. When she starts imagining scattering her Danish and the birds coming, one crazy thing happens after another."

"When Eva asks 'What if?' the story starts getting messy, like in Moirá's Birthday."

2 Generate "What If?" Questions

Explain that authors commonly get ideas for stories by asking themselves "What if?" questions. Direct the students' attention to the "Notes About Fiction" chart and add What if _____? to it. Ask:

Q What "What if?" questions can you think of that might lead to an interesting story?

As the students report their ideas, record them on a sheet of chart paper titled "What if _____?"

Students might say:

"What if a monkey got loose from the zoo and ended up in my backyard?"

"What if I became the president of the United States?"

"What if someone finds out she can read people's minds?"

"What if a boy's parents forgot who he was?"

3 Quick-write: What If?

Ask the students to select one of the charted "What if?" questions and write in their notebooks for a few minutes about imaginative ways to answer it. Encourage them to imagine things that could happen in real life as well as things that could not. Stop them after 3–4 minutes of silent writing and have partners discuss their thinking; then have them write quietly for a few more minutes.

Signal for the students' attention and ask a few volunteers to share the "What if?" question they selected and the ideas they wrote.

Explain that, during Writing Time today, the students may continue the "What if?" story they started, list other "What if?" questions, or work on any other fiction story. Assure them that it is perfectly fine to leave drafts incomplete and start new ones. Encourage them to relax and use their imaginations as they write today.

WRITING TIME

4 Draft Fiction Pieces

Have the students get their notebooks and pencils, and sit at desks with partners together. Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA4) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Work on a story you started earlier.
- Start a new story.
- If possible, write about a messy situation that leads to good things.

WA4

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then begin conferring with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Over the next three weeks, confer with individual students to get an idea of their thinking as they write fiction drafts. Ask each student to show you a piece of her writing and read some of it aloud to you. Hold off on any feedback about grammar or spelling. Instead, focus on clarifying the student’s ideas about the story she is writing. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is this story about?
- Q Who [is/are] the character(s)? What is interesting about [him/her/them]?
- Q What do you imagine might happen to [him/her/them]?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 67 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Confer in Pairs About Fiction Drafts

Explain that partners will each read one of their fiction drafts to the other and confer about both partners’ drafts today. Briefly review the

Teacher Note

You may want to shorten today’s Writing Time to leave more time for the pair conferences in Step 5.

Teacher Note

To see an example of a teacher conferring with individual students, view “Conferring About Fiction” (AV43).

ELL Note

You might provide the prompt “I would like my partner to . . .” to your English Language Learners to help them verbalize their answers to this question.

Teacher Note

Consider having pairs spread out so partners can better hear each other. If necessary, signal about halfway through the sharing time so partners can switch roles if they have not yet done so.

Materials

- Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street from Day 5
- Copy of “Excerpt from Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street” (BLM2) for each student

Teacher Note

Prior to doing this activity, you will need to visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the “Excerpt from Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street” (BLM2). Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a copy for yourself.

procedure you established for pair conferring (see Unit 1, Week 3, Day 2 on page 52). Remind the students that conferring means not only reading their writing to each other but talking about it as well. Explain that today partners will tell each other one thing they like about the other’s draft. Ask and briefly discuss:

Q What would you like your partner to do to show that he’s interested in your writing and your creative ideas?

Students might say:

“I would like my partner to listen as I read my story.”

“I would like my partner to ask me questions about the story.”

“I would like my partner to tell me the part she likes.”

“I would like my partner to say something nice about my story, like ‘I really want to read your story.’”

Have partners share their writing. Scan the class without intervening, providing sufficient time for both partners to share their writing before you signal for their attention.

6 Reflect on Pair Conferences

Help partners reflect on their work together by asking:

Q What did your partner do to show interest in your writing and creative ideas?

Q What did you like about your partner’s writing?

Explain that the students will continue to write fiction drafts during the coming two weeks. Remind the students that they will eventually select one of their fiction drafts to develop and publish as a book for the class library.

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write an Opinion Paragraph About What Happens in Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street

Show the cover of Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Ask:

Q *What do you remember about the story Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street?*

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Distribute the copies of “Excerpt from Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street” and explain that the last part of Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street is reproduced there. Remind the students that most of the story’s events occur after Eva begins to ask “What if?” Explain that as you read the last part of the story aloud, you want the students to follow along and think about what the characters say and do. Then read aloud pages 28–29 of the book. After reading, ask:

Q Why do you think Eva smiles “mysteriously” after Sondra says, “Why, you’d almost think some of it was made up!”?

Students might say:

“Eva did make up some of the story! She asked ‘What if?’ and then she imagined all sorts of stuff happening.”

“None of it happened at all! The entire story is fiction!”

“I disagree with [Ariel]. I think Eva made up some of the story, but some of it actually happened.”

“I think the whole thing happened. She smiles mysteriously because she has ideas for her next story.”

Explain that the students will write a paragraph of opinion about what happens in Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street. Tell the students that readers often have different opinions about a story, and that is fine. What is important is that they support their thinking with facts and details from the story. Ask the students to watch as you think aloud and model writing a paragraph about what happens. As you write, invite the students to suggest additional details to help you support your opinion.

You might say:

“I think Eva smiles mysteriously at the end because she made up at least part of the story we read. I’ll start by writing this: At the end of Nothing Ever Happens on 90th Street by Roni Schotter, Eva smiles mysteriously because she made up some of what happens in the story. Notice that I stated my opinion and put the title of the story and author’s name in the opening sentence. Now I need to explain my thinking using facts and details. I’ll write: I think it is difficult to tell exactly what happened and what didn’t happen in the story. Eva describes all the events in such detail that I believe they all could have taken place. Now I’ll describe a part of the story that I remember well and talk about why it’s difficult to say whether it really happened: For instance, Mr. Sims’s cat likes gourmet food. I don’t know any cats with such fancy tastes, but Eva describes the cat in a way that makes him seem real. Now I need a closing sentence. I’ll write: Eva’s mysterious smile tells me that she made up some things in the story, but it’s difficult to tell the difference between what really happened and what’s fiction.”

Explain that the students should each start their paragraphs with an opening sentence that states their opinions and includes the title and author of the story, give facts or details from the story to support their opinions, and provide a closing sentence that wraps up their writing. Have the students return to their seats and write in their notebooks. If time permits, invite the students to share their opinion paragraphs with the class.

Teacher Note

If students have trouble remembering details, remind them of the following characters and events: Mr. Morley, the café owner, finds the missing ingredient for his mousse when his coffee urn gets spilled; Alexis Leora, the dancer, finds true love when the pizza delivery man crashes his bike and lands at her feet; Mr. Chang, who sells fish, Mrs. Martinez, who makes Spanish soup, and Mr. Morley, the café owner, open a restaurant together.

TEACHER AS WRITER

“Don’t say the old lady screamed—bring her on and let her scream.”

— Mark Twain

Twain, like most fiction writers, found ways to “show, not tell” a story. What might happen in a passage in which the old lady is “brought on and screams”? How might that compare to a passage in which we’re simply told she screams? This week, experiment with writing a fiction passage in which a reader can see, hear, smell, taste, or feel what is happening.

Writing Focus

- Students hear, discuss, and draft fiction.
- Students explore character, setting, and plot.
- Students generate and quick-write ideas for fiction.
- Students cultivate creativity in their writing.

Social Development Focus

- Students cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing.
- Students help one another improve their writing.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 1, collect pictures of people, one for each pair of students and one for you. These may be actual photographs or images from newspapers or magazines. Look for images that lend themselves to imagining interesting stories about the people in the photographs.
- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3) on page 56 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Materials

- Sweet Music in Harlem
- “Notes About Fiction” chart from Week 1
- Collected pictures of people (see “Do Ahead” on page 229)
- “Writing Time” chart (WA5)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft fiction
- Quick-write ideas from pictures
- Cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Briefly Review the Elements of Fiction

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Review that the students heard fiction stories last week and began drafting their own stories. This week they will continue to draft fiction pieces. Remind them that they will eventually select one of their drafts to develop and publish for the class library.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Notes About Fiction” chart and review the items on it. Explain that in fiction stories, something happens to someone somewhere in time. The terms plot, character, and setting are used to describe the different features of stories.

Add something happens (plot) to someone (character) somewhere in time (setting) to the chart. Encourage the students to try to notice things about the plot, characters, and setting as they listen to a story today.

2 Read Sweet Music in Harlem Aloud

Show the cover of Sweet Music in Harlem and read the title and names of the author and illustrator aloud. Explain that Harlem is a neighborhood in New York City in which African American culture has flourished since the early 1900s. Harlem was home to many musicians who played jazz music.

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

secondhand: used, or previously owned (p. 5) jammed: played music (p. 7) brownstone: building made of brown stones, commonly found in New York City (p. 20)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

photographer: person who takes pictures with a camera (p. 4) trumpet: musical instrument played by blowing into it (p. 4; see illustration on cover) clarinet: another instrument played by blowing into it (p. 5; see illustration)

3 Briefly Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion using the questions that follow, and be ready to reread from the story to help the students recall what they heard. Ask:

Q Who is this story about? What happens? When and where does it happen?

Students might say:

"I think the story is about Uncle Click because he's the one who loses his hat."

"I disagree with [Ryan]. I think it's about C. J. because the whole story is about what he does."

"In addition to what [Bella] said, while C. J. runs around looking for Uncle Click's hat, he ends up telling everyone about the photographer."

"The story takes place in the city. It's a place with lots of stores, clubs, and barbershops, and everyone knows everyone else."

Show the students the photograph on page 32 and read or paraphrase the author's note. Explain that, like Debbie A. Taylor, the students will imagine stories as they look at pictures of people today.

4 Quick-write: Getting Ideas from Pictures

Show one of the pictures you collected and ask the students to take a close look. Ask:

Q What story might we make up about the [people/person] in this picture?

Q How would you describe the setting, or when and where the story happens?

Facilitation Tip

During this unit, we invite you to focus on pacing class discussions so they are lively and focused without dragging, losing the attention of your participants, or wandering off the topic. Class discussions should be long enough to allow time for thinking and short enough to sustain the students' attention. Good pacing requires careful observation of the class (not just the students who are responding) and the timely use of various pacing techniques. To speed up a discussion:

- Call on just a few students to respond to each question, even if others have their hands up.
- Use "Turn to Your Partner" if many students want to speak; then call on just one or two students to share with the whole class.

To deepen or refocus a discussion:

- Restate the question if the discussion strays from the original topic.
- Ask pairs to discuss whether they agree or disagree with what a classmate has just said.
- Use wait-time before calling on anyone to respond.

To see this Facilitation Tip in action, view "Pacing Class Discussions" (AV20).

Teacher Note

To see an example of this technique, view "Guided Visualization and Quick-write" (AV45).

Teacher Note

An example of a story about a photo might be “This person’s name is Rajid, and this is his sister, Samara. They live with their grandparents on an olive orchard in Lebanon. He is walking her home from school because she doesn’t feel well.”

ELL Note

You might invite English Language Learners to discuss and/or write about their photographs in their primary languages, as well as in English. Be ready to provide relevant vocabulary in English for them.

Teacher Note

Explain that pairs will use their pictures again later in the week. Ask them to decide which partner will keep the picture in her notebook until they need it again.

Make up a quick scenario together, calling on students to contribute ideas.

Have the students get their notebooks and pencils and sit with partners together at desks. Give each pair a picture and ask the students to look closely at the person or people in it. Use “Think, Pair, Share” to discuss:

Q What story might you make up about the people or person in your picture?
[pause] Turn to your partner.

Q When and where does the story take place? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Without discussing as a class, have each student open his notebook to the next blank page and write a few sentences of a story about his picture. Encourage him to give a name to the person he is writing about and to describe when and where the events in the picture take place. After several minutes, signal for the students’ attention and ask volunteers to share their ideas with the class.

Explain that today the students may continue the pieces they started in the quick-write or they may write any other made-up stories. Remind them to look at the “Notes About Fiction” chart to help them get ideas.

WRITING TIME

5 Draft Fiction Pieces

Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA5) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Write a story about your picture.
- Work on a story you started earlier.
- Start a new story.

WA5

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students as they write fiction drafts. Ask each student to show you a piece of his writing and read some of it aloud to you. Hold off on any feedback about grammar or spelling. Instead, focus on clarifying the student’s ideas about the story he is writing. Ask questions such as:

Q What is this story about?

(continues)

- Q Who [is/are] the character(s)? What is interesting about [him/her/them]?
- Q What do you imagine might happen to [him/her/them]?
- Q When and where do you imagine this story takes place?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 67 of the Assessment Resource Book. As questions are added to this note, take time to check in with those students with whom you have already conferred to ask them those questions.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

6 Reflect on Writing Process and Attitude

Briefly discuss questions such as those that follow. Invite the students to read passages of their writing aloud to the class as they respond.

- Q What ideas came out of your imagination in your writing today?
- Q Who continued to write a story about a picture? Tell us about it.

Help the students reflect on their attitudes toward writing by asking:

- Q How did you feel as you wrote today? If you got stuck, what happened? What do you want to try tomorrow to help you in your writing?

Explain that the students will continue to hear, discuss, and draft fiction tomorrow.

EXTENSION

Repeat Quick-write: Getting Ideas from Pictures

Collect and then redistribute the pictures of people you used in today’s lesson and have the students repeat the quick-write activity with new pictures. Encourage the students to imagine what the people and places in the pictures are like and to make up stories about them that could not happen in real life.

Day 2

Drafting Fiction

Materials

- The Sweetest Fig
- The Wreck of the Zephyr from Week 1
- Student Writing Handbook page 14
- “Notes About Fiction” chart from Day 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA6)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft fiction
- Explore how characters are developed
- Reflect on creativity in their own writing
- Ask one another questions about their writing

THE IMPORTANCE OF CREATIVITY IN WRITING

It is important for students to understand that writing fiction requires them to reach into their imaginations and tell things in their own way. Children come to school with vivid imaginations, full of possibilities. Nurture these possibilities by consistently showing interest in their ideas, asking them questions, and encouraging them to develop their ideas further.

The lessons in this program help to build a safe classroom environment in which students can take the risks necessary to develop their creativity. Further nurture their creativity by regularly sharing your own creative writing and ideas with them.

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Read The Sweetest Fig Aloud

Gather the class with partners sitting together, facing you. Remind the students that last week they heard The Wreck of the Zephyr by Chris Van Allsburg. Explain that today you will read another story by this author, and invite the students to think about how this story is similar to The Wreck of the Zephyr.

Show the cover of The Sweetest Fig and read the title and author’s name aloud. Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

Bastille Day: holiday celebrating the French Revolution (p. 3) francs: units of money in France (p. 4)

Sacré bleu: (French) Good heavens (p. 14)

Eiffel Tower: famous tower in Paris (p. 16) reconstruction: rebuilding (p. 18)

hypnotism: sleeplike state in which the mind easily takes suggestions (p. 18)

Great Danes: dogs that are a large, expensive breed (p. 22)

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing additional vocabulary defined, including:

fig: kind of fruit (see cover) dentist: doctor who takes care of teeth (p. 3) breaking china: breaking dishes (p. 25)

2 Discuss Developing Characters in Stories

Facilitate a class discussion using the question that follows. Be ready to reread from the story to help the students recall what they heard.

Q Who is Monsieur Bibot, and what do we find out about him?

Students might say:

"Bibot is a dentist who is very selfish and not very nice."

"I agree with [Eugene]. He's very greedy and doesn't take care of his dog."

"He is given some magic figs that make his dreams come true when he wakes up."

Point out that stories are built around interesting characters and that authors help us get interested in their characters by showing us what the characters are like through the characters' actions, thoughts, and speech.

3 Analyze an Excerpt from the Story

Have partners get their Student Writing Handbooks and pencils and sit together at desks. Ask them to open to Student Writing Handbook page 14, where a passage from The Sweetest Fig is reproduced. Ask them to read through the passage once by themselves. After several minutes, signal for the students' attention and ask:

Q What words or phrases describe Monsieur Bibot?

Students might say:

"Selfish"

"Mean"

"Only cares about money"

"Likes to cause people pain"

Have the students reread the passage in pairs and underline words or phrases that reveal Monsieur Bibot's personality.

After several minutes, signal for the students' attention. Ask and briefly discuss as a class:

Q What words or phrases did you underline? What does that tell you about Bibot's personality?

Q What do the things that Bibot says reveal (tell us) about him?

Teacher Note

Some sentences that reveal character in the passage are "Bibot was sure to teach him a lesson," "Perhaps there was time to make a few extra francs," and "'This tooth must come out,' he said with a smile."

Teacher Note

The students will explore developing characters again during the upcoming days and weeks of this unit.

Point out that the author reveals Bibot’s personality by telling us his actions, thoughts, and speech. Add characters’ personalities are revealed through actions, thoughts, and speech (dialogue) to the “Notes About Fiction” chart. Explain that in the coming days the students will explore the use of dialogue in other fiction stories.

Explain that the students will continue to write fiction today. Encourage them to think of ways to describe their characters’ actions, thoughts, and speech as they write.

WRITING TIME

4 Draft Fiction Pieces

Display the “Writing Time” chart (📄 WA6) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Work on a story you started earlier.
- Start a new story.
- Think about characters’ actions, thoughts, and speech.

WA6

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students about the piece each is developing for publication. Ask the student to show you a piece of her writing and read some of it aloud to you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is this story about?
- Q Who [is/are] the character(s)? What is interesting about [him/her/them]?
- Q What do you imagine might happen to [him/her/them]?
- Q When and where do you imagine this story takes place?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 67 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Share One Sentence and Reflect on Creativity

Explain that one of the most important things fiction writers do is tap into their creativity—their ability to use their imaginations to create something new or to re-create something familiar in their own way.

Ask the students to review the writing they did today and each choose one sentence to share with the class. Encourage them to choose sentences they like or that they believe show their creativity. Ask them to underline their sentences. After a moment, go around the room, having each student read her sentence aloud, without comment.

After the students have shared their sentences, facilitate a discussion by asking questions such as:

- Q What sentence did you hear that got you interested in someone else’s writing?
- Q What questions do you want to ask a classmate about his or her writing?

Explain that everyone is creative and can become more creative by writing and doing other creative things, such as drawing, playing musical instruments, and solving interesting problems in their own way. Explain that the students will continue to develop their creativity throughout the year.

Teacher Note

The intent of this activity is to hear one sentence from every student in the class. This lets the students hear what their classmates are writing and builds their accountability. After they underline their sentences, have them put their pencils away. Have them read their sentences in a loud voice, one after another, without stopping to comment. In the discussion afterward, they are not expected to remember every sentence they heard.

Drafting Fiction

Day 3

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore character, plot, and setting
- Hear, discuss, and draft fiction
- Quick-write dialogue to reveal character
- Cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Explore Character, Plot, and Setting in The Sweetest Fig

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you.

Refer to the “Notes About Fiction” chart and remind the students that in a fiction story something happens to someone somewhere in time, and that the terms plot, character, and setting are used to describe these

Materials

- The Sweetest Fig from Day 2
- Uncle Jed’s Barbershop
- “Notes About Fiction” chart from Day 2
- Chart paper and a marker
- Pictures from Day 1
- “Writing Time” chart (WA7)

ELL Note

You might provide the prompt “This story is about . . .” to help English Language Learners verbalize their responses to these questions.

Teacher Note

Save the “Character-plot-setting” chart to use on Day 4 and in Week 3.

features of fiction. On a sheet of chart paper, write the words character (someone), plot (something happens), and setting (somewhere in time) as shown below.

character (someone)	plot (something happens)	setting (somewhere in time)
-------------------------------	---------------------------------------	--

Show the cover of The Sweetest Fig and ask:

Q Who is this story about? What happens? When and where does it happen?

Students might say:

“The story is about Monsieur Bibot, the selfish dentist.”

“An old woman doesn’t have money to pay him, so she gives him magic figs.”

“The magic figs make his dreams come true when he wakes up.”

“The story takes place in Paris in modern times.”

As the students respond, record their thinking on the chart. For example:

character (someone)	plot (something happens)	setting (somewhere in time)
Monsieur Bibot selfish dentist greedy	Magic figs make his dreams come true. His dog eats a fig. His dog’s wish comes true.	Paris modern times Bibot’s house

Explain that you will read another story aloud today. Encourage the students to think about how something happens to someone somewhere in time in the story.

2 Read Uncle Jed's Barbershop Aloud

Show the cover of Uncle Jed's Barbershop and read the title and the names of the author and illustrator aloud. Explain that the story takes place in the southern United States during a time when segregation was a way of life.

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations.

ELL Vocabulary

English Language Learners may benefit from hearing the following vocabulary defined:

barbershop: place where a barber cuts hair and trims beards (see cover) clippers: scissors used to cut hair (p. 4) barber: person who cuts hair and shaves or trims beards for a living (p. 4) lathered: covered with foam made of soap and water (p. 6) lotion: liquid rubbed on the skin to keep it soft (p. 6) unconscious: not conscious, or awake; unable to see, feel, or think (p. 16) operation: cutting open a person's body to repair a damaged part (p. 16)

3 Quick-write: Showing Character Through Dialogue

Point out that in both The Sweetest Fig and Uncle Jed's Barbershop, the authors reveal a lot about their characters through their speech or dialogue (what characters say to one another). Explain that the students can use dialogue in their own stories to show something about their characters. Today they will do a quick-write to practice writing a short dialogue.

Have pairs take out the pictures of people they used in the quick-write on Day 1. Ask each pair to take a moment and silently imagine having a conversation with a person in the picture. The person begins the conversation by saying, "I have something very surprising to tell you."

Have the students open their notebooks to the next blank page and write, "I have something very surprising to tell you," [fill in name] said. Ask each student to write a brief dialogue between himself and the character. If necessary, prompt the students by asking questions such as:

Q What do you say when this person tells you he or she has something surprising to tell you?

Q What is the surprising thing? How does this person tell you? Does he or she whisper? Shout? Cry? Scream?

Q What do you say in reply?

After several minutes, signal for the students' attention and ask a couple of volunteers to read their dialogues to the class. Ask:

Q What might we guess about [Ramona's] character from the way she speaks?

Teacher Note

If your students are unfamiliar with segregation, briefly explain that this practice—keeping people of different racial groups apart—was practiced throughout the United States until the mid-1900s. Laws required African Americans to attend different schools from whites and to use separate public facilities. Many white-owned businesses refused to serve African Americans. Segregation resulted in tremendous inequality and hardship for African Americans.

Teacher Note

Punctuation of dialogue is taught during the Fiction genre units in grades 3 and 4 of this program. However, you may want to review it again here. Model using double and single quotation marks on the board. You might use an example of dialogue from a book you read aloud earlier in this unit. Have the students record the convention for punctuating dialogue in the Proofreading Notes section of their Student Writing Handbooks.

As the students write their stories today, encourage them to try using dialogue, in addition to actions and descriptions, to show what their characters are like.

WRITING TIME

4 Draft Fiction Pieces

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA7) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Continue adding to the dialogue you started during the quick-write.
- Work on a story you started earlier.
- Start a new story.

WA7

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students as they write fiction drafts. Ask the student to show you a piece of his writing and read some of it aloud to you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is this story about?
- Q Who [is/are] the character(s)? What is interesting about [him/her/them]?
- Q What do you imagine might happen to [him/her/them]?
- Q When and where do you imagine this story takes place?
- Q What speech or dialogue might you include in this story?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 67 of the Assessment Resource Book. As questions are added to this note, take time to check in with those students with whom you have already conferred to ask them those questions.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

5 Share One Sentence and Reflect on Attitude

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as those that follow. Invite the students to read passages of their writing aloud as they share.

Q Who wrote speech or dialogue? Tell us about it.

Q What else did you write about today? Tell us about it.

Help the students reflect on their attitudes toward writing by asking:

Q How did you feel as you wrote today? If you got stuck, what happened? What do you want to try tomorrow to help you in your writing?

Q What questions do you want to ask a classmate about his or her writing?

WRITING ABOUT READING

Write an Opinion Paragraph About the Character of Uncle Jed in Uncle Jed's Barbershop

Show the cover of Uncle Jed's Barbershop and remind the students that they heard this story earlier. Ask:

Q What kind of man is Uncle Jed?

Have a few volunteers share their thinking. Distribute the copies of “Excerpt from Uncle Jed's Barbershop” and explain that part of the story is reproduced there. Remind the students that readers can figure out a lot about a story character’s personality by paying attention to what the character says and does. Explain that as you read the excerpt from Uncle Jed's Barbershop aloud, you want the students to follow along and think about what they are learning about Uncle Jed’s personality from what he says and does. Then read aloud page 22 of the book. After reading, ask:

Q What does Uncle Jed do and say that tells us about his personality?

Q What obstacles stood between Uncle Jed and his dream of opening a barbershop?

Q What qualities did Uncle Jed need to make his dream come true?

Students might say:

“Uncle Jed is a kind and generous man.”

“The Great Depression and racism stood in Uncle Jed’s way.”

“He was hard-working and never gave up hope.”

Explain that the students will write a paragraph of opinion about what qualities Uncle Jed needed to make his dream come true. Tell the students that readers often have different opinions about a story, and that is fine. What is important is that they support their thinking with facts and details from the story. Ask the students to watch as you think

Materials

- Uncle Jed's Barbershop from Day 3
- Copy of “Excerpt from Uncle Jed's Barbershop” (BLM3) for each student

Teacher Note

Prior to doing this activity, you will need to visit the CCC Learning Hub (ccclearninghub.org) to access and print the “Excerpt from Uncle Jed's Barbershop” (BLM3). Make enough copies for each student to have one; set aside a copy for yourself.

aloud and model writing a paragraph about Uncle Jed. As you write, invite the students to suggest additional details to help you support your opinion.

You might say:

"I think Uncle Jed needed patience to make his dream come true. I'll start by writing this: In Uncle Jed's Barbershop by Margaree King Mitchell, Uncle Jed needed patience to make his dream come true. Notice that I stated my opinion and put the title of the story and author's name in the opening sentence. Now I need to explain my thinking using facts and details. I'll write: When Uncle Jed gave his savings to pay for Sarah Jean's operation, he had to start saving his money all over again. Now I should explain why that shows that Uncle Jed is patient. I'll write: It had taken him a long time to save up that money, so starting to save all that money again required lots of patience."

Explain that the students should start their paragraphs with an opening sentence that states their opinions and include the title and author of the story; give facts or details from the story to support their opinions; and provide a closing sentence that wraps up their writing. Have the students return to their seats and write in their notebooks. If time permits, invite the students to share their opinion paragraphs with the class.

Day 4

Drafting Fiction

Materials

- Uncle Jed's Barbershop from Day 3
- "Character-plot-setting" chart from Day 3
- Student Writing Handbook page 15
- "Writing Time" chart (WA8)
- "Class Assessment Record" sheet (CA3)

In this lesson, the students:

- Explore character, plot, and setting
- Draft fiction
- Cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Explore Character, Plot, and Setting in Uncle Jed's Barbershop

Have the students get their notebooks, Student Writing Handbooks, and pencils, and sit at desks with partners together. Refer to the "Character-plot-setting" chart and remind the students that in a fiction story, something happens to someone somewhere in time.

Show the cover of Uncle Jed's Barbershop and ask:

Q Who is this story about? What happens? When and where does it happen?

Students might say:

"This story happens to Sarah Jean and her Uncle Jed."

"Uncle Jed is saving money for his own barbershop."

"The 'somewhere in time' is in the southern United States during the Depression."

Draw a line under yesterday's entries on the chart and record the students' thinking about Uncle Jed's Barbershop on the chart.

character (someone)	plot (something happens)	setting (somewhere (in time)
Sarah Jean	Uncle Jed is saving money for his own barbershop.	in the South
Uncle Jed	Sarah Jean needs an operation and the doctors won't see her at first. Uncle Jed loses his savings twice but starts over.	during the Depression

2 Quick-write: Character, Plot, and Setting in a Draft

Explain that you would like the students to select one fiction piece they have written (or begun) so far this year and complete a "Character-plot-setting" chart for it. Have them turn to Student Writing Handbook page 15, where a blank "Character-plot-setting" chart is reproduced. Encourage the students to use the notes you took for Uncle Jed's Barbershop and The Sweetest Fig as a guide, if necessary.

Have the students open their notebooks to the stories they chose and complete a "Character-plot-setting" chart for it. After several minutes, signal for their attention. Use "Think, Pair, Share" to discuss:

Q Which of the three elements (character, setting, or plot) might you want to focus on if you continue to add to this story? [pause] Turn to your partner.

Have a few volunteers share their notes and thinking with the class.

Explain that during Writing Time today the students may continue to work on this story or another story they started earlier, or they may start a new story. Remind them that it is perfectly fine to leave drafts incomplete and start new ones. Encourage them to think about character, setting, and plot as they write, and to relax and use their imaginations in their writing today.

Teacher Note

If pairs have difficulty discussing this question, signal for the class's attention and have partners discuss the following questions, one at a time:

Q What might you add to make your character more interesting? Turn to your partner.

Q What might you add to make your setting more interesting? Turn to your partner.

Q What might you add to make your plot (or what happens) more interesting? Turn to your partner.

WRITING TIME

3 Draft Fiction Pieces

Ask the students to return to their seats. Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA8) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Work on a story you started earlier.
- Start a new story.
- Think about character, setting, and plot.

WA8

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then walk around and observe, assisting students as needed.

CLASS ASSESSMENT NOTE

Observe the students and ask yourself:

- Do the students seem to be writing with a relaxed and free attitude, inspired by their own thoughts?
- If they seem overly cautious or inhibited, do they eventually start writing freely?

Support any student who is still struggling to start after about 10 minutes by asking her questions such as:

- Q Who is an interesting person you know who you can make up a story about?
- Q What makes this person happy? Unhappy?
- Q Let's say this person feels unhappy because of what you just described. What unusual thing could happen to help him or her feel better?
- Q When and where do you imagine this story takes place?

As the student responds to the questions, have the student write the responses in her notebook and continue to write what happens.

Record your observations on the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA3); see page 56 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

4 Briefly Share Writing and Reflect on Attitude

Ask and briefly discuss questions such as the ones that follow. Invite the students to read passages of their writing aloud as they share.

Q Who wrote speech or dialogue? Tell us about it.

Q What else did you write about? Tell us about it.

Help the students reflect on their attitudes toward writing by asking:

Q How did you feel as you wrote today? If you got stuck, what happened? What do you want to try tomorrow to help you in your writing?

Encourage the students to take a relaxed attitude toward their writing practice as they continue to draft fiction.

TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION

Listen to Audiobook Versions of Stories

Some of the fiction stories from this unit, including Uncle Jed's Barbershop, The Sweetest Fig, and Sweet Music in Harlem may be available online as audiobooks. To find an audiobook version of a story, search online with the book title and the keyword "audiobook." You might play the audiobook for the class and discuss with the students what they found interesting, enjoyable, or surprising about the reader's rendition of the story. Alternatively, you might invite interested students to listen to the audiobook and share their reactions to it with the class.

Technology Tip

For more information about using web-based resources, view the "Using Web-based Teaching Resources" tutorial (AV75).

Day 5

Drafting Fiction and Pair Conferring

Materials

- “Notes About Fiction” chart from Day 3
- “Writing Time” chart (WA9)
- “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” chart from previous units

Teacher Note

You may want to shorten today’s Writing Time to leave more time for the pair conferences in Step 3.

In this lesson, the students:

- Review character, setting, and plot in fiction
- Draft fiction
- Express interest in and appreciation for one another’s writing
- Ask for and receive feedback about their writing
- Give feedback in a helpful way

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Review Character, Setting, and Plot in Stories

Have the students stay at their seats and ask them to take out their notebooks and pencils. Remind the students that this week they explored the way character, setting, and plot are developed in three stories: Uncle Jed’s Barbershop, The Sweetest Fig, and Sweet Music in Harlem. Review that in a fiction story something happens to someone somewhere in time, and that the terms plot, character, and setting are used to describe these features of fiction. Encourage the students to continue to think of ways to develop the characters, setting, and plot in their own stories as they write today, and to refer to the “Notes About Fiction” chart for writing ideas.

WRITING TIME

2 Draft Fiction Pieces

Display the “Writing Time” chart (WA9) and have the students write silently for 20–30 minutes.

Writing Time

- Work on a story you started earlier.
- Start a new story.
- Think about character, plot, and setting.

WA9

Join the students in writing for a few minutes; then confer with individual students.

TEACHER CONFERENCE NOTE

Continue to confer with individual students as they write fiction drafts. Ask the student to show you a piece of her writing and read some of it aloud to you. Ask questions such as:

- Q What is this story about?
- Q Who [is/are] the character(s)? What is interesting about [him/her/them]?
- Q What do you imagine might happen to [him/her/them]?
- Q When and where do you imagine this story takes place?
- Q What speech or dialogue might you include in this story?
- Q What part are you going to work on next?

Document your observations for each student on a “Conference Notes: Focus 1” record sheet (CN1); see page 67 of the Assessment Resource Book.

Signal to let the students know when Writing Time is over.

SHARING AND REFLECTING

3 Confer in Pairs About Fiction Drafts

Have students bring their notebooks and pencils and gather with partners sitting together, facing you. Explain that the students will read one of their fiction drafts to their partner and confer about it today. If necessary, briefly review the procedure for pair conferring and remind the students that conferring means not only reading their writing to each other but talking about it as well.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Questions for My Partner About My Draft” chart you started in Unit 2, Week 1, Day 3 (see page 80) and review the questions on the chart. Ask:

- Q What other questions might you want to ask your partner about your draft?

Add any new questions to the chart and encourage the students to use the questions in their pair conferences today.

Have partners share their writing. Scan the class, without intervening, providing sufficient time for both partners to share their writing before signaling for their attention.

Teacher Note

Consider having pairs spread out so partners can better hear each other. If necessary, signal about halfway through sharing time so partners can switch roles if they have not yet done so.

4 Reflect on Pair Conferences

Help partners reflect on their work together by asking questions such as:

- Q What questions did you ask your partner about your story? What did your partner say?
- Q What did you do to show interest in your partner's writing?
- Q Why is it important that we ask other people questions about our own writing?

5 Share One Sentence and Reflect on Creativity

As you did earlier in the week, ask each student to review the writing he did today and choose a sentence he likes or that shows his creativity. Give the students a moment to select and underline their sentences; then go around the room and have each student read his sentence aloud to the class, without comment.

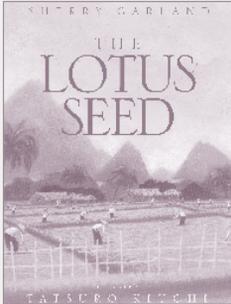

After the students have shared their sentences, facilitate a class discussion by asking questions such as:

- Q What sentence did you hear that got you interested in someone else's writing?
- Q What questions do you want to ask a classmate about his or her writing?

Explain that the students will continue to explore and draft fiction next week.

Week 3

TEACHER AS WRITER

Writing Focus

- Students hear, discuss, and draft fiction.
- Students explore character, setting, and plot.
- Students generate and quick-write ideas for fiction.
- Students cultivate creativity in their writing.

Social Development Focus

- Students cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing.
- Students express interest in and appreciation for one another's writing.
- Students help one another improve their writing.

DO AHEAD

- ✓ Prior to Day 4, make a copy of the “Class Assessment Record” sheet (CA4) on page 57 of the Assessment Resource Book.

“A young woman with long hair and a short white halter dress walks through the casino at the Riviera in Las Vegas at one in the morning. . . . I know nothing about her. . . . How exactly did she come to this?”

— Joan Didion

An entire novel can be inspired by an author's glimpse of a stranger in a curious situation. This week, look for an opportunity to sit in a public place with your notebook. Observe people who intrigue you and wonder about them. Consider:

- What are they doing?
- What brought them to this moment?
- What do they love? Hate? Hope for? Fear?

Write short character sketches in your notebook as you imagine their lives.

Day 1

Drafting Fiction

Materials

- The Lotus Seed
- “Notes About Fiction” chart from Week 2
- World map
- “Writing Time” chart (WA10)

In this lesson, the students:

- Hear, discuss, and draft fiction
- Quick-write ideas from single objects
- Cultivate a relaxed attitude toward writing

GETTING READY TO WRITE

1 Gather and Briefly Review

Have the students bring their notebooks and pencils, and gather with partners sitting together, facing you.

Review that over the past two weeks the students heard fiction stories and drafted their own stories. This week they will continue to draft fiction pieces. Remind them that they will eventually select one of their drafts to develop and publish for the class library.

Direct the students’ attention to the “Notes About Fiction” chart and review the items on it. Ask:

Q What else are you learning about fiction that we could include on this chart?

Add the students’ ideas to the chart and encourage them to keep these things in mind as they listen to and write stories this week.

2 Read The Lotus Seed Aloud

Show the cover of The Lotus Seed and read the title and the names of the author and illustrator aloud. Explain that this story is about an object, a single seed for a flower called a lotus. Show the back cover of the book, point out the illustration, and explain that lotuses grow in water or wet earth. Explain that the story begins in Vietnam, and locate Vietnam on a world map.

Read the story aloud slowly and clearly, showing the illustrations and clarifying vocabulary as you read.

Suggested Vocabulary

altar: table used for religious ceremonies (p. 8) ao dai (ow zi): (Vietnamese) traditional Vietnamese dress (p. 8)

Bà: (Vietnamese) grandmother (p. 14)

unfurling: opening up (p. 24)

dormant: alive but not growing (p. 24)

3 Briefly Discuss the Story

Facilitate a class discussion using the following questions and be ready to reread from the story to help the students recall what they heard.
